Hitherto we have ſaid nothing of publiſhing the Greek Text of the Works of St. Athanaſius. Commelinus, a famous Printer at Heidelberg, firſt undertook it, which he happily finiſh'd in the Year 1600; and the ſame Year he publiſh'd in Greek and Latin, over againſt one another, all the Works of St. Athanaſius in two Volumes, whereof the Firſt contains thoſe that were tranſlated by Nannius, and the Second all that could be found beſides. The Greek Text is revis'd by many Manuſcripts, and printed very exactly. He took care alſo to add at the End, the different Readings collected by Flecmannus; but theſe are only in ſome Copies. This Edition, though very large, is very confus'd; for the Books are without any order, without any Obſervations, and many times the Verſion is very faulty.

It was a little while after corrected by Fronto Ducæus, and printed at Paris without the Greek in 1612, but he has left many Faults.

At laſt in the Year 1627. the Bookſellers of Paris made a New Edition Greek and Latin of the Works of St. Athanaſius. They follow'd Commelin's for the Greek, and that of 1612, for the Latin; and though they ſay in their Advertiſement that they have exactly revis'd the Greek Text by the Manuſcripts in the Royal Library, and have corrected an infinite number of places in it, yet they have ſtill left a good number of Faults behind. They have added in this Edition the Greek of the Life of

St. Anthony

St. Anthony, which was publiſh'd before by Hæſchelius in 1611, a Homily upon Eaſter, publiſh'd by Plantin at Antwerp, in 1508, the Homilies of Holſtenius, and ſome other Fragments: But they have neither chang'd the Order of the Books, nor diſtinguiſh'd the Genuine from the Suppoſititious. St. Athanaſius.

What I have now ſaid, ſufficiently diſcovers the Neceſſity that ſome very Skilful Perſon, or rather, ſome Religious Society, ſhould undertake to publiſh a New Edition of the Works of St. Athanaſius. And to make it perfect, they muſt compare the Greek Text exactly with Manuſcripts, make a new Verſion of all the Books, diſtinguiſh the Genuine from the Suppoſititious, and make a ſeparate Volume of theſe Laſt, dividing the Firſt, as we have done, into Four Parts: The Firſt ſhould comprehend the Hiſtorical Books; the Second, the Dogmatical: the Third, the Moral; and the Laſt, thoſe upon the Scriptures. In the Hiſtorical, they muſt obſerve the Order and Thread of the Hiſtory; in the Dogmatical, they muſt keep the Order of the Subject Matters; and in thoſe upon the Scripture, they muſt firſt place thoſe that are more general, following very near the Order which we have obſerv'd in our Abridgment. As to the Suppoſititious Books, 'twere good to diſtinguiſh them into three Ranks: The Firſt, ſhould contain the Books of ancient Authors unknown; the Second, thoſe of Modern Authors; and the Third, thoſe whereof the Authors are known unleſs you would rather paſs by the Laſt, and remit the Reader to the Books where they are printed, [with the other Works of thoſe Authors to whom they do of right belong.]

JACOBUS NISIBENUS.

ST. JAMES, a Native of Niſibis, a City of Meſopotamia, which was anciently the Boundary of the Empire between the Perſians and Romans, having led a very auſtere life in the Deſart, and becoming famous by his Confeſſion under Maximinus, and by the great number of Miracles which he wrought, was choſen Biſhop of that City, where he was born: though he did not for that forſake his manner of life, nor work fewer Miracles than before; nay, 'tis ſaid, that he even rais'd up the Dead. He aſſiſted at the Council of Nice, where he condemn'd the Hereſie of Arius: and Theodoret ſays, that being at Conſtantinople, when they would oblige Alexander Biſhop of that Church to receive Arius into Communion, he adviſ'd the Catholicks to have recourſe to God by Faſting and Prayer, and to Pray altogether for the ſpace of Seven Days, that they might agree among themſelves what was beſt to be done. The Perſians coming about the Year 338, to Beſiege the City of Niſibis, St. James upon this occaſion did the Office both of a Governour and a Biſhop; for he not only made fervent Prayers for his People, but encourag'd them by his Exhortations to Re-build a Wall in the room of that which the Beſiegers had beat down; he mounted upon the Walls of the City, and appear'd Miraculouſly cloathed with Purple, as if he had been an Emperour. 'Tis ſaid alſo, That at his Prayer God rain'd an infinite Multitude of Gnats, which ſo annoy'd the Beſiegers, that they were forc'd to retire in diſorder. This Story is related not only by Theodoret, who has written the Life of this Saint in his Book entituled, Philotheus [which is an Hiſtorical Account of Thirty eminent Aſceticks] and who ſpeaks alſo of this Circumſtance in his Hiſt. Ch. 30. of his Second Book; but alſo by Philoſtorgius, who cannot be ſuſpected of too much favour to ſo great an Enemy of the Arians. Jacobus Niſibenus.

St. Athanaſius ſpeaks of this Saint, as of a Biſhop who had written for the Church: And if St. Jerom has not plac'd him among the number of Eccleſiaſtical Writers, it is becauſe, as Gennadius has obſerv'd, that this Father underſtood not the Syriack Tongue, having never read thoſe Syriack Writers, [This, with Gennadius's leave, is ſomething ſtrange: for it is not credible that a Man who lived ſo long in Paleſtine, where Syriack was the Mother-Tongue, and who underſtood Hebrew ſo well as St. Jerom did, ſhould not underſtand Syriack, which is but a different Dialect.] whom he mentions but in their Verſion; ſo that we muſt not wonder, that he ſays nothing of his Works, becauſe they were never tranſlated into Greek. Gennadius has made a Catalogue, wherein he ſays, That the Work of this Author contain'd 26 Books, but he names but 23. The 1ſt. is concerning Faith; The 2d. againſt all Hereſies; The 3d. of Charity in general; The 4th. of Charity towards our Neighbour; The 5th. of Faſting; The 6th. of Prayer; The 7th. of the Reſurrection; The 8th. of the Life after Death; The 9th. of Humility; The 10th. of Patience; The 11th. of Penance; The 12th. of Satisfaction; The 13th. of Virginity; The 14th. of the Life of the Soul; The 15th. concerning Circumciſion; The 16th. concerning the Benediction of the Grape, which is the cauſe that the Bunch of Grapes is preſerv'd, which is mention'd by the Prophet Iſaiah, Ch. 65; The 17th. of Jeſus Chriſt, to prove that he is the Son of God and Conſubſtantial to his Father; The 18th. of Chaſtity; The 19th. againſt the Gentiles; The 20th. of the Building of the Tabernacle; The 21ſt. of the Converſion of the Gentiles; The 22d. of the Empire of the Perſians; The 23d. of the Perſecution of the Chriſtians. Gennadius, ſays alſo, That this Father made a Chronicle, leſs ſtudied indeed than that of the Greeks, but more bold; for by uſing the words of Scripture, he ſtops the mouth of all thoſe that queſtion the Coming of Jeſus Chriſt upon vain Conjectures. " This holy Man as Gennadius goes on, died under Conſtantius, and was buried by Conſtan-
" tine's Order in the City of Niſibis, to be a kind of a Defender of it after his Death; but ſome time
" after, Julian entring into this City, either becauſe he could not endure the Glory of this Saint, or " becauſe he would reproach the Memory of Conſtantine, commanded, that the Relicks of his holy " Body ſhould be thrown out of the City; wherefore in a few Months after the Emperour Jovian
" was forc'd, to ſave his Empire, to Surrender it to the Perſians, under whoſe Dominion it ſtill re" mains. [Theodoret gives us another Account of the removal of St. James's Body: He ſays, That when Jovian Surrendred up Niſibis to the Perſians, the Inhabitants who left the Town, carried the Martyr's Bones along with them: His Teſtimony is the more valuable becauſe he lived near the place, and alſo, becauſe, as he tells us himſelf in his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, he took a great deal of pains to collect and write down the Wonderful Things which were related of this Saint.]

MARCELLUS of Ancyra.

Marcellus of Ancyra.

MARCELLUS, Biſhop of Ancyra, aſſiſted at the Council of Nice, where he defended the Faith and oppos'd the Arians, as Pope Julius affirms, upon the Report of St. Sylveſter the Pope. After that Council he wrote a Book againſt Aſterius and other Biſhops of the Arian Faction, entituled, Concerning the Submiſſion of Jeſus Chriſt; wherein he advances many Propoſitions favouring the Error of the Sabellians. The Euſebians immediately accus'd him of this Hereſie, and it is ſaid, that he promis'd in the Council of Jeruſalem to burn his Book; but refuſing to do it when he was at Conſtantinople, he was condemn'd and depos'd in a Council held in that City by the Euſebians in the Year 336. There is ſome probability that he was reſtor'd again to his See after the Death of Conſtantine; but he was driven away at the ſame time that St. Athanaſius was forc'd out of Alexandria, and oblig'd to fly for Refuge into the Weſt, where he was Abſolv'd in the Councils of Rome and Sardica. Socrates and Sozomen ſay, That after this laſt Council, he was reſtor'd to his Biſhoprick as well as St. Athanaſius, but that he could not live there in quiet, becauſe Baſil, who was Ordain'd in his room in the Year 336, was in Poſſeſſion of his See; and what became of him afterwards is not known. St. Hilary and Sulpitius Severus affirm, That St. Athanaſius having diſcover'd that he favour'd the Error of Photinus, depriv'd him of his Communion; and this Biſhop ſeeing himſelf condemn'd by his Judgment, refrain'd from coming to the Church-Gate. But this Relation is not true; for St. Athanaſius does always ſpeak of him in his Writings as a Catholick Biſhop, and we underſtand by the Letters which St. Baſil wrote to St. Athanaſius a little before his Death, that this Father continued always in Communion with him. St. Jerom places Marcellus of Ancyra among the number of Eccleſiaſtical Writers; and ſays that he compos'd many Volumes upon different Subjects, but chiefly againſt the Arians. We have nothing of his Works remaining, but ſome Fragments recited by Euſebius in the Books which he wrote againſt this Author: Theſe paſſages are very intricate, and favour the Error of the Sabellians. Some have accus'd Euſebius, that he took for a poſitive Aſſertion what Marcellus had only propos'd by way of Doubt or Objection: but the contrary appears ſufficiently from Euſebius's Book, where 'tis plain, that in the greateſt part of the paſſages which he recites, Marcellus of Ancyra propoſes his true Sentiment, which 'tis very difficult to explain in a Catholick Sence. It appears by theſe Fragments, that Marcellus was a Man that talked much, who had little Wit, or Knowledge, or Eloquence, and was altogether void of good Sence. St. Epiphan. in Hæreſ. 72. recites a Letter of Marcellus of Ancyra.

HOSIUS.

Hoſius.

HOSIUS, Biſhop of Corduba, a City of Spain, did generouſly confeſs the Faith of Chriſt, in the Perſecution of the Emperour Dioclefian. The Donatiſts affirm, That he was condemn'd for his Crimes by the Biſhops of Spain, and was afterwards Abſolv'd by thoſe of France: But this is a Notorious Calumny, of which they have no Proof, and which is ſufficiently confuted by the great Reputation that Hoſius had all his Life-time; beſides, that his Enemies never charg'd him with any ſuch thing. His Name is found amongſt the Names of thoſe Biſhops that Subſcrib'd to the Canons, which are believ'd to be made in the Council of Elvira. He was known to Conſtantine, while this Emperour was in the Weſt, and follow'd him into the Eaſt; where he was ſo much eſteem'd by him, that he was choſen to be ſent into Egypt, to ſettle the Controverſies that were riſen there about the Hereſie of Arius, and the Celebration of Eaſter. There he aſſembled a Council, to which the Egyptians have not ſcrupled to give the Name of Oecumenical, and us'd his utmoſt endeavours to reduce Arius to the Communion of his Biſhop Alexander, and to eſtabliſh Peace: But all was in vain, for 'twas neceſſary to have recourſe to a more Powerful Remedy, which was the General Council of Nice. There he was choſen Preſident, either becauſe of his Eminent Vertues, and Rare Qualities, or becauſe he had a perfect Knowledge of the Matter which was to be handled in that Council. He preſided alſo at the Council of Sardica, and maintain'd for a long time with great Conſtancy the Faith of the Nicene Council, and the Innocence of St. Athanaſius, under the Reign of Conſtantius. This Emperour did in vain ſollicite him with Promiſes and Threatnings, for he anſwer'd and wrote to him with unſhaken Firmneſs; but at laſt, he was ſo far overcome by the Miſeries which he ſuffer'd in Baniſhment, as not only to Communicate with Urſacius and Valens, in the Year 357, as St. Athanaſius confeſſes, but alſo to Subſcribe to the Second Creed of Sirmium, which is Arian, as St. Hilary and Rhebadius, who liv'd at the ſame time, do clearly Teſtify. Yet 'tis true, that St. Athanaſius who endeavours to excuſe the Fault of his Friend, as much as he can, ſays, That he did not Subſcribe to his Condemnation, and that his Friend at his Death, proteſted by his Laſt Will and Teſtament, againſt what he had done, and expreſly condemn'd the Hereſy of Arius. Theſe two Authors, whom we cited before, do not ſpeak at this Rate of him: but on the contrary, St. Hilary, ſays, That his Subſcription diſcover'd what he was formerly, i.e. an Hypocrite, who had no other Religion, but that of the Court.

But

But it will be better to ſpare his Memory with St. Athanaſius, than to blacken it by Declamations without Ground. His Fault indeed was very great, but then his great Age, and the Violence that was us'd towards him, do render him the leſs culpable; and I think we ought to believe upon the Teſtimony of St. Athanaſius, that he repented of what he had done before his Death. 'Tis true, that the two Luciferians tell us a Story which would prove the contrary if it were certain; but it looks like a Fable. They ſay in their Petition to the Emperour Valentinian, that Hoſius being return'd into Spain with a Declaration of the Emperour, wherein 'twas ordain'd, That all thoſe that would not Communicate with him, ſhould be caſt out of their Sees; One Gregory, Biſhop of the Province of Bætica, a dull Man, but a zealous Defender of the Faith, refus'd to Communicate with him; and being forcibly carried away to Corduba by the Governor's Guards, he continued firm in his Opinion, and boldly reproved Hoſius. That Hoſius being mov'd with a violent Paſſion, deſired of the Governor to ſend that Biſhop into Baniſhment: But the Governor anſwer'd him, That he muſt firſt be Condemn'd. And that Hoſius being ready to pronounce the Sentence of Condemnation againſt him, he appeal'd to the Tribunal of Jeſus Chriſt; and when Hoſius was juſt beginning to Pronounce the Sentence, he fell into Convulſions, and was caſt down Dead upon the Ground, or at leaſt loſt his Speech. This is what theſe two Luciferian Prieſts ſay of Hoſius's End: But beſides that this Relation is refuted by the Poſitive Teſtimony of St. Athanaſius, which is much more credible than theirs; it has all over the Air of a Fable feign'd by Lucifer's Party, who pleaſe themſelves, as is uſual for the moſt part with thoſe Devoto's that are too auſtere, with ſuch kind of Tragical Stories that happen for the Puniſhment of ſome Crime. He liv'd almoſt 100 Years, and died in the Year 358. St. Athanaſius in his Letter to the Egyptians, which is call'd his Firſt Diſcourſe againſt the Arians, places Hoſius in the number of thoſe who had written againſt the Arians, but we have no more of him but that excellent Letter to Conſtantius, recited by St. Athanaſius in his Letter to thoſe that lived a Monaſtick Life; of which we have made an Extract, when we diſcours'd of the Works of St. Athanaſius. Iſidore of Sevil attributes alſo to Hoſius a Letter to his Siſter, in praiſe of Virginity; which was written, as he ſays, in a Stile very Eloquent and Polite; and moreover, he ſays, That he was the Author of a Part of the Canons of the Council of Sardica: Some alſo have ſaid that he made the Nicene Creed, but without Ground. Hoſius.

We may join with Hoſius, ſome Authors whereof St. Athanaſius makes mention in his Letter to the Egyptians, who compos'd very Orthodox Books, which we have not at preſent, and whereof we have not ſo much as the Titles. Theſe Authors are Maximinus, of France, Biſhop of Triers, and his Succeſſor Paulinus; Philogonus, of Antioch; Cyriacus, of Myſia; Piſtus and Ariſteus, of Greece; Sylveſter and Protogenes, of Dacia; Leontius and Eupſychius, of Cappadocia; Cæcilian, of Africk; Euſtorgius, of Italy; Capito, of Sicily; Macarius, of Jeruſalem; Alexander, of Conſtantinople; Pedaratas, of Heraclea; Meletius, Baſil and Longinus, of Pontus and Armenia; Lupus and Appianus, of Cilicia. All theſe Biſhops, and many others, compos'd Letters or Books, which were extant in St. Athanaſius's time, but now we know nothing of them.

JULIUS.

JULIUS, was ordain'd Biſhop of Rome, in the Year 334, or 335. He call'd a Council at Rome in which St. Athanaſius was declar'd Innocent: and wrote a Letter to the Biſhops of the Eaſt, of which we have given an Extract, when he gave an Account of the Works of St. Athanaſius. He ſent his Legates to the Council of Sardica and wrote a Letter to thoſe of Alexandria, wherein he Congratulates the return of St. Athanaſius to them. Theſe two Letters are genuine, and are to be found in the Works of St. Athanaſius. The Eutychians have attributed to Pope Julius, a Letter concerning the Incarnation, addreſs'd to one Dionyſius, which Gennadius believ'd to be truly his; tho' he obſerves, That tho' it might be uſeful in the time of this Pope, againſt thoſe that admitted Two Perſons in Jeſus Chriſt; yet it prov'd pernicious after the Hereſy of Eutyches and Timotheus, which it very much favour'd. But this Letter has been rejected by Hypatius, in a Conference at Conſtantinople, with the Acephali; by Facundus, B. VII. Ch. 1. by Eulogius, in his Third Diſcourſe; and by Leontius of Conſtantinople, Book of Sects, Ch. 8. who have all affirmed, That 'twas written by Apollinarius, and by the Eutychians, and falſly attributed to Pope Julius. There is another Letter of Julius, about the Incarnation, to Docus, which is alſo cited in the Council of Epheſus, Art. 1. Facundus has acknowledg'd it for Genuine; and Vincentius Lirinenſis, ſays, that in that Council, The Faith of the Church, was confirm'd by the Teſtimony of Pope Julius. Ephrem has alſo acknowledg'd it for Genuine, as appears by an Extract out of his Third Book of Laws related by Photius. Anaſtaſius has cited it in his Collections about the Incarnation, as written by Acacius. Leontius only has rejected it in his Treatiſe of Sects, where he affirms, That 'tis the Work of Timotheus, a Diſciple of Apollinarius, as was prov'd then by many Copies. He adds, nevertheleſs, That 'tis not at all contrary to the Faith, and that 'tis no great matter whoſe it is. In ſhort, the ſame Leontius, affirms, That there were no Writings of Julius in his time (which muſt be underſtood with an exception to thoſe that are extant in St. Athanaſius,) and that the Seven Epiſtles which bear his Name, were Apollinarius's. And truly, there is no probability, that Julius wrote Letters about the Incarnation at a time when there was no Queſtion, but about the Trinity: Beſides, 'tis known, that the Eutychians, were wont to attribute the Works of Apollinarius, to the Fathers, who had the Reputation of Catholicks, as St. Athanaſius, St. Gregory, and St. Cyril, that ſo they might deceive the People, and engage them unto their Hereſy. Julius.

Julius. I ſay nothing of the two Decretal Epiſtles attributed to Pope Julius, becauſe they are plainly ſuppoſititious. This Pope died in the Year 352, and was ſucceeded by Liberius. The Author of Damaſus's Pontifical, Uſuardus, Ado, and ſome others, relate, That he was Baniſh'd for the ſpace of Ten Months, till the Death of Conſtantius: But this cannot be maintain'd, for Julius never ſuffer'd any Perſecution, nor any Baniſhment, for the Defence of St. Athanaſius, ſince this Father ſays not one word of it in his Books, who would never have fail'd to charge the Arians with the Baniſhment of Julius, as well as with that of Liberius, and other Biſhops of his Party.

ASTERIUS.

Aſterius. ST. JEROM places this Arian Philoſopher among the Number of Eccleſiaſtical Writers, not becauſe he wrote a Book againſt the Faith of the Church about the Trinity, but becauſe of his Commentaries upon the Epiſtle to the Romans, upon the Goſpels, upon the Pſalms, and many other Books; which ſhows, That a Heretick may be plac'd amongſt Eccleſiaſtical Authors, when he writes ſuch Learned Books as may be ſerviceable to the Church. St. Athanaſius gives a very different Character of this Aſterius from that which Euſebius had given of him in his Book againſt Marcellus. "One Aſterius, ſays "he, in his Book of the Two Synods, a Sophiſt of Cappadocia, is a Partizan of the Euſebians; and "when he could not enter into the Order of the Clergy, becauſe he had Sacrific'd to Idols, during "the Perſecution of Maximian, he was adviſ'd to write a Book for the Opinions of Euſebius, the Im-"piety of which is equal to that of his Idolatry: For there he compares Jeſus Chriſt to a Locuſt, and "a Worm of the Earth; nay, and ſeems to preferr theſe Inſects before him. He affirms, That the "Word which is in Jeſus Chriſt, is different from the Word which created the World: He runs "through all Syria, and enters into all the Churches by the Favour of Euſebius's Recommendation, to "teach others to deny Jeſus Chriſt. He inſolently oppoſes the Truth, and goes into thoſe places which "are appointed only for the Clergy, and there he rehearſes very loudly, his impious Book. Thus St. Athanaſius deſcribes the Man and his Work. There are ſome Fragments preſerved in his Writings, which expreſly contain the impious Opinions of the Arians: I am only now to tell you, That this Aſterius, is different from the Biſhop of Amaſea.

THEODORUS.

Theodorus. THEODORUS, Biſhop of Perinthus, a City of Thrace, who was alſo call'd Heracleus, was a Biſhop of the Euſebian Party. St. Athanaſius in his Letter to the Biſhops of Egypt, places him among the Number of thoſe that were condemn'd, being Prieſts, and afterwards promoted to Epiſcopal Dignity by the Intrigues of the Arians. He aſſiſted at the Council of Tyre, and was one of the Deputies that were ſent to Marcotis, to Inform againſt St. Athanaſius. He aſſiſted alſo at the Council of Antioch, and came to that of Sardica; and having retir'd from thence with the Biſhops of the Eaſt, he was Depos'd and Excommunicated in a Synod of the Weſtern Biſhops. St. Jerom and Theodoret, Teſtify, that he was very Learned, and compos'd in the Reign of the Emperour Conſtantius, very Elegant and Clear Commentaries upon the Goſpel of St. Matthew, and St. John, upon the Epiſtles of St. Paul, and the Pſalms, in which he endeavours, particularly to explain the Hiſtorical Sence of them. We have in the Catena upon St. Matthew, publiſh'd by Corderius, and printed at Antwerp, in the Year 1642, ſome Fragments attributed to this Theodorus: But one cannot be certain upon the Credit of this Catena, that they are truly his.

TRYPHILIUS.

Tryphilius. TRYPHILIUS, Biſhop of a City in the Iſle of Cyprus, call'd Ledra, was, according to St. Jerom, one of the moſt Eloquent Writers of his Age; and was in great Reputation under the Reign of Conſtantius. St. Jerom had read his Commentary upon the Canticles, and ſays, That he wrote many other Books that never came to his Hands.

HELIO

HELIODORUS.

Heliodorus.

GENNADIUS informs us of this Author, in this manner. "Heliodorus a Priest, has "written a Book of the nature of Principles, wherein he shews, That there is but one Prin-"ciple only; That there is nothing Eternal, but God; That God is not the Author of Evil; That "all he does, is Good; That he created the Matter which the Malice of Men makes use of to do "Evil: That nothing was created without him, and that he having foreseen that Nature would "become subject to Corruption by Sin, he forewarned Man of this Punishment.

I have read nothing else that concerns this Author. Gennadius places him among those Writers that liv'd in the time of Constantius.

DONATUS, and Vitellius and Macrobius his Disciples.

Donat. and Vitell. and Macrob.

ST. JEROM, places among the Number of Ecclesiastical Writers, Donatus, Head of the Party of the Donatists in Africa; which in all probability is to be understood of the Bishop of Carthage (a). He says, That he wrote many Books concerning his own Sect; and a Book of the Holy Spirit, whose Doctrine was agreeable to that of the Arians. St. Augustin has wrote a Book against a Letter of this Donatus (b), and he assures us in his Book of Heresies, That he was an Eloquent Writer. Gennadius, mentions two other Authors of the same Party: The First is Vitellius, Who wrote, says he, a Book to Defend his Party, upon this Argument, That the Servants of God are hated of the World. This Book adds he, contain'd Excellent Doctrine, if he had not treated the Catholicks as Persecutors. He has written also against the Gentiles, and against the Catholicks, who, as he pretends, basely betray'd the Holy Books in the time of Persecution. There are some other Writings of his, which concern the Discipline of the Church. He flourish'd under Constans, the Son of Constantine.

The Second is Macrobius, a Donatist Priest, who is mention'd in the Writings of Optatus (c), who was afterwards sent to Rome, to be Bishop there of those of his Party. He wrote before his Separation, a Book directed to Confessors and Virgins; which is a Book of Morality, and contains very useful Instructions, chiefly, to teach one to live in Inviolable Chastity. He flourish'd in Africa, among the Catholicks, and at Rome among the Donatists.

(a) Which is to be understood of the Bishop of Carthage.] There were Two Donati of the same Party, as St. Austin observes, B I. Retract. ch. 12. The First was Donatus Bishop of Casæ nigræ, or Calamæ, who never was Bishop of Carthage, whatever Aibaspinæus says, and the Second Donatus was Successor to Majorinus, against whom St. Austin wrote a Book, call'd a Discourse against the Epistle of Donatus; which was written the last by Donatus, for he compos'd that Epistle which St. Austin refutes; and confirm'd the Faction of the Donatists by his Eloquence.

(b) St. Augustin has wrote a Book against a Letter of this Donatus.] Lib. I. Retract. ch. 21. I have written, says he, a Book against the Epistle of Donatus, who was Bishop of Carthage, next after Majorinus, wherein he pretends, that the Baptism of Jesus Christ is not valid out of his own Communion.

(c) Who is mention'd in the Writings of Optatus.] B. II. p. 37. Ye say, says he, speaking to the Donatists, That ye have many of your Party in the City of Rome; This is a Branch of your Error, which proceeds from a Lye, and can't come from the Root of Truth: And if it be demanded of Macrobius, what See he belongs to, he may say that he belongs to the Chair of St. Peter, which perhaps he never saw. How can he enter into the Church where the Sepulchers of St. Peter and St. Paul are? Did he ever offer to do it?

St. ANTHONY.

St. Anthony.

ST. ANTHONY, who was the First Institutor of a Monastick Life, was born towards the Year 250, in Egypt: His Parents who were Christians, and very considerable for their Nobility, took great Care to Educate him in Piety: He was not Instructed in humane Learning, neither had he any Commerce with the World. His Father and Mother dying when he was but Eighteen Years old, left great Riches to him and his Sister: But a little after, he took up a Resolution of forsaking the World entirely; and then he distributed his Inheritance to his Neighbours, Sold his Moveables, and gave the Price of them to the Poor, and so retir'd into a solitary Place towards the Year 270. The first place of his Retreat, was a Cell near his own Village, and after that, he shut himself up in a Sepulchre that was more remote; but at last, he pass'd over the Nile, and retir'd into the Ruines of an Old Castle, where he stay'd near 20 Years. But he was forc'd to come fourth from thence towards the Year 305, to govern those that came to put themselves under his Conduct. About this time, the number of those that follow'd him, encreasing daily, several Monasteries were begun to be built in the Desarts, to which St Anthony was as a Father. His Charity oblig'd him to go out of his Solitude, during the Persecution of Maximinus, and to come to the City of Alexandria, that he might assist the Christians which suffer'd for Jesus Christ. But the Persecution was no sooner ended, but he return'd to his Monastery, where he betook himself to his former Exercises, and wrought many Miracles, for Delivering those that were possess'd, and Curing those that were sick. But these Extraordinary Actions drawing after him a great Multitude of Persons, who troubled his Retirement,

he

St. Anthony. he withdrew to the remoteſt Part of the Mountains, and there built a Cell, or a little Monaſtery upon Mount Colzim, about a Day's Journey from the Red-Sea. He liv'd long in this Solitude, out of which he went nevertheleſs from time to time to viſit his former Diſciples, who look'd upon him always as their Father. In a word, After he had acquir'd an Immortal Fame here on Earth, he went to receive the Reward of his Labours in Heaven, in the 19*th.* Year of the Reign of Conſtantius, i.e. in the Year 356, being the 105*th.* Year of his Age.

Theſe are the principal Circumſtances of the Life of St. Anthony, taken out of the Hiſtory of his Life, attributed to St. Athanaſius, which one may read if he has a mind to know thoſe things more particularly. But this is not the place to inſiſt upon them, for we conſider him neither as a Monk, nor as a Saint, but only as a Writer. And one may ſay with all the reſpect that is due to him, That in this Capacity, he was much leſs Famous, and leſs known; for as he had not ſtudied at all, ſo he could not undertake to write any Great Books; but the quickneſs of his Wit, might furniſh him with Pieces of leſs Conſequence, ſuch as Letters, Exhortations and Anſwers, ſo that no Writings but of theſe ſorts are attributed to him.

St. Jerom, ſays, That he wrote in the Egyptian Tongue, Seven Letters to ſeveral Monaſteries, which come near, ſays he, to the Opinions of the Apoſtles, and their manner of Writing; and theſe have been tranſlated into Greek, but we have nothing of them at preſent, but a Latin Verſion, which is attributed to one Sarraſius. The Firſt of theſe Letters is, concerning Vocation; the Second, concerning the Snares of the Devil, and the means of avoiding them; the Third is, concerning the Bleſſings of God towards Mankind; the Fourth, concerning the Incarnation of Jeſus Chriſt; the Fifth, concerning Chriſtian Vigilance; the Sixth, concerning the Knowledge of one's ſelf, and the Neceſſity of the Incarnation; the Seventh and Laſt, is alſo concerning the Knowledge of our ſelves; and he Concludes with an Advertiſement againſt Arius, Of theſe Letters, there are Six addreſs'd to the Arſinoites, (i. e. to the Monks of one of his Monaſteries, which was at Arſinoe) tho' St. Jerom ſpeaks but of one that was directed to them. Theſe are all written with much Candor; the Thoughts and Expreſſions indeed are ſomething elevated, but the Air is ſimple and without Ornament. There a Man may find a great deal of Piety, and many Excellent Counſels, eſpecially for thoſe Perſons that make profeſſion of a Monaſtick Life. In ſhort, 'Tis obvious to every one that reads them, That the Writer was a much better Chriſtian, than a Scribe, one that underſtood better the Maxims of Chriſtianity, than the Precepts of Eloquence, and was much more fill'd with the Unction of the Holy One, than with Humane Science and Learning.

St. Athanaſius, or the Author of the Life of St. Anthony, which is attributed to this Father, ſets down a long Exhortation of St. Anthony to his Monks, which contains many Inſtructions very uſeful for them, and wholeſome Advices about the Temptations of the Devil. There are alſo found in this Writing, ingenious Anſwers of the ſame Saint to the Philoſophers, and ſome other Perſons, and a Letter to the Emperour.

There is moreover a ſhort Rule attributed to St. Anthony, ſet down in the Collection of Rules made by St. Benedictus Anianenſis who liv'd towards the Year 820, from the birth of Chriſt, which contains many Moral Precepts, and preſcribes ſome Monaſtical Obſervations. Beſides theſe, Gerard Voſſius has given us under the Name of St. Anthony, a Sermon, which is a Declamation againſt the Vices and Exceſſes of the Men of the World, at the End of which he Exhorts Men to do Penance, by repreſenting unto them the Judgment of God, and the Pains which the damned ſuffer after the Reſurrection. 'Tis hard to ſay, whether this Diſcourſe be truly St. Anthony's, or whether it be only put out under his Name, as a Diſcourſe that would agree exactly to one ſo retir'd from the World as he was. Be that as it will, it has much of the Stile of this Saint's Letters, though more Elegant and Sublime.

Laſtly, There were two Books of Latin Sermons, attributed to St. Anthony in the time of Trithemius; but now all the Criticks agree, that they are none of his, neither can be, ſince they cite St. Baſil, St. Gregory Nyſſen, St. Chryſoſtom, St. Nilus and Photius, Authors that liv'd and wrote after St. Anthony. The Letters of St. Anthony were printed apart, and are ſince inſerted into the Bibliotheca Patrum. His Rule is in Benedictus Anianenſis's Code, publiſh'd by Holſtenius, from the Copy of a Manuſcript, (which was in the Monaſtery of St. Maximin, near Triers,) [at Rome in 1661.] and re-printed in Quarto at Paris, by Billaine in 1663.

St. PACHOMIUS.

St. Pachomius. THough St. Anthony was the Inſtitutor of a Monaſtick Life, yet St. Pachomius ought to be conſider'd as the Author of a Cœnobitick Life, becauſe he was the firſt that appointed regulated Societies. He was born in Thebais, of Gentile Parents, and did for ſome time bear Arms in the War of Conſtantine againſt Maxentius. When this War was ended, he, who had been always a Chriſtian in his Heart, was baptiz'd, and retir'd with an Hermit nam'd Palemon, under whoſe Conduct he led a very auſtere Life. He ſtay'd afterward in Tabenna, a Country of Egypt, ſituated on the Brink of the Nile in the Dioceſs of Tentyra, where he Founded a Monaſtery, in obedience, as is believ'd, to the Admonition of an Angel, and in Conformity to a Rule, which he is thought to have received from it. Be this as it will, (for though this Story be related by many Authors, I do not think that any Man is abſolutely oblig'd to believe it:) Be this as it will, I ſay, the Monaſtery which he Founded in Tabenna, was fill'd in a very little time, and he was oblig'd to build many more of them; ſo that he peopl'd all the Upper Thebais with Monaſteries of his Order. 'Tis reported in the Greek Acts of his Life, publiſh'd lish'd not long since in the great Collection of the Lives of the Saints by Bollandus and Papebrochius, that he was accus'd at a Synod of Diospolis, because he Divin'd the most secret Thoughts of Men; but he was Absolv'd by the same Synod, where were two of his Disciples, after he declar'd that God of his Grace reveal'd to him the most hidden things. He died about the Year 400. We have in the Life of St. Pachomius a Rule which is thought to have been given him by the Angels; but there is another also which bears the Name of this holy Abbot, in the Collection of the Oriental Rules, in the Bibliothecæ Patrum, and at the End of some Editions of Cassian, which is much larger, and seems to have been drawn up at different times. It contains many Rules concerning the Habits, the Diet, the Employments and the Discipline of Monks: 'Tis thought to have been translated by St. Jerom, and there is at the beginning, a Letter which imitates the Stile of this Father well enough. There are also some Moral Precepts publish'd under his Name by Gerard Vossius, printed at Mentz in the Year 1604, and in Benedictus Anianensis's Collection, there are Eleven Letters (a) of the same Author, written with much Simplicity, which are cited by Gennadius; and a Letter of Theodorus his Disciple, concerning Easter. Gennadius calls St. Pachomius a Man truly Apostolical in his Discourses and Actions: His Rule is very Judicious, and comes down to all the Particulars necessary for the Government of a Monastery.

St. Pachomius.

(a) Eleven Letters.] These were written, as Gennadius observes, to the Superiours of the Monasteries of his Community, who are design'd by the Letters of the Alphabet; there is One to the Abbot Hyrus, One to the Abbot Cornelius, One to all the Superiours, to advertise them to come and Celebrate the Feast of Easter, at a Monastery call'd in the Egyptian Tongue Baüm, and this is cited by St. Cyril of Alexandria, in a Letter cited by Bucherius: There is another to the same persons, giving them notice to meet on the Day of Remission, i. e. at the General Chapter, which was held in the Month of August, and another to the Brethren, who were gone out of the Monastery to Work.

ORSIESIS.

ORSIESIS was Successor to Pachomius after Petronius, who govern'd the Monastery of Tabenna but a few days. He has written a Spiritual Treatise of the Doctrine or Institution of Monks, which he lift when he was a Dying to the Religious of his Monastery. 'Tis an Exhortation that he made to them to Watch over themselves, and to discharge their Duties exactly, and is fill'd with many Passages of Scripture, which he applies to his Subjects very properly. Upon this account 'twas that Gennadius said that this Treatise was season'd with Divine Salt, Divino sale conditus. 'Twas printed apart by Gymnicus at Cologne in the Year 1536. and afterwards inserted into the Bibliothecæ Patrum. 'Tis found also in Benedictus Anianensis's Code, that was publish'd by Holstenius.

Orsiesis.

THEODORUS.

THEODORUS a Presbyter, one of the Principal Disciples of St. Pachomius, and his Successor in the Government of the Abby of Tabenna, if we believe Gennadius, wrote Letters to other Monasteries, which are almost wholly made up of Passages of Scripture: and yet there he often mentions his Master St. Pachomius, and proposes his Example and Doctrine for their Instruction. He admonishes also some Religious to continue with Zeal in their Vocation, and exhorts those that were separated from the Society of others to a Re-Union. Gennadius says, that there were Three Letters on this Subject, but we have only one Extant, which concerns the Assembly of Monks at Easter, and that, as we have already said, is in the Abbot of Anian's Code.

Theodorus.

The MACARII.

THere are several Hermits of this Name, that liv'd much about the same time, and who are easily confounded, if one does not take heed. The First is he that dwelt in the Desart of Sceta, and liv'd in the time of St. Pachomius and Orsiesis, and was Evagrius's Master: He was an Abbot in Egypt and his Feast is kept on the 15th. of January. He was call'd the Young Old-man, παιδαριογέρων, because he had in his Youth the Judgment and Gravity of an Old-man. The Second Marcarius, Abbot in Thebais, was the Disciple of St. Pachomius, and his Feast is kept on the 12th. of January. 'Tis commonly believed, That the First of these Macarii was the Disciple and Interpreter of St. Anthony, mention'd by St. Jerom in the Life of Paul the Hermit: But Possinus the Jesuit maintains with great probability, that the Disciple of St. Anthony was different from both these two: and he proves it, because he was one of those two Disciples, who stay'd with St. Anthony in his Solitude Fifteen Years, and interr'd him; which cannot be said of the First Macarius, who died in 390, after he had been 60 Years a Monk of Sceta.

The Macarii.

There

The Macarii.

There is yet a 4th. Macarius, a Monk as well as the other three, but Younger than they, who wrote at Rome about the beginning of the 5th. Century, a Treatiſe againſt the Mathematicians. This is he to whom Ruffinus addreſs'd his Apology for Origen, and of whom St. Jerom ſays to Ruffinus in his 2d. Apology, If you had not come from the Eaſt, this able Man had been ſtill among the number of Mathematicians; And in his 16th. Letter, He had been Truly Macarius, that's to ſay, Bleſſed, if he had not met with ſuch a Maſter. There are many Books which bear the Name of Macarius, and 'tis not known to which of the three they belong. Theſe are, Firſt, Fifty Greek Homilies, tranſlated by Picus printed at Paris in Octavo in the Year 1559, and printed ſince in Folio in the Year 1623, with St. Gregory Thaumaturgus. There is alſo an Edition in Octavo, printed at Francfort in 1594. with the Tranſlation of Zacharias Palthonius, and they are inſerted into the Bibliothecæ Patrum. Secondly, Seven Tracts, publiſh'd in Greek and Latin by the Jeſuit Poſſinus, in his Book, entituled, Theſaurus Aſceticus, or the Aſcetical Treaſure, printed at Tholouſe in the Year 1684. Thirdly, A Rule publiſh'd by Roverius from a Manuſcript of the Abby of Becco, and in the Collection of the Abbot of Anian; where there is alſo another Rule written by way of Dialogue between Serapion, Paphnutius, and the two Macarii, which had been before publiſh'd at the End of Caſſian, in the Antwerp Edition of the Year 1578.

Gennadius aſſures us, That Macarius the Egyptian, i. e. the Elder, who was a Monk of Sceta, wrote only one Letter to the young Monks, wherein he teaches that Man can perfectly ſerve God, when knowing his Nature, he does voluntarily embrace all ſorts of Labour, and reſiſts all that is moſt Charming in this Life, to try the Aids that God has given him; and in ſhort, when by keeping himſelf pure, he arrives to that degree of Continence, that it becomes as it were natural to him. The Subject of this Letter comes near to thoſe Principles which are found in the Tracts and Greek Sermons that bear the Name of Macarius; which would make me believe that they were his, if Gennadius had not aſſur'd us, that Macarius the Egyptian wrote but one Letter only, which he mentions. We muſt therefore ſay, either that Gennadius was miſtaken, or that he intended another Macarius; or laſtly, That the Author of theſe Works, was that Macarius, who was the Diſciple and Interpreter of St. Anthony, ſuppoſing with Poſſinus, that he was not Macarius the Egyptian.

However, The 50 Homilies appear to me to be very Ancient; they are Exhortations to the Religious, and not Sermons to the People. The Firſt contains an Allegorical Explication of the Viſion of the Cherubims related by Ezekiel, which he applies to the ſtate of Man's Soul in this Life. The 2d. is of the Kingdom of Darkneſs; that is to ſay, of Sin; from which he maintains, That Man could not be deliver'd but by the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt, and by the Gifts of the Holy Spirit. In the 3d. He recommends to the Brethren to live in Peace, not to condemn one another; to pray continually, and to purifie their outward Man by fighting againſt the Temptations of the Fleſh and the Devil. He ſays in this Homily, That 'tis in our power to reſiſt and fight, but God only can pluck up Sin by the Roots; And that as a Man cannot See without Light, Speak without a Tongue, Hear without Ears, Walk without Feet, Labour without Hands; no more can a Man be Sav'd without Jeſus Chriſt. In the 4th. he ſhows, That in order to Improvement in Vertue, we muſt renounce the World, that we may obtain the Love of the Holy Spirit, which is abſolutely neceſſary for the Sanctification of Mankind. He teaches in this Homily, That Angels and Souls are very thin and ſubtile Bodies, which was an Error very common among the Ancient Monks. In the 5th. he deſcribes the difference between the Life of this World and that of Chriſtians. The 6th. is of Prayer, where he ſays, That it ſhould be made in ſilence, with Peace and Tranquility; That we muſt not throw fourth confuſed Cries, but having God before our Eyes, we muſt pray with Attention, and with a Mind full of holy Thoughts. At the end of this Exhortation, there are two Queſtions and Anſwers touching ſome paſſages concerning the Incarnation of Jeſus Chriſt. The 7th. and 8th. are Queſtions and Anſwers about many Difficulties. All which ſhew, That theſe are not Homilies to the People, but the Exhortations of an Abbot to his Regulars, who had propos'd to him the Difficulties they might meet with, to be reſolv'd in them. There are ſome of theſe Queſtions more curious than ſolid, and the Anſwers are often very Myſtical. Thoſe of the 8th. are about Prayer. In the 9th. he ſhows, That none can deliver himſelf from Temptations, but by fixing his Mind entirely upon God. In the 10th. he ſays That though a Man be improv'd in Vertue, yet he ought to conſider himſelf as one that has done nothing, and then he ought to reach forth after God with greater fervour, leſt he loſe the Holy Spirit by Pride or Lazineſs. The 11th. and 12. contain very obſcure Reflexions concerning the Fall of Mankind, and the Mercies of Jeſus Chriſt; and in the latter part there are Queſtions and Anſwers of very little uſe. In the 13th. he ſays, That ſince the coming of Jeſus Chriſt, God requires of Men greater Holineſs than before. In the 14th. he diſcourſes of the Reward of Chriſtians. The 15th. has no particular Subject. It begins with a Reflexion upon the Obligation that lies upon Chriſtians to honour Jeſus Chriſt with Purity and Faithfulneſs: and after this it contains many Queſtions, whereof the Firſt is concerning the Reſurrection; viz. If a Man ſhall riſe with all his Members; and the reſt concerning Concupiſcence, and the Inclination to Sin, that is found in all Men. He is of opinion, That 'tis a kind of Fire kindled in a Man, which inflames, as one may ſay, all his Parts; That a Man may reſiſt it, but that to do it aright, he muſt watch continually over himſelf, and always fight againſt it. He ſays, That thoſe who reſiſt their Paſſions, receive the Holy Spirit, and the Grace which Jeſus Chriſt has merited for them; but they ought to take good heed, that they be not lifted up with Pride, and that they continue in Humility and Contempt of themſelves, as being accountable to Jeſus Chriſt for the Grace they have received; and capable of falling from that State of Holineſs in which they are, unleſs they preſerve themſelves in it, by the vertue of Humility, which he calls the Sign and infallible Mark of a Chriſtian. In the 16th. he ſays, That a Man ought always to live in Fear, becauſe he is always always expos'd to Temptations; That even thoſe that have not yet received Grace, ought ſo to behave themſelves, as to do Good and forſake Evil by Natural Motives; but thoſe who have receiv'd it, need not ſuch kind of Motives, becauſe this Grace producing Love in their Hearts, makes that become ſweet and pleaſant, which appear'd rough and uneaſie, and makes that appear eaſie which was thought before to be impoſſible. In the 17th. he treats of the Spiritual Unction, and the ſtate of the more Perfect Chriſtians, and makes it appear, that notwithſtanding any Holineſs they have acquir'd, they ought always to fear, becauſe they are always in a Capacity of falling away. In the 18th. he declares the marvellous Effects of the Gifts of the Holy Spirit in the Soul of a Spiritual Man. In the 19th. he explains the degrees through which a Man ought to paſs to acquire Perfection; That he ought firſt to uſe his utmoſt natural endeavours to do good, and then God ſeeing him ſtrive after this manner, gives him the Grace of Prayer, by which means he obtains all Vertues. In the 20th. he ſays, That none but Jeſus Chriſt can cure the Soul that's wounded by the Sin of Adam, and therefore we muſt addreſs our ſelves to him by Prayer, that he would give us his Grace. The 21ſt. is of the War that Men are oblig'd to make againſt their Vices and their Paſſions. In the 22d. he deſcribes the terrible difference between the latter End of the Juſt and the Wicked; and ſays, that at the hour of Death the Souls of the Juſt are received by Angels and conducted to the Lord; but thoſe of the Wicked are encompaſs'd by Devils, who draw them down with themſelves to Hell. The 23d. is of the Victory which a Chriſtian ought to gain over his Paſſions. The 24. is of the Neceſſity of the Grace and Influence of the Holy Spirit, to make us capable and worthy of Eternal Life. He continues the ſame Subject in the 25th. wherein, after he has prov'd, that we cannot ſhun all the occaſions of Sin, nor reſiſt all our Paſſions, without the aſſiſtance of the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt, he makes a lively Repreſentation of the ſtate of the Men of this World, and deſcribes the wonderful Effects which the Cœleſtial Fire of the Holy Spirit produces in our Souls. The 26th. contains many Queſtions and Anſwers, concerning the Temptations of the Devil and the Effects of Grace. The Author there teaches, That Man is reſtor'd to his Primitive Dignity by the Holy Spirit; That the Devil cannot tempt us any further than God permits him; That Grace changes the Affections of the Heart; That the Devil knows ſome part of our Thoughts, but there are others unknown to him; That Grace and Charity have no Bounds, and we ought never to ſay that we have arriv'd at the higheſt degree of Perfection; That the Soul goes immediately after Death to that place on which its Love was plac'd during this Life; That the Good which may be done by Natural Strength, can never Save a Man without the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt; That we ought always to attribute to him all the Good we do, and to ſay, If God had not aſſiſted us, we ſhould neither have Faſted, nor Prayed, nor forſaken the World: And that God ſeeing us attribute to him the Actions which may be done by our Natural Powers, has liberally beſtow'd upon us the Spiritual, Heavenly and Divine Gifts of his Grace; That the Actions which are done without Grace, may be Good, but they are not Perfect. In the 27th. after he has firſt conſider'd the Dignity of a Chriſtian, he then Anſwers to many Queſtions about the Effects of Grace: He ſays, That no Man ſhall ever arrive at the top of Perfection in this World; That whatever ſtate they are in, whatever Grace they have, they are always capable of ſinning; That the ſtrongeſt Grace does not hinder the Will from following after Evil, becauſe the Nature of Man, as long as he is in this World, is changeable, and that though God has beſtow'd very ſingular Grace upon Chriſtians, they ought nevertheleſs to work out their own Salvation with Fear and Trembling. In the 28th. he deplores the ſtate of that Soul where Jeſus Chriſt dwells not at all, becauſe of Sin. In the 29th. he ſays, That God gives his Grace after two different manners; That he prevents ſome with it before they have us'd their own endeavours, and beſtows it upon others after they have labour'd a long time; and then he ſhows what reaſon we have to admire the Goodneſs and Wiſdom of the Divine Conduct both towards the one and the other. In the 30th. he ſhows, That if the Holy Spirit does not produce within us the Love of God, we cannot enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. In the 31ſt. he Exhorts Men to Prayer, That they may obtain the change and renovation of their Heart. In the 32d. he ſays, That we cannot certainly know whether we be in a ſtate of Grace as long as we are in this World, becauſe we are always tormented with the Motions of Luſt, but at the Day of Judgment, thoſe who belong to God ſhall be made known. The 33d. is of the Attention and Fervour we ought to have in Prayer. The 34th. is of Eternal Glory. The 35th. is of the ſtate of a Soul which God has deliver'd from Evil Thoughts, which he calls a New Sabbath. The 36th. is of their different degrees of Glory, who ſhall riſe again from the Dead. In the 37th. he proves, That many who have thought themſelves Juſt, were not really ſo; and that thoſe who believ'd themſelves to be arriv'd at the higheſt degree of Perfection, have oftentimes faln into Sin. I paſs over the 38th. becauſe that is entire among the little Tracts of Mark the Hermit. In the 39th. he ſays, Tis to no purpoſe to read the Scripture, if we do not make improvement by it. In the 40th. he proves, That there is a concatenation of Vertues one with another, and that there is the ſame in Vices: He anſwers alſo three Queſtions, and in his Anſwers, he ſays, That there are different degrees of Damnation, and that greater Sinners ſhall be more puniſh'd, than thoſe that have not committed ſo great Crimes; That the quiet ſtate of ſome Souls does not hinder them from exerciſing Charity; That Grace and an Inclination to Sin may be found together in one and the ſame Soul at the ſame time. In the 41ſt. he deſcribes the Improvements of Grace in a Soul, and makes it appear, that none can preſerve this Diſpoſition of growing in Grace without Humility. In the 42d. he ſays, That nothing but the Actions of Men can be hurtful or uſeful unto them. In the 43d. he ſpeaks of the different Improvements of thoſe that ſtrive againſt Sin, but 'tis ſo obſcure, that hardly any thing can be underſtood in it. The 44th. is of the Change that Jeſus Chriſt wrought in us, and the manner how he heals our Souls: He continues the ſame Subject in the following Homily, and explains by many Com-

The Macarii.

 pariſons,

The Macarii.

pariſons, the Union of the Soul with God. In the 46th. he ſays, That a ſick Soul may have recourſe to a Phyſician, to pray and requeſt his help, and when the Heavenly Phyſician comes to its aſſiſtance, he joyns himſelf to it, to lighten and conduct it, and make it his Spouſe. The 47th. contains many Allegorical Explications of the Law of Moſes, which he applies to the different ſtates of the Soul. In the 48th. he ſays, That thoſe who have a true Faith of Heavenly things, ought not to have their Affections fix'd on things of this Earth; and that thoſe who retire from the World, ought not to be ſollicitous or anxious about the things thereof: In ſhort, he would not have the Monks make uſe of any Medicines to help them in their Diſeaſes, but to put their whole Truſt in Jeſus Chriſt. In the 49th. he ſhows, That 'tis not enough to have abandon'd the World, but we muſt alſo ardently ſeek after Eternal Happineſs. In the 50th. and laſt, he obſerves, That God was the Cauſe of all the Miracles which the Saints wrought, and from this Remark he draws a Moral Reflection, that we cannot command the Devil, but by the Aſſiſtance of God and the Power of the Holy Spirit. He adds, That he that conſiders his Infirmity, his Weakneſs and Wounds, and does not withal conſider the Aids of the Holy Spirit which ſtrengthens him, is an Indiſcreet Man: And on the contrary, He that ſo much thinks upon the Divine Aids as to forget his own Weakneſs, and ſo fanſies that he can never fall, does miſerably deceive himſelf. After this manner does this Author always reconcile theſe two Fundamental Doctrines of Grace and Free-Will, that we ought always ſo to labour, as if the whole depended upon our own Endeavours, and yet to acknowledge that we can do nothing without God. And if Men had always contented themſelves with this Simplicity without nicer Philoſophical Enquiries, How many Queſtions had been ended without Noiſe! How many Differences compos'd! What Diſputes had been Aboliſh'd! What Arguments Superſeded! How many Books had been ſtifled! But to return to our Author; there are beſides Seven Spiritual Treatiſes of his, which have been publiſh'd in Greek and Latin by Poſſinus: The 1ſt. is concerning Watching over our Heart; The 2d. Of Perfection of Mind; The 3d. Of Prayer; The 4th. Of Patience and Diſcretion; The 5th. Of the Elevation of the Mind; The 6th. Of Charity; The 7th. Of the Freedom of Spirit; and ſome Apophthegms of the Fathers. 'Tis plain, That the Author of the 50 Homilies is the Author of theſe Treatiſes; for there is the ſame Genius in them both. He has the ſame Notions, and the ſame Stile. He Diſcourſes after the ſame manner of Grace and Free-Will, and he maintains in theſe Seven Treatiſes, as well as the Author of the Homilies, That Angels and Souls are Bodies. But 'tis not ſo certain that theſe are the Works of Macarius the Diſciple of St. Anthony; and I think 'tis more probable, that they were made by a later Monk. Whoever was the Author, his Stile is Simple, and one may ſee that he was a Good Hermit, who ſpeaks from his Heart without Affectation and ornament, and oftentimes even without Order. He allegorizes all, and expreſſes a great many myſtical Thoughts which are very hardly intelligible, and for the moſt part makes uſe of Compariſons which are not juſt and fit. In a word, Some things have eſcap'd him, which cannot altogether be reconcil'd to good ſence; ſo difficult a thing it is in Spiritual Matters not to wander ſometimes!

The Rules which bear the Name of Macarius, are of another Author; Thoſe that are found under the Name of Macarius only, in Benedictus Anianenſis's Code, are attributed to Macarius of Alexandria, i. e. the Abbot of Nitria, Diſciple of St. Pachomius, and Maſter of Evagrius. There is a certain paſſage in them which ſeems to be taken out of St. Jerom's Letter to Ruſticus, which makes me think, either that this was added, or that St. Jerom imitated St. Macarius. However this Rule is ancient, and is cited by the Author of the Life of St. Philibert, who ſays, That this Saint read the Rules of St. Macarius, St. Benedict and St. Columbanus. The other Rule which is found in the ſame Code, compos'd by the two Macarii, St. Serapion, and St. Paphnutius, is made in the Form of a Dialogue, and probably is nothing elſe, but ſome Conferences of theirs, which ſome Monks had gathered together; as the two Rules which follow in the ſame Code, are a Collection of the Speeches of 34 Abbots. There is alſo found a Rule in the ſame Code which bears the Name of the Abbot Iſaiah, which is proper for Hermits, and eſpecially younger Regulars. 'Tis full of Moral Precepts, and therefore had the Title of, The Precepts and Advices of the Abbot Iſaiah. This Abbot is probably he whom Ruffinus and Palladius mention and call the Abbot of Syria. There are alſo under the Name of the ſame Iſaiah, ſome Remarks upon a Religious Life, publiſh'd by Poſſinus. At the ſame time there liv'd one Mark, a Hermit, who dwelt in the Deſart of the Cells, and liv'd almoſt an Hundred Years, to whom ſome Books are attributed, which probably belong to another Mark who liv'd long after.

I ſhall ſay nothing at preſent of the Diſcourſes, the Anſwers, and Admonitions of the other Hermits of this time, becauſe they may be ſeen in Ruffinus, Palladius, and other Authors who have written their Lives.

SERAPION Biſhop of Thmuis.

Serapion Biſhop of Thmuis.

WE muſt not confound this Serapion, whom we now write of, with the famous Serapion Abbot in the Territory of Arſinoe, though he was a Monk and Abbot as well as the other; but this Serapion was Ordain'd towards the Year 340 Biſhop of Thmuis a City of Egypt, in the Province of Sceta, by St. Athanaſius, at we find in his Epiſtle to Dracontius. St. Jerom ſays, That this Biſhop deſerv'd the Name of a Scholar becauſe of his Eloquence; That he was St. Anthony's Friend, and had the honour to be a Confeſſor under Conſtantius, that is to ſay, to ſuffer for the Defence of the Faith of the Council of Nice, and the Innocence of St. Athanaſius. 'Tis probable, that 'tis he, whoſe Name is read among the Subſcriptions of the Letter from the Council of Sardica: 'Tis he alſo who who wrote to St. Athanasius about the Death of Arius, as we learn by the Answer of this Father, which is directed to him. St. Jerom, says, That he wrote a Book against the Manichees, a Treatise of the Titles of the Psalms, and many very useful Letters: We have no more extant, but his Treatise against the Manichees, publish'd by Canisius, wherein he proves, That Vice or Evil is not a Substance, and that our Nature is not Evil of it self: Which he proves chiefly, because many very wicked Persons do afterwards become very pious and vertuous. This is the Subject of this little Treatise. The Arguments in it are very Solid, but the Stile is very Simple and without Art.

Serapion Bishop of Thmuis.

EUSEBIUS EMISENUS.

THIS EUSEBIUS, was of Edessa, a City of Mesopotamia, of a considerable Family. He had learn'd from his Infancy the Holy Scriptures according to the Custom of his Country, and then he Studied the Greek and Humane Learning, and came to Palestine to perfect himself in the Knowledge of the Scripture; he was the Disciple of Eusebius of Cæsarea, and of Patrophilus of Scythopolis. The Eusebians would have chosen him Bishop of Antioch, after the Deposition of Eustathius; and afterwards would have plac'd him in the See of Alexandria, in the room of St. Athanasius, but he would not accept of these contested Bishopricks. He was afterwards Ordain'd Bishop of Emesa, near Mount Libanus, but the People made so great Resistance against him, that he was forc'd to retire to Laodicea, where he was well receiv'd by George, Bishop of that Church, who re-establish'd him in Emesa. He was very dear to Constantius, who carried him with him, to the Persian War. He died in the Year 359, when his Successor, Paul of Emesa, assisted at the Council of Seleucia, as we learn from St. Epiphanius. He is plac'd in some Martyrologies, among the Number of Saints. St. Jerom gives this Account of the Writings of this Bishop: "Eusebius, Bishop of Emesa, "who was well skill'd in Rhetorick, and had the Air of an Orator, wrote an infinite Number of "Books; he applied himself Chiefly, to give the Historical Sence of Scripture; and therefore those "who would learn to Preach, read his Books with great Attention. His principal Pieces were against the Jews, against the Gentiles, against the Novatians, Two Books of Commentaries upon the Epistle to the Galatians, and many short Homilies upon the Gospels. Theodoret, has preserv'd in his Third Dialogue, Two Fragments to prove, That the Divinity of Jesus Christ did not suffer, which are taken out of some of those Books that we have already spoken of; and there are in the Greek Catena's upon the Scriptures, several Fragments which are attributed to Eusebius of Emesa. The Homilies which we have at present under his Name, are none of his, tho' they are cited under his Name in the Eleventh Century, by Guitmondus, and in the Twelfth, by Gratian, but they were all written by some Latin Authors, much later than Eusebius of Emesa (a); some of them by St. Eucherius, others by Faustus Rhedonensis, and Cæsarius of Arles, and many other French-men. Petrus Diaconus, Library-keeper of Mount-Cassin, attributes these Homilies upon the Gospels, and upon the Feasts of the several Seasons, and of the Saints of the Year, to Bruno, Bishop of Signi; and this is confirm'd by the Catalogues in the Manuscripts of the Vatican, and Mount-Cassin, where these Homilies are attributed to the same Author. They were Publish'd by Gagneus, and Printed apart, and also in the Fifth Volume of the Bibliotheca Patrum at Cologne.

Eusebius Emisenus.

(a) But they were all written by some Latin Authors, much later than Eusebius of Emesa.] The Stile is of a Latin Author that understood no Greek: And it appears by the Homilies of St. Blandina, Epiphodius, Alexander of St. Genest, that the Author was a Frenchman. There is a Sermon of St. Maximus the Second Abbot of Lerins, which mentions also St. Honoratus Abbot of Lerins. And afterwards Bishop of Arles, who liv'd long after the Death of Eusebius of Emesa. There is also a Sermon of the Rogation-days instituted by St. Mamertus. The Author calls himself the Disciple of St. Maximus Abbot of Lerins, which makes me believe that these Sermons belong to St. Eucherius of Lyons, under whose Name they have been printed. The Author of the Homilies about Easter opposes the Heretick Pelagius, and cites St. Gregory the Great.

BASIL of Ancyra.

BASIL, was ordain'd Bishop of Ancyra, in the Year 336, by the Bishops of Eusebius's Party, in the room of Marcellus, whom they had already Deposed: He was Excommunicated, and his Ordination declar'd void in the Council of Sardica, but yet he continued still in the Possession of his See: He Disputed against Photinus in the Council of Sirmium, in the Year 351, and there confounded that Heretick. He was one of the greatest Enemies to the Arians or Anomœans, that is to say, to those that openly defended the Opinion of Arius, and maintain'd, that the Word was not at all like to the Father: But he was look'd upon, as the Head of that Party, which was afterwards call'd Semi-Arians, who refusing to acknowledge, That the Son was Consubstantial with the Father; affirm'd, that he was like him in all things, and even in Substance. Basil maintain'd this Opinion stoutly, and caus'd it to be Establish'd by the Authority of a Council, which was held at Ancyra, in the Year 358. He defended it at Seleucia and Constantinople, against the Intrigues of the Eudoxians and Acacians, who Depos'd him in the Year 360, after they had charg'd him with many Crimes. St. Jerom, informs us, That Basil of Ancyra, wrote a Book against Marcellus his Predecessor, a Treatiſe of Virginity, and ſome other little Pieces. We have nothing of his extant, but his Conduct and Actions, diſcover him to have been a Man of Wit, Eloquent, and well skill'd in Theology. Tho' he is ſaid to be the Head of that Party, who were call'd Semi-Arians, yet 'tis not certain that he was a Heretick; on the contrary, St. Baſil ſpeaks of him as a Catholick Biſhop, and St. Athanaſius, confeſſes in his Book of Synods, That Baſil of Ancyra, and thoſe of his Party, did not differ from them that profeſs'd the Conſubſtantiality, but only in words; and therefore St. Hilary and Philaſtrius, call the Biſhops of the Council of Sirmium, that was held againſt Photinus, whereof Baſil of Ancyra was the Chief, Orthodox and Holy Biſhops.

Basil of Ancyra.

Baſil of Ancyra.

LIBERIUS.

Liberius.

LIBERIUS Succeeded Pope Julius in the See of Rome, in the Year 352. He proteſts in one of his Letters, That 'twas much againſt his Will, that he was promoted to this Dignity. In the Fragments of St. Hilary, there is a Letter attributed to this Pope, which was written to the Biſhops of the Eaſt, ſoon after his Elevation to the Pontificate, wherein he acquaints them, That he had ſent to St. Athanaſius, three Prieſts of the Church of Rome, Luke, Paul and Ælianus, to cite him to Rome, that Judgment might be given about his Cauſe, according to the Diſcipline of the Church; That he had alſo directed another Letter to him, wherein he acquaints him, That in Caſe he did not come to Rome, He would declare him Excommunicated from the Roman Church. He adds, That theſe Prieſts being return'd, and having inform'd him that Athanaſius refus'd to come, he had follow'd the Judgment that the Eaſtern Biſhops gave againſt him; That he would Communicate with them, and all the Biſhops of the Catholick Church; That on the contrary, Athanaſius was faln from his Communion, as well as from that of the Roman Church, and from all Correſpondence with it by Letters.

This is the Subſtance of this Letter attributed to Liberius, which would not be much for his Advantage, if it were really his: But I think, 'tis very probable, that he never wrote any ſuch thing, and that this Epiſtle was forg'd by him that made the Collection of the Fragments of St. Hilary. For Firſt, Is it any ways Credible, that Liberius ſhould Excommunicate St. Athanaſius, without any Cauſe, and without any Regard to the Judgment of his Predeceſſor, or to that of the Council of Sardica?

Secondly, The Author of this Letter ſays, That the Eaſtern Biſhops had wrote to Julius againſt St. Athanaſius, without mentioning the Judgment which this Pope gave in his Favour.

Thirdly, St. Athanaſius never complains that Liberius had Excommunicated him before he was Baniſh'd; but on the contrary, he ſuppoſes, That he was always for him, till he Subſcrib'd in the place of his Baniſhment.

Fourthly, The Words of St. Hilary which follow this Letter, have no connexion with the Contents of it, and plainly ſhow, That he refers to a quite different Letter: The Words are theſe; [Is not this a very Holy Letter? What does it contain in it that proceeds not from a Spirit full of the Fear of God? But Potamius and Epictetus, deſiring to condemn the Biſhop of Rome, as is ſaid in the Synod of Ariminum, would not obey him; and tho' Fortunatianus ſent this Letter to many Biſhops, he loſt his Labour.] Now is it credible, That St. Hilary ſhould ſo commend a Letter that contain'd the Condemnation of St. Athanaſius? What he adds, does yet more clearly prove what we have ſaid, and confirm our Opinion. [They would rather prejudice their own Intereſts, and hazard all, than refuſe Communion to St. Athanaſius, or reflect upon the Authority of the Council of Sardica, which had abſolv'd him. The Egyptians wrote to Liberius, that he ſhould maintain Communion with St. Athanaſius, as they had formerly written to Julius, to deſire him, that he would reſtore him to it.] Theſe words plainly diſcover, that Liberius had not Excommunicated St. Athanaſius, ſince the Egyptians do not deſire him, as they had formerly done Julius, to reſtore him to Communion, but only to maintain Communion with him. Qualis ad Julium pridem de reddenda exulanti Communione, talis nunc, ut de ſubjectis intelligitur, datæ ſunt de tuenda.

Fifthly, Liberius himſelf is a Witneſs, That he never Excommunicated St. Athanaſius. For in his Letter to Lucifer, where he gives an Account of what happen'd about the Cauſe of this Saint, at the beginning of his Pontificate, he ſays, That the Biſhops of the Eaſt had written Letters againſt him, that he had not ſuppreſs'd them, as he was accus'd, but had read them in Council, and yet gave no Credit to them: Queis fidem & ſententiam non commodavimus noſtram: [Which we did neither believe nor approve,] becauſe he at the ſame time receiv'd Letters from 75 Biſhops of Egypt, in behalf of St. Athanaſius. Does not this plainly ſhew, That the Letter which we now ſpeak of, was none of Liberius's, ſince it ſuppoſes, that he believ'd the Letter from thoſe of the Eaſt, and Excommunicated St. Athanaſius.

Sixthly, If Liberius had Excommunicated St. Athanaſius at the beginning of his Pontificate, would not the Officers of Conſtantius have alledg'd this as a Reaſon to make him Subſcribe to his Condemnation? And how could he have maintain'd ſo ſtoutly as he did, That the Church of Rome had always held him Innocent?

Seventhly, Tho' Liberius ſhould have conceal'd or ſuppreſs'd this Letter, while he was of St. Athanaſius's Party; yet would he not have produc'd it immediately after he had Sign'd againſt him? For then he could have no Intereſt to conceal it, but on the contrary, was oblig'd to publiſh it: And yet even

even then he confesses, that he was always of St. Athanasius's side. [Because Julius my Predecessor of happy Memory, receiv'd St. Athanasius into his Communion, I was afraid lest I should have pass'd for a Prevaricator, if I should have condemned him; but as soon as I understood that you had justly condemn'd him, I follow'd your Judgment.] Does not this plainly shew, that Liberius did not Condemn St. Athanasius at the Beginning of his Pontificate, but that on the contrary, he did always Protect him, upon the Authority of his Predecessor? Liberius.

Lastly, There are some Expressions in this Letter, that were not us'd till after Liberius's time.

From all which, I conclude it to be false, that Liberius did write this Letter, or Excommunicate St. Athanasius. On the contrary, immediately after he was exalted to the Pontificate, he wrote to him a Letter of Communion. The Bishops of the East wrote to him against this Saint, and those of Egypt for him. He read their Letters in a Synod, where 'twas decreed that Communion must be continued with St. Athanasius, as it had always been in the West. This happened towards the End of the Year 352, or at the Beginning of 353, before the defeat of Magnentius. After the Death of this Tyrant, Constantius conven'd a Council at Arles. Liberius sent thither Vincentius of Capua, in his Name, together with Marcellus a Bishop in Campania, and gave them Order to entreat the Emperour, That he would call a Council at Aquileia. These Bishops were so far from being stedfast, that they suffer'd themselves to be impos'd upon, and Subscrib'd to the Condemnation of St. Athanasius, together with all the other Bishops of the Council, excepting only Paulinus the Bishop of Triers: Liberius understanding this, sent Lucifer Calaritanus, with Pancratius a Priest, and Hilary a Deacon, to carry a Letter to the Emperour Constantius, wherein after he had given an Account of what we have already said concerning every thing that had been done since the Beginning of his Pontificate, in the Cause of St. Athanasius, he prays him to Order the Examination of this Affair in a Free Council, upon Condition that they should begin with Confirming the Nicene Creed. He gave to the same Deputies a Letter of Recommendation, address'd to Eusebius Vercellensis, and indeed, he wrote two other Letters to him, one of Recommendation, and another of Thanks. About the same time, He wrote also to Hosius, and to other Bishops concerning the Lapse of Vincentius of Capua. Immediately after the Council of Milan, held in the Year 355, which was not more favourable to St. Athanasius, than that of Arles had been before, Liberius wrote an Elegant Letter to Eusebius Vercellensis, Denys and Lucifer then in Banishment, wherein he praises them for their Constancy, and testifies to them, That he was ready to suffer the same Persecution for the same Cause. He says, He knew not whether he should be griev'd for their Absence, or rejoyce for their Glory; which he observes to be greater than that of former Martyrs, because these suffer'd only the Torments of their Pagan Persecutors, but they endur'd the Injuries of their false Brethren. He prays them to assist him with their Prayers, That God would give him Grace to bear with Patience and Constancy, the Tryals that he was threaten'd with. And indeed, a little after, Constantius perceiving that there was none almost left but Liberius, who justified the Innocence of this Saint, and desiring to confirm his Condemnation by the Authority of the Bishop of Rome, sent an Eunuch thither, who urg'd him to Subscribe to the Condemnation of St. Athanasius to no purpose; for all the Answer he could get from him, was, That he should call a Free Council in some place, that was distant from the Court, where there should be neither Guards nor Officers; That this Council should begin with making a Profession of the Faith, as it had been explain'd in the Council of Nice; That it should drive away all the Arians, and anathematize their Error, and then afterwards should examine the Cause of St. Athanasius. The Emperour having receiv'd this Answer, sent an Order to the Governour of Rome, to surprize Liberius, and send him to Court, which Order was executed. And when he was in the Emperour's presence, he spoke to him with no less Constancy, than he had done at Rome to his Eunuch. We have his Answers in Theodoret in B. II. of his Hist. Ch. 16. wherein he discovers an unconceivable Firmness of Mind, in refusing to Subscribe to the Condemnation of St. Athanasius. Constantius objected to him, That he had been condemn'd by all the World; and, says he, You are the only Bishop in the World, that justifies an impious Disturber of the Peace; to which he answer'd with great Constancy, Tho' I were alone, yet the Cause of Faith is nevertheless Good, for at another time there were found but three young Men that disobey'd the Orders of the King. After this, he pray'd him, That he would call a Synod, but withal, desir'd, That before they should proceed to examine St. Athanasius's Cause, He would make all the Bishops Subscribe the Nicene Creed. Constantius being enrag'd against St. Athanasius, as supposing him the cause of that Enmity, which his Brother Constans had against him; Liberius, as to this, answer'd him wisely, You ought not, Sir, to make use of Bishops to revenge your Quarrels; for the hands of Ecclesiasticks, ought not to be employ'd, but only to Bless and to Sanctify. At last, Constantius threatning him with Banishment; I have already, says he, bid adieu to my Brethren at Rome, for the Ecclesiastical Laws are to be preferr'd before my Living there. Three Days time were given him to consider of it, and because he did not change his Opinion in that time, he was Banish'd two Days after to Berœa, a City of Thrace. The Emperour, the Empress, and the Eunuch Eusebius, offer'd him Money to bear the Expence of his Journey, but he refus'd it, and went away chearfully to the place of his Banishment. The Clergy of Rome, having lost their Head, took an Oath to chuse no body in the Room of Liberius, as long as he was alive: But Constantius, by the management of Epictetus, Bishop of Centumcellæ in Italy, procur'd one Felix a Deacon, to be ordain'd Bishop, who was himself also one of those that had sworn not to chuse a Bishop in the Room of Liberius. St. Jerom, says, That Acacius had a hand in this Ordination. St. Jerom and Socrates accuse this Felix of Arianism; but Theodoret and Ruffinus, say, That he was not an Arian in Doctrine, but only communicated with that Party. However, all the Ancients agree, That this

Ordination

Liberius. Ordination was not lawful (a); and ſome late Authors are very much to be blam'd for putting this Man in the Catalogue of Popes, and yet they have far leſs Reaſon to place him among the Holy Martyrs in very many Martyrologies (b).

But Liberius, who had given proof of ſo great Conſtancy in time of Peace, could not long endure the tedioufneſs of Baniſhment; for before he had been two Years in it, he ſuffer'd himſelf to be over-perſwaded by Demophilus Biſhop of that City, to which he was baniſh'd, and did not only Subſcribe the Condemnation of St. Athanaſius; but he alſo conſented to an Heretical Confeſſion of Faith (c);

(a) However, all the Ancients agree, That this Ordination was not lawful.] St Athanaſius, in his Epiſtle to thoſe that lead a Monaſtick Life; ſays, that he was ordain'd in the Palace without the Conſent of the People, or the Election of the Clergy, by Epictetus, in the Preſence of Three Eunuchs, and Three Biſhops, who were rather Spies than Biſhops; that the People would not permit him to enter into the Church, and withdrew themſelves from his Communion. St. Jerom ſays that he was an Antipope. Optatus and St. Auſtin in the Catalogue of Popes, makes no mention of Felix, but place Damaſus immediately after Liberius. And certainly Liberius being a lawful Biſhop, another could not be ordain'd in his Room. And whereas 'tis ſuppos'd, that after his Lapſe he fell from his Biſhop-rick. This can never make the Ordination of Felix valid which was null from the Beginning; Beſides Liberius was not depos'd after his Fall, but on the contrary was always acknowledg'd as a lawful Biſhop, and continued in the Poſſeſſion of his See with the Conſent of all the Biſhops of the Catholick Church.

(b) They have far leſs Reaſon to place him among the holy Martyrs in very many Martyrologies.] His Feſtival is kept on Auguſt 4th. Mombritius was the firſt that publiſh'd his Life, and after him Baluſius put forth a more correct Edition of it. There was a Diſpute about the Saintſhip of Felix, among the Correctors of the Roman Martyrology in the Time of Gregory; and 'tis ſaid, there was then found an old Inſcription in the Church of St. Coſmus and St. Damian, expreſs'd in theſe words: The Body of St. Felix Pope and Martyr, by whom Conſtantius was Condemn'd. But the Life of this Felix and theſe Monuments are apochryphal: For, firſt, they ſuppoſe that Conſtantius put him to Death; But 'tis evident by the Teſtimony of Marcellinus the Presbyter, that Felix ſurviv'd Conſtantius. 2. How could it poſſibly be, that neither St. Athanaſius, nor Hilary, nor Lucifer, &c. nor any other of the Ancients ſhould ever ſpeak one word either of the Condemnation of Conſtantius by Felix, or the Martyrdom of this Pope? 3. The Acts of Mombritius relate, that Conſtantius was condemned for being twice baptiz'd by Euſebius of Nicomedia: But 'tis manifeſt from the Teſtimonies of St. Hilary and Lucifer, that Conſtantius was a Catechumen, and was not baptiz'd till about the latter end of his Life by Euzoius as St. Athanaſius relates in the Book of Synods. The Authority of theſe Martyrologies is of little worth, as well as that of Anaſtaſius the Library-keeper. The Inſcription found in the Church of St. Coſmus, and St. Damian is an Argument of little weight.

(c) Conſented to an Heretical Confeſſion of Faith.] Baronius and many others maintain, that he ſubſcrib'd only the firſt Creed of Sirmium which was not heretical: But if this had been ſo, St. Hilary who approv'd this Creed, had never call'd that which was ſign'd by Liberius, the Perfidiouſneſs of the Arians, and anathematiz'd Liberius ſo often upon the Account of his Subſcription. St. Jerom ſays alſo, that Liberius was forc'd to ſign Hereſy, and all the Ancients ſpeak of the Fall of Liberius, as the Approbation of the Hereſy of the Arians, which made Faber, Blondel and Petavius think that Liberius ſubſcrib'd the Second Creed of Sirmium. But this Opinion has its Difficulties, for St. Hilary ſays, that the Creed ſign'd by Liberius was compos'd by 22 Biſhops, which were for the moſt part Eaſtern; and that the Second Creed was made by Potamius and the Weſtern Biſhops. Baſil is reckon'd among thoſe that approv'd the Firſt, and condemn'd the Second Creed of Sirmium as ſoon as it appear'd. In ſhort, Liberius return'd not from his Exile, till after the Council of Ancyra; in which, the Eaſtern Biſhops had already thrown out the Second Creed of Sirmium. What Probability is there then, that they ſhould offer it to him to ſign? To anſwer theſe Difficulties and clear up this Matter, we muſt obſerve, that Demophilus caus'd Liberius to ſign or approve a Creed while he was in Exile, different from that which he ſign'd after his Return to Sirmium; that the Creed which Demophilus preſented to him, was made at Sirmium by many Biſhops, quæ, ſays Liberius in his Letter, Sirmium à pluribus Fratribus, & Coepiſcopis noſtris tranſlata & ſuſcepta eſt: Words which can be underſtood of none but the Second Creed of Sirmium, which begins thus; Cum nonnulla putaretur eſſe de fide diſceptatio, diligenter omnia apud Sirmium tractata ſunt & diſcuſſa, præſentibus ſanctiſſimis Epiſcopis: And therefore we muſt ſay, that the Creed which Liberius approv'd in his Exile was the Second of Sirmium: For Demophilus was an Arian, and of the Party of Urſacius and Valens, who maintain'd the Second Creed of Sirmium. 'Twas for this Reaſon that Eudoxus and Aëtius ſpread a Report that Liberius was of their Opinion, and Liberius himſelf wrote to Urſacius and Valens, that he was of their Judgment; but being afterwards call'd to Sirmium, where he found Baſil of Ancyra, Eleuſius, and the other Semi-Arian Biſhops, who a little before had condemn'd the Arians in the Council of Ancyra, he and thoſe other Biſhops ſign'd a Book, which contain'd the Creeds of Antioch, the Firſt of Sirmium, and thoſe other Creeds that aſſerted the Son to be like unto the Father, and were oblig'd to condemn thoſe that ſaid he was unlike to him. See Sozomen B. IV. ch. 15. of his Hiſt. Nevertheleſs it may be objected, That the Second Creed of Sirmium was not made by Baſil and the other Eaſtern Biſhops; but that which was preſented to Liberius by Demophilus, was made by theſe Biſhops as we are aſſured by the Fragments of Hilary. To this, I know of no other Anſwer but by ſaying, that the Names of theſe Biſhops were added by the Author who made theſe Extracts out of St. Hilary, who has put in the Margin, Inquirendum, i. e. we muſt enquire if theſe were the Biſhops: Which plainly diſcovers, that he was not certain of it, but might ſet down thoſe Names at a venture. This is what I thought my ſelf oblig'd to ſay of this Queſtion, which is very difficult and famous, though of no great uſe: [Though it is of no great Importance for us to know who preciſely were the Biſhops that drew up the Second Sirmian Creed; yet it is of great Moment to know whether that or the Creed of the Firſt Council of Sirmium were ſign'd by Pope Liberius: Our Author, who knew the thing was too groſs to be quite omitted, ſhuffles it off at laſt as if it had been a critical Queſtion, only ſtarted at firſt to employ the learned: But when the ableſt Advocates of the Church of Rome have confeſſed, that an Arian Creed was deliberately ſign'd by one of its Biſhops, they muſt alſo own that this deſtroys Infallibility effectually: And St. Hilary's Carriage, who declaimed againſt Liberius's Apoſtacy with all the Warmth that he uſually employ'd upon ſuch Occaſions, ſhews how the Orthodox Biſhops of that Age, thought a Biſhop of Rome might be treated, when guilty of a Crime which they thought equal to that of denying the Faith in the Times of Paganiſm.]

whether

whether it was the First or Second Confession of Sirmium, is disputed among the Learned. Whichsoever 'twas, he did certainly write one Letter of Communion to the Bishops of the East, wherein having declar'd St. Athanasius to be cast out of his Communion, and acknowledg'd his Approbation of that Confession of Faith which Demophilus presented unto him, he desires them to use their Interest and Prayers with the Emperour, to obtain his Deliverance from Banishment, and restauration to that Church which God had entrusted him with. He wrote also at the same time two Letters, which contain'd for the most part the same things, one to Ursacius and Valens, and the other to Vincentius of Capua; which are preserved amongst the Fragments of St. Hilary. Liberius.

After these Letters Liberius quickly obtain'd his Desires; for the Emperour being satisfied, sent immediately for him to come to Sirmium, where he found Deputies of Bishops from the East and from the West. There was held a kind of a Council, which made a Collection of all the Creeds that had been approv'd by the Semi-Arians, wherein the Son was declar'd like unto the Father in Substance. These Creeds Liberius was oblig'd to sign, and then was sent back to Rome, with a Letter from the Synod directed to Felix, importing that Liberius and he should govern the Church of Rome as Co-partners. But Liberius was no sooner return'd thither, but Felix was forc'd to depart, and when afterwards he endeavour'd to return by Force, he was driven away with disgrace.

Now Liberius seeing himself in peaceable Possession of his See, as he had Subscrib'd against his will to the Condemnation of St. Athanasius, and the Creeds of the Arians, so he quickly repented of what he had done, made Profession of the Nicene Creed, and reconcil'd himself to St. Athanasius. He wrote one Letter to all the Bishops in the World in the Year 362, wherein he would have all those Bishops pardon'd, who through surprize, had approv'd of the Error of the Arians; but he absolutely Anathematizes the Heads of their Party, and those that would not return from their Error. This Letter is set down in the Fragments of St. Hilary. At last the Semi-Arians seeing themselves over-power'd by the Anomœans, who had more Interest in the Emperour Valens, had recourse to Liberius, and sent to him, in the Year 366, Eustathius of Sebaste, together with Sylvanus and Theophilus Bishops of Cilicia, who presented him with Letters from the Council of Lampsacus: Liberius at first would not receive them, because, he said, they were of Arius's Faction; but they perswaded him that they would retract that Error, and profess that the Son is perfectly like his Father, and of the same Substance; yea, they made Profession of the Nicene Creed it self, approv'd the word Consubstantial, and condemn'd the Creeds of Ariminum and Seleucia. Liberius having exacted of them these Declarations, wrote into the East in their favour; and he died within a little time after in the Year 366 (d). The History which we have now given of Liberius, informs us of the number of Letters that were written by this Pope, as well as the time, the occasion and subject of every one of them: And therefore it will be sufficient here to give a Catalogue of them, and to mark out those that are falsly attributed to him; and in doing of it, we shall follow the Order that is observ'd in the two Volumes of the last Edition of the Councils.

The 1st. is that which was written to Hosius upon the Lapse of Vincentius of Capua, publish'd by Baronius, and taken from a Manuscript in the Vatican. This appears to me to be Genuine, and agrees with the History of that time.

The 2d. is a Letter to Constantius, at the end of Lucifer's Works, and in the Fragments of St. Hilary.

The three following to Eusebius Vercellensis, are taken out of the Acts of this Bishop, and appear to me to be Ancient.

The 6th. to the Confessors in Exile, is in the Fragments of St. Hilary, and in the Acts of which we have spoken already.

The 7th. which was written to the Eastern Bishops after he had sign'd against St. Athanasius, is taken out of the Fragments of St. Hilary, and is very Genuine.

The 8th. is that which is supposed to have been written to those in the East, immediately after his Advancement to the Pontificate, wherein he declares St. Athanasius Excommunicated: But we have shown that 'tis very doubtful, though it is in the Fragments of St. Hilary.

The 9th. written to Ursacius, to Valens, and Germinius, and the 10th. to Vincentius of Capua, from the place of his Banishment, after he had sign'd, are Genuine, and taken out of the Fragments of St. Hilary.

The 11th. written to the Bishops of Italy after the Council of Ariminum, is unquestionable, and is preserv'd in the same place.

The 12th. which is a Confession of Faith address'd to St. Athanasius is Supposititious, as we have already prov'd when we discours'd of the Works of that Father, among which it occurs.

The 13th. which is suppos'd to be that which Eustathius and the other Deputy-Bishops from the East, obtain'd of Liberius, and presented to the Synod of Tyana, agrees very well with the History of that time.

The 14. and 15th. ought to be rank'd among those Letters that are forg'd by Isidore, and are rejected by all the Criticks.

The three Decrees attributed to this Pope, have not any respect to the Discipline of his time, nor have they any Authority.

The Conference (e) which he had with Constantius and Epictetus, is preserv'd by Theodoret. B. II. of his Hist. Ch. 6. and was by him drawn out of the Ancient Acts written in Liberius's time.

The Stile of Liberius is Simple and without Ornament, but strong and clear. His Conduct unblameable, if he had not suffer'd himself to be overcome by the Love which he had for the City of Rome, and his Church: But he made amends for that Fault by the Constancy which he show'd after his Return.

(d) He died in the Year 366.] St. Jerom and Marcellinus say so in their Chronicles.

(e) The Conference.] 'Twas rather an Examination which Liberius under-went in the Emperor's Council

St. HILARY.

St. Hilary. St. HILARY was born in the City of Poictiers (a), whereof he was afterwards Biſhop. He was bred up in the Heathen Religion, and applied himſelf in his Youth to the Study of Profane Learning: He was Married, and had one Daughter nam'd Apra (b). The Reflections which he made upon the Falſhood of the Gentile Doctrines, did by little and little conduct him to ſome Imperfect Knowledge of the Truth, which he compleated by Reading the Holy Scriptures, as he himſelf tells us, at the Beginning of his Books concerning the Trinity. After he was perfectly inſtructed in the Chriſtian Religion. He was Baptized, and probably his Wife and Daughter were converted with him. He liv'd ſeveral Years after his Baptiſm, before he was made Biſhop (c), but we know not any one particular Circumſtance of his Life during all that time. He was ordain'd Biſhop of Poictiers ſome years before his Baniſhment; and immediately after he was promoted to that Dignity, he labour'd with all his might to ſave the Flock which Jeſus Chriſt had entruſted him with, by Preaching the Truths of the Goſpel. Afterwards, when he ſaw that the Arian Hereſie began to ſpread in France, he wrote Twelve Books of the Trinity againſt it (d), which he finiſh'd about the time that he was threatned with Baniſhment. He was ſent by Order of the Emperour Conſtantius into Baniſhment, becauſe he had defended St. Athanaſius in the Council of Beziers, againſt Saturninus Biſhop of Arles, and againſt Urſacius and Valens, who had been a little before Excommunicated by the Biſhops of France; for being come to this Council, which was Aſſembled by the intriguing of Saturninus, he deſir'd that Matters of Faith ſhould be handled before all other things, and offer'd to convict Saturninus, Urſacius and Valens, of Hereſie; but they were ſo far from accepting this Propoſition, that they condemn'd St. Hilary, and wrote a Letter againſt him to the Emperour, who was then at Milan; whereupon he ſent immediately an Order to Baniſh St. Hilary and Rhodanius Biſhop of Thoulouſe. Nevertheleſs, there was no Biſhops Ordain'd in their room; and ſo the Church of Poictiers enjoy'd Peace, and St. Hilary continued ſtill to Govern it, and to Adminiſter the Sacraments there by his Prieſts. The ordinary place of his Baniſhment was Phrygia (e); where he wrote his Treatiſe of Synods, which he dedicated to the Biſhops of France, to inform them of the Opinions of the Eaſtern Biſhops about the Trinity, and to inſtruct them how they ſhould behave themſelves in theſe two Synods, the expectation whereof held all the Church in Suſpence. This Treatiſe was compos'd by St. Hilary after the Council of Ancyra, held in the Year 358, whoſe Canons he there explains, and before the Councils of Ariminum and Seleucia, that's to ſay, towards the Beginning of the Year 359. Sometime after he was ſent to the Council of Seleucia by the Lieutenant of the Præfectus Prætorio, and by

(a) Was born in the City of Poictiers] St. Jerom in his Preface to B. II. of his Commentaries upon the Epiſtle to the Galatians, ſays, that St. Hilary was a Gaul born at Poictiers: Fortunatus ſays alſo, that he was of that City. Pictavis reſidens qua ſanctus Hilarius olim Natus in Urbe Pater. The Names of his Parents are not known; for we muſt not acquieſce in what Bollandus writes, that the Tomb of his Father and Mother were found in a Village of Poictou, where his Father was nam'd Francarius: But there is ſome probability that he was of a good Family. We need not now diſtinguiſh this Hilarius from ſeveral others of that Name, of whom we ſhall ſpeak afterwards.

(b) Apra] The Author of the Life of this Saint which is attributed to Fortunatus, is the only ancient Witneſs that we have of this Circumſtance; who does alſo obſerve, that St. Hilary having left his Daughter and Wife at Poictiers when he was baniſh'd, had a Revelation in the Place of his Baniſhment, that a rich and potent young Man courted his Daughter to marry her, but that he by his Prayers hindred her from taking any other Spouſe but Jeſus Chriſt, and that he wrote a Letter to her which this Author recites. The ſame Author adds at the end of B. I. of the Life of St. Hilary, that returning from his Baniſhment, and finding that his Daughter deſir'd to marry, he prayed God to take her out of the World; that his Prayer was heard, for his Daughter died, and her Mother ſurviv'd her but a very little time. This is reported by the Author of this Life, who liv'd ſoon after King Cloüis, towards the Year 580, and who appears to be different from Venantius Fortunatus. St. Gregory of Tours cites this Life without naming the Author of it; and ſo we muſt not wholly reject what he ſays, nor yet altogether build upon it.

(c) He liv'd ſeveral Years after his Baptiſm, before he was made Biſhop.] In his Book of Synods, he ſays, that he was baptiz'd a long while before his Baniſhment, and but a little while before it he was made Biſhop: Regeneratus pridem, & in Epiſcopatu aliquantiſper manens.

(d) He wrote his Twelve Books of the Trinity againſt it.] Some have thought that they were written in his Baniſhment; but the Preface alone, which is the Beginning of the Firſt Book, diſcovers that theſe Books were written before that time: For after he has there deſcribed his Converſion he obſerves that ſoon after his Ordination the Arian Hereſy was ſpread in France, and that immediately he took Pen in hand to confute their Impious Doctrines. What he ſays in the Tenth Book, does alſo prove that he was not baniſh'd, but only threatned with Baniſhment when he wrote it, Sed licet, ſays he, nunc à multis coarcervantibus ſibi ſecundum deſideria ſua Magiſtros ſana doctrina exulet, (which is plainly meant of the Baniſhment of Paulinus of Triers, Euſebius of Verceilles, and Lucifer Calaritanus baniſh'd after the Council of Milan) non tamen à Sanctis quibuſq; Prædicationis Veritas exulabit. Loquemur enim exules per hos libros, & Sermo Dei qui vinciri non poteſt, liber excurret, &c. Where he ſpeaks of his Baniſhment as a thing that was future and had not yet come to paſs, but which was quickly to follow after the Baniſhment of Paulinus and others: From whence it appears that this Tenth Book was written between the Council of Milan and that of Beziers.

(e) The ordinary Place of his Baniſhment was Phrygia] St. Jerom in his Catalogue, and Sulpitius Severus B. II. of his Hiſt. do teſtify this, as well as the Author of the Life of St. Hilary. Theodoret B. III. ch 4. ſays, That Hilary, Euſebius and Lucifer were in Thebaïs, when Julian permitted the exil'd Biſhops to return to their Sees. This is true of the Two laſt, but not of the Firſt, for he was then in France. St. Hilary himſelf ſays, in his Book of Synods, that he was in the Provinces of Aſia.

the

the Governour of Phrygia. Being arriv'd at that City, he was kindly receiv'd, and gain'd the good opinion and affection of every Body. Firſt of all, he was requir'd to give an account of the Faith of the Biſhops of France, becauſe of the falſe Reports that the Arians had ſpread Abroad againſt them, which render'd them ſuſpected of Sabellianiſm, and charg'd with believing that there was but one Perſon only in the God-head. But St. Hilary having declar'd his Faith which agreed with the Nicene Creed, gave an authentick Teſtimony of the Purity of the Faith of the Weſtern Biſhops; and ſo having remov'd the Jealouſies they might have of his Doctrine, he was admitted to the Communion and Society of the other Biſhops, and took his Place among thoſe that were to vote in the Council. He aſſiſted there at the Beginning; but ſeeing that the greater part of the Biſhops were Arians, they would not ſuffer him to ſtay there any longer. Yet he continued ſtill at Seleucia till the End of the Council, and follow'd the Deputies of the Council to the Emperour's Court, to receive the Orders that ſhould be given him: But when he ſaw that the true Faith was in extreme Danger, the Biſhops of the Weſt being over-reach'd, and thoſe of the Eaſt over-power'd, he deſir'd Audience of the Emperour in Three Petitions, (if we may believe Sulpitius Severus) which he publickly preſented, That he might have leave to Diſpute for the Faith againſt his Adverſaries. St. Jerom mentions but one Petition, and indeed, of the three Papers which St. Hilary preſented to Conſtantius, there is none but the Third wherein he deſires Audience. This he preſented towards the End of the Year 359, and the Second Paper alſo about the ſame time. The Arians ſeeing themſelves attack'd by ſo powerful an Enemy, procur'd him to be ſent back into France, yet without releaſing him wholly from his Baniſhment. As he return'd, he paſs'd through Italy, and entered France in the Year 360. 'Twas in his Journey, or a little after his Return, that he addreſs'd his Third Diſcourſe to Conſtantius, which is commonly plac'd Firſt. St. Jerom, ſays, That he wrote it after the Death of this Emperour: But it appears by the Diſcourſe it ſelf, that it was compos'd Five Years after St. Hilary withdrew from the Communion of Saturninus; and after the Baniſhment of Lucifer, Euſebius and Paulinus, which diſcovers that it was in 360, and ſo before the Death of Conſtantius, and yet 'tis probable, that it was not publiſh'd in the Eaſt, till after the Death of this Emperour, which made St. Jerom believe, that it was not written till that time. 'Twas about the ſame time, that he compos'd his Treatiſe againſt Urſacius and Valens, which contain'd the Hiſtory of the Council of Ariminum and of Seleucia; from whence part of thoſe Fragments are taken, which have been publiſh'd by themſelves. The whole Book conſiſts of Two Parts; The Firſt is taken out of a Book of St. Hilary, which he wrote during the time of Perſecution, and before the Death of Conſtantius as the Preface ſufficiently diſcovers. This Firſt Part begins at P. 430. and ends at 466. of the Paris Edition in the Year 1652, and it contains the Tranſactions that happen'd to the end of the Councils of Ariminum and Seleucia. The Second Part taken out of another Book, begins at P. 466, and contains what paſs'd afterwards. When the Catholick Biſhops afterwards recover'd their Liberty under Julian the Apoſtate, St. Hilary aſſembled many Councils in France for the Re-eſtabliſhment of the Ancient Faith, and the Condemnation of the Synods of Ariminum and Seleucia. In them he procur'd the Condemnation of Saturninus Biſhop of Arles, who oppos'd this Deſign, as well as Paternus Biſhop of Perigueux. As to the other Biſhops who acknowledg'd their Fault, they were pardon'd; and all the World muſt own, ſays Sulpitius Severus, that our France was oblig'd to St. Hilary alone for its happy Deliverance from Hereſie. He extended alſo his care as far as Italy, if we believe Ruffinus, and took a great deal of pains to re-eſtabliſh the Faith there, by viſiting the Churches, and cauſing them to reject the Errors of the Hereticks. Euſebius of Vercellæ found that St. Hilary had prevented him in this Employment, and Ruffinus makes no ſcruple to ſay, That St. Hilary labour'd with more Diligence and Succeſs than he, [becauſe he was of a ſweet and mild diſpoſition, and withal of great Learning, and every way qualified for perſwading: Niſi quod Hilarius, viz. natura lenis, placidus, ſimulq; eruditus, & ad perſuadendum commodiſſimus, rem diligentius & aptius procurabat.] An excellent Remark, which may ſerve for an Inſtruction to thoſe who are employ'd in the Converſion of Hereticks: The ſame Hiſtorian adds, [That St. Hilary compos'd Books concerning the Faith, which were nobly written, wherein he clearly diſcovers the Artifices and Tricks which the Hereticks us'd to deceive the too Credulous and ſimple Catholicks.] Laſtly, Ruffinus relates in his Book concerning the Corruption of Origen's Works, That St. Hilary having wrote a Book to chaſtiſe thoſe that had ſign'd the Creed of Ariminum, his Book was ſo corrupted by the Hereticks, though he knew nothing of it, that he was accus'd in a Synod of being an Heretick, and forc'd to depart from it as an Excommunicate Perſon. But I do not think we ought to take this Relation for certain, becauſe 'tis no ways probable that the Faith of St. Hilary about the Trinity, could be ſuſpected by the Weſtern Biſhops. In the Year 364, an occaſion offer'd it ſelf (f), wherein St. Hilary ſhew'd his Zeal for the Truth. The Emperour Valentinian being come to Milan, publiſh'd an Edict, wherein he oblig'd all the Catholicks to acknowledge Auxentius for their Biſhop. St. Hilary being perſwaded that this Biſhop was in his Judgment an Arian, preſented a Petition to the Emperour, wherein he declar'd, that Auxentius was a Blaſphemer, whoſe opinions were contrary to thoſe of the Prince and other Catholicks. The Emperour being mov'd by ſo ſharp an Accuſation, appointed a Conference, in the Preſence of the Treaſurer, and the great Mr. of the Palace, between St. Hilary accompanied with Ten Biſhops, and Auxentius,

St. Hilary.

(f) In the Year 364, an occaſion offer'd it ſelf.] Baronius places this Conference in 369, which is a groſs miſtake, ſince according to the Teſtimony of all the Ancients, St. Hilary was dead before. Beſides the Letter of Auxentius which was written after this Conference, bears not the Name of Gratian, who was declar'd Emperour in 367, but only the Names of Valens and Valentinian. It appears by Ammianus Marcellinus, B. XXVI. that Valentinian came to Milan about the end of the Year 364, and went away ſoon after: And therefore this Conference muſt have been held in this Year.

St. Hilary. Auxentius at this Conference, after he had endeavour'd to elude the Diſpute, was oblig'd, under pain of loſing his See, to profeſs, That Jeſus Chriſt was truly God, and of the ſame Subſtance, and the ſame Divinity as the Father. The Emperour thinking this Profeſſion ſincere, embrac'd his Communion, and St. Hilary, becauſe he ſtill continued to proclaim Auxentius a Heretick, who mock'd God and Men, was driven out of Milan as a Diſturber of the Peace of the Church. Being thus diſabled to ſpeak any more Viva voce againſt Auxentius, he wrote a Tract againſt this Biſhop the next Year. In the Year 366 he Collected the Commentaries of all the Tranſactions, that had happen'd after the Council of Ariminum, as may be ſeen in the Second Part of the Fragments which is taken out of this Work, were you will find the Letters written in 366.

At laſt, after he had endur'd ſo much Labour and Trouble for the Defence of the Faith, he finiſh'd his courſe in the Year 367 (g).

Beſides the Works of St. Hilary which we have already mention'd, becauſe they have a reſpect to the Hiſtory of his Life, he has alſo written other Books, ſome whereof are come to our hands.

He wrote a little Tract againſt Dioſcorus the Phyſician, and Salluſtius the Prefect, wherein he has particularly ſhown, ſays St. Jerom, in his Epiſtle to Magnus, how far his Learning and Eloquence could reach. This Book is not extant, yet 'tis very probable that 'twas written in Defence of the Chriſtian Religion againſt Paganiſm.

He wrote ſeveral Commentaries upon the Scriptures, which are almoſt wholly taken out of Origen, whoſe Commentaries he caus'd Heliodorus to explain to him, if we believe St. Jerom: But it muſt be confeſs'd, that he follow'd more the Sence than the Letter of Origen's Commentaries, and that he added many things of his own, as the ſame St. Jerom has alſo obſerv'd. We have his Commentaries upon St. Matthew, we have alſo more of his Commentaries upon the Pſalms than St. Jerom had ſeen; for this Father mentions only the Commentaries upon the 1ſt. and 2d. Pſalms, upon the 51ſt. and thoſe that follow untill the 62d, and upon the 118th. and thoſe that follow unto the laſt; and we have beſides theſe Commentaries, the Commentaries upon the 14th. and 15th. Pſalms, and upon the 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, Pſalms, which bear the Name of St. Hilary, and are written in his Stile. But we have none of his Commentaries upon Job, which are cited by St. Jerom, whereof St. Auſtin relates a Paſſage in his 2d. Book againſt Julian, to prove Original Sin.

There was alſo attributed to him in St. Jerom's Time, a Commentary upon the Canticles, but this Father ſays, that he had never ſeen it.

St. Jerom mentions alſo a Collection of Hymns, compos'd by St. Hilary; a Book Entituled Myſteries; and many Letters.

I place not the Letter and Hymn to his Daughter Apra, in the Number of St. Hilary's Works, becauſe I doubt not but theſe pieces were the Work of him that wrote his Life, which are not at all like this Father's way of Writing: Some have attributed to him the Hymn Pange Lingua, and that of St. John the Baptiſt, Ut queant laxis; but without any Ground: The Books of the Unity of the Eſſence of the Father and the Son, were Rhapſodies taken out of the Genuine Works of St. Hilary. St. Jerom in his Apology to Pammachius, ſpeaks of a Book of St. Hilary addreſs'd to Fortunatus, which was concerning the Number Seven. Some have confounded this Treatiſe with St. Cyprian's Books of Exhortation to Martyrdom, being addreſs'd to a Perſon of the ſame Name. But that which St. Jerom attributes to St. Hilary, muſt be different from thoſe of St. Cyprian; and therefore if there be no Miſtake in this place of St. Jerom, we muſt ſay, that St. Hilary wrote a Treatiſe addreſs'd to his Friend Fortunatus, concerning the myſterious Significations of the Number Seven. And this Work may very well be one of thoſe Treatiſes of Myſteries, which St. Jerom mentions in his Catalogue of Eccleſiaſtical Writers.

The Twelve Books of the Trinity, compos'd by St. Hilary in Imitation of Quintilian's Books, as St. Jerom has obſerv'd, are an excellent Work, which contains the Explication and the Proofs of this Myſtery. He has there eſtabliſh'd the Faith of the Church in a demonſtrative Manner: he has clearly detected the Errors of the Hereticks, refuted them ſolidly and anſwered all their Objections: So that this is the largeſt and moſt methodical Work of any, that we have in all Antiquity upon this Subject.

The Firſt Book is a Preface to the Whole, wherein he deſcribes very pleaſantly after what manner a Man arrives at Happineſs, and the Knowledge of the Truth; and then gives an Account of the Subject of the Eleven following Books. He begins with obſerving, that Happineſs does not conſiſt in Abundance, nor in Repoſe, as common People imagine, nor yet in the bare Knowledge of the Firſt Principles of Good and Evil, as many wiſe Men among the Pagans thought, but in the Knowledge of the true God. He adds, that Man having an ardent Deſire after this Knowledge, meets with ſome Perſons that give him low and mean Idea's, unworthy of the Divinity. Some would perſuade him that there are many Gods of different Sexes: Others take the Repreſentations of Men, of Beaſts, and Birds, for Divinities: Others acknowledge no God at all; and ſome, in ſhort, confeſs, That there is a God, but deny that he has any Knowledge, or takes any Care of things here below. But the Reaſon of a Man diſcovers theſe Notions to be falſe, and ſo by the Light of Nature, he comes to know, That there can be but one God Almighty, Eternal and Infinite, who is in all places

(g) He finiſh'd his Courſe in the Year 367.] St. Jerom places his Death in this Year. Sulpitius Severus ſays, that he died Six Years after his Return into Gaul, and Gregory of Tours B. I. of his Hiſt. ch. 3. ſays, that his Death happen'd in the Fourth Year of Valentinian. Theſe Two Dates fall out juſt in the ſame Year; for the one reckons ſix Years after the end of the Year 360, which reaches to the Beginning of 367, and the 4th. Year of Valentinian's Reign begun in the Month of February the ſame Year.

who

who Knows all things, and Orders all things; and afterwards by reading the Books of Moses and the Prophets, where he found these Truths explain'd, he was fully convinc'd of them, and studied with the greatest Application of mind to know this Sovereign Being, who is the Fountain of all kind of Beauty and Perfection. Neither did he stop here, but upon further Enquiry, he came to understand, That 'twas unworthy of God to suppose that Man to whom he had given so much Knowledge, should be annihilated for ever; for if this were true, to what purpose would his Knowledge serve, since Death would one Day deprive him of all Understanding? But than as on the one side, Reason discovers it to be fit, that Man should be Immortal; so on the other side, the Sense of his present Weakness, and the Apprehension of Death, which he sees is unavoidable, fill him with anxious Fears. In this State, he has recourse to the Gospel, which perfects all the Knowledge he had before, and resolves all the Doubts that yet remain with him. There he learns, That there is an Eternal Word, the Son of God, who was made Man, and came into the World to communicate to it the Fulness of Grace and Truth. This gives him hopes infinitely above all that he could have before, for now he presently perceives the Excellency and Greatness of these Gifts, by understanding, That since the Son of God was made Man, nothing can hinder, but Men may become the Sons of God; and so when a Man joyfully receives this Doctrine, he perfects the Knowledge he had of the Divinity, by the Knowledge of the Humanity of Jesus Christ. He renews his Spirit by Faith; He acknowledges the Providence of one God over him, and begins to be fully persuaded, that he who created him, will not annihilate him. In short, he understands, That Faith is the only infallible means of coming to the Knowledge of the Truth; That it rejects unprofitable Questions, and resolves the captious Difficulties of humane Philosophy; That it judges not of the Conduct of God according to the Thoughts of Men, nor of that of Jesus Christ, according to the Maxims of this World; That 'twas by his Faith, (whereof the Law was only a Shadow and Type,) that Jesus Christ having rais'd our Minds to that which is most Sublime and Divine, prescrib'd to us, instead of the Circumcision of the Flesh, the Circumcision of the Spirit, which consists in the Reformation of our Lives, and the Renovation of our Hearts: That as we die to Sin in Baptism, that we may live a Spiritual and Immortal Life, so Jesus Christ died for us, that we might rise again together with him; and so the Death of him who is Immortal, procur'd Immortality to us Mortals. Now when once the Soul is fully possess'd with these Thoughts she rests satisfied with this Hope, without fearing Death, or being wearied of Life: For she considers Death as the beginning of Eternal Life, and looks upon this present Life, as the means of obtaining a happy Immortality. St. Hilary.

These are the Steps by which St. Hilary guides the minds of Men to the Knowledge of Happiness and Truth, after he himself had arriv'd at it by the same Methods: For he does not deliver these things as curious and profound Discourses which he had meditated in his Study, but as the History of his own Thoughts which by degrees carried him on to a perfect Conversion. Then he declares, That afterwards being Ordain'd Bishop, as his Office oblig'd him to take Care of the Salvation of others, he preach'd the Truths of the Gospel; And at last, That the Heresy of the Arians, who would judge of the Almighty Power of God, by the weak Light of their own Reason, had oblig'd him to undertake the Defence of the Truth, and the Refutation of their Errors. After he has in a few words Explain'd the Faith of the Church, he admonishes the Reader, above all things, when he thinks of God, to devest his Mind of the meanness of humane Opinions, and to judge of God according to the Light of Faith, and agreeable to the Testimony of God himself. "For, says he, the chief Qualification re-
"quir'd in a Reader, is, That he be willing to take the Sence of an Author from what he reads, and "not give that Sence wherewith he himself is prepossess'd. He must take the meaning of the Author,
"and not give him one of his own: He ought not to endeavour to find in the Passages which he reads,
"that which he presum'd, ought to be found there before he read them; wherefore in Discoursing
"of God, he ought at least to be persuaded, that he knew himself, and so to Embrace with Reve"rence, that Doctrine which he teaches us. He only can give an Account worthy of himself, because "he is not known but from himself, and by himself. But if it happens, says St. Hilary, That some "Comparison, from humane Affairs be us'd in Discoursing of these Mysteries, we must not believe "that they are Just, or have a perfect Resemblance to them." After this Excellent Advertisement, St. Hilary gives an Account of the Subject of his Eleven Books of the Trinity, and finishes this First Book, with an Invocation of the Divine Assistance.

In the Second Book, He explains the Catholick Doctrine concerning the Three Divine Persons. He says, He should have permitted Christians to keep themselves to the Words of the Gospel, without diving further into the Mystery of the Trinity, if the Hereticks had not oblig'd them to explain it more clearly. "The Errors and Blasphemies of the Hereticks, says he, oblige us to do those things "which are forbidden us, to search into those Mysteries which are Incomprehensible, to speak those "things that are Ineffable, and to explain that which we are not permitted to examine: And instead
"of performing with a sincere Faith (which were otherwise sufficient) that which is commanded us, i.e.
"Worshipping the Father and the Son, and being fill'd with the Holy Spirit, we are obliged to em"ploy our weak Reasonings to explain those things which are Incomprehensible; being constrain'd, if "a Man may so say, by the fault of others, to commit this one our selves, lest we fall into the Error
"of those who have dar'd to give an heretical Sence to the Words of Scripture; for that which makes
"the Heresy, says he, is not the Scripture, but the manner of Expounding it; 'tis the Interpretation
"that makes the Crime, and not the Words." After this, he gives an Account of the Errors of the Sabellians, the Ebionites and Arians, to which he opposes the Faith of the Church. He says, That the Father who is the First Person of the Trinity, is the Fountain and First Principle of all Things, being Eternal and Infinite; and that the Word, who is the Second Person of the Trinity, is the Son

St Hilary. begotten from all Eternity of the Father. He confeſſes, That this Generation is Incomprehenſible, and reproves thoſe that endeavour to explain it. He asks them, If they can comprehend how they came into this World; How they receiv'd their Feeling, Life, Perception, Taſte, Sight, Underſtanding, and the other Senſes; How they can Communicate them to others. [Tell me, ſays he, O Man, if thou canſt comprehend how all this is done, and if thou canſt not comprehend it, with what Face doſt thou demand an Explication of the Generation of the Son of God? Thou that art ſo ignorant of what paſſes in thy ſelf, Wilt thou be ſo inſolent as to complain for not knowing what paſſes in God?] And ſo, without inſiſting on the Explication of the Eternal Generation of the Word by humane Reaſon, he proves it by Holy Scripture, and confirms the Catholick Faith of the Divinity of the Word againſt all Hereſies. He ſpeaks occaſionally of the Temporal Generation of the Son of God, that is to ſay, of the Myſtery of the Incarnation. At laſt, He treats of the Holy Spirit, who is the Third Perſon of the Trinity and maintains, That he is a Divine Perſon, diſtinct from the Father and the Son: He obſerves, That tho' the Name of Spirit be given ſometimes in Scripture to the Father and the Son, yet in moſt places, it ſignifies a Perſon diſtinct from them both. He Diſcourſes of the Effects and Gifts of the Holy Spirit; and ſays, That he Intercedes for us; That he Enlightens our Underſtandings, and warms our Hearts; That he is the Author of all Grace, and of all heavenly Gifts; That he will be with us till the End of the World; That he is our Comforter here while we live in Expectation of a future Life, the earneſt of our future Hopes, the Light of our Minds, and the Warmth of our Souls. From whence he concludes, That we muſt beg this Holy Spirit, to enable us to do Good, and to perſevere in the Faith, and keeping the Commands of God.

In the Third Book, He proves the Divinity of the Son of God, by the Words of the Goſpel of St. John, I am in my Father, and my Father is in me. He obſerves alſo, "That the Generation of the "Word is incomprehenſible, as well as the moſt part of the Miracles of Jeſus Chriſt; That Humane "Reaſon cannot give an Account of it; and, That Jeſus Chriſt was made Man, to Preach this Eternal "Power to Men, and to make known his Father unto them; That in this Sence, we muſt under- "ſtand his deſire to be Glorified, that he might glorify his Father, viz. That the Glory which the "Humanity of Jeſus Chriſt receiv'd and made appear unto Men, diſcover'd the Dignity and Power "of his Father." He obſerves alſo, That the Birth of Jeſus Chriſt, His Reſurrection, His Entring into the Room where the Diſciples were, unſeen, through the Doors, and the other Miracles of Jeſus Chriſt, are no leſs above Reaſon, than his Eternal Generation. From whence he concludes, "That "the Nature and Operations of God, are above the Reaſon, Perception, and Underſtanding of Men; "That we muſt acknowledge in theſe things, the folly of Worldly Wiſdom, and the Vanity of Hu- "mane Knowledge, and Embrace that Heavenly Prudence, and Divine Wiſdom, that ſeems to be "folly to the World.

In the Fourth Book, He deſcribes the Errors of the Hereticks concerning the Conſubſtantiality of the Word; He oppoſes to them the Faith of the Church; Anſwers the Paſſages which they alledge, and endeavours to prove the Divinity of the Word, by many Paſſages taken out of the Old Teſtament.

He continues the ſame Subject in the Fifth Book, where he thinks, That 'twas the Word which appear'd to Abraham, to Jacob, to Moſes and the other Patriarchs, who is call'd an Angel, becauſe of his Miniſtery, and not becauſe of his Nature.

In the Sixth Book, he proves, That Jeſus Chriſt is the Son of God, By the Teſtimony of his Father; By his own Declaration; By the Preaching of the Apoſtles; By the Confeſſion of the Faithful; By the Acknowledgment of the Devils and Jews, and by the Belief of the Gentiles. We muſt obſerve here, That in citing a Paſſage of the Epiſtle to the Romans, he appeals to the Greek Text, as to the Original.

In the Seventh, He ſhews that the Son of God, is truly God. There he obſerves, That the Hereticks uſe very great Addreſs and Subtilty to Maintain their corrupt Opinions which they falſly pretend to have from Religion; That they deceive the Simple by their Expreſſions, which are Catholick in appearance; that they accommodate themſelves to the Wiſdom of this World, That they corrupt the true Sence of Scripture-Expreſſions, by the Explications which they add, as it were to give an Account of what they ſay. He adds, That 'tis this which renders the Matter of the Trinity, a difficult Subject to treat on: [For if on the one ſide, ſays he, I declare that there is but one God, Sabellius, will think, that I eſpouſe his Opinion: If I ſay, That the Son is God, the modern Hereticks will accuſe me of admitting Two Gods: If I affirm, That the Son is born of the Virgin, Ebion and Photinus will make uſe of this Truth, to Eſtabliſh their Impiety. But, ſays he, the Doctrine of the Church confounds all theſe Errors. The Power of Truth is ſo great, that even its Enemies explain it; that the more 'tis oppos'd, the more force it gains; and certainly, the Church was never more Triumphant, than when it was moſt vigorouſly attack'd: It was never more Famous, than when it was reproach'd: It was never more Powerful, than when it ſeem'd to be abandon'd. She wiſhes, That all Men would continue in her Boſom, and She is never more troubled, than when She is oblig'd to throw any one out, and deliver him up to the Devil. But when the Hereticks go out from Her, or when She caſts them out, as She loſes on one ſide the occaſion of giving them Salvation, ſo She gains this Advantage on the other, of diſcovering the Happineſs of thoſe who continue inviolably fix'd in Her Communion. And a few Lines after, he adds, All Hereſies attack the Church, and while they attack the Church, they overcome one another. But the Victory is gain'd to the Church and not to them; for they all Quarrel about thoſe Errors, which are all equally rejected by the Church. Sabellius, for Inſtance, does unanſwerably confute the Error of Arius; Arius confounds the Error of Photinus, and ſo of the reſt: but in vain do they mutually Conquer one another, for they are always always overcome in ſome Article or other, and the Church alone remains victorious over all Errors, by profeſſing that Jeſus Chriſt is the true God, Son of the true God, born before all Ages, and afterwards begotten of Mary.] Laſtly, he proves that he is God, becauſe the Name of God is given him in the New Teſtament, and from what is there ſaid of his Birth, his Nature, his Power and his Actions. St. Hilary.

In the Eighth Book he ſhows the eſſential Unity of the Father and the Son, and refutes the Interpretations of the Hereticks, by explaining the Paſſages which they alledged, to prove that the Unity of the Father and the Son is an Unity of Will and Judgment, and not of Eſſence and Nature. At the Beginning of this Book he obſerves, " That 'tis not ſufficient for a Biſhop to live a Good Life, " but he muſt alſo teach Sound Doctrine; that as his Life muſt be Innocent, ſo his Preaching muſt be " Learn'd: for if he be Pious without being Learned, he will not be ſerviceable to others; and if he " be Learned without being Holy, his Doctrine will want Authority: From whence he concludes, " That the Holineſs of a Biſhop ſhould ſhine more brightly by his Learning, and his Doctrine ſhould " be recommended by the Holineſs of his Life, Ut & vita ejus ornetur docendo, & doctrina vivendo. There is in this Book an excellent Paſſage for the real Preſence of Jeſus Chriſt in the Euchariſt, where he ſays, That by this Sacrament we truly receive the Fleſh and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, who remains corporeally in us.

In the Ninth Book he anſwers the great Objections of the Arians founded upon Five Paſſages of Scripture, whereof he explains the true ſence. And Firſt of all, he ſhews, That they abuſe the Paſſages which they alledge by perverting them from their Natural Sence; That they do not explain them by their Connexion with what follows, and what goes before; That they attribute to the Divinity of Jeſus Chriſt, that which ſhould only be attributed to his Humanity. Upon this occaſion he diſcourſes of the Union of the two Natures in Jeſus Chriſt, and explains how by virtue of this Union, thoſe things are attributed to God which agree only to the Humane Nature, and thoſe to Man which belong to the Divinity. Afterwards he explains the Paſſages which the Arians continually object to the Catholicks, one by one: The Firſt, which is taken out of the Tenth Chapter of St. Mark, is the Anſwer which Jeſus Chriſt made to the Rich young Man, who call'd him Good Maſter, Why calleſt thou me Good, ſays he, there is none Good but God; from whence the Arians concluded, That Jeſus Chriſt was not truly God. St. Hilary anſwers, That he does not particularly reprove the Young Man, for calling him Good, but becauſe he gives him this Title, as if it agreed to him in the Capacity of a Doctor of the Law. The Young Man, ſays he, not knowing that he was the Meſſias, who came to ſave the loſt Sheep of the Houſe of Iſrael, ask'd him as a Doctor of the Law, and gave him the Title which the Doctors take to themſelves. Jeſus Chriſt reproves this Notion, and to explain to him in what ſence he ſhould be called Good, he tells him, None is Good but God; ſhowing by this, That he was ſo far from rejecting the title of Good, as it agreed to God, that he accepted of it in that ſence. And therefore his Anſwer is one Proof of his Divinity, which ought to be underſtood in this ſence, Why call you me good, if you believe not that I am God? There is none Good but God; which ſuppoſes that he himſelf was God. St. Hilary confirms this Anſwer by many places of Scripture, where Jeſus Chriſt gives himſelf the Title of Good, and of Maſter; from whence it appears that the Title was not here refus'd upon its own Account. Upon this occaſion he Anſwers the Objection of the Arians, who ſay, That Jeſus Chriſt call'd his Father the only God; and ſhows that the Father is the only God, becauſe the Divinity of the Father is the ſame with that of the Son, which Truth he proves by many Paſſages of Scripture.

The Second Paſſage objected by the Arians is taken out of the Goſpel of St. John, Chap. 17. This is life Eternal to know thee the only true God, and Jeſus Chriſt whom thou haſt ſent; from whence the Arians concluded, That Jeſus Chriſt was not the true God, but one ſent from the true God. St Hilary anſwers, "That this Paſſage does not exclude the Eſſential Unity of the Father and the Son, ſince " in this and other places, Jeſus Chriſt affirms, That he came forth from God; That he is with God; " That he had overcome the World; That he ſhould be honour'd as the Father; That he had recei- " ved the Power of giving Eternal Life; That all things which are the Father's are his. He adds, That in the ſame Place Jeſus Chriſt prays the Father to glorify him with the Glory that he had with him from all Eternity; which evidently proves the Unity of the Eſſence of the Father and the Son: Moreover the words alledg'd in the Objection, prove nothing contrary to the Faith of the Church, which acknowledges that the Father is the only true God, though Jeſus Chriſt is alſo God, becauſe the Father and the Son are not two Gods, but one God only.

The Third Objection is taken from Ch. 5th. of the ſame Goſpel of St. John. The Son can do nothing of himſelf, he doth only what he ſeeth his Father do. St. Hilary ſhows that this Paſſage eſtabliſhes the Divinity of Jeſus Chriſt, and is very far from deſtroying it, becauſe it proves the Unity and Equality of the Father and the Son.

The Fourth Paſſage is the grand Objection of the Arians founded upon thoſe words of Jeſus Chriſt in St. John, Chap. 14. My Father is greater than I. St. Hilary ſays, That the Father is greater than the Son, conſider'd as Man and as Mediator. The laſt Objection is taken from thoſe words of Jeſus Chriſt in St. Mark, Chap. 13. No Man knoweth the Day of Judgment, nor yet the Angels, nor the Son, but the Father only: From whence the Arians concluded, That the Knowledge of the Father being more extenſive than that of the Son, his Nature muſt be more excellent. St. Hilary having in anſwer to this Objection, proved by many Reaſons, that Jeſus Chriſt could not be Ignorant of the Day of Judgment, and having demonſtrated this Truth, he adds, That what Chriſt ſays in this place, that the Son knew not the Day of Judgment, ought not to be underſtood literally, as if he were really ignorant of it; but in this ſence, that he did not know it, not ſo as to tell it unto Men. Wherefore being ask'd about the ſame Matter after his Reſurrection, he does not ſay, That he was ignorant of it; but he reproves his Apoſtles with that heat, which teſtified his Knowledge of it, by ſaying unto them, St. Hilary. 'Tis not for you to know the times and the ſeaſons which my Father has reſerv'd in his own Power. He adds alſo, that it may be ſaid in another ſence, That the Son of Man was ignorant of the Day of Judgment, becauſe he knew it not as he was Man, but as he was God: For, ſays he, as we may ſay, That the Son of God was ſubject to Fear, to Sadneſs, and to Sleep: becauſe the Humanity of Jeſus Chriſt was ſubject to theſe Infirmities; So we may ſay, That he was ignorant of the Day of Judgment, becauſe he knew it not as he was Man, but upon the account of his Divinity.

but

In the Tenth Book he Anſwers the Objections which the Arians draw from thoſe Paſſages of Scripture which prove that Jeſus Chriſt was ſubject to Fear, to Sorrow and Pain. And here he maintains, That Jeſus Chriſt had not truly any Fear or Pain, but only the Repreſentation of thoſe Paſſions within him: In which, if his Judgment is not different from that of the Church, yet it muſt be confeſs'd, that the manner of expreſſing it is very harſh. He had anſwer'd the Arians better, if he had ſaid, That the Fear, the Sorrow and Pain of Jeſus Chriſt did belong to his Humane Nature, and not to his Divinity. He acknowledges in this Book, That all Men are conceiv'd in Sin, and that none but Jeſus Chriſt ought to be excepted from this General Law. He ſays, That the Soul is not communicated to Children by the Parents. He obſerves, That what is ſaid in the Goſpel of St. Luke concerning the Bloody Sweat of Jeſus Chriſt, and of the Angel that appear'd unto him, is not to be found in many Greek and Latin Copies of this Goſpel.

In the Eleventh Book, he Anſwers ſome Paſſages of the Goſpels and of St. Paul concerning Jeſus Chriſt's being riſen from the Dead, and becoming Glorious, which are alledg'd by the Arians to prove that the Son is not equal to the Father: But St. Hilary ſhows, That thoſe Paſſages do much rather prove the Divinity of Jeſus Chriſt, than deſtroy it.

In the laſt Book, St. Hilary explains that Paſſage of the Proverbs, God created me in the Beginning of his Ways, &c. He demonſtrates that the Word of God was not properly created, but begotten of God from all Eternity; which he proves by many Paſſages of Scripture. He expounds this Paſſage of the Proverbs of the Incarnation of Jeſus Chriſt. He adds ſome Proofs of the Divinity of the Holy Spirit, and Ends with a Prayer to God, wherein he begs Grace to preſerve in his Heart that Faith whereof he made Profeſſion at his Baptiſm, that he may always worſhip the Father and the Son, and receive the Holy Spirit which proceeds from the Father by the Son.

His Book of Synods is Addreſs'd to the Biſhops of France and Britain. He commends them for the Conſtancy which they had ſhown in refuſing Communion to Saturninus, and for the Zeal wherewith they maintain'd the Faith of the Church, by condemning the Impieties of the Arians ſo ſharply: After this, he ſets himſelf to explain the Creeds made by the Eaſtern Biſhops after the Council of Nice. He declares, That if there were any Error in ſome of thoſe Creeds, it ought not to be attributed to him, ſince he only relates what others had ſaid; and if they were found agreeable to the Doctrine of the Apoſtles, the Praiſe of it ought not to be given to him but to the Original Authors: He leaves it to the Judgment of the Biſhops, to whom his Book is written, whether they be Heretical or Catholick. Then he intimates to them, what Obligation lay upon him to inſtruct them in the Opinions of the Eaſtern Biſhops, that they might Join with the right Side in thoſe Councils which were ſhortly to be held at Ariminum and Ancyra. But before he comes to ſpeak of thoſe Creeds which are ſuſpected, he relates and explains that of the Council of Ancyra, which was made in oppoſition to the Second Creed of Sirmium, afterwards he relates the Creeds made by the Eaſtern Biſhops after the Council of Nice, at Antioch, Sardica, and the Firſt Creed at Sirmium. He ſhows, That thoſe Creeds are Catholick, and endeavours to excuſe the Oriental Biſhops for making ſo many, by alledging the Multitude and Obſtinacy of the Arians that were in the Eaſt. He ſays, That in thoſe Provinces to which he was Baniſh'd, there was only Eleuſius, and a ſmall number of Biſhops with him, that acknowledg'd the Divinity of the Word. He Congratulates the Weſtern Biſhops for maintaining the Apoſtolical Faith, engrav'd by the Holy Spirit in their Hearts, who were ignorant of the Creeds written by the hands of Men. After this, he explains in a lively and clear manner his own Doctrine and that of the Weſtern Biſhops concerning the Myſtery of the Trinity, and ſecures it againſt the falſe Explications of the Hereticks. He gives the true ſence of the word Conſubſtantial, which he juſtifies againſt thoſe that directly oppoſe it, or that think fit it ſhould be ſuppreſs'd. He Exhorts the Eaſtern Biſhops with much Eloquence to uſe this term, and to receive the Confeſſion of Faith made by the Council of Nice. He concludes with conjuring his Brethren in much Humility, to Pardon the Freedom he had taken to inform them of theſe things, and adviſe them what they ought to do. He Exhorts them to preſerve with inviolable Fidelity, the Doctrines of Piety and Religion which were written upon their Hearts, and Requeſts them to remember his Baniſhment in their Prayers.

The Third Diſcourſe addreſs'd to the Emperor Conſtantius, which ſhould be the Firſt as we have obſerv'd already, is a Petition preſented to this Emperor, wherein he remonſtrates, that he was a Catholick Biſhop of France, baniſh'd by the Intrigues of his Enemies, who had falſly accus'd him to his Majeſty. He prays the Emperour that he would grant him Audience in the Preſence of Saturninus, who was the chief Cauſe of his Sufferings, that he might have Opportunity to juſtify himſelf from thoſe Accuſations that were form'd againſt him: and he makes no ſcruple to declare, that if his Adverſary could ſhow that he had done any one thing unworthy, either of the Holineſs of a Biſhop, or the Piety of a Chriſtian, he would not only quit all Claim to his Favour for continuing to him his Biſhoprick, but on the contrary, he would be willing to ſpend his Old Age in a State of Penance among the Laity. But ſo far as this Petition concern'd only his own Perſon, he went further and proteſted, that he would never ſpeak more of it unleſs the Emperour commanded him; yet yet ſtill he deſir'd with great Boldneſs and Earneſtneſs, an Audience about the Cauſe of the Faith, which was common to him with all other Catholicks. And to this purpoſe, he repreſents to the Emperor the Confuſion of ſo many Creeds. "When once they begun, ſays he, to make new Con- "feſſions of Faith, the Faith became the Creed of the Times rather than of the Goſpel: Facta eſt "Fides temporum potius quam Evangeliorum. Every Year new Creeds were made, and Men did not "keep to that Simplicity of Faith which they profeſs'd at their Baptiſm: And O what Miſeries en- "ſued! For preſently, there were as many Creeds as might pleaſe each particular Party; and no- "thing elſe has been minded ſince the Council of Nice, but this making of Creeds. New Creeds "have been made every Year and every Month, they have been chang'd, they have been anathema- "tiz'd, and then re-eſtabliſh'd; and ſo by enquiring too much into the Faith, there is none left; it "has always continued uncertain, and there was never any Certainty of the Truth." After he has deſcribed this Confuſion very ſmartly, he remonſtrates to the Emperour, that the only way to ſave himſelf from this Shipwrack, was to acquieſce in the Faith of the Goſpel, whereof he made Profeſſion at his Baptiſm. Then he prays the Emperour, that he would give him Audience in the Preſence of the Council, which was to meet at Conſtantinople; and promiſes that for explaining and proving the Faith of the Church, he would only make uſe of the Words of Jeſus Chriſt. He confeſſes, that all the Hereticks boaſt of preaching the Goſpel, but, ſays he, they do not underſtand it; For they alledge Scripture without knowing the meaning of it, and make uſe of Orthodox Terms without having the True Faith. He preſſes the Emperour to grant him this Audience for the good of the whole Church; and promiſes him, that being to ſpeak publickly to him of a Queſtion ſo famous in the Preſence of a Council divided upon this Subject, he would ſay nothing but what ſhould tend to the Honour of the Emperour, the Preſervation of the Faith, and the peaceable Union of the Eaſt and the Weſt. And to aſſure him of this Promiſe, he gives him this Sign of it, by confining himſelf wholly to the Terms of the Goſpel, in declaring his Doctrine at preſent. With this Declaration he concludes this Paper, which ſome have thought Imperfect, but without any Ground. St. Hilary.

The Second Book of St. Hilary to Conſtantius, is alſo a kind of Petition, wherein he prays him, To put an End to the Perſecutions and Vexations wherewith the Arians exercis'd the Church; To forbid the Secular Judges to meddle in Affairs of Religion; To leave his Subjects to their Liberty, whether they will be Arians, or no; To permit them to continue united to the Catholick Biſhops, and ſeparated from the Arian Biſhops; and in ſhort, To ſuffer all the baniſh'd Biſhops to return to their Sees. After this, He compares the Perſecution of the Arians againſt the Catholicks, with that of the Pagans againſt the Chriſtians: He ſhows how Cruel it was, and how far diſtant from the Spirit of the Church and of Jeſus Chriſt. The Biſhops, ſays he, are put in Priſon; The People are oblig'd to ſerve as their Guard; The holy Bodies of the Virgins of Jeſus Chriſt, are expos'd to the View of all the World, to abuſe them; Men are compell'd, I do not ſay to be Chriſtians, but to become Arians; The Name and Authority of the Emperour is abus'd; He is impos'd upon by Surprize; Judges are deſir'd of him for approving theſe Injuſtices; and in ſhort, The People are forc'd to conſent unto them. After this, He deſcribes particularly, the Violence that was us'd to Paulinus of Triers, to Dionyſius of Milan, to Euſebius of Vercellæ, and many others. This Book is imperfect.

Theſe Diſcourſes of St. Hilary, are written with great Moderation, as to what concerns the Emperour, whoſe Conduct he excuſes; but he has not us'd the ſame Moderation in the laſt, which is commonly plac'd before the other Two. There he ſpeaks with ſo fervent a Zeal, that he might deſerve to be accus'd of too violent a Paſſion, if it were not otherwiſe certain that he was acted only from a principle of Love to the Truth*. He begins with theſe Words which are all Sparks of Fire: 'Tis time to Speak, ſince the time to be Silent is paſt; we muſt wait upon Jeſus Chriſt, ſince Anti-Chriſt Governs: Let the true Paſtors cry aloud, ſince the Hirelings are fled: Let us die for the Sheep, ſince the Thieves are entered, and the Lion full of Rage, goes about the Sheep-fold. After he has exhorted the Paſtors in theſe Words, and many others of the ſame Nature, to Defend the Truths of the Goſpel with Courage and Boldneſs, He gives an Account of the Conduct which he had obſerv'd ſince his Baniſhment. He ſays, That he kept Silence in Modeſty, hoping that things would change for the better, but there being now no further place for hope, he found himſelf oblig'd to ſpeak: He declares, That he wiſhes he had rather been in the time of Decius or Nero, than in that wherein he liv'd; That neither Tortures, nor the Fire, nor the Croſs, could have made him afraid, but he would boldly have maintain'd the Combate againſt his declared Enemies, and ſuffer'd with Conſtancy in this publick Perſecution. But now, adds he, we oppoſe a Perſecutor that deceives us with falſe appearances, an Enemy that puts on a Friendly Countenance to us; Conſtantius, the Anti-chriſt, who Perſecutes the Church under a mask of deſigning its advancement. He profeſſes, ſays he, to be a Chriſtian, that he may deny Jeſus Chriſt; He procures Union, to hinder Peace; He ſtifles Hereſies, to ruine Chriſtianity; He honours the Biſhops, that he may make them loſe the Title of the Miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt; He builds up Churches, that he may deſtroy the Faith. Let him not imagine, adds he, that I Charge him falſly; That I Reproach him: The Miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt, ought to ſpeak the Truth: If what I have propos'd be a Calumny, I am willing to paſs for an infamous Perſon; but if it be true and publickly known, I uſe the freedom of an Apoſtle, in reproving it after a long Silence. After this, He Juſtifies his calling Conſtantius, Anti-chriſt, by giving a horrible Repreſentation of the Perſecution that he

*[The beſt Excuſe that can be made for St. Hilary, is, That Oppreſſion may make a Wiſe Man mad; and St. Athanaſius needs it as much as he; for in his Letter to all thoſe that lead a Monaſtick Life; he ſhews as great Marks of Rage and Anger againſt Conſtantius, as St. Hilary does here; and yet St. Gregory Nazianzen, a Man that was never ſuſpected of Arianiſm, has ſaid very great Things of that Prince, when he ſet him againſt Julian the Apoſtate.]

St. Hilary. he raiſed. He adds, That it was neither through Indiſcretion, nor Raſhneſs, nor Anger, that he ſpoke ſo of him, but that his Reaſon, his Conſtancy, and his Faith oblig'd him to ſay theſe things. Yes, ſays he, addreſſing himſelf to Conſtantius, I tell you what I ſhould have told Nero, what Diocleſian and Maximian ſhould have heard from my Mouth: You fight againſt God; You uſe Cruelties to the Church? You Perſecute the Saints; You hate thoſe that Preach Jeſus Chriſt; You utterly aboliſh Religion: In a word, You are a Tyrant; I ſpeak not with reference to the Things of this World, but with reference to the Things of God. This is what is common to you with the Pagan Emperours. Let us now come to that which is peculiar to your ſelf. You feign your ſelf to be a Chriſtian, and you are the Enemy of Jeſus Chriſt; You are become Anti-chriſt, and have begun his Work: You intrude into the Office of procuring New Creeds to be made, and you live like a Pagan; You teach things Profane, and are ignorant of Piety and Religion; You give Biſhopricks to thoſe of your own Faction, and take them away from the good Biſhops, that you may beſtow them upon the Bad. You put the Biſhops in Priſon; You keep your Armies in the Field to terrify the Church; You aſſemble Councils to eſtabliſh Impiety in them, and you compel the Weſtern Biſhops to renounce the Faith, that they may embrace Error. You ſhut them up in a City to weaken them by Famine, to kill them with the Rigour of the Winter, and to corrupt them by your Diſſimulation: You foment the Diſſentions of the Eaſt by your Artifices. He adds alſo many other Accuſations of the ſame Nature; and to compleat all, he ſays, That the Church never ſuffer'd ſo much, under Nero, under Decius, and Maximianus, as it has done under Conſtantius, who is more cruel than all thoſe Tyrants, becauſe the former gave Martyrs to the Church, who overcame Devils, whereas Conſtantius makes an Infinite number of Prevaricators, who cannot ſo much as comfort themſelves by ſaying, that they were overcome by the violence of their Torments. I ſhould never have done, if I ſhould relate all that St. Hilary ſays in this place of the Perſecution of Conſtantius. He charges him particularly, with the Baniſhment of Paulinus and Liberius, and the Troubles wherewith he exercis'd the Church of Tholouſe; and concludes with ſaying, That all thoſe things that he had accus'd him of, were publick and certain; and therefore he had Juſt Cauſe to call him Anti-chriſt. He ſhows afterwards, the Impiety of thoſe Biſhops that Aſſiſted at the Council of Seleucia, who maintain'd, that the Father was not like in Subſtance to the Son, and condemn'd the Words, Conſubſtantial, and like in Subſtance. He anſwers, what Conſtantius alledges, as the Reaſon of condemning theſe Terms, That we muſt not make uſe of any but Scripture Expreſſions. He anſwers, I ſay, That theſe Terms agree with the Doctrine of the Goſpel; That Conſtantius, and thoſe of his Party, are alſo forc'd to make uſe of ſuch Terms as are not to be found in Scripture; and in ſhort, That the Scripture makes uſe of Terms more Emphatical, ſince it eſtabliſhes the Equality and Unity of the Father and the Son. He blames Conſtantius for the variety and contrariety of thoſe Creeds that were made after that of the Council of Nice. He explains the Faith of the Church concerning the Majeſty of God, and proves by many Examples, That we are not to wonder, if the Eternal Generation of the Son is Incomprehenſible. This Book is alſo imperfect.

The Book of Fragments, is a Collection of many Pieces taken out of two Books of St. Hilary, and likewiſe of ſome Paſſages out of his other Works. 'Tis not known who is the Author of this Abridgment, nor when he liv'd. The Paſſages that are cited in it, are certainly St. Hilary's, and for the moſt part, the Pieces that are collected in it are ancient; but he does not obſerve any Order in this Collection.

He begins with a Fragment of St. Hilary's Preface, wherein after he had ſpoken of the Excellency of Faith, Hope and Charity, he declares, "That he had undertaken to publiſh a Work of great Importance and vaſt Extent, but very Intricate, becauſe of the Diabolical Cheats of the Hereticks, and "wherein he muſt uſe great Cunning, becauſe of their Knaveries; againſt which alſo, there were "many Prejudices, by reaſon of the Diſſimulation and fear of many: That this Book would ſeem "ſtrange, even to thoſe of the Country where he was, tho' there the things themſelves were done "which he treated of: That what he was to deliver, had come to paſs ſome years ago, but the Silence which he had hitherto kept, made all theſe things ſtill ſeem New; That the Peace had almoſt "made him forget the Memory of them, but that not long before theſe things had been renew'd "again by the impious Malice of ſome notable Seducers." After this, He deſcribes the State of the Affairs of the Church under Conſtantius; He complains, That he had Baniſh'd thoſe Biſhops that would not condemn St. Athanaſius, and that he interpos'd his Authority in Eccleſiaſtical Deciſions. At laſt, he ſays, That he had treated in his Work, of Faith in God, of the Hope of Eternity, and the Defence of the Truth; and he exhorts all Chriſtians to inform themſelves of thoſe things which he there recites, that ſo every one may be ſatisfied in his own Judgment, without following the Opinions of others blindly.

After his Preface, follow the Letters of the Council of Sardica, to all the Churches, and in particular to Julius Biſhop of Rome, together with the Subſcriptions of ſome Biſhops, and the Names of the Hereticks that were condemned.

The Author of theſe Fragments, has join'd to theſe two Letters, a Fragment of St. Hilary for St. Athanaſius; at the End, the Recantation of Urſacius and Valens, is mention'd: Their Letters to Julius and St. Athanaſius, are at the bottom of this Fragment. The Paſſage which immediately follows, has reference to the Condemnation of Photinus; and that of Marcellus of Ancyra, which he conſented to; but the End of that Paſſage concerns the Council of Nice, whoſe Creed he recites and explains.

The

The First Letter of Liberius here produc'd, is suppositious, as the Passage which follows, plainly discovers, and as we have already shown when we treated of the Works of this Pope: The Second, is Genuine, which is directed to the Bishops of Italy, concerning the Restitution of the Bishops who had approv'd the Arian Creeds. The Letter of the Bishops of Illyricum, concerning the Condemnation of the Creed of Ariminum, is one of the most Excellent Monuments of that time. The Letters of Ursacius and Valens, to Germinius, and his Answer, are put here out of their proper place, being written in the Year 366. We have already spoken of Pope Liberius's Letters that are set down: After which, there follows a Letter of the Eastern Bishops, to the Council of Ariminum, with some Reflections of St. Hilary, which are very much corrupted. After this Fragment, the Author of this Collection has added this Note: Here endeth the Book taken out of the Historical Work of St. Hilary: And yet he adds afterwards many Pieces which are probably taken out of the same Book. St. Hilary.

The 1st. is a Letter from a Council of the Bishops of France, held at Paris, against the Creed made at Ariminum.

The 2d. is a Letter of Eusebius of Vercellæ, written to Gregory, a Bishop in Spain, wherein he commends him for oppoſing Hosius, and preserving the Faith.

The 3d. is a Letter, or rather a Confession of Faith, by Germinius the Arian Bishop, against those of his own Party, who had Sign'd the Creed of Ariminum.

The 4th. is a Letter written by the Eastern Bishops in the Name of the Council of Sardica, against the Bishops of the West: This Letter should have been plac'd before those others which we have already spoken of.

The 5th. is a Letter of the Bishops of the Council of Ariminum to the Emperour Constantius, before they had Sign'd the Creed which was presented to them by the Arians. There follows after it a short Reflection concerning the Stile of St. Hilary.

The 6th. is the Approbation which the Legates of the Council of Ariminum, gave to the Creed made by the Arians at Nice, a City of Thracia.

The 7th. is a Letter written to the Emperour Constantius, by the Bishops of Ariminum; after they had approv'd the Confession of Faith made at Nice, which was presented to them by the Arians.

The 8th. is a large Letter of Liberius to Constantius, in Favour of St. Athanasius. This is mis-plac'd as well in respect of time, as of the Matter it self.

The 9th, is a Letter of Constantius, to the Council of Ariminum.

The 10th. is the Decree of this Council before they had surrendred up themselves to the Emperour's Pleasure.

The 11th, is the Condemnation of Ursacius and Valens, in this Council. Here end the Monuments taken out of the Works of St. Hilary, to which there is subjoin'd in some Copies, the Creed of the Nicene Council, the Creeds of Ariminum, and that which is attributed to St. Athanasius. These are the Pieces contain'd in the Fragments of St. Hilary, which might be read with more Pleasure and Profit, if they were dispos'd according to the Order of time which I have set down in the Notes (b).

The Book against Auxentius, Bishop of Milan, is a Manifesto against this Bishop, and against those that maintain him. Who, because they cover'd themselves chiefly under the Cloak of procuring Peace and Unity, St. Hilary says, That we can have no other true Peace, but that of Jesus Christ and the Gospel; and that this Peace cannot take place in a time when the Ministers of the Church are become Anti-Christs, by opposing the Doctrine of Jesus Christ and the Gospel, while they pretend to preach

(b) According to the Order of Time which I have set down in the Notes.] These pieces are:

Pages of the Paris-Edition 1652.		The Year of Christ.
Pag. 447	The Nicene Creed in the Year	325
433	The Letter of the Council of Sardica to all the Bishops.
	A Letter of the same Council to Julius.	347
465	The Letter of the Bishops of the East, written from Philippopolis upon their Departure from Sardica.
443	The Letters of Ursacius and Valens to Liberius and St. Athanasius.	349
484	The Letter of Liberius to Constantius about the Cause of St. Athanasius.
450	The Suppositious Letter of Liberius to the Bishops of the East.	352
	A Letter of Liberius before his Banishment.
456	To Eusebius, Dionysius and Lucifer.
457	To Vincentius of Capua.	354
463	A Letter of Eusebius of Vercellæ, to Gregory a Bishop of Spain upon occasion of the Fall of Hosius.	357
	The Letters of Liberius, written in his Banishment after his Subscription.	358
457	To the Bishops of the East.
458	To Ursacius and Valens.
459	Letters which concern the Council of Ariminum.	358
487	A Letter of the Emperor to the Council.
488	The Catholick Determination.
Ibid.	The Condemnation of Ursacius, of Valens and Germinius.
481	The Answer of the Council to the Emperor before he had subscrib'd.
459	The Profession of Faith, of the Bishops of the East that was given in to the Legates of the Council.	359
482	The Acts of the Subscription of the Legates.
483	A Letter to the Emperor after their Subscription.
465	A Letter of Germinius after the Council of Ariminum.	360
462	A Letter of the Council of Paris.
451	A Letter of Liberius to the Bishops of Italy.	362
452	A Letter of the Bishops of Italy to the Bishops of Illyricum.
Ibid.	A Letter of Ursacius and Valens to Germinius.	366
453	The Answer of Germinius to their Letter.

St. Hilary. it. He complains, That they make uſe of Temporal Power, to maintain a Falſe Doctrine. He endeavours to prove, that Auxentius, foſters Heretical Opinions; he recites the Conference that he had with him, and exhorts the Catholicks to take heed of Anti-chriſt, and to ſeparate themſelves from Auxentius. After this Book, follows a Letter of Auxentius to the Emperour, wherein he endeavours to purge himſelf from the Hereſy of Arius, yet without approving the Term Conſubſtantial, or rejecting the Creed of Ariminum.

The Commentaries of St. Hilary upon St. Matthew, are very excellent; for there he had made many very uſeful Hiſtorical and Moral Obſervations. The Chief of them are theſe following.

In the 1ſt. Canon, he endeavours to reconcile the two Genealogies of Jeſus Chriſt, by ſaying, That St. Matthew deſcribes the Royal Race of Jeſus Chriſt, by Solomon; and St. Luke, the Sacerdotal Race, by Nathan. He maintains, That the Virgin was of the ſame Tribe, and the ſame Family with Joſeph; and that ſhe continued a Virgin after her Child-bearing, and that the Perſons who are call'd in Scripture, the Brethren of Jeſus Chriſt, were indeed, the Children of Joſeph, that he had by a former Wife. He ſays, That the Wiſe-men acknowledg'd the Royal Power of Jeſus Chriſt, by preſenting him with Gold, his Divinity by offering him Incenſe, and his Humanity by giving him Myrrh. He obſerves, That Rachel who mourn'd for her Children, is a Figure of the Church, which having been a long time barren, became afterwards fruitful. He ſays, That the Innocents were made partakers of Eternal Life by the Martyrdom which they ſuffer'd.

In the 2d. Canon, he ſays, That Jeſus Chriſt did not cauſe St. John to Baptize him for the Purification of his Sins, ſince he was without Sin, but that Water might Sanctify us by Jeſus Chriſt. Then he ſpeaks of the Effects of Baptiſm. After Baptiſm, ſays he, the Holy Spirit deſcends upon the baptiz'd, he fills them with a Cæleſtial Unction, and makes them the adopted Children of God.

In the 3d. Canon, he explains the Temptations of Jeſus Chriſt, and ſpeaks of his Faſt for Forty Days. He ſays, That the Devil was ignorant of the Incarnation.

In the 4th. he explains the Beatitudes: He ſays, That none but the perfect Man who is wholly purified from his Sins, ſhall enjoy the Viſion of God. He obſerves, That Adultery is the only cauſe for which married Perſons can be Divorc'd. He condemns Oaths, Revenge and Vanity.

In the 5th. he ſends the Reader to a Book of St. Cyprian, for the Explication of the Lord's Prayer: He alſo mentions Tertullian; but he ſays of this laſt Author, That his following Errors depriv'd his Firſt Books of that Authority, which he could otherwiſe have allow'd them. He occaſionally ſays, That the Soul is Corporeal.

In the 6th. Canon, he particularly recommends Good Works, without which, all other things are unprofitable to Salvation.

In the 7th. he explains allegorically the Cure of the Leper, and of St. Peter's Mother-in-Law; underſtanding thoſe places of the Curing of Sinners. He compares the Church to a Ship toſt with a Tempeſt; and towards the latter End, he obſerves, That we ought not to mention the Names of Dead Infidels, in the Commemorations of the Saints.

In the 8th. he Diſcourſes particularly of the Fall of humane Nature by the Sin of the firſt Man, and of the Reparation of Mankind by Jeſus Chriſt.

In the 10th. he adviſes Catholicks not to enter into the Churches of Hereticks. He obſerves, That nothing in the Eccleſiaſtical Miniſtry, ought to be ſold for Money, and that the Eccleſiaſtical State, ought not to be ambitious of obtaining Temporal Authority. He ſays, That at the End of the World, the Jews that ſhall be then alive, ſhall believe in Jeſus Chriſt, and be ſaved. He aſſures us, That Man was created Free, but that the Sin of Adam enſlav'd him to Sin and Vice; and that in Baptiſm we are deliver'd by the Word from Sins, contracted by our Birth.

Towards the latter End of the 11th. he explains wherein the Eaſineſs of Chriſt's Yoke conſiſts excellently, and in a few Words. What is more Eaſy, ſays he, than the Yoke of Chriſt, and what is more Light than his Burthen? It is only to be obliging to all the World; To abſtain from committing Sin; To deſire that which is Good, not to deſire that which is Evil; To Love our Neighbour; To Hate no Body; To lay up for Eternity; Not to addict our ſelves to things preſent; Not to do to another, what we would not they ſhould do unto us.

In the 12th. he explains after the ſame Manner as St. Athanaſius, the Blaſphemy againſt the Holy Ghoſt, by ſaying, That it is the denying of Jeſus Chriſt to be God.

In the 13th. he obſerves, That thoſe who are out of the Church, cannot underſtand the Word of God.

In the 14th. ſpeaking of St. Joſeph, he ſays, That he was a Lock-Smith, and not a Carpenter, as is commonly believ'd.

In the 15th. he obſerves, that thoſe who are to be baptiz'd, make profeſſion of their Faith in Jeſus Chriſt, and of being firmly perſuaded of his Death and Reſurrection; and that their Actions may be agreeable to their Words; they paſs all the time of the Paſſion of Chriſt, in Faſting, that ſo in ſome meaſure, they may ſuffer with Jeſus Chriſt,

He ſpeaks in the 16th. of the Prerogative that St. Peter received, when Jeſus Chriſt gave him the Keys of his Church, after this manner: O happy Foundation of the Church, ſays he, in the change of your Name! O Rock, worthy of the Building of Jeſus Chriſt, ſince it was to abrogate the Laws of Hell, to break its Gates, and to open all the Priſons of Death! O happy Porter of Heaven, to whom are entruſted the Keys of admiſſion into it, and whoſe Judgment on Earth, is a fore-judging of what is done in Heaven, ſince whatſoever he binds or looſes upon Earth, ſhall be bound or looſed in Heaven.

In the 18th. Canon, he concludes with theſe Words of Jeſus Chriſt; The Angels of theſe Children ſee the Face of my Father. From whence, ſays he, it may be concluded, That the Angels rejoyce at the Sight of God, and that they preſide over the Prayers of the Faithful, which they offer continually.

tinually to God. He ſays, that thoſe who are bound on Earth by the Miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt, (that is, ſays he, thoſe whom the Miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt leave bound in their ſins,) and that thoſe who are looſed by receiving them unto the Grace of Salvation, upon the Declaration which they make, having obtain'd Pardon of their Sins, ſhall be bound and looſed in Heaven according to the Apoſtolical Judgment. St. Hilary.

In the 19th. after he has ſpoken of thoſe that voluntarily make themſelves Eunuchs to preſerve their Chaſtity, he ſpeaks of Riches, and the uſe we ſhould make of them. He ſays, That 'tis no Crime to enjoy them, but that we ſhould obſerve Moderation, and employ them innocently: That 'tis dangerous to deſire to enrich our ſelves, and that an innocent Man finds himſelf overcharg'd when he is taken up in purchaſing, in preſerving and encreaſing his Riches. From whence he concludes, That tho' 'tis not abſolutely impoſſible for a rich Man to be ſav'd, yet very few of them ſhall be ſaved, becauſe it is ſo difficult a thing to make uſe of the Goods of this World, as we ought.

In the 20th. he affirms, That Moſes and Elias ſhall come with Jeſus Chriſt, at the laſt Judgment, and that they ſhall be put to Death by Antichriſt; he rejects the Opinion of thoſe who thought that Enoch or Jeremy ſhould come before Jeſus Chriſt.

In the 23d. he ſays, That Spiritual Perſons ought not to entangle themſelves in the Affairs of this World; but that they ought to render unto God that which is due, that is to ſay, their Heart, their Soul, their Will. He ſhows the Neceſſity of Loving God in Order to Salvation.

In the 25th. he obſerves, That Nicholas, one of the Seven Deacons, was a falſe Prophet and a Heretick, and that the laſt Judgment ſhall be given in the place were Chriſt ſuffer'd.

In the 26th, he ſpeaks of the uncertainty of the time of the laſt Judgment, and obſerves, That 'tis uſeful to keep all Men upon their Guard.

In the 27th. he obſerves, That tho' all Chriſtians are oblig'd to Watchfulneſs, yet the Princes of People, and the Biſhops are more particularly oblig'd to Watch over themſelves and their Flocks.

In the 30th. he aſſerts, That Judas was not preſent, when Jeſus Chriſt diſtributed the Sacrament, becauſe he was unworthy of thoſe Eternal Sacraments. He ſays, That when St. Peter ſaid ſo boldly, that he would not be offended becauſe of Chriſt, he did not conſider the weakneſs of the Fleſh.

In the 31ſt. he thinks that Jeſus Chriſt had no fear of Death at all. He ſays, He was Conſecrated in the Sacrament of that Blood which he was to ſhed for the Remiſſion of Sins. [This Opinion ſeems not eaſily reconcileable with the Account which the Evangeliſts give of the Agonies of our Saviour in the Garden, and upon the Croſs.]

In the 32d. he obſerves, That St. Peter's Denials were ſtill more and more Criminal. At firſt, ſays he, he only anſwered, That he knew not what ſhe meant; then he deny'd that he was of the number of Chriſt's Diſciples; and at laſt, he ſaid, That he knew him not: But preſently he wept, after that Fault, which he could not avoid, tho' he was fore-warned of it.

In the 33d. he ſays, That the Words of Jeſus Chriſt upon the Croſs, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? Belong'd to his Body, which complain'd of its Separation from the Divine Word. He compares the Crime of thoſe who abuſe the Gifts given to the Church, with that of the Scribes and Phariſees, who gave Money to Judas to betray Jeſus Chriſt, and with the Souldiers who Guarded his Sepulchre, that they might ſay, He was not riſen. Laſtly, He obſerves upon the Words of Jeſus Chriſt, Go and teach all Nations, baptizing them, &c. He obſerves, I ſay, That Inſtruction ought to precede Baptiſm, becauſe the Body ought not to receive the Sacrament of Baptiſm, unleſs the Soul has receiv'd the Truth of Faith.

There is a Preface prefix'd to the Commentaries of St. Hilary upon the Pſalms, wherein he treats of ſome Critical Queſtions. He ſays, That ſome Jews have divided the Pſalms into Five Books, and that others have entituled them, The Pſalms; but for his part, he gives them the Title of, The Book of Pſalms. He maintains, That they are written by the Perſons whoſe Names they bear at the beginning, and is of Opinion, That thoſe that carry no Name, are written by the ſame Author with the laſt foregoing Pſalm, where the Name of ſome Author is to be found. He ſays, There are ſome that are falſly attributed to Jeremy, Haggai, and Zachary, ſince thoſe Names are not found in thoſe Copies of the Verſion of the Septuagint, which he thinks to be authentick. He objects to himſelf, That there is a Pſalm which bears the Name of Moſes, wherein Samuel is mention'd, who liv'd many Ages after. He contents himſelf with anſwering this difficulty by ſaying, That Moſes nam'd Samuel by the Spirit of Prophecy. He attributes to Ezra that Collection of the Pſalms which we have at preſent. He maintains, That all the Pſalms ought to be Expounded, with a reference to Jeſus Chriſt and the Goſpel. He obſerves that the Hebrews call the Pſaltery Nabla, and he thinks that they never diſtinguiſhed the Pſalms at all. He makes the LXX. Interpreters Authors of their Diſtinction, and obſerves, that they have not always follow'd the Order of Time. From this Diſtribution, He paſſes on to the number of Canonical Books. He reckons 22 of them according to the Hebrews, and ſays, that ſome have added Tobit and Judith. He obſerves, That the Lord's Day is a Day of Prayer and of Reſt for Chriſtians; and that they are forbidden to Proſtrate themſelves, or Faſt on that Day. He explains afterwards the Titles of the Pſalms in general *. He ſays, That thoſe which are called Songs, were made to be ſung without any Inſtrument of Muſick; That thoſe which are entituled Pſalms, were made to be Play'd upon Inſtruments of Muſick without Singing. That thoſe which are call'd, Songs of a Pſalm, were ſuch as the Choriſter Sung after the Inſtrument; but thoſe which are call'd Pſalms of a Song, are ſuch as the Choriſter Sung before the Inſtrument of Muſick. Laſtly, That thoſe which are call'd, in Pſalms, are ſuch wherein

* [This Diſtinction of the Titles of the Pſalms, is according to the LXX; in that Tranſlation ſome Pſalms are called Ψάλμοι, Pſalms: Others, Ωδαὶ, Songs. Others Ψάλμοι ᾠδῆς, Pſalms of a Song: Others ᾠδαὶ Ψάλμυ, Songs of a Pſalm: Others again, ἐν Ψάλμοις & ἐν ὕμνοις, in Pſalms or Hymns.

St. Hilary. there is a change both of the Perſon and the Voice. He gives alſo ſome Moral Interpretations of thoſe Titles, which are too uſeleſs to be repeated. After all, he ſays, That the Key for underſtanding the Pſalms, is to enquire, what Perſon it is to whom they agree; for ſome of them agree to David, and others to Jeſus Chriſt, and others to ſome Prophet, and ſo of the reſt.

In his Commentary upon the Firſt Pſalm, he ſays, That there are three or four degrees of Happineſs mark'd in thoſe words, Bleſſed is the Man who hath not ſtood in the Counſel of the ungodly, and who hath not walk'd in the way of Sinners, and who hath not ſate in the Chair of Infection. [According to the LXX, ἐν καθέδρᾳ λοιμῶν] The Firſt degree is, Not to be of the Number of the Impious, and the Hereticks: The Second, is not to be of the number of the Wicked, as the Covetous, the Drunkards, the Incontinent, the Proud, the Detractors, the Robbers, &c. who obſerve not the Diſcipline of the Church. The Third, Is not to ſit in the Chair of Infection. By this Chair, he underſtands the Cares and Affairs of the World, which corrupt Men by an Infection, that is almoſt unavoidable. "For "though, ſays he, ſome Perſons that enter upon Secular Offices, and engage in the Affairs of the "World, have a Holy and Religious Will, yet they are often corrupted by thoſe Affairs in which "they are oblig'd to employ themſelves, and the Rules of this World do not permit them to live "according to the Maxims of Chriſtianity". He adds, That thoſe Three Degrees ought to be crown'd with a Fourth; which is, continual Meditation in the Law of God: That this Meditation, as well as Prayer, does not only conſiſt in Reading, or reciting the Holy Books, but in the Practice of thoſe things which are preſcrib'd and taught in them; and that 'tis not ſufficient to do it out of Fear, but our Practice muſt proceed from Love and Good-will. He applies the reſt of the Pſalm to Jeſus Chriſt, and obſerves, That he reſtores unto Man, that Immortality which the Firſt Man had loſt by his Sin; That the Impious ſhall be as it were annihilated by the Fire of Hell. He confeſſes, That they ſhall riſe again at the Day of Judgment, but he maintains that they ſhall not there be judg'd at all, becauſe they are already condemn'd; and that the Judgment ſhall be only for thoſe, who having had Faith did not live up to the Laws of Chriſtianity. This Opinion is very ſingular, and we may believe that he took it from Origen. His next Obſervation is much more reaſonable, which is this, That when it is ſaid in Scripture, That God learns any thing; we muſt not underſtand it as if he were ignorant of it before; but only that he then gave to Men the Signs of his Knowledge: As when he ſays to Adam, Where art thou? This does not imply that he was ignorant of it before, but only that he had a Mind to put him to ſhame; And ſo again, when he ſays to Abraham, Now I know your Faith; this does not ſignifie, that he knew it not before, but only that he had now prov'd it.

He begins his Commentary upon the Second Pſalm with this Obſervation, That this Pſalm is call'd the Firſt by St. Paul (Act. 13.) becauſe in the Hebrew it is one continued Pſalm with the Firſt, though it has been ſince diſtinguiſh'd from it in the Verſion of the Septuagint. [In the common Editions of the New Teſtament, this is quoted as the Second Pſalm by St. Paul; and in the common Editions of the Hebrew Bible, the Second Pſalm is always diſtinguiſhed from the Firſt.] He ſays, That this Verſion was made in the time of Ptolomy, and that its Authors were the Succeſſors of the Seventy appointed by Moſes, who entruſted to them ſecret Myſteries, which he would not commit to Writing in his Books: That their Succeſſors, inſtructed by this Tradition, have tranſlated the Pſalms according to thoſe Notices which they had, and fix'd the ſence of many Hebrew words which before were undetermined: That therefore the Verſion of the Septuagint, ought to be of great Authority, and is to be preferr'd before all other Verſions, which have been made by ſuch Perſons as were ignorant of the Tradition which Moſes left to the Synagogue. After he has made theſe Remarks (whether they be juſt or no, this is not a place to examine) he applies all that's ſaid in this Pſalm to Jeſus Chriſt and his Church. He thinks that the firſt words are ſpoken in the Perſon of God the Father, and that the following words beginning at theſe, Let us break their Cords aſunder, agree to the Apoſtles, underſtanding by theſe Cords the Cords of Sin. He obſerves in this Pſalm, That God has no need of any of his Creatures; ſo that God did not create them for himſelf, but for themſelves: That when he requires Men to Love and to Fear him, this is not for any Profit that he can draw from their Service, but only that this Love and Fear may be ſerviceable to their own Salvation. He eſtabliſhes Free-Will, and ſays, That Juſtice is the Conſequence of our Good Will, and Happineſs is the Reward of our Merits, and that Hell is the Puniſhment of Sins freely committed: That God does not put himſelf in a Paſſion to puniſh us, being no ways Subject to Change, but that his Juſtice produces thoſe Effects of Vengeance which Men attribute to Anger. So that he appears not to be Angry, but when he would bring us to Repentance. He ſays upon theſe Words, Hearken, O ye Kings of the Earth, That the true Royalty of a Man conſiſts in conquering his Paſſions, and that the Kings of the Earth who are eſtranged from the Commandments of God are Unhappy Kings. He obſerves, That the Motives of Fear and Joy are intermix'd in this Pſalm; That Fear may retain Men in Reverence and Devotion, and that Joy may temper this Fear. At laſt, he aſſures us, That after Death, the Impious are reſerv'd in a place of Torment unto the Day of Judgment; and that the Juſt are conducted by the Angels to the Manſions of the bleſſed in Abraham's boſom.

In the Fragment of a Commentary upon the Thirteenth Pſalm, he Diſcourſes of the Neceſſity that Mankind lay under of having a Saviour and a Phyſician.

In his Commentary upon the Fifteenth Pſalm, he ſays, That this Pſalm is nothing elſe but David's Prayer which he made to God, to beg of him the Knowledge of what a Man ought to do in order to the obtaining of Eternal Bleſſedneſs. By the Tabernacles which he deſires, we muſt underſtand, ſays St. Hilary, the Multitude of thoſe Churches that have been Eſtabliſh'd ſince the coming of Jeſus Chriſt, who is this Mountain that David ſeeks after. He ſays, That Good Works avail nothing without Faith in Jeſus Chriſt. He ſeems to approve a Lye as Neceſſary upon ſome Occaſions; but he abſolutely condemns Uſury, and chiefly that which tends to the Ruin of the Poor: If ye be Chriſtians, ſays ſays he, Wherefore do ye draw a Temporal Profit for your Silver? Wherefore do ye not rather lay up for your ſelves a treaſure in Heaven? If ye be Chriſtians, wherefore do ye expect from men a recompence of your Liberality? I do not ſay that you ſhould give them your Goods; but at leaſt ye ſhould be content to demand back again what you had Lent, without Robbing him of more. And remember ye, that he from whom ye exact this Uſury is a Poor Chriſtian, for whom Chriſt was willing to be Poor; Therefore when ye do Good or Evil to this Poor Man, it is to Jeſus Chriſt that ye do it, &c. He diſcourſes againſt Pride and Falſe Confidence. He ſays, That we muſt reprove with all poſſible ſweetneſs, if we would amend our Brother by it, and we muſt not uſe bloody Accuſations, which only provoke him: That we muſt deſpiſe the Wicked with Freedom, and honour the Good with Humility, and reſiſt the Powers with an holy Boldneſs, when they would oblige us to do Evil. He praiſes this Pſalm, which, ſays he, ſhould be written in the Hearts of Chriſtians, and engraven upon their Memory: They ought to be intent upon it Night and Day, and to make it the ſubject of their Meditations. In effect, it contains the principal Rules of an holy Life. St. Hilary.

He applies to Jeſus Chriſt the 52d. Pſalm., and Exhorts the Rich not to put their Confidence in their Riches, and to make good uſe of them. He ſays, That the Juſt are at Reſt till the Day of Judgment, and that the Wicked are in Pain; That there is no Repentance after Death, becauſe there is no more freedom of Choice.

Upon theſe words in the 53d. Pſalm, The Fool hath ſaid in his heart, There is no God; he obſerves That the Wicked commonly dare not ſpeak out the Blaſphemies that they have in their Hearts; That there is no Man but is convinc'd that there is a God, but the Pleaſure that the Wicked take in committing Sin, makes them ſay that there is no God. In the reſt of this Commentary, he diſcourſes of the Goodneſs of God, and the Corruption of Men. He excuſes the Sin of St. Peter, and blames the Avarice of ſome Paſtors, who eat up the People of God, as it is ſaid in the Pſalm. They make, ſays he, their Belly their God, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, they make a Trade of their Miniſtry, and enrich themſelves with the Offerings and Gifts of their People; They make ſumptuous Feaſts under Pretence of Religion: They fill their Purſes with the beneficence of Chriſtians, though the uſe of theſe Offerings was intended by the Apoſtles, only for their daily Food, who renounce the World, or are in want. He condemns thoſe that flatter the Powers, becauſe we muſt Fear God more than Man.

He applies the 54th. Pſalm to Jeſus Chriſt. There you may find a pretty Moral Reflection upon the Diſorders of the Tongue, to which the far greater part of Men are ſubject, either when they are Angry, or when they Complain; when they Reproach, or when they Flatter; or laſtly, when they reprove others. He maintains in the Commentary upon this Pſalm, as well as in his Books of the Trinity, that Jeſus Chriſt did not really ſuffer.

He Interprets alſo the 55th. Pſalm, of Jeſus Chriſt. In his Commentary upon it, you may find a good Paſſage about Prayer. God deſpiſes, ſays he, the Prayers which are accompanied with lightneſs and diffidence, which are diſorder'd with the Cares of this Life, which are mix'd with Deſires of worldly Good Things, and which do not bring forth the fruit of Good Works.

There is nothing conſiderable in the Commentaries upon the following Pſalms: You may find in that upon the 57th. his ſingular Opinion concerning the Laſt Judgment, which we have already obſerv'd: In that upon the 64th, he approves the Vows that are made to perform certain Actions of Piety, ſuch as the Contempt of one's Body, the Preſervation of our Chaſtity and Faſting. He aſſures us, That Men are Predeſtinated according to their Merits; he diſcourſes of the wonderful Effects of Baptiſm.

His Commentrary upon Pſalm 119th. is very large and full of Moral thoughts: He there diſtinguiſhes the words which are often repeated in this Pſalm, the Law, the Commandments, the Teſtimonies, the Judgments, &c. and gives them ſuch ſences as are not very Natural. He teaches, That Grace is neceſſary to the Obſervation of the Commandments of God; That the Beginning comes from our ſelves, but the Grace of God comes in to our help, and that afterwards it depends upon us, whether we will retain or reject this Grace: That all Men are ſubject to Sin; That their Faults ſhall be expiated by the Fire of the laſt Judgment; He ſeems alſo to think that the Virgin Mary ſhall not be exempted from paſſing through this Fire; He obſerves, That a Miniſter of Jeſus Chriſt who Preaches his word ſhould be without blame; That he ſhould Pray in the Night-time; That a Chriſtian ſhould ſhun the Pleaſures and the Pride of the Men of this World; That to make our Actions perfect, they muſt be done from a Principle of Love to God; That Celibacy is more perfect than a ſtate of Marriage; and that thoſe who are out of the Church, which is the Body of Jeſus Chriſt are deliver'd up to the Devil. There are alſo in this Commentary, divers pretty Remarks about Alms-giving, Humility, the forbearing of thoſe things which are to others an occaſion of Scandal and Falling, about Faſting, about Charity, about Prayer, about the Attention we ſhould have in time of Prayer, and about many other Subjects.

In the Commentary upon Pſalm 121. he ſays, That God does not forſake us, but when we offend him by our Sins: He maintains, That the Juſt are in Abraham's Boſom till the Day of Judgment; he declaims againſt thoſe who live in Exceſs. He ſays, That in Baptiſm a Man is Purg'd from his Sins, and exchanges his Vices for Vertues.

In Pſalm 123. he diſcourſes againſt Pride; and admirably deſcribes the Slavery into which the Paſſions of the Vicious precipitate them, in his Comment upon Pſalm 125; Theſe are his words: Conſider, ſays he, a Covetous Man, who deprives himſelf of all kind of Satisfaction, leſt he ſhould want Money; you may ſee him buſie, ſad, anxious, reſtleſs; his Mind is always full of fear, leſt he ſhould loſe what he has: He forgets Honeſty, neglects his Friends, and has no Civility: He has neither Religion, nor Sincerity. The ſame may be ſaid of other Paſſions: Into what an Abyſs of Infamy does a Man precipitate

St. Hilary. pitate himſelf who is maſter'd by the Paſſion of Love? Who can be more miſerable than he who is a Slave to Drunkenneſs? Can you ſee any thing more Shameful than the Motions of a Man tranſported with Anger? &c.

In the Commentary upon Pſalm 117. he treats largely of the Fear of God. He ſays, That it is never ſpoken of in Scripture, but there are joyn'd with it many Conditions: That it conſiſts not in Terrour; That 'tis not a Paſſion which proceeds from Nature, but a rational Motion excited by the knowledge and love of Goodneſs and Truth. Wherefore, ſays he, the Fear of God conſiſts entirely in Love. Perfect Charity perfects Fear. The Effects of this love of God, are to obey his Commandments, to follow his Precepts, to believe his Word, and to hope in his Promiſes.

In the Commentary upon Pſalm 129, he tells us, that 'tis in reſpect of the ſoul that a Man is ſaid to be like God; That the Soul is Spiritual, and the Angels are active Spirits, whom God makes uſe of to aſſiſt the weakneſs of Men.

In his Commentary upon Pſalm 132. he obſerves, That the Woman which anointed the Head of Jeſus Chriſt was different from her that anointed his Feet. He takes notice that ſome have ſaid, That it was upon Mount Hermon the Angels deſcended to have commerce with Women; but he rejects this Imagination, becauſe we cannot truſt thoſe things, but to that which is written in the Book of the Law.

In Pſalm 135. he reproves thoſe that are not Attentive to what is Read in the Church.

In the Comment on Pſalm 137. he obſerves, That true Repentance conſiſts in refraining from all thoſe Sins which we know our ſelves to have formerly committed and in doing them no more.

In the Comment upon the following Pſalm, he blames the Miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt, who addict themſelves wholly to the Affairs of this World, that they may purchaſe Temporal Riches. He ſays That we are permitted to hate the Enemies of God; that's to ſay, as far as they are the Enemies of God, according to that excellent Saying, That we ſhould hate the Vices and love the Perſons.

Upon Pſalm 140. he diſtinguiſhes Four ſorts of Prayer, Deprecation, Oration, Petition, and Thankſgiving: And he ſays, That it belongs to our Humility to Pray, to the Majeſty of God to be Pray'd unto; it belongs to our Faith to Petition, and to our Gratitude to Thank God for his Benefits. He deſcribes the Eaſineſs and Danger of offending God by the Sins of the Tongue. He obſerves that the Book of Wiſdom, which the Latins attribute to Solomon, paſſes among the Greeks and Hebrews for Jeſus the Son of Syrach's.

An infinite number of other Remarks might yet be drawn from theſe Commentaries, but theſe are ſufficient for our Deſign: For if we ſhould give an Account of all the Commentaries of Authors upon the Scripture, and all that they contain, we ſhould never have done. Wherefore we pray the Reader, that he would be content with theſe Extracts which we have made from the Commentaries of St. Hilary, which cannot but be too long already. 'Tis plain, That theſe Commentaries are almoſt wholly taken out of Origen. They contain many Allegories and many Moral Thoughts: There is much Wit and Learning obſervable in them. He advertiſes the Reader often, that the Latin does not fully expreſs the ſence of the Greek word, which alſo diſcovers that this Work was taken from a Greek Commentary; and that he follow'd the Emphaſis of the Greek words, the ſence whereof the Latin Tranſlator was oblig'd to expreſs. St. Jerom calls St. Hilary the Rhoſne of Latin Eloquence, Latinæ Eloquentiæ Rhodanum, alluding not only to the Country where he was Born, but alſo to the Genius of his Stile, which is violent and rapid like the Courſe of the Rhoſne: for as this River by the Violence of its Waters carries all before it that hinders its courſe; ſo St. Hilary raviſhes the Mind and Judgment, and extorts a Conſent by the Vehemence of his Expreſſions. His manner of expreſſing things ſmites, aſtoniſhes, overthrows, and perſwades. His Periods are commonly long and intricate, which renders him every-where obſcure, and almoſt unintelligible in ſome places. He often uſes barbarous terms, and there are ſome places in his Works, where there is no Syntax. He is full of Figures and Antitheſes; his Reaſons, though ſolid, yet are much improv'd by the lively and ſmart turn that he gives them. He does not ſpare his Adverſaries, but he ſpeaks to Powers and of Powers with an unparallell'd freedom. He is partial to none, but is a rigid Cenſor of Manners, and a ſevere defender of the Faith. Though St. Jerom ſays in his Seventh Epiſtle to Leta, That one may read St. Hilary's Works without meeting any thing that is offenſive to Piety and Religion, inoffenſo decurrat pede; yet it muſt be confeſs'd, that there are ſome Errors and ſome Expreſſions which are not agreeable to the Doctrine of the Church. One of the principal, is his Opinion concerning the Paſſion of Jeſus Chriſt. He thinks that he had no ſenſe of Pain, though he received upon his Body the Wounds and Blows which cauſe pain. The Schoolmen have endeavour'd to give a good ſence to this Expreſſion. Some have ſaid with the Maſter of the Sentences, That he does not deny, but Jeſus Chriſt felt Pain; but he denies that the Pain he had was the Effect of Sin, as it is in other Men. Others have ſaid, That he does not exclude his Sufferings, but the Neceſſity of Suffering. Some have affirm'd, That he ſpeaks in this place of the Divinity of Jeſus Chriſt and not of his Humanity. But all theſe Solutions appear to me to be groundleſs; and if one would excuſe St. Hilary it might better be done by ſaying That the words, Pain, Suffering, Fear and Sorrow, are not to be underſtood preciſely of the perception that is in the Senſes, but of the trouble that reſults from thence in the Soul and Spirit, of the uneaſineſs of Pain, or the ſenſible Commotions of Fear or Sorrow: And in this ſence it may be ſaid, That Jeſus Chriſt had no Pain, nor Fear; becauſe his Soul continued in a Perfect Tranquillity. St. Hilary had not very clear Notions concerning Spiritual Beings; for in the Fifth Canon of his Commentary upon St. Matthew, he ſays, That all Creatures are corporeal, and that the Souls which are in Bodies are corporeal Subſtances. He held alſo an intolerable Error concerning the Laſt Judgment. I do not inſiſt upon ſome ſmaller Errors, as when in Canon 31ſt. and 32d. upon St. Matthew he excuſes excuſes the Sin of St. Peter, when he ſays in Canon 16th. That the Words of Jeſus Chriſt, Get thee behind me, Satan, were not addreſs'd to this Apoſtle; when he affirms in Canon 33d. that the Divinity of Jeſus Chriſt was ſeparated from his Humanity at the time of his Death; upon Pſalm 119. That the Virgin ſhall be Purg'd by the Fire of the Day of Judgment; In Canon 14th. and upon Pſalm 129th. That God created the Soul of the firſt Man before his Body; In Canon 17th. That the World ſhall not continue above 6000 Years; In Canon 20th. That Moſes did not Die, and that he ſhall come again at the Day of Judgment. But if this Father had ſome Errors of this Nature, yet it muſt alſo be acknowledg'd, that he held a very Orthodox Doctrine about the chief Myſteries of Faith. He ſpeaks of the Attributes of God in a Sublime and Noble manner; He explains the Myſtery of the Trinity, with wonderful clearneſs and exactneſs. Every time that he ſpeaks of the Myſtery of the Incarnation, he uſes the moſt proper terms to expreſs the Hypoſtatical Union of the two Natures in Jeſus Chriſt. He explains the different Orders of the Angels and their Miniſtry. He makes Happineſs to conſiſt in the Viſion of God, and ſays expreſly, That the Good and Evil are Happy or Miſerable before the Day of Judgment. He thinks that on this Day there will be a Purgatorial Fire to expiate the Sins of the Juſt: He acknowledges the Fall of Mankind in Adam, Original Sin, and the Neceſſity of a Mediator. He attributes much to Free-Will, and the Merit of Good-Works; and yet he admits the Neceſſity of the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt, which he ſeems to ſubject to Free-Will. He alledges often the Authority of the Church, and is clearly of opinion, that there is no Salvation out of her Communion. He aſcribes wonderful Effects to Baptiſm, when it is received with good Diſpoſitions. He ſays expreſly in the Eighth Book of the Trinity, That in the Euchariſt we Eat and Drink the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt. He approves of Vows and Invocation of Saints; He praiſes Penance, Faſting and Celebacy: He condemns Simony, Uſury and Luxury: In a word, his Writings are full of moſt pure Morality, and a moſt holy Diſcipline. St. Hilary.

The Works of St. Hilary were printed at Paris in the Year 1500 by Badius Aſcenſius: Afterwards Eraſmus having corrected them, caus'd them to be printed at Baſle in 1535. They were alſo printed in the ſame City in 1550, revis'd by Juſtus Lipſius. In 1572, Gillot publiſhed a New Edition of St. Hilary's Works, together with a Preface, which contains the Life of this Father, and ſome Notes: It was printed the ſame Year at Paris. In 1605. this very Edition was Re-printed more correctly, becauſe ſome Able Men, as Nicolaus Faber and Bongarſius gave themſelves the trouble to compare this Impreſſion with many Manuſcripts. There is added in this Edition, the Fragments of St. Hilary, which were publiſh'd by the Pithoei, and printed at Paris in the Year 1598, with an excellent Preface of Nicolaus Faber about theſe Fragments, and the Commentaries of St. Hilary upon the Pſalms 13, 14, 149, and 150, which had not been publiſh'd before. The ſame Edition has been printed anew at Paris in 1631, and 1652. Leunclavius has publiſh'd under the Name of St. Hilary, A Confeſſion of the Faith of the Trinity, Greek and Latin, printed at Baſle in 1578. The Book of the Unity of the Father and the Son, was printed at the ſame place in 1528. There is a New Edition expected ſoon from the Benedictins.

LUCIFER CALARITANUS

Lucifer Calaritanus.

LUCIFER, Biſhop of Calaris, the Metropolitan City of the Iſle of Sardinia, was Deputed with Hilary and Pancratius, by Pope Liberius, to the Emperour Conſtantius, after the Fall of Vincentius of Capua. He came to the Council of Milan, held in the Year 354, where he Defended Athanaſius and his Cauſe, with great Courage. The Emperour being provok'd by his Firmneſs, ſent him into Baniſhment, where he was detain'd till the Reign of Julian; but they forc'd him many times to change his Habitation: For, at firſt, he was Baniſh'd to Germanicia, a City of Syria, whereof Eudoxus was Biſhop, afterwards to Eleutheropolis in Paleſtine, where he was extremely tormented by Eutychus, Biſhop of that City. At the Death of Conſtantius, he was found baniſh'd in Thebais, and he ſuffer'd alſo a fourth Baniſhment, the place whereof is not known: 'Twas at the time when he was in Paleſtine, towards the Year 356, that he wrote his Books. They are all againſt Conſtantius, in behalf of St. Athanaſius and his Defenders. The Two Firſt, have no other Title, but, The Books in behalf of St. Athanaſius againſt Conſtantius. The Third, is entitled, Of Apoſtate Kings. The Fourth, bears this Title, That we muſt not Aſſemble with Hereticks. And the Fifth, That we muſt not Pardon thoſe that Offend againſt God.

All theſe Books are written with ſo much Heat and Boldneſs, that Lucifer muſt needs have a Soul fully prepar'd to ſuffer Martyrdom, when he wrote them, as is obſerv'd by St. Jerom. But that which is moſt ſurprizing is, that he was not contented with publiſhing of them, but alſo ſent a Copy of them to Conſtantius, and caus'd them to be preſented to him in his own Name. The Emperour being aſtoniſh'd at this Boldneſs, gave this Copy to Florentius, Grand-Maſter of his Palace, to ſend it to Lucifer, that he might declare, whether the Book was his or no. Lucifer confeſs'd it openly, and acknowledg'd that it was by his Order, that it was preſented to the Emperour. He had charg'd one named Bonoſus, to report this at Court, and now made Anſwer to Florentius, who had written to him, that he was ready to ſuffer Death with Joy. It was probably upon this occaſion, and at this time, that he added his Laſt Book, entitled, That we ſhould die for the Son of God. St. Athanaſius underſtanding that Lucifer had undertaken his Defence with ſo much Courage, ſent a Deacon to him nam'd Eutychus, to carry a Letter in his Name, wherein, after he had teſtified the Obligation that he had laid upon the Church, he prays him to ſend him a Copy of his Works; which having receiv'd,

he

Lucifer Calaritanus.

he ſent him a very obliging Letter of Thanks, and tranſlated them into Greek. We have now thoſe Letters of St. Athanaſius, the Letter of Florentius, and the Anſwer of Lucifer at the End of the Works of this Biſhop of Calaris; and what we have ſaid of the reſt of his Life is taken out of St. Jerom, and a Petition preſented to the Emperours Theodoſius and Valentinian, by Marcellinus and Fauſtinus, two Luciferian Prieſts.

After the Death of Conſtantius, Lucifer obtain'd his Liberty as well as the other Biſhops that were baniſh'd for the Faith. He came to Antioch, and found the Church of that City in Diviſion. For after that Euſtathius had been forc'd to leave it, many Catholicks did always ſeparate from thoſe Biſhops, that ſome would have ſet over them. They were not willing to acknowledge Meletius, who was then Biſhop of Antioch, tho' they had nothing to reprehend in his Faith. Theſe Catholicks were then govern'd only by Prieſts, and they were call'd Euſtathians. Lucifer, a ſevere Man and a rigorous Defender of Diſcipline, being come to Antioch, was perſuaded, That Meletius was Ordain'd by Arian Biſhops, or ſuch as were ſuſpected of Arianiſm, and had communicated with them, and therefore could not be a lawful Biſhop; whereupon he join'd himſelf to the Euſtathians, and Ordain'd Paulinus a Prieſt to be their Biſhop. This Ordination, which ſtill heightned the Diviſion of the Church of Antioch, was diſapprov'd by Euſebius of Vercellæ, who was ſent to Antioch, in the Name of the Synod of Alexandria. He condemn'd the Conduct of Lucifer, and retir'd into the Weſt, having no more hope of reſtoring Peace to the Church of Antioch; Lucifer, on the contrary, to maintain what he had done, reſolv'd to have no more Converſation or Correſpondence with any of the Biſhops who had received into their Communion, thoſe that had formerly ſign'd the Arian Creeds. He withdraws therefore into his own Iſland, and ſeparates from the Communion of almoſt all the Biſhops of the World. He died in this Reſolution, and left ſome followers call'd Luciferians, who ſpread themſelves over all the World.

The Works of Lucifer are written without Art and Eloquence, with much Heat and Paſſion; the Stile is Harſh and Barbarous; there is no Reaſoning, nor Principles in any thing that he ſays. He only propoſes Maxims, which he proves by the Teſtimonies and Examples of Scripture, whether they be pertinent to his Subject or no; from whence it comes to paſs, that his Writings, are nothing but a Collection of Paſſages of Scripture mix'd with Apoſtrophe's, Applications and Reflections.

In the Two Books againſt Conſtantius, he deſigns to prove, That this Emperour was very much to blame for endeavouring to compel the Biſhops to condemn St. Athanaſius, who was Abſent and Innocent. To prove this Truth, he produces abundance of Hiſtories and Paſſages out of Scripture, which ſhow, Firſt, That God condemns no Man without hearing him; And, Secondly, That 'tis forbidden in Scripture to condemn any Man without hearing his Defence; Thirdly, That thoſe who ſhed the Blood of the Innocent, ſhall be moſt ſeverely puniſh'd; Fourthly, That Conſtantius, has no right to command Biſhops, becauſe he is a Profane Perſon, a Heretick, and a Perſecutor.

The deſign of the Treatiſe Of Apoſtate Kings, is to prove by the Examples of many impious Kings, That the Succeſs of Conſtantius, does not demonſtrate, that he has any right to Perſecute the Orthodox Biſhops, nor that his Doctrine is true.

The other Books ſhew their Arguments by their Titles. The Firſt, is to ſhow, That we muſt neither Aſſemble nor Pray with the Arians, who are declar'd Hereticks: The Second, Is to Juſtify the ſevere Conduct of the Catholicks againſt the Arians, and the Liberty, that they take to reprove them with boldneſs and vehemence, without ſparing even the Powers themſelves: that is to ſay, this Book is peculiarly deſign'd to juſtify Lucifer, St. Hilary, and ſome other Catholicks, in their way of ſpeaking to the Emperour Conſtantius. The laſt Book contains many Proofs of this Truth, That we muſt die for the Son of God: He blames the Emperour Conſtantius, for his Impiety and Cruelty, at the ſame time, he praiſes the Conſtancy of the Catholicks, who ſuffer Martyrdom with Joy, for the Defence of the Orthodox Faith. [Lucifer's Works, with the Letters of St. Athanaſius and Florentius, were Printed at Paris, in 8vo, by Johannes Tillius, Biſhop of Meaux, in 1568. and afterwards inſerted into the Bibliothecæ Patrum.]

VICTORINUS of Africk.

Victorinus of Africk.

FABIUS] MARIUS VICTORINUS, born in Africk; after he had profeſs'd Rhetorick for the ſpace of many Years in the City of Rome, with ſo much Reputation, that a Statue was erected for him in one of the publick Places of the City, did at laſt in his old Age, embrace the Chriſtian Religion. The ſtudying of Plato's Books, which he had tranſlated, gave him ſome reliſh for the Holy Scripture; for when he read it, he admir'd it, and ſo became a Chriſtian in his heart. He discover'd this Inclination to his Friend Simplicianus, who exhorted him to enter into the Church of Chriſt, ſince he was perſuaded of the Truth of his Religion. Victorinus, thinking it was ſufficient to know the Truth, anſwer'd him, as it were jeſting upon his Simplicity, And do the Walls then make Chriſtians? But at laſt, being confirm'd in the Faith, by Reading and Meditating upon the Holy Scripture, and conſidering that Jeſus Chriſt would not own him at the Day of Judgment, if he ſhould be aſham'd to confeſs him publickly here; he ſays to his Friend Simplicianus, Let us go to Church; and after he had been ſome time a Catechumen, he was baptiz'd in the preſence of all the People. St. Auſtin, reports this Hiſtory, B. VIII. of his Confeſſions, Ch. 2. which he ſays, he learn'd from St. Ambroſe. St. Jerom places this Victorinus among the Number of Eccleſiaſtical Writers, and obſerves, that he wrote Books againſt Arius, compos'd in a Logical Method, Dialectico More, which are very obſcure, and and cannot be underſtood but by Learned Men. He adds, That he had alſo written Commentaries upon the Apoſtle St. Paul, but he ſays in another place, that theſe Commentaries were almoſt uſeleſs, becauſe this Author having been wholly addicted to the Study of humane Learning, did not underſtand the true Sence of the Holy Scripture. Victorinus of Africk.

We have at preſent thoſe Four Books of Victorinus againſt Arius, which are printed in the Orthodoxographa, and in the Bibliothecæ Patrum; but beſides this Book which St. Jerom mentions, there are ſome other Tracts which bear the Name of the ſame Author. Theſe are in the Bibliothecæ Patrum, viz. one in Defence of the Word Conſubſtantial, three Hymns of the Trinity, and one Poem of the Maccabees: Sirmondus has alſo publiſh'd by its ſelf, in the Year 1630, a little Treatiſe againſt the Manichees and another about the beginning of Day. All theſe Books are written in the ſame Stile, and by the ſame Author.

In the Four Books againſt Arius, dedicated to Candidus, he refutes the Errors of this Heretick, and thoſe of his Followers; he proves there the Divinity of the Word, and defends the Conſubſtantiality: But he does it in ſo Scholaſtick and Intricate a way, that 'tis very difficult to comprehend his Arguments. One may find ſeveral Expreſſions about the Myſtery of the Trinity, that are ſcarce Sence, and quite different from that way of ſpeaking which is us'd in the Holy Scripture, and by the Church of God. The Book in Defence of the Term Conſubſtantial, is a kind of Summary of thoſe Four Books.

The Treatiſe to Juſtinus, who was a Manichee, is written againſt the Error of thoſe Hereticks, who admitted two Principles of the Word, and believ'd that the Fleſh was created by an Evil Principle. Victorinus, refutes theſe two Errors in few words, and exhorts Juſtinus to acknowledge one God only. " Suffer not any more, ſays he, my Friend Juſtinus, ſuffer not your ſelf, you who are of " the City of Rome, to be abus'd by the Impieties of the Perſians, or Armenians. In vain do you " macerate your ſelf with extraordinary Mortifications, for after you have made your ſelf lean by thoſe " Auſterities, your Fleſh is of no other kind, than that which ſhall return to the Devil in darkneſs, " who according to you, created it. I adviſe and require you to acknowledge, That God Almighty " is he that created you, that ſo you may be truly the Temple of God, according to the Words of " the Apoſtle, You are truly the Temple of God, and his Spirit dwelleth in you. If you have not the " Honour to be the Temple of God, and to receive the Holy Spirit into you, Jeſus Chriſt is not come " to ſave, but to deſtroy you; for if we are his, our Body and Soul muſt belong to him, and then it " may be truly ſaid, That God is all in all; That he is the One, and only Almighty and Eternal Prin- " ciple of the whole Univerſe, and perfectly Infinite, to whom be Honour and Glory." This is the Concluſion of this Treatiſe which is pleaſanter and more intelligible than thoſe which are written againſt the Arians.

In the little Tract about the beginning of Day, he endeavours to ſhow, That the Days of the Creation which are mention'd in Geneſis, do not begin at Night, but at the Morning, and end at the Morning of the Day following.

The Firſt and Third of his Hymns, are in commendation of the Myſtery of the moſt Holy Trinity, which he explains in many Words.

The Second, is a Prayer to God, and is rather in Proſe, like the Creed attributed to St. Athanaſius than in Verſe.

The Poem of the Maccabees, is a Deſcription in Hexameter Verſe, of the Martyrdom of thoſe Seven Brethren. There is nothing extraordinary in this Poem; there is nothing Poetical in it, but ſome mean Imitations of Virgil, and for the moſt part, the Verſes are low and deſpicable.

The Commentaries of Victorinus upon St. Paul, have not yet been publiſh'd. Sirmondus found ſome Fragments of them in a Manuſcript, from which he took thoſe two little Treatiſes of which we have already ſpoken. But probably, he judg'd them not worth publiſhing, though he ſays in his Advertiſement, That the Stile of theſe Commentaries is more clear and clean, than that of his Dogmatical Works.

There are many Philoſophical Books attributed to the ſame Victorinns, as his Commentaries upon Tully's Rhetorick, cited by Caſſidorus in his Bibliotheca, and by Pope Sylveſter the II. in his Epiſtle 130, which have been Printed ſeveral times. There is alſo attributed to him the Verſion of Porphyry's Iſagoge, which is amongſt Boetius's Works, a Book about Poetry, and ſome Books of Grammar. But thoſe ſort of Books ought not to come into our Bibliotheca, which ſhould contain none but Eccleſiaſtical Monuments.

St. PACIANUS.

ST. PACIANUS, Biſhop of Barcelona, no leſs Famous, ſays St. Jerom, for the Holineſs of his Life, than the Eloquence of his Diſcourſe, wrote many Books, among which there is one entitled, Cervus or The Hart, and ſome other Treatiſes againſt the Novatians. He died under the Reign of Theodoſius, towards the Year 380. We have three Letters of his againſt the Novatians, addreſs'd to Sempronianus, who was of this Sect. An Exhortation to Repentance, and a Treatiſe or Sermon of Baptiſm, addreſs'd to the Catechumens. All theſe Pieces are written with much Wit and Eloquence. St. Pacianus.

The Firſt Letter to Sempronianus, has Two Parts. In the Firſt, he makes uſe of the way of Preſcription from the Name and Authority of the Catholick Church, to ſhow, that the Sect of the Novatians, cannot be the Church of Jeſus Chriſt. In the Second, he refutes their Doctrine about Repentance.

S. Pacianus.

He obſerves at the beginning of the Firſt Part, That ſince the coming of Jeſus Chriſt, there have appear'd an infinite Number of Sects, who have all been denominated from the Names of their Authors; That the Name of Catholick is continued only in the True Church; That the Novatians make one of thoſe Sects which are ſeparated from the Catholick Church; That they have forſaken the Tradition of the Church under pretence of Reformation. He oppoſes to them the Authority of the Ancient Fathers of the Church, who were Succeſſors to the Apoſtles. "Why ſhould not we, ſays he, have a Reſpect to the Authority of thoſe Apoſtolical Men? Shall we pay no Deference to the Teſtimony of St. Cyprian? Would we teach this Doctrine? Are we wiſer than he? But what ſhall we ſay of ſo many Biſhops diſpers'd over all the World, who are united with theſe Saints? What ſhall we ſay of ſo many Venerable Old Men, of ſo many Martyrs, and ſo many Confeſſors? Is it for us to Reform them? Shall our times corrupted by Vice, efface the Venerable Antiquity of our Anceſtors?" My Name, ſays he, addreſſing himſelf to Sempronianus, is Chriſtian, and my Sur-Name, is Catholick. Chriſtianus mihi nomen eſt, Catholicus cognomen. He explains afterwards, the Name of Catholick, and tells us, that the moſt Learned ſay, that it ſignifies Obedient; and that according to others it means, one thro' all, and ſhews, that theſe two Significations agree to the Catholick Church, which alone is obedient to the Voice of Jeſus Chriſt, and which only is the ſame in all the World. After he has thus ſpoken of the Church, he proceeds to Penance, and ſo he enters into the Merits of the Queſtion: "May it pleaſe God, ſays he, that none of the Faithful may ever ſtand in need of it; That no Man after Baptiſm may ever fall into the precipice of Sin; That ſo the Miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt may never be oblig'd to Preach and Apply long and tedious Remedies, for fear of Patronizing the Liberty of ſinning by flattering Sinners with their Remedies. Nevertheleſs, we allow this Mercy from our God, not to thoſe who are ſo happy as to preſerve their Innocence, but to thoſe who have been ſo unhappy as to loſe it by their Sins. It is not to the Sound, but to the Sick, that we Preach theſe Remedies. If the Evil Spirits have no more Power over the baptiz'd; If the Fraud of the Serpent which deſtroy'd the firſt Man, and gave ſo great occaſion of Damnation to his Poſterity, has ceas'd; If, I ſay the Devil is gone out of the World; If we may ſport our ſelves in Peace; If Man does not fall into many Sins of Thought, Word and Deed: Then let us not acknowledge this Gift of God; Let us reject this Aid; Let us have no more Confeſſions; Let us no longer hearken to Sighs and Tears; Let Juſtice and Innocence proudly deſpiſe theſe Remedies. But if Man be ſubject to theſe Miſeries, Let us no more accuſe the Mercy of God, who has propos'd theſe Remedies to our Diſeaſes, and Rewards to thoſe that preſerve their Health; Let us no more efface the Titles of God's Clemency by an unſupportable Rigour, nor hinder Sinners by an inflexible hardneſs from rejoycing in thoſe Gifts which he has freely beſtow'd upon them. 'Tis not we who give this Grace of our own Authority, but God himſelf who ſays, Be converted to me, &c." After he has ſet down many Paſſages of Scripture, which prove, That God Pardons penitent Sinners, he propoſes this Objection of the Novatians: God only, will you ſay, can grant Pardon of Sin; That's true, anſwers he, but what he does by his Miniſters, he does by his own Power, For he ſays to his Apoſtles, Whatſoever ye ſhall bind on Earth, ſhall be bound in Heaven: and whatſoever ye ſhall looſe on Earth, ſhall be loos'd in Heaven. But, perhaps, he did not give this Power to any but the Apoſtles? If this were true, then they muſt ſay, That they only had alſo Power to Baptize, to give the Holy Spirit, and to Purify the Gentiles from their ſins: For in the ſame place, where he gives them Power to Adminiſter the Sacrament of Baptiſm; he alſo gives them Power to looſe Sinners. Either then theſe two Powers were peculiarly reſerv'd to the Apoſtles, or they are both continued to their Succeſſors, and therefore ſince it is certain that the Power of giving Baptiſm and Unction, is continued in the Biſhops; that ſame muſt conſequently be granted of the Power of binding and looſing. He adds, That whatever Power the Biſhop has, he receiv'd it from the Apoſtles; That the right of adminiſtring Unction and Baptiſm, of Forgiving Sins, of Conſecrating the Body of Jeſus Chriſt, was devolv'd upon him, becauſe he is Succeſſor to the Apoſtles. He concludes this Letter with ſaying, I know very well, my dear Brother, that the Pardon of ſins is not to be granted indifferently to all Sinners, and that they are not to be loos'd, before there be ſome Signs of the Will of God, that it ſhould be done; That Abſolution is not to be given, but with much precaution and diſcretion, after Sinners have ſighed and wept long; and when the whole Church has pray'd for them, that ſo no Man may prevent the Judgment of Jeſus Chriſt. If you would write your Thoughts more clearly to me, my dear Brother, I would Inſtruct you more fully. Sempronianus, having anſwered this Letter, St. Pacianus, confirm'd the Two Parts of his Letter, by Two other Anſwers.

In the Firſt, he proves what he had ſaid concerning the Name of the Catholick Church, and as to what Sempronianus had objected, that the People of St. Cyprian had been treated as Apoſtates, as Sectaries, &c. He ſhews, that they did not commonly carry theſe Names, but on the contrary, were always call'd Catholicks, whereas Sempronianus cannot deny, but the Sect whereof he was, did bear the Name of Novatian. He anſwers afterwards to the Accuſation of Sempronianus, founded upon his making uſe of a Verſe of Virgil in his Letter, and ſhows, that a Biſhop is allow'd to know humane Learning, and to make a profitable uſe of it. He anſwers alſo another Accuſation againſt the Catholicks, concerning the Perſecution which he pretends the Novatians had ſuffer'd from them. He ſays, "That the Novatians muſt not attribute to the Catholicks the ſeverity of ſome Princes who would not tolerate them; That this was not done upon the Complaint, and at the deſire of Catholicks, but by the proper Motion of Chriſtian Princes who eſpous'd the Intereſts of the Church; That the Powers had reaſon to Protect the Innocent, and to make uſe of their Authority for the publick Good." The reſt of this Letter, reſpects ſome particular Debates between them, concerning the Perſons of Novatian, St. Cyprian and Cornelius. St. Pacianus, defends and praiſes theſe two laſt, and accuſes the firſt of Pride and Schiſm. In the laſt Letter to Sempronianus, he treats of Penance againſt Novatian. He ſays, That all the Doctrine of the Novatians, explain'd by Sempronianus, is contain'd in this Propoſition, That Penance is not allow'd after Baptiſm, becauſe the Church cannot forgive Mortal Sin: and in ſhort, That ſhe deſtroys her ſelf by receiving Sinners. St. Pacianus. " Who is it, ſays he, that propoſes this " Doctrine? Is it Moſes? Is it St. Paul? Is it Jeſus Chriſt? No, it is Novatian. And who is this " Novatian? Is he a Man pure and blameleſs, who has never forſaken the Church, who was lawfully " Ordain'd Biſhop, and by the common Methods, ſucceeded in the room of a Biſhop deceas'd? What " do you mean, you will tell me? It ſuffices that he has taught this Doctrine. But ſtill, when was " it taught? Was it immediately after the Paſſion of Jeſus Chriſt? Not at all, It was after the Reign " of Decius, 300 Years after Chriſt. But did this Man follow the Prophets? Was he a Prophet? Did " he raiſe the Dead? Did he work Miracles? Did he ſpeak all ſorts of Languages? For at leaſt he " ought to have theſe ſigns for eſtabliſhing a new Goſpel; and though he had, yet the Apoſtle aſſures us, " That though an Angel ſhould deſcend from Heaven to teach us a new Goſpel, he ſhould be ac- " curs'd? Was there never any Perſon, ſince the coming of Chriſt till Novatian, that underſtood the " Doctrine of Jeſus Chriſt? and ſince the Reign of Decius, Is there none but Novatian in the way of " Salvation? But you will tell me, We do not acquieſce in Authority, we make uſe of Reaſon. But " as to me, who hitherto have been ſettled in my Religion upon the Authority and Tradition of the " Church, and am ſatisfied with the Communion of this Ancient Society, I will not now diſſent " from it, I will not ſeek after Diſputes; and you who have ſeparated from this Body and divided " from your Mother, ſearch in Books for every thing that is moſt ſecret, that you may diſturb thoſe " that are at reſt. 'Tis not we, but you, that have raiſed this Diſpute. But ſtill let us hear what " you ſay, let us examine your Reaſons. You ſay, That the Church is a Body of Men regene- " rate by Water and the Holy Spirit, who have not deny'd the Name of Chriſt, which is the Temple " and Houſe of God, the Pillar and Ground of Truth: we ſay the ſame alſo. But who has taken away " from us this Living Water? Have we it not, we who draw from its Fountain? But you who are " ſeparated from it, how can you be regenerate by Baptiſm? How can the Holy Spirit, who has " not deſerted the Church, come upon you who are fall'n off from it? How can your People receive " the Holy Spirit, ſince they are not Confirm'd by Biſhops, who have receiv'd the Sacerdotal Unction? " Have not we had ſome Confeſſors and Martyrs? Yes, you will ſay, you have had; but they are " now loſt by receiving of Apoſtates. I will not tell you, that Novatian, while he was yet in the " Church, wrote a Book to prove that we ought to receive them; but how do you prove that the " whole Church is periſh'd by receiving Penitent Sinners? If ſome Churches have ſhown too great In- " dulgence, muſt others, who have not approv'd them, but have follow'd the old way, and preſerv'd " Peace, loſe upon that account the Name of Chriſtians? He proves afterwards by many Reaſons, That the Church by receiving Penitent Sinners, did not ceaſe to be the Church, and that the Schiſm of Novatian made his Diſciples loſe the Title of the Sons of the Church. He ſtrongly urges the Teſtimony of Novatian, who approv'd before his Separation, the Conduct of thoſe that receiv'd the laps'd that were Penitent. He deſcribes afterwards the Origin of the Sect of Novatians; and ſays, That Novatus an African Prieſt, being convicted in his own Country of many Crimes, came to Rome to avoid the Condemnation which he had deſerv'd; and that being arriv'd there, he perſwaded Novatian who was vex'd that Cornelius was Ordain'd Biſhop of Rome; he perſwaded him, I ſay, to procure himſelf to be Ordain'd Biſhop, and adviſ'd him for gaining his deſign, to object againſt Cornelius, the ill Conduct he obſerv'd in receiving Penitent Sinners. St. Pacianus enters upon this Matter, and juſtifies againſt the Novatians the Conduct of Cornelius, by ſhowing that we ought to receive Sinners to Penance: and that God has given his Church the Power of forgiving Sins. But at the ſame time, he takes Notice, That there is not the ſame reaſon of Penance as of Baptiſm, for the former ought to be accompanied with much Labour, with Tears and Sighs? He confutes the Objections of the Novatians, and ſhows, that the paſſage of St. Matthew, Whatſoever ye ſhall looſe on Earth, ſhall be loos'd in Heaven, cannot be underſtood of Baptiſm. He proves all the Anſwers of Sempronianus to the Paſſages alledg'd in his firſt Letter to him, to be falſe. He objects to the Novatians their Hardheartedneſs, with reference to Penitents. He ſhows, That thoſe of this Sect are not ſo pure, nor ſo Innocent as they boaſt themſelves to be, and that there have been many Perſons among them guilty of enormous Crimes. He oppoſes to them the Authority of St. Cyprian and Tertullian before his Fall. He ends with an Exhortation to Sempronianus to return into the Church.

firſt

He begins his Exhortation to Repentance with an Introduction, wherein he obſerves, That oftentimes it were better not to mention ſome Sins than to reprove them; becauſe the Sin is rather learn'd than reſtrain'd. He ſays, That the Book that he had written againſt the Play called Cervulus, or the Little Heart, had the Misfortune to render that Immorality the more common. Concerning which, we may learn by the bye, That the Book of St. Pacianus, entiled, Cervus or Cervulus, The Little Hart, mention'd by St. Jerom, which is not extant, was compos'd againſt ſome Profane and Laſcivious Play or Ceremony, wherein probably there were us'd indecent Poſtures. He adds, That this Treatiſe was written againſt the Heathens, who mocked at it, and that he was not to expect better ſucceſs from this Exhortation to Repentance, which was addreſs'd to the Chriſtians of his own Dioceſs. He ſays, That we cannot but imagine that this Book was deſign'd only for Penitents, ſince Penance is as it were the Bond of all Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline: For, ſays he, we muſt take care of Catechumens, that they fall not into Sin; of the Faithful, that they relapſe not after they have been Purified; and of Penitents, that they may receive quickly the fruit of their Humiliation. After this, he divides his Diſcourſe into Three Parts: He treats in the Firſt of the different ſorts of Sin, leſt any ſhould imagine that all Sins deſerve the ſame Puniſhment. In the Second, he diſcourſes of ſome Perſons that are aſham'd to make uſe of the Remedy of Penance, and ſo receive the Sacrament with an heart and mind polluted with Sin: They are fearful, ſays he, before Men, but impudent before God, they defile by their impure Hands, and by their corrupt Mouth; they defile, I ſay, that Altar which makes the Angels themſelves to tremble. The laſt Part, Is of the Pains that they ſhall ſuffer who do no Penance, and of the Reward of thoſe that Purify themſelves by a true and ſincere Confeſſion of their Sins. In the Firſt Part, he diſtinguiſhes Sins from Crimes. He averrs, That we muſt not imagine that Men are oblig'd to do Penance for an infinite number of ſmall Sins, from which no Perſon is exempt; That according to the Diſpenſation under the Old Teſtament, leſſer Faults were rigorouſly puniſh'd, but Jeſus Chriſt is come to deliver us from this Yoke of the Law. Thus after Pardon, if a Man may ſo ſpeak, of an infinite number of Sins, which need no Powerful Remedies to cure them, there remains a ſmall number which may be eaſily avoided, that deſerve a ſevere Puniſhment. Amongſt theſe he reckons Idolatry, Murder and Adultery: As for other Sins, ſays he, they may be cur'd by the Practice of Good Works, Inhumanity by Civility, Injuries by Satisfaction, Sadneſs by Mirth, Harſhneſs by Sweetneſs, Lightneſs by Gravity; and ſo of other Vices which are puniſh'd by the contrary Vertues. But what ſhall be the Puniſhment of Idolatry? What ſhall the Murderer do to expiate his Crime? What ſhall be the remedy of an Adulterer or Fornicator? Theſe are, my Brethren, Capital Sins, theſe are Mortal Sins. After he has terrified thoſe who have committed theſe Crimes, with the dreadful words of Fire and Brimſtone, and almoſt made them deſpair of Pardon; he adds, However you may be healed, if you begin to be ſenſible of the greatneſs of your Crime, and the ſtate to which you are reduc'd; if you have a Fear that approaches near to Deſpair. I addreſs my ſelf firſt of all to you, who having committed thoſe Crimes refuſe to do Penance; you who are ſo timorous, after you have been ſo impudent; you who are aſham'd to do Penance after you have ſinned without bluſhing; you who are not aſham'd to commit thoſe Crimes, but are aſham'd to confeſs them; you who approach the Holy of Holies, with a Conſcience polluted by theſe Crimes, without trembling, when ye preſent your ſelves before the Altars; you who receive the Myſteries from the hands of the Prieſts in the preſence of the Angels, as if ye were innocent; you who trample upon the Patience and Mercy of God, and preſent at his Altars a defil'd Soul and an unclean Body. After he has thus ſpoken a word to Impenitent Sinners, he repreſents to them the Puniſhments that God has threatned to thoſe that approach unworthily to Holy Things. He propoſes to them the terrible words of St. Paul, and exhorts them by moſt powerful Motives, and moſt convincing Reaſons to diſcover the Wounds of their Conſcience. The Sick that are Prudent, ſays he, do not hide their Wounds from their Phyſicians, even thoſe that are in the moſt ſecret Parts. They ſuffer them to apply the Iron, the Fire, and Cauſticks to Cure them; And ſhall a Sinner be afraid to purchaſe Eternal Life for a little Shame? Shall he dread to diſcover his Sins to God, which are but ill hid from him? He that dares offend againſt God, why does he bluſh at any thing? Would he rather Periſh without Shame, than be aſham'd to Periſh? But though you ſhould be aſham'd to diſcover your Miſery to others, yet fear not to diſcover it to your Brethren, who bear a part in your unhappineſs. It does not become one Part of the Body to rejoyce in the Evil that befalls another Member of the ſame Body, they ſuffer all the ſame Pain, and contribute to the Remedy. The Church conſiſts of the Faithful, and Jeſus Chriſt is in his Church, and ſo he that diſcovers his Sins to his Brethren, is aſſiſted by the Tears of the Church, and Abſolv'd by the Prayers of Jeſus Chriſt.

St. Pacianus.

After this, he ſpeaks a word to thoſe, who under pretence of being willing to do Penance, lay open indeed their Wounds by Confeſſion, but know not what it is to do Penance, nor what the Remedies which muſt Cure them; who are exactly like thoſe who diſcover their Wounds and Diſeaſes to Phyſicians, but neglect to bind up their Wounds, and to apply neceſſary Remedies; nay, encreaſe their Diſeaſe by taking contrary Remedies and pernicious Potions, and add new Crimes to their old Sins. What can I do for theſe, I who am a Biſhop? Says he, 'Tis very late to give them a Remedy, but yet if any of you be willing to ſuffer the Iron and the Fire, I can apply them: Behold the Razor which the Prophet preſents me. Turn ye, ſays he, to the Lord your God, with faſting, weeping and mourning, and ſighing, and break your hearts: fear not this Inciſion, for David was very willing to endure it. He relates alſo many other Examples of Penance, and reproves the Softneſs, the Pride, and Looſneſs of the greateſt part of Chriſtians and Penitents. He blames them for not obſerving ſo much as the daily Exerciſes of Penance, which are made in the preſence of the Biſhop; As to weep in the ſight of all the Church, to diſcover by the uncleanneſs of their Garments the regret they ought to have for loſing their Innocence, to Sigh, to Pray, to throw themſelves at the feet of the Faithful, to deprive themſelves of Pleaſures, to proſtrate themſelves before the Prieſts, to hold the hands of the Poor, to ſupplicate the Widows, to beſeech the whole Church, and implore its Prayers; and in ſhort, to try all ways poſſible to ſave their Souls. After this, he quickens the Penitents by the Fear of Eternal Puniſhments, which he repreſents to them in a moſt Pathetical manner; and he invites them to Penance by the conſideration of the Mercy and Goodneſs of God, who deſires nothing but the Converſion of Sinners.

The Subject of the Treatiſe of Baptiſm addreſs'd to the Faithful and the Catechumens, is ſet down by St. Pacian in the Beginning of his Diſcourſe, I will ſhow you, ſays he, in what Condition we are Born, and how we are renew'd by Baptiſm------To make you underſtand this, I ſhall diſcover to you, what the Gentiles are; what is the Fruit of Faith, and what are the Effects of Baptiſm. In order to the Explication of theſe Three Things, he obſerves, That by the Sin of Adam all Men were enſlav'd to Death and Sin; That the Law of Moſes diſcover'd this Miſery very plainly, but afforded no Remedy at all; That ſo Sin reign'd from Adam till Chriſt, who deliver'd Mankind from the Tyranny of Sin, becauſe as the Sin of the Firſt Man was imputed to all his Poſterity, ſo the Righteouſneſs of Jeſus Chriſt was communicated to all Men by Baptiſm, and by the Aid of the Holy Spirit, provided that Faith precede. He adds, That this Regeneration cannot be perfected but by the Sacrament of Baptiſm, and Unction, and by the Miniſtry of the Prieſt. [For, ſays he, Baptiſm Purifies from Sins, and Unction brings brings down the Holy Spirit, and both the one and the other are applied by the Hand and the Mouth of the Bishop; the whole Man is born again and renewed in Jesus Christ, that we may lead a new Life, which shall never end; because though this Body shall die, yet we shall always live in Jesus Christ, in a heavenly and eternal Life. He observes, That being deliver'd in Baptism from the bands of Sin, we renounce the Devil and the World, and if afterwards, by forgetting the Grace which we have received, we relapse into a Crime, our Relapse is almost irrecoverable; because that Jesus Christ suffer'd but once, and we cannot be wash'd and purified above once. He concludes with an Exhortation to those that are newly Baptiz'd, to preserve the Grace which they had received, to Sin no more, to keep the Purity and Innocence of Baptism till the Day of Judgment, and to endeavour to obtain Eternal Treasures by their Prayers and Spiritual Labours. St. Pacianus.

These Extracts which we have drawn from the Writings of St. Pacianus, sufficiently discover his Judgment, his Stile and Learning. There is hardly any of the Ancients that speaks more clearly of the Efficacy of the Sacraments of Baptism, Confirmation and Penance: He attributes to Chrism the effect of Confirmation, which is an Opinion very rare among the Latins, who attribute it to Imposition of Hands. Though he speaks advantageously of the Efficacy of the Sacraments, yet he requires very great Dispositions in order to their producing such Effects as they ought to have. He particularly recommends Publick Penance for the Sins of Idolatry, Murder and Fornication: under which Three Sins must be comprehended all the Consequents of them, which extend very far. He thinks that those Sins cannot be pardon'd but by Publick Penance. As to all other Sins, he does not believe it necessary to submit to that Penance which the Canons of the Church enjoyned for them. He explains the Fall of all Mankind, that 'twas caus'd by the Sin of the First Man, very clearly, and the unprofitableness of the Law, the Necessity and Effects of the Incarnation of Jesus Christ. He equally condemns the Rigour of the Novatians, and the Impenitence of some Sinners, as well as the heedlessness and softness wherewith others perform their Penance. His Exhortations are lively and persuasive, his Thoughts well-weigh'd, his Proofs solid, his way of Writing pleasant, his Stile, elegant, and the Periods short. In a word, These little Tracts may pass for Master-pieces in their kind, and these two Treatises may be look'd upon as a perfect Model of Preaching, or Exhortation to the People.

The Works of this Father were Publish'd by Tilius, and Printed at Paris, with some other Books in 4to, in the Year 1538, by Guillardus; in 1655, in 8vo, by Melchior Gopnerus; and together with Hermas at Rome in 1564, in Folio; and in the Bibliothecæ Patrum.

GREGORY of Bætica.

GREGORY, Bishop of Elvira, a City of the Province of Bætica in Spain, wrote divers Treatises in a low Stile, and an elegant Book concerning the Faith; which were extant in the latter End of St. Jerom's time. We have in the Fragments of St. Hilary, a Letter of Eusebius of Vercellæ to this Bishop, where he commends him for the Constancy wherewith he defended the Faith of the Church, and resisted Hosius. Marcellus and Faustinus the Luciferians, tell us, in their Letter to Valentinian the Emperour, That Hosius being ready to condemn him, was miraculously thrown upon the Ground, and lost the use of his Speech. But there is no probability that this Relation should be true, as we have already shown, when we Discours'd of Hosius. St. Jerom, in his Chronicle, joyns this Bishop, with Lucifer Calaritanus, and observes, that they would never have any Correspondence with those that were suspected of Arianism. This joyn'd with the Honourable mention that Marcellinus and Faustinus make of this Bishop, may induce us to believe, that he was of the Judgment and Party of Lucifer. He flourish'd from the Year 357, till the latter End of that Century. The Ancients speak of him as a simple, plain, sincere Man, but a zealous Defender of the Faith. His Stile was no ways Sublime, if we believe St. Jerom. There have been printed under his Name at Rome, in the Year 1575, and in the Two first Editions of the Bibliothecæ Patrum, seven little Treatises against the Arians, which are thought to be the same with the Book concerning the Faith cited by St. Jerom: But it has since been discover'd, that they were written by Faustinus a Luciferian Deacon, to whom the Abbot Trithemius attributes them. They are address'd to the Empress Galla Placidia, Sister to the Emperour Honorius, which discovers that they rather belong to Faustinus than Gregory of Bætica, who was dead when Placidia had the Title of Empress. Gregory of Bætica.

PHÆBADIUS.

PHÆBADIUS (a), Bishop of Agen, having seen the Second Creed of Sirmium, compos'd in the Year 357, by Hosius and Potamius, wrote immediately a Treatise against this Creed. He assisted afterwards at the Council of Ariminum, held in 359, wherein he defended untill the End of the Council, the Nicene Creed, and refus'd to Sign that which was there propos'd. Neither Fear nor Threatnings could change his Resolution; but the Governor Taurus, seeing that his Constancy was Phæbadius.

(a) Phæbadius.] Sulpitius Severus, calls him Fegadius; in St. Jerom, and the Greek Translator of his Book, he is call'd Sæbadius, which is a Fault in the Latin, and ought to be read Phæbadius, as it is in the Manuscripts. There is also by mistake in St. Ambrose Fygadius.

nor

Phœbadius. not to be overcome by theſe means, us'd Entreaties, and beſeech'd him with Tears to take more moderate Courſes, that ſo he might releaſe a great Number of Biſhops, who had been ſhut up for the ſpace of ſeven Months in one City, where they were diſtreſs'd by the Rigour of the Winter, and the want of all things. He remonſtrated to him, That if all the Biſhops did not ſign the Creed that was brought from the Eaſt, there would be no hopes, that they ſhould ever have permiſſion to return from thence: In ſhort, That he muſt fix his Reſolution, and that he ought to follow the Example and Authority of many that had already ſign'd. Phœbadius anſwered, That he was ready to go into Baniſhment, and ſuffer all ſorts of Puniſhment, rather than do that which was deſir'd of him, and that he would never receive a Creed made by the Arians. Some days paſs'd in theſe Debates; but at laſt, ſeeing that there was no hopes left of obtaining Peace, he departed from his Reſolution, after that Urſacius and Valens had declar'd, That the Profeſſion of Faith, which they propos'd, was Catholick, and that thoſe, to whom it appear'd not ſufficient, might add to it what they thought fit. This Propoſition was favourably receiv'd by all the Weſtern Biſhops: Phœbadius and Servatio Tungrenſis, drew up Declarations, wherein they condemn'd Arius and his impious Doctrine, acknowledging that the Son of God was without Beginning, and that he was not a Creature. But Urſacius and Valens, added maliciouſly, that he was not a Creature as others are; and ſo deceiv'd the Biſhops who ſign'd, with thoſe Declarations, the Creed compos'd at Nice by the Biſhops of the Eaſt. Phœbadius, being upon his return to his own Country, was one of thoſe Biſhops who were moſt troubled for their Fault, and who aton'd for it, by Declarations and Proteſtations againſt what they had done by Surpriſe: He aſſiſted at the Council of Valentia in 374. We have a Letter of St. Ambroſe, addreſs'd to him and Delphinius, Biſhop of Bordeaux. St. Jerom aſſures us in his Book of Illuſtrious Men, That Phœbadius liv'd in his time, and that he was then extremely old: He adds, That he alſo wrote ſome other Books, beſides that which we have already mention'd. The Memory of this Saint, is particularly honoured at Agen, where he is commonly call'd St. Fiari.

We have ſtill extant in the Bibliothecæ Patrum, a Treatiſe of this Biſhop, againſt the Second Creed of Sirmium, which was firſt publiſh'd by Pithœus, in a Collection of Ancient French Eccleſiaſtical Authors, printed by Niveille, in the Year 1589. This Treatiſe is a refutation of the Second Creed of Sirmium, compos'd by Potamius, Biſhop of Lisbon, and Sign'd by Hoſius Biſhop of Corduba. In the Exordium, he ſays, That if the greater part of Chriſtians had not been circumvented by the Artifices of the Devil, who makes them take Hereſy for Faith, and condemn the Faith for Hereſy; he had not undertaken to ſay any thing of this Writing, which was ſent a little while ago into France: That he could be content to continue Firm in his own Faith, without medling with the Examination of other Men's: "But ſince, ſays he, we are reduc'd to this Condition, that we muſt neceſſa-
" rily embrace Hereſy, that we may be call'd Catholicks, or ceaſe to be Catholicks by not rejecting
" Hereſy, we find our ſelves oblig'd to diſcover the Poyſon of Hereſy hid under the appearance of " Religion, and to lay open that Error, which is wrapt up in ſuch Terms, as appear at firſt ſight
" to be Innocent, that ſo Falſhood being diſcover'd, the oppreſs'd Truth may at laſt take breath.
" We muſt deſtroy the Opinions of Strangers, that ours may be believ'd, and ſo in refuting Error, I
" ſhall prove at the ſame time, the Truth of my Creed, and demonſtrate my ſelf to be a Catholick to
" thoſe that are not over-aw'd by Fear, nor brib'd by Ambition." After this, he Examines the Second Creed of Sirmium, diſcovers the Malignity of it, and refutes by Teſtimonies of Scripture, the Errors that it contains about the Trinity. He ſpeaks alſo occaſionally of the Myſtery of the Incarnation, whileſt he refutes a Letter of Potamius; who had affirm'd, That by the Incarnation of the Word, God was render'd paſſible, and that the Son of God, and the Fleſh of Man, were become as it were, a Third Perſon, who was neither God nor Man. He diſputes againſt this Opinion, ſhowing by Scripture, That the Two Subſtances, or the Two Natures, continued without mixture in the Perſon of Jeſus Chriſt; That the Word did ſtill preſerve the Properties of the Divine Nature, and the Humanity of the Humane Nature. He is very angry afterwards, that they ſuppreſs'd the word Subſtance, which was order'd by the Creed, that he examines. The Biſhops, ſays he, make an Edict, whereby they decree, That no Perſon ſhall ſpeak of One Subſtance. "Alas, What have you done,
" O ye Holy Biſhops, Aſſembled at Nice from all parts of the World? You have to no purpoſe
" Compos'd with admirable Circumſpection, a Creed which ſhould be the Infallible Rule of Truth?
" To what End was your Labour deſign'd? What is the Fruit of your Care? 'Tis now forbidden
" to teach in the Church, the only Thing which you commanded to be taught there for the Con-
" founding of Error. That is now condemn'd, which you approv'd; and that is now approv'd, which " you condemn'd; Falſhood is maintain'd, and the Truth is oppos'd. But in vain do they ſtrive to " do it, for Truth ſhall never be deſtroy'd, it ſhall remain eternally without Change, and ſhall puniſh
" thoſe that ſet themſelves againſt it. Let no Man, ſay they, make uſe of the Word Subſtance. Ha,
" What Evil, what Crime is it, to make uſe of this Word? Wherein does it wound the Faith? Is it
" the Sound? Is it the Sence?" Afterwards he makes it appear, That this Word is us'd in Scripture; That the Sence of it is moſt Catholick; and, That 'tis moſt proper to expound the Faith of the Church in ſuch a manner, as it may not be capable of any further Explication. At the End of this Treatiſe, he refutes thoſe that ſay, The Word of God ſuffer'd Pain. At laſt, he concludes with ſaying, That there is but One only God in Three Perſons. "This is what we believe, this is what we defend, what
" the Prophets have taught us, what the Goſpel preaches to us, what the Apoſtles left us by Tradition,
" what the Martyrs confeſs'd in their Suffering. This is the Faith which is engraven on the Hearts
" and Minds of the Faithful; and when an Angel ſhall deſcend from Heaven and teach the contrary,
" he ſhall be accurſed." He adds afterwards, as a kind of an Appendix, when he ſpeaks of Hoſius, Biſhop of Corduba; "I know very well, ſays he, that the Name of Hoſius, that ancient Biſhop, may " be

" be objected to me, whose Faith was always so Firm, and I doubt, not but they will make use of " his Authority, as a Buckler to cover the Opinion that is contrary to ours. But I answer in a word Phabadius.
" to those who will make use of these Arms, that his Authority cannot be alledg'd as an unanswerable
" Argument, because either he is at present in an Error, or else he always was so. The World knows
" what he believ'd till this present time, with what Assurance he approv'd the Sardican and Nicene
" Doctrine which I defend, and with what Rigor he condemned the Arians. But if he be at present
" of another Opinion, if he maintains now what he always condemned heretofore, if he condemns
" now what he always maintained; How can his Authority be objected to me? If he was in an Er" ror for 82 Years together, How comes it to pass, that I must believe, that at this Age he found out
" the Truth? But suppose I could believe it, What Judgment can be given of those who died in the " Faith of the same Doctrine which he maintained before he altered his Opinion? What Judgment
" would he have given of himself, if he had died before that Council wherein he changed? And so
" the prejudice drawn from the Authority of Hosius, is of no Consideration, because it opposes it self:
" Besides that, we read in the Scripture, that the Righteousness of a Judge, shall not save him, when " he shall depart from it.

I was very willing to set down this Passage entire, because it may be of great use to weak Persons, who suffer themselves to be drawn into Errors, by the Authority of those whom they highly esteem and Value. It serves also to discover, that the greatest Men are subject to great Infirmities, and that therefore we must not follow their Example blindly, especially, when Religion is the Matter in question; and that the only Infallible Rule to which we should adhere, is the Authority of the Church, to which we ought to pay a blind Obedience, and without reserve.

To Conclude, This Tract is written very politely, the Stile is clear and clean, the Subject is handled very plainly; and there are sometimes Sallies of Wit, which discover that the Author wrote with much Vigour and Easiness.

St. OPTATUS.

ST. OPTATUS (a), Bishop of Milevi (b), a City of Numidia, wrote under the Reign of Valens and Valentinian, about the Year 370, his Books of the Schism of the Donatists, against Parmenianus, a Bishop of that Sect. There is nothing in particular, known of the Life of this Author. He died, according to the Testimony of St. Jerom, under the Reign of Valentinian (c). St Austin and St. Fulgentius, cite him with great Commendation, and he has been numbred among the Saints, because of the Service he did the Church, by this excellent Book which he compos'd in its Defence. It was divided into Six Books, since St. Jerom's time: There is a Seventh now extant, but 'tis very probable, that it is Suppositious. First of all, Because Optatus himself in his First Book, divides his Treatise into Six Books, without mentioning a Seventh. Secondly, because St. Jerom says, That Optatus wrote but Six Books against the Schism of the Donatists. Thirdly, Because the Stile of the last Book (d), comes not near the Elegance and Sublimeness that is in the others. And Lastly, Because it contains Opinions contrary to those that are in the other Books (e). This Book therefore was written by some African, who lived soon after St. Optatus (for it cannot be doubted but that the Book is ancient) who thought he ought to make this Addition, which was afterwards attributed to this Father. St Optatus.

St. Optatus begins his First Book with words very full of Charity. He complains, That the Peace which Jesus Christ left to his Church, is disturb'd by the Schism and by the Actions of the Donatists: Yet he gives them the Name and Title of Brethren. " Though they renounce us, says he, though all " the World knows that they hate us, that they detest us; though they would not have us call them
" our Brethren, yet we will follow the Command of the Prophet Isaiah, in saying unto them, Ye are
" nevertheless our Brethren, though ye be Evil: We have the same Spiritual Birth, but our Actions
" are different". Afterwards, he gives an Account of his Undertaking to write to Parmenianus,

(a) St. Optatus.] The Name of Optatus is very common among the Africans. St. Austin speaks of many other Persons of this Name, who are easily distinguish'd from this Bishop.

(b) Milevi.] Some Authors have thought that he was Bishop of Malta; but this is a gross mistake: Milevi is a City of Numidia in Africk, often mention'd in the African Councils.

(c) He died under the Reign of Valentinian.] In B II. he places in his Catalogue of Popes, Pope Siricius, who was not Bishop of Rome till after the Death of Valentinian; which would cause a doubt of what St. Jerom says, if it were not easy for a Transcriber to add the Name of Siricius, when he Copied out this Book after the Death of Optatus.

(d) The Stile of the last Book] The Stile of it is flat, mean and weak, whereas the Stile of Optatus is sublime, masculine, and enrich'd with many Figures; there are also many Terms, which appear not to be Optatus's: The Author of this Book treats of what Optatus had already handled in B. I. and III. and the beginning of the IV. which Repetition does also show, that it is none of his.

(e) Opinions contrary to those that are in the other Books.] This Author extenuates the enormity of their Crime, who deliver'd up the Holy Books to be burnt; he denies that it was a Capital Crime, and endeavours to prove that it was light and pardonable. On the contrary, St. Optatus declares, B I. That it was a great Sin, equal to that of Schism, and that those who committed it, should, purchase some Years of this Life, with the loss of Eternal Life, which supposes, that this Crime was Mortal, and deserv'd Damnation; but the Author of the Seventh Book, teaches the contrary.

whom

St. Optatus. whom he calls his Brother: He ſays, That he was the only Donatiſt with whom he could have a Conference in Writing, and he ſhews the Uſefulneſs of it: He obſerves, That this Biſhop in writing againſt the Catholick Church had written for it: ſo that it had not been neceſſary to have anſwer'd his Treatiſe, if he had not affirm'd many things whereof he was not well-inform'd, as when he charges the Catholicks with deſiring Souldiers that they might Perſecute the Donatiſts. He owns, That this is the only place in all the Books of Parmenianus which is againſt the Church; and that all others are either for the Catholicks only, as when he proves that there is but one Church only; or for the Catholicks and the Donatiſts, as when he ſhows that Hereticks have not the Sacraments of the Church; Or laſtly, againſt the Donatiſts only, as when he ſpeaks of the Enormity of their Crime, who deliver'd up the Holy Books and made a Schiſm. He adds, That the Compariſon which Parmenianus has made of Baptiſm with Circumciſion, and the Flood, is honourable to the Church, which maintains, that there is but one only Baptiſm, as there was but one Circumciſion and one Flood.

Optatus having made this general Remark upon the Book of Parmenianus, gives an account of the Method he has obſerv'd in his Work; and then lays down a Scheme of his Refutation, and propoſes the Subject of his Books. "I ſhall begin, ſays he, Firſt of all, with giving an Hiſtory of the Tra- "ditors and Schiſmaticks, with an Account of their Abode, their Perſons, and their Names; that ſo it "may be known who thoſe are that are guilty of the Crimes that Parmenianus has Condemn'd. "Secondly, I muſt ſhow what is the Church, and where it is, becauſe there is but one only, and there "cannot poſſibly be two Churches. Thirdly, I am to prove, That we did not deſire the Souldiers, "and that we are not guilty of the Crimes which are ſaid to be done by thoſe, who would have pro- "cur'd a Re-union. Fourthly, 'Twill be neceſſary to ſhew who is the Sinner, whoſe Sacrifice God re- "fuſes, and whoſe Unction we muſt flee from. In the 5th. Book, I ſhall treat of Baptiſm. In the "6th. I ſhall lay open your Errors and Deſigns". This is the Argument of thoſe Six Books of Optatus. In the Firſt Book before we come to the Hiſtory of the Donatiſts, which is the Subject of it, we muſt obſerve a Miſtake of Parmenianus, who ſays, That the ſinful Fleſh being drown'd in the Waters of Jordan, was purified from all its ſtains. He reproves this Paſſage of Parmenianus, becauſe from hence it would follow, either that the Fleſh of all Men was purified by the Baptiſm of Jeſus Chriſt; or that the Fleſh of Jeſus Chriſt was ſinful. But becauſe he foreſaw very well, that Parmenianus might explain his meaning, by ſaying, That nothing elſe was intended by thoſe words, but that the Fleſh of Men was purified in the Fleſh of Jeſus Chriſt, therefore he ſhows that this Expreſſion is improper: for we never ſay, That a Chriſtian was baptiz'd in the Fleſh of Jeſus Chriſt; but in the Name of Jeſus Chriſt. He adds, That the Fleſh of Jeſus Chriſt could not be baptiz'd for the Remiſſion of Sins, ſince he had not committed any. At laſt, That he might not Pardon Parmenian in any thing, he blames him even for the term Drown'd, which he uſes, and tells us, That he could only ſay of Pharaoh, that he continued at the bottom of the Waters, and not of Jeſus Chriſt, who deſcended into Jordan that he might come out of it, and who Sanctified the Waters of this River by his deſcent. He ſays, That he cannot paſs over the Imprudence of Parmenianus, who having given a Deſcription of the Flood and Circumciſion, and ſpoken in the Praiſe of Baptiſm, ſhould go about (if I may ſay ſo) to raiſe from the Dead the ancient Hereticks, who were buried together with their Hereſies in Oblivion, and whoſe Names and Hereſies were unknown long ago in Africa, ſuch as Praxeas, Sabellius, Valentinus and others, who had been confuted in their time, by Victorinus of Paſſaw, by Zepyrinus of Rome, by Tertullian of Carthage, and other Defenders of the Catholick Church.

"Wherefore, ſays he, do ye make ſuch a War with the Dead, as does not concern the Affairs of our "Time: Is it becauſe ye have no Proof that the Catholicks are Schiſmaticks, therefore ye would ſwell "your Book with a Catalogue of the Names and Errors of the ancient Hereticks? Why do ye ſpeak "of thoſe who had no Sacraments which are common to us? Thoſe that are in Health have no need "of Remedies. Vertue and Innocence ſeek no help nor ſupport but in themſelves. Truth wants no "far-fetch'd Proofs. None but the Sick ſeek after Remedies; only the Weak and Sluggiſh truſt to "External Succors, and 'tis a Sign of a Lye when Men take much pains to find out a Juſtification: Parmenianus had not mention'd theſe Hereticks, but to tell us, That they had not the Signs of a true Church; That their Churches were Strumpets who had no right to the Sacraments, and could not be the Spouſes of Jeſus Chriſt. Optatus was ſo far from refuting this Propoſition, that he approv'd it, but he wondred that Parmenianus had joyn'd the Schiſmaticks with them, ſince he himſelf was one of this Number.

"I ſee very well, ſays he to Parmenianus, That you know not who were the Authors of the Schiſm "at Carthage. Look back to the Riſe of this Affair, and you will ſee that you have condemn'd your "ſelves, by joyning the Schiſmaticks to the Hereticks: for Cæcilian did not ſeparate from Majorinus "your Predeceſſor, but Majorinus ſeparated from Cæcilian. 'Twas not Cæcilian that deſerted the "Chair of St. Peter or St. Cyprian, but Majorinus, in whoſe Chair you ſit, a Chair that is of no older "Original than Majorinus himſelf". This being ſo, he wonders that Parmenian ſhould joyn the Schiſmatick with the Heretick, and ſhould ſay of the former as well as the latter after this manner: How can a Man that is defil'd, cleanſe another by a falſe Baptiſm? How can an impure Man Purifie? How can one that makes others fall, lift up thoſe that are faln down? How can one that is guilty, grant Pardon? or one that is Condemn'd, abſolve? Optatus confeſſes, That all this may be truly ſaid of Hereticks who have corrupted the Creed, and have no ſhare in the Sacraments of the Church; but he denies that this can be ſaid of thoſe that are only Schiſmaticks; who, as he thinks, may lawfully Adminiſter the Sacraments. To prove this, he ſhows the difference between Hereticks and Schiſmaticks. "Two things, ſays he, are neceſſary to render the Church Catholick; The Confeſſion of the true "Faith, and the Unity of Hearts. Schiſm which breaks the Bond of Peace is begotten by Diſcord,

"nouriſh'd

" nouriſh'd by Envy, and confirm'd by Diſputes; thus impious Children forſake the Catholick Church
" their Mother, withdraw and ſeparate themſelves, as you have done, being cut off from the Church St. Optatus.
" and become Rebels and Enemies: But they innovate nothing in Doctrine, ſtill retaining what " they had learn'd from their Mother. The Hereticks on the contrary are Enemies to the Truth, De-
" ſerters of the true Creed, though they are begotten in the boſom of the Church, and being corrupted
" by their Impious Errors, they call themſelves Authors of their Sect". Optatus concludes from theſe Definitions, That Hereticks can have no Baptiſm nor valid Sacraments, but that there is not the ſame Reaſon for Schiſmaticks, becauſe they have preſerv'd the true Sacraments of the Church, though they are ſeparated from its Body. After this Digreſſion, he returns to his Subject, and undertakes to prove Hiſtorically, that the Authors of the Donatiſts are guilty of delivering up the Holy Books and making a Schiſm. " Tis now, ſays he, 60 Years and more ſince Africk was harraſs'd with a violent
" Perſecution, at which time you might have ſeen many Martyrs and Confeſſors; but there were alſo
" ſome Chriſtians who yielded in this Day of Tryal, and others who hid themſelves: To ſay nothing of " the Laity, Miniſters, Deacons or Prieſts, there were even Biſhops, thoſe that were the Heads and Chief " of the Clergy, who deliver'd up the Books of the Divine Law, with an aſtoniſhing Impiety; and to " preſerve for ſome Years this Mortal Life, expos'd themſelves to the loſs of Eternal Life. Donatus
" of Maſcula, Victor of Ruſiccadia, Marinus of Aquæ Tibilitanæ, Donatus of Calama, and Purpu-
" rius the Homicide of Limata, were of the Number of thoſe Biſhops, together with Menalius, who " fearing to be accus'd of Sacrificing, would not be preſent at the Aſſembly of his Brethren. Theſe
" Biſhops and ſome others, whom we ſhall ſhow to have been your Authors, aſſembled together af" ter the Perſecution, on the 12th. of May, in the City of Cirtha, in the Houſe of Urbanus Cariſius
" becauſe the Churches were not yet rebuilt. Secundus of Tigiſis having ask'd them, they confeſs'd to " him that they had deliver'd up the Holy Books; and when Purpurius objected the ſame thing to " Secundus, they all began to murmur; ſo that Secundus being afraid of himſelf, follow'd the Advice
" of his Nephew Secundus, who conſeil'd him to leave this Cauſe to the Judgment of God. The " other Biſhops, Victor Garbienſis, Felix of Rotarium, and Nabor of Centurio, were of the ſame
" opinion, and therefore, Secundus declar'd that all the Biſhops ſhould Sit in the Council. Sometime
" after the ſame Biſhops, Traditors and Murderers, ordain'd Majorinus Biſhop of Carthage, in whoſe
" Chair Parmenianus now Sits. Optatus having thus ſhown that the Ring-leaders of the Donatiſts
" were Traditors, Convicts them alſo of being the Authors of a Schiſm. In treating of this Separa" tion, 'tis certain, ſays he, that there was but one Church in Africk, as there is in all other Parts of " the World, before it was divided by the Biſhops who ordain'd Majorinus. It is only to be enquir'd,
" who thoſe were that remain'd united to the Body of the Church with all the World; and who
" they were that departed from it, who it was that ſate in a Chair wherein he had no Predeceſſor, who
" thoſe were that ſet up Altar againſt Altar, who he was that Ordain'd a Biſhop in the room of ano" ther Biſhop, yet alive. All the World knows that this was done at Carthage after the Ordination
" of Cæcilian, and that it was done at the Inſtigation of Lucilla, a great Lady: This Woman had " been reprov'd by the Arch-Deacon Cæcilian, even before the Perſecution begun, becauſe before re" ceiving the Spiritual Food and Drink, ſhe had kiſs'd the Bones of a Dead Man, who was not pub-
" lickly acknowledg'd for a Martyr, preferring thus the Carcaſs of a Dead Man before the Cup of Sal" vation. She retir'd in great Anger, and very much enrag'd at this Reprimand. The Perſecution " came on, which hinder'd the Biſhop from reducing her within the Bounds of her Duty. In the " mean time, a certain Deacon, nam'd Felix, being cited to appear before the Tyrant, and accus'd
" of writing a Defamatory Libel againſt him, hid himſelf in the Houſe of Menſurius the Biſhop:
" who being interrogated about this Fact, deny'd it publickly, and upon his Denial there came an " Order from Court, importing, That if Menſurius did not bring forth the Deacon Felix, he ſhould
" be ſent to Court. When he had received this Order, he was very much concerned: He had then in " the Church a great Number of Ornaments of Gold and Silver, which he durſt neither hide under " Ground, nor carry away with him; he truſted them with the moſt ancient Men of his Church,
" believing them Faithful, and made an Inventory of them, which he is ſaid to have deliver'd to an " old Woman, with this Charge, That if he did not return again, ſhe ſhould deliver it to him that " ſhould be choſen Biſhop in his Room. When he came to Court, he defended himſelf, and being " permitted to return to Carthage, he died by the Way. Liberty being reſtor'd to the Church of " Africk by an Edict of Maxentius, Botrus and Celeſius who were ambitious to be Ordain'd Biſhops
" of Carthage, call'd together the Neighbouring Biſhops about this City, without Summoning thoſe
" of Numidia to come to them: Yet Cæcilian was choſen by the unanimous Suffrages of the People,
" and Ordain'd by Felix of Aptungis, and ſo Botrus and Celeſius fail'd of their hopes. The Inventory
" of the Gold and Silver belonging to the Church, was deliver'd to Cæcilian; who ſends for the Old " Men that were entruſted with this Charge: who had already made it their own Property. When " they ſaw themſelves oblig'd to reſtore it, they alienated the People from the Communion of Cæci-
" lian. Thoſe who had intrigued for the See, did the ſame thing; and in ſhort, Lucilla, an impe-
" rious and powerful Woman, who could not bear a reproof, would not hold Communion with him,
" and hindred thoſe that belong'd to her from doing it. So the Schiſm was begun by the Paſſion of a " furious Woman, nouriſh'd by the Ambition of Botrus and Celeſius, and confirm'd by the Avarice of " the Old Men. Theſe three ſorts of Perſons invented Accuſations againſt Cæcilian, and endeavour'd
" to get his Ordination condemn'd. They fetcht Secundus Biſhop of Tigiſis to Carthage: thither they " came with the Biſhops Traditors whom we have mention'd, and were receiv'd by the Covetous,
" Ambitious and Furious, that we nam'd before, but not at all by the Catholicks, who had choſen
" Cæcilian. Not one of them durſt enter into the Church where he was with all the People. Cæcilian

St. Optatus. " took care to acquaint them, That if his Accuſers had any thing to ſay or prove againſt him, they " had nothing to do but appear. His Enemies could find nothing to blame in his Conduct. But " they accus'd him that Ordain'd Cæcilian, of being a Traditor, making this Infamy rebound upon " him. Cæcilian alſo told them, That if Felix had no Power to conferr Orders, as they pretended, " they might Ordain him anew, as if he had been but a Deacon ſtill: Purpurius then anſwer'd with " his ordinary Malice: Very well, let him come; Let us make as if we would lay hands upon him " to Ordain him Biſhop, and inſtead of doing that, let us put him under Penance. This Deſign being " diſcover'd, the Catholicks detain'd Cæcilian, and hindred him from expoſing himſelf to the fury of " his Enemies. They muſt then either force him away as a Criminal, or Communicate with him as " an Innocent Man: The whole Church was full of People, the Epiſcopal Chair was filled, the Altar " was in its place, that Altar on which the Pacifick Biſhops had offer'd, as St. Cyprian, Lucianus and " others. Nevertheleſs, they ſet up an Altar againſt this Altar, and made an Ordination againſt all " the Laws. Majorinus a Domeſtick of Lucilla, who had been Reader when Cæcilian was Deacon, " was Ordain'd by the Biſhops of Numidia, who had themſelves confeſs'd their Crimes, and Pardon'd " themſelves. 'Tis plain then that Majorinus withdrew from the Church, and that thoſe were the " Ring-leaders of the Donatiſts who ſeparated themſelves, and deliver'd up the Holy Books". After Optatus has thus prov'd that the Donatiſts were the Authors of the Schiſm which divided Africk, he ſhows by the Example of Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, that there is no Crime greater, or which deſerves a more ſevere Puniſhment than Schiſm: But not contenting himſelf with convicting the Donatiſts, he undertakes alſo to juſtifie Cæcilian; and proves that he was Innocent by the Judgment of the Council of Rome, which Condemn'd Donatus, and declar'd Cæcilian Innocent. He obſerves that the Ring-leaders of the Donatiſts had themſelves deſir'd Judges of Conſtantine, and that the Emperour had anſwer'd them in great Paſſion, Do ye deſire Judges of me, of me who am waiting for the Judgment of Heaven? He ſhows, That nevertheleſs, he gave them for Judges, Maternus Biſhop of Cologne Rheticius Biſhop of Autun, and Marinus Biſhop of Arles; which Judges came to Rome, and there held a Council with Miltiades, and Fifteen Italian Biſhops: That Donatus was there condemn'd upon the Confeſſion that he made of having re-baptiz'd and re-ordain'd the Biſhops which yielded in the time of Perſecution; That the Witneſſes which he had produc'd againſt Cæcilian having declar'd they had nothing to ſay againſt him, he was ſent back acquitted by the Sentence of all the Biſhops, and of Miltiades who concluded this Judgment: That the Donatiſts having appeal'd to the Emperour, he cry'd out aloud, O ſtrange Fury! They appeal from us, as if we had given a Pagan Sentence. That the Emperour detain'd Cæcilian at Breſſia by the Sollicitation of Filuminus a Partiſan of Donatus. That there were ſent into Africk two Biſhops, Eunomius and Olympus, to declare where the Catholick Church was; That being come to Carthage, they were hindred from doing it by the Seditious Party of Donatus; That theſe two Biſhops made Oath in favour of Cæcilian; That Donatus came firſt to Carthage and Cæcilian follow'd him, after he had been declar'd Innocent by many Judgments. There remain'd now nothing more for Optatus to do, but to Vindicate Felix of Aptungis, who Ordain'd Cæcilian, from the Calumny of being a Traditor, which he proves by the Information that Elianus the Pro-conſul had given about this Matter, who after a moſt ſtrict Enquiry into it, had declar'd him Innocent of this Crime.

The Second Book of Optatus is concerning the Church. There he ſuppoſes as an unconteſted Principle, That there is but one only Church, which Jeſus Chriſt calls his Spouſe and his Dove. This Principle being ſuppos'd, he proves that the Party of the Donatiſts were not the Catholick Church; becauſe from thence it would follow, that the Church had periſh'd in all other parts of the World, and was encloſed in a little Corner of Africk; which was contrary to the Signification of the Catholick Church, that ſignifies a Society ſpread over all the Earth. He adds for Confirmation of this Truth, That thoſe who ſhut up the Church within ſuch narrow bounds defeated the Promiſe of Jeſus Chriſt; that they ſtraitned the Extent of God's Mercy, and gave the Lye to the Holy Spirit who has ſpoken by the Prophets. After he has made uſe of this general Reaſon againſt the Donatiſts, he proves that the Signs of the True Church do not in the leaſt agree to them. The firſt of thoſe Signs is the Chair, that is, the Succeſſion of Biſhops. He ſays to Parmenianus, That he cannot be ignorant of this Sign of the True Church; " For you cannot deny, ſays he, but St. Peter, the Chief of the Apoſtles, eſta- " bliſh'd an Epiſcopal Chair at Rome; This Chair was one, that all others might preſerve Unity by " the Union they had with it; So that whoſoever ſet up a Chair againſt it, was a Schiſmatick and an " Offender. 'Twas then in this one Chair, which is the firſt Sign of the Church, that St. Peter firſt " ſate; to St. Peter ſucceeded St. Linus, and after him others till Damaſus, who is now our Collegue: " by whoſe means, all the Churches of the World are United with us in the ſame Communion, keeping " Correſpondence by Circular Letters. As to your Party, which would willingly be thought to be the " Church, enquire after the Original of your Chair. You tell us, That you are a Part of the Roman " Church, but this is a branch of your Error, which proceeds from the Root of Falſhood, and not " from the Stock of Truth. If Macrobius be ask'd in what Chair he Sits, can he ſay, That it is in the " Chair of St. Peter, which perhaps he never ſaw; for certainly he never went to the Sepulchre of the " Apoſtles. He is diſobedient to the Command of the Apoſtle, who would have us Communicate to " the Memory of the Saints; and the Relicks of the two Apoſtles, St. Peter and St. Paul are in the " Church of Rome. Tell me, I pray you, if ever he could enter there, if ever he could offer in the Place " where theſe Relicks are certainly kept. Macrobius, your Brother, muſt then confeſs, That he ſate " in the Place where Eucolpius held the See; and if we could ask Eucolpius, he muſt ſay, That he " ſucceeded to Boniface of Balli, and Boniface to one Victor Garbienſis, whom ye ſent from Africk. " This Victor is a Son without a Father, a Diſciple without a Maſter, a Succeſſor without a Predeceſſor,

" a Paſtor

" a Pastor without a Flock, a Bishop without a People. For we cannot call them a Flock or a People " who were so few, that they had not one of the Forty Churches at Rome to keep their Assemblies in, St. Optatus.
" and who were oblig'd to shut themselves up in a Cave without the City, to keep their Conventicle there". Optatus does not enlarge so much on the other Signs of the Church that are very obscure, but he insists particularly upon its Extent. " Wherefore, says he, would you Unchurch an infinite Number of " Christians that are in the East and the West; You are but a small Number of Rebels who have op- " pos'd all the Churches of the World, with which ye have no Communion: You are also convicted of " Falshood, by the Sacrifices which ye offer; for I believe that you do not omit the Solemn Prayer " that is made at these Sacrifices; I doubt not but you will say, That you offer Sacrifice for that " Church which is one, and scatter'd over all the Earth. Now this Prayer convicts you of a Lye, for " how can you offer Sacrifice for one only Church, since you have divided it into two? How can you " offer for the whole Church, since you are not within the Catholick Church?

Parmenianus objected to the Catholicks, That they had exercis'd Violence and Persecution against them, and concluded from thence that they could not be the true Church, because that ought never to be cruel, nor to feed it self with the Flesh and Blood of the Saints. Optatus answers him, That the Church had never Persecuted them, and that he could Name none of the Church that had done it. He retorts this Charge upon the Donatists, by observing that in the time of the Emperour Constantine the Church enjoy'd a profound Peace, and all its Members liv'd in wonderful Union; That then Pagans were forbidden to exercise their Sacrilegious Ceremonies, then the Devil groan'd in their Temples where he was shut up, and then the Donatists were banish'd into Foreign Countries, lest they should disturb the Peace of the Church: But no sooner was Julian declar'd Emperour, but they begg'd his leave to return into their own Country, which he granted them very willingly, knowing that they were most fit to trouble the Peace of the Church. He observes, That the same Edict by which he open'd the Pagan Temples, he also restor'd Liberty to them; That they had not so soon obtain'd it; but that they exercis'd horrible Violences in Africk. He accuses the Donatists of tearing the Members of the Church, of driving away the Bishops, of invading the Churches, of committing Murders, of killing two Deacons at the feet of the Altars, of rending Mens Garments, of dragging the Women, stealing the Children; and in fine, of violating every thing that was most Sacred. Your Bishops, says he, cause the Eucharist to be thrown to the Dogs, and presently the Tokens of God's Anger appear; for the Dogs being enrag'd, turn'd upon their Masters, and tore them as if they had been Thieves whom they never knew, the Justice of God making use of their Teeth to revenge this Sacrilege. They also caus'd a Bottle full of holy Oil to be thrown out at a Window, on purpose to break it: But though it was cast down from a very high place, yet being supported by Angels, it fell upon the Stones without breaking. He accuses also a Bishop of their Party nam'd Felix, of abusing a Virgin to whom himself had given the Veil, and of having afterwards depriv'd an ancient Catholick Bishop, 62 Years old, of his Bishoprick, and put him under Penance. Here he makes a Digression about the Vanity of the Donatists, who boasted themselves to be Holy and Innocent. Whence comes this Sanctity of yours, says he, which the Apostle St. John durst not attribute to himself, seeing he says, If we say that we have no Sin, we deceive our selves, and the truth is not in us? He that speaks after this manner, does prudently referr himself to the Mercy of God; for a Christian may desire Good, and endeavour to walk in the way of Salvation, but he cannot be perfect of himself: For though he does run, yet there will always remain something to be done by God to perfect him; and 'tis necessary that he should help a Man in his Weakness, for he is Perfection, and there was never any but Jesus Christ the Son of God who was perfect? all other Men are imperfect. It belongs to us to will and to run, but God only can give Perfection. Jesus Christ has not given us perfect Holiness, but has only promis'd it. Optatus afterwards returns to his Subject, and goes on to charge the Donatists with the Crimes and Sacrileges which they had committed, and accuses them of exorcising and washing the Walls of Churches, of breaking down the Altars, of throwing the Eucharist to Dogs, of making the People Swear by their Name, of shaving the Bishops, and putting them under Penance, of sparing neither Priests, Deacons, nor the Faithful, of reproaching the Innocent, and putting Christians against their will under Penance; and in fine, of doing an infinite number of things against Piety and Christian Charity.

In the Third Book, Optatus vindicates the Church from those Violences of which it was accus'd. In the first place, he says, That if some of those Violences were committed by Macarius's Order, the Predecessors of the Donatists, gave occasion to them, because their Seditious Behaviour, oblig'd the Governour to call for Aid, which they no sooner saw come to him, but they presently fled of themselves; and that none but those that were most obstinate had been Banished. But then he maintains, That the Church did not contribute to this Persecution in the least; and that there was nothing of all this done by Her Advice; that she neither wish'd for it, nor knew of it, nor contributed any thing towards it; but the Justice of God alone, had sent this Persecution upon the Donatists, to revenge the Dishonour they had done to the Waters of Baptism. Here Optatus makes a very obscure Digression concerning Baptism and the Church. And afterwards returning to his Subject, he says, That Paul and Macarius, were not sent by Constantine, to Persecute the Donatists, but to carry Alms; That Donatus being transported with Rage, demanded of them with unsupportable Pride, what the Emperour had in common with the Church: " That from that time he carried on a Design " of doing Injury to the Kings and Princes of the Earth, contrary to the Precept of St. Paul, who com- " mands us to pray for them, that we may lead a quiet Life; For, says Optatus, the State is not in the " Church, but the Church in the State; that is, in the Roman Empire. Thus St. Paul had reason to " say, That we must pray for Kings, even when they made Profession of Paganism: But how much " more reason have we to show respect to a Christian Prince, one that is Religious and Fears God, St Optatus. " and has ſent Alms to the Poor. Wherefore then was Donatus tranſported with Fury? Where" fore did he refuſe the Alms which the Emperour ſent? His Officers ſaid, That they were come to " diſtribute Alms in all the Provinces, to thoſe that would receive them; and Donatus told them,

" That he had written to all places, forbidding them to receive them. Does this look as if he took " Care of thoſe that are in Miſery, or would relieve the Neceſſities of the Poor? God hath ſaid, 'Tis I
" that make Rich and Poor. Can he not then give Riches to the Poor? Yes, but if he had given them
" to all the World, then ſinners had wanted the means of expiating their Faults; for 'tis written,
" That as Water quenches Fire, ſo does an Alms expiate Sin. This being ſo, What Judgment ſhould
" we give of him that would give to the Poor, and him that would hinder the giving? What would
" Donatus anſwer, if God ſhould ask him, O Biſhop, What do you think of Conſtantine? Do you
" take him for an Innocent Man, or a Sinner? If you believe him to be an Innocent Man, Why do
" ye not then receive the Preſents of an Innocent Man? And if you believe him to be a Sinner, Why " do ye not then permit him to give Alms, ſince 'tis for the Sinner that I have made the Poor?
Optatus adds, That Donatus had join'd with his Pride, a pitileſs Diſpoſition: That he would be conſider'd as the Prince and Sovereign of Carthage; That he exalted himſelf above the Emperour, tho' there is nothing above the Emperour, but God only who makes Kings; That he deſpis'd his Brethren, and would not receive their Oblations; That he made thoſe of his Party Swear by his Name, as if he had been God, and that he would have them carry his Name, inſtead of that of Jeſus Chriſt. In the following Part of this Diſcourſe, he proves, That the Donatiſts had not only brought upon themſelves Perſecution, by their Pride, and the Contempt they had teſtified of the Emperour; but alſo that 'twas they who had begun the War. That 'twas Donatus of Bagaïs, who had firſt gather'd together a Multitude of Seditious Perſons, whom he call'd Agnoſticks or Circumcellians, to hinder Paul and Macarius from diſtributing their Alms. Optatus, deſcribes the horrible Outrages of theſe deſperate Fellows, and ſhews, That the Souldiers who came only to put a ſtop to theſe Diſorders, being attack'd by theſe Madmen, were oblig'd to defend themſelves, and to beat them: That the Church nevertheleſs had no Hand in this, and that the Seditious could attribute it to none but themſelves. He proceeds further, and ſhews, That they did juſtly ſuffer thoſe Miſchiefs, becauſe they broke the Unity of the Church; That the Perſecution which they endured, was an Evil that was neceſſary for procuring the Good of Peace and Union; That this Proceeding againſt them, was Authoriz'd by the Examples of Moſes, who put to Death 3000 Men, for Worſhipping the Golden Calf; Of Phinehas, who kill'd Two Perſons for violating the Law of God in committing Adultery; and of Elias, who put to Death 450 Falſe Prophets. The Donatiſts anſwer'd to theſe Inſtances, That we muſt put a great Difference between the Spirit of the Old Teſtament, and that of the New; That Jeſus Chriſt had forbidden in the Goſpel, the uſe of the Sword, when St. Peter drew it to cut off Malchus's Ear. Optatus maintains to the contrary, That this Prohibition reſpected only the Time and Circumſtances of that Action of St. Peter; That Jeſus Chriſt was come to ſuffer, and not to defend himſelf; That if St. Peter had compaſs'd what he deſign'd, Mankind had not been deliver'd by the Death of the Meſſias: But as diſtruſting the Truth of this firſt Anſwer, which indeed is not very Solid, becauſe the Advice of Jeſus Chriſt, is general; he trys another Anſwer, and maintains, That Macarius did not uſe the Sword as St. Peter did, and that he was not the Author of any Perſecution like that of the Pagan Emperours; That he would only oblige Chriſtians to go all into the Church and Pray unto one and the ſame God in the Spirit of Peace and Unity; That thoſe who ſuffer'd on this occaſion were not Martyrs, ſince they had not Charity, without which, none can be crown'd; That this cannot paſs for a Perſecution againſt the Church, but for a juſt puniſhment of ſome Perſons that were refractary to the Church. He objects to the Donatiſts, their obliging ſome Catholicks to call themſelves ſtill Pagans, that they might re-baptize them. He obſerves, That they had ſpread about a Report when Paul and Macarius came into Africk; That thoſe two Officers were to ſet up an Image of the Emperour upon the Altar at the time of Offering Sacrifice, but there was nothing done like it; That even thoſe of their own Party who were preſent at the Sacrifices, had acknowledg'd that 'twas a Calumny, and that they ſaw nothing but the ordinary Ceremonies of the Church: In ſhort, That there was nothing chang'd, nothing diminiſh'd, or added to the Sacrifice. He returns again to Macarius, and propoſes to himſelf this Objection: If the Catholicks had not approv'd the Action of Macarius, they ſhould have excommunicated him, which they did not do, and therefore are guilty of his Crime. He anſwers, That Macarius being no Biſhop, they did not Communicate with him, as one Biſhop does with other Biſhops, and by conſequence the Clergy could not be profan'd by his Communion, becauſe a Lay-man has no right to Preach or to Teach, whereas a Biſhop ſpeaks to the People with Authority, beginning his Diſcourſe, and ending it always with the Name of God. The Donatiſts, add, That Macarius ought not ſo much as to Communicate with Lay-men. Optatus, anſwers, That being a Miniſter of the Will of God, and diſcharging the Office of a Judge, who has Secular Authority in his Hand, the Church ought not to Excommunicate him; That moreover what he had done, might be defended by the Examples of Moſes and Phinehas; but in ſhort, That tho' we ſhould confeſs that Macarius was Guilty, yet the Church could not Excommunicate him who was never accus'd; That there was no Accuſer found, neither had he confeſs'd his Crime, and therefore the Eccleſiaſtical Judges could not condemn him, ſince it was forbidden to one and the ſame Perſon to be both Accuſer and Judge at the ſame time.

In the Fourth Book, he refutes the Donatiſts for ſaying that the Catholicks were ſuch Sinners, that we ſhould ſhun their Sacrifices, as it is ſaid in Iſaiah, ch. 66. and that we ſhould not receive their Unction, as it is in Pſal. 140. Optatus, after he has given this Caution in his Introduction, that Men ought not mutually to condemn one another, but to wait for the Judgment of God; and after having having exhorted them to receive the Title of Brethren, which the Catholicks are willing to beſtow upon them, he proves that thoſe Accuſations which they draw up againſt the Church, are rather applicable to themſelves, than to the Catholicks. For proof of this, he ſets down all the Characters of a wicked Man, which are given in Pſal. 49. God hath ſaid unto the wicked, Why do they preach my Precepts? Why do they open their Mouth to ſpeak of my Law? Ye that hate Diſcipline, and have caſt my Words behind you? You ſit and ſpeak againſt your Brother. If you ſee a Thief, you run along with him, and have made your ſelf the Companion of Adulterers. He ſhews, That the Donatiſts cannot excuſe themſelves from theſe Crimes; that they hate Diſcipline, ſince they ſhun Peace, ſince they re-baptize, and rob the Biſhops of their Prieſthood: That they Preach in their Pulpits againſt their Brethren; becauſe under pretence of preaching the Goſpel they ſpeak injurious Words againſt Catholicks, and inſpire thoſe with hatred againſt them who hear their Sermons; That they endeavour to perſwade them that according to the Apoſtolical Injunction, they ſhould ſhun them, they ſhould not Salute them, nor wiſh them good Morrow, tho' all this is to be underſtood only of Hereticks, whoſe Diſcourſe creeps like a Serpent; that they joyn themſelves with Thieves, ſince they correſpond with the Devil to extirpate one part of the Flock of Jeſus Chriſt. He deſcribes this after a very pleaſant manner. "All "Men, ſays he, that come into the World, tho' they be born of Chriſtian Parents, are fill'd with an "unclean Spirit, which muſt be driven away by Baptiſm: This is done by the Exorciſm which "drives away this Spirit, and makes it fly into remote places. After this, the Heart of Man becomes "a moſt pure Habitation. God enters and dwells there, according to that of the Apoſtle, We are "the Temple of God. When therefore ye re-baptize Men, and exorciſe them anew, and when ye "ſay, O accurs'd come forth of this Man, 'tis to God that ye ſpeak after this manner, you drive "him diſgracefully out of this Man, and the Devil re-enters into his Heart. This place of Optatus is very expreſs for proving Original Sin, and the Antiquity of Exorciſms. At laſt, Optatus ſhows. That the Donatiſts render themſelves Companions of Adulterers, becauſe they ſeparate from the Church, which is the only lawful Spouſe of Jeſus Chriſt, to unite themſelves with Adulterers. He comes afterwards to the ſecond Paſſage taken out of Pſal. 140. Let not the Oyl of the wicked anoint my Head; and he obſerves, That this ſhould only be applied to Jeſus Chriſt, and that it is a Prayer, and not a Precept; a Wiſh, and not a Command. Then he explains alſo two other Paſſages which Parmenianus had quoted againſt the Catholicks, and ſhews, that the Firſt is to be underſtood of Adulterers or Hereticks; and the Second, of Jews, and that neither the one nor the other is applicable to Catholicks.

St Optatus.

In the Fifth Book, Optatus proves, That the Donatiſts commit a great Crime, in reiterating Baptiſm, which Jeſus Chriſt has commanded to be given but once only. He approves of the Commendations which Parmenianus has given this Sacrament, by ſaying, That it is the Life of Vertue, the Death of Crimes, the Immortal Birth, the means of obtaining the Kingdom of Heaven, the Port of Innocence, and the Shipwrack of Sins. But he adds, That 'tis not he who gives this Sacrament of Baptiſm, that conferrs theſe Graces, but the Faith of him that receives it and the Virtue of the Trinity; and conſequently, that Baptiſm is not to be reiterated, which is adminiſtred in the Name of the Trinity. He has alſo here a moſt Remarkable Reflection about the Rule which we ſhould Conſult in all Eccleſiaſtical Controverſies. "We ask, ſays he, if it be lawful to repeat Baptiſm "given in the Name of the Trinity? Ye maintain, That it is lawful; we ſay, That it is forbidden. "The People are in ſuſpence, between your affirming and our denying the ſame thing, and they "can neither believe you nor us, for we are all fallible Men: Let us then ſearch after Judges in this "Caſe. But where are they to be found? If they be Chriſtians, they are either of your Party or "ours, and by conſequence cannot be Judges of our Difference. We muſt then enquire after a Judge "out of Chriſtendom. But then if he be a Pagan, he underſtands not our Myſteries; if he be a "Jew, he is an Enemy to the Baptiſm of Chriſtians. There cannot therefore be found any Judge "upon Earth, but we muſt ſeek for one in Heaven. But why ſhould we have recourſe to Heaven, "ſince we have the Teſtament of our Father upon Earth? Let us ſearch after his Will in the Goſpel, "which will inform us, that he who has been once waſh'd, needs not to be waſh'd again. Where-"fore, adds he, we do not re-baptize thoſe who have been baptiz'd, when they return again to us. He proves alſo, That it ought not to be done, becauſe there is but one Faith, one Jeſus Chriſt, and one Sacrament of Baptiſm: That there are three Things to be conſider'd in this Sacrament, the Trinity, the Faith of him that receives it, and the Perſon that adminiſters it: That the Trinity is the firſt Thing of abſolute neceſſity, without which there can be no Sacrament at all; That the Faith of him that receives the Sacrament, is the ſecond Thing, which is no leſs neceſſary, becauſe it ought always to be the ſame; but then there is not the ſame Neceſſity that the Miniſter ſhould be Faithful and Juſt, becauſe the Miniſters are chang'd every day, and it is Jeſus Chriſt who baptizes, and the Miniſter ought not to attribute to himſelf the Effect of the Sacrament which is owing to God only; and in ſhort, becauſe the Sacraments are Holy, and do Sanctify by themſelves, tho' the Holineſs of the Miniſter do not contribute to it. Optatus proves this Truth by many Reaſons, and many Teſtimonies. He obſerves by the bye, That thoſe who had been baptiz'd by John, before Jeſus Chriſt inſtituted Baptiſm, were not re-baptiz'd; but thoſe who were baptiz'd, after Jeſus Chriſt had inſtituted Baptiſm, have been re-baptiz'd. At laſt, he endeavours to prove, That the Faith of him that receives Baptiſm, is neceſſary to the validity of this Sacrament, which muſt be underſtood of Adult Perſons only.

The Sixth Book is written againſt the Impieties and Sacrileges of the Donatiſts, who had broken, cut in pieces, raz'd, and overturn'd the Altars of the Catholicks; Thoſe Altars, ſays Optatus, which have born the Offerings of the People, and the Members of Jeſus Chriſt, upon which the Almighty God

St Optatus. God has been invok'd, upon which the Holy Spirit has deſcended, where the Faithful have receiv'd the earneſt of eternal Salvation, the Support of their Faith, and the Hopes of a bleſſed Reſurrection; thoſe Altars upon which we are forbidden to offer any other Offerings, but thoſe of Peace. For what is the Altar, but the place where the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt are laid? "What hath Jeſus Chriſt "done to you, ſays he further to the Donatiſts, that you ſhould deſtroy the Altars on which he reſts "at certain times? Why do ye break the Sacred Tables where Jeſus Chriſt makes his abode? Ye have "imitated the Crime of the Jews, for as they put Jeſus Chriſt to Death upon the Croſs, ſo ye have "beaten him upon theſe Altars. If ye believ'd that the Euchariſt of the Catholicks is Sacrilegious, yet "at leaſt ye ſhould have ſome reſpect to the former Offerings that your ſelves have made upon theſe "Altars. Upon this occaſion, Optatus puts a very pleaſant Objection to them: All the Faithful "know, ſays he, that Linen Clothes are laid upon the Altars, for the Celebration of the Holy My-"ſteries. The Euchariſt does not touch the Wood of the Altar, but only the Linen Clothes: Why "then do ye break? Why do ye ſcrape? Why do ye burn the Wood of the Altar? If the Impurity "can paſs through the Linen, Why cannot it penetrate the Wood, nay, and the Ground alſo? If there-"fore ye ſcrape off ſomething from the Altars becauſe they are impure, I adviſe you alſo to dig into "the Ground, and there to make a great Ditch, that ye may offer in a moſt pure Place: But take "heed that ye do not dig down to Hell, where ye will find your Maſters, Corah, Dathan and Abiram." So pleaſantly does Optatus ridicule the folly of the Donatiſts. But from this Raillery, he quickly paſſes to moſt bloody Accuſations. "Ye have alſo redoubled your Sacrileges in breaking the Chalices, "which carried the Bloody of Jeſus Chriſt; ye have melted them down to make Ingots of Gold or "Silver, which you have Sold in the Markets to every one indifferently, that offer'd to buy them: "Sacrilegious Perſons as you are, you have not ſhown the leaſt reſpect to thoſe Chalices, wherein "you your ſelves have offer'd. Perhaps, infamous Women bought them for their own uſe. Perhaps, "the Pagans took them to make Veſſels wherewith they might offer Incenſe to their Idols. O enor-"mous Crime! O unheard-of Impiety!" This Declamation of Optatus, clearly ſhews, what is the Reverence that we ought to pay to the Sacrament of the Euchariſt, and evidently proves, that it was not conſider'd merely as Bread and Wine, but that it was believ'd to be the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt. The Donatiſts anſwer'd to theſe Accuſations, That thoſe Veſſels having been touch'd by polluted Perſons, were thereby become unclean, as 'tis ſaid by the Prophet Haggai, That which is touch'd by an impure Man, becomes unclean: From whence they concluded, that they had reaſon to make no further uſe of them, but to conſider them as common and ordinary Veſſels. [As if a belief that the Euchariſt was inſtituted for a Remembrance of the Death of Chriſt, and of the Benefits which we receive thereby, had not been ſufficient to have commanded Reverence to thoſe Inſtruments with which it was perform'd.] Optatus anſwers them, by ſhewing, That the Catholicks were not defil'd with any Crime; That they had not Sacrific'd to Idols; That no ſuch Accuſation could be prov'd againſt them; That the only thing that could render them odious to the Donatiſts, was their Love of Peace, and their endeavours after Union; That they are united by Communion with all the Churches of the World, and that they cannot be accus'd of being defil'd; but ſuppoſing that even the Catholicks were unclean, yet the Veſſels which they touch'd at the Invocation of the Name of God, would not be ſo, becauſe that Sacred Name, Sanctifies even that which is unclean: That the touch of an unclean Perſon, has leſs Power to render a Veſſel impure, than the Invocation of God has to purify it, ſince 'tis the Invocation, and not the Touch that Sanctifies it.

The Second Accuſation that Optatus makes againſt the Donatiſts, is their putting under Penance the Virgins Conſecrated to God, and making them leave off the Signs of their former Profeſſion, and forcing them to deſire a New one, and doing violence unto them. In this place, he ſpeaks of a little Mitre of Cloth, which they put upon their Heads, and of the Veil wherewith they cover'd them, and ſays, That thoſe Ornaments were Signs that they had profeſs'd Virginity, and that the Donatiſts, by taking them away from thoſe Virgins to put them under Penance, had given occaſion to many Perſons to Raviſh and Marry them. He adds, that the Donatiſts had carried away by force the Ornaments of Churches, and the Holy Books, and that they had waſh'd the Veſtments, the Walls and the Floors of the Churches with Salt-Water. He laughs at their folly, and asks them, Why they waſh'd the Veſtments, and did not alſo waſh the Books of the Goſpel? Why they waſh'd the Walls, which are only look'd upon? And why they did not alſo waſh the Pavement of the Streets, and how they would make uſe of that Water wherewith the Catholicks had waſh'd themſelves? At laſt, he accuſes them of invading the Cœmeteries, and hindring the Interment of the Catholicks. "Wherefore do you abuſe the Dead, ſays he to them, that you may terrify the Living? Why do "you deny them Burial? If you have any Differences with your Brother while he is alive, yet "Death ſhould put an End to them all. Why do you inſult over him after Death? Why do you "refuſe him Burial? Why do you quarrel even with the Dead? But, ſays he, if you could hinder "his Body from being Interr'd among other Chriſtians, yet you cannot ſeparate his Soul from the Com-"pany of thoſe Holy Souls that are with Jeſus Chriſt." At laſt, Optatus ſays, That the Donatiſts were ſo extravagantly wicked, that they corrupted all thoſe that came over to their Party: "So thoſe "that were Patient, ſays he, by going over to you, become Furious of the ſudden; thoſe that were "Faithful, become Perfidious; thoſe that were Peaceable, become Quarrelſome; their Simplicity, is "chang'd into Cheating; their Modeſty, into Impudence; their Humility, into Pride. Thoſe who "are gone over to your Party, ſollicite others to come after them, and accuſe of Sloth and Stupi-"dity, all thoſe that are yet in the Boſom of the Church, they lay Traps for them, and make them "to fall into the ſame precipice with themſelves.

The

The laſt Book which is commonly attributed to Optatus, is a Recapitulation of ſome Points that have been handled in other places; particularly, he refutes the Objection of the Donatiſts, who ſay, That they cannot re-unite themſelves to the Catholicks, becauſe they are the Sons and Succeſſors of Traditors. The Author of this Book, extenuates as much as he can the Enormity of this Crime, and ſhows, that tho' it were much greater, and that thoſe to whom the Catholick Biſhops ſucceed were guilty of it, yet they have no ſhare in that Guilt, neither can it be imputed to them, nor alledg'd againſt them as a juſt Cauſe of Separation. He ſhews, that we ought ſometimes to ſuffer ſinners in the Church, and to diſſemble the Sins of our Brethren for the good of Peace. He obſerves, That there is no Man free from Sin; and that if any one were ſo, yet he ought not to ſeparate from his Brethren, though they were Sinners: That the Apoſtles did not ſeparate from the Communion of St. Peter after his Sin; but on the contrary the Keys were given him, that he being a Sinner, might open the Gates of Heaven to the Innocent, and teach thoſe that are Innocent, that they ſhould not ſhut them againſt Sinners. Beſides theſe, there are many other Repetitions of what had been ſaid by Optatus concerning Macarius, and the Perſecution that he rais'd againſt the Donatiſts. St. Optatus.

Optatus at the End of his Books, had plac'd many authentick Inſtruments to juſtifie the Matters of Fact which he had propos'd againſt the Donatiſts; we have none of thoſe which Optatus plac'd there extant, but many other Monuments concerning the Hiſtory of the Donatiſts have been added to his Books.

The Firſt is a part of the Acts of the Conference between the Catholick Biſhops and the Donatiſts, held at Carthage by the Order of the Emperour Honorius, in the Year 411, which belongs to another Century.

The Second, is part of the Verbal Proceſs made by Zenophilus, who had been Conſul, on the 30th of December in the Year 320, by which it appears, That Silvanus who ordain'd Majorinus, had given up the Holy Books to the Heathens: Zenophilus there examines a Grammarian nam'd Victor, a Deacon nam'd Caſtus, and a Sub-Deacon call'd Creſcentianus, and makes them confeſs, That Silvanus had deliver'd up the Ornaments of the Church and the Holy Books, according to the Depoſition of Nundinarius the Deacon, who was preſent. He cauſes alſo the Verbal Proceſs made in the Year 363. to be read by Munatius Felix, Judge of the Colony of Cirtha, who further confirm'd the Depoſition of Nundinarius. The Letters written to Silvanus by the Biſhops of his own Party are ſet down, wherein they reprehend him for his outrageous manner of treating his Deacon Nundinarius. He is accus'd alſo of making a Simonaical Ordination, of appropriating to his one uſe the Alms that were given for the Poor, and of being ordain'd himſelf by the Sollicitation of ſome Country Fellows. There are many things very remarkable in this Act: For there one may ſee, That at the Beginning of the 3d. Age of the Church, they us'd Chalices of Silver and Gold, Cups, Lamps and Candleſticks of Silver and Copper; That they kept in the Church Garments for the Poor; That the Readers, who were very numerous, had the Holy Books; That the Chriſtians had a Library near the Church, where they put their Books.

The Third Record, is alſo part of a Verbal Proceſs concerning the Juſtification of Felix of Aptungis, made by Ælianus the Proconſul in the Year 314, in the Month of February, as appears by St. Auguſtin: There he examines one nam'd Ingentius, and Convicts him of making an Addition to a Letter of Cæcilian, that he might falſly accuſe Felix of being a Traditor.

The Fourth, is a Letter of the Emperour Conſtantine to Ablabius; wherein he orders him to ſend Cæcilian to Arles, with ſome Biſhops of his Party, as well as ſome of his Accuſers, that he might receive Judgment from the Council which was to aſſemble there.

The Fifth, is a Letter from the Council of Arles, of which we have ſpoken in its place.

The Sixth, is the Letter which Conſtantine wrote againſt the Donatiſts, when they appeal'd to his Judgment, after they had been condemn'd in the Council of Arles.

The Seventh, is another Letter of the ſame Emperour, wherein he acquaints the Biſhops of Donatus's Party, That he once deſign'd to ſend Judges into Africk, to determine their Differences with Cæcilian; but that he judg'd it more proper to make him come before himſelf.

The Eighth, is a 4th. Letter of the ſame Emperour, written to Celſus; wherein he acquaints him, That he will quickly come into Africk to decide the Differences between Donatus and Cæcilian himſelf.

The Ninth, is a 5th. Letter of Conſtantine, where in he gives the Donatiſt Biſhops leave to return into Africk.

The Tenth, is a 6th. Letter of this Emperour about the Cauſe of the Donatiſts, addreſs'd to the Catholicks of Africk. He tells them, That he had done all that lay in his Power to re-eſtabliſh Peace, but ſince the Obſtinacy of ſome Men had fruſtrated his good Intentions, they muſt now wait upon God only for the Remedy of this Miſchief, and that till it pleas'd the Divine Mercy to remedy it, they muſt proceed with Moderation, and bear with Patience the Inſolence of the Enemies of the Church: That they muſt not render Evil for Evil, ſince Vengeance is reſerv'd to God only, and that by ſuffering patiently the Fury of theſe Inſolent Men, they ſhould certainly merit the Glory of Martyrdom. For, ſays he, Is not this to Fight and Conquer for God, to bear with Patience the Outrages and Injuries of the Enemies of God's People? At laſt he aſſures the Catholicks, That if they obſerve this Method, they will quickly ſee their Enemies Party weakned, and that God will give Grace to many to acknowledge their Error and do Penance.

The following Letter is a further Indication of the Meekneſs of this Emperour, and the Moderation of the Catholicks. The Donatiſts had invaded the Church which Conſtantine had caus'd to be built in Conſtantina a City of Numidia; which the Catholicks demanded back again, but they refus'd it.

The

St Optatus. The Catholicks to avoid all further Contention, pray'd the Emperour to give them a Place in the Dependances of his Demeſnes thereabouts, where they might Build another Church: To which Conſtantine anſwer'd, That he did not only grant their Deſire, but he had alſo written to the Receiver of his Revenues to furniſh them with ſo much Money as was neceſſary for the Building of this Church. In this Letter he praiſes the Moderation of the Catholicks, and condemns the Obſtinacy of the Donatiſts; and ordains, That the Laws which he had made for Exemption of the Clergy from all Publick Taxes, ſhould be put in Execution.

The laſt of theſe Records, which are added to the Books of Optatus, is a Fragment of the Acts of the Paſſion of the Saints Dativus, Saturnius, Felix, Ampelius, and of ſome other African Martyrs, made in the time of Anulinus, and written by a Donatiſt. This Piece contains ſome part of the Calumnies of the Donatiſts againſt Menſurius and Cæcilian. The Author of theſe Acts accuſes them of hindring the Faithful from carrying Food to the Chriſtians that were in Priſon, and of beating them back with blows of Whips and Cudgels: He adds, That theſe Martyrs would never communicate with Menſurius, nor Cæcilian, becauſe they had deliver'd up the Holy Books to the Heathens, and that the Church of Chriſt being Holy, ought not to hold Communion with thoſe that are defil'd with a Crime of this heinous Nature. At laſt, he ſays, That thoſe Martyrs who wanted Food by the Cruelty of Menſurius and Cæcilian, died of Famine in Priſon, and went to Heaven there to receive the Crown of Martyrdom.

The Stile of Optatus's Books is noble, vehement and cloſe, but not enough Polite or Neat. He preſſes briskly upon thoſe againſt whom he Diſputes, and deſcribes very ſenſibly the Tranſactions which he relates, and explains the Paſſages which he produces with a great deal of Wit. He gives his Thoughts a fine and delicate turn, his Expreſſions ſignifie very perfectly what he means to ſay; his Reaſonings are ſubtile, and his Relations pleaſant. In a word, It appears that the Author of this little Book, was Maſter of much Learning and Wit. The Doctrine which he teaches is, and always will be of much uſe to the Church: for there is not the ſame Reaſon of thoſe Queſtions which concern the Truth of the Church, as of thoſe that concern only ſome particular Doctrines. Theſe continue only ſo long as the Sect ſubſiſts which oppoſes theſe Doctrines; and the Books which treat of them become almoſt uſeleſs whenever the Hereſie is extinct. But all Hereſies, all Schiſms having one common Principle, of oppoſing the Church, the Books which are written in its Defence, are contrary to all Hereſies, and will be uſeful as long as there ſhall be any Hereticks in the World whoſoever they be. The Books of Optatus teach us alſo a great many very remarkable particulars concerning the Hiſtory of the Donatiſts: We find in them many Points of Doctrine, and we may obſerve many things which clear up the ancient Diſcipline. He ſays, That all Chriſtians have but one Faith and one Creed. He explains the chief Myſteries in a moſt Orthodox manner. He ſhows, That there neither is, nor can be any more but one Catholick Church ſpread over all the Earth, that it cannot be ſhut up in a ſmall Part of the World: That this Church is made up of Biſhops, Prieſts, Deacons, Miniſters, and thoſe that are meerly the Faithful. He obſerves, That the Biſhops are above the Prieſts, as the Prieſts are above the Deacons: He conſiders the Church of Rome as the chief Church in the World, and as the Centre of Unity, becauſe of St. Peter, who was the Head of the Apoſtles: He ſays, That Man by Nature is Weak and Imperfect, and therefore has need of the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt to make him Perfect; That we are all Born in Sin, and that Baptiſm is neceſſary to obtain Remiſſion of it; That when the Sacrament is given in the Name of the Trinity, it ought not to be reiterated: and yet he ſeems to think that we ought to re-baptize thoſe who were baptiz'd by Hereticks; but he does not make the ſame determination for thoſe who were baptiz'd by Schiſmaticks. He mentions Exorciſm with Commendation, as a neceſſary Ceremony at Baptiſm; He ſpeaks of Chriſm alſo as a Holy Thing, and of the Unction that was us'd at Baptiſm. He expreſſes himſelf in ſo plain terms about the Real Preſence of the Body and Blood of Chriſt in the Euchariſt, and about the Adoration that's due to this Holy Sacrament, that nothing can be deſir'd more expreſs. He obſerves many Ceremonies at the Celebration of the Euchariſt, to which he gives the Name of a Sacrifice; and it appears by what he ſays of it, That in his time they offer'd Sacrifice for the whole Catholick Church, and then they recited the Lord's-Prayer; That the Celebration of it was upon an Altar of Wood, which was adorn'd and cover'd with a Linen-Cloth for the greater reſpect; That they then uſed Chalices of Gold and Silver, and alſo had Ornaments. He ſays, That the Church has Judges; That ſhe puniſhes Crimes; That ſhe exacts Penances of thoſe that confeſs their Sins, or are convicted of them. He praiſes Virginity, and yet he ſays, That there is no obligation to it upon thoſe that have not made a Vow. He obſerves, That in his time, this Vow was made Solemnly by the Virgins who dedicated themſelves to God; and that they carried a ſmall covering upon their Head, which was the Sign of the Vow they had made. He teſtifies ſufficiently the reſpect that was paid in his time for the Relicks of the Saints, when he ſpeaks of the Sepulchre of St. Peter and St. Paul, and ſpeaking of Lucilla, he blames thoſe that honour'd the Relicks of falſe Martyrs, which were not own'd by the Church.

The only Error that can be obſerv'd in the Books of Optatus is, That he maintains that thoſe who had been baptiz'd with John's Baptiſm, before the Inſtitution of Chriſt's Baptiſm, were not re-baptiz'd [See Acts xix. 1--5.] We may add to this, what he ſays of reiterating the Baptiſm of Hereticks, and perhaps alſo what he propoſes about the Power of Free will, to which he ſeems to give the Power of willing and beginning a Good Action, and alſo of advancing in the Way of Salvation, without the help of the Grace of Chriſt, but theſe Errors are light and pardonable. One may alſo reprehend in his Book the Allegorical way in which he explains many Paſſages of Holy Scripture, by giving them a ſence very remote from that which they naturally have, and by applying them to thoſe things with which they have no affinity. This Fault which would be tolerable in a Preacher, ſeems not to be pardonable pardonable in an Author who writes a Treatise of Controversie, wherein all Proofs should be solid and convincing. But Optatus had to do with such Enemies as us'd the same way, who perverted Passages of Scripture, to Calumniate the Church, and commend their own Sect. St. Optatus.

The Text of Optatus is much corrupted in many places. It was printed at Mentz, in the Year 1549. with many Faults. Afterwards Balduinus a Learned Civilian, publish'd it at Paris, in 1563. revised by a Manuscript which was communicated to him by Espencæus, and corrected in many places. He prefixes to it a large Preface against Calvin, wherein he refutes the Conclusion that this Heretick had drawn from the History of Optatus, That Princes were lawful Judges in Matters of Religion, and at the same time he discovers a great many stupid Mistakes and gross Errors that he had propos'd. He thought it not proper to prefix this Preface to the Second Edition of Optatus, which he caus'd to be printed at Paris in 1569, together with Victor Uticensis, after he had revis'd and corrected it by a Manuscript. 'Twas by this Edition that Commelinus made his in the Year 1599. The Annotations of this famous Civilian upon Optatus, are most learned and curious, and they perfectly clear the History of the Donatists; but they are so long, that they may rather pass for a Commentary than for Notes. In 1631. Albaspinæus caus'd the Books of Optatus to be printed in One Volume in Folio, with short Notes, and large Observations, which he added to the Annotations of Balduinus, and some Notes of an unknown Author. He added the Records of which we have spoken already, together with the History of the Conference of Carthage, publish'd by Balduinus, and the excellent Observations which he made in French and Latin about the Discipline of the Church. In the same Year 1631. Meric Casaubon printed in a little Volume the Text of Optatus at London, with most Judicious Critical Notes. At last, Philippus Priorius took care to make a new Impression of this Author at Paris by the Widow of Dupuis. In 1679, they put in this Edition the Prefaces of Balduinus, the Notes of Albaspinæus, Casaubon and Barthius, and those of the unknown Author: Priorius also added some, which he put before the others, though they do not deserve such an honourable place. After this follow'd the Commentary of Balduinus, and the Observations of Albaspinæus upon Optatus, the Conference of Carthage, and the other pieces of which we have spoken. The History of the Conference of Carthage, written by Balduinus, is the last Discourse in this Volume, which has some affinity with the Books of Optatus. After so many Editions and Commentaries, one would think that this Author were become most correct and plain: and yet 'tis not so, for the Text is still very much corrupted; there are many places that still want to be clear'd up and restor'd. The Notes of Balduinus do indeed enlighten the History; but he is mistaken in many passages of it, as Valesius has plainly prov'd in his learned Dissertation of the Schism of the Donatists. The Notes and Observations of Albaspinæus explain some points of Discipline, but they are not always just. Those of Meric Casaubon, are the best for understanding of the Text; but those of Barthius and others, are not very valuable: The learned Rigaltius, after he had publish'd Tertullian, Minutius and St. Cyprian, design'd to publish Optatus: And it may be presum'd, that as he was a very able Critick, very well vers'd in the African Antiquities, and in the Knowledge of Manuscripts, he would have made considerable Corrections, and restor'd the Text of Optatus in many places: But he dyed before he had undertaken this Work. I shall be able perhaps to undertake it, and to publish the Text of Optatus revis'd by many Manuscripts, more correct than any hitherto published.

ACACIUS of Cæsarea.

Acacius of Cæsarea.

ACACIUS Sirnam'd One-Ey'd, because he look'd a squint, Succeeded in the Year 338. to his Master Eusebius Bishop of Cæsarea in Palæstine. He joyn'd himself to the Eusebians, and came to Sardica with them: He was one of those against whom the Council of the Western Bishops, that was held in that City, pronounc'd the Sentence of Deposition. Being return'd into the East, he had some Differences with Cyril of Jerusalem, and in hatred of this Saint, he separated himself from the Semi-Arians and joyn'd with the Anomæans, whom he defended stoutly at the Councils of Seleucia and Constantinople; but he quickly repented of taking their part, and having got Meletius Ordain'd, and many other Bishops, whose Doctrine was Catholick, he re-united himself to them, and sign'd the Creed of the Nicene Council in the Council of the Eastern Bishops that was held at Antioch, under the Reign of Jovian. He dyed towards the Year 366. He compos'd many Books before he was Bishop, and wrote a Book against Marcellus of Ancyra, a Fragment whereof is quoted by Epiphanius in Hæres. 72. Some time after he was Bishop, he wrote the Life of Eusebius his Predecessor and Master as Socrates testifies, Ch. 4. B. II. of his History. St. Jerom says, That he wrote seventeen Volumes of Commentaries upon Scripture, Seven Volumes about several Questions, and many other Treatises upon different Subjects. This Author had much Wit and Learning, but he several times chang'd his Opinion and Language as he was mov'd by Interest or Passion.

PHOTINUS.

Photinus.

PHOTINUS Biſhop of Sirmium, was originally of Galatia. When he was Deacon and Diſciple of Marcellus of Ancyra, he follow'd ſome of his Errors: He did not diſtinguiſh the Perſon of the Word from the Perſon of the Father, and ſaid, That we ought not to give him the Name or Title of the Son of God, before he was born of Mary [a]: He had hardly diſcover'd his Error [b], but it was condemn'd by the Biſhops of the Eaſt, in a Council held at Antioch in the Year 345, and by the Biſhops of the Weſt in the Council of Milan in 346. Theſe laſt aſſembled two Years after at Sirmium to depoſe him, but they could not compaſs their Deſign, becauſe of the Oppoſition that was made by the People of that City, and therefore they were contented to draw up a Sentence againſt him, and to write of it to the Biſhops of the Eaſt: But at laſt, the Eaſtern Biſhops being aſſembled at Sirmium in the Year 351, when the Emperour Conſtantius was Maſter of this City, after the Defeat of Vetranio----they depoſed Photinus, and procur'd his Baniſhment. He dyed in Galatia the place of his Exile, under the Reign of Valentinian and Valens, towards the Year 376. This Heretick was a great Maſter of Wit and Eloquence, was acute and ſubtle in his Reaſonings, and led an unblameable Life. He wrote many Books, but the chief of them were his Treatiſe againſt the Gentiles, and his Books addreſs'd to the Emperour Valentinian. St. Epiphanius relates in Hæreſ. 71. ſome Extracts of the Conference he held with Marcellus of Ancyra, in the Council of Sirmium; and we have nothing elſe of his. Vincentius Lirinenſis aſſures us, That he had much Wit, Learning and Eloquence, and that he ſpoke Greek and Latin equally well, as may be ſeen, ſays he, in his Works, whereof he wrote part in Greek, and part in Latin.

[a] He did not diſtinguiſh, &c.] After this manner St. Athanaſius in his Second Apology, in his Book of Councils, and St. Epiphanius in Hæreſ. 51. explain the Error of Photinus. He is commonly accus'd of renewing the Errors of Paulus Samoſatenus and Ebion; but though he ſpeaks like them, yet he was not wholly of their Opinion. For he did not believe with Ebion and Paulus Samoſatenus, That Jeſus Chriſt was a mere Man; but he ſaid, That the Son of God was born of Mary, becauſe he did not believe that he had the Title of the Son of God, before he was born of the Virgin. He comes nearer to the Error of Sabellius, becauſe he did not diſtinguiſh the Word, before he was born of Mary.

[b] He had hardly diſcover'd his Error.] Some ſay, that he begun to publiſh it under the Reign of Conſtantine, which they ground upon the Authority of Severus Sulpitius. But Socrates, B. II. Ch. 18. and St. Hilary in his Book of Fragments, teſtifie, That the Error of Photinus was not known till a little while before the Council of Antioch in the Year 345. All that we have ſaid of the Hiſtory of Photinus, is taken out of the Fragments of St. Hilary, and what we have obſerv'd about his Writings, is taken out of St. Jerom in his Catalogue.

AETIUS and EUNOMIUS.

Aëtius and Eunomius.

THeſe two Impious Wretches deſerve not to be plac'd amongſt the Eccleſiaſtical Writers, neither ſhould we ſpeak of them here, but to condemn their Books, and their way of Writing about Religion. Aëtius was of Cœleſyria, the Son of a Souldier in the Governour's Guard. For ſome time he was a Goldſmith, but leaving that Trade, he applyed himſelf to the Study of Logick, and retir'd to the City of Tyre, where he put himſelf under the Diſcipline of Paulinus Biſhop of that City, about the Year 330. After the Death of this Biſhop, he was driven away by Eulalius, and forc'd to withdraw to Anazarbus, where he convers'd with two Diſciples of the Martyr Lucianus. From thence he came to Antioch, where he knew Leontius, who was afterward Biſhop of that City, and drove him away a little while after. And now not knowing where to hide his head, he ſet up for Controverſie, and diſputed publickly with very little ſucceſs againſt two Hereticks. But probably finding that this Art would not maintain him, he try'd a little at Phyſick. This is what Philoſtorgius, a great Admirer of Aëtius, relates of the Beginning of his Maſter's Life. St. Gregory Nyſſen paints him forth in very black Colours. He ſays, That from a Vine-Dreſſer, he became a Blackſmith, that he was Indicted in a Court of Juſtice for taking a Gold Chain from a Woman, and returning her one of the ſame form and thickneſs which was nothing but Copper gilt: That afterwards he put himſelf in the Service of a Quack, and having gain'd ſome Money with him, he ſet up for a Phyſician; and that at laſt he learn'd the Subtilties of Ariſtotle's Logick, and by this means was admitted into the preſence of Gallus Cæſar. However it was, this is certain that Aëtius learn'd all the Subtilties and Sophiſtical Tricks of the Ariſtotelian Logick, but he was ignorant in Scripture and Eccleſiaſtical Antiquity. A Man of this Temper was very proper to advance all ſorts of Impiety, to maintain them with Impudence, and alſo to entangle thoſe that he diſputed againſt. He was Ordain'd Deacon by Leontius of Antioch, who depos'd him ſoon after. Eudoxus try'd in vain to reſtore him, and was hindred from doing it by the hatred which the Chriſtians of Antioch bore towards him. He continued nevertheleſs in this City, being in Friendſhip with Eudoxus, till he was baniſh'd to Pepuza, by the Order of the Emperour Conſtantius. He came to the Council of Conſtantinople, where he diſputed with the Semi-Arian Biſhops, who having detected his Impiety, rendred him odious to the Emperour, and procur'd his Baniſhment from the Palace. So that Eudoxus, Acacius, and thoſe of his own Party, were oblig'd to condemn him in the Year 360. After this Condemnation he was baniſh'd to Mopſueſtia, and from thence removed to Amblada, a Caſtle in Phrygia. He return'd under the Emperour Julian, and Eudoxus, who was gone gone to the See of Constantinople, wrote to Euzoius Bishop of the Arian Party at Antioch, to receive him; and the Sentence of Condemnation pass'd against him. But Euzoius, not doing it very readily Eudoxus caus'd him to be Ordain'd Bishop, by some Bishops assembled at Constantinople; and soon after, Euzoius having assembled a Council of Nine Bishops, declar'd the Sentence null which was given against this Heretick at Constantinople. But at last, under the Reign of Jovian, Aëtius being abandon'd by Eudoxus, and the other Bishops that had maintain'd him, made a Faction by himself, and Ordain'd many Bishops for his own Party. He was forc'd in the time of the Emperour Valens, to retire to the Isle of Lesbos; and yet he died at Constantinople, in the Year 366.

Aëtius and Eunomius.

The Doctrine of Aëtius, was the pure Doctrine of Arius, without disguise; but he us'd Terms and Comparisons that were very odious to explain it. He affirm'd without hesitation, That the Son of God was unlike to his Father; That he was of another Substance; That he was created of nothing: Wherefore his Disciples were call'd Anomœans, Heterousians, Exoucontians, Terms that denote the three Dogmes, which we just now mention'd. He affirm'd the same things of the Holy Spirit, as of the Word: He imagin'd, That God reveal'd to himself the Mysteries that were unknown to the Apostles: He affirm'd, That he had a clear and distinct Knowledge of God, and comprehended him even as he comprehends himself. He maintain'd also with Arius, That the word assum'd the Flesh without a Soul. His Disciples baptiz'd with one Immersion only, and in the Name of the Death of Jesus Christ, they re-baptiz'd those that came over to them, tho' they had been baptiz'd by Catholicks. Some of them are accus'd of having Taught, That the most enormous Crimes would not hinder the Salvation of those that were of their Judgment.

Aëtius, as Theodoret observes, made Theology an Art of Tricks, or Sophistry. He rais'd a great number of Propositions, which contain'd unanswerable difficulties in his Opinion, to destroy the Mystery of the Trinity. We have in the Hæres. 76. of Epiphanius a Libel which contains 47 Propositions of this Nature; and the same Author attesteth that Aëtius compos'd 300 of the very same sort: I shall set down one or two of them, by which ye may sufficiently judge of the rest. Is it possible for God to make that a Person begotten should not be begotten?—If God is not begotten according to his Essence, How can it be said, that he who is begotten is of his Essence? Can the same Essence be begotten, and not begotten?

Eunomius, the Disciple of Aëtius, was the Son of a Husbandman in a Village of Cappadocia: He wrote some time for the publick, after which he was made Master of a School, and at last he put himself under the Discipline of Aëtius. He was not so subtile as his Master, but he had a greater command of Words. After he was ordain'd Deacon by Eudoxus, he was quickly banish'd to Myda a City of Phrygia. He return'd to Constantinople, at the time of the Council in the Year 359, and some time after, he was Ordain'd Bishop of Cyzicum by Eudoxus his Protector, who advis'd him to conceal his Doctrine: But he not following this Counsel, was accus'd by his People, and Eudoxus was oblig'd to Condemn and Depose him. Afterwards he separated himself wholly from this Bishop, and retir'd to a House which he had at Chalcedon, where he hid the Tyrant Procopius. His Master Aëtius being return'd to Constantinople; he liv'd some time with him, and did the last Offices to him: But he was quickly forc'd to retire to Chalcedon, and being accus'd before the Emperour, of giving Sanctuary to his Enemy, he was banish'd into Mauritania. But Valens, Bishop of Mursa, obtain'd his Restauration, and he would have obtain'd the Favour of the Emperour, if Eudoxus had not hinder'd him from coming into his sight. About the End of the Reign of Valens, Modestus the Prætorian Prefect, banish'd him into the Isle of Naxos, as a Disturber of the Peace of the Church. After the Death of this Emperour, he return'd to Chalcedon; but Theodosius immediately banish'd him to Halmyris, which Castle being taken by the Enemy, he was remov'd to Cæsarea, a City of Cappadocia. But the Inhabitants of this City not being able to endure him, because he had formerly writ against St. Basil, their Bishop, he obtain'd leave to dwell in the place of his Nativity, where he died. He was alive when St. Jerom wrote his Catalogue of Ecclesiastical Writers. He wrote many Books against the Church, and Seven Books of Commentaries upon the Epistle to the Romans, which are mention'd by Socrates, Ch. 7. of B. IV. of his History. The same Author observes, That he imitated the Sophistical Stryle of his Master, and follow'd his way of Arguing; That he was not Learned in the Holy Scripture, and had no understanding of it; but that he had abundance of Words; and repeated oftentimes the same thing in different Terms, without ever explaining clearly, what he propos'd; That tho' he employ'd many Words to explain the Epistle of St. Paul to the Romans yet he could never discover the true Sence of that Apostle. He adds, That his other Books were written after the same manner, and that whoever would take the Pains to read them, would find multitudes of Words and very little Matter. St. Basil, quotes in his Books against Eunomius, some part of the Books of this Heretick, which he afterwards refutes. Eunomius, answer'd St. Basil's Book by an Apology, and St. Gregory Nyssen, undertook the Defence of his Brother, and the Refutation of this Heretick's Apology. He quotes also some of his Passages, and many of his Arguments. These Fragments of Eunomius shew us, that he follow'd the Method of his Master, but that he was more plain and copious.

George of Laodicea.

GEORGE of Laodicea.

THIS GEORGE was a Priest of the Church of Alexandria, in the time of Arius. He espoused the Interests of this Heretick, and making a show of being Mediator between Alexander and him, he maintain'd his Impiety. We have in Athanasius's Book of Synods, Two Letters of this Man's, one written to Alexander, wherein he would perswade him, that we may say, That there had been a time when the Son of God was not; and the other to the Followers of Arius, wherein he counsels them to acknowledge, That the Son was of the Father, and of God, since all things are of God. Alexander cast him out of the Church, not only because of his Heresie, but also upon some other Account. Being Excommunicated at Alexandria, he endeavour'd to procure a Reception among the Clergy of Antioch; but Eustathius refusing him, he retir'd to Arethusa, and was there receiv'd; for Constantine calls him the Priest of Arethusa. He was afterwards Ordain'd Bishop of Laodicea, and assisted the Eusebians at the Council of Tyre and Antioch. The Western Bishops pronounc'd Sentence of Deposition against him in the Council of Sardica. Afterwards he declar'd himself an Enemy of the Eunomians, and the Head of the Party of the Semi-Arians. 'Twas he that wrote a Circular Letter to the Bishops of his own Country, against Aëtius and Eudoxus, set down by Sozomen, Ch. 14. of B. IV. of his History, wherein he exhorts them to Assemble themselves, that they may condemn those impious Men, as they had done in the Council of Ancyra, in the Year 358; soon after this George died. He past in those ancient times for a very able Man in Philosophy. Theodoret testifies, That he had written against the Manichees, and Socrates quotes a Book which he compos'd of the Life of Eusebius Emisenus.

Theodoret. Hæret. Fab. l. 1. c. 26. Socrates, l. 2. c. 9. and lib. 1. c. 24.

The APOLLINARII.

The Apollinarii.

APOLLINARIUS [a], the Father, was a Citizen of Alexandria, who forsook his Country, and went to teach Grammar at Berytus. From thence he past to Laodicea, where he had a Son of his own Name, whom he brought up to Learning. This young Man who had a great deal of Wit, in a short time, made a wonderful Progress in Knowledge, and capacitated himself for teaching Rhetorick publickly at Laodicea, while his Father was writing Books of Grammar. Both of them afterwards applying themselves to the Study of the Scriptures, the Father was Ordain'd Priest, and the Son Reader. But having a great Affection for profane Learning, they maintain'd an intimate Correspondence with a Pagan Sophist, call'd Epiphanius, which render'd them odious to the Christians. Socrates says, That Theodotus Bishop of Laodicea, cast them out of the Church for this cause; and 'tis certain, that George the Successor of Theodotus laid hold of this Pretence, to Excommunicate them, because they took part with Athanasius against him. Nevertheless, Apollinarius, the Son was chosen Bishop of Laodicea [b], and was belov'd and esteem'd by St. Athanasius, St. Basil, and St. Epiphanius, and all the great Men of his Age [c], upon the account of his Knowledge and Learning. But afterwards falling into Errors concerning the Mystery of the Incarnation, he was look'd upon as a Heretick, and he gave Name to a Sect which was condemn'd by the Church: He died under the Reign of Theodosius, about the Year 380. All the Ancients testifie, That this Author wrote an infinite number of Volumes [d] upon the Holy Scripture, and upon other Subjects. He made Books against the Arians, Eunomius, Origen, and against many Hereticks. He compos'd also many Ho-

Claudius Apollinaris Sen.

[a] Apollinarius.] The Greeks always called him, Ἀπολλινάριος: St. Basil is the only Person that wrote it with a double λλ. St. Jerom, called him, Apollinarius. The generality of the Latins for softness sake, give him the Name of Apollinaris.

[b] Bishop of Laodicea.] St. Athanasius in a Letter to the Antiochians, St. Epiphanius, in Hæres. 77. St. Basil, in Letter 293. Ruffinus, in B. II. Ch. 20. and St. Jerom in his Catalogue, all agree, that he was Bishop of this City. Theodoret in B. V. of his History says, That Apollinarius would have invaded the See of Antioch, but by his Disciple Vitalis.

[c] He was belov'd and esteem'd by all the great Men of his Age.] He was a very good Friend to St. Athanasius, who had seen him at his return from his Banishment, as St. Epiphanius testifies in Hæres. 77. Leontius in B. III. against Nestorius, says, That Apollinarius boasted, of receiving Letters from Athanasius, Serapion, and the great Men of his time. He quotes a Fragment of a Letter of Apollinarius, where he glories in having Letters from St. Athanasius. His Deputies assisted at the Council of Alexandria, and sign'd there as the Deputies of an Orthodox Bishop. It does not appear that St. Athanasius did ever break with him. St. Basil says in his Letter 82, That he ow'd respect to this Man; That he was so much his fast Friend, that he would take his Faults upon himself. St. Epiphanius calls him, a Venerable Old Man, and says, That he was very dear to St. Athanasius, and all the Orthodox Bishops. St. Jerom in his 64 Letter, says, That he had often seen him at Antioch, that he honour'd him, and had learn'd many things from him. I pass over in silence, the Testimonies of Socrates, Sozomen, Philostorgius, Vincentius Lirinensis, &c.

[d] An infinite number of Volumes] St. Basil in Epistle 47, says, That he had fill'd the World with his Books. Theophilus in his first Epistle, says, That he wrote against Origen, against the Eunomians and Arians. Acacius of Berœa, in his Letter to St. Cyril, Tom. 3d. of the Works of this Father, p. 63. says the same thing; and St. Jerom, says, That he made an infinite number of Books. Vincentius Lirinensis, says, That 'twere too long to give a Catalogue of his Books.

milies,

milies, and wrote several Letters e. But his chief Work in the Judgment of all Men, was his great Treatise divided into 30 Books, which he wrote in Defence of Religion against Porphyrie the Philosopher f. It excell'd in Beauty and Strength, all that had been written before by Eusebius and the Ancients against the Pagan Religion. He wrote also in the time of Julian, another great Book of the Truth of Religion against the Emperour and the Pagan Philosophers. 'Tis said, That Julian having perus'd it, wrote to him that sent it, I have read it; I have understood it; I have condemn'd it; and that St. Basil or some other Bishop made answer to him; You may have read it, but surely you never understood it; for if you had understood it, you had never condemn'd it. Under the Reign of the same Emperour, Apollinarius seeing that Christians were forbidden to read to their Children the Greek Poets, Orators and Philosophers, wrote in Heroick Verse the History of the Jews, down to the time of Saul, and divided this Work into 24 Books, in Imitation of Homer. He took Subjects also from the Old Testament, to make Tragedies, Comedies and Odes, in imitation of Euripides, Sophocles and Pindar. Besides that, he turn'd the Gospels and the Epistles into Dialogues, in imitation of Plato's Books: And thus he supplied to Christians, the want of profane Authors of all sorts. Socrates, attributes the Poetical Books to Apollinarius the Father, and 'tis probable that they were rather his, since they are more agreeable to his Profession. We have also a Translation of the Psalms in Verse, which bears the Name of Apollinarius; and this is the only entire Book we have extant of this Author. 'Tis an exact, faithful, and noble Translation of all the Psalms: Some have also attributed to him the Tragedy, entitled, Christ Suffering, which bears the Name of Gregory Nazianzen; but it has neither the same Air nor Stile. Theodoret relates some Passages of Apollinarius in his Dialogues, which prove that this Author acknowledg'd, That Jesus Christ took Flesh in the Womb of the Virgin, and that this Flesh was not changed into the Divinity; but then withal, they show, That he deny'd that the Soul of Jesus Christ had an Understanding or Mind. Eulogius in the extract made by Photius, Vol. 230 of his Bibliotheca, produces a passage of Apollinarius, wherein he seems to admit one Nature only in Jesus Christ. Polemon, the Disciple of Apollinarius, who is mention'd in the same place, and in the Fourth Book of the Fables of Hereticks, written by Theodoret, was of the same Opinion, and attributes it to his Master. The Extracts taken out of the Discourses of Apollinarius and Polemon, produc'd in the Council of Lateran, under Martin the V. Sess. 5. prove also that Apollinarius maintain'd, That there was but one Nature in Jesus Christ after the Union. And yet he ackowledges in the Passages recited by Theodoret, That the Divine and Humane Nature, remain'd in Jesus Christ without Mixture or Confusion, and that each of them retain'd their own Properties. This probably is that Contradiction which made St. Basil say, That the Judgment of Apollinarius, about the Incarnation, was very obscure and intricate. The same Father, in Letter 59, and 293, and St. Gregory Nazianzen, in his first Letter to Cledonius, accuse him of the Error of Sabellius, who confounded the three Divine Persons. But Theodoret observes, That at the bottom he believ'd the Mystery of the Trinity as we do, tho' he explain'd it in such a manner, as gave occasion to accuse him of Error, because he admits Degrees among the three Persons of the Trinity, and seems not to distinguish the Personal Subsistences. And indeed, St. Epiphanius vindicates Apollinarius from the Sabellian Heresie, and says, That Vitalis, his most famous Disciple, who calls himself Bishop of Antioch, was so far from holding this Heresie, That the Pretence which he alledg'd for his Separation from Paulinus, was because he believ'd him to be of Sabellius's Opinion. In short, Vincentius Lirinensis, and Leontius, vindicate Apollinarius from the Suspicion of Sabellianism. There are two Errors more attributed to him, which were common to him with many Ancients. The first, is that famous Opinion of the Reign of Christ, and the Saints upon Earth, for the space of 1000 Years, which St. Basil, Epist. 47. and 293; St. Gregory Nazianzen, Epist. 2. and St. Jerom in his Catalogue, Ch. 28. do all charge him with. The second Opinion is, That the Souls of Men are produc'd by Souls, as the Bodies are by Bodies. St. Jerom and Nemesius, are the only Persons that accuse him of this Error; the first in Ep. 28. the second in Ch. 2. of his Treatise.

The Opinion of Apollinarius about the Incarnation, was condemn'd in the Council of Alexandria, where it was declar'd, That Jesus Christ assum'd a Body, a Soul and Spirit, such as we have. Paulinus of Antioch, did also profess this Doctrine in a Discourse by its self, which is at the End of the Council of Alexandria, and in St. Epiphanius, Hæres. 77. In the Year 373. Vitalis the Disciple of Apollinarius, who caus'd himself to be ordain'd Bishop of Antioch, went to find out Pope Damasus, and presented to him a Confession of Faith about the Incarnation, which seem'd to be Catholick, and clearly rejected the Error of Apollinarius. St. Cyril produces a Fragment of this Confession of Faith, in the Book which he dedicated to Queens. When the Pope saw this Confession, he believ'd that Vitalis was a Catholick, and therefore did not refuse him his Communion; but having no full Assurance of his Sincerity, he wrote to Paulinus, and sent him Articles about the Trinity and the Incarnation, which he should cause Vitalis and all those that would be restor'd, to Sign. When these Articles were brought into the East, Vitalis, and those of his Sect would not sign them. Damasus understanding this, says St. Gregory Nazianzen, and being informed that they persisted still in their ancient Error, cast them out of the Church, and tore the Libel and Anathematisms which had been presented to e Many Homilies, and wrote several Letters.] There are many of his Sermons quoted in the Council of Lateran, under Martin the V. whose Extracts are produc'd in Tom. 6. of the Councils. P. 314, 315. And Sozomen, B. II. Ch. 17. relates a Fragment of Apollinarius, concerning St. Athanasius. He wrote also against Diodorus of Tarsus, as appears by Suidas, B. 3. Ch. 4.

The Apollinarii.

f His chief Work in the Judgment of all Men, was his Treatise against Porphyrie the Philosopher.] St. Jerom, says, That his 30 Books against Porphyrie, were the most esteem'd of all his Works. Vincentius Lirinensis says, That it was his greatest and most excellent Work.

him

him by Vitalis, being very much troubled that he had been ſo deceiv'd. He gave this Judgment in a Council at Rome, held in the Year 377, at which, Peter, Biſhop of Alexandria, aſſiſted. The Biſhops of the Eaſt, approv'd of what Damaſus had done, and confirm'd the Judgment which the Pope had given againſt the Apollinarians: For in the Synod of Antioch, in the Year 378, they ſigned a Tome or a Writing of the Weſtern Biſhops, which condemned their Errors. Afterwards, the Apollinarians were always look'd upon as Hereticks, as appears by the Council of Conſtantinople, where they are joyn'd with the Arians, Eunomians, and other declar'd Hereticks.

The Apollinarii.

Apollinarius, of all the Chriſtian Writers, had moſt ſtudied Grammar, Rhetorick, and profane Philoſophy: But he was not profoundly Learned in the Scripture and Religion; he Philoſophiz'd too much upon our Myſteries, and did not confine himſelf enough to the ſimplicity of the Scriptures, which fault was the occaſion of his falling into Error: For when once Men give themſelves up to humane Reaſonings in the Explication of Myſteries, they preſently wander from the right way, and are in danger of falling head-long. He had not the ſublime and affected Eloquence of the Bar, but a Philoſophical kind of Eloquence which conſiſted in turning his Thoughts and Reaſons; after an eaſie, clear and pleaſant manner. Philoſtorgius quoted by Suidas, compar'd him to St. Baſil, and St. Gregory Nazianzen, and ſays, "That theſe three were the ableſt Men of their Time. That "they excell'd thoſe who had written before them, and that St. Athanaſius in compariſon of them, "appear'd but a Child; That they were well vers'd in profane Learning, and had made a great Pro- "greſs in them; That with all this, they had all that was neceſſary for Reading and Underſtanding "the Scriptures, and chiefly Apollinarius, who underſtood Hebrew. That each of them excell'd in his "kind; That the Stile of Apollinarius was fitteſt for Writing Books; That St. Baſil's Stile was beſt for "publick Orations, but Gregory Nazianzen ſurmounted them both in the ſublimity of his Stile, which "was more lofty than that of Apollinarius, and more grave than that of St. Baſil. He adds, That "theſe three Perſons had all the Qualities which were moſt proper for winning the Admiration of all "Mankind. The Life of Apollinarius, was probably no leſs Holy than that of the other two great Men. "In ſhort, he might have been equal to the greateſt Pillars of the Church, as Vincentius Lirinenſis "ſays excellently, if his profane Curioſity had not carried him to the Invention of Novelties, which "made him loſe the Fruit of all his Labours, and made his Doctrine an occaſion of Scandal, rather "than Edification.

Apollinarius's Paraphraſe or Tranſlation of the Pſalms, was printed in Greek at Paris, in the Year 1580; and together with the Verſion of Sylburgius, by Commelinus, in the Year 1596. Since that time, it has been put into the Bibliotheca Patrum. The other Works of this Author are loſt, except ſome Fragments; and his Error was probably the cauſe of this Loſs. The Catholicks had ſo great a Horror of Books of Hereticks, that they would not ſo much as preſerve thoſe that did not concern their Hereſie, and which might have been uſeful to the Church: Upon which account it is, that we have ſcarce any Book of the ancient Hereticks, and that the Eutychians were oblig'd to publiſh Apollinarius's Books under the Names of Catholick Authors, as we have obſerv'd when we ſpoke of the Writings of Pope Julius.

TITUS of Boſtra.

Titus of Boſtra.

TITUS, Biſhop of Boſtra, a City of Arabia Petræa, wrote a Treatiſe againſt the Manichees, and ſome other Works, in the time of the Emperours Julian and Jovian. Julian, who perſecuted all the Biſhops who had any Reputation, did all that lay in his power, to drive this Biſhop out of his Countrey, and to render him odious to his people. "He wrote to him, that if any trouble 'happened in the City of Boſtra, he ſhould impute it to himſelf and to his Clergy. This Biſhop 'anſwered him, That he kept his People in Peace by his Exhortations, and that tho' he had as many 'Chriſtians as Pagans in his City, yet he ſo order'd the Matter, that there was no Contention amongſt 'them.' Julian laid hold on this occaſion, to write to the Inhabitants of Boſtra againſt their Biſhop, endeavouring maliciouſly to perſwade them, that his Anſwer reproached them, becauſe it ſuppoſed that without his Exhortations, they would not have continued in their Duty. However this ill-natur'd Accuſation of the Emperour Julian, did not hinder them from putting Confidence in their Biſhop, ſo that he continued in his See till the time of the Emperour Valens, under whoſe Reign he dyed, about the Year 370. He aſſiſted at the Council of Meletius, held at Antioch, under the Reign of Jovian, in the Year 364.

The Book of Titus of Boſtra, againſt the Manichees, was written in Greek, and divided into four Parts: There is nothing now extant, but the Verſion of three of thoſe Books made by Turrianus, and Printed in Caniſius's Collection of Ancient Pieces, and in the Bibliotheca Patrum. To the Text of the Author, there are perfixed the Arguments of the Four Books tranſlated out of Greek, which inform us what is the Subject of them. "The firſt Book, ſays the Author of thoſe Arguments 'contains a Refutation of the principal Points of Doctrine taught by the Manichees, which 'contradict common Senſe, and the Principles of natural Reaſon. The ſecond is intended to ſhow, 'That Man is not addicted to Sin by a Principle that is Eternal and without Beginning, or by a 'Being that is contrary to the True God: That there is no Subſtance of Evil in the World; That 'there is not in us two ſorts of Natures, one Good, and the other Evil; That 'tis Folly and Impiety 'to Condemn and Reprehend the manner of Governing the Univerſe. In ſhort, This Book con- 'tains all that can be ſaid of Providence, and invincibly proves, That 'tis in no wiſe neceſſary to 'admit

'admit a Second Principle contrary to God. The Third Book is intended to defend the Law and the 'Prophets, and to ſhow that God is the Author of the Old Teſtament; That there is nothing of Evil 'to be found in it; That it does in every thing agree with the New, and therefore there is no need 'for the Explication of it to have recourſe to a Second Principle contrary to God. The Fourth 'Book defends the New Teſtament againſt the Blaſphemies of the Hereticks: There he ſhews 'that there is nothing in the Goſpel which favours their Error; That they abuſe ſome Paſſages of 'Scripture to prove their Impiety to no purpoſe; and that the Diabolical Explications which they give 'of them cannot help to eſtabliſh what they ſay againſt God". In the firſt Book, he propounds the Doctrine of the Manichees, and detects the Abſurdities of it by Metaphyſical Arguments. In the Second he ſhows, That there is but one God only, and that he is the only Principle; That he is not the Author of Sin; That he made Man free and capable of doing Good and Evil; and ſo 'tis not God but Man who is the Author of Sin, which proceeds not from the Nature of Man, but from his Will. He explains the great difficulty that's urg'd by the Manichees, why the Juſt are ſo often Unhappy, and the Wicked Happy in this World; and ſhews that the Juſt are always Happy and the Wicked Unhappy, becauſe Innocence is the chief Happineſs. He adds, That Afflictions are uſeful to prove and to exerciſe Vertue. He maintains, That Death is not an Evil, becauſe 'tis the end of ſinning to the Wicked, and the Beginning of Recompence to the Good. In ſhort, having ſurvey'd all things in this World, and all the occurrences of this Life, he proves that they are eaſily reconciled to the Providence of God.

Titus of Boſtra.

In the Third Book he ſhows, That the Old and New Teſtament agree very well together, and that one and the ſame God is the Author of them both.

There are in theſe Books much Metaphyſicks and Logick; the Arguments are ſolid and ſubtil; the Stile is fine and clean enough for a Work of this Nature. It is indeed a ſurprizing thing that he never makes uſe of Original Sin for the explaining all the Difficulties objected by the Manichees: which might have ſerv'd as one general Solution to almoſt all their Objections. For when once Original Sin is admitted, there is no difficulty in underſtanding, Why a Man is addicted to Sin; Why he ſuffers Affliction; Why he is ſubject to Hunger, to Pain, to Diſeaſes, to Miſeries, and to Death; and yet he never urges it to explain thoſe Queſtions, but examines them as a Philoſopher. He ſays not one Word of the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt, and ſeems to ſuppoſe, That Man could do Good of himſelf as well as Evil.

There is a Commentary upon the Goſpel of St. Luke, which is attributed to Titus of Boſtra; but this can be none of his Book, ſince he who is the Author of it, cites St. Jerom, St. Iſidore Peluſiota, and St. Cyril of Alexandria, who had not written till after the Death of this Titus of Boſtra, whom we now ſpeak of. Yet this is a very good literal Commentary upon St. Luke, and ſeems to me to be very ancient. There was a Verſion of it publiſh'd by Peltanus, and printed by Sartorius at Ingolſtadt in the Year 1579. Since that, Fronto Ducæus publiſh'd the Greek from a Manuſcript out of the King's Library, and it was printed in Greek and Latin in the Supplement to the Bibliotheca Patrum: 'Tis ſaid, That there is a Commentary of the ſame Author upon St. Matthew, and there is ſome probability for it, becauſe in the Commentary on St. Luke, he never attempts to explain any thing in this Evangeliſt but what is not to be found in the Goſpel of St. Matthew. In ſhort, Father Combefis has publiſh'd in his Auctuarium to the Bibliotheca Patrum, a Sermon upon Palm-Sunday, which bears the Name of Titus of Boſtra, but is not written by the true Titus of Boſtra, nor by the Author of the Commentaries upon St. Luke, it having no Affinity with the Air and Stile of either of thoſe two Writers.

DIDYMUS of Alexandria.

NOthing is more ſurprizing than what the Ancients have related of this Author. St. Jerom and Ruffinus, who were his Diſciples, aſſure us, That having loſt his Sight from the Age of five Years, at which time he was ſcarce able to read, he applyed his Mind ſo vigorouſly to Study, that he learn'd in Perfection, not only Philoſophy, Rhetorick and Muſick, but even Geometry; which one would think could not be learnt without the help of Sight. He particularly addicted himſelf to the Study of Divinity, and was choſen as the moſt Able Perſon to fill the Chair of the famous School of the Church of Alexandria. His Reputation drew to him a great number of Scholars, of whom the moſt famous were St. Jerom, Ruffinus, Palladius and Iſidore. He had a wonderful Eaſineſs of expreſſing himſelf, a pleaſing way of declaiming, and a ſurprizing ſharpneſs of Wit. He anſwer'd immediately to all the Queſtions that were made upon the Scriptures, he confuted the Arguments which the Hereticks propos'd to him againſt Religion, and ſhow'd in an inſtant where the weakneſs of their Reaſons lay. He has written many excellent Books. St. Jerom mentions theſe following in his Catalogue: Commentaries upon all the Pſalms, Commentaries upon the Goſpel of St. Matthew and St. John, Commentaries upon the Epiſtle to the Galatians, Eighteen Tomes of Commentaries upon Iſaiah, Three Books of Commentaries upon Hoſea, which are addreſs'd to me, ſays St. Jerom, and Five Books upon Zachary, which he wrote at my deſire, ſays the ſame Father; Commentaries upon Job, and an infinite number of other Diſcourſes, which would require a particular Table. He wrote alſo a Treatiſe upon the Dogmes, or upon the Sects, Two Books againſt the Arians, and a Book of the Holy Spirit, which I tranſlated into Latin, ſays the ſame St. Jerom. He alſo interpreted Origen's Principles, and defended them againſt thoſe that condemn'd them. He conſider'd this Author as his Maſter, and eſpouſed his Opinions. He was alive when St. Jerom wrote his Catalogue of Eccleſiaſtical Writers, i. e. in the Year

Didymus of Alexandria.

Didymus of Alexandria.

Year 392, and was then 93 Years old and more; and 'tis thought that he dyed two Years after. His being addicted to the Opinions of Origen, was the cauſe of his Condemnation in the Fifth General Council, and in the Fifth Seſſion of the Lateran Council by Martin the Fifth, though he died in the Communion of the Church, and all the Ancients, even St. Jerom, ſpeak of him as one whoſe Doctrine was very Orthodox. We have among St. Jerom's Works, a Tranſlation which this Father made of Didymus's Book concerning the Holy Spirit. He ſays in his Preface, "That being in Babylon, dwelling 'in this Province cloath'd with Purple (by which word, he means the City of Rome) he had a deſign to 'write a little Book of the Holy Spirit, and to Dedicate it to the Biſhop of that City; but that imme- 'diately the Senate of Phariſees cry'd out againſt him, and the Faction of Ignorant Men conſpir'd 'againſt his Perſon, which oblig'd him to return to Jeruſalem, where he finiſh'd his Work at the de- 'ſire of Paula and Euſtochium; but that he could not Dedicate it to Damaſus, who was dead when 'it was finiſh'd. He adds, That he put at the beginning of it the Name of the Author whom he 'tranſlated, and thought it better to be only the Interpreter of another's Work, than to mix bad 'thoughts with that which is good in the Greek Authors, as ſome Latins have done'. He has divi- ded this Treatiſe of Didymus into three Books: Though it is rather a continued Diſcourſe which ought not to be parted, or at leaſt, ought not to be divided but into two Parts.

This Treatiſe is the moſt Demonſtrative and Methodical of all thoſe that the Ancients have written to prove the Divinity of the Holy Spirit. He begins with theſe Words. 'Though we ought to ſpeak 'with Reverence and Exactneſs of every thing that concerns the Divinity, yet this ought chiefly to 'be done, when we ſpeak of the Holy Spirit, ſince the Scripture tells us, That the Blaſphemy which 'is ſpoken againſt him is unpardonable. Wherefore we muſt give diligent heed that we may under- 'ſtand what is ſaid of him in the Holy Scripture, leſt we fall into ſome Error, which may make us 'ſpeak Blaſphemies. And upon this account, it ſeems to be convenient for a faithful Chriſtian, who 'is ſenſible of his own weakneſs, as I am, to keep ſilence in a Queſtion which is above his Power, 'rather than venture to treat upon a Subject where he runs ſo great a hazard. But ſince there are 'ſome Men, who by a ſurprizing boldneſs exalt themſelves againſt Heaven, and ſpeak of the Holy 'Spirit ſuch things as are no where to be found in Scripture, and which have never been propos'd 'by any Eccleſiaſtical Writers, I thought my ſelf oblig'd to yield to the frequent Entreaties of my Bre- 'thren, and to prove my own Opinion by Teſtimonies of Scriptures, leſt ſome of the Faithful that 'are Ignorant of this Doctrine, ſhould be ſeduc'd by thoſe that hold the contrary'. After he has in the following words obſerv'd, That the Holy Spirit is no where ſpoken of but in the Holy Scripture, and that the ſame Spirit inſpir'd the Prophets and Apoſtles, he enters upon the Matter, and proves by many Arguments founded upon Paſſages of the Holy Scripture, That the Holy Spirit is not a Creature, but that he is of one and the ſame Nature with the Father and the Son. He ſhows that the Holy Spirit is not a Creature. 1. Becauſe every Creature is either Corporeal or Spiritual. Now the Holy Spirit, ſays he, is not a Corporeal Creature, ſince it dwells in the Soul; neither is he a Spiritual Creature, be- cauſe Spiritual Creatures receive into themſelves Vertues, Knowledge and Holineſs, whereas the Holy Spirit produces them in others, being himſelf Subſtantially Vertue, Light and Holineſs. 2. Becauſe every Creature is liable to Change and circumſcrib'd within a place; but the Holy Spirit is immutable, and every where preſent, and therefore the Holy Spirit is not a Creature. 3. Becauſe he who Sanctifies, and he who is Sanctified, are of different Natures; but the Holy Spirit Sanctifies all Creatures, and therefore he is not of their Nature. He adds, That 'tis never ſaid that Men are fill'd with a Creature, as 'tis ſaid that they are fill'd with the Holy Spirit. He ſhows, that the Holy Spirit is not deviſible; but that it receives different Names according to the different Effects it produces, though it be always one and the ſame Spirit. In ſhort, he ſhows, That the Apoſtle St. Paul put an Eſſential Difference between the Holy Spirit and the Angels, which ſufficiently diſcovers that it is not a Creature. After- wards he refutes thoſe that ſay the Holy Spirit is of the number of thoſe things which were created by the Divine Word. He explains a place in the Fourth Chapter of the Prophet Amos, where 'tis ſaid, That God created the Spirit, Creans Spiritum, by ſhowing that this place is literally to be underſtood of the Wind, and that it cannot be applied to the Holy Spirit, but in an Allegorical and Figurative ſence.

After he has thus ſhown that the Holy Spirit is not a Creature, he proves, That he is of the ſame Nature with the Father and the Son: 1. Becauſe they have but one and the ſame Operation, and by conſequence muſt be one and the ſame Subſtance. 2. Becauſe to lye to the Holy Spirit is to lye unto God, as appears by the words of St. Peter to Ananias. 3. Becauſe the Wiſdom and Teaching of the Holy Spirit is call'd the Wiſdom and Teaching of God. 4. Becauſe the Holy Spirit is call'd the Finger of the Father. 5. Becauſe 'tis ſaid of him, that he is Wiſdom it ſelf. 6. Becauſe we are to believe in the Holy Spirit, as we do in the Father and the Son, and we are baptized in the Name of the Holy Spirit, as we are in the Name of the Father and the Son. 7. Becauſe he is call'd Lord, as the Father and the Son are. 8. Becauſe he is ſent from the Father in the Name of the Son, as having the ſame Nature with the Son. 9. Becauſe the Father, Son and Holy Spirit are never ſeparated; every thing that agrees to one of the three Perſons, agrees to the other two, and whatever is ſaid of one, is ſaid of the other two, and whatſoever one does, is done by the others, &c. And therefore they have all three the ſame Nature and the ſame Subſtance. He concludes with theſe words, 'Since there is no pardon for thoſe 'that Blaſpheme againſt the Trinity, we muſt be very cautious in ſpeaking of this Myſtery, leſt we 'be miſtaken in the leaſt Expreſſion: And every one who deſires to read this Book, muſt purifie him- 'ſelf, that ſo by an enlightned Mind he may underſtand what is contain'd in it, and by a Heart full 'of Charity and Holineſs, he may Pardon us, if we do not always anſwer the expectation of the 'Reader. He muſt only conſider the Mind wherewith we have written, and not tie himſelf up to

'our

'our manner of Expreſſion: For as the Teſtimony of our Conſcience makes us boldly affirm, That 'our Doctrine is that of the Chriſtian Religion; ſo our Sincerity makes us confeſs, That in the manner of Writing, we do not come near the politeneſs, fineneſs, and eloquence of others; becauſe we 'have only attempted to give a religious Explication of what the Holy Scripture teaches us, without 'ſtudying to polliſh and adorn our Diſcourſe': But though he ſpeaks thus of his Stile, and St. Jerom ſays alſo, That this Author is not a very able Penman, yet this Treatiſe is very well written for a Dogmatical Treatiſe. I ſpeak not this of the Words or Terms, ſince we have not now the Original Greek, but of the turn of his Thoughts, the methodizing of his Arguments, and the manner of expreſſing himſelf about a Myſtery ſo difficult to explain as this of the Trinity. He treats of the Subject in a very clear Method, without diverting from the Difficulties of it. He propoſes his Arguments plainly and ſmoothly: His Reaſons are cloſe and convincing, one may obſerve a Vein of Logick which runs through all his Diſcourſe without intermiſſion. He quotes the paſſages of Scripture in their natural ſence, and makes many very curious and profound Remarks. He uſes the moſt proper and moſt fit Terms for Explication of the Myſteries. He does not too nicely diſtinguiſh, and yet he clears up all Difficulties. In a word, it were to be wiſh'd that all the Schoolmen had taken this Treatiſe for their Pattern, and had follow'd his Method in treating of the Myſteries of Religion. I forgot to obſerve that he ſpeaks occaſionally of the Incarnation, and that he ſays, Jeſus Chriſt is God-man; and yet we muſt not affirm that there are two Perſons in him, but believe, that he being God and Man both together, there is attributed to him what agrees to the Nature of God, and the Nature of Man. 'Twas good to obſerve this againſt the Error of the Neſtorians.

Didymus of Alexandria.

We have in the Bibliothecæ Patrum, Commentaries in Latin, upon all the Canonical Epiſtles which go under the Name of Didymus. They ſeem to be Ancient, and they may poſſibly be a Tranſlation from a Greek Commentary of this Author. He ſpeaks of the Opinion of thoſe who thought that Spirits were from all Eternity, and he neither Condemns nor Approves it. He maintains, That Predeſtination is nothing elſe but the Choice which God made of thoſe that he foreſaw would believe in Jeſus Chriſt, and do good Actions. He rejects the Millennium, and affirms, That the Pleaſures and Joys of Paradiſe are all Spiritual. He diſapproves of ſervile Fear; He believes with Origen, That the Incarnation of Jeſus Chriſt was profitable to Angels as well as Men, and that it purifies them from their Faults. He obſerves, That the Second Epiſtle of St. Peter is not in the Canon, and believes that it is corrupted. Theſe Commentaries are very clear and intelligible, and contain Uſeful and Judicious Inſtructions and Reflections, which are not unworthy of the famous Didymus.

There is alſo a little Tract, or rather the Fragment of a Tract againſt the Manichees, tranſlated from Greek by Turrianus, printed by Poſſevin in his Apparatus, and inſerted into the Bibliothecæ Patrum, which goes under the Name of Didymus, which agrees well enough with the Treatiſe of the Holy Spirit written by this Author. There he refutes by Metaphyſical Arguments, the Opinion of the Manichees, who admitted two Principles, the one Good and the other Evil. He explains the ſence in which Men are call'd in Scripture Children of Wrath, by ſaying, They are ſo call'd, becauſe they become the Object of the Wrath of God by the Sins which they voluntarily commit; as others are call'd Children of the Light, and Children of Wiſdom, who are Purified by the Light of Truth. He ſays, That Judas is call'd a Son of Perdition, becauſe he did thoſe things that deſerv'd Perdition. He is mightily perplex'd when he explains the Reaſon why the Fleſh of Man is call'd Sinful Fleſh. He ſays firſt of all, That it is ſo call'd, becauſe it was produc'd by the uſe of Marriage, which commonly was not free from Sin before the coming of Jeſus Chriſt, who ſanctified it: That there is none but Jeſus Chriſt and the Firſt Man, whoſe Fleſh could not be called Sinful; for Jeſus Chriſt was Born of a Virgin, and Adam was made out of the Earth; That all Men being begotten by Men after the Sin of the Firſt Man, are ſubject to Sin; and that if the Body of Jeſus Chriſt had been form'd in the ordinary way of Generation, it had been liable to Sin, to which all the Poſterity of Adam are ſubject. He adds, That the Uſe of Marriage, though it is permitted, is called Sin, in Compariſon of Virginity; which is a much more excellent ſtate. After this, he proves that the Devil was not Wicked by Subſtance, but by Will; He demonſtrates, That God is not the Author of Evil, becauſe he created a free Agent, which could incline it ſelf to Good or Evil; That the Divine Conduct cannot be blam'd, and that thoſe who commit Sin ought not to impute it to any but themſelves, ſince it was in their own Power to do Good, and to ſhun that which is Evil. In a word, That Man is not naturally Wicked, but by his Will only; ſince he that has been Wicked and Impious, may change his condition by Repentance, and become Good and Vertuous.

PETER of Alexandria.

Peter of Alexandria.

ST. Athanaſius dying in the Year 373, the Catholicks choſe in his room Peter, whom St. Athanaſius had deſign'd for his Succeſſor. He had no ſooner taken Poſſeſſion of his Church, but he was forc'd away from it by the Governor of the Province nam'd Palladius, and neceſſitated to fly to Rome. Some time after Euzoius of Antioch brought with him one nam'd Lucius, whom he Ordain'd Biſhop of Alexandria, and caus'd the Churches to be given to him. This Man being an Enemy to the Doctrine of his Predeceſſor, was hated by all the Chriſtians of Alexandria, who would not afterwards come any more to the Aſſemblies of the Church: Whereupon Lucius was oblig'd to get a Guard of Pagan Souldiers, who committed by his Order infinite Outrages againſt the Catholicks. Peter of Alexandria wrote at this time a Letter againſt the Exorbitances that were done by the Arians, which

Peter of Alexandria.

Theodoret produces in the Fourth Book of his Hiſtory, Chap. 22. It charges them with cauſing a Multitude of Infidel Souldiers to enter into the great Church of St. Theonas, who vomited up Thouſands of Blaſphemies, violated Virgins, and put to Death many Chriſtians. He adds, That they had committed abominable Sacrilege, in making a young Man dance upon the Altar in Womens Apparel, and making him go up into the Pulpit, where he utter'd infamous and impious Words. Afterwards he charges the Arians with carrying away Lucius to place him in the Epiſcopal See, though he had neither been choſen by the Suffrages of the Clergy and the People, nor Ordain'd by a Lawful Synod as the Eccleſiaſtical Canons requir'd. Afterwards he gives an account of the manner in which he entred into the Church, being accompanied with Euzoius, and the Chief Treaſurer of the City; how he would have forc'd the Prieſts and Deacons to approve Arianiſm, to pleaſe the Emperour Valens; with what boldneſs and conſtancy they anſwer'd him, and how they were Impriſon'd, Tormented, and ſent a Shipboard without Victuals. In ſhort, he relates the Cruelties committed againſt the People of Alexandria, againſt the Deacon ſent by Pope Damaſus, and againſt Eleven Biſhops of Egypt baniſh'd to Diocæſarea, together with a great number of Prieſts and Deacons. We have in Facundus, two Fragments of another Letter written by the ſame Father to thoſe that were baniſh'd. The Firſt, is in Chap. 2. of the Fourth Book, againſt Timotheus the Diſciple of Apollinarius, whom he accuſes of having Anathematiz'd St. Baſil, St. Paulinus, St. Epiphanius, and Diodorus, that he might communicate with Vitalis only. The Second Fragment is in Chap. 2. of B. XI. where he commends the Epiſtle of St. Athanaſius written to the Antiochians. We have not any other Fragment of the Letters of this Saint, though 'tis probable, that he wrote many more during the ſpace of Six Years that he ſtay'd at Rome. But when Valens being to march againſt the Goths, gave leave to the baniſh'd Biſhops to return, he came to Alexandria with a Letter of Recommendation from Pope Damaſus. The People receiv'd him and drove away Lucius. Sometime after, Peter indiſcreetly Ordain'd Maximus the Cynick Biſhop of Conſtantinople, though he had approv'd by a Letter the Care which Gregory Nazianzen took of that Church. He dyed about the End of the Year 381. The Stile of the Letter produced by Theodoret is Simple and Natural, and alſo very Significant.

LUCIUS.

Lucius.

ST. Jerom places this Lucius, the Adverſary of Peter of Alexandria, among the Number of Eccleſiaſtical Writers, of whom we have already ſpoken. He ſays, That he govern'd the Church of Alexandria till the time of Theodoſius: But we have obſerv'd that he was driven away a little while before the Reign of this Emperour. He adds, That he wrote Letters concerning the Solemnity of Eaſter, and ſome Books upon different Subjects.

AQUILIUS SEVERUS.

Aquilius Severus.

AQUILIUS SEVERUS a Spaniard, of the Race of that Severus to whom Lactantius addreſs'd two Books of Letters, wrote a Volume in the form of an Itinerary, which contains all the Hiſtory of his Life in Proſe as well as Verſe. 'Tis entituled, The Cataſtrophe, or the Experiment. He dyed under the Reign of Valentinian, that is to ſay, about the Year 370. This is what St. Jerom has told us of this Author, and 'tis all that we know of him. This ſort of Books which contain the Lives of Authors are pleaſant when they are written of Great Men who had a ſhare in the Management of Affairs, or of ſuch Perſons whoſe Lives were full of extraordinary and ſurprizing Accidents; and they are uſeful when they are written of Perſons of great Virtue and Merit. But when no ſuch thing is to be found in them, they are commonly tedious and uſeleſs Books. 'Tis probable that this Life of Aquilius was fill'd with Extraordinary Occurrences, which was the reaſon why he wrote it, and why he gave it the Title of The Cataſtrophe, or the Experiment. Wherein he probably gives us cauſe to admire the Providence of God in the wonderful Changes that happened to himſelf. This is all that we can ſay by Conjecture, having no certain Knowledge of this Matter.

EUZOIUS.

Euzoius.

EUZOIUS was the Scholar of Theſpeſius the Rhetorician, together with St. Gregory Nazianzen. He Studied in his Youth at Cæſarea in Paleſtine, whereof he was afterward Biſhop. He repaired the Library of Origen and Pamphilus, cauſing the Books to be written out upon new Skins, becauſe the old ones began to rot. He was at laſt turn'd out of the Church in the time of Theodoſius. He wrote many Treatiſes, which were eaſie to be known in St. Jerom's time. This is what this Father has told us of this Author. St. Epiphanius ſpeaks of him in Hæreſ. 73. and places him among thoſe Biſhops that were purely Arian: And yet he is different from the famous Arian Euzoius Biſhop of Antioch.

St. CYRIL

St. CYRIL of Jeruſalem.

ST. CYRIL was ordain'd Prieſt of the Church of Jeruſalem, by Maximus, Biſhop of that City; but if we believe St. Jerom, he would not do the Office of a Deacon, as long as that Biſhop liv'd. After his Death [a], he was plac'd in his room, by Acacius and the Biſhops of his Party, which render'd his Faith ſuſpected to the Catholicks [b]. But he was not long a Friend to Acacius; for the Differences which they had about the Prerogatives of their Sees, quickly broke them in pieces. The Council of Nice had given the Biſhop of Jeruſalem, the firſt place among all the Biſhops of that Province, and yet left the Rites of the Church of Cæſarea entire, which was Metropolis to the Church of Jeruſalem. This Honour gave occaſion to the Biſhop of Jeruſalem, to aſſume to himſelf ſome Privileges, and ſo Maximus of Jeruſalem, took upon him to Ordain Biſhops in Paleſtine, and to Aſſemble a Council of that Province. His Succeſſor, St. Cyril, deſiring to maintain himſelf in the Poſſeſſion of thoſe Privileges, was troubled by Acacius of Cæſarea, who would not endure that the Church of Jeruſalem ſhould aſſume to it ſelf a right which legally pertain'd to his own Church. To revenge himſelf for this Encroachment, he call'd a Council in the Year 356, wherein he depos'd St. Cyril, under pretence that he had Sold the Ornaments of the Church, and the Sacred Veſſels to relieve the Poor in time of Famine. He plac'd in his room, Eutychius, who probably was Biſhop of Eleutheropolis. St. Cyril appealed from the Sentence of this Synod, to a more numerous Council; but he was forced to retire to Tarſus, where he continued ſome time with Silvanus, Biſhop of that City, who received him very kindly, and gave him leave to Celebrate the Holy Myſteries, and to Preach in his Dioceſs. At this time, there was a Synod held at Melitina, compos'd of Biſhops of Acacius's Party, where St. Cyril was preſent. He came afterwards to the Council of Seleucia, wherein he took part with Baſil of Ancyra, Euſtathius, Sebaſtius, and the other Semi-Arian Biſhops, who treated him as a lawful Biſhop, and gave him a Seat in the Council, in ſpite of all the Oppoſition that was made by Acacius: And Acacius, that he might the better Oppoſe his Adverſary, threw himſelf upon the Party of Eudoxus, and by this means, got St. Cyril depos'd anew in the Council of Conſtantinople. 'Twas about this time, that Heremius was ordain'd Biſhop of Jeruſalem, becauſe probably Eutychius, who was already Biſhop of Eleutheropolis, would not leave his Church, to take the See of Jeruſalem. After Heremius, there was one named Heraclius, and to him Succeeded one Hilarius. But at laſt, St. Cyril was reſtored to his See, under the Emperour Theodoſius, after his Ordination had been approv'd by the Council of Conſtantinople, held in the Year 380 [c]. He died in the Year 386, and had John for his Succeſſor.

St. Cyril of Jeruſalem.

St. Jerom aſſures us, That St. Cyril compos'd his Catechetical Diſcourſes in his Youth: We have 18 of them extant, addreſs'd to the Catechumens, whereof ſome are quoted by Theodoret [d], by St. John Damaſcen, by Cyparisſiota; and there are 5 others, called Myſtagogick Lectures, for the Inſtruction of thoſe that are newly Baptized. Cook, Rivet, Aubertin, and other Calviniſtical Criticks, do all that they can, to prove theſe Catechetical Diſcourſes ſuppoſititious, becauſe they contain many things that diſpleaſe them [e], and deſtroy their Errors. But the Conjectures which they alledge to [a] After his Death.] Socrates, B. II. Ch. 30. and Sozomen, B. IV. Ch. 19. ſays, That Acacius of Cæſarea, and Patrophilus of Scythopolis, turned out Maximus, to place St. Cyril in his room: But St. Jerom who ſpeaks of St. Cyril, after ſuch a manner as ſufficiently diſcovers, that he did not favour him, ſince he treats him as an Arian, tells us, That Maximus was dead, when he was Ordain'd. But he accuſes St. Cyril of perſecuting Heraclius, who was Ordain'd Biſhop by the Catholicks in the room of Maximus, and of reducing him to the rank of Presbyters. St. Epiphanius, Ruffinus, and Theodoret, ſpeak not a word of this Heraclius: But Socrates and Sozomen, place him as ſecond of the Biſhops whom the Arians ſet up in Oppoſition to St. Cyril. St. Jerom calls the firſt Ireneus, inſtead of Eremius.

[b] His Faith ſuſpected to the Catholicks.] Ruffinus and St. Jerom, obſerve, That he oftentimes chang'd his Faith and his Communion. As to his Communion, 'tis true; for at firſt, he held Communion with Acacius, afterwards he ſeparated from him; then he communicated with the Biſhops of his Party, at the Synod of Melitina; after this he forſook them, to joyn with Baſil of Ancyra, and the Semi-Arians; at laſt, he re-united himſelf to the Catholicks. But for all this, he did not change his Faith, for he always believed the Son to be like in Subſtance unto the Father, without condemning the Term Conſubſtantial. 'Twas Acacius who was ſo changeable in his Faith, for he ſometimes ſigned the Doctrine, the Words being like in ſubſtance, and ſometimes condemned this Doctrine, and approved the Error of the Anomæans; but Meletius re-united them all, and made them approve the Term Conſubſtantial. We muſt not believe St. Jerom about the Cauſe of St. Cyril, for he was addicted to Paulinus againſt Meletius, and againſt all thoſe of his Party.

[c] The Council of Conſtantinople, held in the Year 380.] This appears by the Letter from the Council of Conſtantinople, produced by Theodoret, wherein the Biſhops declare, That they had approved the Ordination of St. Cyril, becauſe it was performed according to form by the Biſhops of his Province.

[d] By Theodoret, &c.] This Father in his Second Dialogue, cites a long Paſſage taken out of the 4th. Catechetical Diſcourſe of St. Cyril, Biſhop of Jeruſalem, which is word for word found in the 4th. Catechetical Diſcourſe to the Catechumens: St. John Damaſcen, relates alſo a Paſſage taken out of the 12th. in his Orat. 3. de Imag. Cyparisſiota, Dec. 6. cites the 10th. Catechetical Diſcourſe.

[e] Many things that diſpleaſe them.] The real Preſence, Tranſubſtantiation, the Sacrifice of the Maſs, the Ceremonies, Prayers for the Dead, the Exorciſms, Invocation of Saints, the Honour due to Relicks, the Celibacy of Prieſts, the Veneration of the Croſs, &c. are Opinions which the Calviniſts cannot endure, and they are mightily troubled to ſee them eſtabliſhed by an Author of the 4th. Age of the Church.

St. Cyril of Jeruſalem.

overthrow their Authority, are too ſlight [f], to call in queſtion the Truth; and the Intereſt which they have to oppoſe them, renders their Cenſure ſuſpected. Their endeavours are chiefly againſt the 5 Myſtagogical Catechiſms, which are not indeed cited by the Ancients, as the firſt Diſcourſes are. But the Agreement of the Stile [g] ſhows, that they are the ſame Authors; and the end of the 18th. Catechetical Diſcourſe [h], demonſtrates it clearly: For there he promiſes to compoſe 5 other Inſtructions after Eaſter, whereof he tells you the Subjects, which are very near a-kin to the Subjects of thoſe which we ſtill have. In ſhort, he cites the firſt in the laſt; and ſince the laſt are promiſed in the firſt, and theſe again quoted in the laſt, Who can doubt but they are all the ſame Author's [i]? And ſince they cannot deny, but the firſt which have gone under the Name of St. Cyril, ever ſince Theodoret's time, are Genuine, they muſt by conſequence confeſs, that the 5 laſt belong to the ſame Author.

The Eighteen firſt Catechetical Inſtructions are addreſs'd to thoſe of the Catechumens, who are call'd the Elect, or the Enlightned; that is to ſay, thoſe that have paſs'd through all the other degrees of Catechumens, and are now inſtructed in order to receiving Baptiſm within a little time: For the Ancient Church did not give Baptiſm immediately to all thoſe who deſir'd it, but only to thoſe who had given ſigns of a ſincere Faith, and of the change of their Life, by a long Tryal, and by a courſe of Penance. So when an Infidel offer'd himſelf to be admitted among the number of Chriſtians, they begun with diſcovering to him in particular the blindneſs wherein he had hitherto been, but they did not permit him to enter into the Church to hear the Publick Exhortations. Afterwards when he was ſufficiently undeceiv'd of his old Errors, and deſir'd to be inſtructed in the Truth, he was permitted to enter into [f] The Conjectures which they alledge are too ſlight.] They ſay, That there is a Greek Catalogue wherein they are attributed to John of Jeruſalem; but of what Authority is a Catalogue, the Antiquity whereof is not known? Can it be oppoſed to the Teſtimony of Theodoret, who cites thoſe Catechetical Inſtructions under the Name of St. Cyril, and to that of St. Jerom, who teſtifies, That this Father wrote one? There is no probability, ſays Rivet, that the Care of Inſtructing the Catechumens ſhould be entruſted to a young Man. Why not? If he was capable of it, as it appears St. Cyril was. If there was no probability of it, Why does St. Jerom aſſure us, that it was ſo? 'Tis ſaid, adds Rivet, That they were ſpoken ex-tempore, and St. Jerom ſays, that he wrote them. A pleaſant objection indeed! as if it were not known that Authors do often ſet down thoſe Diſcourſes afterwards in writing, which they ſpoke without premeditation at firſt: The ſame Rivet is of Opinion, that thoſe places which concern Celibacy, Virginity, Relicts, the Croſs of Jeſus Chriſt, &c. are added in theſe Catechetical Diſcourſes; what proof has he for this, but only that thoſe things do not pleaſe him? He accuſes St. Cyril of Blaſphemy, becauſe he ſays, If the Virgin Mary were ſo much honoured for carrying Jeſus Chriſt the ſpace of nine Months, we ought yet more to honour Chriſtians for keeping their Virginity for very many years. This thought is not exact, 'tis a little too blunt; but ſuch things did often eſcape the Fathers in their Sermons, and it is capable of a good Sence. Another Objection of Rivet's is this: This Author ſays, That the Wood of the Croſs is amongſt us to this Day. Now theſe Words to this Day cannot agree, ſays he, to St. Cyril, who might be preſent at the finding of the Croſs. To which I anſwer, That the words, to this Day, reſpect the time which was already paſt, ſince the Paſſion of Jeſus Chriſt. To conclude, All theſe Catechetical Diſcourſes, have the Character of Antiquity; they are ſimple and natural, and explain the Doctrines of the Church after the ancient Way. The Author ſays at the beginning of his 6th. Catechetical Diſcourſe, That he wrote 70 Years after the beginning of the Hereſie of the Manichees: The Canon of the Sacred Books which he recites, is ancient; and the Creed which he makes uſe of, does not betray his Age: The manner in which he explains the Myſtery of the Trinity, ſhows, that he was a Catholick, but that he managed himſelf ſlily; for tho' he always confirms the Divinity of the Son and the Holy Spirit, he does not always make uſe of the Word Conſubſtantial. The two Arguments of Rivet, againſt the Myſtagogical Diſcourſes, are as weak as the former. The Ancients, ſays he, do not diſtinguiſh theſe two kinds of Diſcourſes. But neither do they ſay, that there was but one: St. Jerom, who is the only Perſon that ſpeaks of them all, ſays only, That St. Cyril wrote Catechetical Diſcourſes, without telling how many: The other Authors ſpeaks of thoſe which they had occaſion to quote. 2. He ſays, That the laſt are ſhort, whereas the firſt are very long. But this is no Argument why they ſhould not be all the ſame Author's. The three firſt to the Illuminated, are ſhorter than the laſt, and are not much longer than the Myſtagogical Diſcourſes. The time, and Matter that he writes about, makes any Author longer or ſhorter; and after Eaſter, the Inſtructions ought not to be ſo long. Aubertin adds, That Prævotius ſays he ſupplied many Letters and corrected many places. And what follows from thence? Is there any one Book to which the firſt Publiſhers have not done the ſame thing? They have added ſometimes half a word, or a whole one, or ſometimes ſome words which they thought neceſſary. But they cannot be ſuppos'd to add whole Periods, Pages and Books; and indeed if ye compare the Edition of Prævotius, with that of Morellus, which preceeded it, made by a Manuſcript of Monſieur De Meſmes, and with the Latin Verſions made from other Manuſcripts, you may ſee that the Differences among them are of very ſmall Conſequence, and that they neither alter the Sence nor the Doctrine of this Father.

[g] But the Agreement of the Stile, &c.] There is the ſame Stile, the ſame Method, the ſame Air of Writing. The Stile both of the one and the other is familiar and unaffected: He explains the Myſteries by Paſſages of Scripture, and moralizes them after the ſame manner in them all.

[h] The end of the 18th. Catechetical Diſcourſe.] After Eaſter, ſays he, with the help of God, you ſhall hear other Catechetical Lectures; First, about what is done before Baptiſm. This is the Subject of the Firſt Catechetical Diſcourſe. Secondly, To explain how ye are purified from your Sins by the Baptiſm of Water. That's the Subject of the Second. Thirdly, How ye have received the Seal of the Holy Spirit. That's the Subject of the Third. And Laſtly, Concerning the Holy myſteries of the Altar. That's the Subject of the Two laſt. But beſides; the Order which he promiſed to obſerve in ſpeaking of Holy Myſteries, is that which is obſerved in theſe two Catechetical Diſcourſes.

[i] Who can doubt but they are all the ſame Author's.] Since he cites the firſt Inſtructions in the laſt, and declares at the beginning of the firſt Catechetical Diſcourſe, That he delay'd to inſtruct them perfectly in Divine Myſteries, till they were baptiz'd; and toward the end of the ſame Diſcourſe, he ſays, That he had explained the Creed in the preceeding Diſcourſes.

the

St. Cyril of Jeruſalem.

the Church, but only to hear the Sermons, without being preſent, at any of the Prayers: This ſort of Catechumens were call'd Hearers, becauſe they heard the Inſtructions which were given in the Church. The Third Rank of Catechumens was, that of thoſe that were preſent at the Prayers, who were call'd the Supplicants or the Proſtrati, becauſe they were preſent at the Prayers of the Church till the Offertory, and they kneel'd and proſtrated themſelves on the Ground to receive the Bleſſing of the Biſhop. In the mean time they were inſtructed in the Doctrine of the Church, and their Behaviour and Actions were carefully inſpected, and when they found them diſpos'd to receive Baptiſm, they were permitted to deſire it, and to give in their Names, that they might be admitted to it. Thoſe who did ſo, were call'd Competentes, that is, Competitors; and if their Petition was admitted, they were call'd Elect; and then they were prepar'd to receive Baptiſm by Inſtructions, by Exorciſms, and by many Ceremonies. Theſe are all the Degrees that can be diſtinguiſh'd among the Catechumens: But commonly the Fathers without inſiſting on theſe Diſtinctions, call'd thoſe Catechumens, who were either Hearers, or Partakers only of the Prayers; and they gave the Name of Competitors, to thoſe who were in a Condition to receive Baptiſm. The laſt are they whom St. Cyril calls Φωτιζόμενοι, that is, Enlightned, becauſe they were already inſtructed in the Doctrine of the Church, and had given in their Names at the beginning of Lent, to be baptized at Eaſter, according to Cuſtom. 'Twas to ground them well in our Myſteries, and diſpoſe them to receive Baptiſm with Purity, that St. Cyril compos'd thoſe Inſtructions, as he himſelf teſtifies in his Preliminary Diſcourſe, in which he treats of thoſe Diſpoſitions that they ought to bring with them to Baptiſm, and of the Neceſſity of hearing Inſtruction. He exhorts them to purifie themſelves from their Sins, and to embrace a truly Chriſtian Life, if they would have Baptiſm profitable unto them. He admoniſhes them not to approach this Sacrament, if their Souls were ſtill polluted with heinous Sins, and they perſever'd ſtill in their wicked Deſigns and their ſinful Cuſtoms. He tells them that they deceiv'd themſelves, if they imagin'd that they ſhould receive the Fruit and Effects of Baptiſm while they continued in this ſtate. If ye are ſtill, ſays he, of the ſame wicked diſpoſition of which ye have always been, in vain do ye think that ye ſhall receive the Grace of Baptiſm: Ye ſhall be waſh'd with thoſe Waters, but ye ſhall not receive the Holy Spirit. Therefore if any of you finds himſelf troubled with ſome ſecret Diſeaſe in his Mind, let him take a Remedy. Ye have yet time, the Church offers you a Penance of Four Days. Ye may during this time, retire to do Penance, and after that re-enter into the Rank where ye were, To be baptiz'd at Whitſuntide. He adds, That ſince they cannot receive Baptiſm but once only, (for none but Hereticks, ſays he, are Re-baptiz'd, becauſe the Baptiſm which they have received out of the Church is no Baptiſm) they muſt take good heed that they do not receive it in vain. After this, he explains the Diſpoſition which they ought to have, that this Sacrament may be profitable to them. God hath ſaid, I require nothing of you but a Good Heart: Say not ye, How is it that my Sins ſhall be forgiven me? I declare it unto you, It is by Faith and a good Diſpoſition. What is there more eaſily to be had? forſake then preſently your infamous Company, give over your obſcene Diſcourſe, avoid Covetouſneſs and the love of Riches, come and hear Inſtruction with diligence and delight, be careful to receive the Exorciſms, though ye have been already ſolemnly exorciſ'd. Nothing is more wholſom than this Ceremony; for as the Gold is purified by Fire, ſo the Soul is purified by Exorciſms. He exhorts them afterwards to hear Inſtruction with Attention. He makes them underſtand that there is a great difference between Catechizing and Sermons; for if it happens that any one does not apply his Mind to a Sermon, or neglects to hear it, 'tis eaſie to recover that loſs, becauſe he may hear to Morrow the ſame thing; but when all the Myſteries which are neceſſary to be known for receiving Baptiſm are explain'd in their Order, by Catechizing, if perhaps you neglect to hear any one of them, you cannot return to it again; and there is ſuch an eſſential Connexion of all theſe Myſteries one with another, that if you do not underſtand any one of them, you are in danger of underſtanding nothing of all the reſt. He exhorts them, to ſay nothing to Infidels nor Catechumens of what they ſhall hear, to behave themſelves modeſtly when they come into the Church, before the Exorciſms are begun, and not to entertain themſelves with Profane News; but to read there ſome uſeful Book, to Sing or to Pray, and to conſider themſelves always as in the preſence of God, while they are there. He exhorts them to Pray always, that they may ſhun the ſnares of the Devil, and to watch continually over themſelves, leſt thay fall into Temptation. Theſe are, ſays he in the Concluſion, the beſt Exhortations and Inſtructions which we can give you, that you may not Build upon Chaff, Hay or Stubble, leſt your Building be conſum'd when it ſhall paſs through the Fire. All that I can do, is to exhort you, 'tis your part to Labour, and God's to Perfect. Raiſe up your Minds, direct your Intentions, prepare your Hearts, it is for your Souls that you fight, and they are Eternal Treaſures which you hope for.

The Firſt Lecture is alſo an Exhortation to thoſe that are to be baptized, to prepare themſelves by a Holy Life and by Good Works, that ſo they may receive the Grace of Baptiſm. It is compos'd upon a Leſſon taken out of the Firſt Chapter of Iſaiah, Verſe 16. which begins with theſe Words, Waſh you, make you clean, put away the evil of your doings, &c. He exhorts them wholly to put off the Old-man, ſincerely to renounce all Sin, and to ſpend in the Exerciſes of Piety the 40 Days that are appointed to Prepare them for Baptiſm.

The Second is concerning Sin and Penance. He teaches them, That Sin is committed voluntarily by the bad uſe we make of our Free-Will; That the Devil was the firſt Sinner, that afterwards he made the firſt Man ſin; That by the Sin of the firſt Man, all Men fell under Blindneſs and Death; That he who rais'd Lazarus rais'd our Souls, and deliver'd them from Sin by his Blood; That therefore we ought not to deſpair, whatſoever Sins we have committed, but to truſt to the Mercy of God, and to have recourſe to the Remedy of Repentance. He relates many Examples of God's Mercy towards the greateſt Sinners: He alledges alſo the Example of the Angels, to whom he thinks God pardon'd many

St. Cyril of Jeruſalem.

many Faults. He adds towards the end, the Example of St. Peter, and concludes with theſe words; Theſe are, my Brethren, the many Examples of Sinners whom God hath pardon'd, as ſoon as they repented. Do you alſo confeſs your Sins unto the Lord, and you ſhall obtain the Kingdom of Heaven, and enjoy the Heavenly Reward together with all the Saints in Jeſus Chriſt, to whom be Glory for ever and ever.

The Third Lecture is concerning the Neceſſity of Baptiſm, and of Penance which ought to precede it. You muſt prepare your ſelves, ſays he, by Purity of Conſcience; for you ought not to conſider the External Baptiſm, but the Spiritual Grace which is given with the Water, that is Sanctified by the Invocation of the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghoſt. The Water waſhes the Body, but the Spirit ſanctifies the Soul, that we being purified, may become worthy to approach unto God. You cannot be perfect unleſs you be ſanctified by the Water and the Spirit. So, if any one be baptiz'd without having the Holy Spirit, he receives not the Grace of Baptiſm, and likewiſe if any one receive not Baptiſm, though his Converſation were never ſo well order'd, he ſhall not enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. This Diſcourſe is bold, but it is not mine but Jeſus Chriſt's, who has pronounc'd this Sentence, when he ſaid, Except a Man be born again of Water and the Holy Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. He proves this Truth by the Example of Cornelius, then he ſhows the Neceſſity of Baptiſm by Water, and ſays, That none but Martyrs only can enjoy the Kingdom of Heaven without being baptized. [The Ancients generally believed that Martyrdom was that Baptiſm by Fire which John Baptiſt foretold, Mat. 3. 11. and that was the Cup which our Saviour foretold Zebedee's Children that they ſhould drink, and the Baptiſm wherewith they were to be baptized.] He teaches, That ſince Jeſus Chriſt was baptized to ſanctifie the Waters of Baptiſm, we muſt deſcend into the Water to be ſanctified, and as the Holy Spirit did then viſibly appear, ſo now he deſcends likewiſe, though after an inviſible manner, upon thoſe that are baptized, if they be well prepared for it. In ſhort, he ſtill exhorts thoſe to whom he ſpeaks, to prepare themſelves in the remaining part of Lent, that ſo they may obtain by Baptiſm the Pardon of their Sins, and the Grace of the Holy Spirit.

St. Cyril begins in the Fourth Catechetical Diſcourſe, with the Explication of the Articles of our Faith. He ſays in his Exordium, 'That the worſhip of God conſiſts in two things, in the belief of 'thoſe Doctrines that Religion teaches us, and in the practice of Good Works; That Faith is unprofitable without Good Works, and that Good Works will prevail nothing without Faith. He obſerves, 'That the Articles of Faith are oppoſed by Pagans, Jews and Hereticks; and therefore it is neceſſary 'to propoſe it, and explain it to thoſe that enter into the Church'. He ſays, That before he explains them more largely, he will firſt give a Summary of them, and prays thoſe that are already inſtructed, to hear with Patience his Catechetical Diſcourſes. Afterwards he ſummarily explains the chief Doctrines of our Religion. He inſtructs them concerning the Divinity, 'That there is but one God 'only, the Creator of all things, who is every where preſent, who knows all things, who can do all things, 'who never changes, who will reward the Good and puniſh the Wicked, &c. He adds, That we muſt 'believe alſo in Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, the only Son of God, God begotten of God, like in all things 'to him who begat him, who was from all Eternity, who ſitteth now at his right hand and reigneth 'with him; That we muſt not believe, that the Son is of another Nature than the Father, nor confound the Perſons of the Father and the Son; That he is the Word, and the Word of God, but a 'Word ſubſiſting, which is nothing like to the word of Men; That this Word was truly and really 'united to the Humane Nature; That he aſſum'd real Fleſh from the Virgin; That he was truly Man, 'ſubject to Humane Infirmities, and to Death it ſelf; That he was crucified for our Sins; That he was 'buried in the Grave, and that he deſcended into Hell to deliver the juſt, who had been ſhut up 'there a long time with Adam; That he was truly riſen from the Dead; That being aſcended into 'Heaven, he was worſhipp'd by all the World, and that he ſhall come again to judge the Quick and 'the Dead, and to eſtabliſh an Eternal Kingdom. Concerning the Holy Spirit, he Teaches, That we 'ought to have the ſame Notions of him as of the Father and the Son: That he is One, Indiviſible and 'Almighty; That he knows all things; That he deſcended in the form of a Dove upon Jeſus Chriſt; 'That he ſpoke by the Prophets; That he Sanctifies the Soul in Baptiſm, and that he ought to be 'honoured as the Father and the Son, being one and the ſame Divinity. He exhorts his Auditors to 'hold faſt this Creed, and gives them Notice, That he will prove it in the following Diſcourſe by Teſtimonies of Scripture': For, ſays he, we ought not to teach any thing concerning Divine Myſteries, but what we can confirm by the Teſtimonies of Scripture. Do not believe what I ſay, if I do not prove it by the Holy Scriptures.

St. Cyril, after having inform'd thoſe whom he inſtructs, what they ought to believe concerning the Divinity, acquaints them with the Knowledge of their own Natures, teaching them that they are compos'd of Body and Soul; That the Soul is immortal, becauſe of Jeſus Chriſt who has given it Immortality; That it is free, and has the power of doing Good and Evil; That it did not Sin before it came into the World; That the Souls of Men and Women are of the ſame Nature; That the Body is the Work of God; That it is not Wicked by Nature; That when it meets with a holy Soul, it is the Temple of the Holy Spirit, and that we ought to be very watchful leſt we defile it by Uncleanneſs. He occaſionally takes Notice, 'That Virginity is the more perfect State, but that we ought not to 'blame Marriage; That Married Perſons may hope for Salvation, provided they uſe Marriage aright; 'That in Order to their living Holily in this ſtate, they muſt abſtain ſometimes from the uſe of Marriage to give themſelves unto Prayer, and that their Intention ſhould not be to ſatisfie a brutal Paſſion, but to have Children. He adds, That we ought not to condemn even thoſe that proceed 'to Second Marriages, and that this weakneſs ſhould be pardon'd in thoſe who ſtand in need of this 'Remedy to avoid Fornication'.

As

As to what concerns Abſtinence from Meat, St. Cyril ſays, 'That Chriſtians do abſtain during their 'Faſts from Fleſh and Wine; but that they have no averſation to thoſe things, as if they were in 'themſelves Abominable; That they do not abſtain but to Merit the more, by deſpiſing what is 'agreeable to our ſenſe, that they may enjoy the heavenly Feaſt. He abſolutely forbids the Eating of 'things Sacrificed to Idols, and things Strangled. As for Cloaths, he deſires that they may be modeſt, and ſuch as may ſerve not to adorn but to cover the Body, and defend it from the Injuries of the Weather. He ſpeaks afterwards of the Reſurrection, and brings Examples to ſhow that it is not impoſſible. The Holy Scripture is the laſt thing of which he treats in this Lecture: He ſays, That the Old Teſtament is part of the Holy Scripture, and exhorts them not to read the Apocryphal Books: He informs them, That there are but 22 Canonical Books of the Old Teſtament, and obſerves, That they have been tranſlated by the LXX. He believes that this Tranſlation was made by Inſpiration, and that the Seventy Interpreters being ſhut up in ſeparate Cells, all their Verſions were found to agree together. He recommends the Reading of the Canonical Books, and Meditation upon them; He reckons amongſt this Number in the Old Teſtament the Book of Ruth, that of Eſther, Job and Baruch; but he does not reckon thoſe other Books which are not in the Hebrew Canon. The Canonical Books of the New Teſtament are according to him, The Four Goſpels, the Acts of the Apoſtles, the Seven Canonical Epiſtles, and the Fourteen Epiſtles of St. Paul, which in his time and in his Country were at the End of the New Teſtament, after the Canonical Epiſtles. He ſays nothing of the Revelation. He condemns Judicial Aſtrology, Necromancy, Publick Spectacles, Games, Uſury, Covetouſneſs, the other Superſtitions of the Jews and Pagans, and the Aſſemblies of Hereticks.

St. Cyril of Jeruſalem.

In the Fifth Lecture, after he has proved by many Examples the Neceſſity, and Vertue of Faith, he ſays, That we muſt continue in that Faith which we have received from the Church, and which is fortified with the Teſtimony of Holy Scripture. But, ſays he, becauſe Men cannot read the Scripture, ſome being hindred by their Ignorance, others by their Worldly Buſineſs; therefore all that we are oblig'd to believe is compriz'd in a few words. I pray you then to remember to fix it upon your Minds, and to be fully perſwaded that this is the only true Faith. Afterwards at your Leiſure ye may ſearch for the Proofs of it in the Holy Scripture. But at preſent do you acquieſce in the Doctrine which you have learn'd by Tradition, engrave it upon your Hearts, that you may perſevere in it with Piety: for if you remain in doubt and uncertainty, 'tis to be fear'd, that the Enemy will work your Perdition, and that Hereticks will overthrow that Doctrine which I have taught you.

The Sixth is concerning the Monarchy, or the Unity of God, againſt Pagans and Hereticks. He deſcribes the Errors both of the one and the other, and more particularly enlarges upon the Hereſie of the Manichees, and gives an account of its Original, Progreſs and Impiety. He produces a Fragment of the Diſpute of Archelaus againſt the Heretick Manes. He obſerves, That Men cannot comprehend the Nature and Eſſence of God.

In the Seventh, he explains how the Name of Father agrees to God. He obſerves that he has only one Son by Nature, who is Jeſus Chriſt, and that Men are his Children by Adoption. He takes occaſion from hence to exhort his Hearers to live worthy of the Title of the Sons of God, and to honour him, though of his good Pleaſure he choſe them to be his Children. At the ſame time he admoniſhes them to have a Reverence for their Fathers and Mothers.

In the Eighth he ſhows, That God is Almighty becauſe he can do all things, and all things depend on his Power.

The Ninth is upon theſe words, the Creator of all things viſible and inviſible. There he ſhows what cauſe we have to admire the Greatneſs and Beauty of God's Works.

The Tenth is upon theſe Words, in Jeſus Chriſt our only Lord. He ſays, That in order to the Pious Adoration of the Father, we muſt adore the Son alſo. He explains all the Names that are given him. He maintains, That 'twas the Son who appear'd to Adam and Moſes. He makes Moral Remarks upon the Name of Jeſus, and that of Chriſt. He produces many Proofs concerning Jeſus Chriſt, and places in this number the Wood of the Croſs, which, ſays he, is ſeen to this day amongſt us, and with thoſe who having taken of it here, have fill'd the whole World almoſt with it.

The Eleventh is concerning the Divinity of the Word, and his Eternal Generation: There he refutes the Error of the Arians, and proves that the Word is of the ſame Nature with the Father; That he was from all Eternity, and that he made all things: There he calls St. Peter the Prince or the Chief of the Apoſtles, and the Sovereign Preacher of the Church.

The Twelfth is concerning the Incarnation, where he ſhews by many Teſtimonies of Scripture; That Jeſus Chriſt was made Man for the Salvation of Mankind. He quotes ſome of the Prophecies that foretold the Incarnation of Jeſus Chriſt; and ſhews, That the time of the Meſſias's coming, the place where he was Born, his Condition, and the manner of his coming into the World, were foretold; he praiſes Virginity, and obſerves, That thoſe who perform'd the Sacerdotal Office, obſerv'd Celibacy.

In the Thirteenth, he relates the Prophecies which concern the Death and Paſſion of Jeſus Chriſt. He recommends to the Faithful, the Signing themſelves with the Sign of the Croſs on their Forehead, in Eating and Drinking, at their going out and coming in, at their lying down, &c. He calls this Sign, the Terror of Devils, and the Mark of the Faithful. He ſays, That it drives away Devils; That it cures Diſeaſes; That it defeats Inchantments, and that at one Day it will appear in the Heavens when Jeſus Chriſt ſhall come to judge the World.

He proves in the Fourteenth, the Reſurrection and Aſcenſion of Jeſus Chriſt, where he commends the Piety of thoſe Emperours, who built the Church of the Reſurrection at Jeruſalem, where he was, and adorned it with Gold and Silver.

The

St. Cyril of Jeruſalem.

The Fifteenth is concerning the Second coming of Jeſus Chriſt, of the End of the World, and of Anti-Chriſt, who will come, ſays he, after the Deſtruction of the Roman Empire. He ſays many more particulars of him, which he endeavours to prove by Prophecies, but the explications he gives of them are not very Solid. He obſerves, That the Schiſms which he then ſaw in the Church, made him fear that the Reign of Anti-chriſt was not far off. After this he Diſcourſes of the laſt Judgment and of the Eternal Kingdom of Jeſus Chriſt. He refutes the Opinion of Marcellus of Ancyra, who had ſaid, That the Son ſhould not Reign any more after the Day of Judgment. He makes very curious Remarks upon the particle Until, and ſhows, that it is not always excluſive, as when it is ſaid, That Death Reigned from Adam until Moſes, where the meaning is not, That it did not Reign after Moſes.

The Sixteenth Lecture, is concerning the Holy Spirit. He obſerves, That we ought to take good heed, leſt we ſay any thing through Ignorance or Error, which is contrary to the Belief we ought to have concerning the Holy Spirit, becauſe 'tis written, That the Blaſphemies which are ſpoken againſt him, are unpardonable. Therefore he declares, That he will ſay nothing of the Holy Spirit, but what is ſaid of him in the Holy Scripture, and that he will not enquire by an indecent Curioſity after that which is not written. 'Tis the Holy Spirit, ſays he, who dictated the Holy Scripture: he hath ſaid of himſelf what he would have us to know, and what we are capable of knowing about him. He begins with giving an Account of the Errors of Hereticks concerning the Holy Spirit, and afterwards recites what is ſaid of him in the Holy Scripture; he deſcribes his Effects, and attributes to him all the good Thoughts and good Actions of the Faithful.

He continues the ſame Subject in his 17th. Lecture, where he produces the Teſtimonies of our Lord concerning the Holy Spirit. He has exactly Collected in theſe two Catechetical Lectures, all that is ſaid of the Holy Spirit in the Old and New Teſtament. He teaches, That the Holy Spirit is not a Breath form'd by the Mouth of the Father and the Son, but that he is a Perſon ſubſiſtent of the ſame Nature with the Father and the Son. He calls St. Peter, the Prince of the Apoſtles, and the Porter of Heaven. He obſerves, That the Determination of the Council of Jeruſalem, was a General or Oecumenical Law, which all the Earth had, and did ſtill obſerve.

The Laſt of thoſe Lectures which are addreſs'd to the Enlightned, is of the Reſurrection, of the Church, and of Eternal Life. 'In the beginning he ſhows, That the hope of the Reſurrection is the 'Foundation of all good Actions, becauſe the expectation of this reward, excites Men to labour for 'it. 'Twas this that made him ſay, that the Faith of the Reſurrection is a great encouragement, 'and a very neceſſary Doctrine.' He brings for proof of the Reſurrection, the Juſtice of God, which requires, that Sinners which are not puniſh'd in this World ſhould be puniſh'd in another, and that the Righteous who are miſerable here below, ſhould be recompenc'd in another Life. He ſays, That all Men have naturally ſome Knowledge of the Reſurrection, and that upon this Account, they have a horror of thoſe who rob the Dead. He brings many Illuſtrations of it taken from the changes in Nature. He does not forget the Example of the Phœnix, for which he cites St. Clement for his Authority. He obſerves, That the Generation of Man, is no leſs wonderful than the Reſurrection, and that God who could Create the Univerſe of nothing, can eaſily raiſe a dead Man. After he has employ'd theſe Reaſons againſt the Pagans, he alledges againſt the Samaritans the wonderful Effects of the Divine Power related in the Old Teſtament, and proves the Reſurrection of the Dead by many paſſages of the Prophets. [This ſeems to be a miſtake; the Sadducees were the only Sect of the Jews that denyed a Reſurrection.] In ſpeaking of the dead Man, rais'd at the Sepulchre of Eliſha, he ſays, That by this Example we may know, that we ought not only to honour the Souls of the Saints, but alſo to ſhow Reverence to the Relicts of their Bodies, ſince they have ſuch Power and Virtue. The Second Part of this Inſtruction, is concerning the Catholick Church. He ſays, 'It is ſo called, becauſe it is ſpread 'over all the Earth; Becauſe it univerſally receives all the Articles of Faith; Becauſe it generally 'cures all Sins; and Laſtly, Becauſe it poſſeſſes all Graces, and all Virtues. He ſays, it is called the 'Church, becauſe it is an Aſſembly of the Faithful; That the Hereticks have alſo their Aſſemblies or 'their Churches; That to diſcern the one from the other, when you go to any place, you muſt not 'ask barely where is the Church, or the Houſe of the Lord, becauſe the Hereticks give this Name to 'their Temples; but you muſt ask where is the Catholick Church, becauſe this is a Name proper to 'this Holy Mother of all faithful Chriſtians, which is the Spouſe of Jeſus Chriſt. 'In ſhort, The laſt part of this Lecture, is of Eternal Life. 'Tis very Remarkable that in the Creed which St. Cyril uſed there is found Life Everlaſting, becauſe as we have obſerved in the Firſt Volume of our Bibliotheca, almoſt all the ancient Creeds, end with the Reſurrection of the Fleſh. St. Cyril adds to it Baptiſm, whereof he had already ſpoken, the Catholick Church and Life Everlaſting: He ſays upon the laſt Article, That the Eternal Life of Chriſtians is the Poſſeſſion of the moſt Holy Trinity. He concludes this Lecture with a Promiſe to his Auditors, that he would explain after Eaſter, the Sacred Myſteries which they were to receive upon the Chriſtian Altar, and with an Exhortation to rejoyce, becauſe the time of their Redemption, Salvation, and Regeneration approach'd.

The Five other Lectures which are call'd Myſtagogical, are addreſs'd by St. Cyril to the ſame Perſons after they had received the Grace of Baptiſm. The firſt is about the Vow which is made in Baptiſm to renounce the Devil, his Works and all his Pomps. He declares to his Auditors, the Importance of performing this Vow. He ſays, That the Works of the Devil are Sins, and that his Pomps are Shows, Plays and Profane Feaſts. There is in this firſt Lecture a Paſſage expreſly for Tranſubſtantiation: For, ſays he, as the Bread and Wine of the Euchariſt, which are nothing before the Invocation of the moſt Holy Trinity, but Bread and Wine, become after this Invocation, the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt. So thoſe Meats which ſerve for the Pomp of the Devil, though they be pure of their own Nature, be- come impure by the Invocation of Devils. [All theſe Paſſages are neceſſarily to be underſtood, according to thoſe Notions wherein the Chriſtians of that Age had been uſually Inſtructed.] St. Cyril of Jeruſalem.

come

In the Second, he treats of the Ceremonies and Effects of Baptiſm: He ſays, That the Catechumens after they were unclothed, were anointed from the Feet unto the Head, with exorciſed Oyl; That after this they were conducted to the Laver; That they were ask'd, if they believed in the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit; That after they had made Profeſſion of this Faith, they were plunged three times into the Water, and that they retir'd out of it by degrees, at three times likewiſe. He teaches them, That the Baptiſm of Jeſus Chriſt, does not only remit Sins as that of John the Baptiſt did, but alſo fills the Soul with the Gifts of the Holy Spirit, and makes us the Children of God by Adoption.

The Third is of Holy Chriſm, wherewith the Faithful were anointed immediately after they came out of the Waters of Baptiſm. He declares to them, That we ought not to imagine this to be common Oyl. For, ſays he, as the Bread of the Euchariſt after the Invocation of the Holy Spirit, is no more common Bread, but the Body of Jeſus Chriſt. So the Holy Chriſm after Conſecration, is no more common Oyl, but it is a Gift of the Holy Spirit, which has the Virtue to procure the preſence of the Divinity. So while the Forehead and other parts of the Body are anointed with this viſible Oyl, the Soul is ſanctified by this Holy and quickning Spirit. He obſerves afterwards, That they anointed the Forehead, the Ears, the Noſtrils, and the Breaſt.

The Fourth Lecture is of the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt; and the Fifth, of the Celebration of the Euchariſt. Theſe two Catechetical Lectures, are ſo clear, and ſo ſtrong, for eſtabliſhing the Doctrine and Diſcipline of the Church about the Euchariſt; That we cannot excuſe our ſelves from ſetting them down almoſt entire. Take then as follows the Tranſlation of them which has been Printed in the Office of the Holy Sacrament.

" The Doctrine of the bleſſed St. Paul alone, is ſufficient to give certain proofs of the Truth of the " Divine Myſteries, and the Church having judged you worthy to partake of them, ye are by this " means ſo cloſely united to Jeſus Chriſt, that ye are no more as one may ſay, but one and the ſame " Body and Blood with him. For this great Apoſtle ſays, in the place which we have already read, " That our Lord in the ſame Night wherein he was delivered up to his Enemies, having taken Bread " and given Thanks to God his Father, broke it and gave it to his Diſciples, ſaying to them, Take " and Eat, This is my Body. Afterwards he took the Cup, and having given Thanks, he ſaid unto " them, Take and Drink, This is my Blood. Seeing then, that he ſpeaking of the Bread, declared, " That it was his Body, Who ſhall ever dare to call in queſtion this Truth? And ſince that, he ſpeak- " ing of the Wine, has aſſured us ſo poſitively, That it was his Blood, Who can ever doubt of it? And " who ſhall dare to ſay, 'Tis not true that it was his Blood?

" Jeſus Chriſt being at a certain time in Cana of Galilee, changed there the Water into Wine by his " Will only; and ſhall we think, that it is not as worthy of Credit upon his own Word, that he " changed the Wine into his own Blood? If he being invited to a humane and earthly Marriage, " wrought there this Miracle, tho' no Perſon expected it from him there, ought not we much rather " to acknowledge, that he has given to the Children of the heavenly Spouſe, his Body to Eat, and " his Blood to Drink, that his Body and Blood may be nouriſhment to their Souls? For under the " ſpecies of Bread, he has given us his Body, and under the ſpecies of Wine, he has given us his Blood, " that ſo being made partakers of this Body and Blood, ye may become one Body and one Blood " with him. For by this means we become, as one may ſay, Chriſtiferi, that is to ſay, we carry Jeſus " Chriſt in our Body when we receive into our Mouth, and into our Stomach, his Body and his Blood: " And thus according to St. Peter, we are made partakers of the Divine Nature.

" Jeſus Chriſt ſpeaking at another time to the Jews, ſays to them, Unleſs ye Eat my Fleſh and " drink my Blood, ye ſhall have no Life in you. But theſe groſs and Carnal Men not underſtanding " the Words ſpiritually, were offended with them, and withdrew from him, becauſe they imagined, that " he would make them eat humane Fleſh by morſels. [Theſe Words do ſo fully explain St. Cyril's Sence, that they need no Comment. If the Jews were offended becauſe they did not ſpiritually underſtand thoſe Words of Jeſus Chriſt, when he talked to them in the 6th. of St. John; how much more according to this Father's way of Reaſoning, Would the Diſciples have been offended, if they had underſtood Jeſus Chriſt literally, when he Inſtituted the Sacrament of the Euchariſt?] " There were in the " Old Diſpenſation Loaves of Bread which were offer'd before God, and becauſe they pertain'd to " that Old Diſpenſation, they have ceas'd with it: But now in the New diſpenſation, there is Bread " from Heaven, and a Cup of Salvation, which Sanctifies Soul and Body. For as the Bread is the " Nouriſhment which is proper to the Body, ſo the Word is the Nouriſhment which is proper to the " Soul. Wherefore I conjure you, my Brethren, not to conſider them any more as common Bread " and Wine, ſince they are the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt according to his Word. For tho' your " Senſe inform you, that 'tis not ſo, yet Faith ſhould perſwade and aſſure you, that 'tis ſo. Judge " not therefore of this Truth by your Taſte, but let Faith make you believe with an entire certainty, " that you have been made worthy to partake of the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt.

" Let your Soul rejoyce in the Lord, being perſwaded of it as a thing moſt certain, that the Bread " which appears to our Eyes is not Bread, tho' our taſte do judge it to be ſo, but that it is the Body " of Jeſus Chriſt, and that the Wine which appears to our Eyes is not Wine, tho' our Senſe of Taſte " takes it for Wine, but that it is the Blood of Jeſus Chriſt.

" Ye have ſeen that a Deacon gives Water to waſh the Hands to the Prieſt that officiates, and to the " Prieſts that are about the Altar of God. Think you that this was done to cleanſe the Body? No, " not at all; For we do not uſe to be in ſuch a Condition, when we enter into the Church, as to ſtand

St. Cyril of Jeruſalem.

" in need of ſuch waſhing to make us clean; but this waſhing of the Hands ſignifies, that we ſhould " be clean from all our Sins; for the Hands ſignifying Actions, to waſh our Hands is nothing elſe but " to purifie our Works. Afterwards the Deacon having ſaid with a loud voice, Embrace and kiſs " one another with a kiſs of Peace, we do all mutually Salute with a holy Kiſs, becauſe it is the Token " of the perfect reconciliation of our Hearts, and of forgetting all the injuries that have been received. " After this, the Prieſt that officiates, ſays with a loud voice, Lift up your Hearts, becauſe in this tre- " mendous Moment chiefly, our Hearts ſhould be raiſed up to God, and not depreſs'd towards the " things of this World. Therefore the Prieſt requires all thoſe that are preſent at the Sacrifice, to " baniſh from their Minds at this time, all Thoughts of the World, and all the Cares of their Dome- " ſtick Affairs, that their Hearts may be in Heaven, in the preſence of God who hath teſtified ſo great " Love to Mankind. At theſe words of the Prieſt, ye Anſwer, We lift up our Hearts unto the " Lord; and ſo ye profeſs to do what he has ſaid. The Prieſt adds, Let us give Thanks unto the Lord. " And we ought indeed, to give thanks to him, that we, unworthy as we are of ſo rare and ſo excel- " lent a Gift, are honoured with the Participiation of it; that he of his Goodneſs has reconciled us " who were Enemies to himſelf, and that he deſigns to make us who have been ſo great Sinners, be- " come his Children by the Spirit of Adoption which he communicates to us. Ye anſwer at theſe words " of the Prieſt, 'Tis juſt and reaſonable to give Thanks unto him: For when we give Thanks to God, " we do a thing that is juſt, and which we are obliged to do; but when God beſtows upon us ſo great " Bleſſings he does it not out of Juſtice, but out of pure Grace and Favour.

" Afterwards, we repeat the Sacred Hymn which the Seraphims ſing in Heaven, in honour of the " Three Perſons of the Trinity, that ſo by this moſt heavenly Song, we may communicate with the " ſublime Hoſt of Angels, and that being Sanctified more and more by theſe moſt Spiritual Hymns, " we may become the fitter to pray unto ſo Good and ſo Gracious a God, that he would ſend down the " Holy Spirit upon thoſe things that we offer unto him, and that he would make the Bread be- " come the Body of Jeſus Chriſt, and the Wine his Blood: For whatſoever receives the Impreſſion of " the Holy Spirit, is ſanctified and changed. [This ſhew's againſt thoſe who urge St. Cyril's Words for Tranſubſtantiation, that he did not think the change of the Elements (whatever it is) depends ſolely upon the Prieſt's repeating the Words of Conſecration.] " Now when this Spiritual Sacrifice is " ended, and this unbloody Worſhip which is given to God by means of the Expiatory Victim is con- " cluded, Then we pray to him for the univerſal Peace of all the Churches, for the Tranquility of the " whole World, for Kings, for their Armies and their Allies, for the Sick and Afflicted, and in a word, " for all thoſe that need God's help. And we ſay unto God, Lord, we all pray unto thee, and offer " up this Sacrifice, that by commemorating thoſe who are dead before us, viz. the Patriarchs, Prophets, " Apoſtles and Martyrs, you may receive our Prayers Graciouſly, for the merit of their Prayers: Then " we pray for the Holy Fathers and the Biſhops that are dead, and in ſhort, for all thoſe that are de- " parted this Life in our Communion, believing that their Souls receive very great Relief, by the Pray- " ers that are offered for them in this holy and tremendous Sacrifice which is upon the Altar. This " I ſhall eaſily make you underſtand by an Example: For I know there are many who ſay, What " good can it do to a Soul which is departed out of this Life, whether with Sins or without them, to " remember it at this Sacrifice? But tell me, I pray you, If a King had ſent into baniſhment ſome Per- " ſons that had offended him, and their Friends and Relations ſhould preſent him with a Crown of " great Price to appeaſe his Anger, Don't you think, that upon their Account, the King would ſhow " ſome Favour to the guilty Perſons, and at leaſt mitigate their Pains? So do we addreſs our Prayers " to God for thoſe that are dead, tho' they were Sinners, not by preſenting to him a Crown, but by " offering up to him Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, who was ſacrificed for our Sins, that ſo he who is ſo Merciful " and Good, may become Gracious to them as well as to us. After this you ſay, Our Father which art " in Heaven, &c.

" When the Lord's Prayer is ended, the Prieſt ſays, Holy things are for the Holy; that is, The " things which are offered upon the Altar, being ſanctified by the deſcent of the Holy Spirit, are for " you that are Holy, by the Infuſion of the ſame Holy Spirit which has been given you; and thus it " is, that Holy things are for them that are Holy. Then ye anſwer, Jeſus Chriſt alone is Holy; He " only is the Lord and Maſter. And 'tis not without reaſon, that ye ſpeak after this manner, becauſe " indeed, there is none truly Holy, but he only who is ſo of himſelf, and by his own Nature; " and as for you, how Holy ſoever you be, you are not ſo by your own proper Nature, but only " by the participation of Holineſs, by the ſpiritual Exerciſes which you perform, and by the Prayers " which you addreſs to his Supream Majeſty. After this, you hear moſt heavenly and divine Muſick, in- " viting you to partake of the Sacred Myſteries, by chanting forth theſe words; Taſte and ſee how " good the Lord is. Think you now that you are requir'd to diſcern this by the Senſe of Taſte? No, " by no means; but by the Teſtimony of Faith which is certain, and leaves no doubt. For when you " take them, ye are not commanded to take the Bread and Wine, but to take the Body and Blood of " Jeſus Chriſt, which they repreſent. [One that believes with the Church of Rome, cannot ſay that the Bread and Wine repreſent the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt.] " Now when you approach to Com- " municate, you muſt not come there with your Hands expanded, nor your Fingers open, but ſup- " porting your right Hand which is to contain ſo great a King, with your left; you receive the Body " of Jeſus Chriſt, into the hollow of this Hand, ſaying Amen. Then after you have taken Care to " Sanctifie your Eyes by the touch of ſo Holy and Venerable a Body, you Communicate of it by " eating it. But take heed that nothing of it falls aſide, conſidering the loſs of the leaſt crum, as if " you loſt ſome of your Members. If any one ſhould give you Ingots of Gold, What Care would " you take to watch them, that nothing of them ſhould be loſt? What Precaution then ought we to use, to keep the least Crum of a thing that is infinitely more dear and precious than Gold and Diamonds, from falling down? After you have thus communicated of the Body of Jesus Christ, approach to the Cup of his Blood, not by stretching forth your hands, but by bowing your selves as it were to Adore him, and do him Homage, and then say, Amen. Then Sanctifie your selves by the Touch of the Blood of Jesus Christ which you receive, and while your Lips are wet, dry them with your hand, and carry it immediately to your Eyes, your Forehead, and your other Organs of sense, to consecrate them. In a word, while you wait for the last Prayer of the Priest, return thanks to God that he has made you worthy to partake of so great and so sublime Mysteries.

" to

St. Cyril of Jerusalem.

I shall not stay to make all the Reflections upon these Passages which have been already made by the most able Defenders of the Church, being perswaded that the Plainness of these words exceeds all that can be said, and that Men need only Eyes to convince them that St. Cyril taught the Real Presence, and to make them acknowledge, that the Ceremonies of the Mass are very ancient in the Church.

We have a Letter of St. Cyril to Constantius, upon the wonderful Apparition of a Luminous Cross, which was seen over the City of Jerusalem, mention'd by Sozomen in Ch. 4. of the 4th. Book of his History, where he also observes, That the Emperour was advertis'd of it by St. Cyril. In this Letter he gives great Commendations to the Emperour Constantius; he says, That the Cross of Jesus Christ was found in the time of the Emperour Constantine; he describes the Apparition of the Sign of the Cross, and concludes with glorifying the Consubstantial Trinity. Rivet rejects also this Letter as a Supposititious Writing, and gives no other Reason for his Opinion, but the great Praises which it gives to the Emperour Constantius. [Nazianzen commends Constantius in his Invectives against Julian in as high terms as 'tis possible, and yet they were never questioned.] But this is not a sufficient Proof, since we commonly speak so to Princes, and St. Athanasius and St. Hilary did not use to do otherwise, even after this Emperour had declar'd himself more openly against the Faith of the Church: For this Letter, if it is true, was written a little after St. Cyril was Bishop of Jerusalem.

We have also a Letter of the Presentation of Jesus Christ in the Temple, which goes under the Name of St. Cyril of Jerusalem, and nothing hinders us to attribute it to him. But we cannot say this of the Letter written in the Name of St. Cyril of Jerusalem to St. Augustine, concerning the Miracles of St. Jerom. Though this Letter was not so ridiculously written as it is, the Title alone would show that it is a gross imposture, since St. Cyril was dead before St. Jerom.

The Stile of St. Cyril's Catechetick Lectures, is Simple and Natural. 'Tis easie to perceive that they were written in hast, and without much Premeditation. Though they do not dive deeply into the Mysteries, yet they explain them very clearly, and they contain much Learning. One may see there upon every Subject a most exact and exquisite Collection of Passages of Scripture. He sets down the Opinions of the Hereticks and refutes them solidly. He makes very judicious remarks, and explains many Passages of Scripture. I say nothing particularly of his Doctrine, because it is sufficiently explain'd in the Extracts, which we have taken out of his Lectures.

Joannes Grodecius was the first who translated and publish'd the Catechetical Discourses of St. Cyril, from a Greek Manuscript of Cardinal Hosius, the Pope's Legat at the Council of Trent. They were printed in the Year 1564. at Antwerp and at Paris; In the Year 1560. at Vienna, and in 1584 at Paris. The Original Greek appear'd quickly after the Latin Version, for Morellus printed the 11 first Catechetical Discourses, and the Five last in the Year 1564, from a Manuscript out of Monsieur de Mesmes's Library: They were also printed with a Latin Translation in the same Year at Cologn 1564. But at last Prevotius having found the Greek of all the Catechetical Discourses of St. Cyril in the Manuscripts of the Vatican Library, he printed them at Paris by Morellus in the Year 1609. This Volume is in Quarto, and the Version of Grodecius in one Page, answering to the Greek Text in the other. 'Twas this Edition which was follow'd by that of Paris in the Year 1631.

The Letter concerning the Sign of the Cross, was printed apart by Morellus, and since joyn'd to the Catechetical Discourses of St. Cyril. The Oration concerning the Presentation of Jesus Christ, was printed at Cologne by Birchmannus in the Year 1598. These Discourses are all in the Bibliothecæ Patrum.

St. EPHREM the Syrian, Deacon of Edessa.

St. Ephrem the Syrian, Deacon of Edessa.

ST. EPHREM was of Nisibis a City of Syria, or of some place thereabout. He was Born under the Reign of Constantine, he embrac'd a Monastick Life from his most tender Youth, and became in a little time the Governor and Superior of many Monks. Coming often to Edessa to visit the Church of that City, he was there ordain'd Deacon. He came also as far as Cæsarea of Cappadocia, where he was known and very well receiv'd by St. Basil, who had a most particular esteem for him. 'Tis said, That this Saint taught him Greek, and that he conferr'd upon him the Order of Priesthood; but this Report is not very certain, since the Ancients assure us, that he dyed a Deacon. Sozomen tells us, That when he was chosen Bishop of a City, he feign'd himself to be Mad, lest they should carry him away by force, and ordain him against his Will. I shall say nothing here of his Piety, his Charity, his Humility, the Austerity of his Life, nor of his other Christian and Religious Vertues, no more than of his remarkable Actions and his Miracles, because those things do not concern my Subject. I shall only apply my self to speak of his Writings, which were so famous according to the Testimony of St. Jerom, that they were publickly read in some Churches after the Reading of the Holy

St. Ephrem the Syrian, Deacon of Edeſſa.

Books, and which were ſo numerous that the whole World was full of them. He wrote them in Syriack, and they were tranſlated into Greek in his own time. Sozomen obſerves, That though he had never ſtudied, yet he had ſo many Beauties in his Stile, and ſo many Sublime Thoughts, that the Tracts of his Eloquence might be diſcern'd even in the Greek Tranſlation: and St. Jerom aſſures us, That having read the Verſion of his Treatiſe concerning the Holy Spirit, he perceived in the Tranſlation the Fineneſs of his Sublime Genius: St. Gregory Nyſſen who wrote a Panegyrick upon this Father, inſiſts chiefly upon his Doctrine and Writings. He praiſes the Purity of his Faith, and the Averſation he had to the Hereſies of Sabellius, Arius and Apollinarius. He ſays, That he refuted the Anomæans and the Novatians; and all his Writings are full of ſolid and convincing Proofs. He adds, That he had read and meditated more than any Perſon upon the Old and New Teſtament, and that he had wrote Expoſitions upon all the Holy Scripture, from the Beginning of Geneſis to the End of the New Teſtament; That he had alſo compos'd many lively and Pathetical Exhortations; That Tears and Sighs were very common and familiar with him, as may be ſeen in his Writings. For, ſays he, he does not only ſigh, when he ſpeaks of Morality and the Precepts of Life, but even in his Panegyricks; all his Diſcourſes are mixt with bemoaning and compaſſionate Expreſſions, which are able to move even the hardeſt Hearts. For who that is Proud, adds he, would not become the humbleſt of Men, by reading his Diſcourſe of Humility? Who would not be inflam'd with a Divine Fire, by reading his Treatiſe of Charity? Who would not wiſh to be chaſt in Heart and Spirit by reading the Praiſes he has given to Virginity? Who would not be frighted by hearing the Diſcourſe he has made upon the Laſt Judgment, wherein he has repreſented it ſo lively, that nothing can be added to it but the ſame thing? God gave him ſo Profound a Wiſdom, that though he had a wonderful facility of Speaking, yet he could not furniſh Expreſſions for the multitude of Thoughts that came into his mind. We have ſeen, as the ſame Father ſtill goes on, one of his Sermons, where he calls Apollinarius a Madman. He tells a very pleaſant Story of a trick that St. Ephrem put upon this Heretick. He ſays, That the Heretick had written two Books, wherein were all the Reaſons and Paſſages of Scripture, that he made uſe of to defend his Error, and which he had committed to the Cuſtody of a Woman; That St. Ephrem pretending that he was of the ſame Judgment with Apollinarius, had borrowed them of this Woman, and that before he reſtor'd them, he glued all the Leaves faſt to one another: That this Woman ſeeing the Books bound up after the ſame manner, perceiv'd nothing of what was done, but gave them as they were to Apollinarius, to make uſe of them in a publick Conference which he was to have with a Catholick, and that then the Heretick not being able to open them, was forc'd to withdraw with ſhame. The quickneſs of St. Ephrem's Wit appeared alſo in the Syriack Verſes which he made in his own Language, in imitation of Hammonius the Son of Bardeſanes, who had compos'd many Hymns which the Syrians Sung with Delight. St. Ephrem perceiving that this Author had cunningly interſpers'd in thoſe Prayers, ſome Errors of his Father, and of the Greek Philoſophers, fearing leſt the Chriſtians of Syria, might fall inſenſibly into theſe falſe Opinions, he endeavour'd with all his might to comprehend the Metre of theſe Verſes, and wrote other Books agreable to the Doctrine of the Church, as Hymns and the Encomiaſticks of the Saints, which were ſo well receiv'd by the Syrians, that they Sung them to the ſame Tunes with thoſe of Hammonius. 'Tis ſaid, That he compos'd almoſt 100000 Verſes of this Nature. Sozomen ſays alſo, That he wrote the Life of St. Julianus. To conclude, Photius in Volume 197 of his Bibliotheca, obſerves that he had read 50 Sermons of this Father.

It appears by what we have already ſaid, That Ephrem wrote Commentaries upon all the Bible, Treatiſes of Controverſie againſt many Hereticks, a Book of the Holy Spirit, a great many Diſcourſes and Inſtructions to the People, and to his Monks, ſome Panegyricks, many Treatiſes of Morality, and a great number of Hymns to be Sung in the Church: That all his Writings were compoſed in Syriack, and that the greateſt part of them were tranſlated into Greek while he was living. We have none of his Commentaries upon Scripture, nor his Treatiſes of Controverſie; but we have a great number of Diſcourſes of Moral Precepts, and of Hymns which have been tranſlated into Greek, and publiſh'd by Voſſius towards the end of the laſt Age, under St. Ephrem's Name. Some Criticks, to whom the Books concerning a Monaſtick Life are not agreeable, have pretended that all thoſe Books are Suppoſititious. Notwithſtanding 'tis very probable, that the greateſt part of them are truly St. Ephrem's, becauſe all the Characters that the Ancients give of the Writings of St. Ephrem, agree to theſe; ſo that 'tis eaſie to know them. 1. The Treatiſes of St. Ephrem were full of Figures and Ornaments, but yet without Fineneſs and Art; now theſe are all fill'd with Exclamations, Interrogations, Compariſons, Antitheſes and other Figures, which are groſly enough employ'd and without choice. 2. He had much Vivacity and Fire, which theſe are all full of. 3. St. Ephrem related many Paſſages of Scripture, and theſe Writings are oftentimes nothing elſe but a Collection. 4. St. Gregory Nyſſen ſays, That they were mix'd with bemoaning Expreſſions, with Sighs and Tears; That he ſpoke continually of Weeping even in his Panegyricks: This is properly the Character of the greateſt part of the Diſcourſes publiſh'd by Voſſius. 5. The ſame Father ſays, That he wrote Diſcourſes of Humility, Charity, in Praiſe of Virginity, and of the laſt Judgment. There are Diſcourſes upon all theſe Subjects amongſt thoſe that were publiſh'd by Voſſius, and have the ſame Character which this Father obſerv'd in St. Ephrem's Books; that is to ſay, that they are pathetical and moving. 6. He wrote many Hymns upon divers Subjects, and there are among the Books which go under his Name, many Pieces written in Verſe, and of a Poetical Stile. 7. His Teſtament which is related in this Edition, is the ſame with that which is quoted by St. Gregory Nyſſen, who produces two paſſages out of it, which are word for word in that which was publiſh'd by Voſſius. 8. We have among theſe Books, The Life of Julianus cited by Sozomen, B. III. of his Hiſtory, Ch. 14. In fine, The 49 Sermons of St. Ephrem, whereof Photius made an Extract, are found in theſe Works of St. Ephrem. The ſame Photius quotes a Diſcourſe of Humility divided into a 100 Chapters, which is in the second Tome, a Discourse upon the same Vertue, which is in the first Tome, and a Treatise of Vertues and Vices to the Metebian Monks, which is also in the first Volume, and which contains the same Matters in the same Order. These Reasons plainly show, that the greatest part of the Books, which at present go under St. Ephrem's Name, are the same with Gregory Nyssen, Theodoret, Sozomen and Photius, attributed to this Saint. Now what probability is there, that they should take the Works of another Author for those of St. Ephrem? St. Gregory Nyssen, could not be deceiv'd herein, who liv'd at the same time. What probability is there, that Photius, who was a very able Critick, and who distinguishes our St. Ephrem from the Patriarch of Antioch, who mentions the Works of the one and the other, in two different places of his Bibliotheca; What probability is there, I say, that he should quote a false Ephrem for a true one?

of

St. Ephrem the Syrian, Deacon of Edessa.

'Tis objected 1. That there is not found in his Works that Fire and Loftiness which are mention'd by St. Jerom and Sozomen, and that they seem to be rather Pious than Learned, according to the Judgment of Cardinal Bellarmin. I answer, That tho' there were not found in a Latin Version of the Works of any Author made from another Greek Version, all that Beauty and Loftiness which they had in their Original Language, we should not wonder at it: But those who object this, do not rightly apprehend the Sence of St. Jerom and Sozomen, and have neither a very nice Relish, nor a very right Judgment in this matter. For first of all, St. Jerom and Sozomen, tacitely confess, That the Translation of the Works of St. Ephrem made them lose some part of their Loftiness; but they only observe, That one might perceive some strokes of his Vivacity and Eloquence, even in the Translation it self. 2dly. St. Jerom says the same of the Book of the Holy Spirit, and not of the others. Now it may so happen, that this sublime Reasoning of St. Ephrem, appear'd more in his Dogmatical Books, than in his Discourses of Devotion, and in his Edifying Exhortations; such as all those are which are now extant. 3dly, 'Tis not true, that no Vein of Eloquence is to be discerned in them. The learned Photius did not think so. On the contrary, we may admire, says he, in the Exhortations of this holy Man, (which are a part of this Book which we now have) the force wherewith he perswades, his agreeable manner of expressing things, and the Pathetical Phrases that he makes use of. It is no wonder, that his Stile and his Figures, resemble those Homilies which are made off hand, and without premeditation: Neither must we throw this fault upon the Author, but upon the Interpreter, because those that are learned in the Syriack Tongue, know that they excel in abundance of Words, and in Figures of Rhetorick; so that 'tis hard to say, whether it be from their Language, or from his own Invention, that the strength and elevation of his Discourse proceeds. Moreover, we ought not in reading to look only upon the meanness of the Words, but to consider what Advantage and Profit may be reaped from the things that he has written. [Mr. Du Pin, seems to have forgot that he had named Cardinal Bellarmin just before.] This Reflection of Photius, who was a better Critick in this kind, than Rivet and the other Criticks of his way, informs us, that several strokes of the Elevation and Quickness of his Spirit, might be discerned in the Version of St. Ephrem's Discourses, and that one might there perceive the Genius of the Syriack Tongue; and that whatever meanness there may be in his Stile, it ought to be attributed to the Interpreter, and not to the Author.

'Tis objected also, That those Treatises were written by an Author who understood Greek, since he cites St. Irenæus, Ch. 8. of the Treatise of Vertue, and the Life of St. Anthony written in Greek by St. Athanasius, in Ch. 10. of the Treatise upon these words, Take heed to your selves: Now St. Ephrem did not understand Greek, say they, and by consequence these Treatises are none of his.

'Tis easie to answer this objection. 1. 'Tis not certain that St. Ephrem did not understand Greek: on the contrary, 'tis probable that a Man who was often among People that spoke Greek did understand their Language, tho' he was not able enough to write in that Tongue. 2. That though he did not understand Greek, yet he might get the Books of St. Irenæus, translated into Syriack; and 'tis probable, that for the use of the Monks of his Country, he procur'd a Syriack Version of the Life of St. Anthony, who was look'd upon as the Rule of all the Monks in the East.

3dly. They object to us the little Credit that ought to be given to those that have publish'd his Books: They say, We have them not, but as they come through the hands of the Modern Greeks, who are too much given to Cheat; and that the Latin Versions were made by Ambrosius Camaldulensis, and Vossius Tungrensis, who were Persons devoted to the Interests of the Court of Rome.

But why is it sufficient thus to alledge general and uncertain Reasons for rejecting any Books? If this be sufficient, What is there that we shall not doubt of? The Protestants will have Reason to reject all the Books of the Fathers, which have been publish'd by Catholicks, and Catholicks will have reason to reject all those that have been publish'd by the Protestants. Where shall we be then? This therefore is not the way: But we must suppose that both the one and the other have publish'd the Books which they found in the Manuscripts that fell into their hands; for there is no probability that one Man should be so impudent as to forge many Pieces, and pretend that he found them in Manuscripts; and tho' some Persons should be found capable of doing this, yet 'twere impossible, but their Imposture must be quickly discover'd. They must therefore have other Proofs, besides these general Accusations, to reject any Books as suppositious. But besides, when it is said that we have none of St. Ephrem's Writings, but through the hands of the Modern Greeks, that's a mistake. They were translated while he was alive, as appears by what we have already said. And whereas Ambrosius Camaldulensis and Vossius, are accus'd of being Impostors, 'tis easie to justifie them by the ancient Greek Manuscripts which are to be found in Libraries.

Lastly, Some places of the Books of this Father are produc'd, which seem to be mean and unworthy of him. 'Tis said, that there is nothing more ridiculous, than what he introduces the damn'd speaking, We salute you, O Saints, we salute you, O Apostles, &c. They add, that there are contradictions dictions in them, for in his Confeſſions, he accuſes himſelf of many Sins, and in his Teſtament he makes himſelf Innocent.

St. Ephrem the Syrian, Deacon of Edeſſa.

To anſwer this Objection in a word, I might ſay, That 'tis a very hard matter to avoid, but ſome weak Thoughts will be found in ſo great a Number of Books of Piety and Devotion. That if one would compare theſe Books with thoſe of our Age, which are of the ſame kind, they might ſee that the latter are infinitely more fill'd with falſe Thoughts, than thoſe of St. Ephrem. But the places which Rivet has choſe to oppoſe to us, are very weak Proofs. The wicked do not ſalute the Saints in the Treatiſe of Hell Torments; on the contrary, they bid them eternally adieu, after they had heard the Sentence of Condemnation: Neither is there any Contradiction between his Teſtament and his Confeſſions. He confeſſes both in the one and the other place with much humility, that he had ſpent his Life in Sin and Vanity. 'Tis true, that he ſays in his Teſtament, that he had not reproach'd any body, and that he had no quarrel with any of the Faithful; but then he ſays nothing contrary to this in his Confeſſions, and though he ſhould have ſaid it, yet he might ſpeak ſo in humility, as many pious Perſons do in this kind of Confeſſions, wherein they ſpeak oftentimes in the Perſon of another.

I ſhall now draw up a Catalogue, with an Account of the Subjects of St. Ephrem's Works, which are divided into three Tomes.

The 1*ſt*. Diſcourſe of the firſt Tome, is of the Dignity of the Prieſthood, which he exalts as high as it can be exalted. Towards the latter End, he ſpeaks againſt thoſe who intrude into the Prieſtly Office, without being worthy of it, and without being call'd to it. He obſerves, that the Sacerdotal Dignity is conferr'd by impoſition of Hands.

The 2*d*. is an Anſwer to one of his Monks, who had ask'd him, who they were that might uſe that Liberty which St. Paul gives to Marry, rather than to Burn. He anſwers, That it concerns only thoſe who are not bound, and who live in the World, but not thoſe who have renounced the World, and embrac'd a Religious Life.

The 3*d*. is concerning the Softneſs of Eli the High-Prieſt, who would not chaſtiſe his Sons.

In the 4*th*. he exhorts Chriſtians to celebrate the Feſtivals, and to approach the Holy Myſteries with Purity.

The 5*th*. is concerning Charity towards our Neighbour.

The 6*th*. is concerning the uſefulneſs of Singing Pſalms. There he condemns idle Songs and Dancing.

The 7*th*. is of the Value and Neceſſity of Prayer.

The 8*th*. is of Love of the Poor, and of Alms.

The 9*th*. of Faſting.

The 10*th*. explains that Paſſage in the Goſpel, There ſhall be two Men in the field, the one ſhall be taken, and the other left. He is of Opinion, that the Juſt are thoſe who ſhall be taken, and the Wicked thoſe who ſhall be left. He ſeems to explain Hell Fire, Myſtically.

The 11*th*. is concerning the Miſeries of this Life.

The 12*th*. is of the inequality of Happineſs. He obſerves, that tho' all the Happy enjoy the ſame happineſs, yet there are different degrees of it. He aſſures his Auditory, That there is no middle between Hell and the Kingdom of Heaven. [Here then by our Author's own Confeſſion, is a poſitive Proof, that an Eminent Father of the Fourth Century, disbelieved a middle State, which not only deſtroys Purgatory, but alſo the Neceſſity of praying to Saints.]

The 13*th*. is alſo of Bleſſedneſs.

The 14*th*. of the Contempt we ought to have of the Riches and Pleaſures of this World.

The 15*th*. is againſt thoſe who every day do Penance, and always relapſe into the ſame Sins.

After theſe Diſcourſes follows a Treatiſe divided into many Chapters, concerning Vertues and Vices. In the Preface he ſhows great Humility in debaſing himſelf below thoſe that had pray'd him to Inſtruct them. Afterwards he diſcovers to them the good Effects of the Fear of God, of the Love of our Neighbour, of Meekneſs, Patience, Sincerity, Obedience, Hope and Continence; and the bad Effects of the contrary Vices.

After theſe Inſtructions, follow 91 Maxims of Piety, and 96 Advices concerning a Spiritual Life, directed to a young Monk.

The 16*th*. Diſcourſe is againſt thoſe who forſake a Monaſtical Life after they have once embrac'd it, to return into the World.

The 17*th*. is concerning perfect Self-denial, and concerning the Peace of Mind, which every one ſhould have in Solitude.

The 18*th*. is of the Sighing of a Soul under Temptation, and of the Tears of Repentance.

The 19*th*. is of the Fear of Death.

The 20*th*. is an humbling Diſcourſe, wherein he acknowledges himſelf guilty of many Faults, and prays his Brethren to implore the Divine Mercy for him.

The 21*ſt*. is an Exhortation to Chriſtian Vigilance.

The 22*d*. is an Exhortation to the Practice of good Works.

The 23*d*. is concerning the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt. He exhorts thoſe to whom he addreſſes himſelf, to follow the attractives of Divine Grace, if they would attain to perfection.

The 24*th*. is concerning Faith, or rather concerning Truſt in the Providence of God.

The 25*th*. is againſt thoſe who ſay, that Earthquakes are cauſed by the Concuſſions of the Earth, and not by the Providence of God. This diſcovers that the Author of thoſe Diſcourſes had not much Learning, ſince it may be truly ſaid, that Earthquakes proceed from natural Cauſes, tho' they are order'd by the Providence of God.

The

St. Ephrem the Syrian, Deacon of Edessa.

The 26*th.* is against the Superstitions of the Pagans. There he relates, that when the Plague was at Constantinople, a Physician nam'd Domnus, being desirous to preserve himself by the Superstitions of the Pagans, was seiz'd with the Plague and died, tho' he dwelt in a high place where there was very good Air; that one of his Companions nam'd Macedonius, seeing his lamentable Death, quitted the Pagan Religion, and became a Monk. After this, he brings many Passages of Scripture, to prove that the Plague, and those other Calamities wherewith Men are afflicted, are the Effects of God's Vengeance, and that we must make our Application to him, to preserve us from them. He observes, that God sends these Miseries upon Men, to bring them to the knowledge of themselves, and to Repentance.

The 27*th.* is against Pride and a good Opinion of one's self.

The 28*th.* is against those who having enter'd into Monasteries, are guilty of Vices, and particularly of Ambition, Laziness, and Disobedience. At the latter end, he exhorts his Brethren to discharge all the Offices of a Religious Life.

The 29*th.* is against Detraction.

The 30*th.* is upon those Subjects which Christians ought to lament.

The 31*st.* is against Plays and Shows. There he blames those who after they have been present at Divine Offices, go to Dancing, and Sing idle Songs. To Day, says he, they are United to Jesus Christ, and to Morrow they Dishonour him, they Deny him; to Day they are Christians, and to Morrow Pagans; to Day they have Piety, and to Morrow they are Impious; to Day they are Faithful, and the Disciples of Jesus Christ, and to Morrow they are Apostates and the Enemies of God; to Day they hear the Word of Jesus Christ, and to Morrow they apply themselves to hear the Voices and Instruments of Musick, which sing or play profane Songs.

The 32*d.* is against the Unchast.

The 33*d.* is of that Charity wherewith we should reprove our Brethren that are falleh into any Sin.

The 34*th.* is against Curiosity, and of shunning the occasions of Sin.

The 35*th.* is against Lewd Women.

The 36*th.* is of the means of avoiding the Sin of the Flesh.

The 37*th.* is of the Praise of Charity.

The 38*th.* is of the Preservation of this Vertue, and of the Unhappiness of those that lose it.

The 39*th.* is a Description of that unhappy State to which a Man is reduc'd by Concupiscence. He prays the Lord to give him Grace to preserve him from Shipwracks, amidst the Storms of this Life. He requests of him, That his Heart and his Mouth, may be a pure Temple and without Stain, by the Heavenly Grace; and that it may make his Tongue and Lips to move continually, in Singing forth the Praises of God. This Discourse is one of the Noblest and most Beautiful of them all.

The Four following Discourses are concerning Compunction, or the Remorse we ought to have for offending God. In the 1*st.* he says, That the Grace of God is always ready to enter into our Hearts, whenever they are dispos'd to receive it, or when our evil Thoughts do not put a Bar to it; That in the mean-time, it touches our Soul by the Sweetness of its Light, and makes it return to it self, and seek after the Light; That the Grace of God does never wholly forsake us, and that without Grace, we cannot Repent.

In the 2*d.* he shows, That we ought not to Despair, and that every one may obtain Pardon of his Sin, provided his Heart be pierced with a sincere Sorrow for his Offence against God, and that he change his course of Life.

In the 3*d.* he shows, That we ought to bewail this Life, and to rejoyce at Death.

The 4*th.* is also of the Sorrow we ought to have, and the Tears we ought to shed in this Life.

The 44*th.* and 45*th.* Discourses are about Penance.

The 46*th.* is about Repentance and Conversion.

The 47*th.* is of Penance and Patience.

The 48*th.* is of Patience under the Crosses, and Adversities of this Life.

The 49*th.* is of Constancy and Compunction.

In the 50*th.* he exhorts to Perseverance and Watchfulness, from the dread of the Last Judgment, and the Pains of Hell. He says, That we must always pray, even while we labour with our Hands, we must continually resist Temptation, read the Holy Scripture with Attention and Preparation, and live in Silence and Tranquility: He enlarges particularly, on the Praises of this last Exercise.

After these Discourses, follow several Sentences, call'd the Beatitudes of St. Ephrem, in which he recommends above all things, Christian Vigilance to his Brethren.

After these Beatitudes, follow Questions and Answers upon several Subjects, as about the Renunciation promis'd in Baptism; about the Last Judgment; about the different Punishments of the Damned.

This is follow'd with a Treatise of remembring Death, wherein he lays open the Vanity of Riches.

The Second discourse of Death, is attributed to St. Basil, and is of a different Stile from St. Ephrem's Discourses.

The following Treatises are of the Resurrection of the Last Judgment, and the things which shall happen when Anti-Christ shall come; and of the Apparition of the Cross at the time of Christ's second Coming. This Relation is ended with Lamentations and Prayers, which are attributed to St. Ephrem.

The Second Tome contains the Life of St. Ephrem, written by Simeon Metaphrastes, choice Sentences drawn from the Books of St. Ephrem; a Discourse of St. Ephrem about his Conversion; a Spiritual Song concerning the praise of Learning and Wisdom; an Epistle to a Monk about Patience; four Exhortations to a young Monk concerning a Monastick Life; six Chapters of Vertues, necessary to a Monk; twelve Chapters upon these words, Take heed to your selves; fifty Exhortations to the young Monks, wherein wherein he exhorts them to Humility, Obedience, Watchfulneſs, to Labour, Devotion, Meekneſs, Patience, to Charity, Reading, Prayer, Temperance, and the Practice of the other Monaſtical Vertues.

St. Ephrem the Syrian, Deacon of Edeſſa.

The 49*th*. is of the Excellencies of a Monaſtick Life above the Secular. Then follow 100 Maxims, Apophthegms, or Examples of the means for acquiring and preſerving Humility, and the other Monaſtick Vertues; a diſcourſe againſt Covetous Monks; another of the Perfection of a Monk; a Treatiſe of Spiritual Arms, of the Spiritual Combate; an Inſtructive Exhortation about an Aſcetick Life; another Exhortation to Repentance from the ſecond coming of Jeſus Chriſt; nineteen Advertiſements of the Abbot Ammon, and the Apophthegms of the ancient Fathers, wherein he ſpeaks of St. Benedict.

The Third Tome is divided into three Parts. The I. contains a Treatiſe compos'd in imitation of the Book of Proverbs, which is a Collection of Sentences and Maxims for a Spiritual and Monaſtick Life, a Treatiſe of a Religious Life, a Treatiſe of Repentance [or Penance;] a Diſcourſe of the Compunction of the Heart; Another Diſcourſe wherein St. Ephrem accuſes himſelf of his Faults, and asks Forgiveneſs; A Diſcourſe of the Reſurrection, of Judgment, and the Pains of the Impious, with an humble Prayer to God. The II. Part contains Panegyricks upon Juſt and Holy Men, whom he propoſes as Examples and Paterns of Vertue: The 1ſt. is upon Noah, where he ſpeaks of Continence; The 2d. is upon Abraham and Iſaac, where he exhorts to Obedience; The 3d. upon Lot, and againſt falſe Confidence; The 4th. in Praiſe of the Patriarch Joſeph; The 5th. upon Daniel, againſt thoſe that ſay, The times are Evil, we cannot ſave our ſelves; The 6th. upon Jonah and the Repentance of the Ninevites; The 7th. upon Elijah and the Widow of Sarepta; The 9th. upon the Precious Stone that's mention'd in the Goſpel; The 10th. againſt thoſe that ſearch into the Greatneſs of the Divine Nature; The 11th. a Diſcourſe upon our Saviour's Transfiguration; The 12th. of the Paſſion of Jeſus Chriſt; The 13th. the Lamentation of the Virgin upon the Paſſion of her Son; The 14th. upon the Croſs of Jeſus Chriſt, where he ſpeaks of the manner of celebrating Feſtivals among Chriſtians, of the Vertues of the Croſs of Jeſus Chriſt, and the Uſefulneſs of the ſign of the Croſs; The 15th. is of the Praiſes of the Virgin, after which follows a Prayer to the Virgin; The 16th. on the Woman that was a Sinner; The 17th. is a Diſcourſe of St. Chryſoſtom about the ſame Woman and a Phariſee; The 18th. is a Panegyrick upon St. Baſil, which is publiſh'd in Greek by Cotelerius, in the laſt Volume of his Monumenta Eccleſiæ Græcæ; The 19th. is in Praiſe of the Forty Martyrs; The 20th. is upon all the Martyrs in the World who have ſuffer'd for Jeſus Chriſt; The 21ſt. is upon the ſame ſubject; The 22d. is upon Abramius; The 23d. is upon Julianus the Hermit; The 24th is upon the Holy Fathers that died in his own time; The 25th. is upon the ſame Subject: Two Hymns upon the ſame Subject; A Diſcourſe of the Happineſs of thoſe that died in Chriſt, and of the Vanity of this World, of the Uncertainty of Life, and the different kinds of Death. The Laſt Monument of St. Ephrem is his Teſtament cited by St. Gregory Nyſſen, which is properly an Exhortation of this Father, upon his Death-Bed, addreſs'd to his Monks; He deſires them to remember him in their Prayers; He forbids them to keep his Garments as Relicks; He deſires that they would Bury him after a plain manner, and without any Pomp; He conjures them to offer the Sacrifice of the Maſs for him, and enlarges alſo upon the Uſefulneſs of Prayers for the Dead, and upon the Vertue of Sacrifice to blot out Sins: Laſtly, he gives them many wholeſom Advices, and heaps Bleſſings upon his chief Diſciples that were preſent at his Death, which happen'd under the Reign of Valens, in the Year 378, on the Firſt Day of February.

The firſt that publiſh'd any of the Books of this Father was Ambroſius Camaldulenſis, who tranſlated ſome of them into Latin, which were printed at Breſcia in 1490. at Strasburg in 1509. and at Cologne in 1547. Afterwards Gerard Voſſius, or Volkens of Borchloon in Germany, ſearch'd out all the Works of this Father, and tranſlated and publiſh'd them in Three Tomes. The Firſt, is dedicated to Sixtus the 5th. in 1581; The Second dedicated to Clement the 8th. in 1593, and the laſt in 1598. Theſe three Tomes were printed in one Volume at Cologne in 1603, and at Antwerp in 1619. Ecchellenſis publiſh'd at Rome in 1645, a Song of the Virgin and the Wiſemen attributed to St. Ephrem, tranſlated from the Syriack. Cotelerius publiſh'd the Greek of the Panegyrick upon St. Baſil, made by St. Ephrem, in his laſt Volume of the Monuments of the Greek Church, printed at Paris in 1686. 'Twere to be wiſh'd that ſome body would publiſh the Greek Verſions of all the Books of St. Ephrem, which are to be found in Libraries; as alſo the Syriack Text of ſome of his Books.

DAMASUS, Biſhop of Rome.

Damaſus, Biſhop of Rome.

After the Death of Pope Liberius, which happen'd in the Year 369, the See of Rome being Vacant for ſome time, by reaſon of the Caballing of thoſe that pretended to fill it, Damaſus at laſt was choſen by the greater part of the Clergy and People, and Ordain'd by the Biſhops. But on the other ſide, Urſinus or rather Urſicinus, who was his Competitor for the Popedom, got himſelf Ordain'd by ſome other Biſhops in the Church of Sicinius. This Conteſt caus'd a great Diviſion in the City of Rome, and ſtirr'd up ſo great a Sedition there as could hardly be appeas'd. The two Parties came from Words to Blows, and a great many Chriſtians were kill'd in the Churches of Rome upon this Quarrel. The Governour of Rome call'd Prætextatus, being deſirous to allay the heat of this Contention, ſent Urſicinus into Baniſhment by the Emperor's Order; But his Baniſhment did not perfectly appeaſe the Quarrel; for the Partizan's of Urſicinus Aſſembled ſtill in the Churches of which they were poſſeſs'd, without ever communicating with Damaſus; and even when the Emperour had order'd that their Churches ſhould be taken from them, they ſtill kept up their Aſſemblies without the City,

City, ſo that it was neceſſary at laſt to drive them quite out of Rome. And yet all this did not hinder Urſicinus from having his ſecret Aſſociates in Italy and at Rome. The Biſhop of Puteoli call'd Florentius, and the Biſhop of Parma, were moſt zealous for his Intereſts. They were condemn'd in a Council held at Rome in the Year 372, and afterwards baniſh'd by the Authority of the Emperour. However they found means to return into their own Country, and ſtirr'd up new troubles there. They got Pope Damaſus to be accus'd by one Iſaac a Jew. This Accuſation was examin'd in a Council of Biſhops held at Rome in the Year 378, which declar'd Damaſus innocent of the Crime that was laid to his Charge. This Council wrote a Letter to the Emperour Gratian, praying him to take ſome Order for the Peace of the Church of Rome. The Emperour wrote to them, that Urſicinus was detain'd at Cologne, that he had given Order to baniſh Iſaac into a Corner of Spain, and to force the Biſhops of Puteoli and Parma, out of their Country. This did not hinder Urſicinus from returning into Italy in the Year 381, where he ſtirr'd up new Tumults, and endeavour'd to pre-engage the Emperour: But the Biſhops of Italy being aſſembled in a Council at Aquileia, in the Year 381, wrote ſo ſmartly to him, that he baniſh'd Urſicinus for ever, and left Damaſus in peaceable Poſſeſſion of the See of Rome, in which he continued until the Year 384. St. Jerom places him among the Eccleſiaſtical Writers, becauſe of the many ſhort Tracts which he wrote in Heroick Verſe, to which may be added ſome Letters of his writing: But there are many other Letters which go under his Name, that are ſuppoſititious. I ſhall firſt ſet down thoſe of which there can be no doubt.

Damaſus Biſhop of Rome.

The Two Letters of Damaſus, directed to St. Jerom, are amongſt the Works of this Father. In the firſt, he exhorts this Saint to write to him; and to oblige him by fixing a Subject, he propoſes to him ſome Difficulties about the Holy Scripture. He obſerves in this Letter, That he took no pleaſure in reading the Books of Lactantius, becauſe they were too long, and were not fill'd with the Doctrines of Religion: In the ſecond Letter, he deſires to tell him the meaning of Hoſanna to the Son of David. But there is another Letter attributed to Damaſus, and written to St. Jerom, with the Anſwer of this Father, that is not to be placed in the ſame rank; for the Stile of theſe Two Letters is very different from that of Damaſus and St. Jerom, and they contain many Impertinencies and Follies in the Judgment of Bellarmine and Baronius. 'Tis ſaid in the Firſt, That St. Jerom was Ordained by Alexander; and 'tis certain, that Paulinus Ordained him. In the Second, 'tis ſuppos'd, That St. Jerom exhorted Damaſus to Order the Gloria Patri to be ſung at the End of all the Pſalms, as was ordain'd by the Council of Nice, and as it was practis'd in the Eaſt: But if Caſſian is to be believed, this was not practis'd in the Eaſt.

The 3*d*. Letter of Damaſus is written in the Name of this Pope and other the Weſtern Biſhops, aſſembled at Rome, in the Year 370, concerning the Condemnation of Auxentius, to the Biſhops of Illyricum. It is related by Theodoret alſo, in Ch. 22. B. II. of his Hiſt. and by Sozomen, Ch. 23. of B. VI. and it is in Latin in the Collection of Holſtenius. Theſe Biſhops do here confirm the Faith of the Nicene Council, and declare, that Auxentius was condemn'd by the Biſhops of France, becauſe of his Hereſie. They obſerve, That the Deciſion of the Council of Ariminum could not prejudice the Decrees of the Council of Nice, becauſe neither the Biſhop of Rome, whoſe Judgment was chiefly to be waited for, nor Vincentius of Capua, nor many others, had ever conſented to it. They ſay at the End of this Letter, That thoſe who taught another Doctrine, ſhould quickly be turn'd out of their Biſhopricks. They exhort the Biſhops of Illyricum to Defend the Faith of the Nicene Council, with Boldneſs and Conſtancy.

The Letter of Damaſus to Paulinus, about the Cauſe of Vitalis, is alſo Genuine, and has a reſpect to Hiſtory, and to what St. Gregory Nazianzen, ſays in his Letter to Cledonius, that Vitalis the Diſciple of Apollinarius, coming to Rome, ſurpriz'd Damaſus, but that afterwards, this Pope had condemn'd him. The Letter of which we now ſpeak, was written ſome time after Vitalis departed from Rome, about the Year 373. It acquaints Paulinus, "That he had written to him by this Vitalis, leaving him "to manage all things; That he had alſo ſent him word of the ſame thing before, by the Prieſt Pe- "tronius; but that he was a little troubled when Vitalis was ready to depart; That to take from him "all kind of Scruple, leſt too great Precaution ſhould hinder thoſe from being receiv'd into the Church, "who had a mind to return, he had ſent to him a Confeſſion of Faith, not ſo much for his own ſake, "as for theirs who deſired to be re-united to the Church of Rome, and embrace its Communion that "they might Sign it." Wherefore, adds he, if Vitalis will joyn himſelf to us, you muſt oblige him to Sign the Nicene Creed, and to profeſs that he believes, That Jeſus Chriſt took a Body, a Soul, a Mind, and in a Word, a Nature in every thing like to ours, Sin only, and Concupiſcence, excepted; and to Anathematize thoſe that ſhould ſay, that the Word was inſtead of a Soul in the Perſon of Jeſus Chriſt, or ſhould dare to affirm, That there were two Sons of God in Jeſus Chriſt, and deny, that he was the ſame Son of God before and after his Incarnation. He ſays, That he could freely receive thoſe that ſhould Sign this Letter, provided they had before approv'd the Eccleſiaſtical Canons, and the Faith of the Council of Nice. He concludes with telling Paulinus, That he doubted not but he had Power to propoſe the ſame things to thoſe that were willing to be reſtor'd, and that he had written to him only for this End; that his Conſent and Example might render him more Bold and Free to do it.

'Twas probably at the ſame time, and perhaps in conſequence of this Letter, that Damaſus ſent to Paulinus, the Anathematiſms that are ſet down in Greek by Theodoret, Ch. 11. of the V*th*. B. of his Hiſtory, and in Latin by Holſtenius. They eſtabliſh the Faith of the Church concerning the Myſteries of the Trinity and the Incarnation, by condemning the contrary Errors. There is one of them againſt the Tranſlation of Biſhops. Vitalis having refuſed to Sign the Declarations which Damaſus would have him to Sign, this Pope aſſembled a Council at Rome, in the Year 375, where Peter of Damaſus, Biſhop of Rome.

Alexandria was preſent, in which he condemned the Heretick Apollinarius and his Followers. The Opinion of Valeſius is not without Reaſon, who thinks that the Decrees which are in the Collection of Holſtenius, and which are to be found in the Second Volume of the Additions to Labbeé's Edition of the Councils, P. 893, 894, and 895. are Part of the Deciſions of this Council, and that they were really made againſt the Error of Apollinarius. Theſe Decrees are Sign'd by Meletius of Antioch, by Euſebius of Samoſata, by Pelegius of Laodicea, by Diodorus of Tarſus, by Eulogius of Edeſſa, by Zeno of Tyre, by Bematius of Mallus, and by 146 other Biſhops of the Eaſt, whoſe Names are ſaid, to be in the Authentical Manuſcript of the Vatican. Theſe Subſcriptions make it very probable, that theſe Decrees are a Part of this Tome of the Weſtern Biſhops, which was Sign'd in the Year 378, in a Council at Antioch, whereof mention is made in the fifth Canon of the Council of Conſtantinople, and in a Letter of the Council of Conſtantinople, produced by Theodoret. In ſhort, the Biſhops of the Eaſt having deſir'd Damaſus to condemn Timothy a Diſciple of Apollinarius, received this Anſwer, That he was condemned long ago by a Council at Rome, in the preſence of Peter of Alexandria. This Letter is recited by Theodoret, Ch. 10. of the Vth. B. of his Hiſtory. It was written about the Year 378. In the preamble of this Letter, he extols the Greatneſs of the See of Rome, and ſpeaks of its Preheminence above others.

Theſe are the only Genuine Letters of Damaſus, that are extant; all the reſt that go under his Name, are forg'd by Iſidorus Mercator. They have not the Stile of Damaſus, and contain many things which plainly diſcover their Forgery. The letter that goes under the Name of Aurelius Biſhop of Carthage to Damaſus, as well as the Anſwer of this Pope, bear the Names of the Conſuls, Gratianus the third time, Equitius the firſt. Now this Conſulſhip happen'd in the Year 374, and Aurelius was yet a Deacon when St. Auſtin return'd from Milan to Catharge in 385, and he was not Ordain'd Biſhop, till 389. 'Tis plain therefore that this Letter could not be written by Aurelius. The Letter of the Council of Africk to Damaſus, is taken out of thoſe of Sergius and Martin, and eſtabliſhes a Doctrine contrary to that which the Africans practiſed in the Caſe of Appeals. The Letter to Stephen who is call'd Archbiſhop of the Concil of Mauritania, is taken out of the Letters of Innocentius, St. Leo, Anaſtaſius, Sergius, Martin I. &c. 'Tis ſaid to have been written under the Conſulſhip of Stilicho, who was not Couſul till 16 Years after the Death of Damaſus. The Letter concerning the Suffragans, quotes the Canons according to the Verſion of Dionyſius Exiguus. There is alſo a Canon of the Council of Chalcedon, and ſome Paſſages of the Letters of Siricius, innocentius, Zoſimus, Celeſtinus, St. Leo, &c. The Letter to the Biſhops of Italy, is taken out of St. Leo, St. Gregory, Martin I. and Adrian I. the Falſhood of it is found out by the Note of the Conſulſhip. Laſtly, There are in Ivo Carnutenſis and Gratian, ſome Decrees attributed to Damaſus; but one cannot be aſſur'd of their Antiquity, upon the Credit of theſe Authors.

There are beſides, above 40 Epigrams, Inſcriptions or Epitaphs in Verſe, which go under the Name of Damaſus, and are produced by Baronius and Gruter, and Collected together by Sarrazanius, who has made long Commentaries upon theſe Pieces. 'Tis not very certain, that all theſe belong to Damaſus, but 'tis no great matter who is the Author of them, for they contain nothing Remarkable. I ſhall not here ſtay to prove that the Book of the Lives of the Popes, entituled the Pontifical of Damaſus, is none of his, becauſe 'tis certain by the Confeſſion of all the World, that it was compos'd long after the Death of this Pope.

The Works of Damaſus were Printed at Rome, in the Year 1639. by the Care of Ubaldinus, who Dedicated them to Pope Urban, VIII. And Billaine, Printed another Edition of his Works at Paris, according to that at Rome, in the Year 1672. [His Poems, as Dr. Cave aſſures us from Olearius's Abacus Patrologicus, were Printed at Leipſick, by Andreas Rivinus, in 8vo. 1652.]

St. BASIL.

St. Baſil.

ST. BASIL was of Cæſarea in Cappadocia, and was born about the Year 328. His Father was call'd Baſil, and his Mother Emmelia; who were both Chriſtians. He was Educated in Chriſtian Piety, by his Grand-Mother Macrina; and his Father taught him the Rudiments of Learning. He began his Studies at Cæſarea, in Paleſtine, from whence he went to Conſtantinople, to hear the Famous Orator Libanius, and at laſt he went to Athens to perfect his Studies. There he found Gregory Nazianzen, which whom he contracted a moſt intimate Friendſhip. After he had been at Athens ſome time, he returned into his own Country, about the Year 355, and departed from thence ſoon after to take a Journey into Egypt and Libya, and viſit the famous Monaſteries in that Country. He found the Life of theſe Aſcericks ſo perfect, that he reſolv'd to follow their Example; and when he return'd into his own Country, tho' his Biſhop Dianius Ordain'd him Reader, he retir'd into a ſolitary Place in the Province of Pontus, near the Monaſtery of St. Macrinus, where he led a Religious Life. His Brethren Peter and Naucratius, and many others of his Frinds, came to ſee him in this Place, and embrac'd the ſame way of living. He made Rules for them, and ſo became the firſt Founder of a Monaſtick Life in Pontus and Cappadocia.

Dianius, Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia, was one of the Enemies to St. Athanaſius. He had approv'd the Creeds of Antioch, of Sardica, and Ariminum, made by the Semi-Arians. This oblig'd St. Baſil to ſeparate from his Communion. He was not reconcil'd to him, till this Biſhop declar'd on his Death-Bed, that he had always in his Heart believ'd the Nicene Creed, and 'twas through ſimplicity that he had Sign'd that of Conſtantinople.

After

After the Death of Dianius, Eusebius was chosen Bishop of Cæsarea in Cappodocia: He conferred the Order of Priesthood on St. Basil, who retir'd soon after into his Solitude because he had some difference with his Bishop, who was Jealous of him. But he was reconcil'd to him Three Years after, and acquir'd so great a Reputation, that after the Death of Eusebius, he was chosen Bishop of Cæsarea, towards the End of the Year 369. He was no sooner promored to this Dignity, but he was persecuted by the Emperour Valens, who sollicited him by Modestus the Prætorian Præfect to Communicate with Eudoxus, and to embrace the Doctrine of the Arians. But in vain did he use Threatnings, for St. Basil answer'd him with a surprizing firmness of Mind, and would never yield to the Will of the Emperour. This Constancy so much astonish'd the Emperour Valens, that when he came himself to Cæsarea, he durst not undertake any thing against St. Basil, but was present on the Day of Epiphany in the Year 371, at the Publick Prayers of the Church of Cæsarea, and offer'd Gifts which were received by the Hand of St. Basil. He return'd thither once afterward, and had a long Conference with St. Basil about the Doctrine of the Church. But some time after, this Emperour being push'd on by the Arians, resolv'd to turn him out of Cæsarea. 'Tis said, That at the same time when he dictated this Order, his Son fell Sick, and that his Sickness made him change his Resolution; That he sent also for St. Basil and at his Arival, the Emperour's Son was almost recover'd; but being afterwards baptized by the Arians, he relaps'd into his Sickness and Died. After his Death, Valens would yet have sent St. Basil, into Banishment, but was hindered, as is reported, because when he would have sign'd the Order the Pen broke three times. This Prodigy made the Emperour give over the Prosecution of this Design. St. Basil

But St. Basil did not only maintain the Faith with a wonderfull Constancy, but he also endeavour'd to procure Peace to the Church. The East and West were then divided about the Cause of Meletius and Paulinus, who were both at the same time Bishops of Antioch. Paulinus communicated with St. Athanasius, and was supported by the Western Bishops. Meletius was not of their Communion, but was a very good Catholick. He was lawfully ordain'd Bishop of Antioch, and was acknowledg'd as such by all the Eastern Bishops. There wanted nothing but his Reconciliation with St. Athanasius, to make him be acknowledg'd by all the Western Bishops also; for the Western Bishops blindly follow'd the Judgment of this Bishop. Wherefore St. Basil us'd all his Endeavours to reconcile him to St. Athanasius and Damasus. He also pray'd Meletius to yield to Peace. He oblig'd him to send the Deacon Dorotheus to St Athanasius, who went into the West as far as Rome, but he could not compass his Design of restoring Peace. He return'd thither also a second time with a Letter of St. Basil, and he could obtain nothing but a Deputation of some Priests, to comfort the Eastern Bishops, who were tormented with the Persecution of Valens. St. Basil seeing that the Western Bishops would not make Peace with Meletius, wrote many Letters to them, wherein he Complains of their Behaviour. But howsoever it came to pass, he could not compass this Peace between the East and the West, which was not concluded till Nine Months after his Death.

In the mean time, while St. Basil labour'd with so much zeal for the Peace of the whole Church, his own Province was broken in pieces by Dissentions, which occasion'd him much Trouble and Sorrow. The Emperour having divided Cappadocia into two Provinces, Anthimus Bishop of Tyana, the Metropolis of that Part, that was Newly erected into a Province, pretended that he ought to be the Metropolitan of that New Province, and that he ought to Ordain Bishops for the Cities that depended upon it; and that he ought not to depend upon the Metropolis of Cæsarea, no more than the Bishops of the Cities of that New Province. St. Basil did not contest this right with Anthimus in the least; but they were at difference concerning the Extent of this New Province. Anthimus extended the Limits of it further than he ought; and St. Basil oppos'd his Attempts. They differ'd chiefly about one little City call'd Sasima, which lay upon a great Road. Anthimus pretended that it depended upon his Jurisdiction; and St. Basil to keep it to himself, erected it into a Bishoprick, and gave it to his Friend St. Gregory Nazianzen. But Anthimus was already in Possession: which oblig'd St. Gregory, being a Lover of Peace, to withdraw from the place, in which he could take no Pleasure; and he was very Angry with his Friend for making use of him to mantain his own Quarrel.

St. Basil had also another Dispute with Theodotus Bishop of Nicopolis. Meletius and this Bishop were invited to come to a Synod which was to be held at Phargama, near Nicopolis. He wrote to Eusebius of Samosata to be there, and sent his Letter by Eustathius of Sebastia. The good Correspondence which St. Basil had then with this last, render'd him odious to Theodotus, and the other Bishops who desir'd no more to have him at their Synod. When St. Basil knew this Matter, he held a Conference with Eustathius of Sebastia: In which he found that he spoke like a Catholick, and he caus'd him to sign an Orthodox Confession of Faith. After he had us'd this Precaution, he came to find out Meletius and Theodotus, and told them what he had done. Theodotus told him, That Eustathius had since deny'd what he had then approv'd. St. Basil answer'd, That he could not believe him so inconstant; but notwithstanding to try him yet anew, he would offer him a very large Confession of Faith, which if he refused to Sign, he would then separate from his Communion. Meletius and Theodotus, approv'd of this Proposal, and the last invited St. Basil to come to Nicopolis; but when he was there, he would not permit him to be at the Prayers of the Church, nor Communicate with him at all. St. Basil seeing himself thus affronted without Reason retir'd from Nicopolis, and came to Satala, where he Ordain'd a Bishop at the desire of the Inhabitants. From thence he went to find out Eustathius, and made him Sign a Confession of Faith, to which he annex'd that of the Nicene Creed. St. Gregory Nyssen sided against his Brother St. Basil, as appears by the Letters 256, and 259, of this Saint; where he accuses him of troubling the Peace of the Church, and of laying Snares for him. Some time after, Eustathius of Sebastia, who, upon St. Basil's account, was engag'd in a Quarrel with Theodotus, declar'd himself openly against St Basil, joyn'd the Eudoxians. oppos'd the Faith of the Council of Nice, and the Divinity of the Holy Spirit. St. Baſil underſtanding this, reconciles himſelf to Theodotus, and wrote many Letters againſt Euſtathius.

St. Baſil

Theſe are the principal Circumſtances of St. Baſil's Life, and the affairs which took up the greateſt part of his time while he was Biſhop. The other Circumſtances which are of leſs conſequence may be learn'd from his Letters. St. Baſil died upon the Firſt of January, in the Year 379.

The Letters of St. Baſil are the moſt learned and the moſt curious of all his Books, and perhaps of all Eccleſiaſtical Antiquity. They are written with an unimitable Purity, Majeſty and Eloquence, and contain an infinite number of things. There one may ſee all the Hiſtory of his time, deſcribed to the Life, the different Characters of Men's Tempers, the contrary Intereſts of each Party, and the Motives which acted both ſides, and the Intrigues which they made uſe of for carrying on of their Deſigns. The State of the Eaſtern and Weſtern Churches is there deſcribed, in lively and natural Colours. He handles an infinite number of Queſtions of Doctrine, of Diſcipline and of Morality; which he decides with much Learning and Prudence. There one may find many Letters of Conſolation or Exhortation, which are very Edifying and Pathetical, and even thoſe which are only Complemental are full of Wit, and of very ſolid and uſefull Thoughts. They are indeed at preſent in ſo great Confuſion, that 'tis not an eaſie thing to read them in order with Delight, and ſo ill tranſlated, that they are almoſt wholly diſguiſed, and can hardly be known by thoſe that underſtand the Beauty of the Original Language. I have begun a Tranſlation of them in Latin and French, which I may perhaps Publiſh ſome time or other with Notes. In the mean time, I ſhall now make ſome Extracts out of them, according to my uſual Method. But to make them more uſeful, I have rank'd the Letters according to the Order of Time. If they are ſet according to the Subject Matter, they may be divided into Hiſtorical and Doctrinal; Letters of Diſcipline, Apologetical Letters, Letters of Inſtruction or Morality, Letters of Conſolation, and Letters of Civility: But I thought it more proper to follow in the Body of our Book the Order of Time; which I have examined as exactly as I could. They ſhall be divided then into Two Claſſes: The Firſt, ſhall Comprehend the Letters that were written in his Solitude, before he was Biſhop: And the Second, which will contain far the greater Number, ſhall conſiſt of thoſe which were written after he was Biſhop, which I ſhall diſpoſe in their Order of Time from Year to Year, as near as I can.

The Firſt of the Letters written by St. Baſil in his Solitude, is the 19th. directed to St. Gregory Nazianzen; wherein he acquaints him with the Reſolution he had taken up to live retiredly, and deſcribes the place which he had choſen for his Retreat, very Pleaſantly, and very Elegantly. This Letter was written in the Beginning of the year 358.

St. Gregory having received this Letter, did not approve of the Habitation which his Friend had choſen, and from the Deſcription which he had given of it, he imagin'd that it was a very Melancholy and Frightful place. He ſignified alſo his Thoughts of it in his 7th. Letter to him, and rallies pleaſantly upon the Deſcription he had ſent of it. Wherefore St. Baſil having a mind to draw him to himſelf by ſome more powerful Motive, repreſents to him in his 2d. Letter, which is commonly put the 1ſt. the Manner of Life which he had embraced.

He complains at firſt, That he could not yet reap all the Profit from his Retirement which he could have wiſh'd; which Unhappineſs he attributes to the Habits that he had contracted while he liv'd in the World; from which he could not yet diſengage himſelf: And he deſires him to believe, that he deſcribes in his Letter the manner after which he ſhould live, and not that in which he did live at preſent. After this he repreſents the Miſeries of a Secular Life, and the Delights of Solitude. He ſhews how profitable this Retreat is, provided one's Mind be not too much faſtned to the World, after he is parted from it. He gives an account of the Exerciſes of ſo Happy a State; which conſiſt in Prayer, in labouring with our Hands, in Reading and Meditation upon the Holy Scripture; and gives Rules concerning the Diſcourſe, the Habits, the Eating and Behaviour of a Monk. This Letter was written in the Year 358.

There are alſo ſome other Letters of St. Baſil which are very near upon the ſame Subject, and were written probably about the ſame time. The four firſt, which are not rank'd in the other Claſſis, are of this Number.

The Firſt, is adreſs'd to one Chilon; who having renounc'd the World, had written to St. Baſil, to deſire ſome Advice of him, how he ſhould behave himſelf; which is done in this Letter. He exhorts him to perſevere in his Reſolution: He Counſels him not to Aſpire at firſt to the higheſt Perfection of a Religious Life, but to aſcend to it by degrees. He particularly recommends to him to abide in Solitude, without going out of it upon any pretence whatſoever, though it were even to be preſent at the Inſtructions of the Biſhops in the Publick Aſſemblies of the Church.

After this Letter, follows a ſhort, but very Inſtructive Exhortation to Young Monks; which contains in few words many Precepts of a Religious Life.

The Second Letter, is to a Monk who had abandon'd his Solitary ſtate, to return into the World, that he might put himſelf in a way of Trade. He deplores his Fall, and Exhorts him to acknowledge it, and to do Pennance for his fault.

The Third, is to a Monk of Jeruſalem, who had given a horrible Scandal by carrying away a Virgin conſecrated to Jeſus Chriſt. He ſets before his Eyes the Happineſs of that ſtate from which he was fallen, and the Miſery of that to which he was reduc'd by his Crime. He charges him very ſharply for his Enormity and covers him with Confuſion for his Infamous Action. Nevertheleſs, he concludes with Exhorting him from the Conſideration of Death and of Judgment, to beg Pardon of his Fault, to Turn and Repent,

The

The fourth of theſe Letters is addreſs'd to a Virgin, who being conſecrated to God by a Vow of Virginity, had ſuffer'd her ſelf to be corrupted by a Miſerable Man. He repreſents to her the Enormity of her Crime. He endeavours to terrifie her by the Fear of Judgment and of Hell, and gives her hopes, that ſhe ſhall obtain Mercy, if ſhe will Change her Life and Repent.

The 411. Letter, ought to be joyn'd to this. It contains many Precepts of a Monaſtick Life; which, for the moſt part, are drawn out of the Scripture.

The 165. Letter to Euſtathius the Philoſopher, was written ſome time after St. Baſil's Retirement. He acquaints him, That ſince his return from Athens, he had ſearch'd for him in all places, but could not meet with him; which Unhappineſs he Attributes to the Providence of God, and not to Fortune.

The 166. to one nam'd Julianus, ſeems to have been written about the ſame time. He ſays, That 'tis in a Man's Power to lead a happy and quiet Life, by governing his Paſſions, and ſubmitting his Mind to all Events that can happen. Neither Loſs of Goods, ſays he, nor Sickneſs of Body, nor any other troubleſome Accidents of this Life can hurt a Vertuous Man, while he deſigns to walk in the Ways of God, and Meditates upon another Life, who ſubmits to all the Troubles and Croſſes of this World. For thoſe who are wholly taken up with the Cares of this Life, are like thoſe Carnivorous Birds who ſtoop down to the Earth with the Beaſts, though they have Wings to fly in the Air.

The 167. Letter to Diodorus a Prieſt of Antioch, was alſo written about the ſame time. In it he commends the Two Books which this Author had ſent him. He ſays, That the Second was very acceptable to him, not only becauſe of its Brevity, but becauſe of the Many Thoughts, Arguments and Anſwers which it contain'd in a very good Method. He commends the plainneſs of its Stile, which is agreeable, ſays he, to the Profeſſion of a Chriſtian, who ought much rather to write for the Publick Good, than acquire Glory to himſelf. As to the Firſt Book, which was compos'd by way of Dialogue he ſays, That though it was more adorn'd with Figures, and had greater Variety of Matter; yet he found it tedious to read, and difficult to underſtand. He takes notice, That the Calumnies of Hereticks, and the Defences of the Catholicks are very uſeleſs, and interrupt the Thread of his Diſcourſe.

To this we may joyn the 168. Letter to Eunomius, wherein he rallies this Heretick, who boaſted of underſtanding all things, by putting to him many difficult Queſtions about things Natural, to which 'twas impoſſible to Anſwer.

The 41. and 42. Letters to Maximus the Philoſopher, who is, in all probability the ſame that got himſelf Ordain'd Archbiſhop of Conſtantinople, were alſo written by St. Baſil, when he was in his Solitude.

The 1ſt. is concerning the Opinions of Dionyſius of Alexandria. He accuſes him of Writing ſome things in his Books, which ſeemed to be the Seeds of the Error of the Anomæans: yet he confeſſes that he did it not deſignedly; but that in diſputing againſt the Hereſy of Sabellius, he had too much inclin'd to the oppoſite Error, and in proving the Deſtinction of the Perſons, he ſeem'd to admit a Difference of Nature between the Three Divine Perſons. After this St. Baſil explains his own Judgement concerning the Trinity. He does not condemn the Opinion of thoſe who ſay That the Word is like to God the Father in Subſtance; nor even of thoſe who ſay ſimply, That he is like to his Father, Provided they add, That he is in nothing unlike to him; becauſe this Sence falls in with their Opinion who call him Conſubſtantial. He adds, That this laſt term is leſs capable of an ill ſence. He condemns the Biſhops of the Council of Conſtantinople, who contented themſelves with declaring, That the Son was the Image of the Father, without adding, That he was in nothing unlike. At laſt, St. Baſil invites Maximus to come and ſee him, and directly charges him with having too great an Affection for the City and the Grandeur of this World. This Letter was written after the Council of Conſtantinople in 360.

In the 2d. Letter to the ſame Philoſopher, he commends him, and recommends to him the love of Vertue.

The 2d, 3d, and 33d. Letters addreſs'd to St. Gregory, who was gone to Nazianzum, were much about the ſame time.

In the 2d. he obſerves, That no words are capable of expreſſing our Thoughts of God, and Admoniſhes St. Gregory to uſe all his Eloquence in the Defence of the Truth.

In the 3d. Letter, he pleaſantly rebukes St. Gregory, for writing none but Laconick Letters to him; that is to ſay, ſuch as were ſhort and conciſe.

'Tis plain, That the Letters of St. Baſil to the Emperour Julian, if they are Genuine, were written by this Saint in his Retirement, ſince the Death of Julian happened before he came out of his Solitude. He had known this Prince at Athens, where they had Studied together under Libanius. After he was return'd to his own Country, he received a very obliging Letter from this Prince, who had not yet forſaken the Chriſtian Religion. This Letter is the 206. But after he had renounc'd Chriſtianity, he did no longer treat St. Baſil after the ſame manner: but on the contrary, he wrote a Proud Letter to him, and commanded him to ſend him 1000*l.* of Gold for reſtoring of the Temples. This Letter is the 207th. among thoſe of St. Baſil, to which is ſubjoyn'd the Anſwer that Julian made when he had read the Book of Apollinarius, I have read it, underſtood it, and condemn'd it. But it appears, that thoſe words were added to the reſt of the Letter, to which they have no reference at all. The two following Letters contain the Anſwer of St. Baſil of this Letter to Julian; yet they are not two Anſwers, nor two different Letters, but one and the ſame Anſwer, of which ſome have made two. Cotelerius hath publiſh'd a little while ago the whole entire and in one Letter only, from a Manuſcript of the King's Library. It is in his Second Volume of the Monuments of the Greek Church. This Sentence

St. Baſil. tence which is put at the beginning of the Firſt, You did not underſtand what you read, for if you had underſtood it, you would never have condemn'd it, was added after the writing of this Letter, as that was which is at the end of Julian's Letter. I doubt alſo, whether the Anſwer that is attributed to St. Baſil, be truly his; and I know not but it may be written by ſome other Perſon, who would make a trial how he could Anſwer Julian's Letter to this Father: and indeed, the Stile of this Letter is not ſo Elegant as that of the Letters of St. Baſil. He writes to Julian, That he is horribly vex'd, when he thinks that he is cloathed with the Royal Purple, and that his infamous Head is adorn'd with a Crown. Is it credible that St. Baſil ſhould write to an Emperor with ſo little reſpect, and ſhould treat him as a ridiculous, ſenſeleſs and impertinent Perſon, as the Author of this Letter does? In ſhort, There is at the end of this Letter, an Inference drawn from an Opinion of Julian's, which is extremely wide, and has ſcarce any ſence, and not according to the Genius of St. Baſil, who is nice and exact in his thoughts, and moderate in his Expreſſions.

As to the 205. Letter addreſs'd to the ſame Emperour, 'tis evident that it is Suppoſititious. The Title of it is, To Julian the Apoſtate. Would St. Baſil ever have directed a Letter to him with this Inſcription? 2. The Stile of this Letter is very different from that of St. Baſil. 3. this Letter is nothing but a Confeſſion of Faith. Now to what purpoſe ſhould St. Baſil ſend a Confeſſion of Faith to Julian? 4. He adds to this Confeſſion of Faith, the Invocation of Saints, and Worſhip of Images. Who ever heard that theſe Points were put into the Confeſſions of Faith of the Firſt Ages? 5. He ſays, That he Honours and Adores the Images of the Saints, becauſe it is an Apoſtolical Tradition. Would St. Baſil have ſpoken thus? and is it not plain that this Letter is the Work of ſome Greek, who liv'd after the Seventh Council?

The Six Letters publiſh'd by Hæſchelius, which are the 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215, being written to different Perſons, were alſo compos'd by St. Baſil while he was in his Solitude. They contain nothing remarkable.

The 141 Letter of St. Baſil was written in the Year 363. after the Difference which he had with his own Biſhop. The Inhabitants of Cæſarea complain'd that he had retir'd after his Ordination, and recall'd him with very importunate Letters. St. Baſil wrote to them, to thank them for their Goodneſs to him, and to give them an account of the Cauſe of his Retiring. He admoniſhes them not to ſuffer themſelves to be ſurpriſed by the Artifices of Hereticks; and for a Preſervative againſt them, he explains the Faith of the Church concerning the Trinity, and anſwers ſome Objections which they alledg'd. He blames thoſe that ſaid only, the Son of God was like his Father without adding any thing for Explication.

The 4th. Letter to St. Gregory, is the laſt of thoſe which St. Baſil wrote in his Retirement before he was Biſhop. It is directed to St. Gregory Nazianzen; wherein he Exhorts him to be very careful to procure the Choice of a Biſhop, in the room of Euſebius Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia, lately Dead, who might be worthy to fill that Biſhoprick. St. Gregory had reſolved to come himſelf to Cæſarea; but for fear leſt the giving of his Suffrage in favour of St. Baſil ſhould render him ſuſpected, he contented himſelf with ſending Two Letters written in his Father's Name; whereof one was addreſs'd to the Church of Cæſarea, and the other to the Council Aſſembled in that City, wherein he recommended St. Baſil as moſt worthy to Succeed in the room of Euſebius. Some Authors attribute this Letter of St. Baſil which we have already mention'd to Euſebius of Samoſata: And indeed, it is not very probable, that St. Baſil ſhould ſo openly pray St. Gregory to do that which look'd ſo like ſolliciting that himſelf might be made Biſhop.

We ſhould joyn to this the Two Letters of St. Baſil to Apollinarius, which were publiſh'd by Cotelerius, if they were Genuine; but they are Forg'd by the Apollinarians, ſince St. Baſil himſelf teſtifies in the 59, 79, and 82 Letters, That he never wrote concerning the Faith to Apollinarius; and that the Letters which were publiſhed under his Name, were Suppoſititious: which plainly ſhows, That the Two Letters, which go under St. Baſil's Name, and are addreſs'd to Apollinarius, which Treat of the Myſtery of the Holy Trinity, and which ſuppoſe that St. Baſil and Apollinarius held a great Correſpondence by Letters, are Forg'd, as well as thoſe of Apollinarius to St. Baſil, which contain Errors not only about the Incarnation, but alſo about the Trinity.

The Second Claſs of St. Baſil's Letters, ought to be of thoſe which were written after he was Biſhop of Cæſarea; Theſe are far more numerous and more conſiderable. The Firſt, are thoſe which he wrote for the Reconciliation of Meletius with St. Athanaſius and the weſtern Biſhops.

To compaſs this deſign, he wrote about the End of the Year 369. the 56. Letter to Meletius to diſpoſe him to enter upon a Treaty about it. He did not openly acquaint him with his Deſign, leſt he ſhould be diſcovered; but he ſignified to him, that he deſired that he might ſee him to treat about an Affair of great Importance; but being detain'd by his Brethren, he ſent Theophraſtus to communicate it to him. The Secrecy which he obſerves in this Letter, plainly diſcovers that this was the Firſt which he wrote about this Negotiation.

'Tis probable, that about the ſame time, to conciliate the favour of St. Athanaſius, who had written to him immediately after his Promotion he wrote an Anſwer to him by Letter 47. wherein he gives him an Account of the ſhare that he had in the Perſecution which the Governour of Libya raiſed againſt this Holy Paſtor; and he acquaints him, That all the Faithful of his Church, look'd upon this Governor as an Excommunicate Perſon: That they would have no Correſpondence with him; becauſe 'tis fit, that the Powers who will uſe Violence, ſhould find themſelves unanimouſly condemn'd by all the Churches.

Meletius having ſignified to St. Baſil, that he would willingly hearken to an Accommodation; this Father wrote to St. Athanaſius at the Beginning of the Year 379, the 48. Letter; wherein he exhorts horts him to procure the Peace and Union of the Eastern and Western Churches, and prays him to begin with receiving the Church of Antioch. He supports this Proposal in Three Letters, which in the common Edition are 49, 50, and 51. The 50th. was written at the desire of Dorotheus the Deacon, whom Meletius sent to Negotiate this Affair. In it, he gives great Commendation of Meletius, and says, That all the other Parties which are in the Church of Antioch ought to re-unite to him and to those who adhered to him, as to the principal Body of the Church of Antioch; whereof the rest are but separate Members. He assures him, That the West wish'd for his Re-union, as well as the East; as appeared by the Letters brought from the West by Silvanus. He conjures him afterwards to use his usual Prudence for procuring the Peace of all the Churches. In Letter 51. he exhorts St. Athanasius to write a Letter of Communion to all the Eastern Bishops; and prays him to send it, either by some Persons in his own Name, or even by the Deacon Dorotheus. He assures him That the Bishops are Orthodox, and that they desire to be Re-united to him; and he promises them, That he will not deliver his Letter, till he has received their Answers, and those Assurances that he shall desire. St. Basil.

St Athanasius having received these Letters, would not write at all, but he sent one of his Priests call'd Peter, to dispose their Minds to Peace. This Priest was very well received by St Basil, and he perform'd his Message as well as he could. But this Affair being of too great Consequence to be so easily determined; St. Basil thought it necessary to write to Pope Damasus. Having taken up this Resolution, he sent the Deacon Dorotheus to Meletius, by whom he wrote the 57 Letter, wherein he tells him his Design which he had of sending this Deacon to Rome, and of desiring some Deputies out of Italy. He prays him, if he thought it convenient, to give him necessary Instructions, and to write a Letter in his own Name, and in the Name of all the Bishops of his Communion, and to direct it to the western Bishops. He writes at the end of this Letter, That the Affairs of the Church were in the same State; That the Civil Powers would not meddle with them, to restore those that were banish'd; That Euvippus an Arian Bishop was come, but that he had done nothing yet in Publick, though he had threatned to fetch the Bishops of his Party from Tetrapolis and Cilicia, to Condemn the Orthodox.

Meletius sent back Dorotheus, and thought it necessary for him to go into the West. 'Tis not certainly known, whether he wrote at that time to the Bishops of the West, but 'tis certain that St. Basil then address'd his 220 Letter to Damasus. It has no Superscription, but 'tis easy to see that 'twas address'd to the Bishop of Rome. He begins with showing the Advantage which that Bishop had to restore the ancient Union between the Eastern and Western Churches: After this, he describes the unhappy State to which the Persecution of the Arians had reduc'd the Churches of the East. He represents to Damasus, That he might give them Ease and Comfort, by writing and sending Deputies to them, to re-establish Peace and Union in the Church. He remonstrates to him, that what he desir'd, was not extraordinary, since it had been the practice of the Saints, and particularly of the Church of Rome. He observes to him, That St. Dionysius had formerly Comforted the Church of Cæsarea by his Letters and that he had sent some of his Brethren to deliver Christians from Captivity; That now there was more Reason to complain of the Misery of the Church, since not only the Captivity of the Body, but that of the Soul also was to be fear'd. St. Basil, gave this Letter to Dorotheus, to carry into the West, and he sent this Deacon to St. Athanasius, to conferr with him about the means of procuring Peace, that so after he had met with him, he might Embark from Alexandria, to go into Italy. He charg'd him also with a Letter for St. Athanasius, which is the 52. And tho' in it, he says, That he referr'd himself wholly to the Prudence of St. Athanasius as to the Management of this Affair, yet he says, That his Advice should be to write to the Bishop of Rome, and to pray him, since there was no probability of calling a Synod, that he would send by his own Authority, Deputies into the East. He observes, That he must chuse such Persons as were able to endure the Fatigues of Travelling, and who had much Meekness and Moderation to Correct the Eagerness and Passionate Heats of some of the Bishops of the East: And in fine, who could speak at a fit Season, and accommodate themselves to the Times. He would have them carry with them the Acts of the Council of Ariminum, and an Account of the Transactions in the West, that they may be null'd; That they should come by Sea, without letting any body know of it; That at first they should address themselves to those of his own Communion, before they were pre-engaged by the Associates of Paulinus, the Enemies of Peace: and, in short, That they should condemn the Heresy of Marcellus of Ancyra. This Letter is the 52. At the end, he conjures St. Athanasius to send forthwith the Deacon Dorotheus into the West; that so the Business might be done the next Year, which was 371. He advertises him also, That he must take care to recommend to the Deputies from the West, that they be very Cautious lest they encrease Divisions instead of allaying them, and that they preferr to all things the Good of Peace; and that they do not maintain a Schism in the Church of Antioch, out of Affection to some particular Persons.

The desire of Peace, and the Fear that St. Basil had of bringing Persecution upon the Church, oblig'd him to be very cautious in his Discourse. Wherefore, though he profess'd to Believe and to defend the Divinity of the Holy Spirit; yet he said nothing of it unless he was oblig'd. And therefore when he was in an Assembly of Bishops held in the Year 370. at the Feast of St. Eupsichius, in the City of Cæsarea, he discoursed largely of the Divinity of the Father and the Son, and said nothing almost of the Holy Spirit. Whereupon a Religious Person who was present at this Assembly, accus'd St. Basil of betraying the Truth by a Cowardice unworthy of a Bishop, and publish'd this Accusation at a Feast where he was present, some time after. St. Gregory Nazianzen, who was one of the Guests at this Feast, endeavoured in vain to defend his Friend; for all the Company blam'd him,

St. Baſil. him, and at laſt St. Gregory himſelf was offended with his Conduct, and wrote to him his Judgment about it in Letter 26. St. Baſil having received this Letter by Hellenius, was a little offended with it, and anſwerd him in Letter 33, That he was ſurprized, that he ſhould ſo lightly give credit to a Calumniator. He ſignifies a great Contempt of theſe kind of Accuſations. He invites St. Gregory to come and ſee him, and ſays, That what was quickly to come to paſs, would ſerve for his Juſtification before all the World; becauſe it might be foreſeen, that he muſt ſuffer for the defence of the Truth, and perhaps ſhould be forc'd away from his Church and his Country. Which diſcovers that this Letter was written before the Perſecution of Valens, in the Year 370.

This Emperour had a Deſign to divide the Province of Cappadocia into two. St. Baſil thought that it was his Duty to defend the Rights of his People, and his Church. For this Reaſon, he wrote to a great Man of his Country called Martinianus, the 376 Letter, to pray him to go to Court and hinder this Diviſion. This Letter was written in the Year 370, as well as the 362, which was plainly written upon the ſame Occaſion. The 309 Letter wherein he declares, That he continued unſhaken, though he had been attack'd by the moſt powerful at Court, referrs to the Solicitations which the Prefect Modeſtus had us'd to him this Year 370, by Order of the Emperour Valens. 'Tis probable, that the Letter 409, wherein he thanks an Eaſtern Biſhop call'd Innocentius, for what he had written to him, is alſo of the ſame Year; for 'tis likely that this Biſhop wrote to him a little after his Ordination, and that St. Baſil took no long time to Anſwer him.

The Deacon Dorotheus, departed in the Year 371, but his Journey had not all the Succeſs, that might have been hop'd for. However, the Weſtern Biſhops wrote a Letter to the Biſhops of the Eaſt, which was ſent to them by St. Athanaſius, but the Contents are not known. It appears alſo by the Letters of St. Baſil, That there came from the Weſt a Deacon nam'd Sabinus, who carried the Letters of the Biſhops of Illyricum, Italy, and Gaul.

The Eaſtern Biſhops anſwer'd the Letter of thoſe of the Weſt, which they received by St. Athanaſius, and that which was brought them by Sabinus: There Anſwers are the Letters 61, and 69. In Letter 61, after they have teſtified their Joy, that they had, when they underſtood that the Weſtern Biſhops, were all at preſent United in one and the ſame Doctrine, they deſire of them help and relief in their Miſeries, which they deſcribe in a moſt lively and natural manner. Our miſeries ſay they, "are known to you, though we ſhould not write them, being publiſh'd over all the Earth. The Do-"ctrine of our Fathers is deſpis'd; The Tradition of the Apoſtles is overthrown; The new Inventions "of ſome particular Perſons prevail in the Churches; They treat Religion as Sophiſters, not as Di-"vines: The Wiſdom of this World Domineers, and the Glory of the Croſs is abhorr'd; The true "Paſtors are driven away, and ravening Wolves are entred into their places, who tear the Flock of "Chriſt in pieces; The Churches are abandon'd; the Deſarts are fill'd with deſolate Chriſtians; The "Old Men ſigh when they compare the times paſt with the preſent, and the Young Men find them-"ſelves miſerable, becauſe they never ſaw the Good things of which they are now deſtitute. Theſe "things ought to affect thoſe who have any love for Jeſus Chriſt and his Church: But what we have "ſaid of them, is very far ſhort of the Truth; wherefore, if you have any Charity for us, if you be "of the ſame Mind, if you have any Bowels of Pity, come ſpeedily to our help; Arm your ſelves with "Zeal for Piety, and deliver us from this Raging Tempeſt". At the end of this Letter, they make a ſhort Confeſſion of their Faith; wherein they acknowledge that the Holy Spirit is ador'd together with the Father and the Son: And they conclude with the Approbation of what the Weſtern Biſhops had done in Conformity to the Canons.

The ſecond Letter upon the ſame Subject, is written in the Name of Meletius, Euſebius of Samoſata, St. Baſil, and many other Eaſtern Biſhops, to the Biſhops of Italy and Gaul, that is the 69th. among thoſe of St. Baſil. There they give a Deſcription of their Miſeries yet more large, and more moving than the former, and conjure the Weſtern Biſhops to help them and bring them relief; and to ſend to them ſpeedily a great number of Deputies, who may take their ſeats in a Synod, hoping by this means, that they may reſtore the Faith of the Council of Nice, deſtroy Hereſy, and re-unite the Orthodox; who at preſent are divided in Communion, though they hold one and the ſame Doctrine. They compare the ſtate of the Churches of the Eaſt, to that of Jeruſalem, during the Siege of Veſpaſian; and they ſay, That as the Jews ruin'd themſelves then by their Inteſtine Seditions, while the Enemies Army reduced them to the laſt Extremity; ſo their Churches were now brought to Deſolation, not only by the War of the Hereticks, who openly attack'd them; but alſo by the Diviſions of the Orthodox: that if they deſire Aſſiſtance of the Biſhops of the Weſt, it was for this particular Reaſon, That Peace might be reſtor'd; and in this, they ſay, conſiſted the Relief of their Churches. They conclude their Letter with ſaying, That they commend and approve the Confeſſion of Faith that was made by thoſe of the Weſt, and that they conſented to all that they had lawfully and canonically determin'd in their Synodical Epiſtle. Theſe two Letters were ſent by Sabinus, who they ſay, is a Witneſs of all that they affirm.

St. Baſil wrote particularly by the ſame Sabinus to Valerianus Biſhop of Illyricum, or rather of Aquileia, the Letter 324; wherein he thanks him for the Charity he had teſtified in the Letter he had written, and Prays him to aſſiſt with his Prayers the Eaſtern Churches, that were afflicted with Hereſy and Schiſm. Theſe are all the Letters of St. Baſil written in this Year 371, concerning the Union of the Eaſt and the Weſt.

The Letters which he wrote in favour of Euſtathius of Sebaſtea, againſt Theodotus of Nicopolis, are alſo of this Year 371; becauſe he was at Difference with the former in the Year 372.

The Firſt Letter written upon this Subject is the 26th. addreſs'd to Euſebius of Samoſata: He acquaints him, That Meletius and Theodotus of Nicopolis, invited him to be preſent towards the Middle Middle of June, at a Synod which was to be held at Phargama: he prays St. Eusebius to be present there: He sent him this Letter by Eustathius of Sebastea, and tells him, That he waited for an Answer. St. Basil.

Eusebius came not to this Synod, but Eustathius was present there, and St. Basil, before he did Communicate with him, would have assurance of his Doctrine; and having had two Conferences with him, he made him agree to the Doctrine of the Church. Being thus perswaded that he was Orthodox, he joyn'd his Prayers with those of this Bishop, to thank God, who had given them Grace to think and speak after the same manner. The Design of St. Basil was to have a Confession of Faith drawn up by Theodotus, or those of his Party, which Eustathius should Sign: But Theodotus without enquiring into the Conduct of St. Basil, refused to admit him to his Synod, because he had communicated with Eustathius. St. Basil being to go into Armenia, passed by a Country House of Meletius called Getasa, where Theodotus was present; and after a free Conference between them, it was agreed, That if St. Basil could make Eustathius sign a Confession of Faith, which plainly contain'd the Doctrine of the Church, he should then continue in his Communion; but on the contrary, he should separate from him, if he refus'd to sign that Confession. Meletius and his Priest Diodorus, having approved this Proposal, it was also agreed to by Theodotus, who invited St. Basil to go with him to Nicopolis: But when he was arrived there, he would not communicate with him contrary to his Word which he pass'd to him; which obliged St. Basil to withdraw, and to go to Satala, there to regulate some Affairs of Armenia, and Ordain some Bishops. He wrote from thence to Count Terentius the 187 Letter; wherein he gives him an account of those Transactions which had passed. Letter 78, is the Confession of Faith which St. Basil caused Eustathius of Sebastea to sign at this time. It contains the Nicene Creed, and rejects the Error of Sabellius and Marcellus of Ancyra. He speaks also of those Differences in Letter 364, to Atarbius.

He wrote also a little while after, the Letter 239. to Eusebius of Samosata; whom he acquaints with the disgraceful manner wherein he was treated by Theodotus. He says, That he had also a Conference with Eustathius, and that he found him very Catholick. He complains, That the Bishops of the second Cappadocia, lately advanced into a Province, refused to have any Correspondence with him. He rallies his Brother Gregory, and says, It were to be wished that he had a Bishoprick that would agree to his Mind; That he is so zealous and watchful, that he could Govern all the Churches of the World; That he was not only capable of Great Things, but that he gave weight to Small Matters, and made Affairs of no importance, pass for Matters of the greatest Consequence, by his manner of treating of them. He complains of a Bishop nam'd Palmatius, whom Maximus had made use of to persecute the Church. He invites Eusebius to come and see him, giving him notice that his Presence was necessary to regulate the Affairs of Cappadocia.

He invites him also by Letter 256, to be present at the Feast of St. Eupsichius, which was the 7th. of September, to Ordain Bishops and to give him Advice about the Cause which his Brother Gregory Nyssen had undertaken against him in the Assembly which was held at Ancyra.

Probably Eusebius of Samosata came not to this Synod of Cæsarea, but he sent thither a Bishop nam'd Sabinus, whose Presence comforted St. Basil under the Afflictions which he had met with at Nicopolis, as he acquaints Eusebius by Letter 253; where he excuses the too great Zeal which Theodotus had testified for the observation of the Canons. He says in this Letter, That he passionately wished to see and embrace Eusebius. The Letters 252, 255, 260, were almost at the same time.

The 254th. is to the same Person, and in the same Year; but it was written before that which we just now mentioned, and at the Beginning of the Year. He writes to him, That Demophilus was upon the Throne of Constantinople, and that he was a Hypocrite; and yet that he had reunited the two Parties; and that some Neighbouring Bishops were joyn'd with him. He deplores the miserable state of the Eastern Churches; and says, That God only knows when their Condition may be better.

We have already seen that St. Basil went this Year to Satala, to regulate the Affairs of this Church, and that he Ordained a Bishop there, at the desire of the Inhabitants. He recommends him to them in Letters 296, and 183; and in 185 he writes to the Church of the Parnassians, upon the Death of their Bishop; and in 186, he does with much Eloquence and Christian Charity comfort the Widow of the Prætor Anatheus, upon the Death of her Husband. This Letter may pass for a perfect Pattern of true Christian Consolation.

Athanasius Bishop of Ancyra, dying in the Year 372, it follows that the Letter 53 of St. Basil which is address'd to him, was at least in the Year 371. He complains in this Letter of the Conduct of this Bishop, who accused him of teaching Errors in his Writings, or subscribing to those of others. The Complaint of this Bishop, made St. Basil apprehend that some Heretick had prefix'd his Name to his Works. He declares, That he had written against the Anomæans, and against those that say, The Holy Spirit is a Creature.

The following Letter is written to the Father of this Bishop, praying him to admonish his Son charitably, not to defame his Colleague without reason.

'Tis credible that the Letter 381, address'd to the Suffragans, was also written in the same Year with the preceeding Letters, and probably soon after St. Basil was a Bishop. He complains in this Letter, That some neglected to observe the Canons, and to follow the Discipline of the Church in the Ordination of Ministers exactly: He observes, that formerly none were chosen, but those whose Probity was well known, and of whom the Priests and Deacons gave a good Testimony to the Suffragans; and that neither were these Ordained until the Bishops of the Dioceſs were first advertised of it: He complains, That now the Suffragans did not write to the Bishops; and that they also permitted

St. Baſil. mitted the Prieſts and Deacons to chooſe whom they pleas'd, without enquiring into their Behaviour. From whence it comes to paſs, ſays he, that there are many Miniſters, and but very few who are worthy of their Miniſtery. To avoid this Abuſe, he Ordains, That there ſhould be preſently ſent to him a Liſt of all the Miniſters that are in the Villages containing the Names of thoſe which have been admitted, and an account of the Life which they lead; That they ſhould be reduc'd to the Condition of Lay-men, who ſhould be found incapable, and thoſe who had been admitted by Prieſts ſince the time of the firſt Prohibition; and that for the future, none ſhould be admitted but thoſe whoſe Life and Converſation had been well examin'd. In fine, he declares, That thoſe who ſhould be admitted into the Clergy, without his Approbation, ſhould be thruſt down to the ſtation of the Laity again.

The 392 to Amphilochius, was written before he was made Biſhop of Iconium, and by conſequence towards the End of 371, or the beginning of 372. 'Tis written in the Name of Heraclides, an ancient Friend of Amphilochius. It acquaints him with the Life which he leads under the Conduct of St. Baſil, and invites him to come and ſtay with them.

The 319 to Innocentius may be alſo about the ſame time. He refuſes to charge himſelf with the Care of the Eaſtern Churches, which this Biſhop would have him to do.

'Twas probably in the ſame Year that St. Baſil undertook to build a Church and a Hoſpital in Ceſarea. Some would have hindred the going on of this Work; whereupon he writes to Elias Governor of the Province in Letter 372; praying him for leave to proceed in his Buildings. The 373, was written to the ſame Perſon in favour of a Receiver, who had neglected to ſend an Account of his Receipts. In the 305, which is to ſome Receiver-General, St. Baſil determines, That an Oath ſhould not be exacted from the Collectors of Taxes; becauſe theſe kind of Oaths bring no great Profit to the Receivers, and accuſtom Men to make falſe Oaths. In the 304. he writes to the ſame Perſon, That the Monks ought to be exempted from paying of Tribute.

In the Beginning of the Year 372, St. Baſil having found out the Frauds of Euſtathius of Sebaſtea, ſeparated from him, and re-united himſelf to Theodotus. This Separation was begun by two Friends of Euſtathius, call'd Baſil and Euphronius, who were ſent to St. Baſil, as Spyes upon him. Theſe two Perſons having created ſome trouble to this Saint, he wrote about it to Euſtathius, and pray'd him to put a ſtop to the Diſorder which they caus'd in his Dioceſs. This Letter is the 307, which I believe was written to Euſtathius of Sebaſtea, though ſome think that it was addreſs'd to another Euſtathius Biſhop of Himeria, to whom the preceeding Letter is addreſs'd. Some time after, Euſtathius being invited to a Council held by St. Baſil, not only refus'd to come thither himſelf, but hindred all thoſe of his Party from going, and declared himſelf in his Diſcourſes, and in his Letters, againſt St. Baſil. He had alſo the Inſolence to write him a Letter, wherein he declar'd, That he had withdrawn from his Communion, and publiſh'd a Writing or Manifeſto againſt him; wherein he accuſes him of the Error of Apollinarius. St. Baſil underſtanding theſe things, acknowledg'd, but too late, that he had too eaſily given Credit to one of the greateſt Cheats in the World. He began to commend the Prudence of Theodotus of Nicopolis; and to reconcile himſelf perfectly to him, he wrote the Letter 196, wherein he gives him a faithful account of all that we have ſaid, and teſtifies the regret he had for truſting to this Impoſtor. He obſerves, That he had publiſh'd a Confeſſion of Faith, which was perfectly agreeable to the Opinions of Arius, and accuſes him of re-ordaining Biſhops.

A Biſhop of Cilicia nam'd Theophilus, joyn'd himſelf with Euſtathius, againſt St. Baſil. 'Tis to him that Letter 310. is addreſs'd; wherein St. Baſil acquaints him, That though he had great Cauſe of Grief upon his account, yet he would not ceaſe always to remember him.

The Letter 81. to Euſtathius the Phyſician, was written upon the Separation of Euſtathius of Sebaſtea: for therein he teſtifies what Trouble he endur'd for the Separation of thoſe who had withdrawn from his Communion; but yet he was oblig'd rather to ſuffer their Diviſion from him, than do any thing againſt the Truth and againſt his own Conſcience; becauſe there was nothing more dear to him than the Faith, and Hope in Jeſus Chriſt.

In Letter 82. to Petrophilus, who had objected this Separation to him; He ſhows him, That his Enemies were the Cauſes of this Diviſion, and juſtifies himſelf from two Accuſations which Euſtathius had form'd againſt him; Whereof the Firſt was, That he had formerly written to Apollinarius: And the Second, That he had received Diodorus into his Communion. With reference to Apollinarius, he confeſſes, That he had formerly written one Letter only to him; but he ſays, That he did not then believe him to be in an Error; That he could not be reſponſible for his Faults; And That he had not read his Writings. As to Diodorus, he confeſſes that he received him into his Communion, as a good Catholick, being Educated by Silvanus of Tarſus, and who could be charg'd with nothing. He vindicates himſelf alſo from the Crimes that were imputed to him in a Writing addreſs'd to Dazizus; and at laſt, he accuſes Euſtathius of Sebaſtea, and deſcribes his Life in ſuch a manner as is very much to his diſadvantage. Patrophilus having received this Letter, ſent St. Baſil word that he would not ſeparate from him. St. Baſil thanks him in Letter 85, and admoniſhes him, That for keeping Peace, we muſt make choice of ſuch Perſons with whom we may be United; and that we are oblig'd to break with ſome Perſons with whom Peace cannot be had.

But St. Baſil did not only defend himſelf by Letters written to his Friends; but he wrote alſo a very ſmart Letter upon the ſame Subject to Euſtathius, which is the 79. There he gives an Account of his Conduct and his Doctrine, during the whole time of his Life: He ſhews him, That he could not be accus'd without Injuſtice, for having written almoſt Twenty Years ago to Apollinarius: He takes Euſtathius himſelf for a Witneſs of his Faith, and asks him, If he could accuſe him of promoting any Error in the Conference which he had with him. He accuſes him of being the Diſciple of Arius and Aetius. At last, he observes, That the true Cause wherefore he had made this Separation, was not because of the Letter which St. Basil wrote to Apollinarius, as is pretended; but because his Communion might be prejudicial to those who would acquire Favour and Authority. St. Basil.

Arius

'Twas at the beginning of this Year, that St. Basil wrote to his Brother Gregory Nyssen, upon a Complaint that he had against him. He acquaints him in Letter 44, That he was surpriſed, that there were three Letters written to him, under the Name of his Uncle Gregory, which were none of his. He gives him to understand, That he would come and see him, and the Bishops his Friends, provided they would receive him Honourably. The 45 and 46, are to his Uncle Gregory, upon the same Difference.

The Letter 43, goes under the Name of St. Basil, and is addreſs'd to the same St. Gregory Nyssen, in the Editions of St. Basil: But 'tis in the Second Volume of St. Gregory Nyssen, under the Name of that Father, and is addreſs'd to their Brother Peter; and indeed, it has more of the Stile of St. Gregory, than of St. Basil. The Author of it explains with much Subtilty, the Difference between the words Hypostasis, and Essence: and shows, That Essence signifies that which is common to the Three Divine Persons; and Hypostasis, that which is peculiar to each Person.

The Letter 262, to Eusebius of Samosata, was written before Easter, in the Year 372. It contains excuses for not writing to him so often as he would. St. Basil fell sick about Easter, and was afflicted with a Fever, which tormented him till Winter, as appears by the Letters 257 and 258, written at the same time, to Eusebius of Samosata, and by 270, 271, to Antiochus.

This same Year the Persecution of the Arians was begun anew more fiercely than ever. St. Basil speaks of this persecution in his Letter 5. to Eusebius, wherein he acquaints him, That 'twas rais'd against the Catholicks of the Church of Tarsus, which was the Centre of Unity to Isauria, Cilicia, and Cappadocia; That the Church was ruin'd by desperate Persons, and that all things went on from bad to worse, while the Catholicks were amus'd, and did nothing but look on.

Eusebius answer'd him, That they must write again to the Bishops of the West, to desire of them some Relief. St. Basil wrote also about it to Meletius, without whose Advice, he would undertake nothing. This Letter is the 58, wherein he complains, that Anthimus, Bishop of Tyana, would have Ordain'd one Faustus, in the room of a Bishop whom St. Basil had Ordain'd in Armenia. He sent this Letter by Sanctissimus, whom he charg'd also with a Letter to Theodotus, wherein he complains of the Ordination of Faustus. This Letter is the 195. Afterwards, he gave to the same Person, three Letters: The First for the Priests of Antioch; the Second for the Monks of that City; and the Last for Pelagius of Laodicea. These Letters are the 199, 200, and 312. There is also a Letter upon the Ordination of Faustus, addreſs'd to Poemenius, Bishop of Satala, which is the 313.

A little while after, he wrote to Meletius the Letter 59, wherein having defended himself from the Accusation of Eustathius, who accus'd him of the Errors of Apollinarius; he says, That he had receiv'd Information, that it was resolv'd at Court, to deliver him up to the Fury of his Enemies; but that this Order was suspended for some time.

He earnestly prays Meletius to answer the Letter which he had written to him by Sanctissimus, and to send him a Letter for the Bishops of the West, Sign'd by those who were united with him in Communion and Judgment. He signifies that the Western Bishops must be advertis'd not to receive into their Communion indifferently, all those that come from the East.

The Letter 273, to the Priest Antiochus, who was Nephew to Eusebius of Samosata, which Father Combefis believes to be directed also to Meletius, is upon the same Subject. He prays him to Order, together with the Deacon Dorotheus, what must be done for a Re-union with the West. He Counsels him to dictate the Letter himself, that was to be sent thither. He says, That he had written some time ago to the Bishops of Illyricum, of Gaul, and Italy, by the Deacon Sabinus; but he adds, That it would be convenient to send one into the West, in the Name of a Synod of the East. As to what concerns Athanasius, he says, That he is very well inclin'd to Peace; but he can do nothing, unless Letters of Communion be sent to him: Moreover, That he does ardently desire the Reunion, and will do all that's possible for him to procure it. This Letter was written before Easter. He signifies, that he waited for his Answer.

'Twas at this Time, and upon this Occasion, that Letter 70 of St. Basil, was written, addreſs'd to the Western Bishops, wherein he prays them to inform their Emperour of the Miseries which the Orthodox suffer'd in the East, and to send them Deputies. This Letter was to be carried by a Priest nam'd Dorotheus.

While Matters were thus order'd in the East, St. Basil, who was now recovering, as appears by the Sixth Letter to Eusebius of Samosata, fell sick again in Winter, He speaks of this Sickness in his Seventh Letter, and excuses himself for not visiting St. Eusebius from the sharpness of the Winter, and the Death of his Mother. He deplores in his Letter, the unhappy State of the Church, and says, That some would have plac'd Arians at Ancyra and Neocæsarea, in the room of the Orthodox, but that at last they had left the Churches in tranquility.

In the mean time, Evagrius, a Priest of Antioch being return'd from the West, brought a Letter, which he would have obliged the Eastern Bishops to Sign; saying, That those which they had written before, were not approved in the West. St. Basil having received Advice of this, wrote to Eusebius of Samosata by his Eighth Letter. There he speaks against Eustathius of Sebastea, and enquires if he was to be present at the Ordination of a Bishop for the City of Iconium, which had formerly depended upon his Metropolis, but did not now since the Division of Cappadocia.

He wrote also at the same time to this Evagrius, who was come from the West, and who had written to him, that he was suspected, because of his Communion with Meletius. St. Basil answer'd him him by Letter 342, That he was very little troubled at what the World thought of him, but that he would labour hard for Peace; and Exhorts Evagrius to do the ſame. He ſignifies to him, That he was troubled to underſtand by Dorotheus, That he would not Communicate with Meletius's Party. He declares to him, That as things now ſtand he could not ſend any body into the Weſt.

St Baſil.

He writes the ſame Account of the Journey to Rome, to that Dorotheus, whom he had charg'd with Letter 70. He could not forbear taking Notice, How angry he was with the Pope, and ſaying, That his Brother Gregory, was not a proper Perſon to be deputed into the Weſt, becauſe he was too ſimple to have any thing to do with a Proud Man, and one exalted in Dignity, who by conſequence would hardly have patience to hear him ſpeak the Truth. This Letter is the 150. The Prieſt went to Rome, however, as appears by Letter 321.

In the mean time, Euſebius of Samoſata, who paſſionately deſir'd the Peace of the Church, beleiving that St. Baſil neglected to labour in it, wrote a Letter to him, wherein he complains of two Things: Firſt, That he had not come to ſee him: Secondly, That he had abandon'd, as one may ſay, the Church to its Enemies, by his Sloathfulneſs and Negligence. St. Baſil anſwer'd him, by Letter 262, That he could not come to ſee him, becauſe of his Sickneſs, and that the thing which hindred his Good Succeſs, was not the want of Care; but becauſe the Biſhops did not agree among themſelves, about Matters of Conſequence, and he alone could not regulate Affairs, ſince the Canons did not allow one Biſhop alone, to make Regulations of this Nature.

The Letter 265, is almoſt upon the ſame Subject. He wrote to him, That he ardently deſir'd Peace, but then it muſt be a real one. He adviſes him to take heed of thoſe that ſeem to be Catholicks, and yet are not. He declares to him, That he would never Communicate with thoſe who did not receive the Nicene Faith, or who believ'd that the Holy Spirit was a Creature, becauſe he was not willing to approach the Altar, with a Heart full of Diſſimulation and Hypocriſy, that for this Reaſon, he had withdrawn from the Communion of Euvippus; That they ought to be treated with all mildneſs, who had not receiv'd this Faith; That we ſhould invite them to own it, and ſhow great Charity and Moderation to them: but that we ought never to be Trimmers, nor remain Neuters in Matters of Faith.

About the End of this Year, The Church of Antioch being afflicted with a rough Perſecution, he wrote Letter 60, to comfort it. He propoſes the Nicene Creed, as the Rule of Faith. He ſays, That the Divinity of the Holy Spirit was not there expreſly determin'd, becauſe it was not then directly oppos'd but that we ought to condemn all thoſe who admit a Creature in the Trinity.

The Letter 62, to the Church of Neocæſarea, is alſo of the ſame Nature; he Comforts it upon the Death of its Biſhop. It was written before the foregoing Letter, and at the beginning of the Year. There are ſome other Letters of St. Baſil, which probably were written the ſame Year 372, that have not ſo much reference to Hiſtory.

We may place in this Number, the Letters 274, 275, 276, 277, 278, and 279, to the Governour Modeſtus, who began to be his Friend about this time. He prays him in this laſt, to preſerve the Exemptions of Prieſts and Deacons.

We may place alſo in this time, the Letter 86, to Boſphorus, wherein St. Baſil gives an Account of the Difference which he had with his Predeceſſor, Dianius, Biſhop of Cæſarea. He ſays, That he had not anathematis'd him, but that he was extremely troubled, when he underſtood, that this Biſhop had Sign'd the Creed of Conſtantinople; and that for this Cauſe, he ſeparated from him, but that he returned to his Communion before he died, when he declar'd, That he had Signed this Creed by Surprize, and without knowing any evil by it.

There is another Letter, wherein he ſpeaks of this Biſhop Boſphorus. It is Letter 300, addreſs'd to the Nuns. There he confutes thoſe who accuſed him of not receiving the Nicene Creed. He approves it, and yet confeſſes, that there are Catholicks who do not allow of the Word Conſubſtantial, becauſe they believe that it has an ill Sence. He ſays, That they ought to be pardon'd, becauſe this Term did very much diſpleaſe the Biſhops, who condemned Paulus Samoſatenus. He explains the good Sence of this Word, and the diſtinction of Hypoſtaſes. Laſtly, He proves the Divinity and Equality of the Father and the Son.

St. Peter of Alexandria, having Succeeded St. Athanaſius, in the Year 373, St. Baſil did not fail to write to him immediately after his Promotion to the Biſhoprick. This Letter is the 320. He Congratulates his Exaltation, and exhorts him to follow the Footſteps of St. Athanaſius.

Soon after this, Peter was forced away, and the Church of Alexandria was perſecuted moſt violently by the Arians. Immediately, St. Baſil comforts them in a Letter, wherein he deplores their Miſery. This Letter is the 71.

Amphilochius was Ordained Biſhop of Iconium at the end of the Year 372, as appears by the Eighth Letter of St. Baſil. 'Twas therefore towards the End of the laſt Year, or rather at the Beginning of this, that St. Baſil congratulated him by Letter 393, and 'twas certainly in 373, that he invited him by Letter 344, to the Feaſt of St. Euphichius, which was September the 5th.

The 395, to the ſame, is alſo of the ſame Year. He acquaints him, That he had finiſh'd the Book of the Holy Spirit.

The Letter 363, to Euſebius of Samoſata, was written before Eaſter of the ſame Year, during the ſharp Winter-Seaſon. St. Baſil acquaints him, That he was dangerouſly Sick.

Towards the End of this Year, St. Euſebius of Samoſata, was baniſh'd into Thrace, and St. Baſil wrote to him the Letters 9, and 251. to Comfort him in his baniſhment; and the Letter 269, to his Nephew Antiochus, who accompanied his Uncle. The Clergy of Samoſata, being troubled by the Arians, and by the Diviſion of ſome particular Perſons, he Comforts them, and Exhorts them to Peace

Peace by Letter 280, and praiſes the Senate of that City, by Letter 294. He wrote alſo to Otreus, Biſhop of Melitine, the Letter 316, where he ſpeaks of the Baniſhment of Euſebius.

St. Baſil.

It was towards the End of this Year, that St. Baſil wrote to the Biſhops of the Sea-Coaſts, and of the Iſles, the Letter 77, wherein he complains, that they had ſent no body to him for Relief in their Miſeries, and prays them to ſend their Deputies and Letters of Communion. 'Twas alſo about the ſame time, that he wrote the Letter 322, upon the ſame Subject to Elpides. We may place alſo in the ſame time, the Letter 87, which he wrote to a Heretical Woman call'd Simplicia, who concerned her ſelf to make Remonſtrances to him. He tells her with ſome warmth, That it doth not belong to her to judge: That he expected his judgment from God. He adds, That he ſhould not want Witneſſes to juſtify his Conduct, and that he would not make uſe of Slaves or Eunuchs, whoſe Teſtimony ought not to be taken. He gives a dreadful Character of the Eunuchs of his time.

We cannot find a Year wherein we can better place, than in this, the Letter 184 to Palladius, and to Innocentius, Prieſts and Monks. He informs them, That he is a lover of Peace. He prays God to reſtrain the Authors of Diviſion, and recommends himſelf to their Prayers.

St. Baſil being recovered of his Sickneſs, which had tormented him during the two Winters of the Years 373 and 374, went into Piſidia and Iſauria, to regulate the Affairs of thoſe Countries, as it appears by Letter 272. It was before this Journey that he wrote to Amphilochius, the Letter 396, wherein he acquaints him with his Diſeaſe, and prays him to delay their meeting for ſome Days; ſo it was alſo in the ſame Winter, that he wrote the firſt Canonical Letter to Amphilochius, which he could not ſend to him becauſe of his Sickneſs; and St. Amphilochius having ſent to him ſome more Queſtions, wherein he deſired to be informed, St. Baſil anſwered him by the Second, written in the beginning of the Year 374. The laſt of theſe Letters was probably written towards the end of this Year, after St. Gregory was retir'd from Nazianzum. We ſhall ſpeak ſeverally of theſe Letters.

The Affairs which he had in Piſidia, concerned the Churches of Iſaurus or Iſauria, which had been diſmembred from their own Province, to be joyned to the Churches of Piſidia and Lycaonia. St. Amphilochius, who was Biſhop of Iconium, the Metropolis of Lycaonia, had written about it to St. Baſil, and prayed him to come thither. This Saint, before he went into that Country, acquainted him by Letter 406, That he did well to take Care of theſe Churches; but yet he did not approve of the Deſign which he had of ſharing them amongſt many Biſhops, leſt the Dignity of a Biſhop ſhould thereby become contemptible. He ſays, That it would be better to chuſe one man worthy of a Biſhoprick, who might take ſome Prieſts to his Aſſiſtance, than thus to divide a ſmall Territory into many Biſhopricks. He adviſes him to place Pariſh Prieſts in the Towns where there had formerly been Biſhops, before any Biſhop was Ordain'd, leſt if there ſhould be one Ordain'd before, he would not approve of this Regulation. In fine, he admoniſhes him to confine the Church of Iſauria within its own Bounds. He adds, That the Affairs of the Church of Nyſſa are in the ſame Condition, and that ſome of his Enemies were gone to Court. He ſubjoyns a Queſtion of Doctrine about the Opinion of Philo, who affirms, That Manna had all ſorts of Taſtes. He ſays, That this Opinion was grounded only upon a Jewiſh Tradition. He advertiſes Amphilochius, that Sympius had ſent him a Letter of Communion, and that he had anſwer'd him. This Letter is probably the 398, directed to Amphilochius, but it could not be addreſs'd to him, ſince it appears by this Letter that he to whom St. Baſil wrote, had been at difference with him, and was reconciled ſome time before, ſince he thanks him for his Reconciliation.

In all probability it was about this Affair of Iſauria, and ſome others of the like Nature, that St. Baſil went into Piſidia and Iſauria; and in the beginning of the Year 375, from Piſidia he went to Pontus, a Canton whereof called Dazimona, was furiouſly troubled by Euſtathius of Sebaſtea, who had perſwaded many Biſhops to ſeparate from the Communion of St. Baſil. This Saint thought to have found one of his Friends call'd Hilary, in that Country, but he was gone. He ſignifies in Letter 370, how much he was troubled, that he could not find him. He acquaints him alſo, That the Anomæans and Semi-Arians hated him, and loaded him with Calumnies, becauſe of ſome Writings that were falſly attributed to him. In his return he went to ſee his ancient place of retirement, near Neocæſarea, were his Brother Peter dwelt. The Inhabitants of Neocæſarea, believing that he was come to concern himſelf about their Affairs, conceiv'd an Averſion to him, and accus'd him of many things. To refute their Calumnies and undeceive them, he wrote to them three Letters upon this Occaſion.

The firſt, which is the 63, is addreſs'd to the Clergy. He ſays, That they were to blame, to accuſe him of Error, who themſelves propagated thoſe things which were aſſerted by none but Sabellius and Marcellus of Ancyra; That they could have but two Pretences for the Averſion they had teſtified againſt him; Firſt, The changing of the way of ſinging of Pſalms; and Secondly, The Affection which he had for thoſe that profeſs'd a Monaſtick Life. As to the laſt Accuſation, he ſays, That it was very much to his Advantage, that they had this Opinion of him, ſince there were Monks in Egypt, in Paleſtine, and in Meſopotamia; and Monaſteries of Nuns in all Places. As to the ſinging of the Prayers of the Church, he maintains, That in that he follow'd the ancient Cuſtom of the Church; That on the great Feſtivals the People came before Day into the Church; That after Prayer they ſtood up to ſing in two Chorus's, which anſwered one another; That thus the Night was ſpent in ſinging and praying; That at break of Day all the Faithful rehears'd the Penitential Pſalms. He maintains, That this Cuſtom took place in Egypt, in Libya, in Phœnicia, in Paleſtine, in Syria. As to what they objected to him, That this was not in uſe in the time of St. Gregory Thaumaturgus, he anſwers them, That the Letanies or the Prayers which the Faithful uſed at Neocæſarea, were no more in uſe in his time, than this Cuſtom. He adds that tho' he did not condemn them, yet he thought it more convenient

St. Baſil. convenient to ask God's Pardon of Sins, by uſing the Words of the Holy Scripture, than employing thoſe of Men's deviſing. He maintains alſo, That it cannot be proved, that the ſinging of Pſalms was not uſed in St. Gregory's time. He blames them, becauſe they themſelves did not obſerve what this great Man did. He tells them, That he pray'd with his head uncovered; That he did not ſwear at all; That he did not reproach his Neighbour; That he did not bear Envy againſt him; That he was neither proud nor quarrelſome, &c. whereby he tacitly objects theſe Faults to thoſe of Neocæſarea. Towards the latter end, he admoniſhes them to lay aſide thoſe Innovations that had crept in amongſt them, to admit the three Hypoſtaſes in God, not to deny the Name of Jeſus Chriſt, and not to miſinterpret the Expreſſions of St. Gregory.

The 64 is directed to the moſt Learned of this Church of Neocæſarea. There he deſcribes the Occaſion and Cauſe which obliged him to come near Neocæſarea. He accuſes them of Sabellianiſm, becauſe they admitted but one Hypoſtaſis. He anſwers what they had ſaid in a Letter addreſs'd to Anthimus, wherein they alledg'd a Paſſage of St. Gregory Thaumaturgus, who ſays, That the Father and the Son were Two by Conception, but One in Subſtance. He maintains, That this Father did not ſay this, as an Article of Faith; That this Expreſſion eſcap'd him in the heat of Diſputation, and that he never intended to explain his Doctrine about the Myſtery of the Trinity exactly, in a Treatiſe which was made for the Inſtruction of an Infidel. At Laſt he aſſerts, that 'tis not ſufficient to ſay, That there are Three Divine Perſons, unleſs it be added, that each of them has a particular Subſiſtence by it ſelf.

The Letter 75 is addreſs'd to all the Faithful of Neocæſarea, whom he treats with more mildneſs. He complains of them, that having given Credit to the Calumnies which were publiſh'd againſt him, they had ſeparated from his Communion. He repreſents to them, That he was Educated by his Grand-Mother Macrina, who had been amongſt them, and had been Inſtructed in the Doctrine of St. Gregory of Neocæſarea, and that ſince that time, he had never Patroniz'd the Arians; That he had Letters from St. Athanaſius, wherein he ſaid, That thoſe ſhould be receiv'd into Communion, who returned from their Error. St. Baſil adds, That he Communicated with all the Orthodox Churches, and ſo thoſe that would not Communicate with him, were ſeparated from the Church. In ſhort, He does not refuſe to be judged by a Synod. He would even ſubmit himſelf to their Judgment, but upon Condition that they ſhould not lightly believe, but examine the Accuſations that were form'd againſt him, and his Defences. There is in this Letter a very fine Sentence againſt Calumny. The 20th. Letter to Euſtathius the Phyſician, was alſo written by St. Baſil about the ſame time, to vindicate himſelf againſt thoſe that accuſed him of teaching, That there were Three Gods, becauſe he admitted Three Hypoſtaſes. He juſtifies this Doctrine, and proves the Divinity of the Holy Spirit. This Letter in ſome Manuſcripts is attributed to St. Gregory Nyſſen, and 'tis found among his Works; but 'tis rather St. Baſil's, than St. Gregory Nyſſen's, for it agrees better to him; the Stile is more like his, and the Doctrine is different from that of St. Gregory; ſince the Author of this Letter maintains, That the Soul of Samuel did really come from the Inviſible State to ſpeak unto Saul; and St. Gregory expreſly teaches the contrary in his Book of the Witch of Endor. In the 382, written to Olympas, he complains, that his Enemies had written againſt him, and had imputed to him the Error and the Writings of Apollinarius. He confeſſes, That this Man was a Heretick. A Biſhop nam'd Eulancius had taken Part againſt him with thoſe of Neocæſarea; but he came to himſelf at laſt, and wrote to St. Baſil, whom he thanks by Letter 281. He defends himſelf alſo from the Calumnies of Euſtathius, in Letter 346 to Genethlius.

St. Baſil being returned to Cæſarea, received there Letters from the Eaſt, wherein they acquaint him, that Paulinus's Party had received a Letter from the Weſt, which confirmed to him the Biſhoprick of Antioch. This Letter ſo raiſed the Spirits of thoſe of that Party, that they would have forced every body elſe to Sign a Confeſſion of Faith, that they might be re-united with them. They did alſo ſhake Count Terentius, who had formerly been of Meletius's ſide, and would have oblig'd him to Conſent to this Union. St. Baſil being inform'd of this News, wrote immediately to him the Letter 349, to perſuade him not to abandon Meletius. He ſays, That thoſe of the Weſt were ignorant of the State of the Eaſtern Churches, and that they knew not the Reaſons which St. Athanaſius had to Communicate with Paulinus. He declares, That he accuſes no Man; That he deſires nothing but Peace; That he congratulates thoſe who had brought theſe Letters from Rome; but that he could not forſake Meletius and his Church, to joyn with a Party that had caus'd the Schiſm. Laſtly, He refutes the Opinion of thoſe of that Side, who admitted but One Hypoſtaſis in the Trinity.

He ſent an Account immediately to Antiochus, who was at Samoſata, of all that had been done ſince the beginning of this Year, and a Relation of what he had learn'd from Antioch: This Letter is the 272. About the ſame time, the Prieſt Dorotheus, who was gone into the Weſt, contrary to the counſel of St. Baſil, return'd into the Eaſt, very much diſſatisfied with the manner of Treatment that he had met with from Damaſus; who reckon'd Meletius and Euſebius of Samoſata among the Arians. Peter of Alexandria who was then at Rome, wrote about it to St. Baſil, ſignifying to him, That he was troubled that he had received no News from the Eaſt, and that Dorotheus had not ſatisfied the Biſhops of the Weſt. St. Baſil anſwer'd him by Letter 321, wherein having excuſed himſelf for not writing to him before, he complains of the Conduct of Damaſus, excuſes Dorotheus, and juſtifies Meletius and Euſebius of Samoſata. Some time after St. Baſil adviſes St. Amphilochius by Letter 403, to ſend a Man of Gravity and Judgment into Lycia, to inquire into the Inclinations of the Biſhops of that Country; becauſe he was aſſur'd, that they were for the moſt part Orthodox, and deſired nothing more than a re-union with them. He names to him thoſe whom he certainly knew to be Catholicks, to be firſt conſulted. He thanks God that Aſia was purg'd from the poiſon of Hereſy, and exhorts Amphilochius to take care of his Church. The Letters 402, and 403, to the ſame Amphilochius, are written in the ſame Year, before the 5th. of September.

and

St. Baſil.

About the End of this Year, Demoſthenes, Lieutenant to the Pretorian Prefect, renew'd the Perſecution againſt the Churches of Aſia. He caus'd a little Council to be aſſembled at Ancyra, wherein he procur'd Hipſius to be turn'd out, and Ecdicius the Arian to be Ordain'd in his room.

Demoſthenes came afterwards to Nyſſa, to force away from thence St. Gregory, whom he would have Arreſted, under pretence that he waſted the Church's Money. St. Baſil thought himſelf oblig'd on this occaſion to write for his Brother to Demoſthenes in the Name of all the Biſhops of his Province. He gives him to underſtand, That if he would treat about the Money, the Treaſurers were ready to give him an Account of it; but if he accuſed him of Eccleſiaſtical Matters, that he himſelf would examine it, and that he ſhould not ſend his Brother to be judg'd out of his own Country. He wrote alſo the Letter 358. to Abyrcius, wherein he prays him to aſſiſt his Brother. This happen'd about Chriſtmas in the Year 374; for St. Amphilochius having ſent Preſents to St. Baſil at the time of this Feſtival, St. Baſil thanks him by Letter 404, and tells him, That his Brother was forced to fly.

Demoſthenes was not ſatisfied with forcing away St. Gregory Nyſſen upon the Accuſation of a profligate Perſon, but called a Synod of the Biſhops of Galatia and Pontus at Nyſſa; wherein he got a Biſhop ordain'd in the room of St. Gregory. From thence the ſame Biſhops went to Sebaſtea, to place one of their own Party at Nicopolis in the room of Theodotus, who was dead. They choſe one Fronto, but the Nicopolitans would not receive him. This happened in the beginning of the Year 375; and St. Baſil wrote an Account of it to Euſebius of Samoſata by the Letters 264, and 10. In this laſt Letter he complains of the Pride of the Biſhops of the Weſt, and ſays, That their Faith was ſuſpected by him, ſince they acted as they had done formerly, with reference to Marcellus of Ancyra. In the Letter 405 to St. Amphilochius, he deſcribes and deplores the Miſery of the Churches, and ſays, That Aſclepius was kill'd becauſe he would not communicate with Hereticks. And he does the ſame in the Letter 348. to Elpidius. He ſpeaks alſo of the Unhappy State of the Church in Letter 266. In Letter 297 written to thoſe of Chalcis, he exhorts them to continue firm and conſtant in the time of Perſecution; He tells them, That it was violent in the Eaſt, and that it threatned Cappadocia, The Letters 298, and 299, to thoſe of Berœa, are upon the ſame ſubject, as well as 303; wherein he comforts the Monks that ſuffer'd for the Faith. He ſays, That their Sufferings ſhall not be leſs recompenced than thoſe of the Ancient Martyrs. We muſt joyn to theſe the 326, and 327, addreſs'd to Barſus Biſhop of Edeſſa; who was Baniſhed, and the 306 to Euſtathius of Himmeria.

He wrote at the ſame time the 72 againſt Euſtathius of Sebaſtea, addreſs'd to the Edeſſenians. There he deſcribes the lightneſs and changes of this Heretick; and there he ſpeaks of a pretended Council held at Ancyra at the end of the Year 374.

The 73 is written againſt the ſame Perſon and at the ſame time; for there he obſerves, That it was now Three Years ſince he was accus'd by Euſtathius. He ſays, That he was unjuſtly blam'd upon the Account of the Errors of a Perſon [Apollinarius] to whom he never wrote but once, and that it was now Twenty Years ſince he did it; That thoſe who accus'd him, did it to pleaſe the Powers, to whom they are, and always have been devoted; That the true Reaſon why Euſtathius and thoſe of his Party were offended with him, was not becauſe he refus'd to receive their Suffragans, as they pretended but becauſe they would pleaſe Euzoius; That they were joyn'd to the Eudoxians, and called the Orthodox Homo-ouſians, though they had formerly made Profeſſion of this Faith, and had alſo preſented it to the Synod of Tyana. Laſtly, That they had deſtroy'd the Churches which they had invaded. He concludes this Letter with a Profeſſion of Faith, which rejects the Errors of Arius and Sabellius.

The Letters 190, 191, 192, are written to the People and Clergy of Nicopolis, to comfort and exhort them in the Perſecution which they ſuffer'd during this Year 375, after the Death of their Biſhop. In the laſt he declares to them, That they ought not to acknowledge him for their Biſhop, whom the Arians had Ordain'd among them, though he calls himſelf Catholick, which he cannot be, being Ordain'd by the Hands of profane Perſons, for the Deſtruction of the Faith: That this was his Opinion, which, if they would hold Communion with him, they ſhould follow; "Which he had writ-"ten to them, ſays he, not that he diſtruſted them, but to remove the doubt of ſome, and that if any "Perſon ſhould get himſelf Ordain'd Prieſt by this Biſhop, he ſhould have no hope to continue for "the future in this Dignity.

Poemius, Biſhop of Satala, went after this to viſit the Church of Nicopolis, about the end of this Year, or the beginning of the next, and confirm'd them in the Reſolution of taking a Biſhop, and Counſell'd them to chuſe Euphronius, Biſhop of Colonia. St. Baſil approved of this Choice by Letter 193, and admoniſh'd them not to irritate thoſe of Colonia, who were mightily troubled for the loſs of their Biſhop. Theſe he comforted by the Letters 290, 291, wherein, after having praiſed the Zeal and Affection they had for their Biſhop, he ſhows them, that this Tranſlation was neceſſary for the good of the Church, and exhorts them not to Conteſt the Matter with the Church of Nicopolis, ſince that Church was their Metropolis, and what reſpected it concern'd them alſo. In the Letter 164 he exhorts the Nicopolitans, continually to adhere and ſubmit to the Biſhop which had been lately ſent them.

While the Eaſtern Churches were toſt with theſe Tempeſts, thoſe of the Weſt being at laſt mov'd with ſome Compaſſion for them, ſent Prieſts to Comfort them, and to Teſtify, that they did Sympathize with them in their Sorrows. St. Epiphanius, Biſhop of Cyprus, who perhaps had ſeen the 77th. Letter of St. Baſil, did the ſame. St. Baſil thanks the former by Letter 74, which is written in the Name

St. Baſil. Name of all the Eaſtern Biſhops, and he continues ſtill to deſire their Aſſiſtance, not ſo much againſt the Arians, as againſt thoſe who under Sheep's cloathing were Ravenous Wolves, and rent the Flock of Chriſt in pieces without Puniſhment. He accuſes Three Perſons in particular. Euſtathius of Sebaſtea is the Firſt; and to render him Odious, he deſcribes all his Life, and ſays, That he was inſtructed by Arius, and was one of his moſt wicked Diſciples at Alexandria; That being returned to Cæſarea, and ſeeing himſelf condemn'd by his Biſhop Hermogenes, he had Sign'd an Orthodox Confeſſion of Faith, and afterwards was Ordain'd Prieſt; but then after the Death of Hermogenes, he went to Conſtantinople, where he again made Profeſſion of Arianiſm under Euſebius; That being driven out of this City, he returned into his own Country, where he was forc'd to retire; That ſoon after he was made Biſhop purely by Chance, and then he preſently condemn'd the Nicene Creed in the Council of Ancyra; That the Party whom he joyn'd with at Seleucia, was known to all Men; That at Conſtantinople he Conſented to the Creed of the Hereticks; That at laſt being gone into the Weſt, he carried from Liberius Communicatory Letters to the Synod of Tyana, by means whereof he was reſtor'd; That it was not known what Liberius had obliged him to Sign; but preſently after he became the Patron of the Hereticks, who oppoſed the Divinity of the Holy Spirit, and perſecuted the Orthodox. The Second whom St. Baſil accus'd to the Weſtern Biſhops, was Apollinarius, whom he ſpared more than he had done Euſtathius; yet he ſays, That he had very much troubled the Churches, becauſe he had ſo great a Facility of Writing, that he had fill'd the World with his Books; That in ſo great a Number of Writings, ſome Errors could not but creep in; That what he had written of Theology, was not founded upon Scripture, but upon humane Reaſoning; That he had written Fabulous Things of the Reſurrection; That he had ſo perplex'd the Doctrine of the Incarnation, that few of his Acquaintance have retained the Form of ancient Doctrine; but on the contrary, almoſt all of them have buſied themſelves with uſeleſs and contentious Queſtions. Laſtly, Paulinus was very much eſteem'd by thoſe of the Weſt; yet St. Baſil ſpares him not, for he is the Third Perſon whom he accuſes in this Letter. He leaves it to the Biſhops of the Weſt to judge, whether his Ordination was lawful or no: But he adds, That that which vexed the moſt part of the Eaſtern Biſhops againſt him, was his following the Error of Marcellus of Ancyra, whereby he maintain'd, That the Father, Son and Holy Spirit, were but One Hypoſtaſis. He deſires Aſſiſtance of thoſe of the Weſt againſt thoſe who followed theſe Three Men, and prays them to ſend Letters, wherein they might declare, That thoſe who are of their Party ought not to be received into Communion, untill they have renounc'd their Errors. He concludes with ſaying, That it were to be wiſh'd, that the Eaſtern and Weſtern Biſhops could Aſſemble together to Conſult about thoſe things: But ſince the preſent juncture of Affairs would not permit them to do it, and a Buſineſs of this Nature would not admit any longer delay, they were content to ſend ſome of their Brethren to their Weſtern Brethren, to inform them of that which could not be put into a Letter, and to invite them to aſſiſt the Churches of Jeſus Chriſt. Father Combefis ſays, That it is obſerved in ſome Manuſcripts, that this Letter was never ſent; but we ought not to give much Credit to thoſe kind of Obſervations made by Tranſcribers.

The Letter 325 to St. Epiphanius, is alſo written to thank him, that he had ſent ſome Prieſts to Viſit and Comfort the Churches of the Eaſt: He ſignifies to him, That he deſerv'd ſo much the more acknowledgment, becauſe it was a rare thing to find Biſhops at that time, who had Compaſſion on their Brethren. And becauſe St. Epiphanius had written to him, That he was troubled for the Difference which was riſen in a certain Country which he calls Eleona, St. Baſil anſwers in this Letter, That he had Reaſon to wiſh that this Breach were healed; but that he would not have ſuch People made uſe of, who were fit for nothing but to embroil Matters, becauſe they were not acted by the Love of God. ('Tis probable that he ſpeaks of Paulinus's Party.) He adds, That there had been already ſent into that Country, Palladius, a Prieſt of Cæſarea, and Innocentius, a Prieſt of Rome, to ſatisfy the Demands of thoſe of this Country, and determine their Differences, which were probably about the Incarnation; That they had been told, that nothing muſt be added to the Nicene Creed, but the Doxology of the Holy Spirit; That he would add nothing about the Incarnation, becauſe thoſe Queſtions tranſcended the Capacity of his Underſtanding. He ſets it down for a Maxim, That when once Men depart from the Simplicity of Faith, by reaſoning about it, then there is no end of the Diſpute, and all the Queſtions which they handle, ſerve for no other uſe, but to trouble the Minds of the humble. Afterwards he exhorts St. Epiphanius to joyn with Meletius, and aſſures him, That St. Athanaſius intended to do it, and that their Union was retarded only by the Malicious Counſel of ſome particular Perſons. He confeſſes, That he did not Communicate with thoſe that were after Meletius, that's to ſay, with Paulinus, and thoſe of his Party, not becauſe he thought them unworthy of his Communion, but becauſe they condemned Meletius, in whom there was nothing to be reprehended. He praiſes St. Epiphanius, becauſe he acknowledged Three Hypoſtaſes. He exhorts him to cauſe his Brethren of Antioch to confeſs the ſame thing, if they had not already acknowledged it. He prays him to procure the Peace of that Church, by re-uniting the Two Parties. Laſt of all, He ſpeaks to him about the Errors of a Sect of Hereticks, call'd Maguſæans, concerning which St. Epiphanius had deſired of him ſome Account.

The Letter 55 to St. Ambroſe, was at the ſame time, and probably was ſent by the Deputies, who carried Letter 74 into the Weſt. He writes to him, That he had known of a long time his Judgment Learning and Vertue; That he bleſs'd God for drawing from the Court, a Man Illuſtrious for his Wiſdom, his Dignity and Eloquence, to charge him with the Government of Chriſt's Flock. He exhorts him wholly to extinguiſh the remainders of Arianiſm, if there was any in his Dioceſs, and prays him to continue the Friendſhip which they had begun. Theſe Letters are written at the Beginning of the Year 376. 'Twas in this Year alſo, that he wrote the Letter 293 to Eulogius, and to the other other Biſhops of Egypt that were baniſh'd into Paleſtine: 'Tis againſt Apollinarius and Marcellus of Ancyra, whom he charges with the ſame Errors which he had ſpoken of in Letter 74.

The Letter 295 to the Monks, might alſo be at the ſame time, as well as the Letters 337,338,339, to Aſcolius of Theſſalonica.

The Letter 182 written alſo in the Name of the Churches of the Eaſt to the Weſtern Biſhops, was in the Year 377, or 378. For the Eaſtern Biſhops who deſcribe there in a moſt Elegant manner, the Perſecution which they ſuffered, obſerve that it had laſted 13 Years: But it could not begin before the end of the Year 364. or till 365. They implore in this Letter the Aſſiſtance of the Biſhops of the Weſt, which they declare they had in vain expected and deſired for a long time.

We referr to thoſe two laſt years of the Life of St. Baſil, ſome Letters of Doctrine and Diſcipline, the time whereof is not certainly known, but which ſeem to be written towards the end of his Life. We may place in this Number the 65 to thoſe of Joſopolis, which is written againſt thoſe who affirmed, That Jeſus Chriſt brought a Body from Heaven, reviving hereby the Error of Valentinus, and who attributed to the Divinity of Jeſus Chriſt the Properties of the humane Nature. He refutes their Errors, and proves that Jeſus Chriſt had real Fleſh. He ſpeaks alſo of Redemption by Jeſus Chriſt, and of the Fall of Man by the Sin of Adam.

The 195 to Diodorus then Biſhop of Tarſus, was written before the Second Letter to Amphilochius wherein it is cited at Canon 63. There a queſtion of Importance is handled, viz. Whether it be lawful for a Man to marry his Wife's Siſter after her Death? A Man of St. Baſil's Dioceſs had done it, and alledg'd for his Juſtification a Letter of Diodorus who defended his Action. St. Baſil anſwers it in this Letter, and oppoſes to Diodorus the Cuſtom of the Church which did not at all permit it. He anſwers a Paſſage of Leviticus, Ch. 18. which ſeems to allow thoſe Marriages. He anſwers, I ſay, Firſt, That tho' that were ſo, yet there are many things forbidden in the Goſpel, which the Law permitted; and Secondly, That the Levitical Law does not indeed forbid, but neither does it poſitively allow theſe kind of Marriages. He adds, That if it is not lawful to a Son to marry his Mother-in-Law, nor for a Father to eſpouſe his Daughter-in-Law, neither ought it to be allowed to a Man to marry his Siſter-in-Law, no more than to a Woman, to marry the Brother or the next-akin to her Husband: becauſe Man and Wife are ſo cloſely united by Marriage, that the Kindred of one become the Kindred of the other. He would not have them object that Paſſage of Geneſis, Encreaſe and Multiply, becauſe it does not reſpect the New Teſtament. He obſerves, That ſecond Marriages are a Remedy againſt Fornication, and not an in-let to immoderate Luſt.

The following Letter to Parergorius is upon a like Subject. He admoniſhes this Prieſt who was 70 Years old, to put away a Maid that lived with him, as was Ordain'd by the Canon of the Council of Nice. He proteſts, That tho' he ſhould write to him an Hundred Letters, he ſhould always continue Suſpended from his Miniſtry, till he had put her away; and that if notwithſtanding this, he would ſtill intrude upon the Exerciſe of his Office, without amending this Fault, he ſhould be Excommunicated, and ſo ſhould thoſe alſo that receiv'd him.

We may joyn to theſe Two Letters, the 76th Epiſtle of St. Baſil, to the Biſhops under his Juriſdiction, wherein he reproves a thing which was practiſed by ſome of them, who under pretence of Piety, received the Money which was offered them by thoſe whom they Ordain'd. He condemns this Practice as Simoniacal, and threatens to depoſe thoſe that ſhould do it for the future. He obſerves, That thoſe Biſhops excuſed themſelves from Simony, becauſe they received not this Money before Ordination, but only after it. But, ſays he, to receive Money before or after, is always to receive it, and under what Pretence ſoever they do it, they always make a gain of Spiritual Gifts: Now to do this in the Church of God, wherein we believe, that we have the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt; to do this there, there, I ſay, is a ſhameful Traffick. Theſe are the very Words of St. Baſil; I add nothing to them.

The 203, and 204, are addreſs'd to thoſe of Tarſus. In them he Ordains, That the Macedonians in order to their Reception into the Church, ſhould make profeſſion of the Nicene Faith; and he anathematizes all thoſe that believ'd the Holy Spirit to be a mere Creature.

The 244 is againſt a certain Biſhop who neglected to Puniſh a Rape. He enjoyns him to cauſe ſearch to be made after the Maid; to reſtore her to her Parents; to declare him Excommunicated, who had Raviſh'd her; to throw him out of the Church, him and his Family, for the ſpace of three Years; not to ſuffer him to be preſent at the publick Prayers, and in caſe he ſhould ſculk in ſome little Village, with the Woman he had raviſh'd, and the Inhabitants would not deliver them, or would defend them, that then they alſo ſhould be interdicted Divine Offices. In the 345, he ſpeaks of a crafty Man, who being Summoned before the Eccleſiaſtical Tribunal, defended himſelf with ſo much Eloquence, that he made himſelf paſs for an Innocent Man. In the 245 he ſpeaks of the manner of Excommunication in his time; he ſays, That the Sinner ought firſt to be rebuked privately. Secondly, in the preſence of two Witneſſes; and Laſtly, ought to be accus'd to the Church; and if he did not then obey, he ought to be Excommunicated. He ſays, That his Soul was ſet upon it to ſeparate this Impoſtor, him and all his Family out of the Church.

The Letter 289 addreſs'd to Cæſarea, a Lady, is about frequent Communion. He begins it with declaring, that it is good and profitable to communicate every Day. He ſays, That in his own Church there was a Communion four times a Week, on Sunday, Wedneſday, Friday and Saturday, and alſo on other Days, when the Anniverſary of ſome Martyr is Celebrated; That in former times the Faithful themſelves Communicated in their Houſes, and that this Cuſtom cannot be blamed. That it is ſtill in uſe, in Egypt, and at Alexandria, where the Faithful carry the Communion to their Houſes; That all the Hermits do the ſame thing; That we muſt believe, that the Prieſt having offer'd the

S. Baſil. Sacrifice, and diſtributed the Euchariſt to thoſe that are preſent, tho' they take it one after another in parcels, yet 'tis always the ſame. For, ſays he, in the Church it ſelf, the Prieſt gives one part of it into the Hands of the Faithful, and they put it into their Mouth; and is not this the ſame thing, as for them to receive all at once many parts of it from the Hand of the Prieſt?

It was in one of the laſt Years of his Life, that he invited the Biſhops of Pontus, by Letter 291, to come to his Synod which he held at the Feaſt of St. Eupſichius. There is alſo a Letter, which is the 337, wherein he blames one of his Suffragans, becauſe he did not come to this Synod, and orders him to come thither for the future. In Letter 302 he commends a Lady call'd Theodora, whom he calls a Nun: wherein he obſerves, That 'tis an eaſie thing to embrace that kind of Life which is conformable to the Goſpel, but 'tis not ſo eaſie to obſerve it even in the ſmalleſt things, to do nothing but to pleaſe God, to preſerve her Modeſty always in all her Converſation and Behaviour, to eat no more but what is preciſely neceſſary, and to keep nothing that is ſuperfluous; That 'tis not ſufficient to attain a perfect Humility, not to be lifted up when we are admired or commended, or when we have ſome excellency either of Mind or Body; but in order to Perfection, we muſt preſerve an inviolable Purity, we muſt pray continually and fervently; in ſhort, we muſt have Charity for our Brethren, a contrite Heart and an Humble Spirit; we muſt manage our Auſterities with Diſcretion, and always have the thoughts of a future Judgment preſent before our Eyes.

The 317 to a Biſhop named Optimus, contains an Explication of that Paſſage of Geneſis, Whoſoever ſhall kill Cain, &c. where he firſt gives the natural Sence of it, affirming, that this Paſſage means only, That whoſoever ſhould kill Cain, ſhould deliver him from the Vengeance of God which was ſeven times more ſevere than Death. He enlarges afterwards upon the Myſtical Sence, and upon the Signification of the number Seven, which he takes to denote Remiſſion of Sins. He finds out ſeven Sins in the Actions of Cain, and Seven Puniſhments of his Sins. He refutes thoſe that think that Lamech kill'd Cain, and ſays, That when 'tis ſaid in Geneſis, Whoſoever ſhall kill Lamech, &c. the meaning is, that Lamech was more guilty than Cain, becauſe that he having before him the Example of God's Vengeance againſt a Murderer, was not thereby deterr'd from this Crime. He adds another Myſtical Explication, that for the Expiation of Lamech's Crime, there was not only a neceſſity of the Deluge which happened in the Seventh Generation after Cain, but alſo the Death of Jeſus Chriſt which happened Seventy Seven Generations after Lamech. At laſt he explains that Paſſage of the Goſpel, wherein Simeon tells the Virgin when he ſaw the Infant Jeſus, That a Sword ſhould pierce through her Heart; where by a Sword he underſtands the anxiety and trouble of Mind, that the Virgin was to endure during the Paſſion of Jeſus Chriſt. As theſe Explications will not be reliſh'd by all the World, ſo St. Baſil gave them only for the Satisfaction of that good Biſhop who had conſulted him.

In the 323 to Nectarius, St. Baſil admoniſhes him to hinder all Canvaſſing at the Election of the Biſhops.

In the 325th he Congratulates the Biſhop Sophronius, becauſe he continued in the ſimplicity of the Faith of his Anceſtors. He ſays, That to maintain this Simplicity we muſt revive the Credit of the Primitive Chriſtians; but now there were few Perſons that were free from Curioſity, and would confine themſelves to that Simplicity of Faith, which teaches us to believe in the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit.

In the 340, he reproves a Suffragan Biſhop, call'd Timotheus, for concerning himſelf about Civil Affairs, after he had embraced a Monaſtick Life. The 343, and 344, are addreſs'd to a Monk call'd Urbicius; in the Second he refutes the Error of thoſe who affirm that the Divinity of Jeſus Chriſt was changed into his Fleſh.

The 383 to a Superiour, treats of the manner how he ſhould admit a Perſon who would make Profeſſion of a Monaſtick Life: He orders him to receive him according to the Rules of the Holy Fathers, after he had taught him to underſtand the Obligations, the Duties and the Troubles of a Monaſtick Life.

In Letter 387 he prefers the Creed of the Council of Nice to all the Creeds that had been made ſince that Council. He ſays, That it did not expreſly determine the Divinity of the Holy Spirit, becauſe no Body had then expreſly oppoſed it; and then he proves that the Holy Spirit is not a Creature.

In the 388 he informs Calliſthenes, That he was not obliged to keep the Oath which he had made in heat of Paſſion to puniſh his Servants.

In the 391 to Amphilochius, he anſwers many Queſtions which this Biſhop had put to him. Firſt He explains that Paſſage of the Goſpel, No Man knoweth of the Day of Judgment, but the Father only; and ſays, That the Sence of this place is, that the Father knows it of himſelf, becauſe he is the Fountain and firſt Principle of this Knowledge, whereas the Son of God receives this Knowledge from his Father, in which Sence it is alſo ſaid, That there is none Good but God only. He explains in what Sence the Scepter was always in the Tribe of Judah, tho' it be ſaid, that Jechonias was the laſt of the Princes of David's Family. He refutes the Opinion of the Encratites, who affirmed, that it was unlawful to Eat of ſome kind of Meats. He ſays, That the Tripple Immerſion obſerved in Baptiſm is a Figure of the Three Days that Jeſus Chriſt was in the Sepulchre. He diſtinguiſhes Eſſence from Subſiſtence; He gives to the Three Hypoſtaſes of the Divine Perſons, the Names of Paternity, Filiation and Sanctification; He condemns thoſe that admit but one Hypoſtaſis, as being not far off from the Hereſie of the Sabellians. At laſt he ſays, That Corporeal and Temporal Goods, are not good in themſelves, tho' they ought to be preferred to the Evils that are oppoſite to them: But he averrs that God ſends theſe Good Things according as he thinks fit for the Good of Men: That there is ſuch a Juſt Man to whom theſe Evils are neceſſary, that he may be juſt; and there is another juſt Man to whom God gives

gives theſe temporal Good Things for a Recompence; and there is ſuch a Wicked Man to whom God denies them, becauſe they would harden him; but there are other bad Men to whom he gives them in order to their Converſion. St. Baſil.

In the 399 to the ſame Perſon, he ſays, That the Spirit of a Man is good of it ſelf; but it can apply it ſelf to Good or Evil, and to that which is indifferent; That 'tis given to it to know the Truth; That God is this Truth which it ought to know; And, that he is to be known as far as an infinite Being can be known by a finite Mind. This Letter is againſt the Error of Aëtius, who believed, that the Eſſence of God might be perfectly known.

In the following Letter he propoſes alſo one of the Sophiſms of this Heretick, who thus objected to the Catholicks: Do you know whom you adore? If you ſay that you know him, What then is his Subſtance? If you know him not, How then do you adore him? St. Baſil anſwers, That the Attributes and Operations of God may be known, but we cannot comprehend his Eſſence nor his Nature: That by Faith we believe his Exiſtence, which alſo may be known by his Power and its Effects, and yet both Faith and Reaſon teach us that he is Incomprehenſible.

In the 401 he ſolves alſo another Sophiſm of Aëtius, who ask'd whether Knowledge were before Faith, or Faith before Knowledge. He anſwers, That Knowledge is the Principle of Faith, becauſe the Exiſtence of God is known by the Creatures; and Faith follows this imperfect Knowledge, as Adoration follows Faith. He proves alſo, that the Works of God and the Effects of his Power may be known, but that we cannot perfectly know his Eſſence. He explains many ſignifications of the Word Know. In the 408 Letter, he ſpeaks of the Relicks of the Martyrs, as well as in 241.

In the 410. he ſays, That we ought to be content with the Faith, which we made Profeſſion of at our Baptiſm, and to confine our ſelves to the Words that are taken out of the Holy Scripture for expreſſing it; That we ſhould ſhun all new Expreſſions, becauſe our Salvation does not depend upon the Words, but the Orthodox Faith.

The 412. is againſt a Deacon nam'd Glycerius, who had got into Orders, to ſerve the Cure of a Church in Veneſa, together with a Prieſt. This Deacon after he was Ordain'd had neglected his Miniſtry and had gathered together a multitude of Virgins, to whom he had made himſelf Patriarch: For St. Baſil makes uſe of this very Term, and ſays, That he had taken upon him the Habit: St. Baſil adds, That he did not this for Piety, nor Devotion, but to get Money; That thus he had diſturb'd the Church to which he belonged, and deſpiſed the Pariſh-Prieſt that govern'd it: That being reproved for this Diſorder by the Pariſh-Prieſt and the Biſhop, he had fled with a Company of Virgins and Young Men, himſelf being at the head of them; That this happened when there was an Aſſembly of Biſhops in the place, and that he had abuſed the Parents who demanded their Daughters back again. St. Baſil prays him to whom he ſent this Letter, who had written to him in favour of this Deacon, to perſwade him to return, to ſend back the Virgins, or at leaſt not to detain thoſe by force who deſired to return. He promiſes alſo pardon to Glycerius, if he returned with a Letter from him to whom he wrote, and a Reſolution to behave himſelf more Modeſtly; if not, he declares him Suſpended from his Function.

In the following Letter he ſtill preſſes this Friend to procure the Return of Glycerius, and the Young Women whom he had carried away with him, and bids tell them, That they needed fear nothing. At laſt, in the laſt Letter ſuperſcribed to this Glycerius, he exhorts him to return, and promiſes to Pardon his Fault upon their Account that had begg'd it for him; and chiefly for the ſake of his Pariſh-Prieſt, who had interceeded for him. He declares, That he ſhould looſe the Dignity of a Deacon, if he abſented himſelf any longer.

The 417 is written to a Judge, upon a Robbery that was committed in his Church. Some Garments of the Poor were taken away; and the Robbers were diſcover'd by thoſe that look'd after the Fabrick of the Church; whereupon St. Baſil condemned them to make Reſtitution. Nevertheleſs, they were accus'd before this Judge; and St. Baſil wrote to him, That he had judg'd them, and that the Cognizance and Puniſhment of any thing that happened in Churches, belong'd to Biſhops.

The 418 and 419, are written to a Receiver of the Taxes, to pray him to relieve the Poor.

Theſe are all the Letters of St. Baſil, which concern Religion; The others are Letters of Civility, of Recommendation, or Conſolation, which have no reſpect to the Affairs of the Church; of which I ſhall here give you a Catalogue.

The Letters of Civility, of Complement and Congratulation, &c. are the 83; the 142, and thoſe that follow to the 164; the 169, and ſo on to the 181; the 122, and ſo on to the 244; the 248, 268, 282, 283, 285, 286, 287, 288, and 312; the 328, &c. to 335; the 341, 350, 351, 354, 355, 356, 359, 363, 369, 378, 384, 386, 389, 390, 407, 425, and 426, and the Three Letters of Libanius and St. Baſil, publiſh'd by Cotelerius.

Thoſe of Recommendation or Requeſt, are the 11, 84, 215, &c. to 220, 221, 232, 236, 237, 247, 248, 267, 333, 352, 353, 357, 360, 365, 366, 367, 373, 374, 375, 376, 377, 380, 381, 415, 416, 420, 421, 422, 423, 424, 427, 428; and the Two publiſh'd by Cotelerius.

The Letters of Conſolation are 186, 188, 189, 201, 202, 347, 362. I ſay nothing of the Letter to the Emperour Theodoſius, publiſh'd by Cotelerius; becauſe 'tis evidently Suppoſitious. All theſe Letters are written very pleaſantly, and they may be compared for their Style and Wit, to thoſe of the moſt able Writers of Letters.

We have reſerv'd the Letters of St. Baſil to Amphilochius, to be particularly treated of, becauſe they contain Deciſions upon principal Points of Diſcipline, which are not to be conſidered as the particular Opinions of St. Baſil, but as the Laws of the Church in his time: And therefore they are not written in the form of particular Letters, but after the manner of Synodical Deciſions, which are call'd Canons.

S. Baſil. The 1ſt. of theſe Canons is concerning the Validity or Invalidity of the Baptiſm of Hereticks St. Amphilochius had ask'd him particularly, whether it was neceſſary to rebaptize thoſe who had been baptized by the Novatians, or the Montaniſts? He anſwers him, That as to the firſt of thoſe Hereticks, he ſhould follow the cuſtom of the Churches where he lived; becauſe there were different Opinions upon that Subject. As to the Baptiſm of the Montaniſts, he believed that it could not be accounted Valid, and he wonders that the great St. Denys of Alexandria, who was ſo well skill'd in the Canons, could be ignorant of this Truth. To explain his Anſwer, he diſtinguiſhes three ſorts of Perſons that were divided from the Church; The Hereticks who differed in matters of Faith, the Schiſmaticks who ſeparated upon Points of Diſcipline, and ſome of the diſobedient Chriſtians who withdrew from the Church. He maintains, That the Ancients were perſwaded that the Baptiſm of Hereticks was abſolutely void. He adds, That the Pepuzians were Hereticks, and therefore their Baptiſm could not be valid. As for Schiſmaticks, he obſerves, That St. Cyprian and Firmilian ſubjected them to the ſame Law with Hereticks, becauſe being ſeparated from the Church, they had not the Holy Spirit, and ſo could not give it. He ſeems alſo to like this Opinion well enough: And yet he adds, That ſince the Biſhops of Aſia had thought it convenient to admit the Baptiſm of Schiſmaticks, he would not hinder it. But though the Encratites were Schiſmaticks, he declares, That their Baptiſm ought not to be approv'd, and that thoſe ought to be rebaptized, to whom they had given Baptiſm, becauſe they gave it with Precipitation, on purpoſe to hinder the receiving of it from the Church. Nevertheleſs he confeſſes, That if the contrary Cuſtom were eſtabliſh'd, it ought to be follow'd; and that the Deciſions of the Antients ſhould be obſerv'd. In ſhort, he recommends this upon the whole Matter, That none of thoſe who return'd to the Church, ſhould be permitted to approach the Holy Myſteries, till they had receiv'd the Unction. [That is, till they were Confirmed.]

In the 2d. Canon, St. Baſil condemns to a Penance of 10 Years, a Woman that had procur'd an Abortion, and he judges her to be guilty of Murder, whether the Child had Life or no. He obſerves That the time of Abſolution ſhould be regulated by the fervour of the Penance, as well as by the length of it.

In the 3d. Canon he declares, That if a Deacon commits Adultery, after he has been received into the Order of Deacon, he ought to be turned out of his Miniſtry: but he would not have him put under Penance, nor ſeparated from the Communion of the Layety, becauſe we ought not to puniſh the ſame fault twice, and a Clergy-man is ſufficiently puniſh'd by his Depoſition, and ſo much more than a Lay-man who is deprived of Communion, becauſe he can be readmitted afterwards into the Church; whereas a Clergy-man cannot be reſtor'd when once he is depos'd: But in concluſion, the moſt Effectual Remedy of all Sins, is to forſake Sin, and abſtain from Pleaſure.

The 4th. Canon is concerning thoſe that are many times Married. He condemns 3d. Marriages as a kind of Fornication; and ſays. That the Cuſtom of his Church, was to excommunicate thoſe who Married the third time, for Five Years; That in other places, they were only put under Penance for two or three years. He enjoyns the ſame thing to Bigamiſts, for one or two Years; though he would have neither the one nor the other reduc'd to the loweſt Penance; but that they ſhould be the firſt Years in the Rank of Hearers; and that the laſt Years they ſhould partake of the Prayers, though they were ſtill excluded from the Participation of the Euchariſt, till their Penance was finiſh'd, and they had given Signs of their Converſion.

In the 5th. he ordains, That Hereticks ſhould be received who were converted at the point of Death, provided they gave Signs of their ſincere Repentance.

The 6th. is againſt Concubinage.

The 7th. is againſt Murders, Poyſoning, Adulteries, and againſt other more infamous Crimes. St. Baſil ſays, That all who are guilty of theſe Crimes, are to be treated with the ſame Rigor. However he thinks that we ought to have Pity on thoſe who have done Penance for Thirty Years, and that we ſhould receive them without delay; eſpecially if they ſtill bewailed their Sins, and gave Signs of Converſion.

In the 8th. Canon St. Baſil treats very largely of Murders, and diſtinguiſhes the different Kinds of them, as well thoſe that are Voluntary, as thoſe that are Involuntary. This Canon is more Curious than Uſeful.

The 9th. Canon is about Divorce. He lays it down as a Principle, That the Law of Jeſus Chriſt is equal both to Men and Women, and that it does not allow of the Separation of a Man and his Wife, but in caſe of Fornication: But he ſays, That the preſent Cuſtom is not altogether agreeable to the Law of Chriſt, becauſe it does not allow Women to ſeparate from their Husbands upon any account whatſoever; ſo that it ſeems to excuſe from Adultery a Woman that ſhould Eſpouſe a Man whoſe Wife had divorc'd her ſelf; but on the contrary, if it was a Husband that quitted his Wife to Eſpouſe another, that Man ſhould commit Adultery, both he that Married to this laſt Woman, and ſhe that was Eſpouſed to him.

In the 10th. St. Baſil is againſt Ordaining thoſe who had Sworn never to take Orders, though there be, ſays he, a Canon which ſeems to permit it; but he obſerves, that we muſt conſider the Form of the Oath, the terms in which it was conceiv'd, the Diſpoſition of the Perſon that made it, and all the leſſer Circumſtances, to ſee whether he is oblig'd by his Oath or no; and if no way can be found to diſpenſe with it, then he ought not to be Ordain'd. After this, he explains a particular Queſtion which had been propos'd to him by Amphilochius, as far as it can be diſcover'd by St. Baſil's Anſwer, it ſeems to have been this.

One Cyriacus a Prieſt of the Church of Mindana, whereof Longinus was Biſhop, was obliged by Oath never to quit that Church; yet he was made Pariſh-Prieſt to a Village very near it, which was in another Dioceſs. Longinus ſeeing himſelf depriv'd of a Prieſt who did very much aſſiſt him, earneſtly deſired his Return, and ſaid, That unleſs he returned to him, he ſhould quit his Church. 'Tis alſo probable, that the Prieſt had ſome remorſe of Conſcience for having violated his Oath. Amphilochius demands of St. Baſil, what was to be done in theſe Circumſtances? And this Saint gave an Advice full of Wiſdom, That they ſhould joyn to the Dioceſs of Mindana, the Territory of Muiſtia, where this Prieſt was made Miniſter by the Biſhop Severus: And he ſays, That by this means, he ſtill belonging to the Church of Mindana, might fulfill his Oath, and might aſſiſt the Biſhop Longinus, who had demanded him back again. He blames the Conduct of the Biſhop Severus, who had acted againſt the Canons, in removing a Prieſt from one of his Brethren, and had made him guilty of Perjury. St. Baſil.

In the 11th. Canon, he ordains, That a Penance of 11 Years, ſhould be impos'd upon him who commits Murder, though it was done without any Premeditated Deſign.

In the 12th. he declares, That the Canons wholly exclude all Bigamiſts from Eccleſiaſtical Functions.

In the 13th. he ſays, That the Fathers did not puniſh as Murders thoſe that were committed in War, becauſe they judg'd that thoſe ſhould be pardoned who were oblig'd to defend their Country, their Life and their Honour; But he adds, That 'twas adviſable for ſuch as had their hands defiled with Humane Blood, to continue Three Years out of the Communion of the Church.

The 14th. Imports, That if he who had been an Uſurer, would diſtribute to the Poor all the Profit he had made by this ſhameful Trade, and keep himſelf from the Paſſion of Covetouſneſs, he might be advanced to the Prieſt-hood.

The 15th. and 16th. are not Canons which concern Diſcipline; but an Explication of ſome Difficulties about the literal ſence of ſome Paſſages of Scripture, which had been propos'd to him by Amphilochius.

The 2d. Letter begins with Canon 17th. It contains a Deciſion in favour of one nam'd Bianon, who was ordain'd Prieſt contrary to the Oath he had made. St. Baſil ſays, That he had already made this Rule for the Prieſts of Antioch, that theſe kind of Perſons ſhould not publickly exerciſe their Prieſtly Function, but only in private. He adds, That he of whom he there ſpeaks, might have a Diſpenſation from this Law; becauſe he was not at Antioch, but Iconium.

In the 18th. St. Baſil obſerves, That the Ancients did not treat the Virgins conſecrated to God who abandon'd their Profeſſion, more rigorouſly than Bigamiſts, and that they impos'd upon them only a Penance of one Year; but he adds, That the Church and the number of Virgins encreaſing now every day, it was neceſſary to treat them as Adulterers. He gives this Advertiſement, That he ſpeaks of Virgins which have conſecrated themſelves to God, and renounced Marriage; That their Profeſſion ſhould commence from ſuch an Age at which they were perfectly come to the uſe of their Reaſon; becauſe no regard was to be had to ſuch Promiſes as were made before that time; That we ought not to admit any into the number of Virgins conſecrated to God, but thoſe who were 16 or 17 Years old, and even then after they had been try'd a long time, and paſſionately deſired to be received, and that we ought to reject thoſe who were brought by their Parents before they had arriv'd at this adult Age, before they had a Judgment ſufficiently ripe, and before they could give any aſſurance of their fix'd Reſolution.

In the 19th. Canon, St. Baſil obſerves, That Men make no Vow nor Profeſſion of Virginity, as Virgins do; That thoſe who enter into a Monaſtical ſtate, ſeem tacitely to embrace Celebacy; but to oblige them to it, it was neceſſary that they ſhould be ask'd, and that they ſhould make Profeſſion of it: And then if they ſhould paſs to a Voluptuous Life, they ſhould be puniſh'd as Fornicators.

In the 20th. he ſays, That we ought not to puniſh the Women that Married after they had made Profeſſion of Virginity while they were without the Church, being Infidels, or Hereticks, or Catechumens; becauſe we ought not to ſearch after the Sins committed before Baptiſm, ſince that Sacrament pardon'd them.

The 21ſt. is alſo about the difference which cuſtom had put between the Faults of Husbands and Wives. He obſerves, That a Man who is unfaithful to his Wife is not look'd upon as a Fornicator, provided ſhe with whom he committed the Sin was not Married; That the Husband cannot for this be parted from his Wife, though the Wife might be from her Husband, if ſhe ſhould commit the ſame Sin with a Man. He confeſſes, That 'tis difficult to give a Reaſon for this Proceeding; but he ſays, 'tis the Cuſtom.

In the 22d. Canon, he obliges thoſe who have forcibly carried Maids away, to reſtore them to thoſe to whom they were Contracted, or to their Parents; and declares, That they muſt not be received into Communion before they have reſtor'd them. He condemns thoſe who detain the Women whom they have ſecretly or by force corrupted, to the ſame Puniſhment with Fornicators, which is to endure Penance for four Years; That for the 1ſt. Year they ſhall be excluded from the Prayers, and obliged to ſtand at the Church-Gate; That for the 2d. they ſhall be in the rank of Hearers; That for the 3d. they ſhall be in the number of Penitents; That in the Laſt Year, they ſhall be preſent with the People at all the Divine Service, without being capable of partaking of the Oblation.

In the 23d. Canon concerning thoſe that Married two Siſters, he refers Amphilochius to that which he had written in his Letter to Diodorus, of which we have already ſpoken.

The

St. Baſil. The 24th. is againſt Widows, who being received into the Number of Deaconeſſes, Married afterwards. He would have them more ſeverely puniſh'd than Bigamiſts, if they be above 60 Years old; but he excuſes them if they be younger, becauſe it was the Biſhop's fault to receive them too young.

By the 25th. Canon it is provided, That he who ſhall marry a Woman after he hath abus'd her ſhall be put under Penance, but he ſhall have leave to keep her for his Wife.

In the 26th. he declares, That Fornication is never Marriage, and that it cannot lawfully be the Beginning of a Marriage; and therefore it would be better to part thoſe who have committed this Sin, than to Marry them together; but yet if they have a mind to Marry, they ſhould not be hindered leſt ſome greater Miſchief ſhould follow.

The 27th. is upon occaſion of a Prieſt, who through Ignorance was entangled in a Marriage within the Prohibited Degrees. St. Baſil thinks that he ought not wholly to be depriv'd of the Honour and Dignity of Prieſthood: But he forbids him to exerciſe his Function, and would have him be ſatisfied with that place of Honour which is left him, without being able to give the Bleſſing, to diſtribute the Body of Jeſus Chriſt, or to do any part of his Sacerdotal Function.

The 28th. Canon is againſt ſome Perſons that had made a Vow not to Eat Pork. St. Baſil ſays, That this Vow was ridiculous; and admoniſhes Amphilochius, to exhort thoſe who made it, not to make any more ſuch kind of Vows, and to allow themſelves to eat indifferently all kinds of Meat.

The 29th. is againſt thoſe great Lords, who take an Oath to prejudice thoſe that are ſubject to them. The ſubſtance of it is, That pains ſhould be taken to correct this Fault; and the means to do it, was to teach them, that they ought not to make ſuch kind of raſh Oaths, and that they ought to beware of executing the Evil they have Sworn to do.

The 30th. Canon is againſt Raviſhers. St. Baſil ſays, That there is no ancient Canon that concerns them; but that his Opinion is, That both they, and ſuch as are Complices in their Crime ought to ſuffer Penance for three Years time.

The 31ſt. declares, That a Woman can never Marry, though her Husband does not appear, as long as ſhe is not ſure of his Death, and that if ſhe does, ſhe commits Adultery. The 36th. ordains the ſame thing to Souldier's Wives, who Marry again, when they have no more News of their Husbands; yet he thinks them more excuſable, becauſe they have more Reaſon to believe that they are dead.

The 32d. ordains, That Clergy-men who Sin mortally, ſhould be degraded, but not turn'd out Communion.

The 33d. That a Woman who takes no care of the Fruit of her Womb, and who is brought to bed in the middle of the Street, ſhould be puniſh'd as one guilty of Murder.

The 34th. That Women guilty of Adultery, who voluntarily confeſs it, or are partly convicted of it, ſhould not be defam'd, leſt their Crime coming to publick Notice, ſhould be the cauſe of their Death; but that they ſhould be order'd to ſtay out of Communion, till the time of their Penance be over.

The 35th. is, That when a Husband is forſaken by his Wife, it ſhould be inquir'd whether there was any Fault in him; and if there was not, but ſhe only was in the Fault, then they ought not to deprive the Husband of the Communion of the Church, but only puniſh the Wife.

The 37th. is, That if a Man who had Eſpouſed another Man's Wife, Marries another Woman, after the former was taken away from him, he is guilty of Adultery againſt the Firſt, but not againſt the Second.

The 38th. is, That young Women who follow thoſe that have abus'd them, without the conſent of their Parents, are guilty of Fornification; And, that though it may ſeem, that their Fault is made up when the Parents afterwards conſent to it; yet they ought to be put under Penance for Three Years.

The 39th. That ſhe who ſtays with him, whom ſhe had committed Adultery with, is to be accounted guilty of the Crime as long as ſhe continues with him.

The 40th. That a Slave who Marries without the conſent of his Maſter, has committed Fornication; becauſe the Contracts and Promiſes of all thoſe who are under the Power of others, are void without their conſent.

The 41ſt. That the Marriage of a Widow that's free cannot be null'd.

The 42d. contains this general Maxim, That the Marriages of all thoſe who are under the Power of another without his conſent, are not Marriages, but Fornications; and therefore, that the Marriages of the Sons and Daughters of a Family, are void without the conſent of their Fathers, as that of Slaves is without the conſent of their Maſters.

The 43d. declares, That he who has given a Mortal Wound to another, is guilty of Manſlaughter, whether he firſt attack'd him, or did it in his own defence.

The 44th. That a Deaconeſs that hath committed Fornication with a Pagan, ought not to be Excommunicated, but only depriv'd of the Oblation for the ſpace of Seven Years; after which ſhe ſhall be receiv'd, if ſhe liv'd chaſtly during that time.

In the 45th. he obſerves, That the Name of a Chriſtian will ſtand him in no ſtead, who leads a Life unworthy of a Chriſtian.

In the 46th. he ſays, That a Woman that without her knowledge eſpouſed a Married Man, whom his former Wife was parted from, and afterwards ſeparated from him, may Marry again to another; but that it were better if ſhe continued as ſhe was.

The

The 47th. Canon is about the Baptiſm of Hereticks. It ſeems in ſome Points to be contrary to the firſt; but when the matter is well examin'd, 'tis eaſie to reconcile them. He obſerves, That the Encratites, the Saccophorians, and the Apotactites, ought to be treated as Novatians. Now he ſeems to have ſaid the contrary in the firſt Canon, where he affirms, That it was abſolutely neceſſary to rebaptize the Encratites. This Difficulty made an Author of our Age believe. That a Negative Particle muſt be added in the Canon, The Reaſon which St. Baſil alledges to prove this Propoſition, ſeems to confirm this Conjecture, for he adds, That there are Canons which have regulated what concerns the former, though differently, whereas there is none which ſpeaks of the latter. But after a full Examination of the words of this Canon, I find that 'tis not neceſſary to change any thing in it. Take the true Sence of it as follows: St. Baſil ſays, That the Encratites, Apotactites, and Saccophorians, ought to be treated after the ſame manner as the Novatians: That's to ſay, That with reſpect both to the one and the other, we muſt follow the Cuſtom of the Church where we live; and the Reaſon which he gives for it, is, becauſe there is no Rule and Determination about their Cauſe, ſince the Canons are found different about the former, and there is nothing order'd about the latter. He adds, That in his Countrey they were all re-baptized; but if this Rebaptization was forbidden in the Province whereof Amphilochius was Biſhop, as it was at Rome; and yet he found the Reaſons were convincing, which he had brought to prove that the Encratites muſt be rebaptized, then he ought to call a Council to make this Regulation. St. Baſil.

In the 48th. Canon he counſels Women divorced by their Husbands, not to marry again, ſince Jeſus Chriſt hath ſaid, That he who putteth away his Wife, except for Fornication, commiteth Adultery, when he eſpouſeth another, and is the cauſe of her committing Adultery by marrying again.

In the 50th. Canon he ſays, That the Laws do not forbid, nor puniſh Third Marriages, and yet the Church looks upon them as ſhameful Actions.

The Third Letter to Amphilochius, is alſo a continuation of Canons. St. Baſil ſpeaks in the Preamble of a Journey he had made a little before into Pontus about the Affairs of the Church. He thanks Amphilochius for the Letters he had written to him; he declares to him that he deſired to ſee him, and that he would do all that lay in his Power to come and meet him; but that perhaps he might be obliged to go ſoon to Nazianzum, becauſe of the departure of St. Gregory who was gone from it, tho' no Body knew the Reaſon of his going. He acquaints him, That he of whom he had ſpoken before (probably to make him Biſhop of ſome City depending upon the Metropolis of Amphilochius,) was fallen ſick; that there was no other Perſon that he could caſt his Eyes upon. He counſels him rather to put into that place, one whom the Inhabitants of the City deſired to have, tho' he had been but lately Baptiz'd. He repeats what he had ſaid in the 10th. Canon concerning thoſe that had taken an Oath that they would not be Biſhops.

The 51ſt. Canon ordains, That Clergy-men ſhould not be otherwiſe puniſh'd for their Crimes but by Depoſition, whether they were in Sacred Orders which are given by Impoſition of Hands, or in Inferior Orders.

The 52d. is againſt Women that Voluntarily ſuffer their Infants to periſh.

The 53d. ordains, that a Widow-Slave that procures her being taken away forcibly to be Married again, ſhould undergo no other Puniſhment but that of Bigamiſts.

In the 54th. he referrs us to what he had ſaid in the former Letter concerning Involuntary Manſlaughter; he adds, That it belong's to the Biſhop's Prudence to encreaſe or diminiſh the Penance according to Circumſtances.

In the 55th. he declares, That thoſe who ſet upon Robbers, ought to be depriv'd of Communion if they be Lay-Men, and depos'd if they be Clergy-men.

In the 56th. he impoſes 20 Years Penance upon Voluntary Murders; and in the 57th. 11 Years Penance upon thoſe that are Involuntary. In the 58th. he impoſes 15 Years Penance upon Adultery; In the 59th. 7 Years upon Fornicators. In the 60th. he condemns Virgins who break their Vow of Virginity, to the ſame Puniſhment with Adulterers. In the 61. he impoſes one Years Pennance upon him that ſhall accuſe himſelf of Robbery, and two Years upon him that is convicted of it. In the 62d. and 63d. he impoſes the ſame Penance as upon Adulterers, upon thoſe that commit infamous Crimes. In the 64th. he impoſes 11 Years Penance upon Perjury. In the 65th. he impoſes the ſame Penance upon Poyſoners. In the 66th. 11 Years Penance upon thoſe that dig up the dead. In the 67. the Penance of Murderers upon thoſe that commit Inceſt with their Siſters. In the 68th. the Puniſhment of Adulterers is decreed againſt thoſe that marry their Kinsfolk in prohibited Degrees. In the 69th. he ordains, That a Reader who ſhall have to do with a Virgin to whom he was contracted, ſhall be deprived of his Miniſterial Function, and become uncapable of riſing to a higher Order. He adds, That if he has committed this Sin with another Virgin than her to whom he was contracted, he ſhall be depos'd, and that the ſame ſhall be obſerv'd with reſpect to other Miniſters. The 70th. ordains, That Deacons and Prieſts who have polluted their Lips, if they confeſs their Crime, ſhall be Suſpended for ſome time from their Miniſterial Function. The 71ſt. That thoſe who ſhall be convicted of thoſe Crimes without their own Confeſſion, ſhall be puniſh'd as Malefactors. The 72d. That thoſe who meddle with Divination, ſhall be puniſh'd as Murderers. The 73d. That he who has renounced the Faith of Jeſus Chriſt ſhall not be received until the point of Death. In the 74th. St. Baſil tells him, That the time of Penance may be ſhortned to thoſe who fulfil their Penance with fervour and humility. In the 75th. he impoſes 12 Years Penance upon him that hath committed Inceſt with his Siſter by the ſame Father and Mother; and ſays in the 76th. That the ſame Law ſhould take place againſt thoſe who Marry their own Daughters-in-Law. The 77th. ordains 7 Years Penance againſt thoſe who Divorce their Wives, and Marry others. The 78th. decrees the ſame Puniſhment againſt thoſe who Marry

two

St. Baſil. two Siſters, tho' at different times. The 79th. condemns thoſe that Marry their Mothers-in-Law to the ſame Puniſhment with thoſe that Marry their Siſters. In the 80th. he ſays, That the Ancients ſpoke nothing of Polygamy, becauſe they look'd upon it as a brutiſh Sin, to which they thought that Men could not be ſubject; he believes it worſe than Fornication, and he impoſes upon thoſe that ſhall be Guilty of it a Penance of 4 years. In the 81ſt. he impoſes 8 Years Penance upon thoſe that being taken by the Barbarians, were forced by Torments to eat of Meats ſacrificed to Idols, and 11 Years upon thoſe that did it without any conſtraint. In the 82d. and 83d. he condemns the Perjur'd, and thoſe that meddle with Pagan Superſtitions, to 6 Years Penance. In the 84th. and 85th. he declares, That all thoſe Canons are to be underſtood of thoſe that are willing to do Penance and amend themſelves; but for thoſe that continue in their Crimes, we ought to have no Converſation with them, and never to receive them into the Church, leſt we be partakers of their Crimes. There is at the End of this Letter, a Fragment of another Letter of St. Baſil, written to the ſame Perſon againſt the Encratites.

For obſerving ſome Order in the other Writings of St. Baſil, we may divide them into three Claſſes. The Firſt ſhall comprehend thoſe that are upon the Scripture; The Second, Thoſe that concern Doctrine; and the Third, Thoſe that are about Morality.

Caſſiodorus aſſures us, That St. Baſil made Commentaries upon almoſt all the Books of the Holy Scripture; of which there remains now but a ſmall number. The Nine Homilies or Sermons upon the beginning of Geneſis, are the firſt of his Works. St. Jerom, Photius and Suidas, mention them. There are added to thoſe Nine Homilies, Two others about the Formation of Man, which at firſt were attributed to St. Baſil, and afterwards were aſcribed to his Brother St. Gregory Nyſſen. But they cannot belong to this laſt, who has treated of this Matter in a particular Work: But there is no convincing Reaſon, why they may not be attributed to St. Baſil upon the Credit of ancient Manuſcripts. 'Tis true that thoſe Authors we have juſt now cited, mention but Nine Homilies of St. Baſil's upon the Hexameron; and that Caſſiodorus obſerves, That he did not explain what concerns the Creation of Man; but perhaps thoſe Authors had not ſeen theſe two Homilies, which St. Baſil compos'd long after the others. Beſides, let Men ſay what they pleaſe, theſe have the Stile of St. Baſil, and are like enough to the firſt, tho' they are not altogether ſo large. After theſe Homilies, there ought to follow the 30th. Homily about Paradiſe.

Cotelerius has publiſh'd in Greek in his Firſt Volume of the Monuments of the Greek Church, a Homily upon theſe Words in the 6th. Chapter of the Proverbs, Suffer not your Selves to be overwhelm'd with ſleep, which is not unworthy of St. Baſil, and has his Stile and Air.

The firſt of the 22 Homilies upon ſome Pſalms, which is a Preface to all the Pſalms, is wholly the ſame with the Latin Preface, that is prefixed to St. Auſtin's Commentaries upon the Pſalms. Either therefore we muſt ſay, That St. Auſtin's Preface was tranſlated into Greek, or rather that St. Baſil's was tranſlated into Latin, and plac'd at the beginning of St. Auſtin's Commentaries. Theſe Homilies are quoted in Nicetas's Catena, and by ſome others; and there is no doubt but they are St. Baſil's. Yet Father Combefis rejects the ſecond Homily upon Pſalm 28, which is an Abridgment and Repetition of the preceding, and which is wanting in many Manuſcripts. He paſſes alſo the ſame Judgment on that upon Pſalm 37; and he affirms, that the Stile of it is different from that of the others. In ſome Latin Editions of St. Baſil, there are publiſh'd under the Name of St. Baſil, Commentaries upon the Pſalms; but 'tis plain they are none of St. Baſil's, becauſe they are Extracts out of St. Chryſoſtom and Theodoret.

The Commentary upon the firſt ſix Chapters of Iſaiah, ſeemed doubtful to Eraſmus, becauſe he thought that they were written in another Stile. Tilmannus who has tranſlated them into Latin, has undertaken to defend them againſt the Conjecture of Eraſmus, and he proves that they are this Father's by the Authority of four Modern Greek Authors, which are Metaphraſtes, Antonius, Maximus, and St. John Damaſcene. Fronto Ducæus adds to theſe Four, the Patriarch Taraſius, in his Epiſtle to Pope Adrian, and the Author of the Greek Scholia upon the Epiſtles of St. Paul attributed to Oecumenius. The Authority of theſe Modern Greeks would be of no great Moment, if this Work had evident Marks of Forgery, or if the Stile of it were altogether different from that of St. Baſil; but it muſt be confeſs'd, that tho' it is not ſo Elegant as the Work of the Creation, yet it is not much different from the Stile of St. Baſil, neither is it unworthy of this Father. Rivet has found in it a difference of Opinion, which might make it be rejected, if it were more conſiderable. He obſerves, That St. Baſil in his Letter 80 to Euſtathius the Phyſician, affirms that the Witch of Endor made the Soul of Samuel really to return, whereas the Author of this Commentary upon Iſaiah, on Ch. 8. affirms, That it was the Devil who aſſum'd the Shape of Samuel. Some have anſwer'd, That this Epiſtle to Euſtathius, was St. Gregory Nyſſen's, but we have ſhewn, that 'tis rather St. Baſil's. Therefore all that can be ſaid is this, That St. Baſil might change his Opinion about a thing of ſo ſmall conſequence as this is.

The Second Claſs of St. Baſil's Works comprehends his Dogmatical Books. The firſt of theſe Diſcourſes are the Books againſt Eunomius. St. Gregory Nazianzen, St. Jerom and Photius all aſſure us, That he wrote againſt this Heretick, but they ſay nothing of the Number of the Books. We have at preſent five of them. The Three firſt are written in the ſame Stile and after the ſame Method, and there can be no doubt but they are St. Baſil's. The two laſt are more Dry and Scholaſtical; but we ought not to wonder at that. In the Firſt he overthrows the principal Arguments of Eunomius; and in theſe Two laſt, he inſiſts upon the Refutation of the Subtilties and Sophiſtical Arguments of this Heretick upon many Paſſages of Holy Scripture, as he had promis'd to do in the Second Book. There is no Cauſe therefore to reject theſe Books as ſuppoſititious. They were quoted as Genuine by the Greeks and Latins in the Council of Florence.

The

The Book of the Holy Spirit to Amphilochius, is that Treatise of all the Works of St. Basil, which most of all Displeases the Protestants; because it contains such things as do not favour them. Erasmus who took great Liberty to condemn every thing that did not please him, made no scruple to reject this in the Preface which he prefix'd to his Version: He was wearied with translating it, and the Stile appear'd to him perplex'd in several Places. These are the Reasons on which he grounds his Judgment about this Book to which he had added many things in the same Preface; That tho' 'tis true, that there are some things in it, which are not unworthy of St. Basil, and which sufficiently discover that they belong to him; yet there are other things in it which are none of his. The greatest part of Protestant Criticks, being dissatisfied with that necessity of Tradition which this Book evidently proves, have gladly received this Opinion of Erasmus, and have also added some other Conjectures of their own to his, to reject this Book entirely. Nevertheless, Casaubon being more impartial than the rest, has plainly declar'd in his Writings against Baronius, That he was not of Erasmus's Opinion. And indeed 'tis certain that St. Basil did write a Treatise of the Holy Spirit; he says it himself in his Letters. St. Gregory Nazianzen speaks of it. St. Jerom and Suidas mention it. Theodoret quotes that Book which we have at this Day, in his first Dialogue, and in the Refutation of the Anathematisms of St. Cyril. After this Author, St. John Damascene in his third Discourse of Images, the II. Nicene Council Act 4. Photius in the Nomo-canon, Burchardus in the Decretals, Euthymius Zygabenus in his Panoplia, Zonaras and Balsamon in the Nomo-canon, Anastasius of Nice Quest. 84, and Nicephorus B. XII. Ch. 20. quote it also. Moreover the Reasons of Erasmus are very weak: For first he accuses the Author of this Work of raising his Stile too high, as if this were not ordinary with Authors, and particularly with Writers of Controversy. He reproves him for discovering his Ability in the Logick of Aristotle and Porphyrie. Could he do otherwise, having to do with Adversaries which made use of these Arms? Lastly, Erasmus affirms, That the Stile is different from St. Basil's; but he pronounces this Sentence upon slight Grounds, and without a sufficient Examination of the Matter; for those who read this Work, find no such difference of Stile in it; but on the contrary they find a great agreement between it and his other Books. Scultetus pretends, that what this Author says of the Authority of Tradition, is contrary to the Doctrine of St. Basil; but it is a Groundless Allegation. Neither is it true, that he lays down in this Book other positions than those which he has explain'd in other places concerning the descent of Christ into Hell, and concerning Baptism. If Scultetus had well consider'd what he affirm'd with so much boldness, he would have chang'd his Opinion. St. Basil.

No body doubts but the two Books of Baptism are St. Basil's, tho' they be not cited by the Ancients.

The Book of Virginity has the Stile of St. Basil, and what St. Gregory Nazianzen says of St. Basil's Writings concerning Virginity, does perfectly agree to it. It is also cited by Suidas. Yet Mr. Hermant believes it suppositious, because it is address'd to Letoius Bishop of Melitine, since while St. Basil was living, that See was possess'd by Otreius, who lived after the Council of Constantinople, as appears by the Law which the Emperour Theodosius made after this Council. It may be said, that Letoius was his Predecessor; but there is more probability that he succeeded to him. Either therefore we must say, that the Dedication of this Book is corrupted, and then we must read Otreius for Letoius, or else that Letoius was not yet Bishop.

Among the 31 different Homilies of St. Basil, there are 11 of them which are Dogmatical: viz. The 9th. wherein he proves that God is not the Author of Sin; The 12th. upon the beginning of the Proverbs; The 15th. concerning Faith; The 16th. upon the Beginning of the Gospel of St. John; The 17th. upon Baptism; The 25th. of the Humane Birth of Jesus Christ; The 27th. against the Sabellians, the Anomæans and the Arians; The 29th. against those who accuse us of worshipping Three Gods; The 31st. of Free-will. All these Homilies have St. Basil's Stile and no Body doubts but they are his.

But there is more Difficulty about St. Basil's Books of Morality. St. Jerom and Suidas mention in general the Ascericks of this Father; but Sozomen, Ch. 15. of B. III. of his History, says, That they were written by Eustathius of Sebastea. On the contrary, Photius, Vol. 191 of his Bibliotheca, attributes to St. Basil, the great Rules, small Rules and their Prefaces.

The Ascetical Books attributed to St. Basil, are as follow. The First is a Discourse which may serve as a Preface and Introduction to all his Ascetical Discourses. The Second is a Treatise about the Monastical State, and the renouncing the things of this World. The Third is a Discourse of the Ascetical Life. The Fourth is a Treatise of faith. The Fifth is a Treatise of the Judgment of God, and a little Preface which in some Manuscripts, makes a part of the Book about Faith. We must also add Two other little Discourses publish'd by Father Combefis, in the Second Volume of St. Basil, Restor'd. These Tracts are as preliminaries to the great Ascetical Treatises, which are his Morals, the Ascetical Book, the Great Rules explained very largely, which are in number 55, the Little Rules abridg'd, which are continued unto number 313, some Canons concerning the Punishment of Monks and Nuns, and the Monastical Constitutions. To these Books we may joyn his Epistle to Chilo, and the following Letters, as well as 411, and some others which concern the Monastical State, of which we have spoken among the Letters of St. Basil. 'Tis not certain whether all these Books that we have mention'd be St. Basil's; but 'tis agreed on all hands that the Constitutions, and the Ascetical Treatises are his: But many adhere to the Testimony of Sozomen, who attributes the Little Rules, and also the Great ones to Eustathius of Sebastea. Yet I see nothing which can confirm this Opinion, and it seems to me that they bear so great a Relation to the other Ascetical Works of St. Basil, that it may be affirm'd with much probability, that they all belong to the same Author. Ruffinus who has made an Abridgment of them attributes them to St. Basil: They are cited under his Name in the 5th. Council; and in short, Photius acknowledges all these Treatises for Genuine. Even in his time they made but one Body divided into two Parts: The First contained the Diſcourſe of Judgment, and that of Faith which is a Continuation of it: The Second Part contain'd the Morals, the 55 Great Rules, the 313 Short Rules, and the Titles of theſe Rules. This ſhews that all theſe Books belong to the ſame Author, and that they compos'd but one Book, entitled Aſceticks, whereof the Firſt Part is not entire. As to the Three Diſcourſes which precede that which is entitled, Of Judgment, they are diſtinct Treatiſes which have no Relation to the other Aſcetical Books: The Treatiſe of Judgment ought to precede that of Faith, and both the one and the other are a Preface to the Aſceticks. The Book of a Monaſtick Life, and the Conſtitutions are diſtinct Works, as well as the Rules concerning the Puniſhment of Monks.

St. Baſil.

Of the Moral Homilies, the firſt is that about Faſting, cited by St. Auſtin in the First Book againſt Julian, where he recites alſo ſome other Paſſages which this Heretick had taken out of a Treatiſe of St. Baſil againſt the Manichees, which we have not at preſent. The Second Homily of Faſting, which Eraſmus has condemned too ſlightly, is cited by St. John Damaſcene and by Euthymius. The Third Homily upon the ſame Subject publiſh'd by Cotelerius, is not unworthy of St. Baſil, tho' it be not ſo Elegant. The Fourth Homily is upon theſe Words, Take heed to your ſelves. The Fifth is concerning Thankſgiving, which ſome have believed not to be St. Baſil's. The ſixth is upon theſe Words, I will pull down my Barns. The Seventh to Rich Men. The Eighth upon Famine and Barrenneſs. The Tenth of Anger. The Eleventh of Envy. The Twelfth upon the beginning of the Proverbs. The Thirteenth contains an Exhortation to Baptiſm. The Fifteenth is upon Drunkenneſs. The One and Twentieth was recited to Laciza. The Two and Twentieth of Humility. The Three and Twentieth, that we ought not to ſet our Hearts upon the Things of this World. The Four and Twentieth preſcribes Rules to Young People about reading Profane Books: And the Eight and Twentieth is of Penance. To theſe we may add the Panegyricks, which are the Panegyrick of the Holy Martyr Julita, that of St. Gordus, and that of St. Mamas. There is alſo one upon Barlaam a Martyr of Antioch; but it has more of the Stile of St. Chryſoſtom than of St. Baſil; and 'tis more probable, that it was recited at Antioch, where the Memory of St. Barlaam was held in ſingular Veneration, than at Cæſarea of Cappadocia.

The 24 Moral Homilies collected by Simeon Logotheta, are Extracts out of ſeveral places of St. Baſil.

The Latin Diſcourſe of Conſolation, and the Advertiſement to his Spiritual Son, ſeem to me to have neither the Stile nor Genius of St. Baſil. The Treatiſe of the Praiſes of a Solitary Life, is taken out of the Treatiſe of St. Peter Damian, upon Dominus vobiſcum. I ſay nothing of the Grammar attributed to St. Baſil, which is an Abridgment of Grammar by a Modern Greek.

There remains now no more but the Liturgies attributed to this Father which are Three in Number. The Firſt is in Greek, and Printed by Morellus. The Second was tranſlated from the Syriack, and publiſh'd by Maſius. The Third was tranſlated from the Arabick by a Maronite of Mount Libanus. But tho' 'tis certain that St. Baſil compos'd a Liturgy, as St. Proclus, the Council in Trullo, and Leontius, aſſure us: Yet it cannot be poſitively affirmed, that any of thoſe which we have is the Liturgy of that Father, as he compos'd it: On the contrary, there is great probability, that it has not been preſerv'd in its Purity, and that many things have been added and changed in it, as uſually happens to thoſe kind of Works. It is obſerved alſo, That Petrus Diaconus cites a Famous Prayer taken out of the Liturgy of St. Baſil, which is not to be found in any of thoſe Liturgies, which now go under his Name.

The Homilies of St. Baſil upon the Six Days of Creation, are in Photius's Judgment the moſt Excellent of all his Works. And indeed, he handles this Matter in a very grateful manner; they are fill'd with many Embelliſhments of Rhetorick, with agreeable Deſcriptions, ſublime Thoughts, curious and Learned Remarks, and ſolid Reflexions. He explains the Words of Holy Scripture literally, without having recourſe to Allegories; and yet he ſets of this Explication with ſo many Ornaments, that 'tis very delightful. He reſolves many Queſtions about the Nature and Difficulties of Moſes's Relation: He intermixes from time to time ſome Moral Thoughts. It appears that he preach'd theſe Sermons to his People in the Afternoons.

The Homily of a Terreſtrial Paradiſe, is alſo a continuation of this Work; he deſcribes it moſt Eloquently, and underſtands it in a Spiritual Sence of a State of Righteouſneſs and Holineſs.

In the Homily upon the Words of the Proverbs, Give no ſleep unto your Eyes, publiſh'd by Cotelerius, St. Baſil exhorts to Watchfulneſs, and the Practice of Good Works.

His Homilies upon the Pſalms are written in the ſame Stile, but they are more fill'd with Morality. He departs ſometimes from the Literal Sence, and does not always apprehend the true Sence of the Prophet. Yet he does not make uſe of obſcure and forc'd Allegories; but all that he ſays is Intelligible, Natural, Uſeful, and Pleaſant. The Commentary upon Iſaiah, is not ſo lofty, nor ſo full of Morality, but 'tis very Intelligible and very Learned.

The Five Books againſt Eunomius are a moſt compleat Work of Controverſy; he recites the Arguments and Words of this Heretick, and refutes them very ſolidly and very clearly.

In the Two firſt Books, he refutes the principal Arguments which this Heretick uſed to prove that the Son was not like to his Father. He anſwers them very clearly, and diſcovers the Falſhood of this Heretick's Reaſonings.

In the Third he anſwers the Objections which he made againſt the Divinity of the Holy Spirit.

In the Fourth he proves that the Son of God is not a Creature, but is truly God.

And Laſtly, in the Fifth he proves the ſame thing of the Holy Spirit.

He

St. Baſil.

He handles the moſt intricate Matters of Theology, in a manner very Learned and Profound, and yet without perplexing and entangling them with the Quirks, the Difficulties and Terms of the Schoolmen.

He proves alſo the Trinity of Divine Perſons, and their Equality, in the 16th. Homily upon the Beginning of the Goſpel of St. John, and in the Book againſt the Sabellians.

He particularly Eſtabliſhes the Divinity of the Holy Spirit, in the Treatiſe of the Holy Spirit, addreſs'd to Amphilochius. He compos'd it upon occaſion of a Complaint that ſome Perſons had made againſt him, that at the Concluſion of his Sermons he had ſaid, Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, with the Holy Ghoſt, inſtead of ſaying as ſome do, In the Holy Ghoſt. Amphilochius had ask'd him the proper Signification of theſe Terms, and the Difference between the one and the other Expreſſion. St. Baſil commends him for this Exactneſs, and obſerves that 'tis very uſeful to ſearch out the proper Sence of the Terms and Expreſſions which we uſe.

In the 2d. Chapter he makes this Obſervation, That thoſe who will uſe different Terms in Glorifying the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt, do it for no other End, but to conclude from thence the Diſſimilitude and Inequality of the Three Perſons of the Trinity.

In the 3d. Chapter he ſhews, That the difference of theſe Terms, of whom, by whom, in whom, have no place but in Philoſophy, and we ought not to uſe them when we ſpeak of the Three Divine Perſons.

In the 4th. he ſhows, That this Particle, of whom, ſignifies in Scripture the Efficient Cauſe, ſince 'tis ſaid that all things are of God.

In the 5th. he ſhows, That the Scripture ſays of the Father, by whom, and of the Son, of whom, and that it uſes the ſame Expreſſions when it ſpeaks of the Holy Ghoſt.

In the 6th. he anſwers thoſe who affirm, That we cannot ſay, the Son of God is with his Father becauſe he is after his Father. St. Baſil maintains, that the Son of God is not at all inferiour to the Father, neither in reſpect of Time, nor in reſpect of the Place he holds, nor in reſpect of Honour and Glory, being Eternal as the Father, Infinite as the Father, and having a Glory and Majeſty equal to that of the Father.

In the 7th. he proves, That this Expreſſion, with the Son, is not New; That the Church has uſed it to denote the Majeſty of his Divine Nature, as ſhe has alſo uſed that other, by the Son, to ſignify the acceſs which we have to God the Father by his Son, and therefore we ought to uſe the former Expreſſion when we ſing the Praiſes of God; and the latter when we thank him for the Favours he has done us.

He explains this Diſtinction in Ch. 8. and there he recites many Names of Jeſus Chriſt.

In the 9th. he explains his Judgment concerning the Divinity of the Holy Spirit, which he received by Tradition, and which is agreeable to the Doctrine of the Holy Scripture. He proves that the Holy Spirit is a Spiritual Perſon, Eternal, Infinite, Unchangeable, &c. who ſtrengthens us, and gives us Life by his Gifts.

In the 10th. and 11th. he refutes thoſe that would not joyn the Holy Spirit to the Father and the Son. He proves the contrary by the Inſtitution of Baptiſm, and accuſes thoſe that would not add the Holy Spirit to the Father and the Son; Of Violating the ſaving Sacrament of Baptiſm; Of Prevaricating in the Vow which they had made, and of Revolting from the Religion which they had once profeſſed.

In Chapter 12. he anſwers the firſt Exception of his Adverſaries, who ſaid, That Baptiſm given in the Name of Jeſus Chriſt was ſufficient. St. Baſil anſwers, Firſt, That the Name of Jeſus Chriſt denotes the whole Trinity, becauſe it ſignifies the Anointed of the Lord. Now he ſays, that the Word Anointed, deſigns him that does Anoint, and him by whom he is anointed. Secondly, That Faith is inſeparable from Baptiſm, becauſe Faith is perfected by Baptiſm, and Baptiſm ſuppoſes Faith; That the Profeſſion of Faith precedes Baptiſm, which is as it were the Seal of it. Laſtly, He maintains that 'tis not ſufficient to Baptize in the Name of Jeſus Chriſt, but that we muſt invoke the Three Perſons of the Godhead according to inviolable Tradition, and that we ought to add nothing to nor take any thing from this Invocation.

In the 13th. he refutes a Second Anſwer of his Adverſaries, who ſay, That tho' the Holy Spirit were oftentimes in Scripture joyn'd to the Father and the Son, yet it would not follow from thence, that he was equal to them, ſince the Angels are there ſometimes joyn'd with God. St. Baſil anſwers, That there is a great Difference between the manner in which the Scripture ſpeaks of Angels, and of the Holy Spirit, becauſe it conſiders the former merely as Miniſters, whereas it conſiders the Holy Spirit as the Fountain of Life, and joyns him with the Father, becauſe of the Unity of Eſſence.

In the 14th. he reſolves alſo a third Difficulty: It was objected to him, That tho' Men be baptiz'd in the Name of the Holy Spirit, yet it does not follow, that the Holy Spirit is equal to the Father and the Son, ſince 'tis alſo ſaid in Scripture, That they were all baptiz'd into Moſes in the Cloud. St. Baſil anſwers, That this Expreſſion of St. Paul, ſignifies only, that Moſes and the Cloud were the Figure of the Baptiſm of Jeſus Chriſt, but that the Truth is much more Excellent than the Type.

In the 15. he anſwers a fourth Sophiſm: We are baptiz'd in Water, ſaid the Hereticks, and yet we do not honour the Water as the Father and the Son. St. Baſil anſwers, That this Objection is ridiculous, and that thoſe who make it are mad; That 'tis not the Water that Baptizes us but the Spirit; That the Water indeed is joyned with the Spirit, as the Sign of the Death and Burial of the Old Man, but that 'tis the Spirit who gives a New Life; That Baptiſm is adminiſtred by dipping three times into St. Baſil. into the Water, and by invoking the Trinity three times, to ſignify our dying to Sin, and the giving of Life; That the Baptiſm of Jeſus Chriſt is very different from that of St. John, which was only the Baptiſm of Water, whereas that of Jeſus Chriſt is the Baptiſm of the Holy Spirit and of Fire. Laſt of all, he ſays, That the Martyrs who ſuffer'd Death for Jeſus Chriſt, needed not the Baptiſm of Water in order to their receiving the Crown, being baptized in their own Blood he ſpeaks alſo in this place of the Fire of the Day of Judgment, which he calls the Baptiſm of Fire, that ſhall try all Mankind.

In the 17th. and 18th. he ſhews that the Holy Spirit is joyn'd to the Father, and to the Son, as a Perſon equal, and not as one inferiour. To prove this, he uſes the Rules of Logick, having to do with an Adverſary, againſt whom he muſt uſe theſe Arms.

In the 19th. he proves, That we ſhould celebrate the Glory and Praiſes of the Holy Spirit, as we do thoſe of the Father and of the Son, and that we ſhould give him the ſame Honours.

In the 20th. the refutes the Opinion of thoſe who ſay, That the Holy Spirit is neither a Lord nor a Servant, but that he is Free. He ſhows that this Opinion is very abſurd, for either he is a Creature or not; if not, then he is God or Lord, and if he is, he muſt be a Servant, for all Creatures have a Dependance upon God.

In the 21ſt. he ſhows by many Teſtimonies of Scripture, That the Holy Spirit is there called Lord.

In the 22d. he proves his Divinity by many paſſages of Scripture.

In the 23. he alledges the Miracles attributed to the Holy Spirit, to prove that he is God.

In the 24th. he ſhows, That we ſhould Glorify the Holy Spirit, as we do the Father and the Son.

In the 25th. he anſwers thoſe who object, That the Scripture never uſes this Expreſſion, The Father, and the Son, with the Holy Spirit; and he ſhews, that to ſay, The Father, and the Son, with the Holy Spirit, ſignifies nothing elſe but, the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit; That the erroneous way which they would have us uſe, is not to be found in the Holy Scripture; Glory be to the Father by the only Son in the Holy Spirit; That the Particle in has the ſame Sence in this place as the Particle with; That the Fathers made uſe of the Particle with, as being moſt proper to oppoſe the Errors of Arius and Sabellius, and that 'tis leſs capable of an ill Sence; That notwithſtanding he is not ty'd up to this Expreſſion, provided we be willing to render Glory to the Holy Spirit.

In the following Chapter, he goes on to explain with much ſubtlety the Difference between the Particles in and with.

In the 27th. he propoſes this Objection, We ought to receive nothing but what is in the Holy Scripture: But theſe Words are not to be found, Glory to the Father, and to the Son, with the Holy Spirit. In anſwer to which, he Firſt ſends his Adverſaries back to what he had ſaid in Ch. 25. Afterwards he adds, "That in the Church there are ſome Opinions and Practices founded upon the Teſtimonies of Scripture; but then there are alſo ſome which are founded only upon unwritten Tradition: That the Scripture and Tradition have an equal Authority for the eſtabliſhing of Piety and Truth, and that none who follow the Eccleſiaſtical Laws reſiſt them: That if we ſhould reject all Cuſtoms that are not founded on Scripture, we ſhall greatly prejudice Religion, and reduce it to a ſuperficial Belief of ſome particular Opinions. 'Tis eaſy, ſays he, to give Examples of this; and to begin with that which is moſt common. Where find we it written, that we muſt make the Sign of the Croſs upon thoſe who begin to Hope in Jeſus Chriſt? What Book of Scripture teaches us, that we muſt turn to the Eaſt to make our Prayers? What Saint has left us in his Writings, the Words of Invocation, when we Conſecrate the Bread of the Euchariſt and the Cup of Bleſſing? For we do not content our ſelves with pronouncing the Words ſet down by the Apoſtle St. Paul, and the Evangeliſts, but we add ſeveral Prayers, both before and after, which we conſider as having much Efficacy upon the Sacrament; and yet we have them not but by Tradition. We Conſecrate the Water of Baptiſm, the Oyl of Unction, and him alſo who is to be baptiz'd; Where is this written? Is not this a Secret Tradition? Is it not Cuſtom which has taught us that we muſt Anoint him who is to be baptiz'd? Where has the Scripture taught us, that we muſt uſe three Dippings in baptizing? We muſt ſay the ſame of the other Ceremonies of Baptiſm, as of Renouncing the Devil and his Angels. Who has oblig'd us to do theſe things? Whence have we Learn'd them? Have we them not from the Tradition of our Fathers? Who obſerved them, without divulging or publiſhing of them, being perſwaded that Silence kept up a Veneration for the Myſteries? What neceſſity was there of putting that in Writing which it was not lawful to reveal or to explain to thoſe who were not yet baptiz'd?" Afterwards he gives the Reaſon of ſome Uſages which he had mentioned. He obſerves alſo, That Chriſtians pray to God ſtanding from Eaſter to Whitſunday; That they kneel and afterwards riſe up. He gives Myſtical Reaſons for theſe Cuſtoms, which are ſo forc'd, that 'tis eaſy to perceive, there is no better Reaſon to be given than Cuſtom and Practice. Laſtly he concludes, That ſince there are ſo many things which we have by Tradition, we ought not to reprehend one ſimple Particle which the Ancients made uſe of.

This he proves in the 29th. Chapter, where he alledges the Authorities of St. Irenæus, St. Clemens Romanus, the Two Dionyſii, Euſebius of Cæſarea, Origen, Africanus, Athenogenes, Gregory Thaumaturgus, Firmilian and Meletius, beſides the Prayers of the Church, and the Conſent of the Eaſtern and Weſtern Churches. Towards the end of this Chapter he complains of the hardſhips which his Calumniators make him ſuffer. In the laſt, he deſcribes the miſerable State of the Church. He compares compares it to a Fleet of Ships toſt with a great Tempeſt, which is the cauſe of Shipwrack to many of them, and Points out the Troubles and Miſeries wherewith the Church was afflicted very admirably: This Chapter alone is ſufficient to ſhow that this Book is undoubtedly St. Baſil's. St. Baſil.

He proves alſo the Divinity of the Holy Spirit in Homily 17th. upon Baptiſm, and he explains the Faith of the Church concerning the Trinity in Homily 15th. of Faith. He enlarges upon the Gifts of the Holy Spirit. He treats alſo of the ſame thing in Homily 29. againſt thoſe who accuſe us of worſhipping Three Gods.

In Homily 19. St. Baſil treats of that famous and difficult Queſtion, Why do the Juſt ſuffer, and why is there any Evil, if God takes care of things here below? St. Baſil anſwers, That all this is done by the Permiſſion of God; That Diſeaſes, Calamities, Pain and Death are not real Evils; That Sin which is the only Evil, comes not from God, but from our ſelves; That God expoſes men to Sufferings either to cure them, or to puniſh them, or to make them ſerve for an Example; Or laſtly, to make them good and deſerving: And moreover, That God is not the firſt Author of Diſeaſes, Pain and Death; becauſe he created Man free from them, and theſe things entred into the World only by his Sin. But why, may ſome object, did not God make him impeccable? He anſwers, becauſe in order to the honouring of God, and meriting from him, 'twas neceſſary that he ſhould obey him voluntarily and freely; That the Devil was the Cauſe of his own Perdition, by uſing his Liberty amiſs; That the Tree of Life and Death was placed in Paradiſe, to try the Obedience of Man; and that it was his own fault that he made an ill uſe of it. He obſerves that the Dæmons dwell in the Air, and are incorporeal.

The 31ſt. Diſcourſe which is of Free-Will, has ſome Connexion with the preceding. Therein he teaches, Firſt, That Men deceive themſelves, if they imagine that they can overcome Temptations, by the ſole Power of their own Liberty, without the aſſiſtance of God; That Free-Will can indeed chooſe for us Good and Evil; but God only can enable us to do Good; That we muſt therefore beg the Aſſiſtance of the Divine Power, which cannot be obtain'd without refraining from Worldly Pleaſures: That by the Sin of the Firſt Man, we are become like Beaſts; That we muſt labour to be of the Number of the Children of God, and to excite in us the Fire of the Holy Spirit, which Jeſus Chriſt came to bring down upon the Earth, and which deſcended on the Apoſtles at the day of Pentecoſt; That we muſt pray God that this Fire may deſcend upon us, that we walking always in the Light may never fall, and that we may be as the Lights of the World.

In Homily 25th. of the Nativity of the Word, he explains the Myſtery of the Incarnation. He ſays, That the Word was not chang'd by uniting it ſelf to the Humane Nature; That he was made Man to Redeem us; That he took a Body in the Womb of the Virgin Mary, by the Operation of the Holy Spirit; That his Body was made all at once; That Mary was a Virgin, though ſhe was Married to St. Joſeph. After this, he examines this Queſtion, Whether ſhe knew her Husband after ſhe brought forth Jeſus Chriſt into the World? He ſays, That this is not a Fundamental Article of our Faith; but that thoſe who have a love for Jeſus Chriſt, cannot endure to hear it ſaid, that the Mother of God loſt her Virginity, and became the Mother of a Man. He explains the Difficulties which may be raiſed againſt this Doctrine, from the Particle, Until that, and from the Character of Firſt-Born, which is given to Jeſus Chriſt. Afterwards he explains ſome Circumſtances of the Birth of Jeſus Chriſt. He believes that the Wiſe Men were Perſians; That the Star which they ſaw was not an ordinary Star, and that they knew it ſignified the Birth of Jeſus Chriſt, as well by the Prophecy of Baalam, as becauſe they ſaw the Power of the Devil very much diminiſh'd. Laſtly, He exhorts his Auditors to celebrate with Joy the Feaſt of the Nativity of Jeſus Chriſt.

In the Firſt Book of Baptiſm, he proves, Firſt, That we muſt not Baptize any but thoſe that are well-inſtructed and perſuaded of the Faith of Jeſus Chriſt, and who have renounc'd the World, their Vices, their Paſſions, and if need be, their Life. Secondly, He ſhews, That in order to Salvation, 'tis not enough to be baptiz'd, but that we muſt alſo keep the Commandments and do good Works. He ſhows afterwards what difference there is between the Baptiſms of Moſes, of St. John, and of Jeſus Chriſt. He ſays, That the Baptiſm of Moſes ſeparated ſome Men from others, but did not pardon them; That the Baptiſm of St. John being received with a Penitent Heart, conferr'd Remiſſion of Sins; but the Baptiſm of Jeſus Chriſt is much more excellent and efficacious: That by this Baptiſm we die unto Sin and live unto Righteouſneſs; That we are Crucified and Buried with Jeſus Chriſt; That we are raiſed again together with him; That Sin hath no more Dominion over us; That we are filled with the Holy Spirit, and cloath'd with Jeſus Chriſt. At laſt, he adds, That after we are baptiz'd, we have need to be nouriſh'd with the Food of Eternal Life; that's to ſay, with the Euchariſt, which we ought to receive with moſt holy Diſpoſitions, leſt we ſhould eat and drink our own Damnation.

In the 2d. Book he propoſes many Queſtions. The Firſt is, Whether he that is baptiz'd be oblig'd to die unto the World and to live unto God? He anſwers, Yes, he is. The Second is, Whether he that performs the Office of a Prieſt, ought to be pure in Heart? He anſwers, That if Moſes removed from the Sacrifices of the Old Law, all thoſe that were impure, Purity is yet more neceſſary to him that touches the Body of Jeſus Chriſt.

The Third Queſtion is, Whether it be lawful for one to receive the Euchariſt when he is unclean? St. Baſil anſwers it after the ſame manner as he did the preceding.

In the 4th. he teaches, That we muſt obey the Commandments, though it ſeems to us, that there were ſome Actions of Jeſus Chriſt or the Saints contrary to them; and that we muſt never ſeek for Excuſes nor Pretences to diſpenſe with the Obſervation of the Law. He adds in the 5th. That all diſobedience to the Commands of God is puniſhable, and that it deſerves the Divine Vengeance.

In

St. Baſil. In the 6th. he proves that a Man ſins not only by doing Evil; but alſo by omitting to do good when we are oblig'd to do it.

In the 7th. he advertiſes us, That we muſt regulate the Inward Man, before we give unto God any external Worſhip.

In the 8th. That we muſt not only perform the things commanded; but alſo do them in the manner which is enjoyn'd, in the order and time preſcribed.

In the 9th. he ſhows, That we ought to ſhun the Society and Converſation of wicked Men.

In the 10th. he treats of Scandal. He defines it, That which Seduces us from the Truth and draws us into Error or Impiety; or, That which hinders us to obey the Commands of God as long as we live: So that every thing may be call'd Scandal which is contrary to the Will of God. He adds That 'tis alſo Scandal to do a thing, though it be lawful, when it is the cauſe of the loſs or fall of the Weak. He obſerves alſo, That there is ſometimes a Scandal taken without cauſe.

In the 11th. he ſhows, That 'tis never lawful to do thoſe things which are forbidden by the Law of God, nor to obey thoſe that command ſuch things, and that we muſt never uſe our Reaſon to exempt our ſelves from Obedience to the Law of God.

In the 12th. he ſhows, That we ought not only to take care of thoſe Perſons that are under our Conduct; but that our Charity alſo muſt extend to all other Chriſtians! and that a Biſhop ought in caſe of Neceſſity to help all the Churches.

In the laſt, he proves by Scripture, That we muſt endure all and ſuffer all, even Death it ſelf, rather than fail in our Duty, or diſobey the Law of God. This Treatiſe appears to be rather of Morality than Doctrine; but though he treats there of Moral Queſtions, yet he handles them Dogmatically, and founds his Deciſions upon all the Teſtimonies of Scripture which belongs to his Subject.

The Treatiſe of true Virginity contains many Precepts for preſerving Virginity. In it he extols very much the ſtate of Virgins, and diſcovers the Dangers to which they are expos'd. There are in this Treatiſe ſome Paſſages which may offend nice Ears; but 'tis to be conſider'd, that 'tis addreſs'd to a Biſhop, and not to the Virgins themſelves; ſetting that aſide, 'tis very Eloquent, and very well written.

In Homily 28. of Penance, he proves againſt the Novatians, That thoſe who have ſinned after Baptiſm, have ſtill the Remedy of Penance; but he admoniſhes them that they ought not to ſin in hopes of doing Penance; That commonly thoſe who ſin with this diſpoſition of Mind are deprived of Repentance; That in truth there is hope of Pardon when they have ſinned; but ſtill it is like a Wound that can be healed, which leaves ſome Scar for ever behind it.

We are now inſenſibly faln into the Homilies of Morality, out of which we ſhall make our Extracts before we come to the Aſcetical Treatiſes.

The Firſt is a Homily about Faſting. After he has in the Firſt Part admoniſh'd us, that we muſt Faſt with a pleaſant Countenance, then he Exhorts Chriſtians to Faſt, alledging many Authorities and Examples to that purpoſe. He ſhows the Neceſſity of Faſting, and anſwers the Excuſe that is moſt commonly alledg'd for diſpenſing with it, which is the want of Health or Sickneſs. "Do not "alledge to me, ſays he, your Indiſpoſition; Don't tell me that you cannot endure Faſting; 'Tis not "to me that ye alledge theſe Excuſes, 'tis to God, from whom nothing can be hid. But tell me, Can "you not Faſt, ſay you? Alas, Can you fill your ſelves with Victuals, can you charge your Stomachs "with all ſorts of Meats? Do not the Phyſicians preſcribe to thoſe that are Sick Abſtinence and Diet-"ing themſelves, rather than abundance of Food? How come you then to ſay, that you can Eat very "much, and that you cannot Diet your ſelves? At laſt, St. Baſil ſays, "That our Faſting ſhould be "accompanied with Abſtinence from Evil; That we muſt faſt from our Paſſions and Vices; and that "without this, bodily Faſting is unprofitable. Take heed, ſays, he, that you make not your Faſt to "conſiſt only in Abſtinence from Meats: True Faſting is to refrain from Vice. Tear in pieces all "your Unjuſt Obligations; Pardon your Neighbour; forgive him his Debts. Faſt nor to ſtir up Striſe "and Contention. You eat no Fleſh, but you devour your Brother; You drink no Wine, but you "cannot refrain from doing Injury to others; You wait till Night to take your Repaſt, but you ſpend "all the Day at the Tribunals of the Judges. Woe be to you who are Drunk without Wine: Anger "is a kind of Inebriation, which does no leſs trouble the Mind than real Drunkenneſs". He ſpeaks afterwards againſt thoſe who uſe Faſting, to prepare themſelves for larger Drinking and Eating, or who indulge themſelves as much as they can after they have Faſted, as if it were to redeem the time they have loſt. He gives a natural and frightful repreſentation of Drunkenneſs, ſufficient to beget a horror of it; he diſſwades from it alſo from the Conſideration of the Body of Jeſus Chriſt which they are to receive. He ſays, That Faſting and Abſtinence are Ornaments to Cities, ſecure the Tranquillity of Publick Aſſemblies, the Peace of Families, and the Preſervation of our Eſtates: He ſays, That to be perſwaded of this, they needed only compare the Night of this preſent day in which he Preached, with the Night of the next Day, (From whence it appears that this Day was a Publick Faſt.) At laſt he wiſhes, That in theſe Days wherein Chriſtians are called to the Practice of Faſting, they might learn to know the Efficacy of their Temperance to prepare them for that Great Day wherein God will reward their Vertue.

The Second Homily is alſo an Exhortation to Faſting. Therein he condemns thoſe who allow'd themſelves great Liberties in Eating and Drinking before their Faſting. He ſays that all Chriſtians of all Ages and Conditions are obliged to it. Laſtly, He ſpeaks of the principal Diſpoſition for profitable Faſting, which is to abſtain from Vice.

The Third Homily about Faſting publiſh'd by Cotelerius, is ſhorter than the two preceding; but it is written upon the ſame Principles, and upon the ſame Subject.

In

In the Third Homily upon theſe words, Take heed to your ſelves, St. Baſil recommends that Vigilance and Care which one ought to have over himſelf, that's to ſay, over his Soul, and his Behaviour. St. Baſil. He ſays, That this Care is neceſſary for Sinners that they may amend their ways, and for the Innocent, leſt they ſhould fall: That the firſt have need to watch over themſelves to cure themſelves. "You "have committed, ſays he, a great Sin, you muſt then endure a long Penance, you muſt ſhed bitter tears "you muſt paſs whole Nights in watching, you muſt Faſt continually. Though you have commit-"ted but a ſlight Sin, yet you muſt watch over your ſelves to do Penance for it; for it often happens, "that thoſe who have but a ſlight Sickneſs, become dangerouſly Sick when they neglect it". After this he ſhews, That this Watchfulneſs is neceſſary to fulfil the Duties of all States and Conditions. He reproves thoſe that watch for the Faults of others, but never think of their own. He ſhews, That this Watchfulneſs is neceſſary to every Man in whatſoever ſtate he is, and that it is a Remedy to all our Evils, and to all our Paſſions. "If you are ambitious, ſays he, if you are lifted up above meaſure, "either upon the account of your great Riches, or becauſe of your Nobility; if you take Pleaſure in "your Beauty, if you are inſpir'd with a Paſſion for Glory, if you are Lovers of Pleaſures, you have "nothing to do but to take heed to your ſelves, and you may know that you are Mortal, that you "are Duſt, and ſhall return to duſt. If Anger tranſports you to do brutal Actions, take heed to "your ſelves, and you ſhall preſently be aſham'd of that Condition to which Anger has reduc'd you. In "ſhort, This Watchfulneſs which you ſhould have over your ſelves, will make you know God. "You will find ſome Footſteps of him in your ſelves: Your Soul will make you know that he is Spi-"ritual; you will admire him who has made ſuch an excellent Piece of Workmanſhip, and the more "you conſider the Perfections of your Soul and Body, the more ſublime Idea you will conceive of the "Greatneſs, the Power and theſe Wiſdom of God.

The 4th. Homily intituled, of Thankſgiving, is about the Joy which St. Paul preſcribes to Chriſtians in theſe words of his Epiſtle to the Theſſalonians: Rejoyce always, pray without ceaſing, giving thanks to God for every thing. He explains in what ſence Chriſtians ought always to be Joyful: He ſays, That in order to their having this Joy, they muſt be like St. Paul; that's to ſay, they muſt live in Jeſus Chriſt, and their Joy muſt not depend upon changes of Fortune, but it muſt be ſolid, and depend upon their own Good Conſcience, and their hope of Eternal Happineſs, which renders thoſe Happy who are moſt Miſerable in the Eyes of the World. He ſhews, That the Joys of this World are Afflictions to thoſe that are Good; and on the contrary, the Afflictions of this World are an occaſion of Joy to them. He explains in what ſence Jeſus Chriſt wept, and why the Saints have Power to weep. At laſt he exhorts all Chriſtians to be no more ſad, for the loſs of this World's Goods; but on the contrary to rejoyce in the hope of thoſe Good things that are to come.

He continues the ſame Subject in the following Homily which was made upon the Feſtival of St. Julita the Martyr. This Saint had a Law-Suit with a Man, which ſhe commenc'd for all her Eſtate. 'Twas promis'd her, that ſhe ſhould gain her Cauſe, if ſhe would renounce Jeſus Chriſt, but ſhe was aſſur'd that ſhe ſhould loſe all if ſhe ſhould not agree to this Propoſition. She anſwer'd with Courage: You ſhall ſooner take away my Goods, and deprive me of my Life, than ever make me ſpeak one ſingle Word againſt my God. This Anſwer caus'd her to be condemned to the Fire wherein ſhe expir'd; but her Body could not be burnt by the Flames. This is the Hiſtory which St. Baſil relates in this Sermon, upon which Occaſion he purſues the preceeding Diſcourſe and continues the Explication of the Words of St. Paul. He ſays, That the continual Prayer which God requires of us, does not conſiſt in a vocal repeating of Prayers, but in the Deſign that one has to do Good. So according to him, if a Man would pray continually, he ought always to be united to God in his Actions, and in every thing to follow his Will. At laſt, he ſays, That we muſt thank God, and praiſe him for every thing, and that neither Loſſes, nor Diſeaſes, nor Wrongs, nor Afflictions, nor the Death of our Relations, nor the other Miſeries of this Life ought to hinder us from praiſing God, and giving him thanks continually; That in Adverſity we ought to thank God, becauſe 'tis good for us to be humbled; and we ought to praiſe him in Proſperity, ſaying to him in the Words of the Royal Prophet, O my God, what ſhall I render unto thee for all the benefits that thou haſt done unto me. He recites many Motives of Conſolation in Adverſity, taken from the Mercies of God, the Hope of future Happineſs, the Wiſdom of God, the Submiſſion that's due to his Will, and the Miſeries of others. And Laſtly, he aſſures us that nothing but Sin ſhould make us weep, and that if Charity obliges us to Mourn with thoſe that Mourn, that is only by a kind of Condeſcention which ſhould not laſt long. At the End of this Homily, he reproves thoſe who make themſelves Drunk to drive away Sadneſs.

The three following Homilies are about Riches, and againſt Covetouſneſs. The Fifſt is upon the Words of the Rich Man mention'd in the Goſpel, who ſeeing the Superabundance of his Goods, ſaid, I will pull down my Barns, and I will build larger. He begins with this Remark, That Men have Two great Temptations in this Life, Great Adverſity, and Great Proſperity. That Job overcame the firſt, but the Rich Man in the Goſpel was overcome by the laſt. After this he makes Reflections upon the Actions and the Puniſhment of this Rich Man, and ſays, they ought to teach us to be Bountiful towards the Poor, and to make good uſe of our Riches. He obſerves, That we are only Stewards of our Riches; That all that we have is for others; That we ſhould imitate the Earth which brings forth her Fruit for others; That the Good which we do will turn to our Profit; That 'Tis more Glorious to give than to receive; That 'tis an accurſed thing to with-hold Corn for a time of Dearth; That 'tis a piece of Inhumanity to deſpiſe the Poor; That Riches are unprofitable if they be not diſtributed; That the Thoughts of the Covetous are vain and ſenſleſs; and that they take a great deal of Pains to heap up Riches which they never enjoy. After this he anſwers the Objections of Covetous Men.

St Baſil

Men. One ſays, I will give to Morrow, to exempt himſelf from giving to Day. "Alas! What do "you know whether you ſhall be alive to Morrow in this place? Another ſays, I am Poor, I have "need enough my ſelf of all my Means. Yes, you are Poor, you are deſtitute, but 'tis of Charity, "of Benignity, of Faith, of Mercy. A Third ſays, Whom do I wrong, I detain nothing but what is "mine own; and here St. Baſil is angry with this wicked Maxim. And I, ſays he, demand of you, "Why do you ſay, that thoſe Riches are your own? From whom did you receive them, and from "whence did you bring them? Did not you come naked out of your Mother's-Womb, and ſhall not "you return naked to the Duſt? From whence then did this preſent Wealth come? If you ſay it "came by Chance, you are impious; if you confeſs that you received it from God, tell me why did it "fall to your Lot rather than another's? God is not unjuſt in the unequal Diviſion of Goods which "he makes amongſt Men. Why then are you Rich, and why is this Man Poor? 'Tis that you "who are Rich, may receive the Reward of diſpenſing your Goods faithfully, and that the Poor Man "may receive the Recompence of his Patience. And therefore when you appropriate to your ſelf "that Wealth which belongs to many particular Perſons, and of which you are only a Steward; "you are a Robber, you detain that which is none of your own. Yea, the Bread which you keep to "your ſelf, whereof you have more than ſerves for the uſe of your Family, belongs to the Poor, who "die for Famine; the Garments which you keep lock'd up in your Ward-robe, belong to the naked; "the Money which you hide, belongs to the ruin'd, &c. Theſe are fine Diſcourſes, you will tell me, "but Gold is yet a much finer thing. Thus does the Covetous Man talk, when he hears us preach. "For as it is ſometimes ſeen, that the unchaſt hearing us ſpeak contemptuouſly of the Paſſion of "Luſt, do thereby receive a New Fire which ſtirs them up more violently than before; ſo alſo the "Covetous hearing us Diſcourſe againſt Riches, conceive a greater Love and Paſſion for them. But "what think they of theſe terrible Words of Jeſus Chriſt, Go, ye curſed into Eternal Fire; for I "was a-hungry, and you gave me no Meat, I was a thirſt, and you gave me no Drink, &c. Not only "thoſe who take away another's Goods ſhall be then condemn'd, but alſo thoſe who do not diſtri-"bute of their Riches to the Poor.

The Second Homily is againſt thoſe who have an inſatiable deſire of Enriching themſelves. The ſubject of this is the Hiſtory of the rich Young Man, who went away ſad, when our Saviour bid him Sell all that he had, and diſtribute the price of it to the Poor. He ſhews by this Example, That 'tis unprofitable to keep the Commandments, if one does not give Alms; and that all other Vertues will avail nothing, if one's Heart be fixed to this World by an immoderate Love of riches. He ſhows, That what is neceſſary is not very much; and at the ſame time he proves, That the greateſt Part of rich Mens Expences are ſuperfluous. He gives a very pleaſant Liſt of them in particulars, and which ſuit well enough with the Manners of our Age. He diſſuades from Avarice by the fear of Death and of Judgment, and by the meanneſs of Riches, and the bad Effects which they produce. Afterwards he refutes the moſt common Pretences which are made uſe of to excuſe Covetouſneſs. The firſt is founded upon the uncertainty of what may come to paſs: We know not, ſay they, the Accidents that may happen, or the Neceſſities we may be reduc'd to. "But, ſays St. Baſil, is not "the uſe of your Treaſures yet more uncertain? And though it were not, Can you make uſe of this Ex-"cuſe, while you ſpend your Wealth upon a Thouſand Superfluities? But I want it, ſay you, for "my Children. This Excuſe for Covetouſneſs is plauſible. You cover your ſelves with the Pre-"tence of your Children, that you may ſatisfy your Luſts. Is it from you, that your Son receiv'd "Life? Is it not from God who guides and preſerves him? Ought he then to hinder you from obeying "his Commandments? The Riches that you leave him, will, it may be, be the occaſion of his "Ruine: Who knows whether he will make a good or bad uſe of them? Is not your Soul nearer to "you than your Children? 'Tis for the Good of that, that you ſhould beſtow the Chief Part of your "Riches in Diſtributing to the Poor; and then afterwards, give to your Children what they ſtand in "need of for their Livelihood. Thoſe who have no Children, pretend the Neceſſities of this Life, as "a Cloak for their Avarice. They would uſe what they have, they would neither Sell any thing, nor "give any thing away. St. Baſil declares, That this Temper of Mind, is contrary to the Reſpect "which is due to the Faith of Jeſus Chriſt, and that it makes it void, whilſt it forms to it ſelf a Rule "and Conduct contrary to the Maxims of the Goſpel. At Laſt, he refutes the Pretence of thoſe who "think to exempt themſelves from giving Alms in their Life-time, by leaving their Goods by Will "as Legacies to the Poor. Miſerable Wretches that you are, ſays he to them, you will not then be "Liberal and Charitable towards Men, till you ceaſe to Live! What Recompence can you expect for a "Liberality which comes after Death? O brave Piety to practiſe no good Works but with Ink and "Paper! You deceive your ſelves, and you think to fulfil the Commands of the Goſpel in dying. "Abraham nevertheleſs will tell you then; My Son, you enjoy'd your Good Things and Pleaſures in "your Life-time: Do not your Actions ſhow, that you could have wiſh'd your ſelves to be Immor-"tal; That you might always have enjoy'd your Riches, and that if you had been ſo, you would never "have remembred the Commands of God, and the Precepts of the Goſpel; and therefore it is to "Death, and not to you, that the Poor ought to give thanks for the Good you have done them. "Do not Deceive your ſelves, God will not be deceiv'd, he will not be thus mock'd; that which is dead "is not to be offer'd unto the Sanctuary, offer up a living Sacrifice. He that offers up only the "remains of the Sacrifices is an ungrateful Perſon.

St. Baſil treats alſo of Alms in a Homily, which was made upon the occaſion of a great Famine and Dearth. After he has deſcrib'd theſe Calamities, he ſays, that the hard heartedneſs of the Rich to the Poor, was the cauſe of them. "The Fields are barren, ſays he, becauſe Charity is waxed "cold? "He obſerves, That publick Prayers were made, but in ſo bad a manner, and with ſo much diſtraction

St. Basil.

deſtraction that they were not heard; That Children were ſent to them, whereas the Heads of Families ſhould have come themſelves, to beg God's Mercy for their Sins. He relates the Example of the Ninevites; he exhorts Perſons of all Conditions to give Alms according to their Ability. "You are "poor, ſays he, but you may find many poorer than you: You have Corn for two days, and there "are ſome who have it only for to day. If you are Good and Charitable, divide equally what you "have left with him that has nothing; be never the more backward to give him becauſe you have but "little left for your ſelves; you prefer your private Intereſt and Advantage to the common Danger "of many poor People. For tho' you had no more but one Loaf, if a miſerable Wretch ſhall beg of "you one Morſel of it, do not refuſe him, and when you give it to him, lift up your Hands towards "Heaven, and ſay theſe Juſt and Charitable Words: Lord, I have but this one Loaf which you ſee, "and I ſee my ſelf in danger of having no more; but I prefer thy Commandment to the Love of "my ſelf, and of the little that I have, I give a Charity to my Brother, who is ſore pinch'd with "Hunger. Give alſo an Alms on your part, O my God, to your Servant, who runs a hazard of "wanting Victuals. I know your Goodneſs, and put my Truſt in your Sovereign Power, you will "not long delay the Relief of your liberal Hand, but ſcatter abundantly in a few days, the Gifts of "your Magnificence. 'Tis certain, adds he, that thoſe who rely upon Divine Providence, are like the "Springs and Fountains which are not dry'd up by drawing from them, but ſend forth their Waters "with a greater Force than before. If ye are Poor, lend your Money upon Intereſt to God who is Rich." Afterwards he repreſents the Miſery and Pain of Hunger, and deſcribes in a moſt moving manner the Extremity of a Man languiſhing for want of Food, to beget the greater horror of the Cruelty and Barbarity of covetous rich Men, who ſuffer their Brethren to die for Hunger, when they are able to aſſiſt them. He obſerves, That in a time of publick Neceſſity eſpecially, we muſt give conſiderable Alms, and that we muſt expiate our Sins by Charity to the Poor. At laſt, he admoniſhes the Poor not to throw themſelves into Deſpair, but to put their Truſt in the Mercy of God, who has ſometimes plentifully fed the Juſt after an extraordinary manner. He exhorts them to ſuffer with Patience like Job, to conſider their Miſery as the Trial of their Vertue, to give thanks to God, to beſtow ſomething to the Poor, even of their Neceſſaries; aſſuring them that this is the way to procure the Multiplication of their Loaves, as God did formerly multiply the Cruiſe of Meal to the Widow of Sarepta.

To theſe three Sermons may be join'd the Homily wherein he proves, That we muſt not ſet our Hearts upon the Riches and Pleaſures of this World. There he ſhews, That the only Care which we ought to be concern'd for, is that of our Souls; That we ought to rid our Minds of the Love of Riches, and give bountifully to the Poor. After this he deſcribes a Fire, which it was feared might have burnt down the City: He conjures thoſe that eſcaped this great Calamity, to relieve thoſe that ſuffered, and exhorts theſe laſt to Patience by the Example of Job, whoſe Hiſtory he explains.

The 10*th*. Homily is againſt Anger; where firſt he excites a Horrour of this Paſſion, by giving a Deſcription of its miſchievous Effects; and then he ſhews, That we can have no juſt Excuſe for this Paſſion of Anger, by ſhewing that all the Pretences which are alledg'd for it are falſe. The Firſt, is an Injury which we may think we have received. But St. Baſil ſhews, That we ought not to render Injury for Injury, and that we muſt not imitate our Enemy, nor follow his Footſteps and Example. He adds, That whatſoever Outrage has been done to us, we need do no more, but remember that we are Duſt, and ſhall return to Duſt, to convince us that we have deſerved all ſorts of Reproaches and Diſgraces: That by ſhowing Meekneſs we revenge our ſelves of our Enemies that we acquire the Glory of being mild and patient, and that ſilence upon this Occaſion, deſerves the Rewards of Heaven. Reproaches are another Cauſe of Anger: But St. Baſil ſhews, That even this is ill-grounded, becauſe theſe Reproaches are either true or falſe; if they are true, we are to blame if we trouble our ſelves for them; if the they are falſe, our Anger for them gives cauſe to ſuſpect that they are true. But he call'd me Poor, ſays one: "If that be true, ſays St. Baſil, bear with it; if it be "falſe. What does it concern you? 'Tis no ſhame to be Poor, for you came naked into the World, "and Jeſus Chriſt being Rich would appear Poor in it. He treated me as a Fool and an Ignorant "Fellow, will another ſay. Yet many more reproachful Words were ſpoken of Jeſus Chriſt. But "yet, How can we forbear being angry, when we are abus'd and buffeted, when we are beaten and "torn in pieces? Will others ſay. Jeſus Chriſt did alſo ſuffer more than all this, anſwers St. Baſil." Laſtly, St. Baſil preſcribes Rules to avoid Anger, as not to think more highly of our ſelves than others, to hearken with a Philoſophical Temper to the Diſcourſes of a Man that is truly angry with Sin, with the Devil, with Error, with the Enemies of God; to practiſe Humility, and conſider the Miſeries of Men. He concludes with ſome New Reaſons to diſſuade Men from Anger.

The 11*th*. Homily is againſt Envy. In the firſt part he reckons up the Reaſons which may inſpire a Man with hatred of this Vice. He ſays, That 'tis a Vice proper to the Devil, which gnaws and conſumes him in whom it is found, tho' he receives no Profit by it, and which is always accompanied with Melancholy and Vexation of Spirit, and that an envious Man is the unhappieſt Man in the World. Laſtly, he deſcribes all the troubleſome Conſequences, and miſerable Effects of Envy; and he ſays, That the beſt way to cure this Vice, is to have no great Eſteem of the things of this World, to deſpiſe its periſhable Goods, and to place all our Happineſs in the Hope of a future Life, to believe that nothing but Vertue is a ſolid and true Good, and to deſire nothing elſe.

The 14*th*. Homily is againſt Drunkenneſs. It was compos'd upon the occaſion of a Diſorder which happen'd upon Eaſter-Eve. Probably there had been at that time ſome profane Recreations; the Men and Women without any Reverence for the Vigils of ſo Holy a Feſtival, had made Feaſts, and the Women had aſſembled, and were come to dance and ſing, even to places where the Bodies of the Martyrs were kept. "St. Baſil having ſeen this Diſorder, was ſenſibly touched, as he ſays of St. Baſil. " himſelf at the Beginning of his Diſcourſe; That after ſo many Exhortations, after ſeven Weeks " Faſting, after being preſent ſo many times at the Service of the Church and the Sermons, during the " time of Lent, they had deſtroy'd in one day the Fruit of all his Labours. He ſays, That he knew " not whether he ſhould hold his Peace, or whether he ſhould ſpeak; That he ſhould have held his " Peace, but that he fear'd the Chaſtiſement of Jeremy, for having refus'd to preach to an unbelieving " and rebellious People; That Drunkenneſs was the ſource of this Diſorder, and that he muſt now " preach againſt this Vice." This is in effect the Subject of this Homily, wherein he poſſeſſes Mens Minds with a great horror of this Crime, and deſcribes the pernicious Effects of it. Towards the end of it, he returns to the exceſſes of the preceding Day. He cries out againſt their Songs and Dances, againſt their immoderate Laughter, againſt their Apparel, which was neither honeſt nor modeſt; and he exhorts thoſe of his Hearers who had been of this Company, to cure themſelves of Drunkenneſs by Faſting, to ſing Pſalms inſtead of the merry Songs which they had ſung, to turn their Laughter into Mourning, and their Dancing into Kneeling; and in ſhort, to leave off their ſumptuous and magnificent Apparel, and to put on that which is more agreeable to Modeſty and Chriſtian Humility.

The 22d. Homily is of Humility. He begins it with obſerving, That Man loſt his Dignity by the Sin of Adam, and that he cannot recover it but by Humility: That the Devil uſes all his Endeavours to deſtroy this Vertue, and to deprive us of it, by poſſeſſing us with a great Eſteem of Riches, of Honours, and the Advantages of Body and Mind. But he ſhews, That a Man ought not to glory in all theſe things, which are no ways permanent, but paſs away in a Moment; That the only true Glory of Man, is to know God, to be fully perſuaded of his own Miſery, and to believe that we are juſtified only by Faith in Jeſus Chriſt, and that we ought to attribute all to God. This is the great Principle of St. Auſtin about Grace, which St. Baſil explains in this place, adding that we can do nothing without the Aſſiſtance and Grace of Jeſus Chriſt; That 'tis a Folly and Stupidity to think, that the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt is a Natural Power; That St. Peter who anſwer'd with a Spirit of Pride to Jeſus Chriſt, telling him, Though all your Diſciples ſhould be offended, yet will I never be offended, was abandon'd to humane Weakneſs, and ſo fell into Sin. He ſpeaks afterwards of the other part of Humility, which is, not to exalt our ſelves above others, not to eſteem our ſelves more than them, not to deſpiſe them becauſe of their Faults; but to believe our ſelves much greater Sinners than they. He exhorts his Auditors to imitate the Life of Jeſus Chriſt, which was a continued Courſe of Actions of Humility; he would have a Chriſtian imitate his Maſter, and give Signs of Humility in all his Behaviour. " Your Humility, ſays he, muſt appear in the Plainneſs of your Apparel, in the Modeſty " of your Ornaments, in your Gate, in the Frugality of your Table, in the Tone of your Voice, in " the Simplicity of your Furniture, in the Order of your Houſe, in the Manner of Accoſting and " Saluting your Brethren. Take heed that you do not diſcover in your Diſcourſe and in your Actions " a ſtately and affected Way, and be affable to your Friends, mild towards your Domeſticks, patient with the Paſſionate, and courteous to Inferiors. Comfort the Afflicted, viſit the Sick, deſpiſe no body, be pleaſant in your Requeſts, chearful in your Anſwers, complaiſant and eaſie to " all the World; do not praiſe your ſelves, do not deſpiſe thoſe who praiſe themſelves; hide as much " as you can your own Merit and Vertue, accuſe your ſelves of your Sins without waiting for the " Reproof of others; be not troubleſome nor ſevere in your Reproofs, neither let them be given in " Anger; Condemn not your Neighbour for ſmall Faults, have a Compaſſion and Tenderneſs for " thoſe that have ſinned. In ſhort, ſhun the Praiſes of Men, by all the ways that others uſe to purchaſe Glory, and think not to pleaſe any but God only. In a Word, put on Humility, and by " this means you ſhall arrive at Glory, Jeſus Chriſt will acknowledge you for his Diſciple, and will " glorifie you.

The Subject of the 21ſt. Homily which was pronounc'd at Laciza, in a publick Aſſembly, is more complex than that of the preceding. There he exhorts thoſe to whom he ſpeaks, to remember the Spiritual Diſcourſes which were read to them in the Morning, for finding out Remedies againſt Temptations. He recommends to them, to have no regard to the Condition of Men in this World, but to conſider all Chriſtians as Brethren, to treat the Poor and Rich alike, and the Small as well as the Great, becauſe nothing but Sin puts a Difference between Men. He diſſuades them afterwards from the three principal Vices, which are Anger, Envy, and Covetouſneſs. He repeats in this Homily many things which are found in thoſe whereof we have already ſpoken. He obſerves in it, That theſe kind of Aſſemblies meet every Year; that the People who cannot have Preachers every day are able to teach them theſe things, may learn them at leaſt once a Year by coming to theſe publick Feſtivals.

The 30th. Homily is an Exhortation to the Catechumens, who delay or neglect to receive Baptiſm. He ſays in his Exordium, That tho' one may lawfully receive Baptiſm at any time, yet the time of Eaſter is the moſt proper time for receiving it: That for this reaſon, the Church as a Good Mother, invites at this time all the Catechumens to receive Baptiſm. He exhorts them to receive it, Firſt, becauſe if the Jews ran with ſo much earneſtneſs to receive the Baptiſm of St. John, 'tis very fit that they ſhould ſhow yet more earneſtneſs to receive the Baptiſm of Jeſus Chriſt, which is far greater, more excellent, and more effectual than that of his Fore-runner. Secondly, Becauſe 'tis dangerous to delay, and oftentimes Men are ſurpriz'd by Death; and becauſe without Baptiſm, we can have no part in the Kingdom of Heaven, nor can we be deliver'd from the Tyranny of the Devil. " If one were to diſtribute, ſays he, Gold and Silver; if he were to give temporal Favours in any " place, all the World would run thither: Wherefore then do you not run to Baptiſm? If one promiſes to remit all the Debts of another, will not the Debtor run to receive his Promiſe? When " therefore the Buſineſs is to receive Remiſſion of your Sins, What reaſon have you to delay? If one

" be

" be guilty of many Faults, Grace is promiſed in greater Abundance to thoſe who have more Sins. If St. Baſil.
" you be afraid of ſinning, Why do you trouble your ſelf about the Time to come? Seeing you are " well conducted through the Time paſt, after having liv'd to the World, you muſt live to God.
" Baptiſm is the Sign by which a Chriſtian is known; it changes a Man entirely. He muſt not put off " Living well till Old Age, which is nothing but to mock God, by giving him the laſt Years of " Life, after he has beſtow'd the prime of his Years upon the Devil and the World, upon his Pleaſures
" and his Sins. Temperance in Old Age is no longer a Vertue, 'tis a Sign of Weakneſs which will " never be rewarded. Moreover, he is not certain that he ſhall be in a Condition to receive Baptiſm,
" he may die ſuddenly, he may fall into a Sickneſs, which ſhall take away his Speech and his Senſes:
" 'Tis very difficult when a Man is ſick to lift up his Head to Heaven, to raiſe himſelf, to kneel down,
" to pray, to hearken to what is taught him, to underſtand it, to make Profeſſion of it, to make an " Agreement with God, and to renounce, as he muſt, the Devil. There is nothing but the Love of " Licentiouſneſs that can diſſwade Men from receiving Baptiſm; becauſe the Laws of Chriſtianity pu-
" niſh Vice ſeverely, and exact of Men a moſt regular way of Living: Theſe require that we ſhould
" be upright in Heart, moderate in our Words, humble in our Thoughts and Actions, and pure in " our Intentions. They forbid all Paſſion and Revenge, they command us to love our Enemies, to " yield to Violence, to ſuffer Perſecution, to die to Sin, to mortifie our Body, and to be crucifi'd
" with Jeſus Chriſt. But, you will ſay, This is hard and difficult; 'Tis ſo, but what Happineſs is " there in this World, which is eaſie to obtain? Who hath ever won the Prize without Trouble?
" Can one hope for the Reward of a brave Man by ſpending his Life in Pleaſures? Can one obtain " the Victory without running? We muſt enter into the Kingdom of Heaven through much Trouble
" and Labour. Thoſe who do the Works of the Devil, have they leſs Trouble than we? Are they " more exempt from Labour, &c.

" But, 'tis difficulty, ſay you, to preſerve the Treaſure of Grace, and the Innocence of Baptiſm:
" Muſt we then refuſe a good thing for fear of being deprived of it? If you watch over your ſelves, if " you be conſtant in Praying, in Faſting, in Singing of Pſalms, and in the Practice of the other Ex-
" erciſes of a Chriſtian, you ſhall preſerve your Treaſure". Afterwards, he repreſents in a lively manner, the Remorſe which they ſhall have at the Day of Judgment, who ſhall ſee themſelves condemn'd for want of receiving Baptiſm. He repreſents the Deſpair which ſhall ſeiſe upon them; and concludes from all theſe Motives, that they ought quickly to purge away their Sins by Baptiſm. This Exhortation is admirably ſuited to the Chriſtians of our Age, who delay from day to day, to do penance for their Sins, and forſake their Diſorders.

The 24th. Homily to Young Men, about reading Gentile Books, is very curious. He does not abſolutely forbid the Reading and Study of profane Books; but he deſires, Firſt, That they would not dwell upon them, and that they would not look upon this Study as the principal Thing of their Life, but that they would be perſwaded, that the principal Knowledge is that of working out their own Salvation; and that this Knowledge is to be learnt in the Holy Scripture. 2. That they ſhould read profane Books with Diſcretion, and not give Attention to the Evil that is in them, but only to the Examples and Diſcourſes which may be uſeful, and which lead Men to Vertue. He relates a great Number of Examples and Inſtructions, which he drew from all ſorts of profane Authors. Theſe are all the Moral Homilies of St. Baſil; I have now only to ſpeak of his Panegyricks; for that of Julita is rather a Moral Diſcourſe than a Commendation of that Saint.

In the Exordium of the Panegyrick of St. Gordus, St. Baſil ſays, That Chriſtians celebrate the Feſtivals of Saints, and praiſe their Actions, to glorifie God in his Servants, to rejoice the Righteous, and to excite all the Faithful to their Imitation. He obſerves that the Saints have no need of our Praiſes; That 'tis ſufficient to relate their Lives, that ſo their Vertues may ſerve for a Pattern to others. He adds, That the Nobility of Extraction, the Family, the Education, the Maſters, are the Subject of Praiſe in profane Panegyricks; but Chriſtians have no other Subject of Praiſe, but the peculiar Vertues of thoſe whom they commend. After this, he gives an Account of the Life of St. Gordus. He ſays, That this Saint was of Cæſarea, and that he had the Command of a Hundred Men in the Emperour's Army; That in his time a furious Perſecution was rais'd againſt the Church, which St. Baſil deſcribes; That then this Saint of his own accord quitted his Office of Captain, and retir'd into a ſolitary Place; That after he had been there exercis'd, purified and prepared for the Combate, he came into the City one day, when all the People were aſſembled to ſee a publick Show which was preſented upon the Theatre, and declar'd who he was; That being led to the Tribunal of the Judge, he made Profeſſion of Chriſtianity; That nothing could ſhake his Conſtancy, but he went with Courage to the Place of Puniſhment; and that after he was fortified with the Sign of the Croſs, he boldly receiv'd the Stroak of Death. St. Baſil deſcribes this Hiſtory very eloquently, and introduces this Martyr, ſaying many fine things, and well-worthy of his Conſtancy. I wonder that he did not excuſe his Zeal for coming and preſenting himſelf to the Combate, which ſeem'd to be contrary to Chriſtian Prudence, to the Rules of the Church, and the Determinations of the Holy Fathers. 'Tis believ'd that this Saint ſuffer'd Martyrdom under Licinius.

The Hiſtory of the Forty Martyrs related in the following Homily, happen'd alſo under this Emperor. St. Baſil begins it with ſaying, That the Martyrs could not be prais'd too much for the Three Reaſons which he alledg'd in the preceding Panegyrick: Firſt, Becauſe we teſtifie by this Remembrance of thoſe who were the Servants of God, the Reſpect we owe to our common Maſter. Secondly, Becauſe we celebrate the Praiſes of the Martyrs, that we may make our own Wills ſuffer Martyrdom. And, laſtly, That Men may be induc'd to imitate their Vertues.

St. Baſil. Theſe 40 Martyrs were 40 Soldiers, who being at Sebaſtea during the Perſecution of Licinius, declar'd that they were Chriſtians. When the Governor of the City ſaw, that their Conſtancy could not be ſhaken, nor they perſuaded by fair means to change their Religion, he order'd them to be expos'd in the Night all naked to the rigor of the Air, at a time when a Pond near the City was quite frozen over: They reſolv'd all to endure this Torment with Conſtancy; but one of them being overcome by Pain, renounc'd the Faith of Jeſus Chriſt, but he loſt his Soul, and could not ſave his Life; for he was no ſooner put into warm Water to bring ſome Heat into him again, but he expir'd. However, God permitted that the number of the 40 Martyrs ſhould be compleat, for one of their Guards perceiving the Angels who diſtributed to each of them a Crown, made Profeſſion of being a Chriſtian, and put himſelf in their Number, and was baptiz'd in his own Blood, and ſav'd by his Faith. The next Morning they were all burnt, and their Aſhes thrown into the River. This is the Hiſtory of the 40 Martyrs, as it is related by St. Baſil. 'Tis commonly believ'd that they were expos'd all Night in the Pond; But this procceds from a miſ-underſtanding of St. Baſil's words, who ſays expreſly, That they were expos'd to the Air in the Middle of the City, at a time when the Pond hard by was all frozen over. 'Tis this which makes the Confuſion. He adds one notable Circumſtance, That the Mother of one of thoſe 40 Martyrs exhorted her Son to ſuffer boldly. Laſtly, he ſays, That thoſe 40 Martyrs protect the City of Cæſarea; That the Chriſtians can find aſſiſtance by their Prayers; That if we ſhould ardently deſire for us the Prayers of one Martyr only, we ought much more to beg the Interceſſion of 40; That whether we be in affliction, or in a joyful condition, 'tis good to have recourſe to them, either to be deliver'd from Evil, or to be continued in Proſperity; That they hear the Prayers of Mothers who pray for their Children, and of Women who pray for the Return or Health of their Husbands. Let us pray then together with theſe Martyrs, ſays he, concluding his Diſcourſe, Let us join our Prayers with theirs.

In the Panegyrick of the Martyr Mamas, which is the 24th. he praiſes this Holy Martyr who had been a Shepherd; ſeeing that he probably had but little to ſay of him, he enlarges in this Homily upon the Praiſes of Shepherds, and gives a Catalogue of the Great Men who had kept Flocks. Towards the end, he makes a Digreſſion againſt the Arians: 'Tis believ'd that this Mamas ſuffer'd under the Emperour Aurelian.

The Panegyrick upon the Martyr Barlaam, is a very ſhort Diſcourſe; wherein he praiſes this generous Confeſſor, who had endur'd with Conſtancy the burning of his Hand, rather than ſuffer the Incenſe to fall into a little Box, which was upon the profane Altar of an Idol.

The Aſcetical Treatiſes of St. Baſil are very uſeful, not only to the Monks, but alſo to all thoſe that make Profeſſion of Piety, and contain the Rules of the Morality of Jeſus Chriſt, which agree to all the World.

The three firſt Treatiſes which are at the beginning of the Aſceticks, are diſtinct Diſcourſes which have no Reference to them; though the Firſt is entituled, A Preface to the Aſceticks. 'Tis an Exhortation to thoſe who have embrac'd a Monaſtick Life, wherein he endeavours to perſuade them, that they are engag'd as Soldiers in a Spiritual Warfare, and that they ought to fulfill all the Obligations of it. The Second alſo, is, An Exhortation to a Monaſtick Life; wherein ye repreſents the Advantages of Celibacy, and of the Practices of Religion.

The Third, which is entituled, Of a Monaſtick Life; contains many Precepts which concern thoſe who retire from the World.

Theſe three Treatiſes are diſtinct Diſcourſes, but the two following of Faith and Judgment are the Preface, or the Firſt Book of the Aſceticks. We muſt begin with the Book of Judgment, and join to it that of Faith, which ends with a little Preface to the Aſceticks; and all theſe make only one Preface to the whole Work. He declares there, that having been educated in the Chriſtian Religion, and inſtructed from his Youth in the Doctrine of the Holy Books, when he came to the Years of diſcretion, he perceiv'd that there was much Union among the Profeſſors of Arts and Sciences; but that he found great Diviſions in the Church of Jeſus Chriſt, that he was ſometime in doubt which Party he ſhould chooſe; and that meditating upon this Subject, he came to know that the greateſt Evil was Schiſm and Diviſion, which proceeded from the Ignorance and Sin of thoſe who did not obey the Commands of God, and follow'd not his Law: That having afterwards reflected upon the terrible Judgments of God upon theſe Perſons, he believ'd himſelf oblig'd to adhere to the Faith of the Church, and to meditate on thoſe Precepts of the Holy Scripture which concern the Manners and Behaviour of Men: That being then perſuaded, that nothing but Faith working by Love, would avail any thing, he believ'd that 'twas neceſſary after the Explication of the Faith of the Church, and the Doctrine which is to be held concerning the Trinity, to write a Book of Manners.

This Concluſion of the Book of Judgment, ſhews that after it, follow'd the Treatiſe of Faith; wherein he ſays many fine things concerning the Vertue of Faith, and then expounds the Doctrine of the Church, and makes Profeſſion of the Divinity of the Son and the Holy Spirit, whom he affirms to be of the ſame Subſtance with the Father. He exhorts thoſe to whom he wrote, to keep to the Simplicity of this Faith, which is founded upon the Authority of the Holy Scripture, and he prays God that they may always continue inviolably fix'd in it. At laſt, having explain'd this Faith, he declares, That he has collected into one Body many Precepts taken out of the New Teſtament.

Theſe Precepts are compriz'd in 80 Rules, divided into ſeveral Chapters. To theſe muſt be joyn'd the 84 Great Rules, and the 313 Small ones, which are Anſwers to ſeveral Moral Queſtions, that comprehend all that is moſt excellent in Chriſtian Morality. Theſe are they which make up the Body of St. Baſil's Ethicks or Aſceticks, divided in Two Books, as we have obſerv'd. They may be conſulted concerning all the Offices and Actions of a Chriſtian Life. They may be uſeful to all States and Conditions, and one may ſay that St. Baſil has there collected, and methodically digeſted all the Practical Part of the Goſpel. Upon which Account Photius had Reaſon to ſay, That whoſoever ſhall follow theſe Precepts, ſhall undoubtedly be ſav'd. St. Baſil.

concerning

The Book of the Inſtructions of Monks, and of Monaſtical Conſtitutions, are two Books diſtinct from the Aſceticks, which contain many Precepts and Rules for the Monks, that are not ſo general, nor ſo uſeful to all the World, as the Treatiſe of Morality.

To know the Genius and Doctrine of St. Baſil, we can addreſs our ſelves to none better than to his faithful Friend, Gregory Nazianzen. See then how he ſpeaks of him. He compares his Eloquence to a Trumpet ſounding in the Air, to a Divine Word which ſhall be ſpread over the whole Earth, to a wonderful Whirl-wind raiſed after a very ſurprizing Manner. He ſays, That he has div'd into the moſt hidden Secrets of the Holy Scripture, which he has made uſe of to inſtruct all Men, and to make them loſe the Reliſh of things preſent, and fall in Love only with things to come. That his Writings are the Object of the Admiration of all Perſons, and the Pleaſure and Study of all Men of Worth. The Authors that wrote after him, ſays he, ſay nothing but what they have drawn out of his Works: The Ancients are neglected, and nothing is minded but what he has ſaid anew. In a word, He alone is ſufficient to make an able Man.

"When I read his Treatiſe of the Creation, adds St. Gregory, methinks I am preſent with the "Creator; when I light upon the Books which he wrote againſt Hereticks, methinks I ſee the Fire "of Sodom, which reduc'd thoſe Criminal Tongues to Aſhes; when I peruſe what he has written of the "Holy Spirit, I acknowledge the God whom I poſſeſs, and I make no Scruple to publiſh boldly the "Truth; when I read the Explications of Scripture which he has made for the Illiterate, I under-"ſtand the deep Abyſſes of Myſteries; when I hear his Panegyricks of the Martyrs, I deſpiſe my own "Body. I fanſie my ſelf preſent with thoſe whom he praiſes, and I feel my ſelf excited to the "Combat; when I ſet my ſelf to read the Diſcourſes which he has written concerning Morals, and "the manner of living Well, my Heart and my Soul are purified that they may become the Temple "of the Holy Spirit; they reform me, they inſtruct me, they change me, and lead me unto Vertue." We are not here to think, That St. Gregory Nazianzen in ſaying all this, heightned the Matter as an Orator, or flattered him as a Friend; what he ſays is very true; and there is not any Author whoſe Writings make a greater Impreſſion than thoſe of St. Baſil: He deſcribes things ſo lively, he explains his Reaſons with ſo much force, he urges them ſo vigorouſly, he makes ſuch loathſome Portraictures of Vice, ſuch perſuaſive Exhortations to Vertue, he gives ſo large and ſo profitable Inſtructions, that 'tis impoſſible to read his Writings, but one muſt feel himſelf inſtructed and convinced of the Truth, and he cannot but conceive a Love for Vertue and a Hatred of Vice. His Diſcourſes are not void of Thoughts, and full of Words, as for the moſt Part thoſe of Orators are; but Eloquence is there joyn'd with Doctrine, they inſtruct, they divert, and they move at once. His Stile is pure and ſignificant, his Expreſſions are lofty, his way of Writing elegant, clean and perſuaſive; his Diſcourſes appear always natural, flowing gently, and without Affectation: He perſuades pleaſantly, he explains things with great Clearneſs, he knows how to give them ſo probable a turn, that he may be taken for a Pattern; and he comes near Demoſthenes, and the ableſt Orators of Antiquity, in the Judgment of the Learned Photius; and even in the Judgment of Eraſmus, he excels the Ancient Greek Orators, and is free from their Faults. He was fit for all kinds of Writings. His Commentaries upon Scripture are moſt inſtructive and moſt natural: He excels in his Panegyricks. The Force and Subtilty of his Reaſoning appear in his Treatiſes of Controverſie; His Diſcourſes of Morality are inſtructive and moving. In ſhort, tho' his Aſceticks have not the ſame Loftineſs as his other Works, yet there one may find the ſame Purity of Phraſe, and the ſame Clearneſs; but his Method renders them ſometimes a little obſcure. In word, Whatever Subject he treats of, he does it always very Learnedly. He had all the Properties of a Divine, underſtanding perfectly the Holy Scripture, the Tradition of the Fathers, and the Canons of the Church: He was a very able Rhetorician, a very profound Philoſopher, and a very ſubtil Logician. He underſtood alſo the Mathematicks, and his own continual Sickneſs made him a Phyſician: He underſtood Philological Learning to Perfection, and made uſe of it to very good Purpoſe. He knew all that was moſt curious in the Poets, the Hiſtorians, and profane Orators, as may appear from many places of his Writings, and chiefly from his little Tract of Reading profane Authors. In a word, that which is indeed admirable is, that he join'd with this Learning, a profound Piety, and a ſingular Prudence. He was ſweet and affable ro all the World, charitable towards the Poor, and compaſſionate to others in Miſery. He was accus'd of being Proud, but St. Gregory Nazianzen, who ſuſpected him of this Vice, vindicates him from it in his Panegyrick. He was of a very infirm Health, and ſubject to many Diſeaſes; he ſpeaks of them in the moſt part of his Letters, and alſo in ſome of his Homilies. St. Gregory Nazianzen informs us, that he was pale, that he wore always a great Beard, that he was reſerv'd in his Speech, often thoughtful and penſive, had a particular way in his Apparel, in his Bed and his Meat, which ſome would imitate after his Death.

The Doctrine of St. Baſil is very Pure and Orthodox. He has explain'd the Myſtery of the Trinity, againſt the Hereticks, clearly and beyond Conteſt; tho' at the beginning he was reſerv'd in his Expreſſions about the Divinity of the Holy Spirit, yet he always own'd it, and never ſpoke contrary to what he thought. He never us'd any other Precaution, but to be ſilent upon that Point, when he thought it not neceſſary to ſpeak of it, or that it would be to no purpoſe. He was one of thoſe who troubled himſelf moſt to diſtinguiſh the Three Hypoſtaſes in God; that's to ſay, to prove, that Hypoſtaſis and Perſon ſignifie the ſame thing. As to the Myſtery of the Incarnation, he acknowledg'd in St. Baſil. Jeſus Chriſt two Natures without Confuſion, and yet united in one and the ſame Perſon. He rejected the Error of the Apollinarians and Theopaſſians, and maintain'd with the Church, that the Properties of the humane Nature do by no means agree to the Divinity. He affirm'd ſeveral times, That the Cauſe and Reaſon why the Son of God was made Man, was the Salvation and Redemption of Mankind, polluted by the Sin of Adam. He knew the Greatneſs of that Fall, and the miſerable Effects which it produc'd, as Concupiſcence, Sickneſs, Death, &c. He eſtabliſh'd the Neceſſity of the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt, without which it is impoſſible to do Good. He is the only Perſon of the Greek Fathers who ſpoke moſt clearly of it, and attributed leaſt to Free-will, tho' he own'd it. He admitted the Efficacy and Neceſſity of Baptiſm: Yet he believ'd that this Sacrament might be ſupplied by Faith and Charity, and by the Baptiſm of Blood, and that it ſignified nothing, at leaſt to thoſe that had not Faith, and were not well diſpos'd to receive it: He mentions the Unction that accompany'd it, and approves the Ceremonies that were join'd with it: He call'd the Euchariſt the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt: Tho' he was of Opinion, that we ſhould communicate often, yet he requires Holy Diſpoſitions in thoſe who receive this Myſtery. He ſpeaks of the Ceremonies and Prayers that were made uſe of for the Offering, and of the Manner in which it was diſtributed to the Faithful: He obſerves, That they carri'd it and kept it in their Houſes, and that they believ'd it was always conſecrated. He commends Faſting, and ſpeaks of Lent as a Faſt to which we are oblig'd. He has alſo obſerv'd, That it was attended with Abſtinence from Meat. He ſpeaks of the Uſage of Invocating Saints and Martyrs. He is perſwaded that they pray for us, and that their Interceſſion is very profitable. He prefers Celibacy to Marriage. He approves of Vows and a Monaſtick State. He acknowledges the Authority of Traditions, as well as that of Scripture. However, he has ſome particular Opinions, as when he maintains in the Firſt Homily of the Creation, That the Angels were created long before the World; and when he affirms in another place, That all Men ſhall be purified at the Day of Judgment by Fire. But there are very few of this ſort of ſlight Errors in this Author. There were alſo ſome Expreſſions objected to him which appear'd Hyperbolical or leſs Exact; but 'tis eaſie to give them a good Sence. I ſhall not ſtay to make a larger Enumeration of his Opinions, which I have explain'd at length in the Extracts out of his Works. I conclude therefore with giving a Catalogue of the Tranſlations and Editions of the Works of this Father.

Jeſus

The firſt Edition of the Works of St. Baſil in Greek is, that of Frobenius, printed at Baſil in the Year 1532. It contains the Homilies upon the Creation, and the Pſalms, 29 different Homilies, the Book of the Holy Spirit, and ſome Letters. After it followed the Edition at Venice, made by Sabius, in the Year 1537. in which are added the Three firſt Books againſt Eunomius.

At laſt, in the Year 1551, almoſt all the Works of St. Baſil were printed in Greek at Paris, by the Care of Janus Cornarius; who alſo printed them in Latin by Frobenius, in the Year 1549.

Wolfgangus Muſculus made a New Edition at Baſle, in 1565, by Oporinus, and added the Commentaries upon Iſaiah, and 20 Letters. Gothofredus Tilmannus, a Carthuſian of Paris, was the firſt Roman Catholick that took pains to make a Latin Edition of St. Baſil's Works. He revis'd and corrected the Verſions, and tranſlated ſome Books over again, and made a larger Latin Edition of St. Baſil than all the foregoing, which was printed at Paris, in 1566, and re-printed at Antwerp, in 1578, and at Paris by Sonnius, in 1603. This is the largeſt of all the Latin Editions of this Father's Writings.

The Firſt Edition in Greek and Latin was in the Year 1618. printed at Paris in three Volumes: In it the Greek Text was corrected by many Manuſcripts from England, and by ſome out of the King of France's Library. At the End of the Third Volume there are the Notes of Fronto Ducæus, and of Morellus, with the various Readings, collected by Schottus. The laſt Edition of 1638, is not ſo fine and correct as the former: But it contains more by 200 Letters, than had ever been printed before.

Beſides theſe Editions of the moſt part or all St. Baſil's Works, there are alſo ſome particular Treatiſes printed a-part, ſome in Greek and ſome in Latin, and their Editions are not to be neglected, becauſe commonly the great Editions are made from them; but 'tis difficult to gather them all together. Theſe are all that I could find. The Homilies of the Creation of Euſtathius's Verſion, printed at Paris by Badius, corrected by Faber in 1520. Some Homilies tranſlated by Volateranus, printed at Cologne in 1531. The Aſcetick tranſlated by Fumanus, were printed by Griphius in 1540. The Rules in 1575 at Cologne, and all the Aſcericks in 1560. The Book of the Holy Spirit tranſlated by Eraſmus, at Baſle in 1532. The Homilies upon the Creation at Leipſick, in 1566. The Books againſt Eunomius of Beza's Verſion, in 1520. The Diſcourſe of Faſting, at Paris in 1613, at Rome in 1532, by Galeſinius. The Homily upon the Nativity, and of Anger, in Greek, at Paris, in 1587. That of Drunkenneſs, at Hanover, in 1594. The Homily upon the 40 Martyrs, Greek and Latin, by Stenius, at Heidelberg, in 1604, and with the Notes of Voſſius, at Mentz, in 1614. The Letter of Communion is in the ſame Volume. The firſt Letter to St. Gregory, at Paris, in 1562, of Budæus's Verſion. Some Greek Letters at Venice, in 1499. Some others, at Paris and Haguenaw, in 1528. Some ſelect Letters, by Stehius, at Paris, in 1531. A Letter to a Virgin upon her Fall, by Cartenus, at Paris, in 1574. The Canonical Epiſtles with Balſamon, in 1561. The Letters of Julian, at Amſterdam, in 1567. The Letter or the Treatiſe of Reading profane Authors, at Strasburg, in 1507; at Baſil, in 1532; at Paris, in 1533, and 1621; at Rome, in 1594. The Treatiſe of a ſolitary Life, at Paris, in 1631. The Liturgy in Latin, tranſlated by Hervetus, at Venice, in 1548, in Octavo: in Greek in the ſame City, in 1601, and 1620; at Antwerp and Paris, in 1560; that of Maſius by Plantin, in 1569; that of Victorius Scialagh the Maronite, at Ausburg, in 1604; the Grammar, at Florence, in 1513; at Baſle, 1562, and 1585, in Octavo. The Diſcourſes of St. Baſil, collected by

by Simeon Logotheta, or Metaphraſtes, by Morellus, in 1556, 1558, and at Franckfort, in 1598. The Third Homily of Faſting, and the Homily upon the 8th Chapter of the Proverbs, publiſh'd by Cotelerius in his Firſt Volume of the Greek Monuments, and ſome Letters in the Third, [Dr. Hammond publiſhed a Prayer made by St. Baſil, for Forgiveneſs from God to thoſe who have done us wrong, in Greek, from a Manuſcript in the Bodleyan Library, in his Practical Catechiſm.] St. Baſil.

I have nothing further to do, but to ſpeak a word or two of the Tranſlators of the Works of St. Baſil. Ruffinus has made in Latin an Abridgment of his Aſcetical Rules. Euſtathius and Dionyſius Exiguus tranſlated his Homilies upon the Creation. After them Argyropilus tranſlated it a-new, and his Tranſlation review'd by Tilmannus, is that which is printed in the Greek and Latin Edition. The Homilies of Faſting, and thoſe upon Iſaiah, and the Books of the Holy Spirit, are of Eraſmus's Verſion. The Tranſlation of the Firſt Homily againſt Covetouſneſs is by Volateranus. The Book of Virginity was tranſlated by Ambroſius Camaldulenſis.

Beza and Georgius Trapezuntius tranſlated the Books againſt Eunomius; the Aſceticks are tranſlated by Fumancellus; the Letters to Amphilochius by Hervetus; the Letter to Chilo by Tilmannus. The laſt Letters were tranſlated by Hoëſchelius. Father Combefis took care to print in 1674, the Tranſlation of St. Baſil's Sermons; and it had been very happy if he could have ſpoken Latin as well as he underſtood Greek. The ſame Father before his Death made a Review of the Greek Text of all the Works of St. Baſil, and their Verſions, which was printed at Paris in 1679. This Work may be of great uſe for making a new Edition of St. Baſil: It would be very advantageous to the Church, and the Commonwealth of Learning, that any one ſhould undertake it. In general, one may ſay, That all the Tranſlations which we have mention'd are full of Faults, ſome more, ſome leſs: Some of them muſt be corrected exactly, and others done a-new; the Greek Text ſhould be review'd and corrected by many Manuſcripts, and the Books ought to be rang'd almoſt in the ſame Order that we have us'd in our Extracts, and ſome Notes added to explain the Text, and ſome Obſervations upon the Hiſtory and Diſcipline: 'Tis a Work that I would willingly undertake, if God ſhould give me Strength; if I could think that it would be well receiv'd by the Publick, and that ſome Printer would be willing to be at the Expence of it. We ſee every Day multitudes of little French Books appear in Publick, and ſcarce any Ancient Books printed, either in Greek or Latin. The Bookſellers indeed ſay, 'Tis not their Fault, but the Fault of the Publick, becauſe the former ſell well, and go off, and they are enrich'd by them; whereas the latter remain in their Shops, and ſo they are undone; the Fault therefore is to be attributed to the Giddineſs of Men in this Age, who have loſt all reliſh of Antiquity, and are pleas'd with nothing but Novelty: True and ſolid Learning is not in Faſhion in this Age, but Men ſatisfie themſelves with a ſuperficial Knowledge of things: The Study of any thing that is ſolid is laid aſide; and Antiquity is learn'd from the Moderns, and 'tis rare for any one to go up to the Fountain-head. This is a moſt deplorable unhappineſs to Learning in general, and 'tis to be fear'd that this ſuperficial Study of things, will throw us into a worſe State, than the Ignorance and Barbariſm of the preceding Ages. But ſince French Books ſell well, the greateſt part of the Letters and Moral Homilies of St. Baſil, ought at leaſt to be turn'd into French, which would be no leſs uſeful, and more pleaſant than the Aſcetical Books which have been tranſlated by Monſieur Hermant, who has alſo written in French the Life of this Saint after a moſt Exact and Learned manner.

St. GREGORY NAZIANZEN.

ST. GREGORY of Nazianzum, was born in this City, in the Year 318. [He was born at Arianzum, a ſmall Village near Nazianzum, where his Father had an Eſtate.] His Father, call'd Gregory, had been engag'd amongſt ſome Hereticks, who were call'd Hypſiſtarians, becauſe they profeſs'd to worſhip only the moſt High God, and yet they obſerv'd ſome Ceremonies of Pagans and Jews. His Wife Nonna converted him, and cauſed him to be baptiz'd by Leontius Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia, about the time that the Council of Nice was aſſembled. Soon after he was choſen to be Biſhop of Nazianzum, and govern'd that Church for the ſpace of 45 Years. His Son Gregory applied himſelf to the Study of humane Learning; he begun his Studies in Paleſtine, and from thence went to Alexandria, where he ſtudied Rhetorick, and at laſt to perfect himſelf, he went to Athens about the End of the Year 344. After he had ſtay'd there ſome time with St. Baſil, he departed from thence after him to return into his own Country; where he was baptiz'd, and took Care of his Father's Affairs. After this he retir'd with his Friend St. Baſil into ſome ſolitary Places in Pontus; but he was oblig'd to leave this Retirement to return home to his Father's Aſſiſtance. The old Man being ſurpriz'd had ſign'd the Conſtantinopolitan Creed; whereupon the Monks and other Catholicks of his Biſhoprick ſeparated from his Communion, and the Diviſion had continued, if St. Gregory, the Son, had not come to Nazianzum, and reſtor'd Peace there. In this Journey 'twas, that he was ordain'd Prieſt by his Father; and after he had reconcil'd their Minds, he return'd again to his Retirement, out of which, nevertheleſs, he ſometimes came to preach unto the People. St. Gregory Nazianz.

St. Baſil being Biſhop of Cæſarea, ordain'd him, as we have already ſaid, Biſhop of a little City call'd Saſima, but he was quickly diſguſted with ſo tedious a Habitation, and departed from it in great Anger againſt his Friend. [Dr. Cave ſays that he never went to ſee it.] He return'd to Nazianzum, where he was oblig'd to take Care of that Church in Conjunction with his Father, and to be as it were his Coadjutor; which he did upon Condition, that he ſhould not be his Succeſſor: And therefore his Father being dead, he withdrew from Nazianzum, leſt he ſhould be detain'd there by Force.

He

St. Gregory Nazianz.

He went to Seleucia, and from thence to Conſtantinople; where he arriv'd about the Year 376, and found the City full of Arians, who ſtirr'd up the whole City into an Uproar againſt him. He enter'd into the Church of Anaſtaſia, which was the only Church then remaining to the Orthodox; he aſſum'd the Government, and took Care to inſtruct them, and to preſerve this little Flock. Being very Eloquent, he converted in a little time a great number of Arians, and encreas'd the Number of Catholicks. Peter, Biſhop of Alexandria, underſtanding this good Succeſs of his Labours, wrote to him very honourable and candid Letters, and confirm'd him in the Biſhoprick of Conſtantinople. While things were in this Condition, one Maximus, a Cynick Philoſopher, attempted to get himſelf made Biſhop of Conſtantinople; and finding a Prieſt that join'd with him, he gain'd Peter of Alexandria, who Ordain'd him Biſhop of Conſtantinople. Thither he came afterwards in the Year 379, with ſome Mariners, accompanied by ſome Biſhops of Egypt, and enter'd by force into the Church. The Clergy and People having a great Affection for St. Gregory Nazianzen, run into the Church, and drove Maximus out of it, who went to wait upon the Emperour Theodoſius; but not being receiv'd favourably by him, he was forc'd to return to Alexandria, where he did all that lay in his Power to uſurp the See of that City. But having no better Succeſs there than at Conſtantinople, he retired into the Weſt, and preſented himſelf before the Council of Aquileia, where he ſhew'd the Communicatory Letters which he had from Peter of Alexandria; and the Weſt being perfectly govern'd in all Matters relating to the Eaſt by the Church of Alexandria, he was kindly receiv'd there, and the Council wrote in his Favour to the Emperour.

In the mean time St. Gregory, who lov'd Retirement, bid adieu to his People, recommending to them, that they ſhould keep the Doctrine of the Trinity, and remember him; but his People being reſolv'd not to ſuffer his Departure, he was forc'd to promiſe them, that he would continue at Conſtantinople, till the coming of the Biſhops, who were quickly to aſſemble there. The Emperour Theodoſius having made his publick Entry into Conſtantinople, in the Month of November 380, drove away from the Churches, Demophilus the Arian Biſhop, and order'd St. Gregory to enter into the great Church. The People urg'd him to take his place in the Epiſcopal Throne, but he would not do it; and to quiet the Tumult, and the Acclamations of thoſe that were preſent, he told them wiſely, that they muſt in the firſt place give thanks to God for the great Happineſs that had befallen the Church. After this he continued in the Government of the Church of Conſtantinople, and was confirm'd in this See by the Authority of the Firſt Council of Conſtantinople, whereof Meletius was Preſident. But after his Death, the Eaſtern Biſhops, who had hitherto maintain'd St. Gregory, begun to murmur againſt his Ordination, being diſſatisfied with his oppoſing the Ordination of Flavianus in the room of Meletius. When he heard them ſpeak of it, he propos'd to reſign, which Propoſal being receiv'd with greater Eaſineſs than he expected, he was forc'd entirely to reſign the Biſhoprick of Conſtantinople. When the Egyptians arriv'd he did it with a great deal of Generoſity, tho' he was extremely troubled to quit ſo dear a Church; for he never ſpoke of it afterwards but with Grief, and teſtified a kind of Indignation againſt thoſe Biſhops who forc'd him away from this See. He withdrew immediately to Nazianzum, where he died about the Year 389.

The principal Writings of this Father are his Diſcourſes or Sermons, which are compos'd with great Art and Eloquence. We have 55 of them extant.

The 1ſt. is an Apologetical Diſcourſe, wherein he gives an Account of his retiring into Pontus immediately after he was ordain'd Prieſt, and of his return to Nazianzum. He fled for fear of being made Biſhop, and therefore in this Diſcourſe he blames thoſe who would all on a ſudden mount up into the Epiſcopal Throne, and carry on Intrigues to obtain that Dignity. I am aſham'd, ſays he, of thoſe who being no more perfect than others, (nay, I pray God they be not worſe) dare with ſacrilegious Hands, and a profane Spirit approach the Holy Myſteries, and who endeavour to obtain the Sovereign Dignity of Prieſthood, when they are not in a Condition even to come near to Holy Things. They puſh forward and involve themſelves in much Trouble, that they may have acceſs to the Holy Table, not conſidering it is an Employment that engages them to Vertue, but as a means to live at their own Eaſe: In ſo much that they never think of Diſcharging their Office after an unblameable manner, but of exerciſing ſuch a Dominion as ſhall be ſubject to no body. Never did this Ambition reign more in the Church of Jeſus Chriſt than it does at preſent, I know it will be in vain for us to endeavour to put a ſtop to it, but I count it a Duty of Piety to teſtifie our Deteſtation and Shame of it. Afterwards he deſcribes very eloquently, the Difficulties and Troubles of the Epiſcopal Office. He ſays, That this Office is more troubleſome and painful than can be imagin'd; That 'tis a moſt difficult thing to govern Souls; That 'tis the greateſt and rareſt thing in the World, to know how to command well; That nothing is more dangerous than an Obligation to anſwer for others; That a Biſhop ought not only to be free from Faults, but alſo to be very Vertuous; That he ought to be ſtill perfecting himſelf from day to day, and that Vertue ſhould be natural to him, for if it be forced it will not continue long; That the Science of governing Men without Violence and Fear is the Science of Sciences, ars artium, ſcientia ſcientiarum; That 'tis infinitely more difficult to cure Souls than to heal the Diſeaſes of the Body, becauſe the Cure of the Soul depends entirely upon the Will of the Sick; That the Phyſician of the Body has leave to uſe Iron and Fire, and the moſt violent Medicines, for recovering the Health of the Body; but the Love which Sinners have for themſelves will not allow theſe ſort of Remedies to be us'd, when their Souls are under Cure; That they ſhun them; That they are reſolv'd to continue in their Sins, and are ingenious to hinder their Recovery; That they hide their Sins to excuſe them, or elſe impudently defend them; That the Phyſicians of the Body know by ſenſible and external Signs, the Diſeaſes which they undertake to cure; but the Phyſicians of Souls have inviſible and hidden Maladies to heal;

That

That the End of the Phyſician for the Body is to reſtore Health, which puts Men in a Condition to enjoy the Good Things and the Pleaſures of this World; but on the contrary the Deſign of the Spiritual Phyſician is to withdraw Men's Affections from this World, and fix them upon God; That for this End God was made Man, and ſuffered ſo much upon Earth. From all this he concludes, That the Profeſſion of a Spiritual Phyſician is more difficult than the Practice of an ordinary Phyſician. He adds alſo to prove the ſame thing, the great Diverſity of Spiritual Diſeaſes, and the different Diſpoſitions of thoſe who are to be cur'd, who require an infinite number of different Remedies. "Some, ſays he, will be reform'd by Diſcourſe, and others by Example; Some muſt be puſh'd "forward and others kept back; Praiſes are uſeful to ſome, but others have need of Rebukes; Some "muſt be Exhorted, and others muſt be Chid; Some muſt be Reproved in Secret, and others in Pub- "lick; Some muſt be ſeverely Puniſh'd for ſmall Faults, and others muſt be gently Handled; Some "muſt be Frighted with the fear of the Judgment of the Great Day, and others muſt be Allur'd with "hopes of Mercy: In a word, Great Moderation muſt always be obſerved, and all Exceſs avoided. "Laſtly, He repreſents the Difficulties of diſcharging the Duty of Preaching as we ought, which he "calls the Firſt and Principal Employment of the Miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt." He ſays, That all the World undertakes to Preach, and yet 'tis a folly to believe that all thoſe who undertake it are capable of it; That this Sacred Miniſtry requires a ſublime Soul, a perfect Knowledge of the Doctrines of the Church, and a very good diſcerning Faculty. He declaims againſt thoſe who thruſt themſelves into this Miniſtry, before they have meditated long upon the Holy Scripture and ſtudied their Religion. He propoſes as a Pattern to Preachers, the great Apoſtle St. Paul; he collects together a great many Paſſages of Holy Scripture againſt Falſe Prophets, againſt Prieſts that are unworthy of their Function, and againſt thoſe that abuſe the Word of God: he does not forget the Charge which Jeſus Chriſt draws up againſt the Phariſees; That they were like painted Sepulchers which appear'd outwardly very Fair, but inwardly were full of Filthineſs; and then he makes this Important Reflection. "This, ſays he, is what I think upon Day and Night: Theſe are the Thoughts which macerate me, "which conſume and confound me. I am ſo far from dreaming of Governing others, that I think "of nothing but appeaſing the Wrath of God, and purifying my ſelf from my own Faults. One "ſhould be pure himſelf before he undertakes to purify others; he ſhould be fill'd with Wiſdom, be- "fore he attempts to Inſtruct others; he muſt have Light that he may be able to Communicate of it "to others; he muſt not be far from God, who would draw others to him; he muſt be Holy, that "he may Sanctify others; he muſt be Prudent that he may give them Advice. But when ſhall "we be ſo, will the People ſay that are always ready to undertake every thing, who build thoſe "Buildings ſlightly which preſently fall down again? When will you place your Lamp upon a Can- "dleſtick? When will you improve your Talent? This is what they ſay who have more Friendſhip "for me than Piety. You ask me when I ſhall be in a Condition to Guide others: I tell you, That "the oldeſt Age is not too long a Term to prepare ones ſelf for ſo Excellent and ſo Difficult an Em- "ployment? That 'tis better to be ſlow than forward in this Caſe; That tho' I have been Conſe- "crated to God from my Infancy, tho' I have Meditated from my Youth upon the Law of God, "tho' I have been Exercis'd in the Practice of Vertue; yet I acknowledge my ſelf altogether unca- "pable of Governing a Church, chiefly at a time when the beſt thing a Man can do is to ſhun it, "that he may eſcape the Tempeſt, wherein all the Members of the Church are divided, Charity "ſeems to be wholly extinguiſh'd, Biſhops have but the empty Names of Biſhops, all the World "publickly ſlights them, and ſome defame them; there is no Fear of God remaining, but Impu- "dence reigns every where, and 'tis counted a piece of Piety to treat others as Impious. Our "Judges are Enemies to God, Holy Things are trampled under Foot, and the Myſteries are laid "open to the Prophane; Strangers and Infidels, who were not permitted to enter into our Churches, "do now come even into the Sanctuary. The Gate is opened to Detraction and Calumny, and he "that Rails beſt at his Neighbour, paſſes for the honeſteſt Man. The Faults of others are obſerv'd, "not to bewail them, or bring a Remedy to them; but, on the contrary, to make ſuch bloody Re- "proaches as increaſe the Wickedneſs of thoſe who have committed them. Men are not judg'd Good or "Evil by their Vertues or Vices, but by the Friends they have on their ſide. The ſame thing is "prais'd to Day and blam'd to Morrow; ſome admire what others deteſt, and all their Sins are eaſily "pardon'd who are willing to embrace Impiety. This is the height of Iniquity to which we are "arriv'd: But 'tis not the People only who are thus diſorderly, but the Curſe of the Prophet ſeems "to be fulfil'd, The Prieſt is become like the People." After this he deplores the Miſery of the Catholicks, who were divided, and contended about uſeleſs and trivial Queſtions. He obſerves, That one is oblig'd, when the Faith is the Matter under debate, both to ſeparate from thoſe who teach Impiety, and to ſuffer any thing rather than approve it; but that it is a folly to break the Peace, and ſtir up troubles about Queſtions which are not of Faith. At laſt he returns to his Subject, and having repreſented the Dangers which one runs in the Prieſtly Office, the Difficulty there is of diſcharging it well, and the terrible Judgments of God upon thoſe that perform it amiſs; he concludes, That he had reaſon to preferr a Solitary Life, Calm and Free from Cares, to a Life full of Troubles and Dangers. But after he has juſtified his Retiring, he gives the Reaſons why he returned into his own Country. The Firſt is the Affection and Friendſhip which he had for his Country-men. The Second is the Aſſiſting of his Father and Mother. The Third which he explains by the Compariſon of Jonas, is his Fear leſt he ſhould reſiſt the Will of God, who ſeem'd to call him to the Prieſtly Function. Here he gives two admirable Rules about the Conduct which Men ought to obſerve, either for avoiding or accepting of Sacred Orders. He ſays, We muſt be afraid of engaging our ſelves raſhly; but then we muſt alſo be afraid of refuſing the Call of God, and that we may keep the middle between

St. Gregory Nazianz.

St. Gregory Nazianz. theſe two Extremes, we muſt be of ſuch a diſpoſition, that we neither ſeek after Eccleſiaſtical Dignities, nor refuſe them when they are offer'd, if we know our ſelves capable. That 'tis Raſhneſs to ſeek after them, and Diſobedience to refuſe them; but we muſt neither Condemn thoſe who ſhun them for fear, not thoſe who accept them from a Principle of Obedience; That the Dignity of the Prieſthood aſtoniſhes ſome, and others truſt to the Aſſiſtance of him who calls them; That Abraham obeyed readily; That Moſes refuſed to obey; That Iſaiah immediately obeyed the Command of God, who ordered him to Propheſie, but Jeremiah excuſed himſelf from doing it by Reaſon of his Youth. " Theſe reaſons, adds he, charm me, they bend my Soul, they ſoften my Heart, I can no " longer reſiſt, but I humble my ſelf under the Almighty Hand of God, and accuſe my ſelf of Sloth " and Negligence: If there was any Fault in it I beg Pardon; I have been Silent, but I ſhall not al- " ways hold my Peace; I have now retired to conſider my ſelf, and to indulge a little to my Grief; " but I will now praiſe God in the Aſſemblies of his People; I will be yours, my Brethren; I will be " yours, O Holy Flock; I ſubmit to you, my Father, I offer you the ſacrifice of Obedience; but give " me your Bleſſing, guide me by your Prayers, lead me the way by your Judgment: Let us beg of God " all the Graces Neceſſary to Conduct the Flock together in the way of Eternal Salvation." He wrote this Diſcourſe at his leiſure time, about the Year 362.

The 2d. Diſcourſe of St. Gregory Nazianzen, is upon the Nazianzenes neglecting to come to hear him Preach, when upon their Invitation he had left his Solitude to live among them; he complains of their Negligence, and deſires them to behave themſelves anſwerably to the Affection that he had for them. St. Gregory preach'd this Sermon immediately after he was Ordain'd Prieſt in the Year 362.

The 3. Diſcourſe is againſt the Emperour Julian, where he employs all the Torrents of his Eloquence. He obſerves, That this Emperour did in vain endeavour to hinder the Chriſtians from Studying good Learning, and applying themſelves to the Liberal Sciences, ſince this could not hinder them from Confeſſing the Name of God. He bewails the Unhappineſs of thoſe who were overcome by the Perſecution of this Emperour; he praiſes the Providence of God who had deſtroy'd him. He relates that Gallus and Julian having undertaken each of them to build a Church in honour of the Martyrs, this laſt could not compaſs his Deſign, and that his Structure fell down while it was a-building, which St. Gregory does not fail to attribute to the Vengeance of God, who would not ſuffer the Martyrs to be honoured by him who was to make ſo many himſelf. He ſays, That while Julian follow'd the Study of Learning he diſcover'd what he had in his Mind; That he diſputed eagerly for the Pagan Opinions; That he loved every thing which alienated Men from the Chriſtian Religion, and that he did not conceal his opinions from thoſe that were inclined to the ſame Impiety with himſelf. That after his Brother Gallus was Created Cæſar, all Aſia was a School of Impiety to him; That he had the moſt pernicious and dangerous Maſters, that he could find out, and that he buſied himſelf in Magick.

St. Gregory declaims againſt Conſtantius, and accuſes him in a Rhetorical way for leaving the Empire to Julian. But he excuſes him afterwards, to whom he gives exceſſive Praiſes, by ſaying, That he was Surpriz'd; That he gave way too much to his own Goodneſs and Natural Eaſineſs; and that in ſhort, It was not in his Power to hinder Julian from being Emperour, who ſeized the Government againſt his Will; That he revolted from him, and that Conſtantius was troubled at his Death; That he had even raiſed Julian to the Dignity of Cæſar. He ſays, That after Julian had uſurp'd the Empire, he perfectly declar'd againſt Chriſtianity; That he effac'd his Baptiſm, by impure Blood, and profan'd his Hands by Sacrifices, as if it were to waſh and purify them from the unbloody Sacrifice of Chriſtians, by which they partake of the Body, the Divinity and Sufferings of Jeſus Chriſt. He relates, That one Day this impious Man while he was Sacrificing, ſaw a Croſs encircling the Entrails of the Sacrifices; That at another time, having entred into a ſubterraneous Place to Conſult with the Devil, being frighted with the Noiſe which he heard in the Cave, and the Spectres which he ſaw, he made the Sign of the Croſs without thinking of it; That at this Wonder-working Sign, all the Devils fled and the Noiſe ceas'd. Then St. Gregory deſcribes the Arts which Julian uſed againſt the Chriſtians. He ſays, That Julian being perſwaded that open Perſecutions did only encreaſe the Conſtancy of Chriſtians, and that the Martyrs did Honour to their Religion, he had recourſe to Impoſtures and Tricks; That he allow'd the People to Abuſe and uſe Violence to the Chriſtians, and reſerved to himſelf the ways of moderation to allure and perſwade them; That he changed his Court, and gain'd the Souldiers over to his ſide; That he removed Chriſtians from all Offices, that he entic'd ſome by Hope of Rewards, and ſeduc'd others; That he ſent ſome of them into Baniſhment, and in ſpite of his affected Gentleneſs he had exerciſed the greateſt Cruelties upon others. He adds, That this Tyrant had a Deſign to ſhut out Chriſtians from all Protection of the Law, and to forbid them to make uſe of it, alledging this for a reaſon, That their Law commanded them to bear Injuries patiently, and to render Evil for Good.

St. Gregory anſwers this Raillery, by ſaying, That if Chriſtians had a Law which oblig'd them to bear with Evil, yet there was no Law in the World which permited any to do it. And beſides that, there were among Chriſtians Two ſorts of Precepts; that ſome of them do ſo oblige, that it is abſolutely neceſſary to obey them; but there are others which do not oblige, but Chriſtians are free to fulfil or not fulfil them; that all the World cannot arrive at that perfection which conſiſts in the obſervation of Evangelical Counſels, and that one may be ſav'd, by obſerving only what is commanded as neceſſary to be done. In this place he makes a Digreſſion about the Moderation which Chriſtians obſerv'd when they were in Power, and this he oppoſes to the Cruelties which the Pagans have exercis'd. There was a Time, ſays he to the Pagans, when we had the Authority in our Hands as well as you; but what have we done to those of your Religion, which comes near to what the Christians have suffer'd from you? Have we taken your Liberty from you? Have we stirr'd up the Fury of the Mobile against you? Have we put Governours in places on purpose to condemn you to punishment? Have we attempted the Life of any Person? Have we remov'd any Body from the Magistracy, or from their Offices? In a word, Have we done any of those things to you which you have made us suffer, and which you have threatned against us; I cannot conceive how St. Gregory could reconcile all these things with what he had said before, that Constantius did very ill to suffer Julian to live, and leave the Empire to him, because he was an Enemy to the Christian Religion, and was to Persecute it; and that in this, Constantius made a very ill use of his Gentleness and Goodness. Afterwards he speaks of the Prohibition which Julian had given to Christians, to study humane Learning. It belongs to us, says he, to Discourse, it belongs to us to understand the Greek Tongue, as it belongs to us to Adore the Gods: But as for you, Ignorance and Barbarism is your Portion; and all your Wisdom consists in saying, I believe. St. Gregory answers him, that the Pythagoreans who had no other Reason to give for what they Affirm'd, but the Authority of their Master, would not have jested in that manner, upon what the Christians answer when they are askt about their Doctrine, This is what I believe; that this only signifies, that 'tis not lawful to doubt of what is written by Persons Divinely inspir'd, and that their Authority is of greater force than all the Reasons and Arguments of the World; but that it does not follow from thence, that Eloquence, Terms, of Art, and Skill in Languages, belong only to those who profess to acknowledge many Gods: "For, says he, if this be so, either the Greek Tongue is confin'd to the Re- "ligion, or to the Nation: It cannot be said, that 'tis confin'd to the Pagan Religion; for, Where is "that Commanded? Who are the Priests that have enjoyn'd us to study humane Learning as an Acti- "on of Religion; Neither can it be said that 'tis confin'd to the Nations that profess to Adore false "Gods: For it will not follow, because the Greek Tongue has been us'd among those that profess the "Pagan Religion, that therefore it is so confin'd to them who profess that Religion, that others can- "not make use of it. This is as if one should say, that working in Gold cannot be exercis'd but by "Painters, because there were some Painters that were Goldsmiths likewise: He concludes, that "Languages cannot be confin'd to a Profession, nor an Art, nor a Religion, but that they are common to "all those that can make use of them." He adds several Curiosities about the Invention of Letters and Sciences, about the Origin of Sacrifices, about Pagan Ceremonies, and the infamous Actions which the Poets attributed to their false Gods. He occasionally answers an Excuse which the Pagans make to cover the Folly of their Poets, alledging, that they invented what they said concerning their Divinities to please the people, but that under these Veils there was a secret Sence and hidden Mystery. St. Gregory confesses, that there may be in Religion hidden Mysteries, and such Discourses as all the World does not understand; and he acknowledges, that there are some of this nature among Christians; but then he maintains, that the Veils, Representations, the Appearances, and the Figures which conceal these Mysteries and Truths, ought to have the Character of Honesty and not of Infamy: That otherwise this was to do like one that would conduct a Man to a fine City through a Bog, or that would bring a Man into Harbour, by leading him over the Rocks: And besides, that there was no Example produced by the Poets which excited to Vertue, but on the contrary, they inclin'd all Men to Vice, whereas the Christian Religion teaches nothing but Vertue and Perfection.

as

St. Gregory Nazianz.

The 4th. Oration is also an Invective against Julian. There St. Gregory represents the visible Judgments which God had made use of to punish his Impiety, as well as the sensible manner of protecting his Church, and defeating the Designs of this impious Man. He relates first, that when Julian would have had the Jews rebuild the Temple of Jerusalem, there arose such a Storm as drove away those that undertook the Work, and that having retir'd into a neighbouring Temple, there came forth a Fire which consum'd them. He adds, that there appear'd a Sign of the Cross in the Heavens, which was a Mark of the Victory which Jesus Christ had gotten over these Impious Men; and that all those who saw it, or spoke of it, found their Clothes mark'd with this Sign. He says, that this Miracle, was so publick, that many who saw it embrac'd immediately the Christian Religion, and were Baptiz'd.

But if the Power of God appear'd in this Miracle, his Vengeance clearly appeared in the miserable Death of Julian. Before he departed to march against the Persians, he made a Vow, That if he return'd Conqueror, he would reduce all Christians under the Power of the Devil: But God who confounds the Designs of the Wicked, did not suffer him to return from this Journey. For being unseasonably engag'd, he found himself incompass'd with the Army of his Enemies, and having mounted up into a high place to discover it, he receiv'd a stroke of which he died. St. Gregory says, that some reported that he was pierced thorow by a Dart from his Enemies, and others, that it was done by one of his own Souldiers, or that one of his own People thrust him thorough with a Sword. He observes, that at his Death he would have it believ'd that he was become a God, and that he order'd his most faithful Friends to throw his Body into the River, to make it believ'd that he was rank'd among the Gods; but this was not put in execution. St. Gregory afterwards makes a Comparison between the Funeral Pomp of Constantius and Julian; wherein he observes that the Funeral of Constantius was accompanied with the Ceremonies of the Church, with the Publick Prayers sung in the Night-time, with Wax-lights and the other Honours which Christians were wont to pay unto the dead. He excuses this Emperour, as to the Suspicion of Arianism, and throws all the Fault upon the Great Officers of his Court. He affirms also, that after his Death, Angelical Voices were heard to celebrate his Praises. He describes the Manners, the Temper, and the Vices of Julian. He says, that he always had a bad Opinion of him; he makes a very disadvantageous Representation of him; he admires the Providence of God, who reliev'd his Church, heard her Prayers, and confounded the Designs of the Pagans; yet he deplores their Miſery; he exhorts Chriſtians who enjoy Repoſe at preſent, to remember the time of their Affliction, and to conſider it as a Warning from God, that they ſhould ſin no more. Upon this Occaſion he deſcends to Morality, and exhorts the Chriſtians to whom he ſpeaks, to Celebrate the Feſtivals after a Chriſtian Manner, and to bear Injuries patiently. About the End of this Diſcourſe he returns to his Subject, and invective againſt Julian. Theſe Diſcourſes were written ſome years after the Death of Julian; and they contain more Strokes of Eloquence than Principles of Theology and Morality.

St. Gregory Nazianz.

The 5th. Diſcourſe is an Apology addreſs'd to his Father upon his Retirement. He confeſſes, that he had retir'd for love of a ſolitary Life, but that the Friendſhip he had for his Father, and the Reſpect he ow'd to his old age, had oblig'd him to return. He ſays, that his Father call'd him back, that he might aſſiſt him in the Government of his Dioceſs, and for that end had given him the Unction of Holy Orders. This Diſcourſe was in the Year 362.

The 6th. Diſcourſe was ſpoken before St. Gregory Nyſſen, who was come to ſee St. Gregory Nazianzen, ſometime after he was ordain'd Biſhop of Saſima. He complains in the beginning of this Diſcourſe, that St. Baſil had in a manner violated the Laws of Friendſhip, by obliging him to accept of this new Biſhoprick. About the end, he exhorts thoſe that heard him, to purify themſelves from their Sins, and to ſubdue their Paſſions, in imitation of the holy Martyrs whoſe Feſtival they Celebrated. He ſays, that the beſt way of Solemnizing their Feſtivals, and the greateſt Honour they could do them, was to live Regularly and Holily. He declaims againſt the Exceſſes, and Buſineſs that was done at the Aſſemblies on theſe Feſtivals. He praiſes the Martyrs, and gives them the Title of Mediators. He concludes with praying to God, to perfect the great Flocks, and preſerve the little ones, and to comfort him by his Grace, and guide him by his Illumination, and aſſiſt him in feeding the Flock of Jeſus Chriſt. 'Tis plain, that this Diſcourſe was ſpoken by St. Gregory in the Year 371, at a ſolemn Feſtival of ſome Martyrs, after St. Baſil had Ordain'd him Biſhop of Saſima in the Year 371.

The following Diſcourſe which was ſpoken before St. Gregory the Father, and St. Baſil, was alſo at the ſame time, and upon the ſame Subject. He declares with what Difficulty he had accepted the Biſhoprick of Saſima, and prays them to aſſiſt him with their Prayers and advices in the Government of his Dioceſs.

In the 8th. Homily, he directs his Diſcourſe to the People of Nazianzum, about his Father's chooſing him to be his Coadjutor. In it he repreſents the Obligation that lies upon one to do Service to the Church, when he is capable of doing it; and repeats again the Rule which he had propos'd in his firſt Diſcourſe, That we ought not to ſeek after Offices, but neither ſhould we refuſe them, when we are call'd to them, and they do not exceed our Abilities. He adds, that he intended now to joyn with his Father, to take care of the Church of Nazianzum, but that he would by no means be oblig'd to ſucceed him, and that no body could ever force him to it. That thoſe who Command muſt do it voluntarily, as thoſe who Obey muſt obey willingly, ut volentes volentibus præſint; which is moſt neceſſary, ſays he, amongſt the Clergy, where we do not uſe Dominion, but Inſtruction. Volentium enim non coactorum, pietatis ſacramentum eſt. This Diſcourſe was in the Year 372.

In the 9th. Diſcourſe which was at the ſame time, he ſpeaks to the People of Nazianzum, in the preſence of a Magiſtrate, who took care to make an Aſſeſſment of the Taxes. In it, he firſt gives the Reaſon of his Silence, and then exhorts Chriſtians to withdraw their Affections from the things of this World, and to labour only for Eternity, by purifying themſelves with good Works. He recommends to Paſtors to take care of their Sheep; and to the faithful, to ſubmit themſelves to their Paſtors. He admoniſhes the Men of Learning, not to truſt to their Knowledge and Eloquence, not to affect Knowledge more than is neceſſary, not to graſp at all Learning, but only ſo much as may ſerve them for teaching Truth and Righteouſneſs.

After this, he addreſſes himſelf to the Judge, and tells him, That we muſt render to Cæſar the Things that are Cæſar's, and to God, the Things that are God's; that's to ſay, that we muſt render to Cæſar the Tribute that belongs to him; and to his Miniſters, the rewards which the Law has appointed them; and that more than that does not belong to them. He prays him in particular, to treat his People with Gentleneſs and Humanity in the Aſſeſſment which he was to make. He makes a pleaſant Obſervation, that Jeſus Chriſt came into the World at a time when a Tax was made, or an Aſſeſſment of all the Inhabitants of the Earth, to ſhew that God is always preſent at thoſe Actions; that he was made Man, and did himſelf pay Tribute to comfort thoſe that are in Bondage, and to teach them to bear it patiently: But withal, that by thus abaſing himſelf, he taught the Kings and Potentates of the Earth, to treat thoſe that are ſubject to them with Mildneſs and Moderation: That Servitude it ſelf was a Burden heavy enough, which ſhould not be encreas'd by Rigour; that Tribute was an effect of the firſt Man's Sin, becauſe War which occaſion'd Tribute, was a Conſequence of the firſt Sin, and a juſt puniſhment of God; but that it ought not to be augmented by over-charging and ill uſing the Miſerable. He adds, that God makes in the other Life a Book, or, if it be lawful to uſe the Term, a Roll, where in all Men are ſet down, without any diſtinction of their State and Condition: That there Men ſhall be treated after the ſame manner, as they have treated others; and that if the Judge to whom he Addreſſes his Speech, would we favourably treated there, he muſt treat his People favourably and civilly. After he has ſpoken to him with this freedom, he beſtows many Commendations upon him; and prays him to exempt the Poor, the Clergy, and the Monks. Theſe Men, ſays he of the laſt, who are no ways allied to this Earth, who have nothing but their Bodies, and do not ſo much as poſſeſs that entirely, who have nothing for Cæſar, and have all for God, that's to ſay, who can give nothing but Prayers, Hymns, Watchings and Tears, of which ſeizure cannot be made: Theſe Men, I ſay, who are dead to this World, that they may live to Jeſus Chriſt, who have crucified their Fleſh with Jeſus Chirſt, and even parted, as one may ſay, their Soul from their Body. This is an excellent Deſcription of the ancient Monks, which gives us a great Idea of their Poverty, and how much they were diſengaged from the World. St. Gregory Nazianz.

who

The 10*th.* Diſcourſe of Gregory Nazianzen is a Funeral Oration upon his Brother Cæſarius, wherein he relates his principal Actions, and makes a Panegyrick upon them. In it he commends him, and comforts his Father and Mother. He obſerves that the ſame Ceremony is renewed every Year for the Dead. Towards the end, he diſcourſes of the State of the Souls of the Juſt, from the time of their Death until the Day of Judgment. He ſays, that he was inform'd by the Diſcourſes of the Learn'd, that holy Souls which are acceptable to God, being deliver'd from the Bands of this Body, feel an ineffable Joy and Pleaſure, by conſidering the Bleſſedneſs which they are one day to receive; that they go directly to God, and that they know already, as it were in an Image and Repreſentation, the Happineſs they ſhall receive after the Reſurrection of the Body. He adds, That he had often ſeen in a Dream his Brother all over Glorious: Whether it was, ſays he, that the Imagination repreſented him thus, or that this Apparition was real. He concludes with a Moral Diſcourſe, wherein he ſhews, that we ought to be ſo far from Mourning for the Dead, that we ought rather to mourn for our ſelves, and ſigh, becauſe we continue ſo long upon Earth. He wrote this Diſcourſe ſometime after the Death of his Brother, which happen'd in 368.

The 11*th.* Diſcourſe is a Panegyrick upon his Siſter St. Gorgonia, who died ſometime after her Brother. In it he has given an excellent Deſcription of her Vertues, of her Prudence and Wiſdom in the Government of her Family; of her Humility, her Zeal, her Charity to the Poor; of her Care for Adorning Churches, her Mortifications, her Diligence in Prayer, her Submiſſion to the Will of God, her Conſtancy in her Sickneſs, and her Manner of Dying, which was worthy of a Chriſtian. He obſerves, that ſhe was baptiz'd a little before ſhe died; but that ſhe had led ſo holy a Life, that Baptiſm did not confer any Grace upon her, but was only the Seal of thoſe Graces which ſhe had receiv'd. Yet we muſt not believe that ſhe was not baptiz'd till her laſt Sickneſs; for St. Gregory ſays, that in a former Sickneſs, when ſhe ſaw that the Remedies which were us'd, gave her no Relief, ſhe went into the Church, and there having pray'd near the Altar, ſhe mingled with her Tears (what ſhe had reſerv'd of the Antitypes of the precious Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt) and that ſhe was cur'd immediately. This Action, which St. Gregory calls a pious piece of Impudence, ſhews that ſhe was baptiz'd ſome time before her laſt Sickneſs. Towards the end of this Panegyrick, he deſcribes the happy State of juſt Souls which are departed out of this Life; he makes no doubt but they enjoy the Company of Angels, and a moſt perfect Knowledge of the Three Perſons of the Holy Trinity. This Diſcourſe was ſpoken about 370.

The following Diſcourſe is about the Reconciliation of the Monks of Nazianzum with his Father, which was made, as we have ſaid, about the Year 363. He congratulates their Re-union, and proves the Uſefulneſs and Neceſſity of Peace. See how he deſcribes the Habit of Monks, and the Auſterity of their Life. "All that I have ſeen, ſays he to them, brings to my Remembrance upon the account "of this Fraternal Diviſion, your Watchings, your Faſtings, your Prayers, your Tears, your Knees "harden'd with bearing the weight of your Bodies, your beating of your Breaſts, your deep Sighs, "your Tears ſhed in ſinging forth continually the Praiſes of God, your Hair cut ſhort and neglected, "your naked Feet, your Habits which have nothing of Pride, your Girdle which adorns without be"ing an Ornament, your ſhort Cloaks button'd back, that bold Gate, that modeſt Eye, that plea"ſant Smile, that calm Diſcourſe, that Silence which is more inſtructive than all Diſcourſe, thoſe re"gular Auſterities, thoſe Riches in Poverty, that Glory under Contempt.

The 13*th.* Diſcourſe is alſo about the Benefits of Peace. In this, as well as the preceding Diſcourſe, he makes ſome Digreſſions about the Faith of the Church againſt Hereticks, and he concludes this with a Prayer for their Converſion.

The 14*th.* is upon the ſame Subject, where he ſpeaks againſt the Errour of Apollinarius.

The 15*th.* was preach'd after a great Hail, which fell in Pontus in the Year 372, which wholly ruin'd the Country. In it he exhorts the People of Nazianzum, to acknowledge that this Judgment was a juſt Puniſhment of their Sins; that they ought to conſider God as full of Mercy, when they compare it with the Vengeance which God will inflict upon the Reprobate in the other World. He ſets down in particular, ſome of thoſe Sins which God has puniſh'd by this Scourge, as the Oppreſſion of the Poor, whoſe Goods were ſeiz'd upon either by Fraud or Violence, the Uſury whereby they had enrich'd themſelves and robb'd the Poor, their Forgetfulneſs of God, their Rigour towards the Poor, the Contempt which they had ſhown of the Exhortations of their Preachers, their vain Confidence in Riches, the Covetouſneſs of the Rich, which inclines them to keep up their Corn in their Granaries, that they may ſell it dear in a time of Scarcity, their ſumptuous Apparel and Houſhold Furniture. He exhorts them all to implore the Mercy of God towards 'em, by their publick Prayers, their Faſting, their Penance, and their giving of Alms. He ends this Diſcourſe with praying his Father to appeaſe the Wrath of God by his Prayers, and to beg of him Food for the Body, after he has pray'd for the Food of the Soul.

The 16*th.* Diſcourſe of St. Gregory Nazianzen, is a famous Oration of the Love of the Poor and of Poverty. He wrote it particularly in favour of the Poor in the Hoſpital, which St. Baſil had built in Cæſarea, and he ſpoke it at ſome ſolemn Feſtival about the Year 363. He ſhews in this Diſcourſe that the Love of the Poor and Poverty is a moſt excellent Vertue: After this he deſcribes in a moſt pathetical manner, the miſerable State of the Poor and Sick: He propoſes very preſſing Motives with a great deal of Eloquence, for touching the Heart of the Rich, and inclining them to aſſiſt the Poor and Sick; and he urges with much Clearneſs and Strength, the moſt convincing Reaſons for perſwading them them that they are oblig'd to it. He concludes with ſaying, that Alms-giving is not only a Duty of Piety, but of Neceſſity; that it is not only a Counſel, but alſo a Precept.

St. Gregory Nazianz.

The 17*th.* Diſcourſe is about ſome Differenees that happen'd at Nazianzum, between the People and the Governour. St. Gregory appeaſes the People in the firſt part of this Diſcourſe, and exhorts them to ſubmit without fear to the Orders of the Governour; and in the ſecond part, he ſpeaks to the Governour with a wonderful Frankneſs, to incline him to Mildneſs and Clemency. He tells him, that he ſhould not take it ill that he ſpoke to him with freedom; that the Law of God ſubjects him to the Commandment of his Biſhop. "For, ſays he, the Church has an Authority of her own, which is "far greater and more excellent than that of Princes, unleſs you will ſubject the Spirit to the Fleſh, "and Heaven to Earth. He adds, that he did not doubt but he would take in good part the Liberty "wherewith he ſpoke, ſince he was one of the Sheep of his Flock. I will not therefore, ſays he, make a "long Diſcourſe. You command by Jeſus Chriſt; 'tis by him that you exerciſe your Authority; 'tis he "who has given you the Sword that you carry; but he has not given you ſo much Power for any other "end, but to terrifie the Wicked, and threaten them with Puniſhments. Take care then that you "preſerve this Truſt with Purity: You are the Image of God, but ſo are all Men in ſome ſenſe. They "are all your Brethren, have compaſſion on them, imitate the Mercy of God, join Mildneſs with Ter-"rour, temper your Threatnings by giving ſome hopes; many times Men compaſs their Deſigns bet-"ter by Gentleneſs than by Violence." He uſes many other Arguments of this Nature, to mollifie the Wrath of this Governour, whoſe Threatnings had frightned the People of Nazianzum. At laſt, he ſays, that if theſe Reaſons did not move, but ſtill he ſhould want ſome more powerful Motive, that he would take the Boldneſs to offer him Jeſus Chriſt, and thoſe Myſteries of Salvation which he communicated with the ſame Mouth with which he now deſired this Favour: In ſhort, he conjures him to grant this Favour to the Church of Jeſus Chriſt, and to conſider, that God will treat him after the ſame manner, as he ſhall treat thoſe who are ſubject to his Dominion. This Diſcourſe is a Maſterpiece of Eloquence, which ſeems to have been recited in the Year 372.

The 18*th.* Sermon is the Panegyrick of St. Cyprian, the Martyr. There are in this Panegyrick ſome things that relate to the Life of St. Cyprian, Biſhop of Carthage, as what concern'd his Studies, his Learning, his Accompliſhments, his Baniſhment and his Death: But there are other Circumſtances which cannot agree to him, as when he obſerves, that he of whom he ſpeaks was a Senator, who made Love to a Chriſtian Lady of Quality, call'd Juſtina; that he would have made uſe of Magick to corrupt her; but this Lady having recourſe to Jeſus Chriſt, and the Virgin Mary, to be deliver'd from this Perſecution, the Devil entered into the Body of St. Cyprian, who was not diſpoſſeſs'd till his Converſion. 'Tis certain that this Accident, and ſome others which St. Gregory Nazianzen relates in this Diſcourſe, happen'd not to the Biſhop of Carthage: And yet he does expreſly declare, that he of whom he ſpeaks was Biſhop of that City. It muſt therefore be owned, that St. Gregory compos'd this Panegyrick out of ſome falſe Memoirs, wherein theſe Circumſtances were added to adorn the Life of this Holy Martyr by a pleaſant Story: Howſoever, St. Gregory greatly values this Hiſtory, and beſtows many Praiſes upon the Holy Martyr, whom he deſigns to commend. He ſays, that his Aſhes wrought abundance of Miracles, and he exhorts his Hearers to honour this Saint by their Vertues and their good Works. He concludes with a Prayer, which he addreſſes to him, wherein he deſires his Aſſiſtance and Protection for governing his Flock, and conducting thoſe of whom he had the Charge. This Diſcourſe ſeems to have been written when St. Gregory was Coadjutor to his Father, that is to ſay, about the Year 372.

The 19*th.* Diſcourſe of St. Gregory Nazianzen, is a Funeral Oration upon his Father, which he ſpoke in the preſence of his Mother and St. Baſil. He addreſſes his Speech to St. Baſil after this manner: "You cannot be come to Nazianzum but for Three Reaſons; To ſee us, to viſit the Flock, "and to provide a Paſtor for it. You will ſatisfie the firſt by your good Offices in comforting us with "a Funeral Oration, wherein you may celebrate the Vertues of my Father, and at the ſame time "ſhew us, that we muſt deſpiſe this Mortal Life, and look upon Death as an aſſured Harbour, which "ſhelters us from the Storms and Tempeſts of this Mortal Life. Thus you may comfort us: But "how will you comfort this Flock? You may do it, Firſt, by promiſing that you will take upon "you the Care of Governing it: Secondly, by ſhowing that we are not abandon'd by this good Paſtor, and by perſwading us that he is with us, that he is here preſent, that he ſtill watches over his "Flock, that he takes care of it, protects and defends it. For I do not doubt (they are his own words) "but he being now much nearer to God, does a great deal more for his Flock by his Interceſſion, than "he did upon Earth by his Teaching." After this he gives us an account of his Father's Life, and makes a Panegyrick upon his Vertues: Neither does he forget thoſe of his Mother Nonna, whom he comforts towards the end of his Diſcourſe, by letting her ſee that ſhe ought not to value this Life, nor fear Death, and by promiſing to aſſiſt her all the reſt of her Days. It ſeems that all St. Gregory's Brethren were dead, and that he was left alone. There are many remarkable things in this Oration of St. Gregory, but chiefly what he ſays of his Father's Celebrating the Euchariſt, tho' he were ſick; and that one day when he was in his Bed, he conſecrated the Elements which were upon the Altar before the People, repeating as little of the Prayers as he could; and that having pronounc'd the Words of the Conſecration of the Euchariſt, and given the People the Bleſſing, he lay down upon his Bed again. What he ſays of Elections, is alſo of great conſequence to Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline. He declares, that his particular Advice was, that for avoiding Conteſts and Canvaſſings, the Elections ſhould be reſerv'd to the principal part of the People, that is, to the Clergy, or at leaſt that they ſhould have the better ſhare in them. We muſt not forget the Deſcription which he has given of that Magnificent Church, which his Father built at Nazianzum. This Panegyrick was in the Year 373.

'Tho'

Tho' St. Gregory discharged very well the Offices of Natural Affection, by making Funeral Orations upon his Brother, his Sister, and his Father; yet one may say, That he excell'd himself in discharging the Offices of Friendship, by his Funeral Oration upon his Friend St. Basil, which is the 20*th*. of his Discourses. There he describes the Life, the Labours, and different Employments of this Saint exactly: He praises his Piety, his Faith and his Vertues, and forgets nothing of all that could be said to his Advantage. It may be observ'd in all the other Funeral Orations, That the Church in the time of St. Gregory Nazianzen believ'd, that the Martyrs and Saints enjoy'd already Eternal Happiness, and the Vision of God; that they took care of Men upon Earth, that they interceded for them, and that it was very profitable to pray to them for the obtaining of Spiritual and Temporal Favours. St. Gregory could not have spoken this Funeral Oration until after his Return from Constantinople in 381. St. Gregory Nazianz.

[By the Character which Mr. du Pin himself gives of St. Gregory Nazianzen, it appears that he was a Man of very great Warmth of Fancy; and so it is no wonder if when he believ'd that Saints were after Death receiv'd up into Heaven, that he should in some warmer parts of his Harangues, such as Allocutions to the Saints from their disconsolate Friends below, or Prosopopœia's, where they are introduc'd comforting or strengthning those whom they left behind, say several things that are not too severely to be scann'd. His εἰ τῆς αἰῶνος shews, that he question'd even in his highest flights, whether those Saints whom he was then commending, understood what he said. And the Consequences are then too manifest to be insisted upon; since no Man ever calmly taught, That the Blessed above can so far concern themselves as to intercede for the Faithful below, that Questions whether these happy Beings have any Knowledge of what is done upon Earth: Only this must be said, That the excessive Honors which were paid to Saints and Martyrs upon their Anniversaries brought in all those Corruptions which afterwards grew so very scandalous.]

The Panegyrick upon St. Athanasius was spoken at Constantinople. There he relates, with much Exactness and Eloquence, the principal Actions of St. Athanasius, and excites our Admiration of his Doctrine, his Constancy, his Firmness, his Zeal for Religion, his Love of Peace, and his other Vertues. This Discourse is the 21*st*. The precise time when it was spoken is not known; but 'tis certain that it was at Constantinople, which he designs clearly enough, when he says, That he was in a City very much corrupted, where there were Arches and Theatres.

The Discourse in praise of the Maccabees, follows after the Panegyrick of St. Athanasius. He observes, at the beginning of this Discourse, That tho' many did not honour the Maccabees as Saints, because they lived not since the Coming of Christ; yet they are worthy of the same Honour with the Martyrs who suffer'd after Christ; nay, and their Actions are more admirable. "For says he, "if they suffer'd Martyrdom before Christ's Coming, What would they not have done, if they had "come after him, and had had the Death of Christ for an Example? He adds, That no Man before "the Coming of Christ, was accomplish'd with all Vertues, without having Faith in Jesus Christ." He describes afterwards the Martyrdom of the Seven Brethren, and the Constancy of their Mother, and extols those Actions with the most beautiful Stroaks of Eloquence: Then he sends the Reader to the Book which Josephus wrote upon this Subject. The time is not known when this Panegyrick was recited.

The 23*d*. Discourse, which bears at present the Title of a Discourse in the praise of Hero the Philosopher, or barely of a Philosopher, was, according to St. Jerome's Testimony, a Panegyrick upon Maximus the Philosopher, compos'd by St. Gregory before he had any difference with him. We have seen that St. Basil also commended this Philosopher in the Letters which he wrote to him. St. Gregory in this Panegyrick represents the Idea and Pattern of a Christian Philosopher: There he praises a solitary Life, and yet prefers Labour and Business before unprofitable Study. He observes, That the Church was become more Illustrious by Persecutions: He describes the Miseries which it suffered under the Emperours, Constantius, Julian, and Valens. He describes the horrible Tragedy that was acted in the Church of Alexandria, when Lucius invaded it, to force away Peter of Alexandria, the Successour of St. Athanasius, very particularly. He says, That this Philosopher was then torn with Scourges, and sent into Banishment. Towards the End he explains the Faith of the Church about the Mystery of the Trinity. This Oration must have been spoken or written at Constantinople in the Year 378.

The 24*th*. Discourse is address'd to the Egyptians, who were come to Constantinople. St. Gregory Nazianzen praises the Piety of the Faithful of Alexandria, testifies a great deal of Respect for the Memory of St. Athanasius, a great Esteem for his Successour Peter, who then possessed the See of Alexandria, and a great Love for the People of Alexandria, whom he makes no scruple to call his People. He declares, That he would willingly be united in Communion with the Christians of Alexandria, and because they made some Difficulty of joining with him, he expounds to them his Doctrine concerning the Mystery of the most Holy Trinity, and insists chiefly upon proving the Divinity of the Holy Spirit. This Discourse was spoken in the Year 379, before Maximus was ordained Bishop of Constantinople by the Egyptians.

The 25*th*. Discourse is against the Arians: He begins it with declaring, That they ought not to glory in their Multitude, nor despise his little Flock, because it preserved and maintained the Purity of the Faith. He represents in the following Discourse the Troubles and Confusions which the Arian Heresie produced, and charges them with all the Outrages and Cruelties, which they had exercised against the Catholicks. He shows that neither the Magnificence, nor Grandeur, nor Riches, nor Power of the Arians render'd their Cause more acceptable in the sight of God. He vindicates himself from the Reproaches thrown upon him of coming to Constantinople to make Disturbances: He says, That he did not come thither of his own accord, as those who now run after the Promotions of the Church; That he was call'd to the Place; That he only followed the Guidance of the Holy Spirit; and that after he came to Conſtantinople, he did not imitate thoſe who were inſatiably Covetous; That he had commenc'd no Law-ſuit againſt the Arians, neither for their Churches, nor for the Eccleſiaſtical Revenues, tho' they were unjuſtly poſſeſs'd both of the one and the other; That he had perſecuted no Body; That he had ſuffer'd patiently all manner of Injuries and evil Treatment. After he has ſhewn theſe things, he makes an elegant Compariſon between the Arians and the Catholicks of Conſtantinople. "They have, ſays he, the Temples, but we have the God that dwells in "them, and we our ſelves are the Temples; They have the People for them, we have the Angels "for us; They have for their Portion Aſſurance and Raſhneſs, we have the Faith on our ſide; They "have Threatnings, we have Prayers; They perſecute, and we ſuffer; They have Gold and Silver, "and we are in Poſſeſſion of the Holy Doctrine: But our Flock is little? Yes, but it does not go "to throw it ſelf upon Precipices; our Sheep-fold is narrow, but it is well-guarded againſt Wolves; "it does not lie open to Robbers, and Strangers cannot enter into it. This little Flock, which will "every day grow greater by the Grace of God, gives me no cauſe to fear. I ſee it, I count it eaſily; "I know my Sheep, and they know me; they hear my Voice, they anſwer me; I call them, and "they follow me, and they will not follow Strangers; they will not follow Valentinus, Montanus, "Manes, Donatus, Sabellius, Arius, Photinus; and they continue ſteadfaſt in the Faith of the Tri-"nity, in whoſe Name they were baptiz'd." This Diſcourſe was ſpoken by St. Gregory, ſome time after he was come to Conſtantinople.

of

St. Gregory Nazianz.

In the 26*th*. Diſcourſe, he exhorts thoſe of his Party to obſerve Moderation in their Diſputes with Hereticks. He there lays down a great many very wiſe and uſeful Maxims. He obſerves, That Peace is the greateſt Good that can be enjoy'd; That Schiſms and Hereſies have been raiſed up by Men of great Wit, but turbulent and deſigning, That thoſe Men are the Cauſe of Wars, Seditions, and other Miſchiefs, both to the Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Society; That we ought neither to be too hot, nor too remiſs in the Defence of the Faith; That upon the whole Matter, the Order eſtabliſhed in the Church between the Paſtors and their Sheep, between the Clergy and the Laity, muſt be inviolably obſerved; That 'tis often much better to be ſilent than to ſpeak of Myſteries, becauſe it is very difficult to comprehend and explain them, and that 'tis very rare to find Ears fit to hear them, and Minds capable of bearing them; that when we are obliged to ſpeak, we ſhould do it with much Humility and Modeſty; That the common People ſhould content themſelves with believing, and leave Diſputes to the Learned; That Faith and Religion are for the Ignorant as well as for the Learned, and for the Poor as well as the Rich; That the Learned themſelves ought to ſhun uſeleſs Queſtions and Diſputes; That among the Hebrews, it was not allow'd to all the Jews indifferently to diſcourſe of the Law, but they choſe ſuch to do it as were judg'd capable of it; That ſome Men had one Gift, ſome another; in ſhort, That thoſe who take upon 'em to diſpute and teach others, being puſh'd on by a Zeal for the Faith, ſhould not condemn thoſe who by a reaſonable Precaution and wholeſome Fear are hindred from adventuring to do the like. He concludes all theſe Reflections in theſe Words: "If you will all obey me, as well Young as Old, as well Clergy as Laity, "as well Monks as thoſe that are barely the Faithful, you will give over this vain Oſtentation of "ſhowing your Knowledge by Diſputes, and you will rather take care to draw near to God by an up-"right and prudent Converſation, by the Purity of your Manners, by your edifying Diſcourſes, that "ſo at laſt you may obtain Eternal Life." 'Tis not neceſſary here to obſerve, that this Diſcourſe was ſpoken at Conſtantinople.

In the 27*th*. Diſcourſe, St. Gregory vindicates himſelf againſt thoſe who accuſed him of Ambition. In his Exordium, he enquires after the Reaſons, why the People of Conſtantinople were entic'd, and as it were charm'd by his Preaching. He ſays, That it could not be his Learning which allur'd them, for they were ſatisfied that he had but little of it; That it could not be the Doctrine which he taught them, ſince he was not the firſt who had preach'd it to them, neither had he preach'd any thing to them which they had not learn'd formerly from St. Alexander their Biſhop: "That neither can "they ſay, That he had gained them by Artificial and Flattering Diſcourſes, as for the moſt part, "ſays he, they do now-a-days who are of the Prieſtly Function, who have made an Art of Preach-"ing the Word of God, who have brought the Arts of the Bar into the Church, and the Ornaments "of the Theatre into the Chair of Truth. You know, adds he, and God is my Witneſs, That we are "ſo great Strangers to this Fault, that they rather accuſe me of Ruſticity, and of not knowing the "World, than of being a Flatterer, and ſeeking to pleaſe Men, ſince I ſometimes reprove too ſe-"verely, even thoſe who are moſt Affectionate to me, when they do any thing that I think not "reaſonable. You know how I mourn'd, how I cry'd, when ye plac'd me againſt my Will upon "the Throne, violating the Laws of the Church for the Love that you ſhow'd me. I uſed ſo great "Freedom with thoſe who appeared moſt zealous for me, that they withdraw in Anger, and "changed their ancient Friendſhip all of the ſudden into Hatred againſt me. Why then have you "ſo great a Paſſion for me, but only, firſt, Becauſe you choſe me your ſelves, and called me to "your Aſſiſtance; and ſecondly, Becauſe you have acknowledged, that I was neither Ambitious, "nor Fierce, nor Paſſionate, nor Proud, nor given to Flattery; and thirdly, Becauſe you have ſeen "how I have ſuffer'd for you all, both from thoſe that openly attack'd me, and from thoſe that ſo "cruelly laid ſecret Snares for me." After this he vindicates himſelf from the Charge which his Enemies drew up againſt him upon the account of his Eloquence. He ſays, That 'tis Envy which makes them ſpeak thus. He juſtifies himſelf alſo from the Ambition whereof he was accus'd; and ſhows, That he did not ambitiouſly aſpire after the See of Conſtantinople; That he had met with nothing there but Labour and Fatigue; That if he had been free to chuſe, he ſhould have preferr'd his Solitude before ſo painful an Employment; That he was not engaged in it for any other Reaſon but only to aſſiſt the Church of Conſtantinople, which was then without an Orthodox Biſhop; That he would not trouble himſelf, tho' Men ſhould cenſure him for having other Motives than really he had; That God knows what his true Intention was; That he never ſought to pleaſe Men but God only; That he lov'd Goodneſs for Goodneſs ſake, without any proſpect of Wordly Intereſt. At laſt, He addreſſes his Speech to all Eſtates of Men, and makes this brave Remonſtrance to them: "You Kings "of the Earth have a reſpect for your Crown: conſider the Excellency of Power which is entruſted "with you: All the World is ſubject to your Empire, but the Heavenly things are above you; 'tis "God only who governs them: Be you as Gods with reſpect to your Subjects, make your Empire to "conſiſt in this, and not in Gold, in Silver, and in Arms. You Great Men of the Age, who poſſeſs "the moſt conſiderable Offices in the State, be not lifted up becauſe of your Power, look not upon "things Temporal as if they were Eternal: Be you faithful to the Emperours, but above all things be "faithful to God. You that are Perſons of Quality make your Manners anſwerable to your Nobility. "You Wiſe Men, you Philoſophers, you Orators, How can you pretend to Wiſdom and Eloquence, "if you do not Adore him who is the Author and Fountain both of the one and the other? You that "love Riches hearken to the Prophet, who admoniſhes you not to truſt to the Abundance of your "Riches, know that you rely upon a frail thing. You that ſpend your time in Diverſions, mortifie "your ſelves by refraining from ſome things, aſſiſt your ſick Brother with that which you have too "much of. In ſhort, All you that are Citizens of this Second City of the World, which hardly "yields to the Firſt, Govern your ſelves after ſuch a manner, that you may be the Firſt in Vertue, "and not in Debauchery and Licentiouſneſs." This Diſcourſe was ſpoken ſome time after Theodoſius and the People had forc'd St. Gregory Nazianzen to aſcend the Epiſcopal Throne of Conſtantinople, at the End of the Year 380. St. Gregory Nazianz.

his

The following Diſcourſe was ſpoken after Maximus had endeavour'd to render himſelf Maſter of the Epiſcopal See of Conſtantinople. St. Gregory had retir'd for ſome time into the Country to refreſh himſelf: When he return'd being certainly inform'd of all that was done againſt him in his Abſence, he made a Diſcourſe to his People againſt this Philoſopher: And Firſt, in the Exordium of his Diſcourſe, he declar'd the Joy he had upon his Return to his Flock, from which he had been ſeparated, and then he falls very ſeverely upon Maximus, and ſhews, that he was unworthy of the Epiſcopal Throne which he aſpir'd to: Afterwards he draws a Portraiture of a True Philoſopher to ſet it againſt that which he had made of Maximus, and deſcribes the ſeveral Offices of all Conditions. He returns to his Subject again, by ſaying, That he fear'd not his Enemies in the leaſt: "For what "will they do to me, ſays he? How will they provoke me? They ſay that I am ignorant: I know "no other Wiſdom but the Fear of God, and the keeping of his Commandments. They blame me "for Poverty; alas, would to God, that I could even part with that little which I poſſeſs. They "force me away from my Biſhoprick; but did I ever think it a Happineſs to be a Biſhop? They will "take from me one of the Chief Sees, and one of the Principal Churches in the World. But is it "not at this time a Piece of Prudence to ſhun great Dignities, ſince upon their Account all "Churches are embroil'd and overthrown, and upon their Account the whole Earth is divided? Alas, "Would to God, adds he, that there were no places of Dignity in the Church, no Precedencies, no "Tyrannical Prerogatives, and that none would diſtinguiſh us but by our Vertue. But at preſent, "what Miſchiefs do the Diſputes about Prerogatives and Place, bring upon the Church! How many "People are Deſtroy'd for theſe Conteſts? I ſpeak not only of the Laity, but even of the Biſhops. "What more will they do unto me? They will hinder me from approaching to the Altars: But I "know another Altar, whereof this is but a Figure which can neither be demoliſh'd nor broken. "Will they drive me away from my Houſe? Will they hinder me from diverting my ſelf? Will they "alienate my Friends from me? I have no other Houſe but that which the Piety of another Shuna- "mite offer'd me. As to what concerns pleaſures, all the Evil that I wiſh to thoſe that deſign Evil "to me, is, That they may enjoy no other Pleaſures than what I take. As for my Friends, I have "ſome that will not forſake me, even tho' they ſhould be ill intreated upon my Account. "There are others whoſe Pride I have endur'd for a long time. Peter has deni'd me, and it may "be has not yet bewail'd his Fault." He concludes with deploring the Miſery of his Church.

The 29th. Sermon begins with a Declamation againſt thoſe who thruſt themſelves into places of Governing the People, and Preaching the Word of God without being capable. Afterwards he explains the Myſtery of the moſt Holy Trinity very exactly. Above all things he recommends to them that Chriſtians ſhould hold to the Simplicity of Faith, without endeavouring to fathom and comprehend its Myſteries. This Sermon was preach'd at Conſtantinople:

The 30th. Sermon is about the Election of Eulalius Biſhop of Doaza. This Diſcourſe is ſhort and contains nothing remarkable: It was ſpoken about the Year 372.

In the 31ſt. Diſcourſe, having ſpoken of the Myſtery of the Incarnation, he explains the Anſwer of Jeſus Chriſt to the Phariſees in Ch. 19. of St. Matthew's Goſpel, concerning Divorce. He ſays upon this place, That Jeſus Chriſt condemns the Cuſtom which permits Husbands to forſake their Wives, and does not permit Wives to forſake their Husbands, becauſe in the Sight of God there is no Inequality between the Man and the Woman. He obſerves, That a Bill of Divorce permitted Huſbands to ſend away their Wives for all ſorts of Reaſons; but that Jeſus Chriſt did not permit it except only in caſe of Adultery. He ſays, That Marriage is commendable, when the Parties are contracted with a deſign of having Children; but he preferrs Virginity to Marriage. He explains in what Sence 'tis ſaid, That all Perſons are not capable of embracing Celebacy. Tho' he owns the Free-will of Man, yet he confeſſes, that God muſt give a Will to do Good, and enable us to obtain the

St. Gregory Nazianz.

Victory. He occaſionally rejects the Opinion of Origen concerning the Pre-exiſtence of Souls. Laſtly, He exhorts his Auditors not only to preſerve the Purity of Faith as well as of their Bodies, but alſo to Contribute according to their Power to the Eſtabliſhment of Sound Doctrine. He addreſſes himſelf chiefly to the Emperour, and tells him, That if he thought that he did great Service to God, by hindering Murders, Adulteries, and Robberies by his Edicts, he might yet do him greater Service by making an Edict in Favour of the Catholick Faith. This Diſcourſe was in the Year 380.

The 41ſt. Diſcourſe is an Oration which he made to the Biſhops of the Council of Conſtantinople in the Year 382. Where, after he had made his Apology for governing the Church of Conſtantinople, by deſcribing the wonderful Effects he had produc'd in that Church, he prays them to grant him a Succeſſor, with as much Earneſtneſs, as others deſire the Greateſt Sees.

The Reaſons which he alledges for obtaining Permiſſion to retire, are Firſt, his great Age, the Quarrels of Churches and Biſhops, the Envy that ſome bore to him, the Diviſion of the Eaſt and the Weſt, and his Love of Retirement and Solitude. He adds ſome other Reaſons which tend to the Confuſion of his Enemies, ſuch as the Perſecutions which he had endur'd with Patience, his Frugality, his Modeſty, his Humility. At laſt, He conjures them to create another Biſhop who ſhould be more agreeable to the reliſh of the World. Here he repreſents very naturally, the Luxury, Ambition, and Arts which were but too common among the Biſhops of the Great Sees. At laſt, He bids Adieu to his Dear Anaſtaſia, to the other Churches of Conſtantinople, to the Council, the Clergy, the People, and to the Court. Theſe Adieu's are pathetical to thoſe that had an Eſteem of him, and are very picquant to thoſe that were his Enemies, and wiſh'd that he would abdicate his Charge. 'Tis plain that this Diſcourſe is the laſt of thoſe which he ſpoke at Conſtantinople.

The Five following Diſcourſes are Entitled, Of Theology, becauſe St. Gregory Nazianzen explains there what concerns the Divine Nature, and the Trinity of Perſons: There he treats of the Rules which ought to be obſerved in the Adminiſtration of the Word of God. He ſays Firſt, That this Function does not ſuit all Men; That he who diſcharges it muſt be pure in Heart and Mind; That he ſhould not apply himſelf to it but with a ſedate Temper; and Laſtly, That he ought not to treat of thoſe Matters before Pagans, nor before thoſe who have no ſenſe of Religion, and who think of nothing but Pleaſures. He adds many fine things about the Diſpoſitions and Qualifications that are neceſſary to a Divine. He blames thoſe who having their Hands tied, that is, who do no Good Works, yet have a wonderful Itch to prate, and thoſe who think to be great Divines, becauſe they underſtand the Subtilties of Ariſtotle's Logick; and the Gentile Philoſophy, which they make uſe of nothing to the purpoſe when they Diſcourſe about Myſteries.

In the 2d. Diſcourſe he enquires what may be conceiv'd concerning the Nature of God. He ſays, That his Exiſtence is known by the Creatures; That his Immenſity, Spirituality, and his other Attributes are known; but that it does not follow from hence, that his Eſſence and Nature can be comprehended; which he proves againſt Eunomius in the ſecond Diſcourſe of Theology, which contains many great Notions concerning the Nature and Attributes of God.

In the 3d. he proves the Equality of the Three Perſons of the Divinity and the Son, and anſwers the moſt part of Eunomius's Sophiſms. The 4th. continues the ſame ſubject; and in the 5th. he proves, That the Holy Spirit is a Divine Perſon diſtinct from the Father and the Son, That he proceeds from the Father, and that he is not begotten as the Son, tho' he be of the ſame Subſtance and the ſame Nature. He obſerves towards the End of this Diſcourſe, That under the Old Teſtament the Father only was diſtinctly known; That the Son is clearly Reveal'd in the New; That in it alſo there are found Paſſages enough to prove the Divinity of the Holy Spirit, but that it was fully clear'd by the Tradition of the Church. Theſe Diſcourſes ſeem alſo to have been ſpoken at Conſtantinople. And thus we are come to the 38th. Sermon upon the Feſtival of the Birth of Jeſus Chriſt. In it St. Gregory admires the Wonders of the Myſteries of the Incarnation: He deſcribes the Fall of the firſt Man, which he ſuppoſes to have been the Cauſe of the Incarnation of Jeſus Chriſt, and reckons up the Advantages which Mankind receiv'd by this Myſtery. At laſt, He teaches Chriſtians to Celebrate the Feſtival of Chriſtmas, by purifying themſelves from their Sins, by imitating the Vertues of Jeſus Chriſt, and particularly his Patience and Humility.

The 39th. Diſcourſe is a Sermon upon the Feſtival Of Lights, that is, upon the Feaſt of Epiphany, on which alſo the Solemnity of the Baptiſm of Jeſus Chriſt is obſerv'd. There he ſpeaks of the Wonderful Effects of this Baptiſm, which had the Vertue of purifying us. He diſtinguiſhes many ſorts of Baptiſm; viz. The Baptiſm of Moſes, the Baptiſm of St. John, the Baptiſm of Jeſus Chriſt, the Baptiſm of the Martyrs, and the Baptiſm of Penance, which he calls a Laborious Baptiſm; and taking occaſion from this laſt he Diſcourſes againſt the Errour of the Novatians. Laſt of all, He adds alſo to this Baptiſm which we have already mentioned, the Baptiſm of Fire, wherewith he ſays one may be baptiz'd in another Life.

The following Diſcourſe was ſpoken the next Day. 'Tis an Inſtruction about Baptiſm to thoſe that are to be baptiz'd: There he obſerves the Excellence of Baptiſm and its marvellous Effects. He ſets down and explains the different Names that are given to this Sacrament. He obſerves, That it conſiſts in Two Things, the Water and the Spirit; That the waſhing the Body with Water, repreſents the Operation of the Spirit in purifying the Soul. He ſays, That Baptiſm is a Compact which we make with God, by which we oblige our ſelves to lead a New Life; That 'tis very dangerous to break the Promiſe which we made at Baptiſm, for there is no more Regeneration, nor perfect Renovation to be hop'd for afterwards; That we may indeed cover the Wound by a multitude of Tears and Sighs, but that it would be much better not to need this Second Remedy, becauſe it is very very difficult and troublesome; and that we can have no assurance but Death may surprize us before our Penance be finish'd. You, says he, addressing himself to the Ministers of Jesus Christ, you can, as the Gardener mention'd in the Gospel, pray the Lord to excuse the barren Fig-tree yet a little longer, you can desire him that he would not cut it down, and that he would permit you to dung it, that's to say, to impose as a penance upon it Weeping, Watching, lying upon the hard Ground, Corporal Mortifications and making humble Satisfaction; but what certainty have you that God will pardon him? Wherefore, my Brethren, being buried by Baptism with Jesus Christ, let us rise with him, let us descend with him into the Waters, that we may ascend with him into Heaven. He proves afterwards, that we ought not to delay the Receiving of Baptism, and refutes the vain Pretences of those who delay it. He says, that Infants are to be Baptiz'd to consecrate them to Jesus Christ from their Infancy. He distinguishes Three Sorts of Persons that are Baptiz'd; the First, are those who do Evil wilfully and with Delight; the Second, are those who commit Sin with some reluctancy, and without approving it; the Third, are those who live well before they are Baptiz'd, either because they are naturally inclin'd to Vertue, or because they would prepare themselves for Baptism. He distinguishes also Three Sorts of Persons among those that do not receive Baptism. Some are Impious and Malicious, who live in the greatest Excesses, and have no Veneration at all for Baptism: Others have a great deal of Respect for this Sacrament, but they delay to Receive it, either through carelessness, or that they may still have the greater liberty to sin: The last are those who cannot receive it, either because of their Infancy, or because of some sudden accident. As to the first, he makes no doubt but they shall be most grievously punish'd, not only for their other Crimes, but also for despising Baptism. As to the Second, he says they shall be less punish'd because they are not kept from Baptism by Malice, but by Negligence or Folly. As to the last, he says, that they shall never partake of Glory, but neither shall they suffer the Punishments of Hell: because tho' they were not Baptiz'd, yet they were free from Sin, and it may be said of them, that they rather suffer'd the Loss than were the Cause of it. He says also in the following Discourse, that Infants must be Baptiz'd, tho' there be no danger of their death. After this he enlarges upon the Effects of Baptism, and upon the divine Fire which purifies us. He concludes according to this Custom, with an Explication of the Trinity. In this Discourse he mentions Unction, and some other Ceremonies of Baptism. These Three Discourses were spoken at Constantinople in 381. St. Gregory Nazianz.

The 41st. Sermon is the First Sermon upon the Feast of Easter, which is very short and contains nothing remarkable. It was spoken at Nazianzum.

In the 42d. Sermon upon the same Festival, having repeated some part of what he had said about the Incarnation of Jesus Christ, in his Oration upon the Feast of Christmas, he explains the Ceremonies of the Jewish Passover, which he applies to the Passion of Jesus Christ. This place shews that his Allegories are very far fetch'd. The rest of his Discourse is a Repetition of what he had said in his Sermon upon the Nativity, concerning the Impiety of Hereticks, and an Exposition of the Faith of the Church. 'Tis thought that this Sermon was compos'd by St. Gregory at Nazianzum, after he return'd from Constantinople.

The 43d. Discourse was spoken at the Feast of the Dedication of the Church of St. Mamas, which was near Nazianzum. There he Discourses of this Dedication which he calls the New Sunday. He exhort his Auditors to Vertue, and concludes with saying something of the Life of St. Mamas. This Discourse was made when St. Gregory Nazianzen was Coadjutor to his Father.

The 44th. Sermon of Pentecost begins with an Instruction about the manner of celebrating these Feasts, after which follow his Commendations of the Number Seven: The rest of the Discourse is, about the Holy Spirit and his Gifts.

These are all the Sermons of St. Gregory Nazianzen. The following Treatises are not Sermons but Letters.

The 45th. is a Letter written to a Monk call'd Evagrius; who could not conceive how the Divine Nature or Substance could be simple, being compos'd of Three Persons. St. Gregory resolves this Difficulty, by saying, That the Essence of God is most simple, and that the Persons tho' distinct yet are not separated, nor really distinguisht from the Divine Essence, which is common to the Three. He explains this by many Examples.

The 46th. is a Letter to Nectarius who was his Successor in the Throne of the Church of Constantinople; where he bewails the unhappiness of the Church which is attack'd by an infinite number of Hereticks. He writes particularly against Apollinarius, whose Errors he relates as they were taken out of one of his own Books. He accuses him of teaching, That the Word assum'd Flesh from all Eternity; of affirming, That the Divinity of Jesus Christ supplied the place of a Humane Soul, and that it may be said to have Suffer'd and to Die as well as the Humanity. After this he observes, that it is not lawful to assemble at the Publick Prayers with Persons of these Opinions: Then he exhorts Nectarius to Act vigorously against the Hereticks, and to pray the Emperour that he would suppress the Liberty which they now had of Meeting and Preaching.

The 47th. Discourse is an Allegorical Explication of the Four Animals mention'd in the First Chap. of Ezekiel. The Greeks doubt whether this Book be St. Gregory's: And indeed the Stile is very confus'd, and every thing is handled without any Order or Design, and it seems to be patched up of various pieces; which makes me believe, with Jacobus Bilius, that this Discourse is unworthy of St. Gregory.

The 48th. Sermon attributed to St. Gregory, is a Discourse in praise of the Martyrs, publish'd by Leunclavius, which is in Greek in the last Edition. This Discourse seems not to me to have St. Gregory's Stile. Some have attributed it to St. Chrysostom.

St. Gregory Nazianz.

The 49th. Diſcourſe of Faith, which is ſaid to be a Tranſlation made by Ruffinus from the Text of Gregory Nazianzen, is the Work of ſome Latin Author, who quotes the Holy Scripture according to the old Latin vulgar Verſion. The Prologue of Ruffinus, which is at the beginning, is a Preface to the Apologetick, and the Seven Diſcourſes of this Author, and not to the Verſion of the Treatiſe of Faith. The ſame Judgment is to be given of the following Treatiſe, concerning the Faith of the Council of Nice, which is not to be found in many Manuſcripts. The Firſt Treatiſe is quoted under the name of St. Gregory by St. Auſtin in his Third Letter; but it muſt certainly be another Gregory than this of Nazianzum: For undoubtedly this Work is a Latin Author's, ſince in two Places he ſpeaks of the Greeks, as not being one himſelf. The Reaſon, or the Word, ſays, he, is call'd by the Greeks λογὸς; and in another place, This is what the Greeks call Homouſion. This Treatiſe therefore muſt be ſome Latin Author's who was call'd Gregory: And there is none to whom it agrees better than Gregory of Batica, of whom we have already ſaid, that he wrote a Treatiſe of Faith. Some have attributed it to St. Ambroſe, others to Vigilius Tapſenſis; but the Citation of St. Auſtin ſhows that it could not be written by this laſt, and that it was not written by the firſt. The following Treatiſe is alſo the ſame Author's, being written to explain the former, as Monſieur Queſnel has ſhown in his 14th. Diſſertation upon the ancient Code of the Roman Church, where this Treatiſe is inſerted.

The 51ſt. and 52d. Treatiſes are Two Letters to Cledonius, which St. Gregory wrote againſt Apollinarius, after he return'd to Pontus, as is obſerv'd by the ancient Author of his Life. In the firſt of theſe two Letters, St. Gregory complains of Apollinarius, that he and his Diſciples publiſh'd new Doctrines, and that they boaſted of their being received by a Synod of Weſtern Biſhops, tho' they were condemn'd in it, and explains the Faith of the Church about the Incarnation, and plainly rejects not only the Errors of Apollinarius, but alſo thoſe that have been ſince publiſh'd by Neſtorius, by Eutyches, and by all the other Hereticks. He gives to the Virgin, the Name and Title of, The Mother of God. Afterwards he refutes the Objections of Apollinarius, and obſerves another Error of this Author concerning the Trinity. He affirms, towards the end of this Letter, that we ought not to communicate with this Heretick. In the 2d. Letter he diſcovers the Tricks and Subtilties which the Apollinarians uſed to make People believe that they were Orthodox. Towards the end of this Letter he has theſe excellent Words: "O ſtrange folly! He pretends to preach that Wiſdom "which has been diſcover'd ſince Jeſus Chriſt. What pity 'tis! For if the Goſpel was not known till "about 30 Years ago, then the Goſpel was of no uſe, for 400 Years that the Church has been eſta- "bliſh'd: In vain have Chriſtians believ'd and ſo many Martyrs ſuffer'd; in vain have ſo many Holy "Biſhops govern'd the Church.

The Paraphraſe upon Eccleſiaſtes was written by St. Gregory Thaumaturgus, as we have obſerv'd in ſpeaking of this Father's Works. But we muſt add hear to what we have ſaid in that place to prove it, that not only St. Jerom teſtifies in his Book of Eccleſiaſtical Writers, that St. Gregory Thaumaturgus wrote a Treatiſe upon Eccleſiaſtes, but that he cites this Treatiſe as his, in his commentary upon the 4th. Chapter, where he quotes a Paſſage which is Word for Word in the 4th. Chapter of this Paraphraſe.

The Poems of St. Gregory Nazianzen were the Fruits of his laſt Retirement; he wrote them in the laſt Years of his Life: In them is to be found all the Fire and Vigour which one would deſire in the Works of a Young Man, and all the thoughts which the practice of Vertue, for the ſpace of many Years, could inſpire into an old Man of conſummate Piety.

The 1ſt. is a Poem which contains the Hiſtory of his own Life from his Birth, till his departure from Conſtantinople. There never was any thing of this Kind written more pleaſantly, more Elegantly, and more naturally than this Life is. In the firſt part he deſcribes his publick and known Actions, where he ſays many things which are very uſeful to explain the Hiſtory of the Council of Conſtantinople, and the Diviſions of the Eaſtern and Weſtern Churches; and there alſo he diſcourſes againſt the Ignorance, the Pride, and the corrupt Manners of the Biſhops of his time.

In the 2d. Part, he deſcribes the Diſpoſitions of his Mind: The former part relates to Hiſtory, and this to Morality; and as there are in the former part many Circumſtances that belong to Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory; ſo this contains many Chriſtian and Moral Thoughts. The former is written in Iambick Verſe, the latter in Hexameters.

In his Poem of the praiſe of Virginity, he handles with much Wit and Eloquence, the Queſtion about the Preheminence of Celibacy above Marriage; and that he may explain this Queſtion the more pleaſantly, after he has enlarg'd upon the Praiſes of Virginity, he makes an excellent Proſopopœia, wherein he brings in married Perſons, and thoſe who obſerve Celibacy, ſpeaking for both their Opinions; each of them ſays all that can be ſaid on their ſide in favour of their State, but the latter have the better.

The 3d. Poem contains many Precepts for Virgins; he recommends to them Silence, Modeſty, Retirement, Labour, and other Vertues neceſſary for a Virgin. Theſe Two Poems are in Hexameter Verſe.

In the 4th. Poem he bewails in general the Miſery of Mankind, caus'd by the Sin of Adam, and relates ſome Circumſtances of his own Life. This is in Elegiacks.

In the 5th. having deſcribed the Croſſes and Sickneſſes which he had endur'd in his Life, he ſubmits himſelf to the Will of God, and offers to him the remainder of his painful Life.

The 6th. is upon the Vanity and Uncertainty of this Mortal Life.

In the 7th. he bewails his Miſeries, and prays to God to deliver him from them.

The 8th. is upon the ſame Subject.

In

St. Gregory Nazianz.

In the 9*th.* he deſcribes a Dream, which he had about the Church of Anaſtaſia.

In the 10*th.* after having deſcribed the Likeneſs and Hypocriſie of the Biſhops of his time, he congratulates himſelf upon his departure from Conſtantinople.

The 11*th.* Poem deſcribes the Vices of wicked Biſhops, and deplores the Diviſion of the Church; there he obſerves, that Perſecutions encreaſed the Church; but Abundance and Riches have done it great Prejudice.

In the 12*th.* which is addreſſed to the Biſhops of the Council of Conſtantinople, he deſcribes after what manner he was forc'd away from that City, and teſtifies his Joy, for that God had recall'd him to his Retirement.

In the 13*th.* he deſcribes the Miſery and Weakneſs of Humane Nature.

He continues the ſame Subject in the 14*th.* wherein he deſcribes the Miſeries of Life, and the Horrour of Death, to teach Men to love nothing but Jeſus Chriſt, and to have no Affection for any thing but the Treaſures in Heaven.

The 15*th.* is alſo upon the ſame Subject, wherein he repreſents the Uncertainty and Inſtability of this Mortal Life, and of Worldly Riches, to convince Men that there is nothing Solid here below, but the Love of Jeſus Chriſt.

The 16*th.* contains the Beatitudes of the Goſpel, and the Rules of a Chriſtian Life.

In the 17*th.* he wiſhes many Imprecations upon himſelf, if he ſhould wander from the Faith of Chriſt, and the Precepts of the Goſpel.

The 18*th.* is againſt the Deſires of the Fleſh.

The 19*th.* is againſt the Devil.

The 20*th.* is an Exhortation which he made to himſelf, to ſtir himſelf up to Converſion.

The 21*ſt.* is an Imprecation upon the Devil, and an Invocation of Jeſus Chriſt.

The 22*d.* is a Prayer to God, to be delivered from this Life of Sin and Death.

The 23*d.* is a Reflection upon the Uncertainty of Life, and the Contempt we ought to have of it.

The 24*th.* and 25*th.* is upon the Weakneſs and Miſery of our Nature.

The 26*th.* is of the Deſire of God.

The 27*th.* and 28*th.* is a Lamentation upon the View of his own Miſeries and Sins.

The 29*th.* is a Prayer to Jeſus Chriſt.

The 30*th.* is a kind of Epitaph.

The 31*ſt.* is a Prayer of a Penitent Perſon.

The 32*d.* is a Farewell to the Devil.

In the 33*d.* he makes a Catalogue of the Books of the Holy Scripture. He diſtinguiſhes thoſe of the Old Teſtament, into Hiſtorical, Poetical and Prophetical; He reckons 12 Hiſtorical, viz. The Five Books of Moſes, Joſhua, Judges, Ruth, the Two Books of Kings, the Chronicles, and Ezra. He reckons 5 Poetical, the Book of Job, the Pſalms of David, Eccleſiaſtes, the Proverbs, and the Song of Solomon; and 5 Prophetical, which are the 12 leſſer Prophets that make but one Book only, Iſaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel and Daniel; which in all make the Number of 22 Books, according to the Number of the Hebrew Letters. Afterwards he reckons up the Books of the New Teſtament, which are the Four Evangeliſts, upon whom he has this Obſervation, That St. Matthew wrote for the Hebrews, St. Mark for the Greeks, St. Luke for the Athenians, and St. John for thoſe who penetrate into the moſt ſublime Things. He joins with the Four Evangeliſts the Fourteen Epiſtles of St. Paul, thoſe of St. James, the two Epiſtles of St. Peter, and the Three of St. John, and that of St. Jude. He concludes with ſaying, That theſe are all the Books of the Holy Scripture, and all that others are Apocryphal.

In the 34*th.* he deſcribes the Plagues of Egypt.

In the 35*th.* he turns the Decalogue into Verſe.

In the 36*th.* the Names of the 12 Patriarchs are put in Verſe, and thoſe of the 12 Apoſtles.

In the 37*th.* and 38*th.* he reconciles the Two Genealogies of Jeſus Chriſt, by explaining the Opinion of Africanus. 'Tis a very ſurprizing thing, that he could put this Critical Queſtion into Verſe, and make all the Names of the Genealogies of Jeſus Chriſt come into Feet, and yet he has done it, and handſomely enough.

In the following Poems, as far as the 46*th.* he turns ſome part of the Hiſtories of the Goſpel into Verſe.

In the 46*th.* he prefers a Monaſtical Life to an Hermetical.

In the 47*th.* He prays Hellenius to eaſe the Monks of Taxes.

In the 48*th.* he exhorts one Julianus, a Magiſtrate, to Alms-giving.

The 49*th.* is written in the Name of Nicobulus the Son, who deſir'd of his Father, that he would ſend him to ſome famous Academy to follow his Studies there.

The 50*th.* is an Anſwer made in the Name of this Father, who exhorts his Son to ſtudy.

The 51*ſt.* is written on the Name of the Son of Vitalianus, to appeaſe the Anger of his Father.

The 52*d.* is againſt a lewd rich Man.

The 53*d.* is a Prayer of St. Gregory as he went into the Fields.

The 54*th.* is of the Silence which he kept during the time of Faſting: There he deſcribes the Miſchiefs which too great deſire of Speaking produces, and the Advantages of Silence.

The 55*th.* is a Hymn to Jeſus Chriſt upon the Feaſt of Eaſter, after he had kept ſilence all the time of Lent.

In the 56*th.* he gives to one Olympias, a Woman ready to be married, ſome very uſeful Precepts for her good Behaviour in Marriage.

The

St. Gregory Nazianz.

The 57th. is upon his Departure from Conſtantinople.

In the 58th. he proves the falſhood of Humane Vertue, and ſhows, That without the Grace of God, all our Endeavours are unprofitable to our Salvation. Without the aſſiſtance of Jeſus Chriſt, ſays he, a Man cannot walk in the way of Salvation: Therefore we muſt take heed that we do not attribute to our ſelves what does not belong to us; we muſt not truſt our own ſtrength, how enlightned ſoever we be; we muſt not deſpiſe thoſe who appear to be leſs advanc'd than we in the way of Vertue, as if we were nearer the Deſign and End of our Courſe. He adds many other Reflections, very proper to beat down the Pride of Man, and to humble him under the Almighty Hand of God.

The 59th. is a bitter Satyr againſt the Monks, who live diſagreeably to the Rules of that State, tho' they wear the Habit.

The 60th. is an excellent Prayer in a time of Sickneſs.

In the 61ſt. he exhorts Nemeſius Governour of Cappadocia, to forſake Paganiſm, and embrace the Chriſtian Religion.

The 62d. is a Collection of very uſeful Chriſtian Thoughts and Maxims for the Conduct of our Lives.

The 63d. is againſt the Pomps, the Ornaments, and ſumptuous Dreſſes of Women; and particularly he applies himſelf to condemn their Painting.

The 64. is an Epitaph upon St. Baſil.

After this there are ſeveral Sentences or Moral Thoughts, which contain the principal Offices of Life.

A Deſcription of Humane Life, and ſeveral Rules or Maxims of Morality.

The following Poem is Dogmatical. St. Gregory explains the principal Articles of the Chriſtian Religion; and he treats of the Unity of God, of the Trinity, of the Divinity of the Son and the Holy Spirit, of the Creation of the World, of Angels and Devils, of the Nature and Origin of the Soul, of the Two Teſtaments, of the cauſe and Effects of the Incarnation of Jeſus Chriſt, and of the Baptiſms of Water and Blood. After this comes a Treatiſe in Verſe upon Virginity, many exhortations to his own Soul, and Prayers to God.

There are beſides 33 Poems written in Iambick Verſe upon different Subjects, a Treatiſe againſt Apollinarius, and ſome other ſeparate things: The Tragedy, entituled Chriſt's Suffering, wants very much of the Beauty, the Judgment and the Gravity of St. Gregory's Pieces, and ſo 'tis not without reaſon that the Criticks Judge it unworthy of him.

We have in the Second Volume of St. Gregory Nazianzen, at the end of his Poetical Works, a Diſcourſe of this Saint about Biſhops; and tho' we have it now only in Latin, yet 'tis plain that 'tis a Tranſlation of a Genuine Treatiſe of St. Gregory's. There he relates after what manner he came to Conſtantinople, and the Troubles he ſuffer'd there for the Eſtabliſhment of the Faith, he complains of the Ingratitude of the Biſhops who forc'd him away from thence; and then he gives a very diſadvantageous Character of them, wherein he repreſents them either Ignorant and Stupid, or Proud and Ambitious, or Covetous, who think of nothing but heaping up of Riches by all kind of Ways, or Hypocrites who under the appearance of Vertue conceal the greateſt Immoralities.

There is in the greateſt part of St. Gregory Nazianzen's Letters, more Wit, Learning and Eloquence, than Doctrine concerning Religion and the Diſcipline of the Church; yet there are ſome of them, wherein he purſues ſome Moral Thoughts with a great deal of Eloquence; as in the 17th. wherein he reproves Cæſarius becauſe he ſtaid in Julian's Court.

The 18th. wherein he Diſcourſes of the Inconſtancy and Frailty of humane Life.

The 19th. and 20th. concerning the Reconciſiation of St. Baſil with Euſebius his Biſhop.

The 22d. and 23d. are written in the Name of his Father to procure the Election of St. Baſil to be Biſhop of Cæſarea.

The 26th. is about the Calumny that had been raiſed againſt St. Baſil, for his diſguiſing his Opinion about the Divinity of the Holy Spirit.

The 31ſt. and 32d. wherein he complains that St. Baſil had made him Biſhop of Saſima.

The 37th. wherein he Comforts St. Gregory Nyſſen, upon the Death of his Brother.

The 38th. to a Lady who would force a Biſhop away from his Biſhoprick, under Pretence that he ow'd her very conſiderable Sums of Money, having formerly managed her Eſtate.

The 43d. wherein he reproves St. Gregory Nyſſen, becauſe he applied himſelf more to the Study of humane Learning than of the Holy Scripture.

The 55th. wherein he declares, That he was afraid of all Eccleſiaſtical Aſſemblies, Becauſe I never ſaw, ſays he, the End of a Council which was happy and pleaſant, and which did not rather encreaſe the Evil than diminiſh it. But this Cenſure which he wrote when he was vex'd with the Council of Conſtantinople, which had not treated him very favourably, ought not to paſs for a Rule, but only for a Teſtimony of his reſentment which came from St. Gregory in his Paſſion.

The 59th. and 71ſt. wherein he exhorts his Brother and Poſthumianus to make Peace between the Biſhops.

The 63d. wherein he exhorts a Particular Perſon to embrace the Chriſtian Philoſophy, and to deſpiſe the things of this World.

The 64th. 66th. 67th. and 70th. wherein he exhorts another Perſon to bear his Pains and Sickneſs patiently.

The

The 81ſt. is an Excellent Exhortation to Patience, and ſome others. But the moſt conſiderable of them all is the 219th. to Theodorus the Biſhop of Tyanea, which might be plac'd amongſt the Canonical ones: The Biſhop to whom he writes had conſulted him about an Oath, or an Aſſeveration made in Writing in a certain Affair: He who made this Agreement not willing to hold it longer, cited him with whom he had agreed, before a Judge, and made void the Compact in Court. Now it was ask'd whether this Man ſhould be treated as a perjur'd Perſon, ſince he had not made a Solemn Oath, according to the ordinary Forms. St. Gregory anſwers in this Letter, That he is not at all of their Opinion, who think that no Oaths but thoſe which are made with the Mouth, and according to the uſual Forms, by laying their Hands upon the Holy Goſpels, do oblige in Conſcience, and that Aſſeverations made in Writing do not bind after the ſame manner: "For ſays he, If Contracts made in Writing do more bind a Debtor than bare verbal "Promiſes, Why ſhall not Oaths ſet down in Writing have at leaſt as much Force, as thoſe "which are ſpoken with the Mouth? In a word, Is an Oath any thing elſe, but the Affirmation of "him who promiſes, or who aſſures any thing?" From whence he concludes, That this Man who had brought his Action in Law, to have this Compact diſſolv'd, which he was obliged by Oath to fulfil, tho' he gain'd his Cauſe, yet was guilty of Perjury, and ought to do Penance for his Sin. This is a very uſeful Admonition in our time, wherein there is ſcarce any heed given to Oaths and Affirmations that are made in Writing, as if they were nothing but mere Formalities of Law, and not truly and properly Oaths. St. Gregory teaches the ſame thing in the Poem made againſt thoſe who Swear often, where he ſays upon this Subject, Is one leſs oblig'd by writing than by his Words? And tho he ſhould not have touch'd the Goſpels, yet does he owe ever the leſs Reverence for God?

St. Gregory Nazianz.

[By Canonical Epiſtles here, thoſe are meant which were written to determine ſome particular Queſtion in Diſcipline, as the Canons of Councils uſually did: Of this Nature were St. Baſil's Letters to St. Amphilochius mentioned above.]

The Letters of St. Gregory are in number 242, if we comprehend in that number the 10 laſt publiſhed by Sirmondus; but there are ſome of St. Baſil's which are mix'd among them, as the 30th. the 206th. and 207th. His Teſtament tho' Ancient and Genuine relates only to his Domeſtick Affairs, and contains nothing but the Diſpoſal of his Eſtate. This is all that we have to ſay in particular of the Works of Gregory Nazianzen: The Judgment which may be made of them in general is this:

It cannot be doubted, but this Author won the Prize of Eloquence from all the reſt of his Age; for he does certainly excel them for the Purity of his Words, the Nobleneſs of his Expreſſions, the Ornament of his Diſcourſe, the Variety of his Figures, the Juſtneſs of his Compariſons, the Beauty of his Reaſonings, and the Sublimity of his Thoughts. St. Jerome and Suidas ſay, That he imitated an ancient Author call'd Polemon, but we may ſay, That his Stile approach'd very near to that of Iſocrates. How lofty ſoever it be, it is Natural, flowing gently and pleaſantly; his Periods are full, and hold up to the End; he has a wonderful abundance of Words, an unparallel'd eaſineſs of Expreſſion, and a moſt agreeable turn of Wit. His Orations are compos'd with much Art and Method, for in them he uſes ſuch Characters as are moſt agreeable to his Subject and his Auditors; ſo that one may ſay of him, That he was one of the moſt perfect Orators of Greece; yet he affected too many Antitheſes, Alluſions, Similitudes, Compariſons, and certain other Fineneſſes of Oratory, which ſeem to render it Effeminate. Sometimes alſo his Thoughts and Reaſonings are falſe; but then 'tis cover'd with the ſparkling of his Expreſſions, and involv'd in the multitude of his Words. He is extremely Copious, and ſays but few things in many Periods. There are great numbers of Philoſophical Thoughts interwoven in his Sermons, and they are full of Illuſtrations taken from Hiſtory and Fables. He teaches Morality in ſuch a manner as is more proper for Philoſophers than the common People; but he is very Sublime and very Exact in the Explication of Myſteries, a Quality which made him deſerve the Name of The Divine by way of Excellency. He had much Piety, but little skill in Managing of Buſineſs. He was ſo paſſionate a Lover of Retirement, that he could not for a conſiderable time apply himſelf to any Employment that hindred him from it. He eaſily undertook great things, but he quickly repented of his Undertakings. He had in his Life-time three Biſhopricks, and yet it cannot be ſaid that he was lawful Biſhop of any one of them. For he would not have that of Saſima to which he was Ordain'd; and he did not accept of that of Nazianzum, but only for a time, to be Coadjutor to his Father, but upon Condition that he ſhould not ſucceed him. When he came to Conſtantinople, he had no deſign to be Biſhop of that Church, neither did he take the Title upon him. 'Tis true that he was afterwards plac'd upon the Epiſcopal Throne by the Emperor and ſome Biſhops; but he was at laſt forced to leave it. He was of a Moroſe and Satyrical Humour; he lov'd Raillery and ſpar'd no body; but chiefly the Biſhops that were not worthy of their Miniſtry, or that did not lead a Life agreeable to their Holy Orders.

Theſe are the Editions of the Works of this Father. In the Year 1504, Aldus Manutius, a Printer at Venice, publiſh'd one part of his Greek Poems; In the Year 1516 he publiſh'd Sixteen Orations, and Nine more in 1536. Afterwards all the Works of St. Gregory Nazianzen were collected together and printed in Greek at Baſle by Hervagius in the Year 1550. The ancient Verſion of Ruffinus was printed at Leipſick about the Year 1522, without any Name. The Tranſlation of Billibaldus Pircheymerus was printed at the ſame time with the Greek at Baſle by Hervagius in 1550. In 1571 Leunclavius tranſlated 19 Orations which were printed by the ſame Printer. But all theſe Verſions being very imperfect, Jacobus Billius Abbot of St. Michael of the Hermitage, who was one of the ableſt Men of the laſt Age in the Greek Tongue, made a New Verſion of St. Gregory's Works, which was firſt printed at Paris in 1569, and at Cologne in 1570; but the Edition of the ſame Verſion which Genebrard publiſhed at Paris in 1583, and Dedicated to Pope Gregory the

St. Gregory Nazianz.

the XIII. is much more large and more exact. 'Tis this Verſion which has the Greek Text on one ſide, in the Paris Edition in Two Volumes, made by Morellus in 1609. Then there follow'd in the Edition of the Greek Text, the Corrections and Notes which Billius made on the Margin of St. Gregory at Baſle, and it was review'd by many Manuſcripts. The Firſt Volume contains the Life of St. Gregory Nazianzen, written by Gregory the Prieſt, the Orations and Letters of St. Gregory, together with an Addition, which contains the Greek Text of the Oration to the praiſe of the Martyrs, ſome Letters, and the Greek and Latin Teſtament of St. Gregory, with the Notes of Morellus, and ſome Critical Obſervations upon the Text, the different Readings and many Corrections. The Second Volume contains the Poems which had been already publiſh'd by Billius, with his Verſion in Verſe, and ſome others tranſlated by Morellus, the Treatiſe of Biſhops, and the Latin Commentaries of Elias Cretenſis, Nicetas Serronius, Pſellus, Cyrus, and Billius upon all the Works of St. Gregory Nazianzen. This Edition is one of the faireſt in Greek and Latin, that was ever printed at Paris: In it the Greek Text is printed very Neatly and Exactly, the Latin Verſion is Noble and Elegant. The Beauty of the Latin Verſe is little inferior to that of the Greek, and the Diſcourſes are rang'd in a very good Order; yet there are ſome Faults in the Text. The Verſion is not always Literal and Faithful enough, and the Order of time is not exactly obſerv'd, neither in the Letters, nor in the Orations. There remains now nothing for me to do, but to take notice of the particular Editions of ſome diſtinct Pieces of his Works. We have his Theological Orations tranſlated by Moſſellanus, printed at Paris, by Chevallon, in 1532; 38 Orations of Pircheymerus's Verſion, printed at Baſle in 1551. ſome others tranſlated by Gabriellius at Antwerp in 1575; ſome Greek Sermons at Ausburg in 1587; three Sermons with Corrections upon the Text of St. Gregory Nazianzen, printed at Antwerp in 1573; the Homily of Whitſunday, Greek and Latin, at Leipſick in 1582; the Oration of The Love of the Poor, tranſlated by Zinus in 1550, printed by Vaſcoſanus; the ſame Oration with the Apologetical Diſcourſe, and the Sermon upon the Birth of Jeſus Chriſt by Eugubinus, printed by Plantin in 1513. The Two Invectives againſt Julian, and ſome other Works at Eaton, in 1610; the Sermon upon Eaſter, tranſlated by Oecolampadius; the Oration upon St. Athanaſius at Paris in 1627; ſome Select Poems printed at Rome in 1592 and 1599; the Tetraſtick Verſes at Venice in 1562; the Poems tranſlated by Billius, with the Notes of Cyrus at Paris in 1562; the Poems about Definitions tranſlated and publiſhed by Hoëſchelius, with the Tranſlation of Leunclavius, in the Printing-Houſe of St. Andrew in 1591; ſome Poems by Plantin in 1556; the Poems of the Rules of Life collected by Sambuçus, by Plantin in 1568; the Poems about Principles at Amſterdam in 1568; the Poem of his Life with the Tranſlation of Billius in 1598; the Poem of the Canonical Books at Paris in Latin in 1561; ſome Odes in 1603; the Tragedy Of Jeſus Suffering, in Greek, at Rome in 1542, and at Louvain in 1544: His Letters printed with thoſe of St. Baſil, and tranſlated by Comanus; Two Letters to Themiſtius printed apart; the Letter to Nicobulus printed alſo apart in 1597; the Teſtament publiſh'd by Leunclavius at Frankford in 1596, at Eaton in 1610; by Briſſonius in his Forms, by Baronius in his Annals; and Laſtly, by Sirmondus, at the End of the Edition, Greek and Latin, of 1609.

St. GREGORY NYSSEN.

St. Gregory Nyſſen.

ST. GREGORY Biſhop of Nyſſa a City of Cappadocia, Brother of St. Baſil, was born about the Year 339. He did not embrace a Solitary Life, as his Brothers Baſil, Peter and Naucratius did, but continued in the World, and Married a Wife call'd Theoſebia. (a) He profeſs'd at firſt Rhetorick, and with much Difficulty quitted that Employment to enter into Orders. (b) He was made Biſhop ſome time after St. Baſil in the Year 371. But he did not continue long in peaceable Poſſeſſion of his See; for he was quickly perſecuted by the Emperour Valens, and forc'd away from his Church in 374, by Demoſthenes who ſubſtituted in his room a ſad Wretch, as we have already obſerv'd in the Life of St. Baſil. He return'd with the other exil'd Biſhops in the Year 378, and was reſtor'd to the Poſſeſſion of his Epiſcopal See. He appear'd after this with Splendor at the General Council of Conſtantinople in the Year 382, where he was choſen to make a Funeral Oration upon Meletius the Patriarch of Antioch, and delegated to be one of thoſe Biſhops who ſhould viſit the Dioceſs of Pontus, as appears by the Law of the Emperour Theodoſius, and as St. Gregory himſelf teſtifies in his Epiſtle to Flavianus. 'Tis believ'd that he was preſent alſo at a Council held in this City in the Year 383, and that he ſpoke there the Diſcourſe againſt the Anomæans, which is entitled, A Diſcourſe about Abraham, or, Of the Divinity of the Son and Holy Spirit. In 385, he preach'd alſo at Conſtantinople the Funeral Oration of the Empreſs Placilla. In ſhort, his Name appears in the Liſt of Metropolitans in the Council held at Conſtantinople for the Dedication of the Church of Ruffini in the Year 394. But it is certain he died ſoon after.

This Father wrote many Books which are Commentaries upon Scripture, Dogmatical Treatiſes,

(a) He married a Wife call'd Theoſebia.] In the Oration of St. Gregory Nazienzen in Commendation of St. Baſil, he very clearly obſerves, That St. Gregory Nyſſen was he of the Four Brethren that was engag'd in Marriage; and the ſame St. Gregory in Ep. 95. comforts St. Gregory Nyſſen upon the Death of Theoſebia, wherein he ſpeaks of his Wife.

(b) With much Difficulty quitted that Employment to enter into Orders.] St. Gregory Nazianzen reproves him in Ep. 34. for that he having diſcharg'd the Office of a Reader in the Church, ſeem'd willing to embrace his ancient Profeſſion, addicting himſelf wholly to the Study of Rhetorick and Humane Learning.

Sermons

Sermons upon the Myſteries of Religion, Diſcourſes of Morality, Panegyricks upon the Saints, Funeral Orations, and ſome Letters concerning Diſcipline.

St. Gregory Nyſſen.

The Firſt Book upon the Scripture is a ſmale Piece upon the Creation, wherein without inſiſting upon the Queſtions which St. Baſil had explain'd before, he endeavours principally to explain the Senſe of the Words of Geneſis, and the Order of the Creation.

The Second Book of St. Gregory Nyſſen is his Treatiſe about the Formation of Man, divided into Thirty Chapters, wherein he handles many Queſtions more curious than uſeful concerning the Creation of the World, the Formation of Man, the Nature and Origin of his Soul, concerning the Reſurrection, and the Structure of a Humane Body. There he teaches, That the Soul is a Spirit which is equally in all parts of the Body; he refutes the Opinion of Origen concerning the Pre-exiſtence of Souls before the Body, and maintains that they are form'd in the ſame moment with the Body. He thinks, That in the State of Innocence there would have been no Generation, but that Men would have multipled by ſome other means.

The Two following Homilies about the Formation of Man are St. Baſil's, as we have already obſerv'd. There is alſo a Homily in the Second Volume upon the ſame Subject, wherein he explains all the Senſes in which it can be ſaid, That Man was created after the Image and Likeneſs of God. We may place among the number of Commentaries upon the Old Teſtament, the little Tract of the Witch of Endor, wherein he explains a part of the 28th. Chapter of the Firſt Book of Samuel, and proves that it was not truly the Soul of Samuel that appear'd to Saul, but that it was the Devil, who aſſum'd the Likeneſs of this Prophet.

The Book of the Life of Moſes is an Alegorical Explication of all the actions of this Lawgiver to the Jews, from whence he draws either Moral Inſtructions, or ſome Reflections upon Religion; upon which account 'tis alſo entitled, Of a perfect Life.

The Two Treatiſes upon the Inſcriptions of the Pſalms, are more uſeful than the preceding. In the Firſt, he treats of the End, the Order, and the Diſtribution of the Pſalms. He affirms, That their End is to teach the way of Vertue which leads to Happineſs; That they are uſeful and delightful to all ſorts of Perſons, in what State and Condition ſoever they be, and whatſoever their Diſpoſition be. He divides the Pſalms into Five Parts, the Firſt ends at the 40th. Pſalm, the Second at the 71ſt. the Third at the 88th. the Fourth at the 105th. and the Fifth continues to the End of the Pſalms. He is of Opinion that the Pſalms contain'd in the Firſt Part were compos'd to diſſuade Men from Vice, and induce them to Vertue; That thoſe which are in the Second, repreſent the Thirſt and Ardour of thoſe who have any Knowledge of Vertue, and any reliſh of its Sweetneſs; That thoſe of the Third Part deſcribe the State of thoſe Perſons who are advanc'd to the Knowledge of Divine Things; That thoſe of the Fourth raiſe Men's Minds above all things in this World; That thoſe of the Fifth elevate a Man to the Higheſt top of Perfection. There is more Wit than Solidity in theſe Reflections, as well as in the Interpretations of the Titles or Inſcriptions of the Pſalms, which he has given in his Second Part, and are almoſt all of them Allegorical. The ſame Judgment ought to be made of his Homily upon the 6th. Pſalm which follows this Treatiſe.

The Eight Homilies upon Eccleſiaſtes are leſs forc'd, more uſeful and more natural: Thoſe upon the Canticles are wholly Allegorical; but this Book cannot otherwiſe be explain'd. He wrote alſo upon the Proverbs, as he teſtifies at the beginning of the Homilies upon Eccleſiaſtes; but that Commentary of his is loſt. Poſſinius has promiſed his entire Commentary upon Eccleſiaſtes.

The Firſt Diſcourſe of Prayer is concerning the neceſſity of it, and the manner wherein we ought to pray. The Four other Diſcourſes are an Explication of the Lord's Prayer, as the following Treatiſe is an Explication of the Beatitudes: He always interweaves his Moral Reflections with a multitude of Allegories, Compariſons, and Hiſtories, which render them leſs profitable and more tedious.

In the Homily upon the Words of Chap. 15. of the 1ſt. Epiſtle to the Corinthians, When all things ſhall be ſubdued unto God even the Father, then ſhall the Son himſelf alſo be ſubject unto him, which is the Firſt in the Second Volume; he refutes the Conſequences which the Arians draw from this Paſſage, and ſhows, That by the ſubjection of the Son, we muſt not underſtand a State of Servitude, but the Immortality and Happineſs of the Humane Nature of Jeſus Chriſt.

The Longeſt and moſt Excellent of all the Dogmatical Works of St. Gregory Nyſſen, is his Treatiſe againſt Eunomius, divided into Twelve Books (c) wherein he refutes a part of what this Heretick had aſſerted in his Apology in anſwer to St. Baſil. St. Gregory compos'd this Book after the Death of this Father, as we learn from the Letter at the begining of it, which is addreſs'd to his Brother Peter of Sebaſtea. At the beginning of the Firſt Book he defends the Perſon and Conduct of St. Baſil againſt the Calumnies of Eunomius: He deſcribes the Life of this Heretick and that of his Maſter Aetius, and afterwards refutes the Impious Reaſonings of this Heretick, and explains the Paſſages of Scripture which he alledges to prove his Errors. Photius aſſures us, That in this Book St. Gregory did far excell the other Two Authors which have written againſt the ſame Book of Eunomius, as well for the Beauty and Sweetneſs of his Eloquence, as for the Strength and Multitude of his Arguments. He particularly praiſes the laſt Book which in his time was conſider'd as a diſtinct Treatiſe.

His great Catechetical Diſcourſe is an Excellent Treatiſe of the Manner, in which the Jews, Pagans, (c) His Treatiſe againſt Eunomius, divided into Twelve Books.] There are ſome who have reckoned Thirteen; but they have inconveniently divided the Fifth Book into Two. Theſe Books are quoted according to the preſent Diviſion by Theodoret, and the Sixth Council. St. Jerom in his Catologue Teſtifies, That St. Gregory Nyſſen read this Diviſion of his Treatiſe to him.

St. Gregory Nyſſen.

and Hereticks are to be Inſtructed, to Convince them of the Truth of our Religion. St. Gregory Nyſſen obſerves in the Preface, That the Reaſons which are to be uſed againſt Pagans, who deny the Unity of God, are different from thoſe that muſt be alledg'd againſt the Jews who oppoſe the Trinity, and that the Method which is to be follow'd in refuting the Hereticks who oppoſe the Divinity of One of the Three Perſons, ſhould be different from that which is obſerved in proving the Trinity againſt the Jews: That in diſputing both againſt the one and the other, we muſt uſe Principles agreeable to Reaſon, in which they and we are agreed; That when one Diſputes againſt an Atheiſt, he muſt prove the Exiſtence of a God by the Creation of the World; and when he has to do with a Pagan who admits many Deities, he muſt prove to him that there is but One, becauſe God muſt be abſolutely perfect, and there can be no more of this Nature but One. With reſpect to the Jew, he would have us endeavour to make him underſtand the Divine Word, by comparing it with the Word of Underſtanding, or the Reaſon that is in Men, and give him alſo ſome Idea of the Holy Spirit, by comparing him to the Breath that is in us, and then after that he would have us to prove the Exiſtence of the Divine Word by the Teſtimonies of Holy Scripture. To make the Incarnation appear probable to the Jews and to the Gentiles, he ſhews them, That Man has fallen from the State wherein he was created; That his Nature is corrupted by Sin; That it cannot be ſaid, that God is the Author of Evil; That therefore Man muſt have fallen by his own Fault, and by abuſing his Liberty; but that Man being once fallen, muſt be raiſed up again by him who created him; and thus it was reaſonable that the Word who created him, ſhould come himſelf to raiſe him from his Fall, and ſave him from his Shipwrack. Afterwards he anſwers all the Difficulties which are propos'd againſt the Incarnation; he ſays, That it was not unworthy of God to be born of a Virgin, to Eat, to Drink, to Die, and to be Buried, becauſe theſe things are neither criminal nor diſhonourable; That the Divinity being united to the Humane Nature did not loſe its Divine Perfections, as the Soul does not loſe its Spiritual Perfections by being united to the Body; That the Union of Soul and Body to compoſe a Man is no leſs incomprehenſible than the Union of the Divine and Humane Nature in Jeſus Chriſt; That the Miracles of Jeſus Chriſt, his extraordinary Birth, and his Reſurrection, are evident Proofs of his Divinity; That the Reaſon which mov'd him to become Man, was his Good-Will towards Men, and his Compaſſion towards Mankind; That his Divinity always continued impaſſible and incorruptible; That the Incarnation of Jeſus Chriſt was the moſt natural Remedy for us miſerable Sinners, and moſt agreeable to the Goodneſs, the Juſtice, the Wiſdom and Power of God; That he came at ſuch a time when Wickedneſs was arriv'd to its higheſt pitch; That he called all Men, but by calling them to the Faith he did not take away their Liberty; and this was the reaſon why many of them ſtill periſh'd; That Men ought not to be compell'd and forc'd to do good, for this would take away the praiſe of good Actions, and the blame of bad ones; That Chriſt ought to die, that he might be wholly like unto us, and that he might confirm our Reſurrection by his own; That all that he did after his Reſurrection firmly proves his Divinity. Afterwards he ſpeaks of Baptiſm and the Euchariſt: He ſays of Baptiſm, that there are Three Things in this Sacrament which conduct us to Immortal Life, Prayer, Water and Faith; That the Regeneration which is wrought in Baptiſm ought not to be attributed to the Water, but to a Divine Virtue; That by dipping the Perſon under Water Three Times, the Death and Reſurrection of Jeſus Chriſt is repreſented; That without Baptiſm no Man can be waſh'd from his Sins, becauſe by it the Divine Vertue is rendred effectual, in conſequence of that which he believes to depend upon Free-will; That as the Soul is united to God by Baptiſm and by Faith, ſo the Body is united to God by the Euchariſt. This is the Doctrine of St. Gregory Nyſſen, who ſays, That the Body of Jeſus Chriſt entring into us, is an Antidote or Preſervative againſt Sin; That it changes and transforms us into him, and communicates unto us Incorruptibility. Afterwards he enquires, "How it is poſſible, that this Body which is diſtributed alone to ſo many Millions "of the Faithful over all the Earth, ſhould be entire in each of theſe, and in each part which they re- "ceive, and yet not ceaſe to remain ſtill entire in it ſelf: And he anſwers, That the Body of Jeſus "Chriſt having been the Habitation of the Word of God, was chang'd into a Divine Dignity: And "therefore I have reaſon to believe, ſays he, that to this Day the Bread being Sanctified by the Word "of God, is chang'd into the Body of the Word of God: For here the Bread is Sanctified by the Word "of God and Prayer; not that 'tis preſently turn'd into the Body of God by eating it, but becauſe "it is transform'd and chang'd at the ſame time into his Body, as the Word has ſaid in theſe Words, This is my Body," He adds, That this Fleſh of Jeſus Chriſt is communicated to us, and is changed into us, by means of the Bread and Wine which God hath chang'd and transformed into his Body, by Virtue of the ſacred Benediction. He ſpeaks in the following Diſcourſe of Regeneration. He thinks that it depends in ſome manner upon our Will and Free Pleaſure; and ſhews that it is unprofitable, unleſs after we have received the Sacrament, we lead a Life free from Sin. At laſt, he Diſcourſes of the Reward of thoſe who have liv'd well, and the puniſhment of the wicked. He affirms, That the Fire of Hell is of another Nature than the Fire upon Earth. There are at the End ſome Periods added againſt the Heretick Severus. Some Proteſtant Criticks have call'd this Book in Queſtion, whether it was St. Gregory's or no; but the ableſt, as Caſaubon and Albertin have been forc'd to acknowledge it, becauſe they found it quoted oftentimes by Theodoret in his Dialogues, and taken notice of by Euthymius Zigabenus.

In the Book of Faith addreſs'd to Simplicius, St. Gregory treats of the Trinity. There he proves the Divinity of the Son and the Holy Spirit, and anſwers the principal Objections of the Hereticks.

The Diſcourſe which was formerly Entituled, Of Great Abraham, is now, Of the Divinity of the Son and the Holy Spirit; there he anſwers the Anomœans, whom he compares to the Epicureans and the the Stoicks; he makes alſo a great Digreſſion in praiſe of Abraham, wherein he deſcribes the Sacrifice of his Son very naturally. St. Gregory Nyſſen.

In the Treatiſe addreſs'd to Ablavius, and Entituled, That we muſt not ſay there are Three Gods, he ſhews that the Three Divine Perſons cannot be call'd Three Gods, but that they are One God only.

The Treatiſe to Euſtathius, and that of the Difference of Hypoſtaſis and Nature, are upon the ſame Subject; but they are found, as we have already ſaid, among the Letters of St. Baſil, and 'tis probable that the Firſt was written by him.

The Latin Treatiſe which contains the Paſſages of the Old Teſtament, to prove the Divinity of the Son againſt the Jews, is not St. Gregory Nyſſen's, ſince St. Chryſoſtom, who liv'd after St. Gregory, is cited in it.

The Treatiſe of Common Notions addreſs'd to the Greeks, is a Scholaſtical Treatiſe about the Tearms, by which the Ancients us'd to explain the Myſtery of the Trinity.

There are two little Tracts of St. Gregory Nyſſen's againſt Apollinarius; the one very ſhort in the Firſt Volume, which is probably nothing but a Fragment; the other a little longer in the Second Volume. There he refutes ſome Objections of this Heretick; and proves, that 'tis the ſame Word which appear'd to the Patriarchs, and which aſſum'd real Fleſh in time, and which is ſo intimately united to the Humane Nature, that what agrees to God is attributed to Man.

In the little Tract againſt the Manichees, St. Gregory proves againſt theſe Hereticks, that Evil is not an uncoruptible and uncreated Nature, no more than the Devil who is the Author of it. He demonſtrates this by Ten Syllogiſms.

In the Treatiſe of Diſtiny he particularly diſputes againſt Judicial Aſtrology, which makes our Actions depend upon the Courſe and Influence of the Stars.

In the Treatiſe of the Soul, which is in the Second Volume, he firſt relates the different Sentiments of Philoſophers and Hereticks concerning the Original and Nature of the Soul, and then proves that it is a Spiritual and Immortal Subſtance which is united to the Body, which penetrates, and actuates it. He compares this Union to that of the Divine and Humane Nature in Jeſus Chriſt, and rejects the Opinion of Origen concerning the Aſcenſion and Deſcent of Souls.

The Second Treatiſe of the Soul and the Reſurrection, which is in the Third Volume, is a Dialogue which St. Gregory is ſuppos'd to have had with his Siſter Marcina after the Death of St. Baſil their Brother. There he proves the Immortality of the Soul. He is of Opinion, that it will diſtinctly know its Body at the Day of Judgment. He explains the Story of the wicked Rich Man and Lazarus Allegorically. There he refutes the Tranſmigration of Souls, and proves the Reſurrection.

In the Treatiſe addres'd to Jerius concerning the untimely death of Infants, he endeavours to anſwer this Queſtion, Why God ſuffered Infants to Die before they come to the Uſe of Reaſon? The moſt general Reaſon that he offers is, That he does it to prevent thoſe Sins that theſe Infants would have commited, if they had come to the Age of Diſcretion. And becauſe it may be objected to him, Why then does God permit ſo many wicked Perſons to live, who had been more happy if they had never been, or if they ſhould have died ſooner? He Anſwers, That God permits it, Firſt, becauſe he draws Good out of the Evil which they do; Secondly, becauſe their Puniſhment ſerves for an Example of God's Juſtice.

Some Criticks have queſtioned whether the Book of Virginity was St. Gregory Nyſſen's. The only Reaſon which they alledg'd for caling it in queſtion, is, becauſe the Author was Married: But this Reaſon is ſo far from proving what they intend, that it rather proves the contrary, ſince 'tis certain that St. Gregory Nyſſen had a Wife, as we have already ſhown. He deſcribes in this Treatiſe the advantages of Virginity, and the Inconveniencies of Marriage; nevertheleſs he does not deſign to condemn Marriage. He adds, that the Chriſtian Virginity does not only conſiſt in the Purity of the Body, but alſo in the Purity of the Soul. He recommends Temperance, and the ſhuning of Pleaſures and Voluptuouſneſs, and gives many Rules and Examples of Chriſtian Vertues.

The Sermons or Homilies of the Myſteries have much of the nature of Dogmatical Treatiſes. Thus in the Sermon upon the Nativity, having exhorted the Faithful to celebrate this Feſtival with joy, he explains ſome Queſtions about the Incarnation, and clears up ſome Circumſtances about the Nativity. He follows the ſame Method in the Five Sermons upon Eaſter, which are fill'd with many Allegories. In the Sermon of the Aſcenſion of Jeſus Chriſt, he explains the 23d. and 24th. Pſalms.

In that of Whitſunday, he exhorts Men to make themſelves worthy to Receive the Holy Spirit.

In that upon the Feſtival of the Baptiſm of Jeſus Chriſt, he treats of the Spiritual Regeneration which is wrought by Baptiſm, and exhorts thoſe that are newly Baptiz'd, to lead a pure Life and free from Sin.

In the Diſourſe of the preſenting of Jeſus Chriſt in the Temple, of the Purification of the Virgin, and of Simeon, he makes many Allegories upon theſe Myſteries.

The Diſcourſes of Morality are leſs Allegorical, and more uſeful than thoſe that we have ſpoken of already. The Subject of thoſe which we now have is as follows.

In the Oration upon his Ordination, St. Gregory diſcourſes of the Miſeries of the Church, and the little Faith which was to be found among the Chriſtians of his time. He condemns the Diviſions which were in the Church, and the Sophiſms that were us'd about Myſteries. He exhorts Men to pray for the Gifts of the Holy Spirit, and to diſpoſe themſelves to receive them.

St. Gregory Nyſſen.

In the Diſcourſe againſt thoſe that delay Baptiſm, he exhorts the Catechumens to receive Baptiſm preſently without delaying it from day to day, as many Catechumens do. He invites them to draw near to Baptiſm, that they may be deliver'd from their Sins. He terrifies them with the fear of Death, the time whereof is uncertain. He makes them aſham'd of continuing ſo long in the Rank of Catechumens. He inſpires them with a Deſire of receiving Baptiſm, by repreſenting to them the Graces which it conveys, and the wonderful Effects which it produces. He thinks that it would be better to ſin after Baptiſm, than to die without it. He refutes the Pretence of thoſe who delay to receive Baptiſm, becauſe they find themſelves ſtill inclin'd to ſin: He ſays, that they deceive themſelves, if they think that after they have ſpent their Life in Pleaſures and Debauchery, they ſhall be purified by receiving Baptiſm at the point of Death. He diſtinguiſhes, as St. Gregory Nazianzen did, three Sorts of Perſons with relation to another Life. The Firſt Sort are the Saints and Righteous who are happy; The Second, are thoſe who ſhall neither be Happy nor Miſerable; The Third, are thoſe who ſhall be puniſh'd for their Sins. He places in the ſecond Rank thoſe who delay their Baptiſm till the Point of Death. This is a ſingular Opinion of his, and does not agree with the Holy Scripture; which has made ſome believe that this Treatiſe was not St. Gregory Nyſſen's: But it has his Stile and Air, and is not much different from his Doctrine, nor from that of St. Gregory Nazianzen in the Diſcourſe which he made upon the ſame Subject.

The Diſcourſe of Penance (d) contains two Parts: The Firſt againſt thoſe who reprove their Brethren with much ſharpneſs, and condemn them upon ſlight Grounds; and the Second againſt thoſe Sinners who do no Penance, or do it very negligently. He proves by the Example of Jeſus Chriſt, who convers'd among Phariſees and Sinners, that Sinners are not to be treated with much Rigour, nor to be condemn'd raſhly. He adds, that by uſing them hardly we throw them into Deſpair; That we ought to conſider that we are all Sinners; That God invites all the World to accept of his Grace; That we ought to ſupport the Weak, according to the Example of Jeſus Chriſt; That the greateſt Sinners have obtain'd Mercy, and that God is always ready to pardon thoſe who are penitent. He ſhows afterwards, that Harſhneſs and Rigour, do not agree with the Laity, who by condemning others with too much Severity, condemn themſelves; nor with Biſhops and Prieſts, whoſe Character ſhould be Mild and Charitable, as he proves by the Examples of Moſes and Jeſus Chriſt. He obſerves, that a good Paſtor ſhould do as the Gardener mention'd in the Goſpel, who pray'd his Maſter to ſpare the barren Fig-Tree a little longer, and that he ſhould follow the Example of Moſes, who continually begg'd Pardon of God for the People of Iſrael; and whoſe Affection went ſo far, that he wiſh'd he might be blotted out of the Book of Life, if God would pardon the Sins of his People. He ſubjoins the Example of the Prodigal Son, and ſays, That from thence we ought to learn to open the Church to Penitent Sinners, and to treat them with Mildneſs and Charity. But after he has ſaid theſe things againſt the too great Severity of ſome Miniſters of the Church, who deſpis'd thoſe that came near them as Supplicants, who would not regard them in their Afflictions, who ſhunn'd and repuls'd them; he exhorts Sinners to Repentance by the Example of the Woman that was a Sinner, who is mention'd in St. Luke. He ſays, that they muſt imitate her Weeping, her Tears, her Humility and Penance. He declaims againſt thoſe Penitents, who liv'd after the ſame manner that they us'd to do before they were in a State of Penance. "They "have, ſays he, the ſame Gravity in their Countenances, the ſame Magnificence in their Apparel, they "fare as ſumptuouſly as they did before, they ſleep as well as they did, they mind the ſame Buſineſs "as before; in ſhort, they take upon them the Name of Penitents, and do no Actions of Penance. "They are by their own Fault debarr'd from the Sacred Myſteries, and from the Communion of Ho"ly Things, and they take no care, nor are any ways ſollicitous to be re-admitted to them; on the "contrary they ſeem to deſpiſe them, and look upon them as very vile things." After this he ſhews by the Compariſon of one who was debarr'd from a King's Table, and of one that being ſick, deſir'd to be heal'd, how great the Folly is of thoſe who never think of doing Penance. "You, ſays he, "whoſe Soul is ſick, Why do you not run to a Phyſician? Why do you not diſcover your Sins to "him by Confeſſion? Why do you ſuffer your Diſeaſe to encreaſe till it be inflam'd and deeply root"ed in you? Re-enter into your own Breaſts, reflect upon your own Ways. You have offended "God, you have provok'd your Creatour, who is the Lord and Judge, not only of this Life, but alſo "of the Life to come. If you be ſick with Pleaſures, you muſt cure your Diſeaſe with Faſting and "Abſtinence; if your Soul is ſick with Luſt, you muſt uſe Continence for a Remedy. Covetouſneſs is "like a Fever that conſumes us, drive it away by giving of Alms and by Liberality; this is the Re"medy of a Soul that loves Riches immoderately. Have you taken the Goods of another? Make "Reſtitution. Are you ready to periſh by Lying? Avoid the danger you are in by the Love of Truth. "You are in Error and Hereſie; blot out this Sin by embracing the Faith of the Church; for what is "doing Penance, but effacing and deſtroying the Evil we have done? Enquire into the Diſeaſe where"with you are ſeiz'd, be ſorry for it, afflict your ſelves, and communicate your Affliction to your "Brethren, that they may be afflicted with you, that ſo you may obtain the Pardon of your Sins. "Show me bitter Tears, that I may mingle mine with yours. Impart your Trouble to your Biſhop, "as to your Father, he will be touch'd with a ſenſe of your Miſery, as Jacob was when he ſaw the "Coat of his Son Joſeph ſtain'd with Blood; or as David was upon the Death of his Son Abſalom:

(d) The Diſcourſe of Penance.] This Diſcourſe as well as that of Faſting, and the Panegyrick upon St. Stephen, belong to Aſterius Amaſenus, to whom Photius attributes them in Vol. 27. of his Bibliotheque. See what we have ſaid of them, when we give an account of the Works of this Father, where we have retracted what we ſaid upon this Subject in the Firſt Edition.

"Diſcover

" Discover to him the most secret Corners of your Heart; show this Physician your most hidden " Wounds, he will take care of your Honour and your Health. The time of our Death is uncertain; " my Brethren, let us prevent the Hour of our Death by our Vigilance, as Men use precaution against " the Diseases of the Body before the Dog-days; let us endeavour to recover the Groat, which we " lost by our negligence. St. Gregory Nyssen.

The Discourse of Benevolence and Liberality towards the Poor, contains the most convincing Reasons, the most pressing Motives, and the most lively Expressions which can be employ'd to excite Men to give Alms to the Poor, and to help them in their Necessities.

In the Discourse against Usurers, he shews that Usury is forbidden by the Laws of Charity, especially when he to whom the Money is lent is poor.

In the Discourse about Fasting, which was preach'd at the beginning of Lent, he exhorts the Faithful to fast exactly during this time. In the Sermon against Fornication, he gives a frightful representation of that Sin.

The Discourse against those who hardly endure Reproofs, teaches that Humility and Submission wherewith they should receive the Chastisements of the Church. St. Gregory discourses there against those who despise Excommunication. He gives a frightful description of the Soul of an excommunicated Person; and says, that it cannot partake of Glory, nor enter into the Kingdom of Heaven; That we must not imagine that Excommunication is an Invention of the Bishops; That it is an ancient Law of the Church, the Custom of our Fathers founded upon the Scripture which first introduc'd it: He shews the necessity of it. Towards the end he observes, that he did not wonder that many were troubled to bear his Rebukes, and murmur'd against him; that this Abuse had been of a long time, but he was resolv'd to bear with patience the Reproaches of others.

We may place at the head of the Funeral Orations and the Panegyricks of St. Gregory Nyssen, the Discourse wherein he proves, That we ought not to be troubled at the death of the Faithful, because it delivers them from this Mortal and Miserable Life, that they may enjoy Immortal Life and Eternal Happiness.

In the Funeral Oration upon Pulcheria the Daughter of Theodosius, after he has aggravated the loss which he suffer'd by the death of this young Princess, he shows that they should comfort themselves, since she is now happy.

In the Panegyrick upon the Empress Flaccilla, he describes the Vertues of this Princess, and represents the Happiness which she enjoys in Heaven.

In the Panegyrick upon the Martyr St. Stephen, after he has given an Account of the History of his Martyrdom and prais'd his Constancy, he refutes the Enemies of the Divinity of the Son and the Holy Spirit.

There are Three Discourses of St. Gregory Nyssen's in Honour of the 40 Martyrs, wherein he relates their Martyrdom, and praises their Constancy.

In the Panegyrick upon the Martyr Theodorus, (e) having described the Honours which the Church bestows upon Saints and Martyrs, and the Rewards which they enjoy, he relates the Martyrdom of Theodorus, and concludes with addressing a Prayer to him, for obtaining the Graces and Blessings of God by his Intercession.

In the Panegyrick upon St. Gregory Thaumaturgus, he praises the excellent Vertues of this great Saint; he relates many of his Miracles, whereof some are very extraordinary. Suidas names this Panegyrick among St. Gregory's Works, and there is no reason at all to doubt of it.

The Panegyricks upon St. Basil, Meletius and St. Ephraem, contain nothing but the Life and Praises of those great Men. To these Orations we may joyn the Life of St. Macrina his Sister.

The Canonical Epistle to Letoius contains the Rules or Laws of Penance. St. Gregory there distinguishes Three sorts of Sins, which referr to the Three Faculties of the Soul, Reason, Lust and Anger. He says, that the greatest Sins are those which belong to the Spirit of a Man, such as Idolatry, Judaism, Manichæism and Heresie. He would have those that voluntarily fall into these Crimes be depriv'd of the Sacraments till the Hour of Death: But, he says, that those who have been forc'd by the rigour of Torments to commit some of these Crimes, ought not to be punisht more severely than Fornicators. He ordains also, that those who deal in Magick, Witchcraft and Divination of things to come, should be treated as wilful Apostates, if they have practis'd this Art through Infidelity; but he would have them treated as those who yield under the rigour of Torments, if they have used it only through too much Credulity, or in hope of some considerable Gain. He says, that as to what concerns the Sins of Lust, they may be referr'd to Adultery and Fornication; and that Fornication is a kind of Adultery. He referrs to Adultery the Crimes which are against Nature. He imposes Nine Years Penance upon simple Fornication, and double the time upon Adultery; yet he leaves to the (e) The Panegyrick upon Theodorus the Martyr.] Some Criticks think that this Panegyrick is Supposititious. First, because the Author of this Discourse prays the Holy Martyr to hinder the Incursions of the Scythians: Now, say they, the Scythians had not made any Incursions into Armenia, till a 100 Years after the death of St. Gregory, under the Reign of Anastasius. Secondly, the Author says, that Theodorus was of the Country of Job, that is, of Arabia, and yet his is a Greek Name, and 'its said in the same Panegyrick that he was of Amasea in Cappadocia. But 'tis easie to answer the first Difficulty, for the Scythians had made Incursions into the Roman Empire in the time of St. Gregory Nyssen, as appears by St. Jerom Ep. 30. and by Cedrenus, who says that they entred into Thrace under the Reign of Valens. The second Objection has no Difficulty, for the Author of this Panegyrick does not say, that Job was of Arabia, nor that Theodorus was of the same Province with Job, but only that they were both of the East.

Bishop

St. Gregory Nyſſen.

Biſhop a liberty of Moderating or Lengthning the Penance according to the Diſpoſition of the Penitent; and he would have thoſe treated more gently who confeſs their ſecret and hidden Sins. In ſhort, as to the Sins which proceed from Anger, he ſays, That tho' the Scripture reproves all Sins ſeverely, yet the Fathers have made no Laws but againſt Murder. He impoſes 27 Years Penance for Wilful-Murder; and for involuntary Murders, the ſame ſpace of time as for Fornication; yet he allows this Penance to be diminiſh'd according to the Fervor of the Penitent. In general he obſerves, that all thoſe who fall ſick before they have perfectly finiſh'd their Penance, ſhould be reconcil'd at the Point of death, and be admitted to receive the Sacraments; yet upon condition that they fulfil their time of Penance if they recover their health.

As for Covetouſneſs, he ſays, That tho' this Crime be another kind of Idolatry, yet there are no Canons made to ſubject the Covetous to Penance; and therefore it is ſufficient to purifie them from this Crime, by Inſtruction and Prayer. As for Robbery, he ſays, there are Two ſorts of it; that which is done Publickly and by force of Arms, and that which is done Secretly; That thoſe who are guilty of the firſt ſort, ought to be put under the ſame Penance as Murderers; but as for thoſe who ſteal anothers Goods in ſecret, it was ſufficient that they ſhould reſtore them and give Alms to the Poor. He looks upon the Action of thoſe who dig up the Dead as a very great Crime, and puts them under the ſame Penance as Fornicators.

At laſt, he ſays, That tho' Sacrilege was one of the Crimes which was puniſh'd under the Old Law, by ſtoning the Perſon that was guilty of it; yet this Puniſhment was mitigated under the New Law, and that now ſacrilegious Perſons were treated leſs harſhly than Adulterers. He concludes with this Advertiſement to Letoïus, to whom he writes, that he ſhould chiefly conſider the Diſpoſition of the Perſon that does Penance, becauſe it is not the length of time, but the Converſion of the Perſon and change of his Life which cures the Sin.

Some Criticks have doubted whether this Letter was St. Gregory Nyſſen's; but there is no reaſon to reject it, and it has been been own'd by the Greek Church, as appears by the Council held in the Emperour's Palace which approves the Canons of St. Gregory Nyſſen, and by the Commentaries of Zonaras and Balſamon, who acknowledge it to be Genuine; and beſides 'tis ſufficiently evident that 'tis the Work of an ancient Author.

In the Letter of the Profeſſion of a Chriſtian, he ſhews that it conſiſts in imitating Jeſus Chriſt, and he explains in what ſenſe this can be done.

In the following Letter to Olympius, he explains particularly wherein Chriſtian Perfection conſiſts, and makes a particular Enumeration of all the Offices and Vertues of a perfect Chriſtian.

The Treatiſe concerning the End which Chriſtians ought to propoſe to themſelves is almoſt upon the ſame Subject. St. Gregory proves, That the End of all Chriſtians ſhould be to ſhun Vice, to practiſe Vertue, to purifie themſelves from their Sins, to beg the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt, to be Humble, to be Charitable, to be diligent in Prayer, to deſpiſe the World, and to fix their Affections upon God. This Treatiſe is addreſs'd to the Monks.

In the Letter to Flavianus, he complains of the evil treatment he had receiv'd from Helladius Biſhop of Cæſarea.

In the Letter concerning Pilgrimages to Jeruſalem, he diſſuades Chriſtians from undertaking lightly theſe kind of Journeys, becauſe of the Abuſes which happen in them. There have been great Diſputes occaſion'd by this Letter: Some have believ'd it ſuppoſititious; others have maintain'd that what is there ſaid reſpects only the Monks and the Nuns. But Firſt, there are no Arguments ſtrong enough to reject it, and the moſt learned Catholicks have acknowledg'd it as a Genuine Work of St. Gregory's: And in the Second place, ſome Reaſons which are us'd to diſſuade Men from Pilgrimages to Jeruſalem, reſpect all Chriſtians in general. In the mean time, 'tis no ways probable, that St. Gregory Nyſſen, who was ſo very much devoted to the Saints, ſhould abſolutely condemn the Piety of thoſe who travell'd upon a good Deſign to viſit the Holy Places, eſpecially ſince this Practice was Authoriz'd and Approv'd from the beginning of the Fourth Age of the Church. It muſt therefore be ſaid, that he did not condemn it but upon the account of the Abuſes and Superſtitions, which began in his time to creep into theſe kind of Devotions, of which he was a Witneſs in his Journey to Jeruſalem. Thus St. Jerome who was very much devoted to the Holy Places, in his 13th. Epiſtle, diſſuades Paulinus Biſhop of Nola, from a Journey to Jeruſalem upon the ſame Reaſon that St. Gregory uſes. And to ſhow that St. Gregory could have no other Aim or Deſign, one needs but compare this Letter with the following to Euſtathia, Ambroſia and Baſiliſſa, wherein he acknowledges, that 'tis a Happineſs to ſee the Holy Places, provided a Man repreſents the Death and Sufferings of Jeſus Chriſt by his own Actions to himſelf. He complains in this Letter, that the Church of Jeruſalem was no more exempt from Diviſions than other Churches, and explains towards the latter end the Myſtery of the Incarnation. There he teaches, that the Divinity was not chang'd into the Humanity, but that the Divinity was united to a Nature like to ours, that it aſſum'd a Body and a Soul, and was never ſeparated from them; that the Virgin ought to be call'd the Mother of God, and not the Mother of a Man. He rejects the Opinion of the Millenaries. He complains of ſome that would not communicate with him in the Journey which he made to Jeruſalem. At laſt, he exhorts thoſe to whom he writes, who were at Jeruſalem, to continue firm in the Faith of their Fore-Fathers, and not to preferr Novelties to the Ancient Doctrine receiv'd from their Fathers by Tradition.

St. Cyril in the Book written to Evoptius, quotes a Paſſage of St. Gregory's taken out of his Commentary upon the Epiſtle of St. Paul to the Philippians, which can be no other St. Gregory but this of Nyſſa.

Nyssa. The Eight Books of Nemesius's Philosophy have formerly been attributed to him; but now it is generally agreed that this was a gross Error. St. Gregory Nyssen.

Tho' St. Gregory Nyssen professed Rhetorick, and Photius assures us, That his Style is Lofty and Smooth; yet one may say, that he came not near the Eloquence of St. Basil, and St. Gregory Nazianzen. His way of Writing is affected, and his Style is no ways Natural; he speaks more like a Declaimer than an Orator; he is always abstruse either by Allegories, or abstracted Reasonings; he mingles Philosophy with Divinity, and makes use of the Principles of Philosophers, both in his Explications of Mysteries, and in his Discourses of Morality: Upon which Account his Works are more like the Treatises of Plato and Aristotle, than those of other Christians. He follows and imitates Origen in his way of Allegorizing, and there are also some of this Author's Errors in his Works, about the Nature of Souls, and the End of the Pains of the damned; but he rejects and refutes them expressly in other places: 'Tis very probable therefore that the places wherein these Errors are to be met with were added since, which Germanus the Patriarch of Constantinople shows in a Book, out of which Photius relates an Extract in Vol. 218. of his Bibliotheca; wherein he proves as well by what goes before those places, as by what follows after them, and by an infinite Number of contrary Passages, that those places which agree with the Doctrine of Origen concerning the End of the Pains of the damned, were either added, or corrupted by the Disciples of this Author. He observes also, That the like happened to the Conference about the Soul with Macrina, to the Catechetical Discourse, and the Book of the Perfection of a Christian: And he should have added also the Treatise about Infants who die before they come to the use of Reason. It may be said also, That St. Gregory Nyssen having his Head full of the Books and Principles of Origen, could not always be so careful but some of his Errors would slip unawares into his Reasonings, tho' he was not really of his Opinion; and he rejected them at other times when he was more attentive. Yet 'tis plain that there is an Addition at the End of the great Catechetical Discourse, wherein mention is made of the Heretick Severus.

'Twas a long time before the Works of St. Gregory Nyssen were all collected together into one Body. The First Editions have only the Eight Books of Nemesius's Philosophy. In 1536, Aldus Minutius printed at Venice three Greek Orations, and in 1537, the Greek Text of the Book of the Formation of Man; and the Version of this Book made by Dionysius Exiguus, was printed with the Treatise of the Life of Moses, and the Eight Books of Nemesius, at Cologne in 1551. The Book of the Life of Moses, translated by Georgius Trapezuntius, was printed at Basle in 1521. In 1544 Camerarius publish'd a Version of the Homily upon Abraham. In 1550, Zinus publish'd a Version of some Moral Homilies, which was printed by Vascosanus. The Conference about the Soul, translated by Augerius, was printed at Paris in 1557. Laurentius Sifanus collected together and translated several Treatises of St. Gregory Nyssen's, and caused them to be printed at Basle in 1562. In 1567, Leunclavius made a New Translation of the Book of the Life of Moses. In 1564, Hoeschelius caused the Greek Text of some Orations of St. Gregory Nyssen to be printed at Ausburg. In 1567, the Book of Virginity was printed at Rome translated by Galesinus, together with Five Orations; the same Book was also translated by Livineius, whose Version appear'd in 1574. The Discourse of Purification and of the Soul was printed at Cologne in 1568. The Edition of the Year 1562 was re-printed at Basle in 1571. There was added to it the Exposition upon the Canticles translated by Leunclavius, and the Letter to Flavianus. The Edition of Nivelle of the Year 1573 is larger, and contains the Version of almost all the Treatises of St. Gregory Nyssen which had been then publish'd: Since that Edition Maximus Margurius, caused the Version of the Book of Perfection, and of the Letter to Letoius, and of the Book upon the Titles of the Psalms, to be printed at Venice in 1585. The Letter to Letoius was also printed at Venice in 1589, together with the Notes of Antonius Augustinus, and at Paris with those of Balsamon in 1561; at Ausburg together with the Homily of the Divinity of the Son and Holy Spirit, translated by Hervetus, in 1591. The Book of Perfection of Zinus's Translation, was printed at Venice, in 1575. In 1593, Hoeschelius printed in Greek at Amsterdam, the Book of the Christian Profession, and that of the Life of Moses, the Treatise against Apollinarius, and that of Faith. Fronto Ducæus printed in Latin at Ingoldstadt in the Year 1598, the Treatises against Apollinarius, of the Witch of Endor, the Discourse upon the Resurrection of Jesus Christ, that of St. Gregory upon his Ordination, his Book against the Manichees, the Treatise of Destiny, and the Oration against Usurers. The Book of the Titles of the Psalms in Greek and Latin, translated by Gretser was also printed at Ingelstadt in 1600, the Treatise about the End of a Christian was publish'd by Morellus in the Year 1606, the same Year appear'd in Greek and Latin the Letter about Pilgrimages to Jerusalem, and that to Eustathia, Ambrosia and Basilissa, the first printed by Morellus, and the last by Robert Stephens with Casaubon's Notes; both the one and the other were printed at Hanover, the first in 1607, with the Notes of Du Moulin, and the second in 1611. In 1605, Fronto Ducæus printed a New Latin Edition of the Works of St. Gregory Nyssen, which contains all that had been publish'd. At last, in 1615 there came out a Greek and Latin Edition of the Works of this Father which was printed in Two Volumes by Morellus, with the Notes of Fronto Ducæus; but because in this Edition there was not the First Book against Eunomius, nor the Greek of the Moral Orations, therefore there was a Supplement made at the End of St. Basil's Works printed in 1618. The last Edition in 1638 was Copy'd after this, where the same Version of the last Homilies is put twice, once by it self apart, and once over against the Greek. This Edition was done very negligently, and is very uncorrect.

St. CÆSA-

St. CÆSARIUS.

St. Cæſarius.

CÆSARIUS, the Brother of St. Gregory Nazianzen, after having finiſhed his Studies at Alexandria, came to dwell at Conſtantinople, and paſs'd the greateſt Part of his Life at Court in the Quality of Phyſician to the Emperour. He continued alſo ſome time with Julian, but finding himſelf ſollicited to quit the Chriſtian Religion, he retir'd into his own Country. After the Death of this Emperour he return'd to Court and came into Credit again under the Reign of Valens. He was honour'd with the Office of Treaſurer of Bithynia. He was like to have periſh'd in the Earthquake which happen'd at Nice, where he loſt part of his Goods. He died at Court in the beginning of the Year 369, and made the Poor his Heirs.

There is no great probability, that a Man who liv'd as Cæſarius did, ſhould compoſe Dialogues upon the moſt ſubtile Queſtions of Philoſophy and Divinity; yet Four of them are attributed to him, which ſome have thought were written in his Name by St. Gregory Nazianzen; but they can neither be the one's nor the others. For, Firſt, It is not credible, that Cæſarius, who ſpent his Life at Court, and was but a ſimple Catechumen, ſhould be the Author of thoſe Queſtions, which ſuppoſe the Writer of them to be very well vers'd in the moſt ſubtile Parts of Theology. Secondly, The Title of theſe Dialogues import that the Author of them was Secretary to the Emperour, and that he had taught Twenty Years at Conſtantinople; which cannot be ſaid of the Brother of St. Gregory Nazianzen, who was not Secretary, but Treaſurer, and who did not profeſs Theology at Conſtantinople, but Phyſick. Thirdly, St. Gregory Nazianzen in his Funeral Oration ſays not a Word of his Skill in Theology, nor that he had written about Religion. Fourthly, This Treatiſe has neither the Style nor Genius of the Writers of the Fourth Age. Fifthly, It cites St. Gregory Nyſſen, who died long after Cæſarius, and Maximus an Author of the Seventh Age. All which does plainly ſhow, That it can neither belong to Cæſarius nor St. Gregory Nazianzen, whoſe Style is as different from the Author's of this Dialogue, as the Style of Demoſthenes is from that of the Declamations of Aphthonius.

Photius ſays, That 'tis eaſie to perceive, that the Style of theſe Dialogues, is the Style of a Young Man who had learned ſome Rudiments of Rhetorick, and was proud of that little Knowledge which he had in Divinity and Philoſophy; That his Sallies of Wit are moſt of them unpleaſant; That he often makes uſe of Poetical Terms, and without any reaſon varies from the common Conſtruction; That his Style however is clear enough, and that there are few things to be blamed in his Doctrine. Theſe Dialogues contain 195 Queſtions and Anſwers about Matters of Theology and Philoſophy, more Subtile and Curious than Uſeful and Profitable. In Photius's time, there were 220 of them. There are ſtill in many Manuſcripts thereabouts more or leſs, which plainly ſhows that theſe Queſtions were written by ſome Modern Greeks, who lov'd to buſie their Minds with theſe ſort of Queſtions, and to publiſh them under the Names of Ancient Authors. Leunclavius was the firſt who tranſlated theſe Queſtions, and his Verſion was printed at Baſle in 1571. Afterwards Elias Elingherus, Library-Keeper of Ausburg, publiſh'd in 1626, 78 of theſe Queſtions in Greek and Latin. Laſt of all, Fronto Ducæus publiſh'd the Greek Text and Verſion of 195 Queſtions and Anſwers, divided into Four Books, and thoſe were printed in the Addition to the Bibliotheca Patrum in 1624, and in the Eleventh Volume of the Edition in 1644.

St. AMPHILOCHIUS.

St. Amphilochius.

ST. AMPHILOCHIUS, an intimate Friend of St. Baſil and St. Gregory Nazianzen, was of Cappadocia. Having for ſome time profeſs'd Rhetorick, he afterwards attended the Bar, where he diſcharged the Office of an Advocate and a Judge (a.) Leaving this, he retir'd into a ſolitary place of Cappadocia call'd Oziçala, and after he had led there for ſome time a very Holy Life, he was in the Year 375 Ordain'd Biſhop of Iconium, the Metropolis of Lycaonia, a Province of the Dioceſs of Aſia, bordering upon Cappadocia. When he was Biſhop he took Care not only of his own Church, but alſo of the Affairs of the Neighbouring Churches. He was preſent at the Council of Conſtantinople, and there the Care of the Eccleſiaſtical Affairs of his Country was committed to him. About the Year 383, or 384, he held a Council at Syda againſt the Maſſalians, which Photius mentions in Vol. 52. Theodoret relates in Ch. 16. of B. V. of his Hiſtory, that St. Amphilochius petitioned the Emperour Theodoſius to prohibit the Hereticks to hold their Aſſemblies in Cities; That the Emperour judging his Petition too Rigorous, deny'd it; but Amphilochius returning ſome time after to the Place, and ſeeing Arcadius his Son cloſe by the Emperour Theodoſius, who had already been proclaim'd Emperour, he Saluted the Father without Saluting the Son; That Theodoſius thinking he had fail'd in his Duty through Inadvertence, commanded him to Salute his Son, to whom St. Amphilochius made anſwer, That it was enough that he had Saluted him. Whereupon Theodoſius fell into a Paſſion, and declar'd how much he was offended with him for his neglecting of his Son; That then Amphilochius diſcreetly told him, You cannot ſuffer an Injury to be done to the Emperour your Son, and do you ſuffer thoſe who diſhonour the Son of God? That the Emperour being ſurpriz'd with this Reply,

(a) Advocate and a Judge.] St. Gregory Nazienzen recommends to him the Affairs of his Friends in Letters 19, 106, 160. and it appears by Letter 106, that he was accus'd for not doing Juſtice.

made

made a Law; wherein he forbids Hereticks to hold their Aſſemblies any longer. Theodoret ſays, That this happen'd after Theodoſius's return into the Eaſt; that is, about the Year 392. But 'tis much more probable, that St. Amphilochius ſpoke thus to the Emperour, ſometime after the Council of Conſtantinople in the Year 382, ſince it was then that the Law of Theodoſius was made againſt Hereticks, forbidding their Aſſemblies. The Year of Amphilochius's Death is not certainly known. St. Jerome in his Book of Eccleſiaſtical Writers, written in 392, mentions him as one then living. There alſo he mentions a Treatiſe of the Holy Spirit, which St. Amphilochius had read to him a little while before, wherein he proves that the Holy Spirit was God, Adorable and Almighty. St. Amphilochius.

The Works of this Father have been quoted with Commendation by the Councils and the Ancients. The Councils of Epheſus and Chalcedon, produce ſome Teſtimonies out of them againſt the Errors of Neſtorius and Eutyches, but they do not tell us out of what Book they are taken. Theodoret in his Dialogues produces others which are taken out of the Homilies upon theſe Words of the Goſpel; My Father is greater than I; and upon theſe other Words, The Son can do nothing of himſelf; and out of a Homily upon theſe other Words of Jeſus Chriſt in St. John, Chap. 5. He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that ſent me, hath eternal life; and out of a Homily upon theſe Words of Jeſus Chriſt in St. Matth. Chap. 26. My God, let me not drink of this Cup; out of a Diſcourſe againſt the Arians, which is the ſame with that upon theſe Words, My Father is greater than I, as appears by Leontius; and out of another Sermon upon the Word, the Son of God. Facundus in Ch. 3. of B. XI. of his Treatiſe, cites Four Paſſages out of St. Amphilochius, whereof the Firſt is taken out of the Homily upon theſe Words, My Father is greater than I; the Second out of the Homily upon theſe Words, He that believeth in him that ſent me hath eternal life; the Third out of the Homily upon theſe Words, I aſcend to my Father and my God; and the Laſt out of the Homily upon theſe Words, Let me not drink of this Cup. The Seventh Council in Action Five, quotes a Fragment of St. Amphilochius againſt the Books written by Hereticks, who bear the Name of the Apoſtles. Leontius and Anaſtaſius Sinaita quote alſo ſome Paſſages of St. Amphilochius. St. John Damaſcene produces ſome Paſſages taken out of Two of his Letters, whereof one was addreſs'd to the Suadrenſes, and the other to Seleucus. There is alſo a Fragment and a Queſtion concerning the Fleſh of Jeſus Chriſt, which is thought to have been extracted by Photius, and another Fragment of a Letter written to the Deacon Pancarius. Barlaam has alſo collected ſome Paſſages taken out of the Letter to Seleucus, out of the Firſt Sermon upon theſe Words, No Man knows either the day or the hour of Judgment; out of another upon theſe Words, The Child Jeſus grew; out of another upon theſe Words, Deſtroy this Temple. Theſe Fragments have almoſt all been collected together by Father Combefis, who has alſo publiſh'd the entire Works, as many as could be found, under the Name of Amphilochius, and printed them at Paris in 1644.

Theſe are Eight Sermons, a Poem upon the Holy Books, and the Life of St. Baſil.

The 1*ſt.* Sermon is upon the Nativity of Jeſus Chriſt.

The 2*d.* is upon the Circumciſion, wherein he enlarges upon the Praiſe of St. Baſil.

The 3*d.* is upon the Purification of the Virgin the Mother of God, upon Anne and Simeon.

The 4*th.* is a ſecond Sermon upon the Virgin and Simeon, which is not written by St. Amphilochius, Biſhop of Iconium, the Friend of St. Baſil, but by another Amphilochius Biſhop of Syda, who was preſent at the Council of Epheſus; for this Sermon is written directly againſt Neſtorius, and is of a Style different from the former.

The 5*th.* is upon Lazarus.

The 6*th.* upon the Woman in the Goſpel that was a Sinner.

The 7*th.* which had been formerly printed at Antwerp in 1598, is of the Holy Saturday.

The Laſt is about Penance. This has not the ſame Style as the others. The Author ſpeaks againſt the Hereſie of the Iconoclaſts, and relates Fabulous Stories, from whence it appears that this Homily is the Work of ſome Modern Greek. It cannot be certainly known of any one of theſe Sermons, that it belongs to St. Amphilochius of Iconium, rather than Amphilochius Biſhop of Syda.

The Poem to Seleucus has the Style of St. Gregory Nazianzen, whatever Father Combefis ſays to the contrary: and it is very probable that it was written by this Father under the Name of Amphilochius. There he makes an Enumeration of the Canonical Books, which is not different from that which is in the 33*d.* Poem: For tho' he ſpeaks of the Book of Eſther and the Revelation, yet he does not put them in the rank of thoſe Books which all the World receives for Canonical; he only obſerves, that ſome have admitted them, and others have rejected them.

The Life of St. Baſil attributed to Amphilochius, tranſlated into Latin by Cardinal Urſus, whoſe Tranſlation was printed by Roſwydus, publiſh'd in Greek and Latin by Father Combefis, contains many Fables, and many particulars of the Life of St. Baſil contrary to the Truth of Hiſtory (b) ſo that it is plainly the Work of a Modern Greek. Father Combefis, who endeavours to maintain its Authority againſt the Opinion of Poſſevinus, Baronius, and Bellarmin, ſays, That ſome places in it are added and corrupted, but that the Body of the Work is Amphilochius's; which he does not prove at all, nor can it appear probable to thoſe that read it, who will neither find in it the Style, nor the Genius of the Fourth Age of the Church. The Life of St. Amphilochius, written by Metaphraſtes, is alſo of no great Authority: Wherefore one may ſay, That excepting the Fragments produced by the Councils of Epheſus and Chalcedon, by Theodoret and Facundus, all the other Diſcourſes publiſh'd by Father Combefis under the Name of Amphilochius, are either manifeſtly ſuppoſititious, or at leaſt very doubtful. But we muſt not ſay the ſame of the Letter publiſh'd by Cotelerius in his Second Volume of the Monuments of the Greek Church, p. 98. It is a Synodical Epiſtle written to the Biſhops of another Province. The Biſhops in whoſe Name St. Amphilochius wrote it, declare, That they wiſh'd St. Baſil had been preſent at their Synod; but he being detain'd by a grievous Sickneſs, they would be ſatisfied if he would ſend to them his Book of the Holy Spirit. They add, That they receive the Faith of the Nicene Council; but that tho' the Fathers of this Council had ſaid, that we muſt believe in the Holy Spirit, as in the Father and the Son, yet they had not explain'd the Divinity of the Holy Spirit, becauſe this Queſtion was not then diſputed. Afterwards they explain themſelves more clearly upon this Subject. They prove the Divinity of the Holy Spirit by Baptiſm; they ſay that we muſt acknowledge in God but one Nature only, and three Hypoſtaſes. At laſt, They exhort thoſe to whom they write to maintain the Faith and the Peace of the Church, and to ſing the Doxology, Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghoſt; and add, That 'tis in vain to reject the Communion of the Arians, if they do not believe the Divinity of the Holy Spirit. This Letter has relation to the 403 Letter of St. Baſil, wherein he writes to Amphilochius to ſend Deputies into Lycia, to inquire into the Faith of the Biſhops of that Country, who were for the moſt part Orthodox. Probably Amphilochius did as St. Baſil deſired him in this Letter, and theſe Deputies brought a Letter from the Biſhops of Lycia, to which St. Amphilochius anſwers by this.

(b) Contrary to the Truth of Hiſtory.] The Author of this Life ſuppoſes, that St. Baſil was Biſhop in the time of Julian, that Libanius was of Julian's Retinue, that when this Emperour was kill'd, he was converted in a few Days after, and retired with St. Baſil. Now 'tis evident that St. Baſil was not Biſhop in the Emperour Julian's time, and that Libanius was ſo far from being converted after his Death, that he wrote a Panegyrick in his praiſe. All the Hiſtories which are related in this Life are Fabulous, and do no ways agree with what the Ancients have ſaid of St. Baſil. In a word, No body can read this Piece but they may preſently diſcover its Impoſture.

St. Amphilochius.

MAXIMUS.

Maximus.

THis MAXIMUS was a Philoſopher of Alexandria, who procur'd himſelf to be Ordain'd Biſhop of Conſtantinople, and did all that he could to force away from thence St. Gregory Nazianzen. He wrote a Book of Faith againſt the Arians, which he preſented to the Emperour Gratian at Milan; this he did in all probability, when he came into the Weſt after he had been driven away from Conſtantinople and Alexandria. St. Gregory Nazianzen gave him at firſt great Praiſes, but afterwards he blacken'd his Reputation in a wonderful manner. The Weſtern Biſhops protected him, but thoſe of the Eaſt declar'd his Ordination null, and made void all the Ordinations that he had made by the Fifth Canon of the Council of Conſtantinople.

EUSEBIUS VERCELLENSIS.

Euſebius Vercellenſis.

EUSEBIUS, born in Sardinia, was Reader of the Church of Rome, and afterwards Biſhop of Vercelles. Pope Liberius ſent him Delegate to the Emperour Conſtantius after the Fall of Vincentius of Capua. He was preſent at the Council of Milan, from whence he was baniſh'd into the Eaſt, and ſent away into Scythopolis, where he ſuffer'd very much from Patrophilus the Arian Biſhop of that City. He obtain'd his Liberty under the Reign of Julian, and was preſent at the Council of Alexandria held by St. Athanaſius. He was Delegated by this Council for reſtoring Peace to the Church of Antioch, but he could not compaſs his Deſign, becauſe of the Ordination of Paulinus, which was raſhly made by Lucifer; for this was an hinderance to the Reconciliation. And therefore having blam'd the Conduct of Lucifer, he return'd into Italy, where he took a great deal of Pains to re-eſtabliſh the Faith. He died in the Year 370. St. Ambroſe made a Panegyrick upon him. The Title of Martyr is commonly given to him: But St. Ambroſe, St. Jerome, St. Gregory of Tours, and all the Ancients give him no other Title but that of Confeſſor; and St. Ambroſe ſeems to preferr Dionyſius of Milan before him, becauſe he died in Baniſhment.

We have a Letter of this Biſhop written in the time of his Exile, and ſent to his own Church, together with a Proteſtation againſt all the Violences of Patrophilus. There is alſo among the Fragments of St. Hilary, a Letter to Gregory Biſhop of Elvira, written in 363, and a little Note that he wrote to Conſtantius before he went to Milan. St. Jerome teſtifies, That he tranſlated into Latin the Commentaries of Euſebius of Cæſarea upon the Pſalms. It is probable that he wrote it in his Exile, where he learned the Greek Tongue, and publiſh'd it after his Return.

MELE-

MELETIUS.

Meletius.

MELETIUS was of Melitine. He was at firſt engag'd in the Party of the Acacians, and ſign'd their Confeſſion of Faith in the Council of Seleucia. St. Jerome, Socrates, Sozomen, and Theodoret, ſay, that he was firſt Ordain'd Biſhop of Sebaſtea, a City of Armenia, in the Council of Conſtantinople in the Year 360. After that, if you will believe Socrates, he was Tranſlated to Beræa, and from thence to Antioch: But it is more probable, that he was never Ordain'd Biſhop of Beræa, and that when he could not be receiv'd at Sebaſtea, he retir'd to Beræa, from whence he was call'd to Antioch, after Eudoxus had quitted that See to go to Conſtantinople. The Arians thinking that he would be of their Opinion, propos'd him for Biſhop of that City in a Council held at Antioch in 361, and the Orthodox knowing him better than the Arians, conſented to his Election. Some time after the Emperour Conſtantius, who was then at Antioch, deſir'd thoſe Biſhops who were moſt able, to diſcourſe in Publick, to explain theſe Words of Scripture; The Lord created me in the beginning of his Ways for his Works; and Order'd their Expoſitions to be written down, that they might be oblig'd to make them the more exact. George Biſhop of Laodicea did firſt explain thoſe Words, and diffuſed all the Poiſon of his Errors. Acacius Biſhop of Cæſarea, did next give an Explication, which held the middle way between the Impiety of Arius and the Catholick Doctrine. But Meletius propos'd the Orthodox Doctrine of the Church. 'Tis alſo ſaid, that his Arch-Deacon having ſtopp'd his Mouth, he made known his Doctrine by Signs. The Arians aſſembled immediately to Depoſe him, and having Ordain'd in his Room an Arian named Euzoïus, they caus'd Meletius to be baniſh'd to the place of his Birth. Then the ſounder part of the People ſeparated themſelves from thoſe that were infected with the Error of Arius, and aſſembled in the Church of the Apoſtles, which was in the old City. But beſides the Catholicks, there were at Antioch a ſmall number of the ancient Orthodox, who after the Depoſition of Euſtathius continued without Biſhops. Theſe would not be re-united to Meletius and thoſe of his Party, tho' they had ſeparated themſelves from the Arians. Lucifer coming to Antioch after the death of Conſtantius, Ordain'd Paulinus for their Biſhop; but they were but few in number, and Meletius's Congregation was more numerous. When all the Orthodox Biſhops, after the death of Conſtantius, had liberty to return to their Dioceſſes, Meletius return'd to Antioch; but Euzoïus continued Miniſter of the Churches, till the Acacians were reconcil'd to Meletius under the Reign of Jovian, and made Profeſſion of the Orthodox Faith in the Council of Antioch in the Year 363.

Under the Reign of Valens, Meletius was perſecuted again and ſent into Baniſhment, but he was no leſs odious to the Orthodox of the Weſt than to the Arians. For the Church of Alexandria, and the Churches of the Weſt, ſupported Paulinus and thoſe of his Party, and would have no Communion with Meletius. We have already ſeen the trouble and labour that St. Baſil underwent to reconcile Meletius to them, yet he could not compaſs his Deſign while he liv'd. But Nine Months after his Death, it was agreed between Meletius and Paulinus, that whenſoever one of them two ſhould die, no Perſon ſhould be Ordain'd in his Room, but the Surviver ſhould continue ſole Biſhop of the Place. Meletius coming in the Year 380. to the firſt Council of Conſtantinople, in which he preſided, died in that City to the great grief of all the Biſhops. After his death the Eaſtern Biſhops, without any regard to the Agreement made with Paulinus, choſe in his Room Flavianus. This Election renew'd the Schiſm of the Church of Antioch, which was not ended even at the death of Paulinus, which happen'd in the Year 389, for before he died he Ordain'd Evagrius for his Succeſſor. This Difference was carried to the Council of Capua, which nam'd Theophilus and the Biſhops of Egypt for Judges in this Cauſe. But Flavianus refuſing him, addreſs'd himſelf to the Emperour, whom he perſuaded of the goodneſs of his Cauſe. This Conduct of Flavianus very much diſguſted the Weſtern Biſhops, as St. Ambroſe informs us in the Ninth Letter of his firſt Book. However he had ſo much Intereſt, as to hinder the placing of a Biſhop in the Room of Evagrius who died in 393, and he reconciled himſelf to the Weſtern Biſhops in 398, by means of St. Chryſoſtom who perſuaded Theophilus to make up this Peace. Yet there were ſtill ſome obſtinate Perſons at Antioch, who notwithſtanding the Agreement of the whole Church, would keep up a Faction by themſelves, and would neither be reconcil'd to Flavianus nor to his Succeſſors; ſo difficult it is to bring thoſe back to the Church, who have gone aſtray through too much Zeal for Religion, and have made a ſeparation under pretence of Purity of Doctrine, and Strictneſs of Diſcipline. St. Epiphanius has preſerv'd for us in Hæreſ. 73. the Diſcourſe of Meletius which contains clearly the Doctrine of the Church, and the proofs of the Eternity and Divinity of the Word. We may attribute to him alſo the Creed of the Council of Antioch in the Year 393, related by Socrates Ch. 25. of the 3d. B. of his Hiſtory. Theſe Monuments are authentick Proofs that Meletius was a Catholick, which was acknowledg'd by almoſt all the Fathers, and even by St. Athanaſius. Neither can any one blame him for the Holineſs of his Life; but his Ordination for ſome time was encumbred with great Difficulties: Firſt, becauſe it was believ'd, that he was Tranſlated from one Church to another: Secondly, becauſe he was Choſen and Ordain'd by the Arians, to whoſe Party he was addicted. But as to the firſt Difficulty, beſides that we have in Antiquity ſome Examples of Tranſlations that have been approv'd of when they were made for the Good of the Church, as the Event did plainly ſhow this to be: It cannot be ſaid, properly ſpeaking, that Meletius was Tranſlated from one Biſhoprick to another. For tho' he had been Ordain'd Biſhop of Sebaſtea in Armenia, yet the People of that Church not being willing to receive him, he was oblig'd to withdraw immediately to Beræa. Now the Canons are ſo far from forbidding to give Biſhopricks ſhopricks upon ſuch Occaſions to thoſe who could not take poſſeſſion of that which was deſign'd for them, that on the contrary they Ordain, That if it can be done, another Biſhoprick ſhould be given unto them as ſoon as poſſible. The other Difficulty is of much greater Conſequence, and upon it eſpecially thoſe grounded their Separation who would not Communicate with him. They ſaid that they could not acknowledge, for a lawful Biſhop, one that was Ordain'd by Hereticks. But it muſt be conſider'd that when he was Ordain'd, Conſtantius was Maſter of the Empire, and the Church of Antioch could have no Biſhop that was Ordain'd by others; that tho' Acacius of Cæſarea and the other Eaſtern Biſhops were in an Error, yet they were neither Depos'd nor Depriv'd of their Biſhopricks, and therefore they might act in ſuch Matters as concern'd the Government of the Church; that when the Biſhops Ordain'd by Hereticks return'd to the Church, ſhe left them almoſt always in poſſeſſion of their Sees; that the Orthodox had conſented to the Ordination of Meletius; that all the Catholick Biſhops of the Eaſt approv'd it; that Euſebius of Samoſata, and Euſebius of Vercelles acknowledg'd his Ordination to be valid; and in ſhort, that the Council of Conſtantinople put it paſt all doubt. But if we ought to approve the Ordination of Meletius, What can we ſay of that of Paulinus, but that it was done with much indiſcretion and raſhneſs? As to that of Flavianus, it cannot be altogether approv'd, ſince it was made contrary to an Agreement concluded between Meletius and Paulinus. Yet the Eaſtern Biſhops may be excus'd, becauſe perhaps they had no hand in this Agreement, and they fore-ſaw that the People of Antioch could never agree with Paulinus. In a word, the Ordination of Evagrius can be approv'd by no body, ſince it tended only to prepetuate the Diviſion and Schiſm in the Church of Antioch.

Meletius.

DIODORUS Biſhop of Tarſus.

Diodorus Biſhop of Tarſus.

DIODORUS a Prieſt and Monk of Antioch, the Scholar of Silvanus of Tarſus, Maſter of St. John Chryſoſtom, and Theodorus of Mopſueſtia, after he had acquir'd a great Reputation in Antioch by his Conduct and Prudence, was Ordain'd Biſhop of Tarſus in the Year 375. While he was yet but a Prieſt, he took care of the People of Antioch, in the abſence of Meletius who was then baniſh'd under the Reign of Valens, and maintain'd the Orthodox Faith in this Church. After he was Biſhop, he was preſent at the Council of Conſtantinople, and was one of thoſe that were choſen to take care of the Eaſtern Dioceſs. He was very skilful in the Knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, and wrote Commentaries upon almoſt all the Books of the Bible. He was one of the firſt Commentators that apply'd himſelf to a literal Explication, without amuſing himſelf with Allegories. He was highly eſteem'd of by all the great Men of his Age, who wrote very obliging Letters to him, and have given very Authentick Teſtimonies of his Doctrine and his Piety. One part of theſe Letters may be ſeen in Facundus Ch. 3. of his 4th. Book. But in the following Ages Men did not give ſo favourable a Judgment of this Man's Doctrine, for he was accus'd of Teaching in his Writings the Errors of Neſtorius, as they were afterwards call'd. It may be for this Reaſon that none of his Works are preſerv'd. We have nothing but a very conſiderable Extract out of his Treatiſe of Deſtiny, produced by Photius in Volume 223 of his Bibliotheca, and the Argument of another Treatiſe of the Holy Spirit produced by the ſame Perſon in Volume 102. Theodoret alſo in his Commentaries upon Geneſis, Queſt. 20. p. 22. and Queſt. 21. p. 25. produces two other Fragments of this our Diodorus.

St. Baſil in Letter 167 ſpeaks of Two Books of this Author's Writing againſt the Hereticks, whereof the Second was compos'd by way of Dialogue. St. Jerome mentions his Commentary upon St. Paul. Socrates and Sozomen aſſure us, that he made Commentaries upon almoſt all the Books of the Bible. Leontius in his Third Book quotes a Book of this Author Written againſt the Sunouſiaſts, that is, againſt the Apollinariſts. Suidas has given us a Catalogue of his Works taken out of Theodorus, which is as follows. "An Explication of all the Old Teſtament, of Geneſis, Exodus, and upon the Pſalms, "and upon the Four Books of Kings, upon the Chronicles, upon the Proverbs; a Treatiſe of the Dif- "ference between Allegory and Contemplation; a Commentary upon Eccleſiaſtes, upon Canticles, up- "on the Prophets; a Chronicle wherein he has corrected ſome Faults of Euſebius; Commentaries "upon the Four Goſpels, upon the Acts, upon the Epiſtle of St. John; a Treatiſe to prove that there is "but One God in the Trinity; a Book againſt the Melchiſedecians, a Treatiſe againſt the Jews con- "cerning the Reſurrection of the Dead, one of the Soul againſt ſeveral Errors; a Treatiſe of De- "ſtiny againſt the Aſtrologers, where he ſpeaks of the Globe of the World, and of Providence; and "a Treatiſe wherein he proves that Inviſible things were made at the ſame time with the Elements, "tho' they were not made of them; a Tract to Euphronius, by way of Queſtion and Anſwer, againſt "Ariſtotle's Syſtem." He ſays nothing in this Catalogue of the Book of the Trinity, nor of the Treatiſe againſt the Apollinariſts.

The Treatiſe of Deſtiny was divided into Eight Books and 53 Chapters. There he refutes all the Follies of Judicial Aſtrology, and ſhows that the World had a Beginning and was Created, that Man was endow'd with Free-will, that God was not the Author of Evil, and that the World is govern'd by Divine Providence. Photius makes a particular enumeration of the Subject of each Chapter in this Work, wherein he produces ſome part of his Reaſonings. He had reaſon to ridicule the Propoſition which this Author had advanc'd, That the Heaven was not round, ſuppoſing that if it were ſo, the Aſtrologers would have ſome good Ground for their Opinion of Fatality: For as he obſerves, the Figure of the Heaven has nothing in the World to do with this Queſtion.

Photius

Diodorus Biſhop of Tarſus.

Photius obſerves, that the Stile of this Author is pure and clear; but St. Jerome ſays, that it is not lofty, and that he could never reach the Eloquence of Euſebius Emiſenus, tho' he endeavour'd to imitate it, becauſe he was not skill'd enough in humane Learning. Facundus, who quotes this Paſſage of St. Jerome, ſays only Euſebius without adding Emiſenus. Now if one ſhould thus read the Text of St. Jerome, it would be more convenient to underſtand the Writings of Euſebius of Cæſarea, whom Diodorus rather imitated than thoſe of the Biſhop of Emeſa, becauſe the Works of Diodorus have no great relation to his Books, whereas they had a great affinity to thoſe of Euſebius of Cæſarea, either for the Matters which he treated of, or for the Manner of Stile wherein he treated of them. For the Extracts which Photius has produced out of his Treatiſe of Deſtiny, are very like to ſome Books of the Evangelical Preparation or Demonſtration of Euſebius of Cæſarea. The Judgment which St. Baſil has given of this Author's Stile may be ſeen in Letter 167, of which we have given an Abridgement in St. Baſil's Life. As to what concerns his Doctrine of the Incarnation, we could better judge of it, if we had his Books; but there is no great probability, that one who was prais'd, eſteem'd, and cheriſh'd by Meletius, St. Baſil, St. Gregory Nazianzen, St. Epiphanius, and even by St. Athanaſius, and his Succeſſors Peter and Timothy of Alixandria; who was alſo conſider'd in a General Council as one of the moſt Learned and moſt Orthodox Biſhops of all the Eaſt; and in ſhort, who was Maſter to St. Chryſoſtom, ſhould be guilty of ſo groſs an Errour as that of Neſtorius. 'Tis true that he had for his Scholar Theodorus of Mopſueſtia, and that he was Accus'd of the ſame Errour with Neſtorius; and that he was Condemn'd as Convicted of this Errour after his Death in the 5th. Council. But beſides that there have been ſome Perſons who have undertaken to juſtify him; Yet if it ſhould be granted that he was guilty of this Errour, it would not follow that he Learn'd it of his Maſter, ſince we dayly ſee Heretical Diſciples, who have had Orthodox Maſters. Should not the Faith of St. Chryſoſtom rather ſerve to juſtify Diodorus, than the Errour of Theodorus to condemn him?

HILARY the Deacon.

Hilary the Deacon.

HILARY of Sardinia, Deacon of the Church of Rome, was deputed by Pope Liberius together with Lucifer Biſhop of Calaris, and the Prieſt Pancratius, to go to the Emperour Conſtantius, after the Synod of Arles, in the Year 353. He was baniſh'd after the Council of Milan, and afterwards he join'd with Lucifer's Party, whereof he was one of the moſt zealous Defenders. 'Tis this Hillary, who is call'd in St. Jerom's Dialogue againſt the Luciferians, The Deucalion of the World, becauſe he would Regenerate and Renew by a Second Baptiſm, thoſe that had been baptiz'd by Hereticks.

Tho' there has been no Book printed under the Name of this Hilary, yet the Learned have attributed to him the Commentary upon the Epiſtles of St. Paul, which bears the Name of St. Ambroſe, and the Queſtions upon the Old and New Teſtament, which are at the end of the 4th. Tome of St. Auſtin. Theſe are the Reaſons which have mov'd them to attribute to him the Commentary upon St. Paul's Epiſtles. Firſt, St. Auſtin in Ch. 4. of the 4th. B. to Boniface, cites under the Name of St. Hilary, an Explication of this Paſſage of St. Paul. 'Twas from him that all Men Sinn'd, which is taken Word for Word out of this Commentary. Now this Hilary whom St. Auſtin quotes, could neither be Hilary of Syracuſe, nor St. Hilary of Arles, ſince they were after St. Auſtin. No more can it be ſaid, that the Author of theſe Commentaries was Hilary of Poictiers, becauſe the Stile and the Verſion which he makes uſe of, are no ways like to the Stile and Verſion of theſe Commentaries; and there are ſome Opinions in the one, which are different from thoſe in the other. This Commentary therefore cannot be attributed to any but this Hilary of Sardinia. Beſides, the Time and Circumſtances agree wonderfully to him; for he ſays on Ch. 3. of the 1ſt. to Timothy, That tho' all the World was God's, yet the Church whereof Damaſus at preſent was Governour, is call'd his Houſe: Which plainly ſhows, that this Commentary was written by one Well-affected to the Church of Rome, who liv'd in Damaſus's time: And therefore it cannot with any Reaſon be attributed to Remigius of Lyons, but moſt probably was written by this Hilary whom we now ſpeak of.

Yet Petavius thinks that it cannot be attributed to him for Two Reaſons; Firſt, becauſe this Author ſpeaks in favour of Damaſus, and 'tis not likely that a Man engag'd in the Luciferian Schiſm, which favour'd Urſicinus, ſhould acknowledge Damaſus lawful Biſhop of Rome. Secondly, becauſe upon Chap. 1. of the 1ſt. Epiſtle to the Corinthians, he blames the Novatians and Donatiſts, who rebaptiz'd, and ſays, that to believe that the Grace of Baptiſm depended upon the Perſons who gave it, was injurious to the Baptiſm of our Saviour. Now the principal Errour of Hilary the Deacon, according to the Teſtimony of St. Jerome, conſiſted in this, That he would have thoſe Re-baptiz'd who had been baptiz'd by the Arians. This objection cannot be anſwered, but by ſaying, that this Hilary did at laſt return into the Boſom of the Church under the Pontificate of Damaſus; but this ſuppoſition is contrary to the Teſtimony of St. Jerome, who ſays in his Book againſt the Luciferians, that this Deacon died out of the Church. This Man, ſays he, ſpeaking of Hilary the Luciferian, being dead, his Sect ought to dy with him, becauſe he being but a ſimple Deacon, could ordain no Perſon to ſucceed him. Wherefore it muſt be granted that we have no abſolute certainty, that this Book belong'd to this Hilary of Sardinia.

The Commentary upon the Two Firſt Chapters of the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, is an Extract out of the Commentary of St. Chryſoſtom, which is not made by the ſame Author as that upon the other Epiſtles.

'Tis

Hilary the Deacon.

'Tis thought that the Queſtions upon the Old and New Teſtament, which have been formerly printed under St. Auſtin's Name, in his 4th. Tome, were written by the ſame hand as theſe Commentaries. To prove it, 'tis ſaid, firſt, that the Author of theſe Queſtions liv'd at the ſame time as the Author of the Commentary; for he ſays in Qu. 44. that he wrote 300 Years or thereabouts, after the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and he ſpeaks of Photinus as an Author then living. He ſpeaks alſo of the Devaſtation of Pannonia which happen'd in 351, and the Famine of the Year 363, as Calamities which happen'd in his time. Secondly, 'tis thought, that he ſpeaks in Qu. 115 of Sardinia as his own Country: And in ſhort, ſome maintain that there is ſo great an agreement both in Stile and Doctrine between theſe Two Treatiſes (a), that it cannot be doubted but they are written by the ſame Author. Which muſt be underſtood of the 47 Queſtions upon the Old Teſtament, the 50 upon the New, and the 36 upon the one and the other, which are all written by the ſame Author, and not of the other following Queſtions, which are for the moſt part a repetition of what had been ſaid in thoſe that went before.

But whoever was the Author of theſe Queſtions they are full of Falſities and Errors (b), and almoſt all of them are of very little uſe. The Commentary upon the Epiſtle of St. Paul is better done, and has more ſenſe in it: It is clear, plain and litteral, and gives the meaning of the Text of St. Paul well enough; but it gives very different Explications from St. Auſtin (c), in theſe places which concern Predeſtination, Provocation, Grace and Free-will.

(a) There is ſo great an Agreement both in Stile and Doctrine, &c.] Compare Queſt. 7. with the Commentary upon Ch. 6. to the Epheſians; Queſt. 13. with Comment. upon Ch. 5. to the Rom. Queſt. 18. with Comment. upon Ch. 9. to the Rom. Queſt. 21. with Comment. upon Ch. 6 and 11th. of the 1ſt. Ep. to the Corinth. Queſt. 23. with the Comment. on the 7th. Ch. of the Ep. to the Rom. Queſt. 24. with the Comment. upon the 1ſt. Ep. to the Corinth. Ch. 11th. Qu. 113. with the Com. upon Ch. 1ſt. of the Ep. to the Epheſ. and on Ch. 1ſt. of the Ep. to the Coloſſ. Qu. 47. with the Com. upon the 2d. Ch. of the 1ſt. to the Corinth. and upon Ch. 5. of the 2d. to the Corinth. Qu. 99. with the Com. upon Ch. 10. of the 1ſt. to the Corinth. Qu. 102. with the Com. upon Ch. 11. of the Ep. to the Rom. and upon Ch. 2d. of the 2d. to Timothy. Qu. 108. with the Com. upon Ch. 3. to the Philipp. Qu. 109. and 25. with the Com. upon Ch. 8. to the Rom. Qu. 112. with the Com. upon theſe Words: I ſee another Law in my Members, &c. Qu. 113. with the Com. upon Ch. 2d. of the 2d. Ep. to the Theſſalonians. Qu. 134 with the Com. upon Ch. 3. of the Ep. to the Epheſ. and Qu. 115. with the 1ſt. Ch. of Com. upon the ſame Ep. Theſe two Authors make often uſe of the ſame Words, and in the ſame Senſe; as, Diffidentia to ſignify Incredulity, and the Words, Prævaricandi, Meliorandi, &c.

(b) Full of Falſities and Errors.] A Catalogue of them may be ſeen in the Cenſure which the Doctors of Lovain have prefix'd to this Work; one of the chief of them is their Opinion, that Melchiſedeck was the Son of God.

(c) Different Explications from St. Auſtin.] For this one needs only read almoſt all the places of St. Paul, which concern Predeſtination or Grace. Particularly the Commentaries upon the 5th and 9th. Chapters of the Ep. to the Romans, upon the 2d. of the Ep. to the Philippians, and the Queſtions, 13, 24, 47, 115, 223. where he propoſes Maxims which are a little Pelagian.

PRISCILLIAN and Matronianus, Tiberianus and Dictinius his Diſciples.

Priſcillian and his Diſciples.

PRISCILLIAN, whom St. Jerome places among the Number of Eccleſiaſtical Writers, was the Author of a Sect which was accus'd of many impieties. Sulpitius Severus, who knew more of the Hiſtory of the Priſcillianiſts than any Eccleſiaſtical Author whatſoever, gives this Account of them: That towards the End of the Fourth Century, one Mark originally of Egypt, being leaven'd with the Principles of the Gnoſticks and Manichees, came into Spain to ſpread his Errors there; That at Firſt he had for his Diſciples a Woman call'd Agapa, and one Elpidus a Rhetorician; and that theſe were the Perſons who inſtructed Priſcillian; That he was a Perſon of Quality, Rich, Powerful, Quick and Reſtleſs, but very Eloquent and very Learn'd: That he acquir'd much Learning by hard Study, and that he had a wonderful Eaſineſs in ſpeaking and Diſputing. Happy had he been, adds Sulpitius Severus, if he had not corrupted his fine Parts by joining with a wicked Faction. He had many good Qualities of Body and Mind. He endur'd with eaſe, Watchings, Hunger, and Thirſt. He had no deſire to be Rich, and liv'd with much Frugality; but he was proud, and profane Learning had puff'd him up intolerably. 'Tis ſaid that he had formerly exercis'd the Art of Magick. This Man having, as we have ſaid, embrac'd the pernicious Doctrine of Marcus and Elpidus, drew many Perſons of his own Country after him, either by perſuading them with Reaſons, or flattering them with Careſſes. Women who naturally love Novelty, and have commonly much Curioſity, and but little Steadineſs, flock'd after him in great Multitudes, to be admitted among his Party. In a word, he procured the Love and Reſpect of all the World, by the ſhew of Humility which appear'd in his Clothes and his Countenance. Spain began to be infected with the Venom of this Hereſy, and even ſome Biſhops were corrupted with it. There were particularly two of them call'd Inſtantius and Salvianus, who were engag'd by Oath into the Faction of Priſcillian. But Hyginus Biſhop of Corduba, their Neighbour, underſtanding it, informed againſt them to Idacius of Merida, who kindled, as one may ſay, the Fire of Diviſion by the rigour which he us'd, and irritated Men's mindes without putting a ſtop to the growing Evil. In ſhort, after many Diſputes, the Synod of Saragoza was Aſſembled, at which the Biſhops of Aquitaine were preſent; preſent; and theſe Hereticks not daring to appear there were condemn'd for their Contumacy. Sentence was given againſt the Biſhops Inſtantius, Salvianus, and againſt Elpidus and Priſcillian. 'Twas alſo added, That all thoſe who ſhould receive them into Communion, ſhould expect the ſame Condemnation with them. Ithacius, Biſhop of Oſſobona, was entruſted with the Publication of this Sentence, and with the Management of the Excommunication againſt Hyginus the Biſhop, who being the firſt that oppos'd Priſcillian and his Diſciples, was afterwards himſelf corrupted, and received them into his Communion. But Inſtantius and Salvianus, without any regard to the Judgment of the Council of Saragoza Ordain'd Priſcillian Biſhop of Avila. Then the Biſhops of the other Party had recourſe to the Authority of the Emperour, and obtain'd of Gratian an Edict, wherein the Priſcillianiſts were condemn'd to be driven out of the Churches, and to be baniſh'd out of the Cities where they dwelt. Inſtantius and Salvianus being chac'd away out of their own Countrey, went to Rome and Milan; but they were rejected by Damaſus, and St. Ambroſe. After which they had recourſe to the Emperour, and obtain'd of him a Reſcript, wherein he permitted them to return to their own Country, and ordain'd, that their Churches ſhould be reſtor'd unto them. They return'd into Spain with this Edict, and having gain'd the Proconſul, they forc'd away Ithacius. He fled into France and carried his Complaints to the Tyrant Maximus, who was entered as a Conquerour into the City of Triers: This Prince caus'd Priſcillian and his chief Diſciples to be carried to a Synod held at Bourdeaux, in the Year 384, in which Inſtantius was Depos'd; and when they would have proceeded to judge Priſcillian alſo, he appeal'd from them to the Emperour Maximus, who commited the Judgment of this Affair to the Prefect Evodius, who having Convicted Priſcillian of Witchcraft and Uncleanneſs, made his Report of the whole Matter to Maximus, who condemn'd him and his chief Followers, to have their Heads cut off, which was done in the Year 385. Some have thought that Priſcillian was Innocent, and that he was unjuſtly oppreſs'd by the Faction of Ithacius, whoſe Conduct was diſapprov'd by the moſt Pious Biſhops of that time. It ſeems that St. Jerome favours this Opinion in his Catalogue, where he ſpeaks of Priſcillian in theſe Words: Priſcillian Biſhop of Avila was Executed in the City of Triers by the Commandment of the Tyrant Maximus, having been oppreſs'd by the Faction of Hilatius (it muſt be read, Ithacius,) and Idacius: He wrote many Tracts whereof ſome are come to our Hands. Some accuſe him even at this Day of the Hereſie of the Gnoſticks, of Baſilides and Marcion; but others vindicate him, and maintain that he held none of thoſe Errors that are charg'd upon him. 'Tis true, that the ſame St. Jerome in a Letter to Cteſiphon ſpeaks of Priſcillian as a notable Heretick, which made Monſieur Queſnel think, that this place of St. Jerome's Book of Eccleſiaſtical Writters was interpolated. This Conjecture, which is not founded upon the Authority of any Manuſcript, would be of ſome moment if it were not known that St. Jerome does often ſpeak differently of one and the ſame Perſon. Perhaps St. Jerome's way of ſpeaking of him in his Catalogue, gave occaſion to put Priſcillian and his Diſciple Matronianus into ſome Martyrologies, and to rank them among the Holy Martyrs.

Priſcillian and his Diſciples.

St. Jerome ſpeaks of this laſt after this manner: Matronianus of Spain, a learned Man, and one that was comparable to the Ancients for Poetry, was alſo put to Death with Priſcillian, Feliciſſimus, Julianus and Euchrotia, who were all of the ſame Party. We have ſome of his Works in Verſe, which are Evidences of his Wit and Parts. Sulpitius Severus call'd this Diſciple of Priſcillian, Latronianus, for Matronianus.

Tiberianus of Batica was alſo an Author of this Sect, who wrote, ſays St. Jerome, an Apology to vindicate himſelf from the Suſpicion of Hereſie, whereof he was accus'd together with Priſcillian. His Stile is ſwelling and affected. After the Death of thoſe of his Party, being overcome by the tediouſneſs of a long Exile, he married a Virgin conſecrated to Jeſus Chriſt.

Dictinius was a Prieſt, who had been accus'd of the ſame Error, and condemn'd for it in the Council of Langres. St. Ambroſe wrote Letters in his favour to procure his Reſtauration; But upon condition that he ſhould condemn what he had done, and that he ſhould continue Prieſt without being capable of riſing to a higher Dignity. Nevertheleſs he did not perform theſe Conditions, for he continued ſtill in his ancient Error, and got himſelf Ordain'd Biſhop of Aſturica Auguſta. Being cited upon this Account to the Firſt Council of Toledo in the Year 390, together with Symphoſius who Ordain'd him, he did not appear before the Synod; but appearing afterwards at a Second Synod held about the Year 400, there Symphoſius declar'd, That he was forc'd by the People to Ordain Dictinius, and Dictinius himſelf made a Solemn Recantation of his Errors, whereupon they were both abſolv'd. He wrote ſome Treatiſes for the Error of the Priſcillianiſts, which are mention'd by St. Leo, in a Letter to Turribius. What we have ſaid of the Reſtauration of Dictinius, ſeems to be contrary to the Teſtimony of Idacius, who ſays, that Turribius was plac'd in the room of Dictinius after he was Depos'd for his Hereſie; but St. Leo declares very plainly in the Letter which we juſt now cited, that Dictinius died a Catholick. From whence it appears, that Idacius, (the Author of the Chronicle, who lived in the Fifth Age of the Church, and is different from him of whom we have now ſpoken) was deceived, and that Turribius ſucceeded Dictinius after his Death, and not after his Depoſition. For to ſay, as Monſieur Queſnel does, that the Acts of the Council of Toledo are falſified, or that Dictinius relaps'd a ſecond time after his Retractation, is to alledge that which has no Foundation, which is contrary to the Teſtimony of St. Leo, who affirms that this Biſhop died a Catholick, and that we may have a Veneration for his Memory after his Retractation.

ITHA-

ITHACIUS, or IDACIUS.

Ithacius or Idacius.

THis IDACIUS or ITHACIUS, Sirnam'd Clarus, Biſhop of Oſſobona, a City in the Province of Bætica, was, as we have already ſaid, one of the greateſt Enemies of the Priſcillianiſts. St. Iſidore of Sevil obſerves in his Book of Eccleſiaſtical Writers, That he wrote a Book by way of Apology, againſt the Deteſtable Doctrines of Priſcillian, wherein he diſcovers the Witchcraft and Infamous Crimes of thoſe Sectaries, and ſhews, That a certain Magician call'd Mark, a Native of Memphis in Egypt, was the Diſciple of Manichæus, and Maſter of Priſcillian. The ſame Author adds, That this Idacius was depriv'd of the Communion of the Church, together with the Biſhop Urſacius, upon the account of the Death of Priſcillian, whoſe Accuſers they had been; and that he being ſent into Baniſhment, ended his Days there under the Reign of Theodoſius and Valentinian. St. Iſidore makes no mention of the Books againſt Varimadus, which bear the Name of Idacius; and indeed they do not belong to this Author, but to Vigilius Tapſenſis, as we ſhall ſhew when we come to ſpeak of Vigilius: This Apologetick of Idacius is loſt. St. Iſidore obſerves that it was well written. [Idacius and Ithacius are not two different Names for the ſame Perſon, as here ſeems to be implied; for in Sulpitius Severus they are conſtantly divided.]

FAUSTINUS.

Fauſtinus.

GEnnadius aſſures us, that Fauſtinus a Prieſt (or a Deacon according to others) wrote to the Empreſs Flaccilla Seven Books againſt the Arians and Macedonians, wherein he refutes and confounds them by the very ſame Paſſages that the Hereticks uſe to eſtabliſh their Blaſphemies. This Work was a long time attributed to Gregory of Bætica; but at laſt the True Author of it was own'd, and it was printed under the Name of Fauſtinus, with a Letter to Flaccilla.

The ſame Gennadius ſays alſo, That this ſame Fauſtinus, wrote a Petition, which he preſented with the Prieſt Marcellinus, (or rather Marcellianus) to the Emperours Valentinian and Theodoſius, which ſhows evidently that he was engag'd in the Schiſm of the Luciferians. Sirmondus publiſh'd this little Piece in the Year 1656. Before the Petition there is a Preface written by the ſame Fauſtinus, wherein he gives a little Hiſtorical Abridgment in favour of his own Party. There he relates, That under the Reign of Conſtantius, almoſt all the Biſhops attempted to condemn St. Athanaſius; That Liberius of Rome, Euſebius of Verſeilles, Lucifer of Calaris, and St. Hilary of Poictiers, refuſing to approve this unjuſt Condemnation, were ſent into Baniſhment; That Damaſus who was then Deacon of Rome, pretended he would accompany Liberius, but returned again immediately; That the Clergy of Rome, in the preſence of the People took an Oath, not to receive another Biſhop while Liberius liv'd; That notwithſtanding this, in a little time after, the Clergy choſe the Archdeacon Felix to fill his Place; That Liberius having conſented to Impiety, [by ſubſcribing an Arian Confeſſion of Faith] return'd about three Years after, and was reſtor'd to the Poſſeſſion of his See, and that Felix was driven away from Rome; Upon whoſe Death, which happen'd Eight Years after Liberius came back, he received into Communion thoſe of the Clergy that had been of Felix's Party; That he died alſo in a little while after, and then the Prieſts and Deacons who had been faithful to Liberius in his Baniſhment, choſe Urſicinus in his room; but the perfidious Party choſe Damaſus an ambitious Man, who had always aſpir'd to the Epiſcopal Chair; That this Man had committed all ſorts of Cruelties and Outrages againſt thoſe who adhered to Urſicinus, and at laſt had driven them all out of the City. That ſince this time thoſe of the Orthodox Party had been abus'd, diſpers'd, and baniſh'd, and that two of them call'd Marcellinus and Fauſtinus preſented this Petition to the Emperours Valentinian, Theodoſius, and Arcadius.

They complain in this Petition of the Perſecutions and Cruelties which they ſay they ſtill ſuffer from their Enemies; They affirm, That no Error nor Hereſie can be charg'd upon them, and then accuſed their Adverſaries of having been formerly Hereticks, or of having conſented to the Condemnation of the Faith of the Church. They deſcribe the Miſerable End of Arius, to beget a Horror of his Impiety; and they ſay, That God hath by this viſible Judgment approv'd all that was done in the Council of Nice. They relate afterwards what pas'd in the Councils of Seleucia and Ariminum, and how the Biſhops were forc'd to Sign the Heretical Confeſſions of Faith: They bewail their Unhappineſs, and praiſe the Faith and Conſtancy of Paulinus of Triers, of Euſebius of Verſeilles, of Lucifer of Calaris, and a very ſmall number of Biſhops, who choſe rather to ſuffer all things than do any thing againſt their Conſcience. They deſcribe the Defection of Hoſius Biſhop of Corduba, and ſay, That he died by a viſible Judgment of God, for pronouncing Sentence againſt Gregory of Bætica, who had always boldly defended the Faith. They ſay, That the ſame thing happen'd to Potamius of Oſſobona. They add, That theſe viſible Judgments of God do plainly ſhew, that thoſe who would not communicate with the Biſhops that were defil'd with theſe Crimes, are ſo far from being guilty of Impiety, that they do great Service to the Church; That the great number of thoſe who communicate with them, ought to be no Prejudice to others, ſince this Conduct is contrary to Scripture; That the Pretence of promoting Peace ought not to make us own Apoſtates for Lawful Biſhops; That the Inconſtancy of the Catholicks, has given occaſion to Valens to embrace the Arian Faction.

Faction. They represent afterwards in a most Odious manner, the Cruelties which they say were committed against their Party in different places of the World, and they conjure the Emperour to put a stop to this Persecution by his Edicts, Not, add they, that we are afraid to Suffer, or to Die, being perswaded, that when we Die for a good Cause, we shall enjoy after our Death great Tranquility, and have a perfect certainty of our Blessedness. But we give you Notice of this Disorder, for fear lest the Blood of Christians, if it still continue to be shed, bring down the Wrath of God upon your Government. Tho' the Complaints of these Two Priests were injurious to the Church, yet Theodosius was mov'd by them, and granted a Rescript in their Favour, address'd to Cynegius the Prætorian Prefect, wherein he testifies his Indignation against the manner of treating them, and ordains, That the Bishops Gregory of Spain, and Heraclides of the East, who are mentioned in their Petition, and all those who communicate with them be suffered to live in quiet. This Petition must have been presented after the Year 383, because Arcadius to whom it is address'd, was not admitted a Partner of the Empire till that Year, and the Rescript must be before 388, which was the Year wherein Cynegius died. It seems to have been presented while Damasus lived, who died in the Year 384. Faustinus.

There is some probability that Faustinus presented the Confession of Faith, which goes under his Name in the Roman Code, publish'd by Monsieur Quesnel at the End of the Works of St. Leo, along with this Petition. I know very well that this Learned Man pretends, that this Confession of Faith was made about the Year 379, before the Council of Constantinople; but his Conjectures are not convincing: He attributes to the Priest Marcellinus, the Confession of Faith which precedes this in the New Code; but this also is a Conjecture that is not absolutely certain.

The Style of Faustinus, in his Treatise of the Trinity, is very plain and simple: He contents himself with producing Passages of Scripture, from which he draws Consequences to prove the Doctrine of the Church, and with answering the Objections of the Arians; but the Style of his Petition is swelling and pathetical. In it you may see the Humour and Genius of all Reformers, who Glory in their small Number, who blame the Multitude, who rend in pieces the Reputation of those who are promoted to Dignities, who testifie their Indignation against the Higher Powers, who make a show of much Firmness and Constancy, of a great contempt of this Life, of Honours and Riches; who look upon themselves as unblameable, and attribute to the Divine Vengeance all the Fatal Accidents which happen to those that are not their Friends; who are always complaining of being Persecuted and ill used; who exaggerate the Evils which they justly suffer, and effect to show a great Zeal for Piety and Religion.

[Every Reader must needs see that these Reflections were inserted here more for the sake of the Protestants, than of the Luciferians: Either all Abuses ought always to be tolerated, or a Reformer is not to be blamed upon the score of his Office: And when Men set up for Reformers, the Cause only is to be considered, not the Pretences; which if it be just, they have no reason to be ashamed of any of these things here urged against them as Marks of Obloquy; if their Numbers are small, they ought to shew by a proportionable firmness of Mind, that they place their Confidence in a Being that is Superiour to any Powers here below; and if they find Fault with the Multitude, who do not joyn with them, they act according to their own Principles, since all Men who think themselves to be in the Right, must believe that their Adversaries are mistaken; their standing to their own Assertions cannot reasonably be interpreted to be injurious to Men in eminent Places: Constancy, Contempt of the World, of Life, Riches and Honours, are Vertues, which, when supported by a good Cause, are glorious Ingredients in the Characters of the greatest Saints; and therefore are favourable Prejudices for all those Reformers in whom they are to be found; if they are too apt to attribute the ill Successes of their Enemies to Divine Vengeance, they are not Singular, since all Parties, and even all Religions constantly practise it; if they are hardly used they may reasonably complain of their Usage; and Mr. du Pin knows that his Church has always taken very particular Care that her Adversaries should never complain against her for Persecuting without just Cause, whilst they believe themselves to be in the Right: Reformers, as all Men naturally do, will aggravate their Sufferings, that they may lay load upon their Persecutors; and last of all, every Man is tempted to think his Adversary's Zeal for Religion to be only Hypocritical.

If we consider what good Success these Two Luciferian Priests had in their Business, we ought not hastily to condemn them: Theodosius the Great always shew'd an unshaken Zeal for the Orthodox Faith; and his Carriage towards St. Ambrose, who censured him for his hasty and cruel Orders against the Thessalonians, was an Evidence how very much he Reverenc'd the Orders and Discipline of the Church; and besides, if we reflect upon the Accounts which Ammianus Marcellinus gives us of the Differences between Damasus and Ursicinus, they will seem to plead for Ursicinus's Party. His being a Heathen, is no prejudice against him in this Matter, because he was not a Bigot against the Christian Religion; so that it rather gave him the Advantage which all Neuters have of judging impartially of both sides.]

PHILASTRIUS.

PHILASTRIUS Bishop of Brescia, flourish'd under the Elder Theodosius, and was one of the Bishops in the Council of Aquileia. St. Austin says, That he had seen him sometimes with St. Ambrose. We have his Life written, as is thought, by St. Gaudentius his Successor. He died before St. Ambrose about the Year 387 (a.) Philastrius

(a) About the Year 387.] The Author of this Life, says, That he died before St. Ambrose. In Heresie 63 'tis said, That he wrote in the Year 430, but 'tis plain that this was the Mistake of a Figure, and that they put a C for an L, which would make it just 380.

Philaſtrius

He wrote a Treatiſe of Hereſies, wherein he reckons 20 Hereſies before the Birth of Jeſus Chriſt, and 128 afterwards to the Year 380, in which he wrote, and tells in a few Words the principal Errors of each of them. St. Auſtin obſerves at the beginning of his Book about Hereſies, that it was a ſurprizing thing that Philaſtrius, who was much leſs learned and leſs exact than St. Epiphanius, ſhould reckon up many more Hereſies than he did; from whence he concludes, that theſe two Authors could not have the ſame Notions of Hereſie, becauſe indeed it is very difficult to give a juſt Definition of it. Wherefore, adds St. Auſtin, in giving the Catalogue of Hereſies, we muſt carefully avoid theſe two oppoſite extremes, whereof one is to make thoſe Hereſies that are not, and the other is to omit thoſe Hereſies which really are ſuch. 'Tis a rare thing for thoſe who make the Catalogues of Hereſies to fall into this laſt Fault; but the firſt is very common, and Philaſtrius was more ſubject to it than any body. For he feigns a multitude of Hereſies that never were (b,) and ſometimes he puts in the number of Hereſies thoſe Opinions that are true, or at leaſt problematically diſputed (c.) And therefore we need not wonder, that he made ſo numerous a Catalogue of Hereſies, which he alſo multiplied, by mentioning one and the ſame Hereſie many times.

The Style of this Author is mean and flat; he had no great Learning, and has committed many groſs Faults (d) in this little Tract, which is not written with any exactneſs: Yet there are ſome remarkable things in it (e.)

This Treatiſe was printed at Baſle in 1528; and at Helmſtadt in 1611, and in 1614, and with St. Auſtin's Book of Hereſies, in ſeveral places, and in the Bibliotheca Patrum.

(b) Hereſies that never were.] As the Nazareans, the Heliognoſts, the Adorers of Mice, the Muſcarommites, the Troglodites in the Old Teſtament, the Fortunatians, the Baalites, the Celebites, the Molochites, the Tophites; making ſeveral Sects of Hereticks, of the Abominations committed by the Jews, and the Sacrifices of the People that were their Neighbours. But nothing is more pleaſant than his Invention of the Hereſie of the Puteorites, which he founds upon that paſſage of Jeremy. They have forſaken me the Fountain of Living Water, to make to themſelves broken Ciſterns. That which he founds upon the 8*th*. Ch. of Ezekiel is not better grounded. Never any but he mentioned the Hereſies of Judas, of the Paſſalorinchites, the Rhelorians, the Diſcalceati, and ſome others: Of one and the ſame Hereſie, he many times makes many; and in a word, he reckons the number of Hereſies, not by the Sects, but by every particular Opinion. In our days, he might have multiplied at a much greater rate the number of Hereſies, by counting as many Errors as have been invented by one or other..

(c) He puts in the number of Hereſies thoſe Opinions that are true, or at leaſt problematical.] As in Hereſie 26, that the Soul of Samuel was brought back by the Witch of Endor; in the 59th. the Error of the Millenaries; in the 79th. that the Elements ſhall not periſh; in the 88th. that the Epiſtle to the Hebrews may be St. Luke's, or St. Barnabas's; in the 63d. that there are more than 7 Heavens; in 94, that there is no other Earth but this; in 96, that the likeneſs of Man to God may be explain'd with relation to his Body; in 97, that the Breath which God inſpir'd into Man was his Soul; in 101, that Earthqnakes are natural Effects; in 102, and 111, that the Names of prophane Gods may be given to the Stars; in 110, that the number of years ſince the Creation is not certain; in 126, that David was not the Author of all the Pſalms; in 129, that the Stars are faſten'd to Heaven; in 137, and thoſe that follow, that we may follow another Verſion beſides that of the Seventy and ſome others; in the 56th. he condemns thoſe that admit Eccleſiaſticus as a Canonical Book.

(d) Many groſs Faults.] There are an infinite number of them in this Book; take ſome few of them. He places the Ophites, the Gaïanites, and the Troglodites among the Hereticks which were before Jeſus Chriſt, which is an Error in Chronology. He ſays, the Samaritans came from a King call'd Samarius, the Son of Canaan. What a ſtrange Miſtake is here! He ſays that Mercurius Triſmegiſtus came to the Celtæ, and taught them to adore the Sun. He affirms, that the God Actaron was a Fly. He ſuppoſes that not only Simon Magus, Baſilides, &c. but alſo Cerdon, Marcion, and many other Hereticks, publiſh'd their Errors while the Apoſtles were alive; a wonderful Miſtake in Chronology. There are many more in it of this Nature.

(e) There are ſome remarkable things in it.] He confirms in many places the Immortality and Spirituality of the Soul, and chiefly in Hereſie 122. In Hæreſ. 87. he admits as Canonical the Two Epiſtles of St. Peter, that of St. Jude, and the Three Epiſtles of St. John. He explains the Myſtery of the Trinity in Hæreſ. 91, 92. He diſcourſes of Grace in Hæreſ. 97. He ſays very curious things about the Diverſity and Gift of Tongues in Hæreſ. 103, 104. He rejects in 105, the Opinion of thoſe who thought that the Day of Judgment ſhould happen 363 Years after Jeſus Chriſt. In 106 he rejects the Opinion of thoſe who imagin'd, that the Sons of Men ſpoken of in Geneſis, were Angels. In the 112 he laughs at thoſe that ſay there are many Worlds. In Hæreſ. 116. he plainly admits Original Sin. In 121, he rejects the Opinion of thoſe, who believ'd that Jeſus Chriſt deſcended into Hell, and preach'd the Goſpel there to all the Damned, and that thoſe of them who believ'd in him were ſav'd. In 129, he explains the Eternal Generation of the World. In 124, he teaches that Men ought to run in the Ways of Vertue, and to deſire what is Good, but they ought not to do it with Pride and Haughtineſs, for they ſhould acknowledge that they cannot deſerve Salvation by their own Works, but by the Mercy of Jeſus Chriſt; that it is indeed in our Power to run, but we ought to hope for greater things from God; and therefore we ought not to magnifie our ſelves, and ſay, I can be a Martyr, I can be an Apoſtle, but we muſt add, If Jeſus Chriſt will: Becauſe it is from him that we obtain theſe Graces, and they are not to be acquir'd by a vain Preſumption. In Hereſie 144, he obſerves that the Church celebrates Four Solemn Faſts, before Chriſtmas, before Epiphany, before Eaſter, and before Whitſunday. I leave the other Obſervations to thoſe who will take the pains to read this little Tract, whoſe brevity is one of its beſt Qualities.

TIMO-

TIMOTHY of Alexandria.

Timothy of Alexandria.

TIMOTHY the Succeſſor of Peter of Alexandria, who was preſent at the Second Council of Conſtantinople, wrote the Lives of the Monks of Egypt, which is mention'd by Sozomen, Ch. 29. of B. VI. of his Hiſtory. Facundus in Ch. 2. of B. IV. cites a Letter of the ſame Timothy, addreſs'd to Diodorus of Tarſus.

We have now the Reſponſes or Canon-Laws of this Biſhop, upon which Balſamon has written Commentaries. The Queſtions that were propos'd to him, were Queſtions about Cuſtoms and Practices of the Church, and his Anſwers are very Judicious.

In the Firſt he ſays, That thoſe young Catechumens ought to be Baptiz'd, who being preſent in the Church, with the Faithful, had received the Eucharift.

The Second and Third concern thoſe that are poſſeſs'd by an Evil Spirit; he ſays, That thoſe Catechumens ought not to be Baptiz'd who are afflicted with this Evil, until the point of Death. As to the Faithful, he would have them permitted from time to time to approach the Holy Myſteries, provided the Devil do not ſeduce them to diſcover theſe Myſteries, or to blaſpheme them.

In the 4th. he ſays, That thoſe Catechumens may be Baptiz'd, who have loſt their Wits by Sickneſs.

In the 5th. He counſels married Perſons to abſtain from the uſe of Marriage, on that day in which they intended to receive the Communion.

In the 6th. and 7th. He would not have Women Baptiz'd, nor receive the Communion, but at certain times.

In the 8th. He exempts Women newly brought to Bed from the Faſt of Lent: Becauſe, ſays he, Faſting was not appointed but to afflict the Body, and therefore where the Body is already afflicted, they may take what is neceſſary for it.

In the 9th. he ſays, That the Clergy ought not to uſe the Publick Prayers in the preſence of the Arians and Hereticks, if they have a deſign to forſake their Hereſie: He takes notice, That the Deacon was wont to ſay with a loud Voice, before he ſaluted the People, Let thoſe who do not Communicate withdraw.

In the 10th. He exempts ſick Perſons from the Faſt of Lent, and permits them to eat Oyl in that time.

In the 11th. he ſays, That a Clergy-man ought not to marry Perſons contrary to Law.

In the 12th. He excuſes Nocturnal Illuſions, when they do not proceed from a voluntary Cauſe.

In the 13th. He would have Perſons that are Married abſtain from the uſe of Marriage on Saturday and Sunday, that they may be capable of receiving the Communion.

In the 14th. he ſays, That an Oblation may be offer'd for thoſe that kill themſelves through Madneſs, having loſt the uſe of their Reaſon; but becauſe this Pretence is often alledg'd to procure an Offering for thoſe that kill themſelves knowingly, therefore the Matter ſhould be well examin'd.

The 15th. Queſtion is of great Conſequence. It was ask'd, ſuppoſing a Wife to be perfectly Fooliſh and Mad, ſo that ſhe muſt be bound, Whether an Husband, who, ſays he, cannot contain himſelf, may lawfully marry another Wife? He anſwers, That this Action would be Adultery in him; and that nothing elſe is to be ſaid upon the Queſtion.

In the 16th. 'twas ask'd, Whether a Perſon that faſted in order to Communicate, having by chance ſwallow'd down a drop of Water, either in bathing himſelf, or in waſhing his Mouth, ought to Communicate or no? He anſwers, That he ought to do it ſo much the rather, becauſe 'tis the Devil that uſes this Artifice to hinder his receiving the Communion.

In the 17th. he ſays, That thoſe who hear the Word of God and do it not, are in ſome meaſure excuſable, if they be angry with themſelves for their Omiſſion, and accuſe themſelves of it.

In the Laſt, he ſays, That Men begin to ſin, when they come to the uſe of Reaſon, and ſo ſome begin to ſin at Ten Years of Age; ſome ſooner and ſome later.

NECTARIUS.

Nectarius

NECTARIUS who was choſen Arch-biſhop of Conſtantinople in the Year 382, after St. Gregory Nazianzen withdrew, paſſes for the Author of a Homily upon the Feſtival of the Martyr Theodorus, printed at Paris by Nivelle in 1554, together with ſome Homilies of St. Chryſoſtom. He diſcourſes in this Homily of Alms-giving and Faſting. Nectarius died in 397. He could not be very skilful in Divinity, having ſpent all his Life at Court, and being only a Catechumen when he was choſen to be Biſhop.

Gelaſius of Cæſarea.

GELASIUS of Cæſarea.

ST. Jerome places Gelaſius Succeſſor to Euzoïus Biſhop of Cæſarea in Palæſtine, amongſt the Eccleſiaſtical Writers. He aſſures us, That he had an exact and polite Style, but that he would not publiſh his Works. Photius in Vol. 89. aſſures us, That he read the Continuation of the Hiſtory of Euſebius, written by Ruffinus, tranſlated into Greek by this Author. He obſerves, That he was the Nephew of St. Cyril of Jeruſalem, and that this Father was his Fellow-labourer in the Tranſlation of this Hiſtory. Theodoret in his firſt Dialogue quotes with commendation a Paſſage of this Author, taken out of a Homily upon the Apparition of Jeſus Chriſt, which proves the diſtinction of the Two Natures in Chriſt.

SIRICIUS.

Siricius.

SIRICIUS ſucceeded Pope Damaſus in the Year 385, and govern'd the Church of Rome till the Year 398. The Letters of this Pope, are the Firſt Decretals which are truly the Pope's whoſe Name they bear.

The Firſt Letter he wrote ſoon after he was promoted to the Pontifical Dignity, in anſwer to Himerius Biſhop of Tarracon, upon ſome Queſtions which he had propos'd to Damaſus Predeceſſor to Siricius.

The Firſt Queſtion was, Whether the Arians muſt be Re-baptized who were re-admitted into the Church. Siricius anſwers, That this was by no means to be permitted, becauſe the Apoſtle forbids it, becauſe the Canons condemn it, and becauſe it was forbidden by the Conſtitutions of his Predeceſſor Liberius, which were ſent to all the Churches of the World, after the annulling of the Council of Ariminum. " Wherefore, adds he, in obedience to what was Ordain'd, by a Synod, We re-" concile them to the Church, as well as the Novatians, and other Hereticks by Invocation of the Ho-" ly Spirit, and by impoſition of Hands made by the Biſhops: This is the Method which all the Eaſt " and all the Weſt obſerves, and you cannot vary from this Practice, but you will deſerve to be ſepa-" rated from our Society by a Synodical Sentence.

The Second Queſtion propos'd by Himerius, was about the time wherein Baptiſm ought to be Adminiſtred. Siricius thinks, that in this we ſhould follow the Cuſtom of the Church of Rome, that this Sacrament ſhould not be Adminiſtred but at Eaſter and Whitſontide; yet he excepts Infants and ſuch as are in danger of their Life, who ſhould be reliev'd with all ſpeed. " For fear, ſays he, leſt " we be guilty before God of the loſs of thoſe to whom we have refus'd Baptiſm. He would have " this Law obſerv'd by all the Biſhops, and threatens thoſe who ſhall not obſerve it, to ſeparate them " from the Apoſtolick Rock, upon which Chriſt has built his Univerſal Church. Yet this Law was never punctually obſerv'd, neither in the Eaſt nor in the Weſt; and nevertheleſs the Biſhops who did not obſerve it, were never upon this Account ſeparated from the Apoſtolick Rock upon which Chriſt built his Univerſal Church.

The Third Queſtion is concerning thoſe who having receiv'd Baptiſm had faln into Apoſtacy. Siricius ordains, that if they acknowledge their Fault, they ſhould do Penance for the reſt of their Life; but that the favour of Reconciliation ſhould be granted them at the point of Death.

The Fourth Queſtion was, Whether a Man could marry a Woman that was promis'd to another. Siricius Anſwers, that we muſt not ſuffer it to be done, becauſe it was a kind of Sacrilege to violate the Bleſſing which the Prieſt or Biſhop gave to her that was to be married.

The Fifth concerns Penitents, who have relaps'd into the Sins of the Fleſh, after they had compleated their Penance, and were reconcil'd to the Church. Siricius ſays, that ſince they have no further the benefit of Penance, he thinks it convenient to give them leave to be preſent at the Prayers of the Church; but upon condition that they ſhall be kept back from the Holy Table, that is, from the participation of the Sacrament of the Euchariſt; yet he would have this Viaticum granted them at the point of Death. He Ordains that the ſame Method ſhall be obſerved towards Women that fall into Sins of this Nature. And in fine, as to Monks and Religious Perſons guilty of Uncleanneſs, he Ordains, that thoſe deteſtable Perſons ſhall be ſeparated not only from the Aſſemblies of the Church, but alſo from the Society of Monks, and that being ſhut up in Priſon, they ſhall bewail their Sin all the remainder of their Life, that ſo they may be capable of deſerving the Communion of the Church at the Hour of Death.

After this, he ſpeaks in the 7th. Canon againſt thoſe Perſons, who being in Orders do not obſerve Celebacy. And he declares, That if for the future any Biſhop, Prieſt, or Deacon ſhall not continue unmarried, he is to hope for no more Pardon, becauſe it was neceſſary to cut off with the Knife thoſe Sores that could not be cur'd by other Remedies.

The Eighth Canon is againſt thoſe who get themſelves Ordain'd after they have had ſeveral Wives.

In the Ninth, Siricius obſerves the ſeveral Degrees through which one muſt paſs before he arrives at the Prieſthood. He ſays, That he who devotes himſelf to the Service of the Church, ſhould be baptiz'd very Young, and plac'd among the number of Readers; that if he behaves himſelf diſcreetly till he be 30 Years Old, he may during that time be made an Acolyth and Sub-deacon, provided that he he does not marry above once, and then he does not marry a Widow; that after he ſhould be Ordain'd Deacon, if he obliges himſelf to live unmarried; Five Years after the Order of Prieſthood may be conferr'd upon him; and that in fine at the end of Ten Years, he may be made Biſhop. Thus Siricius diſpoſes of their time who are deſign'd for the Clergy, from the Firſt Years of their Life: But for thoſe that would enter into Holy Orders when they are already come to Years, he ſays, in the Tenth Canon, that immediately after their Baptiſm, they ſhould be plac'd in the Rank of Readers or Exoriſts, and Two Years after they ſhould be made Acolyths and Subdeacons, at the end of Five Years Deacons, and ſome time after Prieſts, and afterwards Biſhops, if the People and the Clergy ſhould chooſe them. Theſe Rules are very fine in ſpeculation, but it was never ſeen that they were exactly obſerv'd, and indeed it had been very difficult to do it. Siricius.

In the 7th. he declares, that every Clergy-man who ſhall marry a Second Wife or a Widow, ſhall be turn'd out of Holy Orders, and reduc'd to Lay-Communion.

In The 12th. he obſerves, that no other Woman muſt be ſuffer'd to dwell with the Clergy, but thoſe whom the Council of Nice has allow'd.

In the 13th. he ſpeaks of the Ordination of Monks. "We wiſh, ſays he, and deſire, that thoſe "among the Monks who are recommended by the Holineſs of their Lives and the Purity of their "Faith, may enter into the Clergy, upon Condition that they paſs through the Inferior Orders, that "they be not Ordain'd Deacons or Prieſts till they come to a good Age, and that they do not aſcend "all of the ſudden into the Epiſcopal Chair, but only after they have continued the time preſcrib'd "in each of the Sacred Orders.

In the 14th. he ſays, that as a Clergy-man is not permitted to do publick Penance, ſo neither ſhould a Lay-man be allow'd, after he has done publick Penance, to enter into the Clergy. At laſt, he Ordains in the laſt Canon, that conſidering the greater part excuſe themſelves as not knowing theſe Laws, that their Ignorance be pardon'd; but upon condition that the Penitents and Bigamiſts, who have been Ordain'd, ſhall continue in that Order wherein they are, without being capable of aſcending higher. He concludes theſe Canons with threatning the Condemnation of the Holy See to all Metropolitans who did not obſerve theſe Laws; and ends his whole Letter with exhorting Himerius, to obſerve the Canons and the Holy Decrees, and to publiſh them in Spain.

The Second Letter of Pope Siricius furniſhes us with a good Example of the ancient manner of Judging us'd by the Holy Apoſtolick See: There he acquaints the Church of Milan, that having Aſſembled all his Clergy, he had condemn'd Jovinian and his followers, with the Advice and Conſent of the Prieſts, Deacons, and all the Clergy. Omnium noſtrum tam Presbyterorum & Diaconorum, quam etiam totius Cleri una ſententia.

The Third Letter of the Pope Siricius is addreſs'd to all the Orthodox; he exhorts them to obſerve the Canons of the Council of Nice in the Election of Biſhops; he recommends to them, not to give Biſhopricks to Perſons unknown, nor to Novices, nor to Lay-men, but to Clergy-men, whoſe Life was unblamable.

The Fourth Letter of Siricius, which is adreſs'd to the Biſhops of Africa, is ſuſpected of Forgery by the moſt able Criticks, who prove it by very ſtrong Conjectures (a) and it contains nothing remarkable.

The laſt Letter written to Anyſius of Theſſalonica, and other Biſhops of Illyricum, was for a long time attributed to St. Ambroſe, though he ſpeaks there of this Father in the Third Perſon, and was reſtor'd to Siricius by Holſtenius. The Biſhops to whom he writes had conſulted him about the Cauſe of Bonoſus, who was accus'd of ſaying raſhly, That the Virgin Mary had Children. Siricius anſwers Anyſius and thoſe Biſhops, that the Synod of Capua having ordain'd that the neighbouring Biſhops to Bonoſus, and chiefly thoſe of Macedonia, ſhould take cognizance of the Charge that was drawn up againſt him, it did no longer belong to him to judge of this Cauſe; that it belong'd to (a) By very ſtrong Conjectures.] Blondel had before rejected this Letter, but with ſome Doubt, and without giving any convincing Reaſon; but Monſieur Queſnel has perfectly deſtroyed the Credit of it, by ſapping the foundation upon which it was built, which was the Council of Telepta, wherein this Letter is quoted, and by alledging many new Conjectures againſt this Letter. Theſe that follow are the chief. 1. The firſt Canon of this Letter has no ſenſe in what ever manner it be read or explain'd; for according to ſome it muſt be read, ut ſine Conſcientia ſedis Apoſtolicæ Primatis, nemo audeat ordinare, according to others, ut extra conſcientiam ſedis Apoſtolicæ, i.e. Primatis, nemo audeat ordinare. The firſt is rediculous: Firſt, becauſe the Popes never pretended to take cognizance of the ordinations of all the Metropolitans. Secondly, becauſe in Africk there was but one Primate only, all the other Eccleſiaſtical Metropolitans were the moſt ancient Biſhops of the Province. The Second is equally ridiculous: For what probability is there, that a Pope ſhould give to all the Metropolitan Churches the Title of the Apoſtolick See, which Pope Leo in Ep. 78. ſaid, could not be granted to the Biſhop of Conſtantinople? Secondly this Letter is copied from that of Innocent to Victricius. Thirdly, the Author of this Letter ſays impertinently, That the Biſhops of Africk would have come to the Synod of Rome, if they had not been hindred by old Age or Sickneſs from coming thither. Fourthly, he makes Siricius ſpeak to the Africans with too much Authority. Fifthly, he only adviſes Prieſts and Deacons to Celibacy, as a thing that they were not oblig'd to; whereas 'tis certain that Siricius lookt upon it as an indiſpenſable Law. Sixthly, what this Author has not copied from the Letter of St. Innocent is barbarous and ill turn'd. Seventhly, the Subſcription of this Letter is ſingular, Data Romæ in Concilio Epiſcoporum 80. This is always put at the bginning and never at the end of Synodical Letters. In fine this Letter was never quoted in the African Councils, which have treated of the Continency of the Clergy, no more than that Council of Telepta, wherein it is pretended that it was quoted. 'Tis true that Ferrandus the Deacon has inſerted the Canons of this Council, as well as thoſe of this Letter, into his Collection; but he may be miſtaken as Father Queſnel proves in this Diſſertation, which is the 15th. of his Learned Diſſertations upon St. Leo.

them

Siricius. them to whom this Judgment was committed to give their Sentence, and that neither the Accuſed, nor the Accuſers could avoid it; That the Synod of Capua having choſen them to judge it, the Judgment which they ſhould give was to be lookt upon as the Judgment of the Council; That Bonoſus having conſulted St. Ambroſe, whether he could be readmitted to his Church, he had anſwer'd him, that he muſt attempt nothing unſeaſonably; but muſt wait for the Judgment of thoſe to whom the Synod of Capua had given Authority to determine this Affair: Yet in the following part of this Letter he does not omit to aquaint them with his thoughts of this Queſtion, and to refute the Opinion of Bonoſus; but he does it as a private Doctor and not as a Judge, declaring at the end of this Letter, that he waited for their Judgment upon this Affair: that he might follow it as his Rule. This is a very authentick Teſtimony of the Reverence which the Ancient Popes had for the Deciſions of Councils.

SABINUS.

Sabinus. SABINUS Biſhop of the Macedonians at Heraclea in Thracia, liv'd about the end of the Reign of Theodoſius the Great. He collected together the Acts of ſeveral Councils of the Fourth Century, which Socrates quotes ſeveral times; (a) tho' he wrote very ſpitefully againſt the Church, yet his Memoirs had been very uſeful for clearing up the Hiſtory of the Councils of that time, if they had come to our hands.

(a) Quotes ſeveral times.] Socrat. lib. 1. c. 8. and 9. lib. 2. c. 15, 17, 39. lib. 3. c. 10. 24.

AMBROSE of Alexandria.

Ambroſe of Alexandria. ST. Jerome ſpeaks of this Author in his Catalogue of Eccleſiaſtical Writers after this manner: "Ambroſe of Alexandria the Scholar of Didymus, wrote a great Dogmatical Treatiſe againſt "Apollinarius, and Commentaries upon Job, of which ſome ſpoke to me not long ago: This Author "is ſtill alive;" which ſhews that he died not till after the Year 392. And this is all that we have to ſay of this Author.

THEOTIMUS.

Theotimus. THEOTIMUS Biſhop of Tomi in Scythia, has written, according to the Teſtimony of the ſame St. Jerome, ſhort and ſententious Tracts by way of Dialogue, according to the ancient manner of Writing. This Biſhop was one of the defenders of St. Chryſoſtom. He was preſent at Conſtantinople when St. Epiphanius came thither, and ſpoke to him briefly in defence of Origen's Books. Socrates produces his words Ch. 12. of the VIth. B. of his Hiſtory. Sozomen commends in Ch. 26. of the VIth. B. of his Hiſtory, and mentions ſome Miracles which he wrought.

EVAGRIUS of Antioch.

Evagrius of Antioch. ST. Jerome aſſures us that Evagrius, who was ordain'd in 386, Biſhop of Paulinus's Party at Antioch, was a Man of a brisk and fervent Spirit; that when he was Prieſt, he wrote many Treatiſes upon different Subjects which he had read to himſelf, but that they had not yet ſeen the light; and that he had Tranſlated into Latin the Life of St. Anthony written by St. Athanaſius. This ſhows, that they are to blame, who attribute the Tranſlation of this Life to St. Jerome. This Author died in the Year 393.

St. AMBROSE Biſhop of Milan.

St. Ambroſe THE Father of St. Ambroſe was Prætorian Præfect of Gaul when this Saint was born, which was about the Year 340 (a), and was Nurs'd in his Father's Palace (b). 'Tis reported, that while he was ſleeping one day with his Mouth open in the Court of this Palace, a Swarm of Bees came and (a) About the Year 340.] The date of St. Ambroſe's Birth, depends upon the date of that Letter which was formerly the 32d. and is now the 60th. addreſs'd to Severus; for there he ſays, That he was 53 Years old, and that he wrote in a time of War. Tot objecti barbaricis moribus, & bellorum procellis, in medio verſamur omnium moleſtiarum freto. This may relate either to the War of Maximus in 387, or to that of Eugenius in 393; if it referrs to the firſt, he was born in 334, if to the ſecond, in 340. 'Tis hard to ſay whether it referrs to the one or to the other.

(b) Was Nurs'd in his Father's Palace.] Paulinus the Author of St. Ambroſe's Life ſays plainly, that he was born in his Father's Palace, who was then the Prætorian Præfect flew

flew about his Cradle, and having many times crept in and out to reſt themſelves upon his Mouth, at laſt they mounted up into the Air ſo high, till they quite vaniſh'd out of ſight; which was look'd upon by his Father as a Prodigy, and a Preſage of the future Greatneſs of this Infant. Profane Antiquity relates the ſame thing of Plato, and affirms, That it was a Preſage of the Sweetneſs of his Eloquence; but there is more Reaſon to believe what the Author of the Life of our Saint ſays, That this ſwarm of Bees form'd thoſe Hony-combs in his Mouth, which ſhould one Day make us reliſh the ſweetneſs of heavenly Gifts, and raiſe our Hearts up to Heaven. St. Ambroſe

The Father of St. Ambroſe dying ſomtime after, his Widow left Gaul, whether ſhe was come to dwell only upon the account of her Husband's Office, and return'd to Rome which was their Country. Thither ſhe carried St. Ambroſe, who was yet very Young, together with Marcellina his Siſter, and Satyrus his Eldeſt Brother; and ſhe took ſpecial Care of the Education of her Children. Her Daughter profeſs'd Virginity, and received the Veil from the Hands of Pope Liberius; St. Ambroſe profited very much by the Domeſtick Examples of the Piety and vertue of his Mother, his Siſter, and the Virgins that were with them; they inſpir'd into him from his tender Youth, the love of Vertue, and ſecured him from the Corruptions of the Age, and he joyn'd Learning to his Piety. His Works diſcover how vigorouſly he applied himſelf to humane Learning. Having finiſh'd his Studies, he acquir'd by his Merits the Friendſhip of Anicius Probus, and of Symmachus, to very Honeſt and Learned Men, tho' of different Religions. The Firſt was the Prætorian Præfect of Italy, in whoſe Court St. Ambroſe pleaded Cauſes with ſo much renown, that Probus made choice of him to be his Aſſeſſor. Afterwards he made him Governour of Liguria and Emilia, that is, of all that Country, which comprehends at this Day, the Archbiſhopricks of Milan, Liguria, Turin, Genoa and Bolonia. 'Tis reported that Probus ſaid to him at parting, Go thy way, and Govern more like a Biſhop than a Judge; which Words were a Prediction of what happened afterwards. For a little while after, Auxentius Biſhop of Milan, who was of the Arian Faction, being dead, the Biſhops of the Province of Italy aſſembled to place one in his room, according to the Orders of the Emperour Valentinian, who would not himſelf interpoſe in the Election; and upon this Occaſion there aroſe a great Contention among the People, becauſe the Arians and the Orthodox on each ſide, did all that laid in their Power to chooſe a Biſhop of their own Party. This Quarrel being like to raiſe a Tumult, St. Ambroſe thought it the Duty of his Office to come into the Church and prevent it, whither being come, he made an Oration to the People with much Diſcretion and Mildneſs, exhorting them to proceed in their Choice with the Spirit of Peace and without Tumult. While he was yet ſpeaking, the People of Gaul. Poſito in adminiſtratione præfecturæ Galliarum Patre ejus Ambroſio natus eſt Ambroſius, qui infans in Area Prætoris in Cunabulis poſitus, &c This plainly enough diſcovers the place of his Birth and Education, for the Dwelling-Houſe and Palace of the Præfect of the Gauls was certainly in Gaul: 'Tis true that the ſame Paulinus ſpeaking afterwards of St. Ambroſe's Journey to Rome, ſays, That he went to his own Country, proprium ſolum, and that St. Baſil writing to St. Ambroſe, ſays, He was of the Emperial City: But on theſe Occaſions, the Place of his Parents abode, the Origin of the Family, and the common Reſidence of St. Ambroſe, was conſider'd as the Place of his Country. And indeed ſo it was according to the Roman Laws; and the Children born in a place where their Parents were by chance about their Affairs, were eſteem'd to be of that Place, which was the ordinary Reſidence of their Fathers and Mothers. See L. retro. ff. de captiv. & L. filios C. de municip. & L. cives C. de incolis. 'Tis more difficult to aſſign preciſely that City of the Gaules, where the Prætorian Præfect then reſided, which is not certainly known. Some are of Opinion that it was at Triers, which St. Athanaſius and Theodoret call the Metropolis of Gaul, as Milan was the Metropolis of Italy: For the Reſidence of the Prætorian Præfect of Italy was at Milan. Ammian. Marcellinus calls the City of Triers, the Dwelling-Place of Princes; to which we may add, the Praiſes which many Authors have given of this City; but this proves nothing. In the time of the Tyrant Maximus, Evodius the Prætorian Præfect of the Gauls reſided at Triers, as appears by the Hiſtory of the Priſcillianiſts related by Sulpitius Severus. But it does not follow from hence, that this City was the Ordinary Reſidence of others, becauſe that Maximus a Tyrant, who was newly raiſed to the Empire, dwelt at Triers. Some have thought that the ordinary Reſidence of the Prætorian Præfect of the Gauls was at Arles. The Conjectures for this Opinion are theſe, That the Emperour Conſtantine reſided in this City. that he honour'd it with many Privileges, and particularly to be the Place for the meeting of a Council; That there is a Law of Honorius and Theodoſius, which Ordains that every year an Aſſembly of the Seven Provinces ſhould be held in the City of Arles, in the preſence of the Præfect, ſub Illuſtri præſentia Præfecturæ; That Agricolaus the Prætorian Præfect of the Gauls, to whom this Law was addreſs'd, received it at Arles; That in the Petition which thoſe Countries preſented to Pope Leo, they eſtabliſh the Dignity of the Eccleſiaſtical Metropolis of Arles upon the Privileges which had been granted to this City by Valentinian and Honorius, which made it be look'd upon as the Mother of all the other Cities, and upon the Honour which it had to ſerve for the Reſidence of the Prætorian Præfect. 'Tis added, That Honoratus writes in the Life of Hilary of Arles, That the Prætorian Præfect came to ſee this Biſhop when he was reduc'd to Extremity; That St. Proſper in his Chronicle ſpeaks of a Prætorian Præfect call'd Exuperantius, who reſided at Arles; That Liberius Prætorian Præfect of Gaul, who confirm'd the Second Council of Orange, dwelt at Arles; That Fauſtus Rhedonenſis writing to Felix the Præfect of Gaul, ſays, That he reſided in a City where he profited by the Inſtructions of Eonius, and this Man was Biſhop of Arles. All theſe Proofs plainly ſhew, that in the Fifth Age the ordinary Reſidence of the Prætorian Præfects of Gaul was in the City of Arles; but they do not prove, that it was alſo in the time of St. Ambroſe. One may rather believe, that it was the City of Lyons, which at firſt was the ordinary Reſidence of the Prætorian Præfect of Gaul. For, Firſt, This City was look'd upon as the Chief City of Gaul. Secondly, Strabo, aſſures us, That the Præfects and Governours of Gaul commonly reſided there, and coyn'd Money there of Gold and Silver: Now there is no probability, neither is there any Proof that Conſtantine changed this Cuſtom in favour of the City of Arles: And therefore there is nothing very certain upon this Subject.

unanimouſly

St. Ambroſe unanimouſly proclaim'd him Biſhop of Milan. This unexpected Choice ſurpriz'd him; he preſently withdrew, and made uſe of all the Artifices he could to ſhun this Biſhoprick. He aſcended the Bench of Juſtice, and affecting to ſeem cruel and unworthy of the Prieſthood, he cauſed the Criminals to be brought before him loaded with Chains, and commanded them to be rack'd with great ſeverity. This Artifice failing, he contrived another, by making Women of lewd Lives come into his Houſe. But the People perceiving all this to be affected, continued ſtill in their Choice: Whereupon he ſtole out of the City by Night, with a deſign to retire to Ticinum; but miſſing his way, he wandred up and down all Night, and found himſelf next Morning at the Gates of Milan. His Flight being known, a Guard was ſet about him, and a Relation of all that had paſs'd, was ſent to the Emperour: St. Ambroſe wrote alſo to him on his own behalf, that he might be excus'd from that Office. But the Emperour being wonderfully pleas'd with this Choice of the People, did not only confirm the Election, but gave Order to the Lieutenant of Italy to ſee the thing effectually done. In the mean time St. Ambroſe once more made his eſcape, and hid himſelf in the Houſe of one Leontius: But the Lieutenant of Italy having publiſhed the Order againſt all thoſe that knew where he was, and did not diſcover him, Leontius by an Innocent kind of Treachery declared where he was, and then St. Ambroſe finding it was in vain to reſiſt any longer, was firſt Baptiz'd, and ſome time after made Biſhop of Milan, at the End of the Year 374, or the Beginning of 375 (c.) Immediately after his Ordination he diſtributed to the Poor, or gave to the Church, all the Money that he had. He ſettled his Lands alſo upon the Church, reſerving only the Profits of them for Life. He committed the Care of his Affairs to his Brother Satyrus, who being gone to Rome by Sea in purſuit of a man who had unjuſtly poſſeſs'd himſelf of ſome part of their Eſtate, was like to have periſhed in a Shipwrack, which made him reſolve to be baptiz'd: Nevertheleſs he eſcaped the danger and returned ſafe to Milan, where he died in 379. Thus St. Ambroſe having renounc'd all Care of Secular Affairs, applyed himſelf wholly to the worthy diſcharge of his Epiſcopal Function. Tho' he was but newly baptiz'd, and never had time to Study Religion before his Ordination, yet by his great Induſtry he attained to that Perfection, that at the ſame time he both learned and taught the Truths of the Chriſtian Religion. He did every Day celebrate the Holy Myſteries; there paſs'd not a Sunday but he preached to his People. He hearkened to all Men with Meekneſs and Charity, he relieved the Poor, he comforted the Afflicted, ſo that all his People loved and admired him. He applied himſelf vigorouſly to root out the remnants of Arianiſm that were yet in the Church of Milan. He convicted Secundianus and Palladius, and procured their Condemnation in the Council of Aquileia held in the Year 381. The Death of Gratian changed the face of Affairs in the Weſtern Empire. The Tyrant Maximus who had put him to Death, having Uſurped Gaul, was become formidable to all Italy. It was feared, that he would paſs the Alps, and carry Italy by force from Valentinian the Younger, who was then but Twelve or Thirteen Years Old. St. Ambroſe was ſent Embaſſador to this Tyrant in the Year 384, and by his Prudence and Boldneſs diverted his Deſign of paſſing then into Italy. The Empreſs Juſtina, Mother to Valentinian, who was an Arian, having a Deſign to reſtore Arianiſm after its Extirpation in the Church of Milan, did at firſt deſire of St. Ambroſe, one of the Churches call'd the Portian Church, which St. Ambroſe refus'd to grant her; and ſo great was the Aſſembly of the People round about the Palace, that ſhe was forc'd to leave St. Ambroſe in the Poſſeſſion of his Church, and to entreat him alſo to appeaſe the People. Sometime after the Empreſs ſent to him to demand in the Emperour's Name, not only that Church, but alſo the New-Church. Our Saint oppoſed them with wonderful Boldneſs, and anſwered them with ſuch a fearleſs Courage, as aſtoniſhed the Perſons who brought the Emperour's Orders to him. This happened at the Beginning of the Year 385. On Palm-Sunday in the ſame Year, Officers were ſent to ſeize upon the Portian-Church, when St. Ambroſe was Officiating in the New-Church. This irritated the People, who run to that Church, and having apprehended one Caſtulus an Arian Prieſt, would have made a Riot, if St. Ambroſe had not ſent ſome Prieſts and Deacons to appeaſe them. The Emperour cauſed many of the Seditious to be Arreſted, and ſent armed Souldiers to take Poſſeſſion of the Church, which for all that was not put in Execution. On Wedneſday in Paſſion Week the Souldiers were ſent to ſeize upon the New-Church, but the People flocking thither in great Multitudes, the Souldiers never entred it; but the People within it ſpent the whole Night and Day, in ſinging of Pſalms; and the next day after, the Emperour being prevailed upon by the Boldneſs and Wiſdom of St. Ambroſe's Carriage, who had put a ſtop to the Sedition, and yet had yielded nothing of what was demanded of him, ordered the Souldiers who ſurrounded the Church to retire.

In the Year following the Perſecution was renew'd againſt the Catholicks and St. Ambroſe, by an Edict of the Emperour in favour of the Council of Ariminum. A deſign alſo was laid to take from the Catholicks the Portian-Church. Orders were given to apprehend St. Ambroſe, and ſent him into baniſhment; but he was ſtill ſecur'd by the affection of the People of Milan, who Guarded him in his Church, where he ſpent many Days and Nights in ſinging Pſalms and Hymns continually with his People. He was challenged to Diſpute in the Palace with Auxentius the Arian Biſhop; but he refuſed to do it, becauſe Lay-men and Pagans were choſen to be Judges of their Conference. He offered to referr the Difference to the Judgment of a Council, tho' it was not reaſonable to trouble the Peace of the Church for one Man only, nor to call that in Queſtion which had been already determined.

(c) Ordain'd Biſhop of Milan about the Year 374, or 375.] In Euſebius's Chronicon, his Ordination is plac'd in the Year 375. But ſince it is certain that Valentinian died November 10th. 375. and that his Ordination was made the 10th. of December under this Emperour, we muſt of neceſſity place it in the preceding Year.

mined. After this he ſpoke an Oration againſt Auxentius, which provok'd the Empreſs Juſtina yet more againſt him: But at laſt ſhe gave over the further Perſecution of this Biſhop, ſeeing it was to no purpoſe, becauſe his own Wiſdom and Courage, and the Affections of his People, cover'd him from all her Deſigns. 'Tis believ'd, That the Diſcovery of the Relicks of St. Gervaſius and St. Protaſius, and the Miracles that were then done by them, contributed to the Peace of the Church. But 'tis very probable that the true Reaſon which hindred Juſtina and Valentinian from puſhing things to extremity, was the State of the Affairs of the Empire at that time. Maximus had prepar'd to paſs over into Italy, a Sedition was alſo to be fear'd in this Juncture, and they ſtood in need of St. Ambroſe. In Effect the Emperour found no Perſon fitter than he to treat with Maximus, whom he ſent Embaſſador to this Tyrant, who reſided at Triers: St. Ambroſe ſpoke to him with much boldneſs, but he could obtain nothing of him; on the contrary, this Tyrant march'd immediately into Italy; and thereby made himſelf Maſter of all the Weſtern Empire, ſo that Valentinian was forc'd to retire into the Eaſt, and deſire Aid of Theodoſius, who re-eſtabliſh'd him, after he had defeated, taken and be-headed Maximus. This Revolution happened in 387. St. Ambroſe continued during this time in his Biſhoprick. When Theodoſius came into the Weſt, he ſhowed no leſs Courage with reference to him, than before he had done to Valentinian. He oppoſed the re-eſtabliſhment of the Jewiſh Synagogue which Theodoſius would have done, and of the Altar of Victory, which Symmachus had already endeavour'd in vain to reſtore becauſe of the Oppoſition of St. Ambroſe. 'Tis well enough known, with what freedom he reproved the Emperour Theodoſius for the Maſſacre at Theſſalonica, which he gave a Warrant for putting in Execution, and after what manner he obliged him to do publick Penance for it. The Death of Valentinian and the Advancement of Eugenius for ſome time diſturbed the the Repoſe of St. Ambroſe. He was obliged to retire from Milan in the Year 393, but he returned in the Year 394, and finiſhed his Courſe as he had begun it. He died in the Year 396, aged 57 Years. St. Ambroſe

The Works of St. Ambroſe above all the other Fathers, have been moſt corrupted in the ordinary Editions. The Roman Edition from which thoſe that follow'd after were made, inſtead of reſtoring the Text of this Father, hath render'd it more Faulty in many places, by the Liberty which the Supervifors of that Edition took, of making Alterations in it by their own Authority. In this Edition the Works were in great Confuſion, without Order, and without any diſtinction of what were Genuine, and what were Suppoſititious; which induc'd the Benedictins of the Abby of St. Germain de Prez to undertake a New Edition of this Father's Works, wherein they have reſtor'd the Text from many Manuſcripts; and ranged the Diſcourſes in very good Order. In it they are divided into Two Volumes. The Firſt which is already publiſhed, contains the Treatiſes of St. Ambroſe upon the Scripture. The Second which will quickly come forth, and which they have allow'd me to make uſe of, contains the other Works of this Father. The Fifth begins with the Treatiſe upon the Creation of the World, compos'd of Nine Diſcourſes of St. Ambroſe to his People, preach'd in one of the laſt Weeks of Lent. 'Tis probable, that he reduc'd them afterwards into the form of a Treatiſe. 'Tis divided into Six Books, which anſwer to the Six Days of the Creation. This Work contains many Queſtions of Controverſie, and many Moral and Myſtical Conſiderations upon the Text of the Bible. There are many of them, particularly in the laſt Books which are very extraordinary, and far fetch'd. St. Ambroſe made this Treatiſe about the Year 389. He has imitated St. Baſil in it, whoſe Method he followed, and he has taken many things from him as alſo from Hippolitus and Origen.

The Treatiſe of Paradiſe is one of the firſt Books of St. Ambroſe. He Wrote it as he ſays in his Letter to Sabinus, ſoon after he was made Biſhop. He does not dive very deep into the Hiſtorical Queſtions which may be made upon this Subject, but for the moſt part acquieſces in the Allegorical Explications, which he draws out of Philo and other Authors, or which he invents himſelf: There he refutes the Hereticks of Apelles's Sect, and occaſionally ſpeaks againſt the Jews.

St. Ambroſe continues the Explication of the Text of Geneſis in the Treatiſe of the Hiſtory of Abel and Cain, upon which he makes abundance of long Allegories wherewith he intermixes ſome Moral Thoughts. He enlarges particularly upon the Sacrifices of theſe Two Brethren. Upon occaſion of the ſaying that the Blood of Abel crys, he ſays, That God hears the Juſt even after their Death, becauſe they are even then living before God and enjoy Eternal Light.

The Hiſtory of the Deluge and the Life of Noah, furniſhed St. Ambroſe with very fit matter for the Continuation of his Myſtical and Moral Explications. This is the Subject of the Book of the Ark and of Noah, or of the Ark of Noah, as St. Auſtin calls it. This Treatiſe is not perfect, for St. Auſtin quotes a Paſſage out of it, which is not to be found there now.

There are Two Books of St. Ambroſe upon the Life of Abraham. In the Firſt he preſcribes the Life and Action of this Patriarch, and repreſents his Submiſſion to the Will of God, and his other Vertues. In the Second Book he diſcourſes on the Firſt Actions of this Patriarch, to draw from them a more ſublime and ſpiritual Sence, by applying them to the different Degrees of a ſpiritual Life, and to the Ways by which we tend to Perfection.

He treats alſo of the ſame Subject, tho' in a more compendious way, in the Book of Iſaac and the Soul, where he explains the Union of the Soul with the Word, which was figur'd by the Marriage of Iſaac and Rebecca. There he diſtinguiſhes Four Degrees through which the Soul muſt paſs, that it may be delivered from all earthly Affections, and arrive at a State of perfect Union with God. By this Union he explains the Canticles, on which he makes a kind of a Myſtical Paraphraſe, and therefore this Treatiſe may paſs for a Commentary upon this Book of Scripture.

St. Ambroſe

St. Ambroſe having diſcourſed of the Soul at the End of the preceding Treatiſe, found himſelf inſenſibly engag'd to treat of Death in the following Book. 'Tis entitled, Of the Benefits or Advantages of Death. There St. Ambroſe firſt diſtinguiſhes three kinds of Death; The Death of Sin, which kills the Soul; The Myſtical Death, by which we die to Sin; and the Natural Death, by which the Soul is ſeparated from the Body. All the World conſiders the firſt as a great Miſery, and the Second as a great Happineſs; but their Opinions are divided about the laſt: Some wiſh for it as a great Advantage, and others dread it as a great Puniſhment. St. Ambroſe declares for thoſe who hold it to be a great Benefit, he makes the Advantages of it appear, and oppoſes to them the Troubles of this preſent Life from which Death delivers us. He exhorts Chriſtians, not to ſet their Affections upon this Life nor the Pleaſures of this World; he makes them ſenſible of the bitterneſs which accompanies them; he repreſents the Dangers to which we are continually expoſed, the Temptations to which we are ſubject in all ſorts of Occurences, and the Sins into which we fall every moment. Afterwards he diſcourſes of the State of departed Souls; he ſuppoſes that till the Day of Judgment, they are in Places or Habitations: where they expect Eternal Glory or Damnation, tho' they enjoy already by anticipation ſome kind of Happineſs or Miſery. All Souls wait, ſays he, for what they have deſerved; ſome expect Damnation and others Glory; but in this waiting, the former are not without Pain, nor the later without ſome Reward.] St. Ambroſe inſiſts particularly upon the Joy which the latter enjoy, and diſtinguiſhes Seven Degrees of their Happineſs, whereof the laſt is to rejoyce in the aſſurance they have of ſeeing God face to face. He concludes with exhorting the Faithful to die without Fear, "Let us go on, "ſays he, without fear in the way to Jeſus Chriſt; Let us march without anxiety to the Aſſembly "of the Patriarchs and Saints; Let us enter in with Confidence into Abraham's Boſom. Yes, O Holy "Patriarch, open to us your Boſom, extend your Arms to theſe poor Faithful. Jeſus is gone before "us to prepare Habitations, where we are to be received; he promiſed to do it before we asked it "of him. We deſire to follow thee, O Lord, but call thou us unto thee, that ſo we may effectu-"ally follow thee, becauſe without thee no Man can aſcend unto thee. Thou art the Way, the "Truth and the Life, thou giveſt us the Power, the Faith, and the Reward; receive us, ſince thou "art the Way; confirm us, ſince thou art the Truth; Grant us Life, ſince thou art the Author of "Life; make us to enjoy that good thing which David deſired; ſhow us that Eternal, that Immutable "Bliſs, which we ſhall enjoy for all Eternity." This Treatiſe of St. Ambroſe has another ſort of a reliſh than the foregoing; 'tis full of uſeful and ſolid Reflections, and of juſt and natural Reaſonings. He founds all that he ſays upon Paſſages of the Holy Scripture, which he applies very pertinently and very naturally. He builds very much upon the Fourth Book of Eſdras which he cites as Canonical. This Treatiſe was Written about the Year 387. The Book of forſaking the World was written ſoon after this, of which we have already ſpoken: the Title of it ſufficiently diſcovers the Subject. There St. Ambroſe makes uſe of ſeveral Allegories taken out of the Old Teſtament, to exhort the Faithful to flee from this World, that they may be wholly united to God.

The Books of Jacob and a Happy Life, treat of the Happineſs of the Righteous. In the Firſt, he diſcovers the means of arriving at Happineſs; the Chief whereof is, to follow the Light of Right Reaſon, which can command our Paſſions, and repreſs the Motions of Luſt: For tho' we cannot wholly extinguiſh our Paſſions, yet we may reſtrain their Violence by practiſing the Vertue of Moderation; for he maintains that we do Good or Evil freely. Jeſus Chriſt, he ſays, will have none for his Servants which are not free, and the Devil has none for Slaves, but thoſe that are voluntarily ſold to him by their Sins. But becauſe of Man's Weakneſs the Divine Aſſiſtance is neceſſary. The Law which God has given him does clearly diſcover to him his Sins; but it has not ſufficient Virtue to deliver him from Sin and Death; there is nothing but Grace could ſet us at Liberty, which Jeſus Chriſt by his Death hath merited for all Men. This Grace is ſo powerful, that provided we be willing to follow its Motions, nothing ſhall ever be able to ſeparate us from Jeſus Chriſt. Whatever befals us we ſhall be happy; a juſt Man is above all the Miſeries of this Life; 'tis true indeed, he ſuffers Loſſes, Afflictions, Diſeaſes, Pains, Captivity, &c. but he does not think himſelf leſs happy for being ſubject to theſe Accidents. There is nothing wanting to him that poſſeſſes Vertue; he fears nothing, he hopes nothing, he deſires nothing; tho' he be weak, he is ſtrong enough; tho' he appear to be poor, he is rich; tho' he is deſpiſed, he believes himſelf the more honoured; tho' he is alone, yet he is not forſaken; whatſoever Diſeaſe he has he enjoys a perfect Health.

Theſe Maxims are confirm'd in the Second Book by the Example of Jacob. St. Ambroſe there deſcribes the Life and Actions of this Patriarch, and ſhews, that the Afflictions and Croſſes which befell him did not hinder him from being happy. He concluds with the Example of Eleazar and the Maccabees, on whom he makes a very lively and Eloquent Panegyrick.

After he has diſcours'd of the Patriarchs, Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, and treated, as he ſays himſelf, of ſubmiſſion to the Will of God, upon the occaſion of Abraham, of Purity of Spirit from Iſaac, of Patience under Miſeries from the Hiſtoy of Jacob; he treats of Chaſtity in explaining the Hiſtory of Joſeph, who has given an Illuſtrious, Example of the practice of this vertue, in reſiſting the Solicitations of Potiphar's Wife. This Action of Joſeph is ſo much the more Glorious, by how much the Charms of this Woman were harder to be overcome; which St. Ambroſe ſtudies to ſet off to the beſt Advantage, that the Vertue of Joſeph may the better appear. After this he purſues the Hiſtory of this Patriarch, and diſcourſes of all the Circumſtances of his Life, which he referrs to Jeſus Chriſt, of whom Joſeph was a Figure. He lays open this Myſtical Senſe with much Art and Probability, by comparing what is ſaid of Joſeph in Geneſis, with what is ſaid of Jeſus Chriſt in the Goſpel.

The

The Commentary upon the Benedictions of the Patriarchs, follows naturally after the Book of the Life of Joſeph. St. Ambroſe there gives Myſtical Sences to the Bleſſings, which Jacob when he was dying gave to his Children, and referrs the greateſt part of them to Jeſus Chriſt. This Book and the preceding, are Sermons preach'd by St. Ambroſe at Milan about the Year 387, which he afterwards reduced into a Treatiſe, St. Ambroſe

The Book of Elias and of Faſting, contains many Sermons preach'd at Milan in Lent. Having formerly ſpoken of the Actions of Elias upon other Occaſions, he here enlarges upon the Morals of them. The Perſon of whom, and the Time when he preach'd, do both conſpire to invite him to treat of Faſting; and ſo this is the ſubject of the Firſt and Principal Part of this Work. He maintains that Faſting is a Duty as old as the World, and pretends that the Law by which God forbid Adam to Eat of the Tree of Life, was a kind of Command for Faſting. He alledges afterwards the Examples of Noah, Abraham, Moſes, Eliſha, Daniel, and many others, to authorize the Practice of Faſting. He diſcovers at laſt the Advantages of it, and ſhews how Intemperance and Exceſs are pernicious and inconvenient. This leads him inſenſibly to diſcourſe againſt the Debauchery, the Drunkenneſs, and the other Diſorders of Mens Tables, which were very common in St. Ambroſe's Time: He adds, That theſe Exceſſes draw along with them all other vices, and particularly the Deſire of gathering Riches, to furniſh the exceſſive Expences which were neceſſary to ſupport their Luxury. He exhorts Chriſtians to apply themſelves to God who is the Sovereign Phyſician of theſe Evils; and propoſes the Day of Judgment as a Diſſuaſive from theſe Exceſſes. Addreſſing himſelf afterwards to the Catechumens, he preſſes them to purify themſelves from their Sins by receiving Baptiſm. He reproves thoſe ſharply who delay to receive this Sacrament, and exhorts them rather to imitate the forwardneſs of Abel than the Negligence of Cain. 'Tis eaſie to perceive, that this Treatiſe was compos'd of many Pieces collected together. St. Ambroſe has taken a great part of it out of St. Baſil, and in it there are many excellent Paſſages, and ſome things very remarkable about the Diſcipline of the Church. He ſays in Ch. 10. that they prepar'd themſelves by Faſting to approach to the Holy Table, that they faſted at Milan all the time of Lent, except Sundays and Saturdays; that on Eaſter-day the Faſt ended; that on that Day thoſe among the Catechumens, who were call'd Elect, were baptiz'd; that they approach'd to the Altar, and receiv'd the Sacrament. In ſhort, St. Ambroſe in this Treatiſe gives very Lively and Moral Deſcriptions of the Exceſſes and Debauchery of his Age: One needs only read the 12th. and 13th. Chapters, to be poſſeſs'd with a horrour of them. Even the Women were given to Wine, and did many Actions unbecoming the Modeſty of their Sex, of which St. Ambroſe makes them aſham'd in Chap. 18.

The Treatiſe of Naboth and the Poor, (for ſo it ought to be call'd, according to the ancient Manuſcripts, and according to the Cuſtom of St. Ambroſe) is a Diſcourſe full of Zeal againſt the Rich and Powerful who oppreſs the Poor, preach'd by St. Ambroſe upon the Hiſtory of the Oppreſſion of Naboth by King Ahab. This Saint there ſhews, that there are Ahabs and Naboths at all times. "The "Hiſtory of Naboth, ſays he, at the beginning of his Diſcourſe, is ancient, if we conſider the time "wherein it was Tranſacted, but in Practice it happens daily; tempore vetus eſt uſu quotidiana: For "who is the Rich man that does not deſire other Mens Goods? Is it not daily ſeen, that the Rich "would take from the Poor the little Eſtate that they have, and drive them away from the Inheri-"tance of their Anceſtors? Where is there one found that is content with what he has? There "has not been one Ahab only in the World, he is born in it every day; there has not been one Naboth "only kill'd, there are ſome ſuch every day oppreſs'd. Every day the Poor are over-whelm'd, driven "away, perſecuted, and reduc'd to die by Famine, by the Injuſtice of the Rich." He declaims afterwards againſt this Barbarity, and ſhews the Rich, by the Example of Ahab, that they are more unhappy with all their Riches, than the moſt Miſerable and the moſt Poor in their wants. He cries out againſt thoſe ſumptuous Feaſts and needleſs expences which they make, by which they waſte the Blood and Subſtance of the Poor. Here he relates a frightful Story of a Rich Man, who to procure good Wine to his Table, forc'd a Poor Man to ſell his Son; and then he brings the Parable of the Rich Man mention'd in the Goſpel of St. Luke Ch. 12. who purpoſed to pull down his Barns, that he might build larger, and ſhews from hence how far the Slavery, Blindneſs, and Miſery of Rich Men extends. Afterwards he returns to his Hiſtory of Ahab, and having repreſented the horribleneſs of the Action of Ahab and Jezabel, he exhorts Rich Men not to imitate it, by teaching them the uſe they ought to make of their Riches, which is deſcribed in Pſalm 75. He coucludes with this Remark, that God pardon'd Ahab for this Crime, but this miſerable Man brought upon himſelf Deſtruction by new Crimes. 'Tis thought, that this Treatiſe was compos'd about the Year 395.

The Book of Tobit is chiefly written againſt Uſury, which St. Ambroſe condemns moſt ſeverely. There he deſcribes the Miſeries to which Uſurers reduce the Poor, and the Artifices they uſe to enſnare young Heirs. Uſury according to him, is all that is receiv'd above the principal. It is condemn'd by the Divine Law in the Old and New Teſtament: If it was permitted to the Iſraelites with reſpect to Strangers, it was only with reference to them whom they might lawfully kill. He refutes thoſe by Name, who reſtrain the Prohibition of Uſury only to the Poor, and rejects the Reaſons of Intereſt which may be alledg'd to excuſe it. Eraſmus doubted whether this Book were St. Ambroſe's or no, but it was a Doubt very ill grounded, for St. Auſtin cites it. It has St. Ambroſe's Stile, it contains his Doctrine, which is alſo to be found in ſhort in his 23d. Letter to Vigilius, and it contains many Paſſages tranſlated out of St. Baſil, according to the Cuſtom of St. Ambroſe. This Book was written about the Year 386.

The Four Books of the Interceſſion of Job and David, (that is, of the Complaints which Job and David made for the Miſeries and Weakneſs of Mankind) are in this Edition replac'd here in their natural tural Order. In the two Firſt Books he enlarges upon the Complaints contain'd in the Firſt Chapters of the Book of Job, and in the Pſalms, particularly in the 72d. and 42d. In the Two laſt he anſwers the Complaints of thoſe who tax Providence, becauſe the Wicked are happy in this Life, and the Juſt miſerable. He proves that the Happineſs of the Wicked is not true happineſs, and that the Calamities, Miſeries and Misfortunes of the Good, do not at all render them unhappy.

St. Ambroſe

In the Book entituled the Apology of David, he ſaves the Honour of this Holy King, not by juſtifying his Crimes of Adultery and Murder, which are uſed to render him odious; but by ſhewing, that he roſe again from his Fall by a quick and ſincere Repentance; that it was for our Inſtruction that God permited him to fall into Sin, and that he made amends for his Fault by a great number of good Actions. And therefore he explains the 5th. Pſalm, that it may ſerve as an Apology for this Holy King. Theſe Sermons were preach'd ſoon after the Death of Gratian, in the Year 385.

The Benedictines have plac'd here among theſe works of St. Ambroſe which are the Genuine, the Second Apology for David; but it is confeſs'd in the Preface, that it has been queſtion'd, and that there is reaſon for doing ſo: Indeed it is obſerv'd, that in all the Manuſcripts that have been ſeen, this Book goes under the name of St. Ambroſe, and the Conjectures which ſome Criticks have alledg'd to ſhow its impoſture, are rejected. But then they find the Stile is different from St. Ambroſe's, and the Author uſes a different Verſion of Scripture, and ſometimes the Vulgar Latin, and he ſpeaks of Two ſorts of Wills and Operations in Jeſus Chriſt, in ſuch a manner as ſavours very much of the Times of the Monothelites. They add, that this Author only Copies and Enlarges upon what St. Ambroſe had ſaid before. The Second Apology contains a great part of what is in the Firſt; And what probability is there that St. Ambroſe ſhould twice repeat the ſame thing? The Subject of both is the ſame. The Author undertakes to ſhow, that no Man ought to be offended with any thing that is related in Scripture; and that David fell into the Crimes of Murder and Adultery. His Defence is divided into Three Parts. In the Firſt he ſhows that the Fall of David muſt be attributed to the Infirmity of Humane Nature, and that his Amendment was the effect of his Vertue. In the Second he ſays, that David fell, to inſtruct the Jews that they ſhould continue no longer in their blindneſs. In the laſt, Chriſtians are inſtructed in the Myſtery which is typyfy'd by David's Fall. The Author enlarges upon common places, and employs part of his Diſcourſe in refutation of the Hereticks, and chiefly of the Arians and Manichees. This Treatiſe is compoſed of popular Harangues.

The Expoſitions of ſome particular Pſalms are not a formal Commentary upon them, but a Collection of Homilies upon the Pſalms preach'd or compos'd upon ſeveral Occaſions. However it appears by the Preface to the Commentary upon the Firſt Pſalm, that St. Ambroſe had a Deſign to Expound all the Pſalms. The Homily upon the Firſt Pſalm, was preach'd about the Year 390, after the Inſtitution of ſinging in the Church of Milan. The Explcations of the 35th. and the Five following Pſalms are alſo a Collection of Homilies preach'd one after another about the Year 393. The Preface ſhews that it is a Collection of Sermons, and there are Two or Three Places in the Explication of Pſal. 36. which ſerve to denote this Epocha.

As to the Expoſition of Pſal. 43. he dictated it himſelf a little before his Death to his Deacon Paulinus, as he ſays, in the Life of his Maſter.

The Explications of Pſalms 45, 47, 48, 61. are ſeparate Homilies. In theſe Expoſitions St. Ambroſe follows the Text of the Septuagint, but he ſometimes takes notice of the Differences of the Verſions of Theodotion, Symmachus and Aquila. Yet he does not confine himſelf to a literal Expoſition, but often gives Myſtical Sences of them. Sometimes he lays down Principles of Morality, and upon certain Occaſions he oppoſes the Hereticks. In many places he copies from St. Baſil, and in others from Origen, ſome of whoſe Errors have crept into his Expoſitions.

The work upon Pſalm 119. is a Collection of many Sermons, wherein St. Ambroſe rather confines himſelf to the Moral than the Spiritual Sence; which gave him occaſion to reprove the Vices of ſome Perſons in his time, and he ſpares not even the Diſorders of the Clergy-men. He explains the Letters of the Hebrew Alphabet, which ſerve to diſtinguiſh the Parts of this Pſalm. But as he knew but little of Hebrew, ſo what he ſays about it is not very ſolid; and 'tis probable that he took his from the Etymologies of Phylo, which were full of Faults as St. Jerome aſſures us. Theſe Sermons were preach'd about the Year 386, after the Diſcovery of the Relicks of St. Gervaſius and St. Protaſius. There are as many Sermons, as there are Letters of the Hebrew Alphabet which make the Diviſions of this Pſalm, each Sermon anſwers to a Section contain'd under each Letter. There he explains alſo part of the Canticles.

In the Commentary upon St. Luke, St. Ambroſe confines himſelf more cloſely to the Hiſtorical and Literal Sence, than in his other Commentaries. In explaining the Text of St. Luke, he clears ſome places of the other Goſpels, and reconciles the apparent Contradictions which may occurr between them. He obſerves in the Preface to this Work, that the Goſpel of St. John is more ſublime, but St. Luke follows the order of Hiſtory more ſtrictly, and relates many more particulars. He adds, that St. Matthew is chiefly employ'd in deſcribing the Birth of Jeſus Chriſt, and informing Men of his Manners; that St. Mark dwells longer in the deſcription of his Strength and Power: That St. Luke repreſents him as a High-Prieſt and a Sacrifice; And that St. John inſiſts more than any other upon the Miracles of his Reſurrection. In the begining of this Commentary he mentions the many Apochryphal Goſpels, as that of the Twelve, the Goſpel of St. Thomas, and that of St. Matthias, and aſſures us, that the Church never receiv'd any but thoſe Four Goſpels which were written by the Inſpiration of the Holy Spirit. Theſe are St. Ambroſe's general Remarks upon the Four Goſpels. It were too long to mention particularly all things that are in this Commentary. He confines himſelf for for the most part, as we have already said, to the Letter and History of the Gospel, but yet he cannot refrain from having recourse oft-times to the Mystical Sence, and draws from it Moral Precepts. These are the Homilies which make up the body of this Commentary, which is divided into Ten Books or Parts. He wrote it after the Persecution of the Empress Justina about the Year 386. St. Ambrose

This Tome ends with a Commentary upon the Canticles, extracted out of the Works of St. Ambrose, collected by William Abbot of St. Thierry, who lived about the Year 1142. We have already observ'd that St. Ambrose explain'd some considerable parts of it in many places. This gave occasion to many Persons to extract these Places, and make up a Commentary upon the Canticles. Cartorius caus'd one of his Collecting to be printed at Louvain in the Year 1558. Ten Years after Gillotius publish'd another which is attributed to Dionisiares a Doctor of Paris, who probably did nothing else but augment one that was shorter, which is in a Manuscript in the College of Navarr, and in another Manuscript of the Abby of Vendosme that is 600 Years old. Chesseletus had also a Manuscript of it more ancient by 200 Years, and he found it quoted by Florus Magister of Lyons, who liv'd about the Year 855, in a Commentary upon St. Paul, which was never printed. The Collection which is publish'd here by the Benedictines, was never printed before. It is publish'd from a Manuscript by the same hand of William Abbot of St. Thierry, and afterwards Monk of Signi.

The First Book contain'd in the Second Tome of St. Ambrose's Works, is his excellent Treatise concerning the Office of Ministers, or the Duties of Clergy-men. For tho' the name of Ministers be cut out in the Roman Edition, and in those that follow'd it; yet it is to be found in all the Manuscripts; and 'tis plain by the Book it self, that St. Ambrose compos'd it for his Clergy. But tho' he addresses himself particulary to them, yet he does not forget to treat of the Duties of all Christians, of which he makes a particular Application to the Clergy.

He had been several Years Bishop when he compos'd this Work, for there he speaks to the Clergy whom he had Chosen and Ordain'd himself. He must therefore have been Bishop for some time, since he had already Ordain'd a considerable number of Clergy-men. He there takes notice, that he had endur'd several Shocks from the Civil Powers, because he would not deliver up the Depositа which were entrusted with the Church. He says, that Two Persons of whom he had a bad Opinion, had abjur'd the Catholick Faith in the time of the Arian Persecution, Arianæ infestationis; which is to be understood of the Persecution of the Empress Justina.

He says also, that he sold the sacred Vessels to redeem Captives and Slaves, whose number was so great, that they would fill a whole Province.

This may have reference either to the War of Maximus in the Year 387, or to the Inundation of the Barbarians, who having kill'd the Emperour Valens ravag'd the Countries of Thrace and Illyricum, and came over into Italy, where they made a great number of Captives, which happen'd in the Year 379. He speaks also of a Famine which afflicted the City of Rome under Damasus in the Year 383.

Lastly speaking of a Depositum entrusted with the Bishop of Pavia, he says, that the Emperour did all that he could to wrest it out of the hand of this Bishop, that he might give it to one of his Courtiers. And we find a Law of Valentinian publish'd at Pavia, January the 2d. 386. All these Transactions do clearly demonstrate, that the Books of Offices were not written by St. Ambrose at the beginning of his Bishoprick, and that 'tis very probable they were not written till about the Year 390, or 391, when Peace was restor'd to the Church after the Death of the Tyrant Maximus. He follow'd and imitated in these Three Books the Design and Method of Tully's Offices. He confirms those good Maxims which this Orator had laid down, and corrects those that are imperfect, refutes those that are false, and adds several others which are infinitley more excellent, more pure, and more sublime.

The first Six Chapters of the First Book of St. Ambrose's Offices, are a Preface to the whole Work, wherein he enquires, when and how it is seasonable to Speak or to be Silent. The Bishops are oblig'd by their Office to explain the Word of God; but they ought to discharge this Duty with Humility; they must learn by teaching, and that they may teach. This is what St. Ambrose applies to himself. "For, says he, being remov'd all of the sudden from the Civil Bench, and from the Office of "a Judge, that I might be promoted to the Priesthood, I have taught what I had not then learn'd, "and was oblig'd to Learn and Teach at the same time. After this he discovers the Advantages of being Silent, and the Dangers to which a Man exposes himself by speaking; but yet he would not have Men always to continue in silence. On the contrary, he says, that it is useful and necessary to speak, provided it be done with Humility and Moderation, provided that one weighs his Words in the balance of the Sanctuary, and does not follow the Motions of his Lusts, but Reason and Justice; and provided that he does not employ his Voice to retaliate Reproaches by Reproaches

After this Preface he enters upon the Matter, and undertakes to treat of Offices. He affirms that this Name was not only in use among the Philosophers, but that it is in the Holy Scripture. He quotes one single Passage taken out of the Gospel of St. Luke, Ch. 1. P. 23. Where there is mention made of the Ministry of Zacharias, and he translates the Greek Word by Office. This Example does not prove very strongly what he had affirm'd. After this he gives two Etymologies of the Word Officium; the First is ab efficiendo, quasi efficium; and the Second ab officiendo. The Philosophers distinguish'd Three Sorts of Offices, of Honesty, of Profit, and of Pleasure. St. Ambrose says, that the Christians know no other but that of Honesty, because they referr all to the Happiness of Heaven, being persuaded, that the Profits and Pleasures of this Life, are neither true Profits nor true Pleasures. And therfore he treats only of the Offices which have reference to Honesty. He affirms that this Term of Honesty and Decency was known to David before the Philosopher used it; and for proof of this, he quotes Pſal. 64. 2. Praiſe becomes thee, O Lord, in Zion, Te decet hymnus, Deus, in Sion. He adds ſome Paſſages of St. Paul, where he ſpeaks of Decency and Honeſty. He affirms that Pythagoras follow'd David in impoſing the Law of Silence upon his Diſciples. But he puts a very great difference between their Precepts, in that Pythagoras wholly forbade his Scholars to ſpeak, whereas David teaches us to ſpeak with moderation, and to hold our Peace when it is convenient to do ſo. He diſtinguiſhes Two Sorts of Offices, the leſs perfect which he calls medium, and the moſt perfect. He explains this by the Words of Jeſus Chriſt to the young Man, who aſk'd him what he muſt do to inherit Eternal Life. Jeſus Chriſt anſwer'd him at firſt, Keep the Commandments, Do not commit Murder nor Adultery, &c. Theſe, ſays St. Ambroſe, are the leſs perfect Offices, to which there is ſtill ſomething wanting. Thoſe that are perfect are deſign'd by what Jeſus Chriſt ſaid afterwards to the young Man, when he had anſwer'd him that he had obſerv'd all theſe things. If you would be perfect, go and ſell all your Goods, and give them to the Poor, and you ſhall have Treaſure in Heaven, and come and follow me. This gave occaſion to St. Ambroſe to recommend Alms-giving as one of the principal Duties of the Chriſtian Life.

St. Ambroſe

Here he treats very largely of the Providence of God, and proves againſt the Philoſophers, that it extends to all Creatures. Why then do the Wicked here enjoy Plenty? This is the common Objection: To which St. Ambroſe anſwers, Firſt, that this Abundance does not make them happy in this Life, becauſe the remorſe of their Conſcience torments them.

He adds in the Second place, that we muſt not wonder, if the Wicked ſeem to be happy in this Life, and on the contrary the Good ſeem to be miſerable, becauſe this is not the Place of Reward or Puniſhment. That we muſt wait till the other Life, when every one ſhall receive according to his Works, that here we are in a place of Combate, that the Juſt are to endure continual Aſſaults, that they may obtain one day the Reward of their Victory; whereas the Wicked here enjoy Repoſe who deſerve no Reward, after which ſhall follow the Puniſhments which their Sins deſerve. That in ſhort, God has granted to thoſe the good Things and Advantages of this Life, that they might be without Excuſe in the Day of Judgement, for not obſerving the Commandments of God.

St. Ambroſe having thus eſtabliſh'd theſe general Maxims, enters upon the particular conſideration of the Duties of every State.

He begins with thoſe which belong to young Men: He recommends to them above all things Shamefac'dneſs and Modeſty; he gives a wonderful deſcription of this Vertue, and proves how neceſſary it is to Clergy-men. He ſays that he had hindred one from entring into Holy Orders, becauſe his Countenance was not modeſt enough, and that he had forbid another to walk before him becauſe he had too confident a Gate. He counſels them not to be preſent at Feaſts, and to ſhun the Converſation of Women; he recommends to them to ſtay at home, and to apply themſelves to the Duties of Piety which are agreeable to their Miniſtry. Afterwards he gives Precepts for reſtraining the Motions of Anger and of other Paſſions. He deſcribes the Diſcourſes of Clergy-men. He does not think it fit that they ſhould uſe Railery. He gives them Three Rules for the good Conduct of their Actions. The Firſt is, to hold their Paſſions in ſubjection to Reaſon; The Second is to obſerve Moderation; The Third is to do all things ſeaſonably and in order. He illuſtrates theſe Maxims by the Examples of many Saints in the Old Teſtament.

After he has laid down theſe general Rules, he diſcourſes of Vertues in particular, comparing the Idea's which Chriſtians have of them with thoſe which the Pagan Philoſophers had; and ſhews, that thoſe of the Chriſtians are much more ſublime. As for Example, Juſtice among Chriſtians does not allow, that they ſhould render Evil for Evil; it acknowledges no particular Intereſt, and it takes place, not only with reſpect to Friends, but alſo to declared Enemies. Likewiſe Chriſtians are not only to do good to their Friends and their Relations, but alſo to their Enemies. It is not Vanity, but Charity, which is the foundation of their Liberality; they do not only give of their Superfluities, but alſo of their Neceſſaries. Their ſtrength conſiſts chiefly in ſuffering with Courage and Conſtancy, in keeping off the Violence which is offer'd to the Weak, in over-coming their Paſſions, in deſpiſing the Riches of this World, and ſeeking after, loving and valuing nothing but Vertue. They preſerve an evenneſs of Soul and wonderful Tranquility of Mind in the midſt of Croſſes: Yet they do not raſhly expoſe themſelves, and are not aſham'd to fly, when they find themſeves too weak to reſiſt Perſecutions. In ſhort, their Moderation conſiſts in Tranquility of Mind, in the love of Mildneſs, in compleat Meekneſs and perfect Honeſty. St. Ambroſe explains particularly all the parts of theſe Vertues, gives excellent Precepts for obſerving them, and propoſes admirable Examples of them taken out of the Holy Scripture. He produces alſo ſome Examples of them taken out of Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory; that of St. Lawrence is very remarkable. St. Ambroſe propoſes him as an illuſtrious Pattern of Conſtancy. He ſays, "That this holy Deacon, ſeeing Xyſtus his Biſhop dragg'd away to Martyr-"dom, he fell a weeping, not that the Martyrdom of his Maſter griev'd him, but becauſe he was left "behind him in the World; upon which account he addreſſes to him in theſe Words: Whither go "you, my Father, without your Son? Whither run you, O holy Biſhop, without being accompanied by "your Deacon? You never us'd to offer Sacrifice without a Miniſter; what is it then that has diſpleas'd "you in me? Is it becauſe you have found that I have not well diſcharg'd my Office? Try now, whether "you have choſen a good Miniſter: Why do you refuſe him with whom you have conſecrated, and who "has conſecrated the Holy Sacraments with you? Why do you refuſe him, ſay I, to mingle his Blood with "yours? St. Xyſtus anſwers in theſe words, and others like them. I do not deſert you, my Son, I do "not abandon you, but you are reſerv'd for greater Combates: Mourn not, you ſhall quickly follow me, "within Three Days you ſhall be where I am. Such, ſays St. Ambroſe, was the glorious conteſt of thoſe

"two

"two illustrious Martyrs, who strove who should first suffer for Jesus Christ. The History of Orestes and Pylades meets with applause, when it is represented how each of them endeavoured with all his might to die for one another. These two would both have died, the one having committed Particides, and the other being a Complice in it; but there was nothing that obliged St. Lawrence to offer himself to Death, his own Zeal only induc'd him to it; and three Days after, as he was roasting upon a Grid-Iron, he still mock'd the Tyrant, saying, I am roasted enough, turn me and eat me, and so he overcame the Violence of Fire by the Strength of his Courage. We must not forget the Example of St. Agnes which St. Ambrose relates before this. "This Holy Virgin, says he, being in "danger of losing either her Chastity or her Life, secur'd her Virginity, by yielding up this Mortal "Life to purchase an Eternal one. St. Ambrose

About the End of this Book St. Ambrose insists upon the principal Vertues of Clergy-men; he recommends to them above all things Disinterestedness and Purity. It appears by this place, That St. Ambrose thought that Bishops, Priests and Deacons, were obliged to live in Celibacy, and that those could not be received into the Clergy who had been twice married, tho' they had been married the first time before their Baptism.

He concludes with speaking of the Trust committed to us, and of the Fidelity we should show in keeping that which is entrusted to us. He recommends to the Clergy-men who take Care of the Vestry, to discharge their Duty with Faithfulness and Modesty.

He begins the Second Book with enquiring, wherein consists true Happiness, and he shows, That it consists in the Knowledge of God, and in Innocency of Life; That all other good things, do not only fall short of our supreme Happiness, but they do not so much as render us more happy; as on the contrary, the Crosses and Miseries of this Life do not render us more unhappy; That the good things of this World, such as Riches, Abundance, Joy, &c. are truly Evils, because they hinder us from working out our Salvation; whereas those things which are believed to be evil, as Pain, Affliction, &c. are good for us, because they give us Opportunities of practising Vertue.

Afterwards he treats of the Good that is Profitable; and having shown that there is no true Profit without Honesty, he discourses of the several sorts of Good Things that are truly profitable, of Friendship, of Advice, of Fidelity, of Liberality, of Good-will, of Civility, of the Protection of the Poor and Afflicted, of Hospitality, and the other Vertues necessary for maintaining Society and Commerce among Men. The Advices which he gives about these things, are very Judicious: Some of them are as follows. Nothing is more profitable than to be lov'd; nothing is more disadvantageous than not to be loved. Mildness, Civility and Modesty, cause us to be lov'd of all the World. These Vertues are very becoming to Kings and Princes as well as to private Persons; they maintain Peace and Charity. A Man is more easily trusted, who is lov'd by many. When Counsel is to be ask'd, we should address our selves to a Person who is equally Just and Wise. These Two Vertues are inseparable. We must not only assist the Poor who have nothing to live upon, but it is a Piece of Prudence and Charity to help also those who are unfortunate in their Affairs, chiefly, when it is not by their Debauchery that they are reduc'd to this Condition, but by some unforeseen Misfortune. 'Tis also a Duty of Charity to redeem Captives, and rescue them out of the Hands of their Enemies, to save Women from Disgrace; this is, to restore Children to their Fathers, and Fathers to their Children, and Citizens to their own Country. There are some also that do a Work of Charity, by marrying Orphan Daughters. When we cannot help others by giving them Money, it is good to assist them by our Counsel and Labours. We must do Works of Charity with Prudence, and not give Alms to those that are unworthy. There are some that feign Debts, and others that deplore their Misery; we must examine whether these things be true or no; and we are not only to employ our Hands to give, but also to make use of our Eyes to consider the Persons to whom we give. We must look upon him who does not see us, and seek after him who is asham'd to be found. Yet we must not retrench our Alms, under a pretence that many ask them who do not deserve to receive them. I omit many other fine Maxims which he proposes concerning Alms, and contempt of Riches; but I cannot forget that place, where he says, That he broke in pieces the Sacred Vessels to redeem Captives, He justifies himself in this Action, or rather he draws from it a great deal of Glory. "The "Church, says he, was founded without Gold, if she has it now, 'tis to give it and not to keep it; "tis for assisting the Poor with it in their great Necessities. What would be said of a Bishop, who "to preserve the lifeless Vessels, would suffer the living Members of Christ to perish? Would he say, "I am afraid lest the Temple of the Lord should be spoil'd of its Ornaments? Might it not be answered to him, That 'tis not necessary that the Sacraments of the Altar should be administred in "Gold or Silver; That the Redemption of Captives was an Ornament much more pleasing in the "sight of God; That those Vessels could not be put to a nobler Use than when they are employ'd "to redeem the Lives of Christians; That the true Treasure of the Lord is that which has the same "effect with his Blood; That then a Vessel is known to be truly the Lord's when there is a double "Redemption to be observ'd in it; that is, when the exteriour Vessel redeems from the Enemy, "those whom the Blood of Jesus Christ hath redeem'd from Sin.

He justifies also this Conduct by the Example of St. Lawrence who show'd the Poor when the Treasures of the Church were demanded of him. At last, He concludes, That tho' it be a Crime to break the Vessels of the Church, to turn them to our own Profit; yet on the contrary, it is an Act of Charity and Vertue to do it, to distribute them to the Poor, to redeem Captives, to build a Church, when such things are necessary. He adds, That he used that Precaution, as to take first the Vessels which were not Consecrated, and afterwards to break and melt those that were, lest any should turn the Sacred Chalices to profane Uses. He concludes this Book with recommending to the Clergy,

Clergy, to keep with Faithfulneſs and Courage what is depoſited in the Churches by Widows, and
St. Ambroſe relates ſome Examples of the Boldneſs wherewith ſome have defended theſe things againſt thoſe who came to invade them.

And here I muſt reſume the 24. Ch. of which I have ſaid nothing. St. Ambroſe there deſcribes the chief Duties of Clergy-men towards others in a few Words. "We muſt, ſays he, prepare our ſelves "by good Actions and by a good Intention to receive Offices, and chiefly thoſe of the Clergy. We "muſt not carry our ſelves proudly in them, nor eſtrange our ſelves from them by negligence; we muſt "equally ſhun Ambition and the Affectation of refuſing them. Simplicity and Uprightneſs compre- "hends all, and theſe are of themſelves commendable enough. In the Exerciſe of his Miniſtry he muſt "neither be too ſevere nor too remiſs, leſt he ſhould ſeem either to exerciſe his Authority with Domi- "nion over the Flock, or elſe to neglect the Duties of his Miniſtry; he muſt endeavour to oblige all "the World. A Biſhop ſhould conſider and protect the Prieſts and the other Clergy-men, he ſhould "not be offended if they purchaſe Eſteem either by their Charity, or their Faſting, or their Piety, or "their Learning: But theſe ought not to exalt themſelves, much leſs employ their own Merits to "diminiſh the Reputation of their Biſhop. The Wicked muſt not be defended; nor Holy Things "given to thoſe that are unworthy of them; but neither are we to reprove and condemn any Perſon "till he be convicted of a Fault. For if Injuſtice be otherwiſe above all things offenſive, it is inſup- "portable in the Church, where every thing ſhould be regulated according to Equity, where impar- "tiality ſhould be obſerved. The Powerful and Rich ought to have no more Authority than the "Poor, becauſe the Rich and Poor are all one in Jeſus Chriſt. The moſt Holy ſhould attribute no- "thing more to himſelf than others; for the more Holy he is, the more Humble he ought to be. "When we Judge, we ought not to have any reſpect of Perſons. Favour ſhould have no place in our "Judgments, but only the Juſtice of the Cauſe. Nothing does more wound the Reputation and Cre- "dit which we may have, than to betray the Cauſe of the weak in Favour of thoſe that are more "Powerful; to reprove a Poor Man that is Innocent ſeverely, and to excuſe a Rich Man that is Guilty. "'Tis true that we are naturally inclin'd to favour Great Perſons, leſt they find that Injuſtice has been "done them, and afterwards revenge themſelves upon us. But, Firſt, if you be afraid of making "your ſelves Enemies, do not meddle with judging or oppoſing. You can ſay nothing when a Matter "of Intereſt is under debate, tho' it were better done to protect Juſtice; but when the Cauſe of God "lies at ſtake, or it is to be fear'd that the Impious will be admitted to the Communion of the "Church, then it is a very heinous Sin for Clergy-men to uſe Diſſimulation.

In the Firſt Chapter of the Third Book St. Ambroſe ſhows, That this Maxim of Scipio, That he was never more buſy nor leſs alone, than when he was by himſelf, was ancienter than Scipio; and that it was verified in a more Illuſtrious manner in Moſes, Elias, Eliſha, and the Apoſtles, who did ſo many wonderful things, when they ſeem'd to mind nothing. He adds, That a Juſt man is never alone, becauſe he is always with God; That he is never idle, becauſe he is always meditating; That he ſeems to be unknown, and yet is Famous; That when he is thought to be Dead, he then enjoys a more happy Life; That he is never more joyful than when others think him to be under Affliction; That he is never richer than when he is poor, becauſe he places all his Happineſs in Juſtice and Honeſty. He obſerves afterwards, That the Compariſon which the Philoſophers make between the Good of Honeſty and of Profit, has no place among Chriſtians, becauſe they acknowledge nothing Profitable to be Good which is not alſo Honeſt. He diſtinguiſhes two ſorts of Good and of Duty, that which is more, and that which is leſs perfect. In ſhort, he maintains, That a Juſt Man ought never to ſeek his own Profit by doing Injury to others; but on the contrary, that he ought to ſeek the Good of others above his own. He enlarges upon this Maxim, and proves, that for any Man to do Injury to his Neighbour for his own Profit, is contrary to the Example, and to the Law of Jeſus Chriſt, to the Law of Nature, to the Dictates of Conſcience, and to the Civil Laws. Purſuant to this Principle he determines, that a Chriſtian in a Ship-wrack ought not to ſnatch from his Brother the Plank which he has taken to ſave himſelf; and that he ought not to fight againſt a Robber who would ſet upon him, and lays it down for a General Maxim, That 'tis never lawful to preſerve our own Life by putting another to Death. The Philoſophers were ſo far in the right when they affirm'd, That a Wiſe-man, tho' he were ſecur'd for ever from any Diſcovery, ſhould do nothing againſt his Duty; but finding no Example to prove it, they had recourſe to the Fable of Gyges's Ring: St. Ambroſe confirms this Truth by the Example of David and St. John Baptiſt.

In a Word, St. Ambroſe proves that in all Caſes we ought to preferr Honeſty to Profit. He grounds upon this Principle his Aſſertion, That one who has gathered together much Corn, ought not to keep it up in his Barns untill a time of Famine that he may Sell it very dear. He condemns this Practice as a ſort of Uſury, or Robbery. He would not have Strangers hindred from coming into Cities in a time of Famine, and blames the ancient Romans for the practice of this Rigour; but praiſes an Old Man, who in his time was of a contrary Opinion. Having related many Examples taken out of Scripture, to ſhow that we ought to preferr Honeſty to Profit, he reproves the Conduct of thoſe who are always intent upon forbid Gain, who uſe all manner of Tricks to Cheat others of their Goods, and leave no means uneſſay'd to poſſeſs themſelves of their Neighbours Inheritance. He adds, That his Covetouſneſs is very much to be blam'd in all ſorts of Perſons; but it is inſupportable in Clergy-men, who ought to allow dying Men their Liberty to make their Laſt Will with Diſcretion and Freedom: That a Clergy-man ought never to alienate the Goods which belong to another for his own Profit, becauſe it is his Duty to do Good to all the World, and to do no Injury to any Man. From hence he concludes, that when we cannot help one Man, but we muſt do Injury to another, it is more convenient to deny our Aſſiſtance to the former, than by doing him Good to Prejudice the latter. For this cauſe he would not have Clergy-men meddle in Pecuniary Cauſes, becauſe in gaining from one they injure another. St. Ambroſe

At laſt he collects ſeveral Examples taken out of The Old Teſtament, which he alledges to prove, That Honeſty is to be preferr'd before any Intereſt and Advantage whatſoever. He concludes this Book with ſome Excellent Precepts which he gives concerning Honeſt and Chriſtian Friendſhip. I ſhall ſet down ſome of them. Friendſhip it ſelf ought to give place to Honeſty. No Man ought to favour his Friend when he is in the wrong, nor to deal unjuſtly by him when he is in the right: As we ought to vindicate him when he is Innocent, ſo we ought to reprove him when he is Guilty: we ought to ſpeak to him with ſincerity, to open our Heart to him, to reprove him with Freedom, to ſuffer for him when it is neceſſary, and to relieve him in his wants. The Foundation of Friendſhip is Faith in God, and no Man can be a true Friend to another, who is an Infidel towards God. Piety preſerves Friendſhip, and makes Friends equal. There can be no Friendſhip between Perſons of different Principles. One Friend ought to admoniſh another without bitterneſs, and rebuke him without reproaches. Our Friendſhips ought not to be founded upon Intereſt, for Friendſhip is a Vertue, and not a Matter of Traffick. There is no true Friendſhip where there is Flattery. Thus I have given an Abridgement of St. Ambroſe's Offices, which is a very uſeful Book to teach all Chriſtians the Principles, Maxims, and Rules of that moſt Holy Morality which they profeſs: And this made it ſo common in former Ages; every one would have it, every one would read it with attention, and thoſe who had leiſure made Abridgments of it, which are ſtill extant. It were to be wiſh'd that Chriſtians, and chiefly Clergy-men, would do the ſame ſtill, and that they would draw from this pure Fountain the Morality which they teach and which they practice. The French Tranſlation which has been made of it may render it uſeful to all Men. But let us proceed to the other Treatiſes of St. Ambroſe.

The Books of Virginity were written by St. Ambroſe at the Requeſt of his Siſter Marcellina, who having heard ſome ſpeak of the Sermons which he had made about Virginity, deſir'd him to ſend her in writing what he had preach'd, ſince ſhe could not be ſo happy as to hear him. Whereupon he put his Sermons in the Form of a Treatiſe, and divided them into Three Books, which he addreſs'd to his Siſter Marcellina, in the Third Year of his Biſhoprick, that is to ſay in the Year 377.

After a very humble Preface, he begins his Treatiſe with a Diſcourſe in praiſe of St. Agnes. He ſets off the Glorious Martyrdom of that Illuſtrious Virgin with inimitable Elegance. "To Day, ſays he, "is the Feaſt of a Virgin, let us imitate her Purity: It is the Holy-day of a Martyr, let us offer up "Sacrifices: 'Tis the Feſtival of St. Agnes, let Men admire her, and Young Children entertain bleſſed "Hopes of her; let Married Women wonder, and Virgins endeavour to imitate her. But what can "we ſay worthy of a Perſon whoſe very Name is a ſufficient commendation. Her Zeal was above "her Age, and her Vertue exceeded the Powers of Nature.... This Holy Virgin ſuffer'd Mar"tyrdom at Twelve Years of Age. By how much the Cruelty of thoſe who did not ſpare ſuch ten"der Years is to be deteſted, by ſo much is the Vertue of that Faith to be admir'd, which could "make a Martyr at that Age..... Here is a New kind of Martyrdom. She was not yet of an Age "fit to ſuffer, and yet ſhe was already able to Conquer. She went to Death with more gaiety than "a young Bride to the Nuptial Bed. All People mourn for her, and yet ſhe ſhed not one Tear "for her ſelf. It was Matter of admiration, to ſee her prodigally throw away that Life, which ſhe "had ſcare yet taſted, with as much Eaſe as if ſhe were arriv'd at the end of her Courſe. In ſhort, "what ſhe did was ſo incredible of humane Nature, that it was believ'd to be from God; for what"ſoever tranſcends the Power of Nature, muſt proceed from the Author of it. What Threatnings "did not her Executioner uſe to frighten her? What Artifices did he not employ to perſuade her? "By what various Solicitations did he attempt her to yield to Marry? That were, ſaid ſhe, an In"jury to my Divine Spouſe, to entertain any hopes of being able to pleaſe others? I am only his "who has choſen me firſt: Why do you delay, Executioner, to do your Office? Let this Body of "mine periſh, ſeeing it is ſo unhappy as to be pleaſant in the Eyes of thoſe whom I would not have "it to pleaſe. Having ſpoken theſe Words ſhe put her ſelf into a Poſture to receive the Fatal Blow; "ſhe pray'd and then ſubmitted her Neck. You ſee here a double Sacrifice in one Victim. She is "a Martyr both for Religion and Virginity; ſhe remains a Virgin, and obtains a Crown of Mar"tyrdom.

St. Ambroſe, having propoſed this Illuſtrious Examlpe, treats at large of the Excellency of Virginity. He ſhews, That this Vertue comes from Heaven, and that God is the Author of it; That the Heathens neither knew it, nor practis'd it as they ought; That the Jews themſelves did not eſteem it, and that it was not common amongſt Men till Jeſus Chriſt came into the World. Afterward he gives a Catalogue of the Advantages which Virginity has above the married State, by comparing theſe Two Conditions. "I do not condem Marriage, ſays he, but I will prove that Virginity is more Excel"lent. Let us compare, if you pleaſe, the more conſiderable Advantages of married Women with "the leaſt Happineſs of Virgins: The married Woman may boaſt of her Fruitfulneſs, which makes "her happy in Children, but the more ſhe brings into the World, the more Pain ſhe ſuffers. She "may reckon upon the Comfort and Support ſhe ſhall have from her Children; but with this let "her balance the troubles they bring upon her. What might I not ſay of the troubles which Mo"thers muſt undergo both in Nurſing Children and bringing them up, and then in marrying of "them? What is more bariſh than that Subjection, or rather Slavery, to which Wives are reduc'd? "What is more uneaſy than thoſe perpetual Complaiſances which they muſt always uſe towards "their Husbands? Fears and Jealouſies and a Thouſand other Cares render them unhappy. The Ne"ceſſity and Slavery they undergo in dreſſing and adorning themſelves is a perpetual Puniſhment. But

St. Ambroſe "you, O bleſſed Virgins, know not what all this attiring means, you have no other Ornament but "Modeſty and Chaſtity; you court no other Beauty than that of Vertue, a Beauty which cannot be "ſhar'd with others, nor taken away by Death, nor defac'd by any Sickneſs; you have none to pleaſe "but God who loveth beautiful Souls, tho' they be ſhut up in deform'd Bodies; you are not troubled "with the Inconveniences of Child-bearing, and of bringing forth Children, and yet you have a very "numerous Spiritual Off-ſpring.

St. Ambroſe complains that there were ſo few Perſons at Milan who profited by his Inſtructions, whilſt a great many Virgins, not only from Bologna and Placentia, but even from Mauritania, came to receive the Veil at Milan. He reproves Mothers who hindered their Daughters from coming to his Sermons, leſt they ſhould embrace Virginity. At laſt, he commends thoſe Virgins who devoted themſelves to God without their Parents leave, and relates the Example of a young Gentlewoman, who being preſs'd by her Mother and Relations to Marry, threw her ſelf down before the Altars, and would not ſtir from thence till ſhe had obtained the Conſent of her Parents to her profeſſing Virginity. 'Tis obſervable, that St. Ambroſe ſays, That at length her Relations approv'd her Deſign, and ſo ſhe was not depriv'd of her Eſtate.

In the Second Book he undertakes to Inſtruct Virgins by ſome Examples which he propoſes to them: And becauſe the Virgin Mary was undoubtedly the moſt perfect of all Virgins, her Example is the Firſt and moſt Illuſtrious. St. Ambroſe here propoſes her Life as a Pattern which Virgins ought to imitate, and repreſents her Vertues in a moſt Excellent manner. From this Father Preachers and Devoto's may learn how to praiſe the Virgin in ſuch a manner as is worthy of her, without ſtuffing their Diſcourſes with Apocryphal Stories, Exceſſive Praiſes, and Falſe Notions. The Picture which he draws of her, repreſents her as ſhe was, and ſets before our Eyes her Natural Beauty; whereas ſome of the Devoto's of the latter Ages, have changed and diſfigured her by vain Ornaments, which are no ways agreeable to her, neither could ſhe her ſelf endure them.

St. Ambroſe having propos'd to Virgins the Example of the bleſſed Mary, as the Pattern of their Life; ſets before them alſo the Example of St. Thecla the Martyr, to Inſtruct them how to die well He ſubjoyns the Example of a Chriſtian Virgin of Antioch, who being carried to the Stews becauſe ſhe would not Sacrifice to Idols, was deliver'd from the Danger ſhe was in by a Souldier, who chang'd Clothes with her and ſav'd her. But when this came to be known, the Souldier was carried to the place of Puniſhment, where the Virgin alſo rendred her ſelf. and they both receiv'd the Crown of Martyrdom. St. Ambroſe deſcribes this Hiſtory in very lively and eloquent Figures, and comparing it with the Fable of Damon and Pythias, he proves that this Action was much nobler and greater, than that which is related of thoſe two famous Friends. Towards the End, he excuſes himſelf for uſing ſo many Flowers and Figures of Rhetorick in relating theſe Examples of Virgins, which he ſays he did not do to ſhow his Eloquence, but to win the Affections of Virgins by the Sweetneſs and Smoothneſs of his Diſcourſe, and to render their Condition the more Amiable by the Beauty of the Examples which he propos'd to them, before he proceeded to the Precepts and Advices which might be leſs agreeable.

The Third Book begins with an Exhortation which Pope Liberius made to Marcellina St. Ambroſe's Siſter, when he gave her the Veil at Rome in the Church of the Apoſtles on Chriſtmas-Day. There is no probability that this very Diſcourſe ſhould be Liberius's, but it was certainly made by St. Ambroſe, and contains very uſeful Advices to Virgins conſecrated to God. After he has exhorted them to love their Divine Spouſe, he preſcribes Rules concerning their principal Duties; he enjoyns them to be very Sober, to ſhun Viſits from the People of the World, to keep Silence, and to be very Modeſt and Reſerv'd in all their Actions. When he has given theſe Precepts under the Name of Liberius, he praiſes the Vertues of his Siſter, and chiefly her Faſtings, but he Counſels her to moderate them, that ſhe may apply her ſelf more to other Spiritual Exerciſes, and eſpecially to Prayer. He ſays, That ſhe ſhould pray in the Morning when ſhe awakes, before ſhe goes out, before and after Meals, towards Night, and when ſhe goes to Bed. He adviſes her alſo to repeat in her Bed the Lord's Prayer and the Pſalms, either before ſhe fals aſleep, or when ſhe awakes. And he thinks that ſhe ought to repeat every Morning the Creed as the Seal of our Faith. He adds, That ſhe ought to weep, and ſhun exceſſive Mirth, the Pleaſures of this World, and particularly Dancing. And to diſſuade Chriſtian Virgins from it, he relates the Example of the Dancing of Herodias's Daughter, and deſcribes the fatal Conſequences of it: A fit Example, ſays he to teach Wiſe and Chriſtian Ladies, that they ought not to ſuffer their Daughters to practiſe Dancing.

Laſtly, St. Ambroſe anſwers the Queſtion which Marcellina had put to him, to know what was to be thought of Virgins who kill'd themſeves or threw themſelves head-long to ſhun falling into the hands of their Perſecutors, who ſought to deprive them of their Faith and their Virginity. He relates the Example of St. Pelagia who kill'd her ſelf, and of the Mother and Siſters of that Saint, who threw themſelves headlong into the River. He ſubjoyns the Example of St. Sotera who was of his own Kindred, and concludes from theſe Examples, that this Zeal is no ways forbidden. Here the Third Book of Virgins ends in all the Manuſcripts, tho' in the printed Editions there are many Pages added, that have no relation to this Treatiſe, which St. Ambroſe concludes with theſe Examples, as appears by the beginning of this laſt Chapter.

The Treatiſe of Widows was written ſoon after that of Virgins, as St. Ambroſe declares at the beginning of it. It was the Inconſtancy of a Widow which made him undertake this Work. St. Ambroſe had Comforted her after the Death of her Husband, and had Exhorted her to lay aſide her Mourning, but ſhe abuſing his Advices, had made uſe of them to gain Authority to her Deſign of marrying again. The Holy Father being unwilling that it ſhould be thought he had counſell'd her to do ſo, wrote

wrote this Treatiſe of Widows, wherein he exalts the State of Widows as approaching near to the Perfection of Virgins. For proof of this he not only alledges the Teſtimony of the Apoſtle St. Paul, but he relates alſo the Examples of many Widows of the Old and New Teſtament. He exhorts Widows to continue in their Widow-hood, and in his Addreſs to this Widow who had occaſion'd his writing this Book, he ſhows her, That all the Reaſons which ſhe alledg'd for proceeding to a Second Marriage, were weak; yet he does not condemn either Firſt or Second Marriages; on the contrary, he rejects the Opinion of the Hereticks who had forbidden them; but he preferrs the State of Virgins and Widows before that of Married Women, and refutes with ſharpneſs the Reaſons which Women uſe for running into Second Marriages. Altho' he would not openly declare his Opinion of their Conduct, who uſe the Knife and Fire to Check the Motions of the Fleſh, yet he ſpeaks of it after ſuch a manner as plainly diſcovers that he did not approve it, and obſerves that it is contrary to the ancient Canons. This Treatiſe is cited by St. Ambroſe in his Commentary upon St. Luke, by St. Jerom in Letter Fifty to Pammachius, and ſo there can be no doubt but it is this Father's. St. Ambroſe

There is in this Edition a little Treatiſe of Virginity, which in the former Editions had been plac'd at the end of the Second Book about Virgins, but it is parted from it in all the Manuſcripts, and is evidently a diſtinct Treatiſe. The Treatiſe of Widows, which is there cited, was written after the Two Books of Virgins.

This little Piece is not very coherent. In it he praiſes the famous Judgment of Solomon, he blames the Action of Jephtha; and then he defends himſelf againſt thoſe who accus'd him of giving exceſſive Praiſes to the State of Virginity, and demonſtrates the Excellency and Advantages of it. He occaſionally anſwers thoſe who ſaid, That the great numbers of Virgins would leſſen the Race of Mankind, and he maintains that there are no places more populous than thoſe where there are moſt Virgins: For Proof of which he obſerves, that tho' at Alexandria in the Eaſt, and in Africa, there are an infinite number of Virgins, yet theſe Countries are very well peopled. He adds, that if this Reaſon were good, they muſt alſo adviſe Women to be lewd, becauſe ſo they would have more Children

After this, he examines the Reaſons of thoſe who find no fault with the Conſecration of Virgins, but only ſay, That we ſhould wait till they be of ſufficient Age before they receive the Veil. He confeſſes, that a Biſhop ought to beware of giving the Veil with too much precipitation, but then he ought not ſo much to regard their Age, as the ripeneſs of their Parts, nor to conſider ſo much the number of their Years as the Diſpoſition of their Hearts; that every Age can follow Jeſus Chriſt, and embrace the perfection of a Chriſtian Life. This gives him occaſion to ſpeak of the way which Virgins ought to hold in following of Jeſus Chriſt, and of the Life they ought to lead to imitate him. He concludes with comparing the Inſtructions of the Miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt, who exhort Virgins and Widows to live in Continence, to the miraculous Fiſhing of St. Peter; and he prays the Lord, that he would make his own fiſhing ſucceſsful to the catching of many. This Piece was compos'd of many Sermons, and was made ſoon after the Treatiſe of Widows.

The following Treatiſe is entituled in the printed Copies, Of the Inſtruction of a Virgin, addreſs'd to Euſebius, but in the Manuſcripts its Title is, A Diſcourſe of the perpetual Virginity of the Virgin Mary. And indeed the principal part of this Treatiſe is againſt the Errour of Bonoſus, who had oppos'd the perpetual Virginity of Mary. But that which gave occaſion to St. Ambroſe to compoſe this Diſcourſe, was the Profeſſion of a Maid call'd Ambroſia, Niece to Euſebius a Citizen of Bolonia, to whom St. Ambroſe had made an Exhortation when he gave her the Veil. He committed the ſame to Writing afterwards according to his cuſtom, and addreſs'd it to Euſebius with a Preface, wherein he diſcourſes of the chief Duties of Virgins that are conſecrated to God, which are in Silence and Prayer. After this he gives an account of a Diſcourſe which he made when he gave the Veil to Ambroſia: There he ſays many things in praiſe of Women, and undertakes the Defence of that Sex againſt thoſe who blam'd it. He proves that they are unjuſtly accus'd as being the cauſe of Man's Falling and Offending; and he extolls their Piety by propoſing the Vertues of many women. He ſhows, that if Eve gave occaſion to the Condemnation of Mankind, this Loſs was fully compenſated by Mary, who is the Honour of her Sex and of the Church. St. Ambroſe wonders, that there have been Chriſtians, who durſt oppoſe her perpetual Virginity. He adds, that this Error deſerv'd to be buried in Eternal Silence; but becauſe it had been maintain'd by a Biſhop (he means Bonoſus) he thought himſelf oblig'd to diſcover and refute it; which he does in the following part of this Diſcourſe, where he eſtabliſhes the Perpetual Virginity of the Virgin Mary, and refutes the Objections of Bonoſus, which were the ſame with thoſe of Helvidius.

The Firſt Objection which he propoſes is taken from the Word Mulier or Woman, which is attributed in the Holy Scripture to the Virgin. St. Ambroſe ſhews, that this Word is general, and is given to Virgins as well as Married Women and Widows.

The Second Objection is founded upon this Paſſage of the Goſpel, Before they came together; and upon that other, He knew her not before ſhe had brought forth her firſt-born Son. He anſwers, that theſe ways of ſpeaking do not intimate that St. Joſeph had afterwards any Carnal Knowledge of the Virgin, but only that he had not before; and that the Deſign of the Evangeliſt is to diſcover the principal Myſtery, viz. That a Virgin conceiv'd Jeſus Chriſt by the Operation of the Holy Spirit, and not to determine an incidental Queſtion. This Anſwer is much better than the Second, wherein he pretends, that the Word, cognovit, he knew, is to be underſtood only of the Myſtery, which was yet hid from Joſeph.

The

St. Ambroſe The Third Objection is taken from the Title of Joſeph's Wife, which is given to Mary. St. Ambroſe anſwers, That this Title might be given her tho' ſhe were a Virgin, becauſe it is not the loſs of Virginity that makes Marriage, but the actual Conſent of the Parties, tho' it were never Conſummated. Wherfore he makes no Scruple to conclude, That there was a taue Marriage between Joſeph and Mary.

St. Auſtin and St. Jerom are of the ſame Opinion; Gratian and the Maſter of the Sentences follow'd them; and ſince that time it hath paſs'd for a Maxim among Canoniſts and Divines.

St. Ambroſe produces alſo an Objection taken from the Mention which is made of the Brethren of Jeſus Chriſt, but he does not think that it deſerves to be inſiſted on, ſince the Word, Brother, is a general Word which has many ſignifications, and agrees to others beſides thoſe who are born of the ſame Father and the ſame Mother.

St. Ambroſe proceeds afterwards to the Proofs of the perpetual Virginity of Mary.

He ſays Firſt, that ſince Jeſus Chriſt was able to preſeve the Virginity of his Mother, it is very improbable that he ſhould permit her to be depriv'd of that perfection.

The Second Argument is, that if Mary had not always been a Virgin, ſhe ſhould not have been Propos'd as a Pattern and Example to Virgins.

The Third is, that the Virgin was deſigned to be a Perſon of the greateſt Merits and Perfections, but there is none greater than Virginity.

The Fourth is, that Joſeph durſt not come near her, whom he knew to be the Mother of God.

The Fifth, upon which he inſiſts more largely, is, That Jeſus Chriſt ſufficiently teſtified it, by recommending her to his beloved Diſciple when he was upon the Croſs: For how, ſays he, could he remove her from her Husband, and give her to another, if ſhe had known a Husband; How could this Diſciple take her to his own houſe, if ſhe had to do with another as her Husband? Jeſus Chriſt would never have divorc'd them, and Mary would never have forſaken a Husband. This ſuppoſes, that St. Joſeph was yet alive, when Jeſus Chriſt upon the Croſs ſpoke thus to his Mother. If this Matter of Fact be not certain, the Argument is nothing worth. Beſides, ſuppoſing there was a true Marriage between St. Joſeph and the Virgin, as St. Ambroſe had already ſaid, they ought not to have been parted; 'Tis true St. Ambroſe anſwers, That this Marriage, being deſign'd only for the accompliſhment of the Myſtery, was to ceaſe aſſoon as the Myſtery was perfectly fulfill'd by the death of Jeſus Chriſt. But I doubt this Anſwer has more Wit than Solidity.

[Itis plain from the Second Chapter of St. Luke, that our Saviour lived with Joſeph when he was 12 Years old; for not only Joſeph and Mary then lived together, but he went with them again to Nazareth, after he had Diſputed with the Doctors in the Temple, and was ſubject unto Them: Afterwards ween he entred upon the Miniſtry, the Galileans took offence at his Preaching becauſe of his being (as they thought) only the Carpenter's Son, which had been a groundleſs Suggeſtion, if Joſeph and Mary had not Cohabited together; it does not indeed weaken the Opinion of the perpetual Virginity of the Bleſſed Virgin, tho' takes off the force of this Argument by which St. Ambroſe went about to prove it.]

The Sixth proof which St. Ambroſe alledges for the perpetual Virginity of Mary, is grounded upon Ch. 44. of the Prophet Ezekiel. He explains what is ſaid in this place of a Gate ſhut, through which the Lord of Iſrael had paſs'd, and thinks it ought to be underſtood of Mary, who is that Gate through which the Lord paſs'd without opening it, and which afterwards continued ſhut: Which ſhows that ſhe loſt not her Virginity, neither by bringing forth Chriſt into the World, nor after ſhe became the Mother of God.

St. Ambroſe having thus prov'd the Perpetual Virginity of Mary, exhorts the Virgins to follow her. He propoſes to them alſo another moſt powerful Motive to engage them to keep their Virginity; and that is the Love of Jeſus Chriſt, their Celeſtial Spouſe, who is extremely jealous of their Purity. The Majeſty of this Spouſe ſhould make thoſe tremble who had any thoughts of being unfaithful to him. He is God, the Son of God, his Eternal Word, conſubſtantial to his Father. Hence St. Ambroſe takes an occaſion to make a Digreſſion about the Divinity of the Word, and to diſpute againſt thoſe Hereticks that denied it. 'Tis probable that they were alſo the followers of Bonoſus, whom he attacks in this place, ſince we learn from the Canon of the Counſel of Arles, that theſe Hereticks follow'd the Error of the Photinians and Paulianiſts; from whence in Gennadius's time the Photinians were call'd Bonoſiacks, as this Author obſerves in his Book of Eccleſiaſtical Writers, Ch. 14. The Benedictines who ſet out St. Ambroſe, whoſe exactneſs nothing has eſcaped, have not forgot to make this Obſervation.

After he has occaſionally anſwer'd Two Objections of thoſe Hereticks, he returns to his firſt Subject of the Virginity of Mary, and continues to exhort the Virgins to imitate her. He applies to this purpoſe may Paſſages of the Canticles; in particular he addreſſes himſelf to Ambroſia, and gives her excellent Inſtructions about the Vertues ſhe ſhould practice. He concludes with praying the Lord to receive her into the number of his Spouſes, and to pour upon her abundance of his Grace.

It appears by the Preface of this Book, that Ambroſia was ſtill to continue in her Fathers's Houſe, though ſhe had receiv'd the Veil, which plainly ſhows, that all the Virgins conſecrated to God were not yet ſhut up in Monaſteries, though there were already ſome Monaſteries ſet up.

Towards the end, the Ceremonies of a Virgin's making Profeſſion, are deſcribed. She preſented her ſelf at the feet of the Altar, where ſhe made Profeſſion before the People; the Biſhop preach'd to her her, and gave her the Veil which distinguish'd her from other Virgins, but her hair was not cut. St. Ambrose says in this Treatise, that he had already written many other Books concerning Virgins; and in it he recites many things which are in his Commentary upon St. Luke compos'd in 386. At last he speaks of the Error of Bonosus as a Heresy publish'd not long before, which shows that this Treatise was written in the Year 392. For the Affair of Bonosus being carried into the Counsel of Capua, held in the Year 391, they sent it back to the Bishops of Macedonia. St. Ambrose

When St. Ambrose fled from the Tyrant Eugenius he retir'd to Bolonia, where he discover'd the Reliques of St. Vitalis and St. Agricola, who had suffer'd Martyrdom under the Persecution of Diocletian and Maximilian, and made a solemn Translation of them. From Bolonia he went to Florence, whither he carried the Reliques of these Saints, which he plac'd in a Church built by a holy Widow call'd Juliana, which he was entreated to Dedicate. 'Twas at the Dedication of this Church, that he made the Discourse entituled, An Exhortation to Virginity. Juliana having lost her Husband, was, not only consecrated to God her self, but by her Example and Instructions she so order'd the matter that she gave all her Children to God also: Her Son Laurentius was made Reader, and her Three Daughters profes's'd Virginity. St. Ambrose upon this occasion relates the Exhortation of this holy Widow to her Children. She told her Son, that his Father and she had given him that Name which he had, because they had obtain'd a Son by the Intercession of St. Laurence; That they had design'd him from that time for the Clergy, and that in this he ought to comply with their Desires, and fulfil their Vows. Afterwards addressing her Speech to her Daughters, she discribes the Troubles of Marriage, the excellency of Virginity, and exhorts them to consecrate themselves to God. She concludes with pressing her Son and her Daughters to accomplish the Vows which she and their Father had made in their behalf. St. Ambrose pursues this Exhortation, by adding Instructions to teach the Virgins after what manner they should live, and Examples to serve them for a Pattern. The Example of St. Sothera, the Kinswoman of St. Ambrose, is not here forgotten. Afterwards he promises to Juliana the Reward of her Piety. Lastly, he prays the Lord to accept graciously of that Church which he was consecrating, and to receive favourbly the Prayers, and Sacrifies of the Body of Jesus Christ, which should be offer'd there, and particularly the Oblation of all the Family of Juliana. This Treatise was written when St. Ambrose retir'd upon the Account of the coming of Eugenius the Tyrant, in the Year 393, towards Easter.

The Treatise of the fall of a Virgin consecrated to God, is here found under the name of St. Ambrose. It is also among St. Jerom's Works; but certainly it is not his; for it is notorious that the Author of this Treatise was a Bishop, but St. Jerom was only a Priest. Gennadius assures us also, that Niceas Bishop of Aquileia wrote a Discourse address'd to a Virgin who had faln into Sin, very proper to persuade all those who should fall into the like Faults, to return from their Evil ways. This gave occasion to the Conjecture of many, that this Bishop was the Author of this Treatise. But the Title alone is not a sufficient proof, since St. Basil wrote a Book upon the same Subject, which has the same Title. The Benedictines observe that all the Manuscripts which they have seen, attribute this Work to St. Ambrose, except one only, wherein it is attributed to St. Chrysostom. They maintain also, That there is nothing in this Book which may not very well be St. Ambrose's: But they confess that it has not the Stile of this Saint; and indeed there is neither that sharpness of Wit, nor the lively and spiritual Thoughts which are in his Works: This is more languid and less sublime. Whosoever be the Author of it, he is Ancient, for one may find there Traces of the ancient Discipline, one sees that Publick Penance was administred but once: Nay, even this Author obliges this faln Virgin to do Penance all her life, and he seems also to take from her the hopes of receiving Absolution in this Life. It appears, that there were yet Idolaters in his time, and that the Adult were baptiz'd on Easter-day. He admits a middle State between the Damn'd and the Happy; he describes the Ceremonies of the Profession of Virgins, almost as St. Ambrose does. He says, that she to whom he writes, who was a young Woman of Quality, call'd Susanna, having resolv'd against the Will of her Kindred to embrace Virginity, profes's'd it on Easter-day at Night in the great Church, where she was accompained by those that were newly baptiz'd, holding lighted Torches in their hands; That there she pronounc'd her Vows publickly before the People, and then receiv'd the Veil, and entred into a Monastery; that presently after Reports were spread about which wounded her Reputation, and they were found to be false, and the Authors of them could not be discover'd; but that Three Years after she committed the Crime whereof she had been falsly suspected before, suffering a young Man to lie with her many times, by whom she was gotten with Child. She was accus'd also of having destroy'd her Child, which Murder she endeavour'd by all means possible to conceal, and would never confess; but being convicted of it before the Bishop, she was put under publick Penance. The Author of this Treatise represents to her the monstrous heniousness of her Crime, and the Scandal she had given; he exhorts her to do Penance all the rest of her Life; he Orders her to repeat every day the 51st. Psalm, and to pass her Life in Sorrow and Grief, that at least she might avoid the punishment of Hell-fire. He excites her also to the Acts of Penance and Compunction, which he deduces from many places of Scripture. There is also a Chapter against him who had abus'd this Virgin, whom he exhorts to do Penance. The Author of this Treatise is accus'd of being a Novatian, because he tells this Virgin, that she ought not to expect Absolution of her Sin in this Life; and that those who promis'd her pardon of her Sin in this Life deceiv'd her. 'Tis true, that this Rigour was practis'd in some Churches in the First Ages of the Church. But he who speaks thus in the Fourth Century, appears to be much inclin'd to the Novatians. St. Ambrose was the Man of all the Fathers who did most vigorously oppose this Maxim in his Books of Penance, and therefore 'tis no wise probable that he should affirm the same in this Treatise, without giving any Explication of his Words. But here it may be said, that this Author exhorts this young Woman to do publick Penance; Why ſhould he exhort her to do Penance, if ſhe was uncapable of Abſolution? This is what St. Ambroſe and the other Fathers juſtly object againſt the Novatians, That they put Sinners under Penance, and exhort and force them to do it, but yet afterwards they deprive them of the fruit of Penanace by refuſing them Abſolution. The Language of the Author of this Exhortation is perfectly like that of the Novatians. He exhorts this young Woman to do Penance, but he gives her no hopes of obtaining Remiſſion in this Life: On the contrary, he tells her expreſly, that this ſhall not be, and that thoſe who promiſe it to her, do but deceive her; but that ſhe ought always to do Penance, to ſhun Eternal Torments. He even dares not Promiſe her Glory, but only the Privation of Torments. Theſe are Doctrines contrary to thoſe which St. Ambroſe eſtabliſh'd in his Book of Penance, or rather that is the only Doctrine which he oppoſes there. It is no ways probable therefore, that this Treatiſe ſhould be his, and we muſt ſtill continue in as great uncertainties as ever concerning its Author.

St. Ambroſe

The Book of Myſteries or Sacraments is an Inſtruction to the New-baptiz'd, wherein St. Ambroſe explains to them the Significations and Vertue of the Sacraments which they had receiv'd. Here is an Abridgment of what is moſt remarkable in this Inſtruction.

"After we have ſpoken every day of Morality, and propos'd to you the Examples of the Patri-
"archs and Prophets, while the Proverbs were reading, that you might be accuſtom'd to follow the "Examples of the Saints, and to lead a Life becoming thoſe Perſons who are purified by Baptiſm;
"'Tis now time to diſcourſe to you of the Myſteries and to explain the Sacraments; for if we had "explain'd them to you before you were initiated, we ſhould have thought that we had profan'd, ra"ther than diſcover'd them: Beſides that the Light of the Myſteries themſelves, which you did not "expect, has now aſtoniſh'd you more than if we had inſtructed you about them before. Open
"therefore now your Ears to receive the ſweet word of Eternal Life, which we ſignified to you when
"we celebrated the Ceremony, by which we wiſh'd that they might be open'd, by ſaying Ephatha,
"that ſo all thoſe who were to come to Baptiſm might know what was demanded of them, and "what they anſwer'd. At laſt you are introduc'd into the place where the Sacrament of Baptiſm is "Adminiſtred; you are oblig'd to renounce the Devil and his Works, the World and its Pomps and "Pleaſures. You found in this place the Waters and a Prieſt who conſecrated them; the Body was "plung'd into this Water to waſh away Sins; the Holy Spirit deſcended upon this Water; you ought "not to fix your mind upon the External part of it, but to conſider in it a Divine Vertue. Do "not imagine therefore, that it is this Water which purifies you, 'tis the Holy Spirit. There are "Three things in Baptiſm, the Water, the Blood and the Spirit, and without theſe Three Things,
"the Sacrament is not compleat; neither the Remiſſion of Sins, nor Grace is receiv'd, unleſs it be in the "Name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt. The Baptiſm of Jews and Infidels does not "purify at all; 'tis the Holy Spirit, which deſcended formerly under the Figure of a Dove, which ſan-
"ctifies theſe Waters. We muſt not conſider the merit of the Prieſt, for it is our Lord Jeſus Chriſt "who baptizes. You made Profeſſion of believing in the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt. After "this you drew near unto the Prieſt, he anointed you, and your Feet were waſhed. This Sacrament
"blots out your hereditary Sins, and the Baptiſm blots out the Sins contracted by your own Will.
"After this you receiv'd white Garments, to ſignifie that your were ſtript of Sin and clothed with In"nocence. You received the Seal of the Holy Spirit, the Spirit of Wiſdom, of Power, &c. The Fa"ther hath mark'd you out, the Son hath confirm'd you, and the Holy Spirit hath given you aſſu-
"rance of your Salvation. Afterwards you run to the Heavenly Feaſt, and ſee the Altar prepar'd,
"where you receive a nouriſhment infinitely exceeding that of Manna, a Bread more excellent than "that of Angels. 'Tis the Fleſh of Jeſus Chriſt, the Body of Life, 'tis the incorruptable Manna, 'tis
"the Truth whereof the Manna was only the Figure. Perhaps you will tell me, But I ſee another "thing? How do you aſſure me, that it is the Body of Jeſus Chriſt which I receive? That we
"muſt prove. We muſt ſhow that it is not the Body which Nature hath form'd, but that which "the Benediction hath Conſecrated: Which St. Ambroſe confirms by an infinite number of the like
"Miracles; and laſtly, by the Myſtery of the Incarnation which he compares to that of the Eucha-
"riſt. A Virgin, ſays he, brought forth. This is againſt the Order of Nature. The Body which we "conſecrate came forth of a Virgin. Why do you ſeek for the Order of Nature in the Body of Jeſus
"Chriſt, ſince Jeſus Chriſt was born of a Virgin contrary to the Order of Nature? Jeſus Chriſt
"had real Fleſh which was faſtened to the Croſs, and laid in the Sepulchre. So the Euchariſt is the "true Sacrament of this Fleſh. Jeſus Chriſt himſelf aſſures us of it: This is, ſays he, my Body; before
"the Benediction of theſe Heavenly Words it is of another Nature, after the Conſecration it is the "Body. So likewiſe of the Blood: Before Conſecration it is call'd by another Name, after Conſe-
"cration it is call'd the Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, and ye Anſwer, Amen, that's to ſay, 'Tis true. Let "the Mind acknowledge inwardly that which the Mouth brings forth; let the Heart be of that Judg"ment which the Words expreſs. The Church exhorts her Children to Receive theſe Sacraments
"which contain the Body of Jeſus Chriſt. This is not Bodily but Spiritual Food; for the Body "of the Lord is Spiritual. Laſtly, this Heavenly Meat gives us ſtrength, this Divine Drink rejoyces
"us Having therefore receiv'd theſe Sacraments, let us be perſuaded that we are regenerated, and
"let us not ſay, How can this be? 'Tis not by Nature, but by the Holy Spirit.

From hence we may learn the chief Ceremonies which were obſerved in the Church of Milan. As to the Adminiſtration of the Sacraments, theſe which follow are remark'd. The Ears of the Catechumens were touch'd, ſaying Ephatha, and after that they were bidden enter into the place where they were to be baptiz'd. There they were oblig'd to renounce the Devil, the World and its Pomps; the Biſhop bleſſed the Water of Baptiſm, the Creed was repeated to the Catechumens, they were anointed

ted with Holy Chriſms, there Feet were waſh'd, they were plung'd into the Water, and at the ſame time the Three Divine Perſons were invocated; afterwards they were clothed with White Garments, the Sacrament of Confirmation was given them, and the Holy Spirit was called upon for them: From thence they were conducted to the Altar, where they were preſent at the Conſecration of the Euchariſt, and received the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, anſwering, Amen. St. Ambroſe

Since theſe Ceremonies and the Doctrine of this Treatiſe do not agree with the Opinions of Proteſtants, ſome among them have done what they could to raiſe Doubts about this Book, whether it were St. Ambroſe's. But the Reaſons which they alledge are ſo weak, that the ableſt Men among them have ſincerely acknowledg'd that it is really his. There are very ſtrong Proofs that it is this Father's; the beginning alone diſcovers that it is his; for there he ſpeaks plainly of the Sermons he had made to the Catechumens upon the Lives of the Patriarchs and Prophets. This does not agree to any other Author but St. Ambroſe; 'tis the Stile of this Father, tho' he treats of things more particularly than in his other Books. 'Tis his Doctrine, and no body doubts but it is his Work: It has always been cited under his Name, and is attributed to him in all the Manuſcripts. This Diſcourſe was ſpoken by St. Ambroſe, after his Sermons upon the Lives of Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, toward the Year 387.

The Opinions of Criticks are very much divided concerning the Author of the Book of the Sacraments. The Benedictines produce in their Preface what has been ſaid upon this Subject, and after having given a very Wiſe and Equitable Judgment about the different Opinions, they give their own Thoughts of it, and build their Judgment upon good Reaſon. Firſt of all, they obſerve, That 'tis indifferent to the Members of the Church of Rome, to whom this Work be attributed, ſince St. Ambroſe teaches the ſame Doctrine in his Treatiſe of Myſteries; and ſo, tho' it were ſuppoſed with Aubertine, that the Author of the Book about the Sacraments is of the Seventh Age, or with Daillee, that he is of the Eighth, the Cauſe of the Church would be ſo much the ſtronger, becauſe it would have two different Teſtimonies of the Judgment of the Church; and indifferent Ages, viz. St. Ambroſe in the Fourth Age, and this Author in the Seventh or Eighth. Tho' this were not ſo, and the Church might draw ſome Advantage from ſuppoſing that St. Ambroſe was the Author of the Book about the Sacraments, yet if it ſhould appear that the contrary Opinion is more probable, we muſt undoubtedly follow it. We muſt judge of theſe kind of Matters without Prejudice and Affection, and we muſt not conſider what would be moſt advantageous to our ſelves, but what comes neareſt to the Truth. This is what the Benedictines do; they profeſs to Examine this Queſtion with all poſſible ſincerity, as if it had never been canvaſſed before, and without addicting themſelves to the Prejudices of any Party. They immediately diſapprove the Reproaches which the Proteſtant Criticks have thrown upon this Author, they cannot endure that they ſhould make him paſs for an Ignorant and Ridiculous Perſon, for an Impoſtor and a Liar; They vindicate him from ſome Miſtakes and Abſurdities, which Cook, Rivet, and Dailleé had faſten'd upon him. They ſhew, That this Expreſſion, For this cauſe at Rome the Name of the Faithful is given to the Baptiz'd, is not ſo ridiculous as theſe Criticks imagine; becauſe tho' it were true, that the baptiz'd were call'd by the ſame Name in other Churches, yet it were no unprofitable Obſervation, that in the Church of Rome they were call'd ſo alſo. They obſerve, That ſome Manuſcripts have Rectè, inſtead of Romæ, but they do not think that we are obliged to follow this Correction. They ſhow alſo, That the manner wherein this Author relates the laſt Words of the Pater Noſter, Ne patiaris nos induci in tentationem, inſtead of Ne nos inducas in tentationem; that this manner, I ſay, of ending the Lord's Prayer was not peculiar to him, and that St. Cyprian read and repeated thus the laſt Words of the Lord's Prayer. Laſtly, They defend him againſt the Accuſations of Barbariſm, of falſe Subtilty, of vain Allegories, which are chag'd upon him by the Criticks whom we have mentioned.

After this the Benedictines produce the Reaſons which are alledg'd by Catholick Authors, to ſhow that the Books of the Sacraments were St. Ambroſe's, and at the ſame time prove that they are not very convincing.

The Firſt is drawn from the Authority of many ancient Manuſcripts, where this Treatiſe is found under the Name of St. Ambroſe. To theſe is added the Authority of all the Editions which have been made of it, and the Teſtimony of a great number of Authors of the Ninth Age, and thoſe that followed it, viz. of Hincmarus Biſhop of Rheims, of Deoduinus of Liege, of Paſchaſius Ratbertus, of Ratramnus a Monk of Corbie, of Florus a Deacon of the Church of Lyons, of Lanfranc, of Berengarius, of Algerus, of Guitmondus, of Durandus Troarnenſis, of Ivo Carnutenſis, of Gratian, of the Maſter of the Sentences, and of other later Authors, who have all cited the Book of the Sacraments under the Name of St. Ambroſe: This Argument appears plauſible enough, yet the Benedictine Fathers maintain, that it is not fully convincing: For how often has it happened, ſay they, that Books have been, and every Day are taken from thoſe Authors under whoſe Names they had always paſſed? It is not very well known that the greateſt part of thoſe who cited the Works of the Fathers in the latter Ages, did not carefully examine, whether the Books which they cited were theirs, but truſted to the common Title of them? As to the Manuſcripts, the Benedictines aſſure us, that the moſt ancient have not the Name of the Author, and that it is probable the Name of St. Ambroſe was added in thoſe which are more Modern, either becauſe it was known, that St. Ambroſe had treated of this Subject, or becauſe theſe Books were found together with that about the Myſteries which treats of the ſame matter, and the firſt bearing the Name of St. Ambroſe, whoſe it was indeed, they thought that the laſt were this Father's alſo.

The Second Proof which is alledg'd to ſhow, That the Books of the Sacraments are St. Ambroſe's, is taken from the Agreement of the Stile of this Work, with that of the Book of Myſteries. The Bene-

St. Ambroſe

Benedictines ſay, That 'tis true this Author does ſo imitate St. Ambroſe, that he Copies out the ſame which he had ſaid; but they obſerve, that in Copying it out he corrupts it, and accommodates it to his own Stile, which is much below that of St. Ambroſe. Wherefore this Argument is more proper to raiſe a doubt, whether theſe Books of the Sacraments be St. Ambroſe's or no, than to confirm them in the Poſſeſſion of the Title which they bear.

The Third Argument produces alſo the ſame Effect. 'Tis ſaid that St. Auſtin affirms, That St. Ambroſe wrote a Book about the Sacraments; but 'tis evident that the Book which St. Auſtin cites under this Title, had quite another Subject than this Book. It was a Book of Philoſophy againſt the Platoniſts, as appears by what this Father ſays of it in the Second Book againſt Julian, Ch. 5 and in the Second of his Retractations, Ch. 4.

The Benedictines produce alſo ſome places drawn out of this Book, which are thought to agree to St. Ambroſe, as the Complaint which he made that he had not a ſtrong Voice, and the Explication of the Lord's Prayer, which St. Ambroſe probably would not have omitted in his other Treatiſes, but that it was in this; but at the ſame time they ſhew how weak theſe Arguments are.

After having thus diſcuſs'd what is ſaid on both ſides about the Author of theſe Books, they endeavour to diſcover him by the Work it ſelf, and for that end they enquire into theſe three Things; what Rank he held in the Church, at what time he lived, and of what Country he was.

As to the Firſt Point they ſay, That it plainly appears he was a Biſhop, who Inſtructed the Catechumens.

Upon the Second, they ſay that the Teſtimony of the Authors which have quoted him, ſhew that he was older than the Eighth Century, and there is a Manuſcript in the Abby of St. Gal written in great Letters, which Mabillon believed might be about 1000 Years old, whoſe Antiquity ſhows that this Author liv'd before the Seventh Century: Beſides that it appears by the Work it ſelf, that it is more ancient: For there he ſpeaks of a great Number of Adult Catechumens, which proves that he liv'd at a time, when the practice of Baptizing all Infants was not ſo general. He obſerves alſo, That there were yet in his time ſome Remainders of Idolatry. And in a ſhort, he refutes no other Hereticks but the Arians, and he makes uſe of a Verſion of the Bible different from that of St. Jerom, which yet is not that which St. Ambroſe uſed.

As to the laſt Head which concerns the Country of this Author, 'tis evident that he was not a Roman, ſince he ſays, That he Honours the Church of Rome, and follows many of its Practices, tho' he does not think himſelf oblig'd to follow it in all. This gives occaſion to conjecture, that he was not far diſtant from it. The Cuſtoms and Practices which he deſcribes, agree very well with the ancient Rites of the Church of Milan, and the Churches of Gaul.

Theſe Remarks ſeem to prove that this Book may be St. Ambroſe's; for all theſe Characters agree perfectly well to him; but there are other Reaſons which hinder the Benedictines from attributing it to him. The Firſt and Principal is the diverſity of the Stile; for tho' it may happen, that an Author ſhould write in a more plain and leſs ſublime manner than he was wont to do, yet the Strength of his Wit is always perceiv'd. 'Tis never found, that an Author who has naturally an Elegant and Noble Stile, does write in a very mean one. St. Ambroſe never falls into this Fault; he does not make uſe of cold and childiſh Interrogations, ſuch as this Treatiſe is full of: Beſides that, 'tis no wiſe, probable that St. Ambroſe ſhould imitate himſelf ſo exactly, and tranſcribe a part of his Book about Myſteries, and a part of his Treatiſe of the Inſtitution of a Virgin. They add alſo, That St. Ambroſe never reproves his People for Communicating ſeldom, as this Author does, and that there is no probablity that he ſhould oppoſe ſo publickly the Practiſe of the Roman Church about the waſhing of Feet. Theſe laſt Conjectures are a litttle weak; on the contrary, the former are very ſtrong, and are, as one may think, ſufficient to have determin'd the Benedictines to remove this Book from the Place of which it was poſſeſs'd, among the Genuine Works of St. Ambroſe, eſpecially ſince in reading the Book of the Sacraments, it plainly appears, that the Author was nothing elſe but a cold Imitater of St. Ambroſe. In effect, the Subject of this Book is the ſame with that of the Book about Myſteries. The Author does nothing but enlarge upon what St. Ambroſe had ſaid before. He follows him ſtep by ſtep; he adds very few things of his own; he ſpeaks only of the ſame Sacraments, and the ſame Ceremonies; he gives the ſame Explications of them; he amplifies the ſame Arguments and the ſame Obſervations; yet he enlarges ſometimes a little more upon certain Ceremonies. He openly oppoſes the Cuſtom of the Church of Rome in omitting the Waſhing of Feet. He explains the Change which is made in the Sacrament more largely. He gives an Explication, of the Pater Noſter, and diſcourſes of Prayer. But he has alſo taken what he ſays of it out of St. Ambroſe's Book of the Inſtitution of a Virgin. Theſe Six Books are ſo many Sermons preached to the Novices.

The Two Books of Penance are undoubtedly St. Ambroſe's; they have his Stile. He ſpeaks of them in his Commentary upon Pſalm 37. and St. Auſtin cites them ſeveral times. There cannot be more convincing Proofs to ſhow that any Work is Genuine. Theſe Books were written againſt the Novatians, who would not allow the Church to have Power to Pardon Crimes. This is the Error which St. Ambroſe diſputes againſt in the Firſt Book.

"He begins with a commendation of Moderation and Chriſtian Meekneſs, whereof Jeſus Chriſt "himſelf has given us an Example, who condemns the harſhneſs and rigour of the Novatians, who "fright Sinners from Penance, and hinder them from applying a Remedy to their Diſeaſes. For who "is it, ſays he, who will have the Courage to do Penance without any hope of Pardon? What Con-

"fidence

"fidence will any one have in such a Physician, who is so far from having Compassion for his Sick "Patient, that he shows nothing but Contempt and Rigour towards him. Afterwards he explains "wherein the Errour of the Novatians consists. They maintain, says he, That we must not admit "those to Communion, who have faln by violating the Law of God. If they spoke only of Sacri- "ledge, if they refus'd Pardon to this Crime only, this would indeed be a Rigour condemn'd by the "Words of Scripture. But they offend also against common Sence, by making all Crimes equal, and "by depriving those of Communion that are guilty of lesser Crimes, as well as those that have Com- "mitted the greatest. They say, That they do Honour to Jesus Christ by reserving to him only the "Power of Pardoning Sins; and in this very thing they dishonour him, because they violate his Com- "mandments. The Church obeys Jesus Christ in binding and loosing Sinners. The Novatians "content themselves with binding only, and will never loose Sinners, tho' Jesus Christ gave at the "same time to the Church the Power of binding and loosing; whence it follows that the one can- "not be permitted without the other; wherefore both the one and the other are done in the Church, "and neither the one nor the other can be done among Hereticks: For this Jurisdiction belongs only "to Priests; and none but the Church can assume it, since none but she has true Priests, and Here- "ticks have none at all. St. Ambrose

Tho' what we have just now receited might make us believe that the Novatians granted not Remission to any Sin; yet St. Ambrose confesses in the following Discourse that they pardon'd lighter Sins, and refus'd Absolution only to those that were guilty of great Sins. He asserts against them that Novatian was never of this Opinion, and that his Judgment was, That Penance should not be allow'd to any Sinner. Perhaps St. Ambrose would have found it very difficult to prove this Assertion, which seems not to agree with the Account we read in St. Syprian of the Birth of the Error of the Novatians.

However it be, St. Ambrose having objected to them, that they condemn the Author of their Sect, disputes against their Distinction, by saying, That Jesus Christ did not make it; That his Mercy extends unto all Sinners; That those who have committed the greatest Sins should perform the greatest Penance; and Lastly, That the greater the Sins have been, the greater need there is of Relief. In the remaining part of this Book he proves by many Passages and Examples taken out of the New Testament, That Absolution ought not to be refus'd for any Sin weatsoever; and he answers the Objections of the Novatians. He observes also towards the End of this Book, that the Novatians do in vain exhorts Sinners to Penance, since they deprive them of the fruit of Penance. "For, says he, if "any one be guilty of Secret Sins, and does Penance for them very heartily, in Obedience to the "Command of Jesus Christ, How shall he receive the Reward, unless he be restor'd to the Com- "munion of the Church? I would have the Guilty hope for the Pardon of his Sins, yet he should "beg it with Tears, yet he should beg it with Sighs, yet he should beg it with Lamentations of "all the People. I would have him pray for Absolution; and when he is twice or thrice delay'd as "to his Re-admission into the Communion of the Church, let him believe, That this delay pro- "ceeds from the want of Importunity in his Prayers; let him redouble his Weeping, let him render "himself more worthy of Pity, and then let him return, let him throw himself at the Feet of the "Faithful, let him embrace them, kiss them, bath them with his Tears, and let him not forsake them, "that so our Lord may say unto him, Many sins are forgiven him, because he loved much. I have "known some Persons who in their Penance have spoil'd their Face with much weeping, who have "hollow'd their Cheeks with continual Tears, who have prostrated themselves on the Ground to be "trod under Foot, who by their continual Fasting have rendred their Countenance so pale and dis- "figur'd, that they carried in a living Body the very Image of Death. This is a lively Representation of Publick Penance which was yet in its Vigour in the time of St. Ambrose. This Passage also informs us, That there were then some Persons who were guilty only of secret Mortal Sins, who submitted to the trouble of Publick Penance. Mounsieur Daillé thinks, that instead of siquis occulta habens crimina, it must be read, siquis multa habens crimina: But his Conjecture not being Authoriz'd by any Manuscript ought not to be receiv'd.

In the Second Book after having answer'd Two principal Objections of the Novatians, whereof one is drawn from a Passage of the Epistle of the Apostle St. Paul to the Hebrews, where 'tis said, That 'tis impossible for those who have once lost the Grace of Baptism to be renew'd again, and the other is grounded upon what Jesus Christ says of the Sin against the Holy Ghost: After, I say, he has answer'd these Two Objections, and confirm'd the Doctrine and Practice of the Church, he exhorts the Faithful to Penance, and signifies to them with what Dispositions they should enter upon it: he proposes the Resurrection of Lazarus as an Illustration of the Spiritual Resurrection of a Sinner who reflecting upon his own Condition, begs of God the Pardon of his Sins. Lastly, He discourses, of the Conditions necessary to make Penance useful, and of the Faults that are to be met with in ordinary Penances. There are also towards the end of this Book, some things very Remarkable concerning the Discipline of the ancient Church in the Administration of Penance.

"There are many ways, says he, of paying to God what is owing him; and tho' a Man be "Poor he is always Rich enough to pay him; Prayer, Tears, Fasting, are the Tributes due to him. "A Man may lessen his Sin by distributing his Patrimony to the Poor, but Faith must make this "Expence valuable; for to what purpose serves the giving away of his Patrimony if he has no Cha- "rity. There are some who give their Riches out of Vanity, and satisfy themselves with the Re- "ward which they can have in this World without troubling themselves about that of another. "Some having given their Riches to the Church, by I know not what sudden fit of Devotion, with- "out sufficient Consideration of what they do, revoke their Donation. Others blame themselves "for having given their Goods to the Poor. But as to those who do Penance, that which they are St. Ambroſe "chiefly to fear, is, leſt they repent of having done Penance: For many Perſons being terrified with "the fear of Puniſhment, and puſh'd forward by the Remorſe of their own Conſcience, deſire "Penance, and after they are admitted to it, leave it off for the ſhame of the publick Humiliation. "What can be ſaid of ſuch Perſons, but that they did well to deſire Penance for their Sins, but "at the bottom they repent of the Good they have done? There are others who deſire not to enter "upon Penance, but that they may be immediately reſtor'd to Communion: Theſe do not deſire ſo "much to be loos'd as to bind the Prieſt; for they don't unburden their own Conſcience, but they "burden the Conſcience of the Prieſt, who is commanded not to give Holy Things unto Dogs, and "not to throw Pearls before Swine, that's to ſay, not eaſily to admit Impure Souls to the Holy Com- "munion. You ſee them walk with their ordinary Apparel, who ſhould be weeping and ſighing for "having defil'd the Garment of Baptiſm and of Grace. You ſee the Women alſo ſtill wearing "Pendants and Diamonds at their Ears, who ſhould be mourning for having loſt the Heavenly "Diamond, that's to ſay, the Grace of Baptiſm. There are ſome alſo who think that Penance con- "ſiſts merely in refraining from the Sacraments. Laſtly, There are others, who ſeeing the hope "that is given them of doing Penance, do from thence take occaſion to think that they have the "greater Liberty to Sin, not conſidering that Penance is appointed to be a remedy of Sin, and not "an inducement to commit it. But who can endure that you ſhould be aſham'd to pray "unto the Lord, who are not aſham'd to pray ſo often unto men? That you ſhould "be aſham'd to appear before God in the Condition of a Supplicant, who are not aſham'd "to confeſs your Sins unto Men? Are you afraid to have any Witneſſes of your Prayers? Alas! if "Satisfaction is to be made to ſome Men, is it not neceſſary that you ſhould ſee many Perſons, and "pray them to intercede for you? Are you not often obliged to proſtrate your ſelf at his Feet whom "you have offended? Muſt you not kiſs the places through which he has paſs'd? Muſt you not preſent "your Children who had no hand in their Father's Fault, to obtain Pardon by their means? Why "are you troubled to do the like in the Church, to appeaſe the wrath of God, to deſire the Suffrages "of the People? In the Church, I ſay, where there is but one thing only of which we ought to be "aſham'd, and that is not to confeſs our Faults, becauſe we are all Sinners; where he that is moſt "humble is moſt eſteem'd, where the more one is abas'd, the more Holy he is thought to be. Let "the Holy Church your Mother mourn for you, let her waſh away your Faults with her Tears..... "And yet we have reaſon to anſwer thoſe who; think that Penance may be done more than once, "becauſe this is to abuſe the Mercy of Jeſus Chriſt for if they ſhould once do true Penance, they "would not believe that they had Power to reiterate it. As there is but one Baptiſm, ſo there is "but one publick Penance; for we ought alſo to do Penance for the Sins we commit every Day: "But this laſt Penance is for ſmall Sins, and the former for great ones. I have found more Per- "ſons who have preſerv'd the Innocence of their Baptiſm, than who have done Penance as they "ſhould after they have loſt it. For 'tis believ'd, that Penance may be conſiſtent with the Ambition "of aſpiring to Offices, with Pomp and high Feeding, with the Pleaſures and Uſe of Marriage. But "they muſt renounce the World, and allow leſs time for Sleep than Nature requires; they muſt break "their Sleep with groaning and ſighing, and employ ſome part of that time in Prayers; they muſt "live in ſuch a manner, that they may be dead to the uſe of this Life; Let ſuch Men deny themſelves, "and change themſelves wholly, &c.

This place teaches us many Remarkable Circumſtances concerning the Penance which was in uſe in the time of St. Ambroſe; Firſt, That the Sinners themſelves deſir'd to be put under Penance. Secondly, That by putting them under Penance they were ſeparated from Communion. Thirdly, That they did Penance publickly. Fourthly, That they us'd many Faſts, Auſterities, and Humiliations during the time of their Penance. Fifthly, That this Penance was impos'd but once. Laſtly, That this Penance was only for enormous Crimes, and that ordinary Sins were pardon'd by the daily Penance. For the better underſtanding of this place, 'tis neceſſary to obſerve, How the Fathers underſtood this Diſtinction of great and little Sins. Tertullian who was the Firſt who ſpoke diſtinctly of it in his Book of Chaſtity, places among the Number of little Sins, Anger, Evil-ſpeaking, a vain Oath, a Failure in our Promiſe, a Lye extorted by ſhame or neceſſity, &c. He calls theſe Capitals or Mortal Sins, Murder, Idolatry, Fraud, Apoſtacy, Blaſphemy, Fornication, and other Crimes of this Nature. Theſe are all the Crimes which St. Cyprian calls great Sins in his Treatiſe of Patience. Origen in Homily 15th. upon Leviticus, ſays, That there are Mortal Sins which are not in the rank of great Sins. I know very well that Mounſieur Arnaud has affirm'd, That in this place we muſt read culpæ moralis, for culpa mortalis, as it is to be found in one Edition. But ever ſince, the Maſter of the Sentences time, who cites this place, it has been read, culpa mortalis; and if one minds well the Sence, he will perceive that it is to be read ſo. This place of Origen has much affinity with thoſe of St. Ambroſe, whereof we are now ſpeaking; for he ſays, That Penance is allow'd but once, and that but ſeldom to thoſe who have committed great Sins, whereas the Sins of every Day are pardon'd every Day. He explains himſelf alſo almoſt after the ſame manner in his Sixth Treatiſe upon St. Matthew, where he handles this Queſtion, Whether a Man may not be treated as a Heathen and a Publican, that's to ſay, ſeparated from the Church, when he does not amend his ways, after he has been re-prov'd for ſlight Sins. The Examples which he gives of ſlight Sins, are Evil-ſpeaking, lying, idle Words, addictedneſs to Wine, &c. And thoſe which he gives of great Sins, are Murder, Adultery, &c. He concludes, That there is no doubt but what is ſaid in the Goſpel, that we ought ought to look upon thoſe as Heathens and Publicans who do not Reform after they have been Reprov'd, is to be underſtood of great Sinners. He adds, That it may alſo be underſtood of other Sinners with reſpect to the Judgment of Men, but that it does not belong to us to judge whether they are ſuch before God. St. Auſtin diſtinguiſhes in many places Two ſorts of Sins; the great Sins for which Men are put under Publick Penance, ſuch as are Murder, Adultery, Fornication, &c. And the other Sins which are daily committed, and are pardon'd by a daily Penance. He ſays of the Firſt, that they kill the Soul all at once, and that Chriſtians who have Faith and Hope do not commit them. But there is one place that is in Ch. 26. of the Book of Faith and Works, where he treats more clearly of this Matter and diſtinguiſhes Three Sorts of Sins. "There are ſome, ſays he, ſo great, "that they deſerve Excommunication, and for which "Sinners will want Reconciliation: There are others for "which this Penance is not neceſſary, but they may be "healed by the Remedy of Chaſtiſements; And laſtly, "there are ſome that are very light, which are blotted "out by the Lord's Prayer, from which no Man is free "in this Life. This diſtinction ſeems to be more juſt and reaſonable; for there are certainly many Sins which are not of the number of great Crimes, neither are they ſo ſmall, but they may be Mortal. The difficulty is to know, to which of theſe Two Claſſes we ſhould refer thoſe Sins, which hold the middle place between the Firſt and the Second; for ſince this diſtinction was not very common, and ſince all the Fathers and St. Auſtin himſelf in many places did not diſtinguiſh but Two Sorts of Sins, and Two Sorts of Penance, it may be doubtful under what Claſs this Third Sort was comprehended. For my part I believe that for the moſt part they were comprehended under the Second: Firſt, becauſe the Fathers in relating the Examples of ſlight Sins, place in that number thoſe that are conſiderable enough, ſuch as Slander and addictedneſs to Wine. The Author of Sermon 41, among thoſe of St. Auſtin, which is attributed alſo to St. Ambroſe, places in the rank of light Sins, Drunkenneſs, Theft, Evil-ſpeeches, &c. Julianus Pomerius in the 2d. Book of a contemplative Life, Ch. 7. ſays, That ſlight Sins are thoſe for which one is not condemn'd before Men. Cæſarius of Arles, Fulbertus of Chartres, and St. Eloi, when they make a particular Enumeration of Mortal Sins, place among them Anger and Drunkenneſs, but with reſtrictions, viz. Anger, if it laſt long, and Drunkenneſs, if it be continual. Secondly, the Fathers conſider'd the firſt Claſs, as enormous Sins, great Sins, great Crimes, which no Chriſtian commits, which do wholly diſgrace a Man, and which are extreamly rare. Now there are many Sins between theſe great Sins, and the ſmalleſt Sins, of which we cannot ſpeak after this manner. Thirdly, All the Sinners of the firſt Claſs, when they are known, either by Confeſſion or by Conviction, are put under Publick Penance. But none were put under Publick Penance except for very heinous Sins, ſuch as are mentioned in the Canons of Councils, and the Canonical Letters of Biſhops. What are theſe Sins? Theſe are Murder, Adultery, Fornication, and the conſequents of theſe great Crimes. There is no Canon to be ſeen againſt Anger, Covetouſneſs and Slander; at leaſt it does not appear that Publick Penance was impos'd upon any for theſe kind of Sins. Theſe Sins therefore, tho' they be ſometimes Mortal, were comprehended under the ſecond Claſs, and not under the Firſt, which contained only thoſe for which Publick Penance was done. This may be confirm'd by the Canonical Letter of St. Gregory Nyſſen to Letoïus, where he makes exact enumeration of thoſe Sins which ſubjected Men to Publick Penance, which are all enormous Sins and conſiderable Crimes. Fourthly, It may be added, that Publick Penance being granted but once only, they muſt be very extraordinary and enormous Crimes for which Men were ſubjected to it. Laſtly, Origen, St. Auſtin and St. Bernard ſay, that the great number and the cuſtom of ſome Sins of the Second Claſs may finally deſtroy, and ſtifle Charity in the Soul; therefore they did not believe, that this Claſs did not contain Mortal Sins.

[The true Reaſon why Slander, Evil ſpeaking, Anger, Covetouſneſs, and ſuch ſort of Sins were not ſubjected to publick Penance in the Primitive Church, ſeems only to have been, becauſe they are not ſo eaſy to be proved, and Delinquents cannot ſo well be convi-

I would not have it thought that I make theſe Remarks to authoriſe Licentiouſneſs, or to inſinuate, That there are ſome Mortal Sins which may paſs for Venial: God forbid that I ſhould have ſuch a deteſtable Deſign! On the contrary, my intention is to create a horror of all Sins; Firſt of great Crimes. Secondly, of Sins which may be Mortal, tho' they appear not ſo enormous. And Thirdly, even of ſlighter Sins alſo. But I thought my ſelf oblig'd to obſerve here, for explaining the Paſſage of St. Ambroſe, That none but the Sins of the Firſt Claſs did ſubject Men to Publick Penance, and that 'tis of theſe only that the Fathers ſpeak, and which they comprehend under the Name of Enormous Sins and Crimes; tho' there be others which may be alſo Mortal, and which a Chriſtian ought carefully to ſhun; but then they are ſuch for which he was never ſubjected to the Humiliation of Publick Penance, but only to Corrections and Reprimands given in ſecret, as St. Auſtin informs us. But now let us return to our Subject, the Time is not certainly known when St. Ambroſe compos'd theſe Books of Penance. He ſays in the Explication of Pſal. 37. made about the Year 393, that it was a long time ſince they were written: De pœnitentia duos jamdudum ſcripſi libellos, I wrote two little Books of Penance a long while ago: But this denotes no certain time. It appears by the Books ected. Sins of the Fleſh, and Crimes againſt publick Society, are Matters of Fact liable to Proof and Examination, and therefore come under Cognizance of Civil Laws as well as Eccleſiaſtical; whereas Circumſtances may ſo alter the Nature of Spiritual Crimes, that what in ſome caſes may be damnable, in others may be venial, in others, again, highly commendable; and accordingly the ſelf-ſame Actions in all thoſe Caſes, ſhall meet with different Appellations. To ſpeak evil of Dignities is a Sin expreſly forbidden in Scripture; yet to defend the Cauſe of Truth unjuſtly trampled upon, even againſt thoſe whom in lawful and indifferent things we are bound to obey, may be very often our Duty. This with due alterations may be extended to all other Crimes where the Good and Evil depends ſo viſibly upon ſuch Circumſtances, wherein a Criminal's word muſt of neceſſity be taken. And this I ſuppoſe was the true Reaſon why thoſe things were left to God and their own Conſciences; ſince it is moſt manifeſt that the Fathers eſteemed theſe Sins, if unrepented of, to be as damning as any of thoſe of a groſſer Nature.]

St. Ambroſe

Books themſelves, that he was then well advanc'd in Years, and had taken much pains for the Church.

St. Ambroſe The Benedictines think, that they may have been written in the Year 384.

After the Treatiſes of Morality and Diſcipline, follow his Writings of Controverſy. The Five Books of Faith, or the Trinity, are the chief of his Writings of that ſort. St. Ambroſe wrote the Two firſt at the Requeſt of the Emperour Gratian, who at his departure into the Eaſt in the Year 377, to aſſiſts the Emperour Valens againſt the Goths, deſir'd of St. Ambroſe a Treatiſe concerning the Faith againſt Arianiſm which then rain'd in the Eaſt. St. Ambroſe proves the Divinity of the Son in theſe Two Books of the Faith of the Church, and anſwers the Objections of the Arians conciſely and ſmartly. The Arians having accus'd him of treating this Matter too ſuccinctly, and of having abridged their Objections and his own Anſwers too much, he added in the Year 379, the Three laſt Books, in which he enlarges and confirms the Principels that he had laid down in the former. Theſe Books are written with much Wit, Vigor and Subtilty; he illuſtrates the Matter which he handles with lively and pleaſant Deſcriptions. He propoſes the moſt ſubtil Objections in an intelligible manner, and anſwers them with all the Induſtry and clearneſs that is poſſible. It may be ſaid, that there is none among the great number of Treatiſes written by the Ancients upon this Subject, where the Theological Difficulties about the Myſtery of the Trinity are better diſcus'd, and clear'd up than in this. Yet he is not always Exact, and he ſometimes employs Arguments which are not very concluding.

The Books of the Holy Spirit are written in a leſs conciſe, leſs lively, and leſs ſmart Stile: St. Jerom ſays, That they contain nothing Logical, nothing maſculine, nothing moving, nothing convincing, but that every thing in them is feeble and languid, tho' it be poliſh'd, dreſs'd up and painted with ſtrange Colours. He accuſes him alſo of having robb'd the Greeks, and particularly the Book of Didymus, whoſe Tranſlation St. Jerom publiſh'd then, and of having made a bad Latin Book out of many good Greek ones; for Ruffinus informs us, That St. Jerom ſpeaks of St. Ambroſe in this place. It muſt be acknowledg'd, that tho' the paſſionate Deſire which this Saint had to extol the Treatiſe of Didymus, made him ſpeak a little too vehemently againſt St. Ambroſe's Book, yet there is ſomething of truth in what he ſays. For this Book is not written ſmartly, and the greateſt part of the things which it contains are taken out of the Works of Didymus, of St. Baſil, and St. Athanaſius. St. Auſtin was ſo far from finding in it that Beauty and thoſe Ornaments which St. Jerom met with in it, that he gives it for an example of a Book written in a low Stile, Becauſe, ſays he, the Subject does not require Ornaments of Diſcourſe to move the Heart, but Proofs of the Truths which he propoſes. St. Ambroſe has there collected together all that could be ſaid for eſtabliſhing the Divinity of the Holy Spirit. He wrote it after the death of Athalaricus King of the Goths, and before the Death of Peter, of Alexandria, and before the Celebration of the Counſel of Conſtantinople, that's to ſay, in the Year 381. There is one place in it, where he ſeems to aſſert, That Baptiſm given in the Name of one Perſon only of the Trinity, is valid. There are many Explications given of it which may be ſeen in the Note of the Benedictines upon this Paſſage.

The Treatiſe of the Incarnation is a Diſcourſe which St. Ambroſe ſpoke to refute the Objections which Two Arians, Officers who belong'd to the Emperour Gratian, had propos'd to him with much pride. He engag'd to anſwer them the next day in his Sermon. Paulinus informs us, that theſe Two Officers having mounted up into their Chariot to come to this Sermon, were thrown down headlong. St. Ambriſe, who knew nothing of this Accident, waited long enough for them, and tho' they came not at all, yet he did not fail to perform his promiſe. But before he entred upon the Matter, to give them yet longer time to come, he begun his Diſcourſe with the Explication of the Sacrifices of Cain and Abel. Afterwards he applies to Hereticks the Curſe which God pronounc'd againſt the Sacrifice of Cain, and makes a Catalogue of the principal Hereſies, ending with the Apollinarians. After this he proves againſt the Arians the Divinity of the Son, and his Humanity againſt the Apollinarians, and demonſtrates againſt both the one and the other, That there were in Jeſus Chriſt Two perfect and compleat Natures; the Divine Nature according to which he is equal to his Father; and the Humane, that is to ſay, as a real Body and underſtanding Soul with the Properties of theſe Two Natures. When St. Ambroſe afterwards wrote down this Sermon, he added the Anſwer to a Difficulty which the Arians propos'd to him after his Sermon, viz. How it is poſſible, that the Father who was not begotten ſhould be of the ſame Nature with the Son who was begotten. This is the Subject of this Treatiſe, which he compos'd ſometime before the Death of Gratian in 383, and after the Book of Faith which he wrote in 379, that's to ſay, about the Year 382.

There is at the end of this Treatiſe, a Paſſage of St. Ambroſe about the Incarnation, which is produced by Theodoret in his Second Dialogue, as taken out of a Book, Entituled, An Explication of the Faith.

The Letters of St. Ambroſe are plac'd in a new Order, and divided into Two Claſſes. The Firſt contains thoſe whoſe Time and Order could be found out. The Second contains thoſe whoſe Date is not certainly known.

The Letter of the Emperour Gratian to St. Ambroſe is of a more ancient Date than the reſt. He wrote to this Holy Biſhop after his Return from the Eaſt, whither he had gone to aſſiſt his Uncle Valens. He ſignifies to him how much he deſired to have him near him, and prays him to ſend him again that Book, which he had given him before, (meaning the Two Books of the Faith,) and to add to them the Proofs of the Divinity of the Holy Spirit. St. Ambroſe in the Anſwer which he made to this Letter, excuſes himſelf for not coming to wait upon him when he return'd from the Eaſt, and praiſes the Faith and Piety of this Emperour. He promiſes Satisfaction to his Demands. This Letter was written in 379, ſoon after the Return of Gratian.

The

The Second is written to Constantius, who was lately promoted to a Bishoprick. He exhorts him to govern his Church well in the midst of Storms and Tempests. He discourses to him very largely about the Instructions which he should give to his People. He recommends to him the Church of Imola, which was without a Bishop, and prays him to visit it often till a Bishop were Ordain'd for it; because, as for himself, he was so busy during the time of Lent, that he could not go far from his own Church. Lastly, he admonishes him to take heed lest the Arians that came from Illyricum should spread their Error among the Faithful of his Country. He adds, that they ought to think of the Misery which had befaln them, because of their Infidelity; which discovers that the Arians were driven out of Illyricum by the Goths, who entred into that Country after the Death of the Emperour Valens: And therefore this Letter was written in the Lent of 379. St. Ambrose

The Two following Letters are address'd to Felix Bishop of Comum. In the First St. Ambrose thanks him for the Mushrooms which he had sent him, and complains that he had not yet come to see him. In the Second he praises him, and invites him to be present at the Dedication of the Church of St. Bassianus Bishop of Lodi. If we may believe Ughellus, the Author of Italia Sacra, this Church was Consecrated in the Year 380, but that is very uncertain. This Bassianus subscrib'd at the Council of Aquileia.

The 5th. Letter to Siagrius Bishop of Verona concerns a Point of Discipline. This Bishop had condemn'd a Virgin who was accus'd of having violated her Virginity, to be examined by a Midwife. St. Ambrose nulls this Judgement in a Synod of Bishops. Siagrius being offended with this Proceeding, wrote to him, that 'twas to be fear'd the Inhabitants of Verona would complain of the Judgment which he had given. St. Ambrose shows in this Letter, that his Judgment was as Canonical as that of Siagrius was irregular. He accuses this Bishop of being too hasty in giving this Judgment, which was so disgraceful to a Virgin who had been consecrated by his Predecessor Zeno, and who had always pass'd for a vertuous Maid. This was so much the more unjust, because there was neither Accuser, nor Informer, nor Witness against her. She had been defam'd by none but a Club of Libertines unworthy of Credit, whom she had driven away from her House. And therefore this Judgment, being against all Laws Ecclesiastical and Civil, was void in Form; neither was it better as to the Matter, because what it ordain'd was against good Manners, against Modesty and Civilty. St. Ambrose represents to him, that there are other ways to be assur'd of the good behaviour of a Virgin, and that we must never proceed to these Extremities. That oftentimes this way is not successful, and leaves the Matter as uncertain as before; That it was very dangerous to make the Reputation of a Virgin consecrated to God, depend upon the Credit of a Woman, who might easily be corrupted or deceiv'd; That if these means might be us'd, it was only to be us'd to Maid servants, who are more afraid of a Discovery than of Sinning; but it ought never to be us'd for trying the Chastity of Virgins consecrated to God; That in this particular Case 'twas to no manner of purpose to use these Means, because, if it were true, that this young Woman, who was accus'd, had been with Child, and put it to death after her being brought to Bed, as was given out, it had been impossible but this would have been known by many Persons, and consequently there must have been many Witnesses found against her; That the thing which had stirr'd up some Persons against her, was because she liv'd retir'd in her House, and made no Visits to the Ladies of the World; That Maximus, who was her true Accuser, tho' he would not appear in it, had been engag'd in a Law-suit and some Differences with her; That all this Accusation was founded only on a false Report which had been spread about; That Renatus and Leonitus the Witnesses, at first contradicted themselves, and afterwards disappear'd; That Indica, having no more Accusers or Witnesses against her, brought Marcellinus and two other Witnesses, who averr'd, That she always behav'd her self very prudently, and in consequence of this, That he and his Collegues had declar'd that her Reputation was untainted, and Excommunicated Maximus, Renatus and Leonius her Accusers, with this difference, That Maximus might be receiv'd again without doing Penance, by confessing his Fault only, whereas the other Two were oblig'd to do Penance.

The 6th. Letter is to the same Bishop upon the same Subject. He represents to him also how odious the Judgment was which he had given, and the Respect which is due to Virginity. This Letter is plac'd in the Year 380, but there is no convincing proof brought of it.

The 7th. and 8th. Letters are written to Justus, who is thought to be the Bishop of Lyons, who was present at the Council of Aquileia. St. Ambrose explains in the first, after a very Mystical manner, the Questions which this Bishop had propos'd to him upon some places of the Holy Scripture. In the Second he affirms, That the sacred Writers wrote with Art, and gives many examples of it which are very intricate.

There are plac'd here among the Letters of St. Ambrose the Acts of the Council of Aquileia, which are maintain'd to be Genuine and Authentical, against the Opinion of Chiffletius, who thought fit to affirm, That they were compos'd by Vigilius Tapsensis: But this is an Opinion which is not supported by any reasonable Conjecture [d], and is confuted by the bare reading of these Acts, which discover that

[d] This is an Opinion which is not supported by any reasonable Conjecture, &c. p. 824.] These Acts are written in a Simple and Natural way. The Questions which are put to the Accus'd, and the Answers which they gave, are not of the nature of those that are made at pleasure; but such as are made in the ordinary Forms. There is nothing in them which smells of Forgery. They contain particular Facts, which could not be known by any Man that had liv'd but 30 Years after. There is no Errour in them contrary to History. In the other Letters of the Council of Aquileia, there is mention made of Two Bishops of Dacia and Mœsia condemn'd by this Council. The Bishops which are named in these Acts, are all Bishops of that time. What is said there, That this Council was they are Originals. Theſe Acts are not entire, for what concerns the Condemnation of Secundianus, St. Ambroſe and the Concluſion of the Council, is loſt. The Six following Letters are written in the name of the Biſhops of Italy, who were preſent at the Council of Aquileia, and concern the Hiſtory of that time. What we have to ſay of the Acts of this Council and theſe Letters, may be found in our Diſcourſes of the Councils of Aquileia and Conſtantinople.

The 15th. addreſs'd to the Biſhops of Macedonia, and to the Clergy of Theſſalonica, was written upon the death of Aſcholius Biſhop of that City. St. Ambroſe comforts them upon his death, becauſe he was removed into a better life, and enjoys the happineſs of Saints. He compares him to Elias and Eliſha; he teſtifies how much he lov'd him, and how much he regrets the loſs of him; he enlarges upon his Vertues, and congratulates the Churches of Macedonia upon the receiving Anyſius for his Succeſſor. To him the following Letter is written, which is alſo full of the Praiſes of his Predeceſſor Aſcholius. He prays God that Anyſius may be ſucceſſor to his Vertues as well as to his See. Theſe Letters are written in the Year 383.

In Letter 17th. St. Ambroſe writes to the Emperour Valentinian againſt the Petition which Symmachus had made in the Name of the Senate for reſtoring the Altar of Victory. He remonſtrates to him, that as all the Subjects of the Roman Empire ought to ſubmit to him, ſo he alſo was oblig'd to ſubmit to the only true God, and as they defend his Empire, ſo he was oblig'd to defend the Religion of Jeſus Chriſt. That a Chriſtian Prince ought neither to Diſſemble nor Tolerate, and much leſs ought he to Authorize the Worſhip of Idols and falſe Gods. He wonders therefore, that under a Chriſtian Emperour, there ſhould be found any Perſons ſo raſh, as to hope, that he would grant an Edict for reſtoring the Altars of the Gods, and that he would contribute towards the Expence of it, by giving Money out of his Exchequer: That tho' the Temples had not been deſtroyed, and the Worſhip of the Gods forbidden by the Laws of his Anceſtors, yet he ought to do it now; but after the Laws have been in force for a long time, there was yet leſs reaſon to ſubvert them: That in this buſineſs he muſt never hearken to the Advice of a Pagan, how Prudent ſoever he may be otherwiſe; and that if any Chriſtian had been cowardly enough to conſent to this Propoſition, he deſerv'd not to bear the Name of a Chriſtian any more: That if a Pagan Emperour would re-eſtabliſh an Altar, and oblige Chriſtians to conſent to it, this would be lookt upon as a Perſecution. How then can a Chriſtian Emperour do it, without committing Sacriledge? That there was no probablity, that all the Senate had conſented to this Propoſition, ſince all the Chriſtans Senators two Years before had entred their Proteſtation againſt it, and that they were not preſent in the Senate when it was done, becauſe they thought that they could not have their liberty there to make head againſt it. He warns Valentinian that he ſhould not ſuffer himſelf to be ſurpriz'd, and exhorts him to do nothing new in an Affair of this Importance without the Advice of the Emperour Theodoſius, whom he was wont to conſult in Affairs of Importance. Now what Affairs, ſays he, can be of greater Importance than this of Religion? What is more precious than the Faith? He prays him to deſire of them a Copy of the Act of the Senate, and that they would leave him to anſwer it. In a word, he tells him with an aſſu-call'd together from the Eaſt and the Weſt, agrees with another Letter of a Council of Italy, where 'tis ſaid, That there was a Synod held in the Weſt, quæ videbatur ex univerſus orbis partibus eſſe præcepta. There were in this Council ſome Biſhops of Gaul and Africk. All the Biſhops are named there with their Biſhopricks: In fine, all things conſpire to confirm the truth of theſe Acts. The Opinion of Chiffletius is founded only upon frivolous Conjectures. Vigilius Tapſenſis, ſays he, obſerves that Palladius wrote a Diſcourſe after the death of St. Ambroſe to refute what this Saint had ſaid about the Trinity, and that Vigilius himſelf had anſwer'd this Work of Palladius in a little Book by it ſelf. What follows from thence? Vigilius wrote a Treatiſe againſt that of Palladius; therefore it was the Acts of the Council held againſt the Hereticks. Who can believe it? Is there any thing more different, than theſe Acts are from a Piece about Doctrine againſt any Author's Book? Theſe Acts treat of the judicial Condemnation of a Perſon, but ſay nothing of the Refutation of a Book. The other Conjectures are yet more weak. He objects, That theſe Acts are not found in the Ancient Editions of the Councils, as if the firſt Collectors had collected all: How many Councils did they forget, and Synodical Writings which are in the Works of the Fathers. 2. That Valerian of Aquileia is nam'd there before St. Ambroſe. This Objection is no more againſt the common Opinion, than againſt that of Chiffletius; for either Vigilius had the Acts of the Council of Aquileia, or he had them not; if he had them, why ſhould he change the Order of the Biſhops; if he had them not, wherefore was not the Biſhop of Milan plac'd before the Biſhop of Aquileia: He muſt therefore, as well as we, find out a reaſon why the Biſhop of Aquileia goes before the Biſhop of Milan: It may be, becauſe the Synod was held in his own City, and the Order of the Emperour for calling the Synod together was directed to him. The 3d. and 4th. Reaſons of Chiffletius, is, becauſe this Diſpute favours not of Epiſcopal gravity, and all the Diſcourſes there are made by the ſame hand. If one takes the pains to read the Acts, he will ſee that 'tis not ſo, and that there are Anſwers and Queſtions which are Originals, and could not be gueſſed at by any Author. He alledges for a 5th. Reaſon, that Anemius Biſhop of Sirmium, does there impertinently aſſume the Title of the Head of Illyricum. But 'tis certain that he enjoyed it in the time of Conſtantine, and it does not appear that he was diſpoſſeſs'd of it ſo ſoon after, ſince he enjoyed it ſtill in the time of Juſtinian. 'Tis not certain that Theſſalonica had yet received the Lieutenancy of Damaſus, and tho it were ſo, Sirmium was always the Head of the Weſtern Illyricum; and it may be that the Biſhop of Sirmium contended againſt him for the poſſeſſion of this Lieutenancy, eſpecially at the beginning. Chiffletius pretends that Aſcholius Biſhop of Theſſalonica was preſent at the Council of Aquileia, but he has no other Proofs of it but the Auhtority of a Synodical Book full of Errors. The 6th. Reaſon of Chiffletius is, that the Anſwers of Palladius are ridiculous: But it may be they do not appear ſo ridiculous to all the World, and tho' they did, is this the firſt time that Hereticks have defended themſelves ill? I ſhall not ſtay longer to mention the other Conjectures, which are as weak as the reſt, ſo that there never was a fancy worſe grounded than this of Chiffletius about theſe Acts.

rance

rance becoming an Holy Biſhop, That if he ſhould act otherwiſe, the Biſhops would not ſuffer nor diſſemble the Injury which he would do to Religion; and that if he came to the Church, he ſhould not find a Biſhop there, or elſe he ſhould find one who would oppoſe his Entrance into it. "And "what will you anſwer then, ſays he, addreſſing his words to the Emperour Valentinian? What "will you anſwer to the Biſhop when he ſhall ſay, The Church cannot receive Oblations from him "who has given Ornaments to the Temples of the Gods: His Gifts ſhall not be preſented on the "Altar of Jeſus Chriſt, who hath made an Altar for Idols. The Edict ſigned with your own Hand "convicts you of the Fact. How can the Honour which you give to Jeſus Chriſt be acceptable to "him, ſince at the ſame time you worſhip Idols? No, you cannot ſerve Two Maſters. The Virgins "conſecrated to God, have no Priviledges, and yet you have granted Priviledges to Veſtals? Why have "you recourſe to the Miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt, after you have preferr'd before them the Petitions of "Pagans? St. Ambroſe adds to theſe Remonſtrances of the Biſhops, the Charge which his Brother Gratian could draw up againſt him, if he ſhould return into the World, and the Accuſations which his Father Theodoſius might juſtly make againſt him. St. Ambroſe

Becauſe St. Amboroſe had deſired of Valentinian a Copy of the Petition which had been preſented to him in the Name of the Senate, and which he anſwers in the following Letter, that is alſo here inſerted. Symmachus therein deſires of the Emperours, as Governour of Rome, and Deputy of the Senate, that they would cauſe the Altar of Victory to be repaired, that ſo the Oath might be adminiſtred according to ancient Cuſtom upon the Altar, and that they would reſtore to the Veſtal Colledge, and the Prieſts of the Gods, the Goods and Priviledges of which they had been unjuſtly deprived, ſince the Gods, being provoked with the Injuries done to their Prieſts, had avenged themſelves by a cruel Famine, wherewith the Empire was afflicted. He aſſerts, That they ought not to imitate the Emperours, who have taken away thoſe ancient Ceremonies. He introduces the City of Rome deſiring this Reſtauration, and he affirms that this may be done without any Expence to the Treaſury. This Petition was written with all the Eloquence and Politeneſs poſſible.

St. Ambroſe anſwers it in the following Letter, and reduces the reaſons of this Requeſt to theſe Three: The Firſt is the claim which the City of Rome makes to her ancient Ceremonies: The Second is the Injuſtice which is done to the Veſtal Virgins, and the Prieſts of the Falſe Gods, by deſpoiling them of their Revenues: The Third is the Vengance which the Gods have ſent down upon the Empire by Famine. To the Firſt he oppoſes a contrary Proſopopœia, wherein the City of Rome condemns her ancient Superſtitions, and demonſtrates the Advantages which ſhe has drawn from the Chriſtian Religion. In anſwer to his Second Argument, he compares the Virgins Conſecrated to God with the Veſtal Virgins, and the Chriſtian Biſhops with the Prieſts of the Falſe Gods. The Veſtals continued Virgins, becauſe of the Honour and Advantages which there Condition procured to them; but the Chriſtian Virgins have no other Recompence of their Virginity, but their own Vertue. They complain that the Prieſts of Falſe Gods, are deprived of Revenues from the Publick; but the Chriſtian Prieſts are even deprived of the Right of Succeſſion. "The New Laws, ſays he, have "made this Regulation, and yet we do not look upon it as an Injury, becauſe we are not much "concerned for this loſs. The Prieſts of the Falſe Gods are capable of Donatives, but no Legacies "can be made in Favour of our Church-men. I do not complain of this ſeverity, ſays St. Ambroſe, "for I would rather that Eccleſiaſticks ſhould have leſs Riches and more Grace. The Church hath "no Patrimony but her Faith; if ſhe has any Revenues they are for feeding the Poor. In ſhort, St. Ambroſe diſcovers the Falſhood of Symmachus's Suppoſition, That the Gods of the Pagans being provoked, ſent the Famine which afflicted the Empire the preceding Year. Firſt, becauſe this Famine did not begin till long after the Pagan Prieſts were depriv'd of their Rewards and their Honours. Secondly, Becauſe this Famine did not continue long, and Plenty ſucceeded it, tho' nothing was done in favour of the Prieſts of the Pagan Gods. He concludes this Anſwer with ſhowing, That the Emperours ought not to expect Protection from the Gods of the Pagans. Theſe Pieces were written in the Year 384 when Symmachus was Governour of Rome.

The 19th. Letter to Vigilius, lately choſen Biſhop of Trent, contains ſome Important Inſtructions, which he counſels him to give unto his People. The Principal is, To diſſuade the Faithful from contracting Marriages with Infidels; of this he treats largely in this Letter. But he admoniſhes him alſo by the by, to teach his People the Obligation that lies upon them to pay Labourers their hire; to inſtruct them that Uſury is forbidden, and to exhort them to uſe Hoſpitality. One of the Reaſons which he brings to ſhow, That a Chriſtian ought not to marry an Infidel, is this, That Marriage ought to be ſanctified by the Prieſtly Veil, and by the Bleſſing: How then can a Marriage be made between two Perſons of a different Belief? The Hiſtory of Sampſon and Dalilah, affords him a fair Field to enlarge upon; by which Example he ſhows that Chriſtians ought to ſhun marrying with Perſons of a different Religion. Vigilius died under the Conſulſhip of Stilico in 400 or 405. 'Tis commonly believed that he was 20 Years a Biſhop; yet there are Acts of the Life of this Saint, where he is ſaid to be only 12 Years inſtead of 20. If he died in 400, and was Biſhop only 12 Years, this Letter was in the Year 383. If he died in 405, and was 20 Years a Biſhop, the Letter may be written at the ſame time; it cannot be in the Year 381, becauſe the Name of his Predeceſſor is found in the Subſcriptions of the Council of Aquilea.

The 20th. Letter to Marcellina, Siſter to St. Ambroſe, contains a Relation of the Endeavours, that the Empreſs Juſtina us'd in the Year 385, to take from the Catholicks of Milan, two of their Churches, and of the manner wherein St. Ambroſe defended them. "The Day after I received your Letter, "ſays he, by which you ſignify to me, That you were very much tormented with troubleſome "Dreams, here begun thoſe Commotions which have created me a great deal of trouble. They were "not

St. Ambroſe "not ſatisfied with asking the Portian-Church, which is without the City, but they damanded alſo "the New-Church which is within the City, and is greater than the other: The Lords of the Court "and the Officers, came to find me out, and told me that I muſt abandon this Church, and hinder "the People from making any Sedition. I anſwered according to my Duty, That a Biſhop cannot "deliver up the Temple of the Lord. The next morning there was great Crying in the Church, "and the Prefect came thither to perſuade us to give up at leaſt the Portian Church; the People op- "pos'd him with their Clamours, and he retired, ſaying, That he would make his Report of what "was done to the Emperour. The next Day, which was Sunday, after the Reading and Sermon, "when I was Explaining the Creed to the Catechumens, I was told, That Serjeants were ſent to ſeize "upon the Portian-Church, that they had already hung up Curtains, and that a great many People "were flocking thither: I went on ſtill in diſcharging my Duty and began Maſs; but as I was "offering, I was inform'd, that the People having met with an Arian Prieſt call'd Cartulus, had laid "Hands upon him. This made me weep, and I prayed to God in the midſt of the Holy Sacrifice, "that he would hinder the ſhedding of Blood in the Quarrel of this Church. At the ſame time I "ſent Prieſts and Deacons to recover this Man out of the Hands of the People. Immediately very "ſevere Sentences were paſs'd, Firſt againſt all the Companies of Merchants; ſo that at this Holy "Time, which was the laſt Week of Lent, when Priſoners were wont to be ſet at Liberty, there "was nothing heard every where but the rattling of Chains wherewith Innocent Men were loaded, "and great Sums of Money were extorted from the People. The Officers threatned Perſons of Qua- "lity, if they would not deliver up the Church to them. The Counts and Tribunes came to me, and "required me to deliver up the Church preſently, ſaying, That the Emperour, in whoſe Power all "things are, does but demand his Right. I anſwered them, did he demand any thing of mine, my "Money, or my Land, I ſhould willingly give them up to him, tho' all that I have belongs to the "Poor; but Places Conſecrated to God belong not to the Emperour, neither is it in my Power to give "them. If you ſhould demand my Patrimony, ſaid I to them, take it; If you would have my Per- "ſon, I am here ready for you, carry me away Priſoner, put me to Death, if you pleaſe; In ſhort, "Do with me what you pleaſe, I'm content, I will not call upon the People to Succour me, I will "not proſtrate my ſelf before the Altar to beg my Life, but I will rather willingly Sacrifice "my ſelf for the Altar's ſake. I was deſir'd to put a ſtop to the Sedition of the People, "I anſwered, That all that I could do, was to give no Encouragement to it, but God only could "appeaſe it; That if they thought I was the cauſe of it, the Emperour might baniſh me whither- "ſoever he pleas'd. I paſs'd the reſt of the Day in the Old Church, and at Night, I went back to "ſleep at my own Houſe, that they might find me ready to be gone if they had a mind to force me "away. Next morning the Church was encompaſs'd with Souldiers; the People came ſtill flocking "thither in great Multitudes; the Souldiers who had Orders to ſeize upon it, joyned with the People "in the Prayers which were put up in it. In the mean time, St. Ambroſe preached in another Church about the preſent Calamities. He recites here his Sermon full of Boldneſs and Reſpect, out of which take an Excellent Paſſage as follows. "I was commanded to deliver up the Church, I an- "ſwered, That it was not lawful for me to deliver it up, nor for you, Prince, to receive it. You "cannot juſtly Invade the Houſe of any particular Man, and would you forcibly take away the "Houſe of Jeſus Chriſt? I was told that every thing is lawful to the Emperour. I anſwered, That "the Emperour has no Juriſdiction over Divine Things; That he ought not to aſſume this Boldneſs, "and if he would Reign long he muſt ſubmit to God: For 'tis written, we muſt render to God what "is God's, and to Cæſar what is Cæſar's; the Palaces are for Kings, the Churches for Biſhops: The "Emperour has Power over the Walls of the City, but not over Sacred Edifices. 'Twas ſaid, but "'tis very Juſt that the Emperour ſhould have a Church for himſelf. No, he ought not to have "any. Here ſome came and told him, That they had already brought his Royal Hangings into the Church, and that the People which were there, earneſtly deſired his preſence. This gave him oc- caſion to apply the Pſalm which was read that Morning to the Caſe in hand, O Lord, the Heathens are come into thine Inheritance, &c. While he was diſcourſing upon this Subject, there came a Notary in the Emperour's Name to ask him, Why he had acted contrary to the Orders of his Majeſty. St. Ambroſe anſwered, That he did not believe that he dad done it. "Why then, ſays the Notary, "did you ſend Presbyters into the Church which he had a mind to take Poſſeſſion of? If you be a "Tyrant, the Emperour deſires that you would declare your ſelf ſo, that he may know what he, "has to do.. St. Ambroſe anſwered, That he dad done nothing contrary to the Reſpect which he ow'd to the Emperour, nor contrary to the Intereſt of the Church: That he had indeed ſent Presbyters to this Church, but he did not believe that he had herein done any thing contrary to his Authority; That if they took him for a Tyrant, they might put him to Death; That he had no other Arms to defend himſelf withal but the Invocation of the Name of Jeſus Chriſt; That under the ancient Law the Kingly Power had been given to Prieſts, but they had never uſurp'd it; That Kings were more deſirous of the Prieſthood than the Prieſts of the Kingly Power; That Chriſt himſelf run away for fear leſt he ſhould be choſen King; That Maximus would not ſay that he had been wanting in his Loyalty to Valentinian. In ſhort, That Biſhops had never been Tyrants, but had often ſuffered hard things from them.

All the Day was ſpent in ſadneſs, and St. Ambroſe could not return to his own Houſe, becauſe the Church was encompaſs'd with Souldiers; ſo he paſſed the Night in ſinging Pſalms in the Church. The next Day the Book of Jonas was read. As St. Ambroſe was expounding it, word was brought him, that the Emperour had commanded the Souldiers to withdraw, and order'd the Fines which were exacted from the Merchants to be reſtor'd. "What Joys, ſays he, what Acclamations

"of

" of the People! This was the Day wherein Jeſus Chriſt was delivered up for us, the Day wherein " Abſolution is given to Penitents. This is, writes he to his Siſter, what is paſs'd, God grant that " here may be an end of it. But the Threatnings of the Emperour make me fear ſtill ſome greater " Commotions: He ſays, That I am a Tyrant and more than a Tyrant: And when his Officers pray'd " him to come to Church, he anſwered them, If Ambroſe would command you, you would deliver " me up. Behold, what am I to expect after this! All thoſe that heard him ſay this, teſtified ſuf- " ficiently the trouble that it gave them; but there are ſome about him, who have blown up the " Coals. Calligonus Maſter of the Wardrope came to me, and threatned me in theſe Words; Why " do you deſpiſe the Emperour, Vengeance ſhall quickly come upon you? I anſwered him, That if " God ſhould ſuffer theſe Threatnings to take Effect, he would do as Eunuchs have been wont to " do, and I ſhould ſuffer as becomes a Biſhop: Heavens grant, That all the Miſchiefs which " threaten the Church may fall upon me; That her Enemies may point all their Darts againſt " me; That they may aſſwage their Rage with ſhedding of my Blood. Thus ends this Excellent Letter of St. Ambroſe. St. Ambroſe

Tho' the Firſt Efforts of Juſtina had ſuch bad Succeſs, yet ſhe did not give over her Perſecution. To colour her Deſign, ſhe caus'd a Conference to be propos'd between Auxentius the Arian Biſhop and St. Ambroſe, before ſuch Judges as they ſhould name, hoping by theſe means to have a Pretence to force him away. Then an Officer was ſent in the Name of Valentinian to ſignifie unto him, That Auxentius had named ſome Judges, and that he ſhould name ſome in his own behalf. St. Ambroſe anſwered, That according to the good Maxim of Theodoſius the Father of Valentinian, Biſhops could have none but Biſhops for their Judges; That Laymen could not judge between Biſhops, and much leſs Infidels or Hereticks, ſuch as Auxentius in all probability had choſen. This is what St. Ambroſe remonſtrated to Valentinian in Letter 21ſt. which is properly a Petition wherein he ſhows that he had done nothing contrary to the Reſpect which he owes him by this Anſwer; That he only followed the Law which his Father had eſtabliſh'd, and that this was the Cuſtom of the Church: That if a Conference about the Faith was neceſſary, it ſhould be in the Church and before Biſhops: That if Auxentius ſhould appeal to a Synod, tho' it was not neceſſary to aſſemble one, (ſince if an Angel ſhould come from Heaven and teach a contrary Doctrine, it ought not to be preferr'd before the unanimous Conſent of all the Churches;) yet if a Council ſhould be aſſembled, he was ready to appear there; That he would have come to Court and to the Emperour's Council, if his People, his Clergy and the Biſhops had not hindred him; That he was not wont to go thither but for the Intereſt of the Emperour, neither was it his Cuſtom to freqent the Court.

At the time when St. Ambroſe ſent this Petition to be preſented to the Emperour, he preach'd a Sermon to his People, to allay the Fear they were ſeized with, after they underſtood that St. Ambroſe was cited to appear before the Emporour's Council. This is plac'd after the preceding Letter. There he declares to his People, That he had no deſign to abandon his Church; That they might arreſt his Body by force, but they could not ſeparate his Mind from it; That he would never willingly forſake them, but if he ſhould be driven away by force, he would not reſiſt. " I can, ſays he, " ſigh and mourn, I can lament; Tears are my only Arms againſt Violence and againſt Souldiers; " Biſhops have no other Defence. I cannot, I ought not to reſiſt any other ways, but as to flying " away and forſaking my Church, that I will never do. You know that the Reſpect which I have " for the Emperour does not make me yield cowardly; That I offer my ſelf willingly to Puniſh- " ment, and that I do not fear the Miſchiefs they threaten me with. If I knew that in my abſence " the Church would not be deliver'd up to the Arians, and if it were the Duty of a Biſhop to go to " the Palace, I would go willingly; but this is not his Duty, for Matters of Faith cannot be hand- " led but in the Church. If any one has a mind to oppoſe our Creed, let him come here, and I " will defend the Faith which I profeſs. The Souldiers that encompaſs the Church and their rattling " of their Arms, do not at all make me afraid, neither do they ſhake my Conſtancy; all that I " fear is, that while you detain me, ſome Reſolution may be taken againſt you. I am not wont to " have any fear for my ſelf, but I tremble for you. When the Veſſels of the Church were demanded " of me, I ſaid, That if they would demand any thing that was mine, I ſhould willinly give it; " That I could give nothing that belonged to the Church, and that in refuſing them I gratified the " Emperour, ſince he could not receive them without doing an Injury to Jeſus Chriſt. After this he exhorts his People to continue Spectators of the Combate which he was to maintain. He ſays, That he had no reaſon to fear, becauſe he was aſſured, that it was for the Cauſe of God, who could protect him againſt all his Enemies, and defeat all their Deſigns: That he had already ſmitten them with blindneſs, ſince they did not perceive the Gate of the Church which was left open, tho' they had compaſs'd the Church about, and ſought for a way to enter into it; That he went forth daily to make Viſits, or to go to the Sepulchre of the Martyrs, without being ſtopp'd by any Body, tho' 'twas already reſolv'd to drive him away, and that Auxentius had a deſign to Invade his Church. Here he inveighs freely againſt this Arian, and againſt the Law which he had gotten by ſurprize in favour of his Party. He obſerves, That he was ready to refute him, tho' there was no need of it, ſince Auxentius's Cauſe was quite deſperate, and he had been condemn'd even by thoſe, whom he had choſen for his Judges, and in the abſence of his Adverſaries: That after he was thus conquer'd, he would have taken the Emperour for a Judge, tho' he was yet but a Catechumen: That he had perſuaded the Emperour the preceding Year to take away a Church from the Catholicks, but the Reſiſtance of the People hindering him from compaſſing that Deſign, he had charged St. Ambroſe with rebelling againſt the Orders of his Prince, tho' he always anſwered with much Moderation. " If the Em- " perour, ſays he, demand of us Tribute, we will not refuſe to pay it him, the Lands of the Church

St. Ambroſe

" do pay it. If he would have the Lands themſelves, he can take them, none of us does oppoſe it. " I will not give them to him, but neither will I hinder him from taking them. We keep our ſelves " within the bounds of a Juſt Obedience, We render to Cæſar that which is Cæſar's, and to God the " things which are God's. Tribute is Cæſar's. No body refuſes him that. The Church is God's; 'tis " unlawful to give it to the Prince; he has no Authority over it. Could any thing be more reſpectful, " or more to the Honour of the Emperour? 'Tis an Honour to him to be of the Church; he is in " the Church, but not above the Church.

The 22d. Letter contains the Hiſtory of the Diſcovery of the Reliques of St. Gervaſius and St. Protaſius, and the Sermons which St. Ambroſe made to his People upon this Subject. It is alſo to his dear Sitter Marcellina, to whom he communicated an Account of what had paſſed in his Church. He writes to her, that having dedicated a Church at Milan, he was deſired to Conſecrate it with the ſame Solemnity, wherewith he had done the Roman Church (this was another Church which was near the Roman Gate) which he promiſed to do, if he could find any Reliques. That he had cauſed the Ground at a place which was before the Rails of the Selpulchres of St. Felix and St. Nabor to be broke up; That in this place he found the Bones of two Men of extraordinary bigneſs with much Blood; That there were ſufficient Signs to diſcover that they were Martyrs; That having brought thither ſome poſſeſs'd Perſons, it was known by their Agitation, that they were before the Selpulchre of Martys; That the People flocked together in great Multitudes for the ſpace of two Days to ſee theſe Relicks, and that afterwards thoſe Bones were diſpoſed according to their Natural Order to be carried into the Ambroſian Church; That they were laid up in Fauſtus's Church, where Vigils were celebrated all that Night, and the next Morning they were tranſlated to the Ambroſian Church; That while they were tranſlating, a blind Man was cured. This was the diſcovery of the Bodies of theſe Martyrs. St. Ambroſe adds two Sermons made to his People upon this occaſion, which contain alſo ſome Circumſtances of it. In them he obſerves, That theſe two Saints are St. Gervaſius and St. Protaſius. He does not tell us, whence he knew it: But St. Auſtin informs us that he had got an Account of their Death, and the place where their Bodies were laid, by a Revelation which he had that Night. He ſpeaks of the many Miracles which thoſe Reliques wrought, of the Poſſeſſed that were delivered, of the Sick that were healed, of the Handkerchiefs that were touched, to carry them to the Sick. He tells his People, That theſe Bones muſt be put under the Altar; That ſuch Victims could not be better plac'd than under the Altar where the true Sacrifice lay; That Jeſus Chriſt is upon the Altar, becauſe he ſuffered for all, and the Martyrs are under the Altar, becauſe they were redeem'd by his Blood. He adds, That he had deſign'd this place for his own burial place, becauſe it was fit that a Biſhop ſhould be interr'd in that place where he was wont to make the oblation, but that he yielded this place to the Martyrs, and would preſently go and place their Reliques in it. The People earneſtly deſired, that he would put off the Performance of this Ceremony till Sunday, but he would delay it no longer than till the next Morning. And then he made another Diſcourſe to his People, wherein he confutes the Infidelity of the Arians, and the Incredulity of ſome of the Faithful, by the Miracles which the Reliques had wrought, and chiefly by the Cure of the blind Man which was publick and certain. St. Auſtin Ch. 7. of the IXth. B. of his Confeſſions, and the Author of the Life of St. Ambroſe, ſay, That an end was put to the Perſecution by the diſcovery of thoſe Reliques, which diſcovers to us that this Letter was written in the Year 386.

The 23d. Letter is written to the Biſhops of Emilia, about a ſcruple they had concerning Eaſter Day for the Year 387. St. Ambroſe obſerves in the Firſt Place, That the Holy Scripture and Tradition teach us, That we muſt carefully find out Eaſter Day; That the Council of Nice believ'd this ſo neceſſary; That they had made a Cycle of 19. Years; That by this means the Sacrifice in Honour of Chriſt's Reſurrection might be offered in all places in the ſame Night; That the Biſhops of Alexandria and Rome had already made Regulations of this Buſineſs; but ſince there were many who would alſo have his Opinion, he thought himſelf obliged to write his Thoughts; and tho' the difference at preſent was only about the Celebration of the next Eaſter, yet he would ſhew what Day ſhould be obſerved for time to come, whenſoever the like Queſtion ſhould return. He ſays, That there are two Things to be obſerved concerning the Celebration of Eaſter, the 14th. Day of the Moon and the Firſt Month; That this time was fixed for the Paſſover under the Old Teſtament, and that Jeſus Chriſt obſerved this Law, by celebrating the Paſſover on Thurſday the 14th. Day of the Moon of March, and by being crucified on Friday the 15th. and riſing the Sunday following. That therefore Chriſtians ought to Celebrate the Feaſt of the Reſurrection on the Sunday after the 14th. Day of March-Moon, a Day on which it is not any more lawful to Faſt; and when the 14th Day of the Moon happens to be Sunday, as it will fall out to be quickly, we muſt put off the Solemnity of Eaſter, till the following Sunday, becauſe we muſt not Faſt upon Eaſter-Day, nor break our Faſt upon the 14th. Day, which is the Day wherein Jeſus Chriſt was delivered up to be crucified. He proves by Examples that this is the Cuſtom. He ſpeaks afterwards of the Firſt Month, and ſhews that 'tis not neceſſary to Celedrate the Day of the Reſurrection in the Firſt Month, provided the Day of the Paſſion happens in it. He makes this Remark, becauſe he was treating of the Paſſover for the Year 387. which was to be celebrated on the 23d. of April, a Day which ſeem'd not to belong to the ſame Lunar Month. 'Tis certain that St. Ambroſe ſpeaks of the Eaſter of that Year as being quickly to come to paſs, quod futurum eſt proximè, and that he ſpeaks of the Eaſter of the Year 380, as being already paſs'd ſome Years ago, ſuperioribus temporibus; which proves, that this Letter was written in 386, or 387. tho there be a place in this Letter, which ſeems to prove, that it was written in the Year 381, becauſe he ſpeaks of the Eaſter for the Year 378, as being two Years before.

before. But this muſt be a Fault in the Tranſcriber; for what probablity is there that he ſhould take ſo much Pains to fix an Eaſter which was not to happen till Six Years after, and that he ſhould ſpeak of it as the next Feſtival? St. Ambroſe

In Letter 24th. St. Ambroſe gives an Acount to the Emperour Valentinian, to whom it is addreſſed, of his Embaſſy to Maximus, which the Emperour had entruſted with him the Second time in the Year 386. He tells him, That when he came to Triers, he deſired to diſcourſe with Maximus in private, but he would not ſay any thing but in his Council, tho' he was told, that it was not the Cuſtom for Biſhops to do ſo; That when he was admitted there, Maximus came to ſalute him, but he would not receive his Kiſs till after much Diſcourſe; That Maximus accus'd him of putting a Trick upon him in his Firſt Embaſſy, and hindring his Paſſage into Italy; that he excus'd himſelf, and prov'd from the ſeveral Steps that he had made, that he had no Deſign to deceive him; That he came to treat about a Peace in the Name of his Prince, and that not being able to conclude it, he return'd; That he had not paſs'd his Word to him that Valentinian ſhould come and meet him; That he had never diſſuaded this Emperour from doing it; That this Reſolution of his was taken before he return'd, and that he had ſent Deputies to acquaint Maximus that he would not come; That he had acted with all the Moderation that is poſſible; That he had ſent back his own Brother to him, tho' Maximus had put Valentinian's to death, and by an unheard-of Inhumanity refus'd ſtill to reſtore his Body; That Valentinian had preferr'd Peace to War, tho' he might hope for Succors from the Huns and Alanes againſt the Barbarians whom Maximus had brought into the Empire; That Maximus ought not to blame thoſe, who being with Valentinian, made their Eſcape and fled to Theodoſius for Refuge, ſince he put all to death that he could lay hands upon, and among the reſt one Vallion who was a brave Captain; That after this Diſcourſe he receiv'd no other Anſwer from Maximus, but that he would conſider what he had to do. St. Ambroſe adds, that Maximus underſtanding that he would not communicate either with the Biſhops who had receiv'd him into Communion, or who had deſir'd the death of ſome Hereticks, he receiv'd Orders to be gone immediately, and at his going away he had the diſſatisfaction to ſee the Holy Biſhop Hyginus ſent into Baniſhment, and us'd with all poſſible Rigour, ſo that his Age and bad Uſage reduc'd him to that condition, which left him no hopes but of death.

The Two following Letters are about a Queſtion which Studius had put to St. Ambroſe; Whether a Magiſtrate ought to condemn Criminals to Death, and whether he that condemns ſuch Perſons ſhould be excommunicated. The practice in St. Ambroſe's time was not very certain: Some Biſhops excluded them from Communion, others on the contrary received them; nay, there was alſo an example of ſome Biſhops, who a little while before deſir'd the death of the Priſcillianiſts: Some Magiſtrates themſelves abſtain'd from theſe things. St. Ambroſe confeſſes, that we ought not to excommunicate a Magiſtrate, who according to the Duty of his Office Condemns a Man to death, and Orders him to be Executed; but he wiſhes that Judges would abſtain from doing it, and would have no Criminal Condemn'd to Death, but only to a Priſon or ſome other Puniſhment, that ſo they may have opportunity to reform themſelves, and do Penance if they be baptiz'd. or to receive Baptiſm if, they be Catechumnes. To prove that a Chriſtian Magiſtrate ought to uſe this Clemency, he alledges the Judgment which Jeſus Chriſt gave of the Woman taken in Adultery, and makes many Reflections upon this Action in this Letter and the next. Theſe Letters were written after Judgment was given againſt the Priſcillianiſts, about the Year 386.

The Seven following Letters to Irenæus contain Allegorical Explications of ſome Difficulties about Paſſages of the Holy Scripture. There are Four of them which were formerly among the Treatiſes upon the Holy Scripture. 'Tis thought they were written about the Year 386; but there is no convincing proof of it. The order in which they are to be plac'd is better aſcertain'd, becauſe it is authoriz'd by the Firſt Words at the beginning of each Letter.

The Three Letters to Orontianus were written immediately after one another. In the Third he ſpeaks of his own Perſecution, and therefore they were written after the Year 386. Theſe are alſo about ſome Difficulties of Scripture.

The Letters 37th. and 38th to Simplicius are about Morality. In them St. Ambroſe ſhows, that none but a wiſe Man can be truly Free and truly Rich. Theſe Letters are plac'd in the Year 387, tho' without certain proof.

The 39th. is a Letter of Conſolation to Sabinus upon the death of his Siſter. He ſays, that as he return'd from Bolonia, he ſaw the Cities ruin'd. This may have reference to the irruption of Maximus, or that of Eugenius.

The 40th. Letter to Theodoſius is more conſiderable. The Governour of the Eaſt had written to Theodoſius who was then at Milan after the death of Maximus in 388 or 389. That a Synagogue of the Jews and a Temple of the Valentinians were burnt, and that the Biſhop was the cauſe of this Conflagration. Theodoſius gave order that thoſe who had done this Action ſhould be puniſh'd, and that the Biſhop ſhould rebuild this Synagogue at his own Charge. St. Ambroſe, who was then at Aquileia, underſtanding that Theodoſius had given this Judgment, wrote to him with all poſſible freedom, that his Order was not conſiſtent with his Piety, and the Zeal he had for the Chriſtian Religion; That the Biſhop could not obey him without prevaricating. He defends alſo the Counſel of this Biſhop, and the Action of thoſe who had burnt the Synagogue. He ſhews, that the Jews had often burnt the Temples of Chriſtians, without being puniſh'd for it, or condemn'd to rebuild them; That it was unworthy of a Chriſtian Emperour, who had received ſo many benefits from Jeſus Chriſt, to take part with a Synagogue of Jews againſt the Church. In a word, he heaps together many thoughts and expreſſions of this Nature, which have more of Declamation than true Reaſoning, to hinder any Repa-

St. Ambroſe Reparation of the Injury which was done to the Jews by burning their Synagogue: He threatens alſo the Emperour to deprive him of Communion, if he did not recal theſe Orders. He did not only write to the Emperour about it, but he alſo made a Sermon upon this Subject in his preſence, which is related in the following Letter written to his Siſter. He prevail'd ſo far, that the Emperour promis'd none of the Chriſtians ſhould be ſought after for this Cauſe, after which he went, ſays he, to the Altar, which he ſhould not have approach'd if the Emperour had not paſt his word about that matter.

The 42d. Letter is a Synodical Epiſtle of a Council at Milan, being an Anſwer to that which Siricius and his Council had written to the Church of that City againſt Jovinian and his followers. This Letter is ſign'd by Seven Biſhops, and a Prieſt who ſubſcribed it in the preſence of his Biſhop and by his Command. In it they certify the Pope, that they were of the ſame Judgment with him concerning the excellency of Virginity. They prove that Mary, the Mother of God, never loſt her Virginity in Child-bearing. They ſhow the neceſſity and uſefulneſs of Faſting. Laſtly, they condemn Jovinian and his followers whom Siricius and the Roman Church had condemned.

The Letters 43d. and 44th. are Explications of Two Difficulties which Orontianus had ſtarted about the Creation of the World, which were not explained in St. Ambroſe's Treatiſe upon this Subject written about the Year 389.

The Five following Letters addreſs'd to Sabinus were written much about the ſame time: They contain nothing very remarkable.

The 50th. addreſs'd to Chromacius, is about the Prophecy of Balaam. St. Ambroſe was old when he wrote it.

In the 51ſt. he exhorts Theodoſius to do Penance for the Maſſacre done by his Order at Theſſalonica, and repreſents to him the Enormity of this Action. This Letter was written in the Year 390.

The 52d. to Titianus contains nothing remarkable; he congratulates him that Ruffinus was made Prætorian Præfect, not only upon the account of the Honour that was done him by it, but alſo becauſe this Office hindred him from being Judge in a Law-ſuit which Titianus had with his Grand-daughter whom Ruffinus favour'd. Ruffinus was made Prætorian Præfect in 392. and ſo the date of this Letter is certainly known.

In the 53d. St. Ambroſe teſtifies to Theodoſius how much he was afflicted for the Death of Valentinian, which happened on the Firſt of March 392, and this Letter was in the Summer following.

The Two following Letters are written to Euſebius who was of an Illuſtrious Family of Bolonia. In the Firſt St. Ambroſe acquaints him with what he had done for an Officer whom he had recommended to him, and gives him an account of the News about his Grand-ſon Pauſtinus. In the Second he writes to him that he had detain'd at Milan, Ambroſia the Siſter of Fauſtinus. This is the Virgin to whom he had given the Veil, of which he ſpeaks in the Book of the Inſtitution of Virgins, publiſh'd in 392. This Letter was written immediately after.

The 56th. Letter is an Anſwer of St. Ambroſe to Theophilus, who had conſulted him about the difference between Evagrius and Flavianus for the Biſhoprick of Antioch. St. Ambroſe tells him at the begining of this Letter, that Evagrius had no cauſe to puſh on the Deciſion of this Affair, and that Flavianus ought to fear the event of it. He prays him to pardon theſe Words, which a juſt Grief drew from his Pen, becauſe all the World quarrell'd about them, tho' they did not ſympathize with the Grief of others. He adds, that the Council of Capua having referr'd this Affair to Theophilus and the Biſhops of Egypt, it was like to be determin'd by a Judgment which could not be ſuſpected of Injuſtice, ſince the Judges did not communicate with either Party, but that Flavianus had had recourſe to the Emperour's Reſcripts, to avoid being judg'd by the Egyptians. This made St. Ambroſe think that Flavian was in the wrong, altho' he did not find the Cauſe of Evagrius very good, and he condemns very ſharply the procedure of Flavian. But Theophilus having written to him that ſome means of accommodating this Affair might be found out, he was not averſe to it, and counſels him to cite Flavianus yet once more, and if he perſiſted to refuſe to appear, then to accommodate this Affair as he ſhould think fit: Nevertheleſs he ought not to violate the Canons of the Conncils of Nice and Capua, and muſt ſtill preſerve peace with all the World, leſt they ſhould ſeem to deſtroy that which had been built up. He advertiſes him alſo, that it was convenient to write to the Biſhop of Rome, being perſuaded that he will give no deciſion which can diſpleaſe him, becauſe the way to maintain Peace, is to do nothing which may ſtir up Diviſion among the Biſhops of his own Communion. Laſtly, he declares to him, that he will joyfully receive what he ſhould determine if the Roman Church approve it.

The 57th. Letter about the Affair of Bonoſus is not St. Ambroſe's but the Pope Siricius's. For Firſt, in it he ſpeaks of St. Ambroſe as a Third Perſon. Bonoſus, ſays the Author of this Letter, underſtanding your Judgment, ſent to conſult our Brother Ambroſe, to know if he might return to his Church; and this cannot be underſtood of any but our Holy Biſhop of Milan. There was no other Ambroſe Biſhop at that time, and tho' there were, yet 'tis plain that he ſpeaks of our Biſhop in this place, ſince it was he who preſided at the Council of Capua, of the execution of whoſe Judgment he was treating. Secondly, The Stile of this Letter is no ways like that of St. Ambroſe, and is very like that of Siricius. Thirdly, It appears plainly that it is a Biſhop of Rome who ſpeaks. Fourthly, Holſtenius has publiſh'd it in his Collection under the name of Siricus, upon the credit of the Manuſcript in the Vatican. Neither is it to Theophilus of Alexandria that this Letter is addreſs'd, but to Anyſius of Theſſalonica, and the Biſhops of Macedonia. For tis' evident that it was written to thoſe to whom the Council of

Capua

Capua had referr'd the Affair of Bonoſus; and 'tis no leſs certain that it was referr'd to the Macedonians, to the Biſhop of Theſſalonica, and the other Neighbour Biſhops of Bonoſus, who was Biſhop of Naïſſa a City of Dardania. To convince any Man of theſe Two things he needs only read the beginning of the Letter. I have read the Letters which you wrote to me concerning the Biſhop Bonoſus, wherein you deſire our Opinion, either to clear up the Truth, or through Modeſty only; but the Council of Capua having order'd that the Neighbours of Bonoſus and his Accuſers ſhould be Judges of this Affair, and chiefly the Macedonians, together with the Biſhop of Theſſalonica. . . . . It belongs to you who are entruſted with this Cauſe, to judge according to the Order of the Council of Capua, becauſe you are ſubſtituted in the room of this Synod, who has choſen you to enquire into this Affair. And the ſame Bonoſus having ſent to conſult our Brother Ambroſe, whether he ſhould enter into his Church, received for anſwer, That he ſhould undertake nothing againſt your Judgment, but follow what you ſhould Ordain, ſince the Synod has committed to you this Truſt. Two things are evident from theſe Words: Firſt, That the Biſhops of Illyricum, and chiefly thoſe of Macedonia, were entruſted, together with the Biſhop of Theſſalonica, by the Synod of Capua, to enquire and judge of the Cauſe of Bonoſus. Secondly, That this Letter is addreſs'd to thoſe who were thus entruſted. But ſome may ſay, if it be ſo, why does it ſpeak of the Biſhop of Theſſalonica and thoſe of Macedonia in the Third Perſon? Why does not the Author write thus, The Synod of Capua having referr'd this Cauſe to you and to your Brethren; but, The Synod of Capua having thought fit, that the neighbouring Biſhops of Bonoſus, and chiefly the Macedonians, and the Biſhop of Theſſalonica, ſhould enquire into and judge this Cauſe, &c. 'Tis eaſy to anſwer, that the Reaſon is, becauſe he relates in this place the proper Words of the Synod of Capua. Now it often happens, that when ſuch Writings are alledg'd to the Judges wherein they are ſpoken of, the way of ſpeaking of them is not chang'd, but they are nam'd in the Third Perſon, as they are in the Writings. But what is ſaid afterwards is addreſs'd to them, and what is related is applied to them. And this the Author of this Letter does in the next Line; veſtrum eſt igitur qui hoc recepiſtis Judicium, &c. 'Tis needleſs to inſiſt any longer upon a thing ſo clear; and therefore the true Title of this Letter is that which Holſtenius has in his Collection; Siricius, to our dear Brethren Anyſius, and the other Biſhops of Illyricum. This Letter is no ways unworthy of this Pope as ſome pretend. He does not aſſume to himſelf the Judgment of a Cauſe referr'd to others. This is no ways contrary to the Prerogatives of the Roman Church; on the contrary, this is according to Rule and agreeable to the Canons: This is the Practice and Judgment of the ancient Popes, who had a moſt profound Veneration for the Deciſions of Synods, and who inviolably kept the Laws of the Church. ¶ St. Ambroſe

The Letter 58. is written to Eugenius, ſometime after this Tyrant came into Italy, that's to ſay, in the Year 393.

The Pagans, who had attempted thrice in vain to obtain of Valentinian the Reſtitution of the Goods which belonged to their Temple, addreſs'd this New Emperour with the ſame Petition. He refuſed twice to grant it; but at laſt the great Lords of the Pagans having Petition'd that theſe things might be reſtor'd, he did it; ſaying, That he did not give them to the Temple, but to themſelves for the Services they had done him. St. Ambroſe, who mightily oppos'd all the Petitions of Pagans under Valentinian, ſpeaks with no leſs Boldneſs to the Tyrant Eugenius, than he had done to Valentinian. He remonſtrates to him, That how great ſoever the Power of the Emperour be, 'tis infinitely below that of God, who ſees the bottom of our Hearts, and from whom nothing is hid; That he ought not to grant, for the Importunity of theſe great Lords, any thing prejudicial to Religion; That the Biſhops would not blame him for the Gifts which he had given to the Pagans; That they did not Envy them theſe Goods; but they could not approve of his Authorizing, by this Grant, the Uſe that theſe Pagans would make of it to reſtore their Religious Worſhip; That it was never lawful to contribute directly or indirectly to the Worſhip of Falſe Gods; That in the former Ages the Chriſtians of Antioch dwelling at Jeruſalem, being oblig'd to pay a Tax at Antioch, at the time of the publick Sports, would never give it, but upon Condition that it ſhould not be employed for the Sacrifice of Hercules, but in other Expences neceſſary for the good of the Commonwealth; That if Chriſtian Subjects being forced to obey, thought themſelves obliged to do ſo, a Chriſtian Emperour who was Maſter of his own Will, had much more reaſon to uſe the like precaution.

In the Letter 59. to Sabinus Biſhop of Placentia, St. Ambroſe makes an Encomiaſtick upon St. Paulinus and his Wife, who having ſold their Goods to diſtribute the price of them to the Poor, had taken a Reſolution to retire to Nola. This gives him occaſion to ſhow the Advantages of Solitude and Voluntary Poverty. This Letter was written ſome time before St. Paulinus retir'd to Nola at the beginning of the Year 393.

The 60th. Letter is to Severus; where he ſpeaks of a Prieſt call'd James, who was come from Perſia to retire into Campania, that he might ſerve God more quietly; as alſo of the Troubles and Wars wherewith his own Country was harraſs'd. This Letter has relation to the War of Eugenius in the Year 393, or to that of Maximus in the Year 387.

The Letter 61ſt. to Paternus is about a point of Diſcipline. This Man who had been Lord Treaſurer, as we learn from the Letters of Symmachus, and the 14th. Law de Metallis, had conſulted St. Ambroſe, if he could marry one of his Sons to his Daughter's Daughter, or his Grand-Daughter. St. Ambroſe anſwers him, That he wonders he ſhould ask ſuch a Queſtion of him; That the bare Propoſal of the thing diſcovered that it was forbidden; That the Law of God forbidden the Marriages of Couſin-Germains, does much more ſtrongly imply a Prohibition of this, tho' it was not by name forbidden in the Divine Law; That the Civil Laws forbid it, and that Theodoſius forbad Marriages between Couſin-Germains; That if this Law were diſpens'd with, yet it ought not to Authorize this ſort of Marriages, becauſe a Diſpenſation is only for him that obtains it. The reaſon which he aſ-

St. Ambroſe ledges; That his Son was not related to his Grand-Daughter by the Father's ſide, but only by the Mother's ſide, proves nothing, ſince Marriage was equally forbidden between Brethren, whether they were born of the ſame Father and Mother, or of the ſame Mother and different Fathers. Laſtly, he ſays, That it would be more Advantageous to his Family, that his Son and his Daughter ſhould marry to others, becauſe by this means he ſhould have in his Family Children both by his Son and his Grand-Daugther. The Law of Theodoſius, which he cites, is of the Year 384. and therefore this Letter was written after that Year: 'Tis there ſaid, that Paternus poſſeſs'd a great Office which makes it to be placed in the Year 393. becauſe the Law which we have cited, diſcovers to us, that in this Year he was Lord High Treaſurer, Comes Sacrarum Largitionum: But he might have been ſo before.

The Letter 62 was written by St. Ambroſe to the Emperour Theodoſius, immediately after the Death of the Tyrant Eugenius, who was defeated and kill'd in the Month of September of the Year 394. St Ambroſe retir'd from Milan when he underſtood that Eugenius was coming thither that he might avoid meeting this Tyrant: But aſſoon as he was gone out of Milan, St. Ambroſe returned in the Month of July. Some time after, the Emperour Theodoſius having defeated Eugenius, wrote to St. Ambroſe to return thanks to God for his Victory. This Saint made Anſwer in this Letter, That he would do it with Joy, and that he would offer up in his Name an acceptable Sacrifice to God; he praiſes the Piety of this Emperour, who did not ſeek after the Pomps of a vain Triumph, but deſired the Biſhops to offer up Sacrifices of Thankſgiving. He ſignifies to him, That he had ſatisfied his deſire; That he had carried his Letter to the Altar, and laid it upon the Holy Table, That he held it in his Hand while he was offering Sacrifice; "To the end, ſays he, "that your Faith might be "made known by my Mouth, and that your Majeſties Letter might ſerve as Matter for an Epiſco-"pal Oblation. Afterwards he praiſes God for having plac'd a Prince upon the Throne who ſur-"paſs'd the greateſt Princes in Glory, and the Holieſt Biſhops in Humility. "What can be wiſh'd for, "what can be deſired more, ſays St. Ambroſe to him? You poſſeſs, Sir, all Vertues, you are a Prince, "of ſingular Piety and Clemency. All that can be wiſhed for, is, that God would encreaſe in you "this Piety, and that the Church which rejoyces that Innocent Men live in Peace and Tranquility, "may receive alſo the Conſolation of ſeeing the guilty abſolv'd. Show Favour at leaſt to thoſe "who have not hitherto taken Arms againſt their Prince.

The 63d. Letter addreſs'd to the ſame Emperour, followed quickly after the preceding, wherein St. Ambroſe begs favour for thoſe of Eugenius's Party who retired into the Church after the Death of this Tyrant.

The 64th. is addreſs'd to the Church of Verceilles, which had loſt her Biſhop. This was not Euſebius who died in the Year 370, but Limenius who was preſent in the Year 381. at the Council of Aquileia. If we believe the Acts of St. Gaudentius of Novara, produced by Mombritius and Bollandus upon the 12th. of January, St. Ambroſe a little before his Death made a Journey to Verceilles, upon the Account of ſome Diſſention which was in the Church, which was probably about the Election of a Biſhop; and this makes ſome believe that this Letter was not written till the Year 394. But this conjecture is founded upon a very uncertain Ground; for it ſuppoſes theſe two things which are not well proved: Firſt, That what is related in the Acts of St Gaudentius of Novara is true; Secondly, That the Diviſion which obliged St. Ambroſe to go to Verceilles was about the Election of a Biſhop. It ſeems alſo that St. Ambroſe needed not to have written this Letter if he had been upon the place himſelf. Some have ſaid, That this Letter was not St. Ambroſe's, becauſe that Venice is named in it: But if this Objection be of any force, we muſt alſo for the ſame reaſon reject the Second Anſwer to Symmachus, which is without all Controverſy St. Ambroſe's. This Letter has his Stile and his Air of Writing; he has inſerted into it ſome entire Fragments of his own Commentary upon the Goſpel of St. Luke, and upon Pſalm 119. He exhorts the People and the Clergy, to put an end to the Diviſions which diſtracted them about the Choice of a Biſhop. He admoniſhes them afterwards to beware of harkening to two Men, called Sermatian and Barbatianus, who were gone out of a Monaſtery of Milan to go and lead a licentious Life at Verceilles, where they preached, That no Merit belonged to Abſtinence, nor any peculiar Grace to Virginity; and that it was a folly for any one to Faſt and Mortify himſelf. St. Ambroſe makes a long Digreſſion to refute theſe Errors, and to prove the Uſefulneſs of Abſtinence and Faſting, and the Excellency of Virginity. Afterwards he returns to his Subject, and treats of the Qualities of the Perſon who ought to be choſen for a Biſhop. One of the Principal is, that he has had but one Wife. St. Ambroſe extends this Prohibition to thoſe alſo who had Contracted a Firſt Marriage before their Baptiſm. Thus he underſtands the Paſſage of the Apoſtle St. Paul, and the Cannon of the Council of Nice. There is alſo another Condition obſerved by St. Paul concerning the Qualifications of a Biſhop, That he ſhould not be a Novice, or one lately Inſtructed in the Faith. Becauſe they tranſgreſſed this Rule in the Ordination of St. Ambroſe, he is forced to juſtify himſelf, by ſaying, That he was Ordained againſt his Will. At laſt, he ſays, If great Care ought to be taken in the Choice of a Perſon who is to be plac'd upon any Epiſcopal Throne whatſoever, it was a Matter of the greateſt Importance to place a Perſon of ſingular Merit upon the Epiſcopal Throne at Verceilles, becauſe the Biſhop of this Church was entruſted with the Care of a Monaſtery and a Church, and ſhould joyn the Practice of a Religious Life with the Vertues of a Biſhop, as St. Euſebius did, who was the Firſt that united theſe two things in the Weſt, by ſetting Monaſteries in a City, and governing his Church without renouncing a Monaſtick Life. Here he enlarges upon the Praiſes of this Holy Biſhop, and of Denys of Milan, the Companion of his Baniſhment, and of the troubles he endured for the Defence of the the Faith of the Church; and propoſes the Life of their Diſciples as a Pattern. He concludes with a long Digreſſion, wherein he recommends the Practice of Chriſtian Vertues, and chiefly of Poverty, of Abſtractedneſs from the World, of Retirement, of Patience, of Charity, of Abſtinence, &c. St. Ambroſe I believe that this laſt Part has been ſince added, and that it is a Fragment of ſome Diſcourſe of St. Ambroſe, for it has no relation to, nor connexion with what goes before.

Theſe are all the Letters of St. Ambroſe, of which the Order and Time can be gueſſed at: The others which compoſe the Second Claſs, are without Date, tho' they have prefixed the Figures to theſe as well as to thoſe that went before. The Nine firſt contain Expoſitions upon ſome places of Exodus, of Liviticus, of Deuteronomy, and the Prophet Micah. Theſe were formerly among the Commentaries upon the Holy Scripture. The Four following are upon ſome places of the Epiſtles of St. Paul.

The 78th. addreſs'd to Marcellus, is about an Arbitration which he had made of a Law-Suit that this Biſhop had with his Siſter. St. Ambroſe was nam'd Judge of it, but he choſe rather to make an end of it, to the content of the two Parties, by giving his Siſter the Revenue of the Land in Queſtion during her Life only.

In the 79th. he exhorts his Clergy not to neglect the Functions of their Miniſtry, becauſe of the Pains, the Fatigues, and the Perſecutions they were to endure in the diſcharge of their Duty.

The 80th. 81ſt. 86th. 87th. 88th. 89th. 90th. 91ſt. and 92d. are ſhort Letters about private Affairs.

The 82d. is addreſs'd to a ſick Man call'd Bellicius, who was converted in the heighth of his Diſeaſe, and was now beginning to recover. St. Ambroſe tells him, That God had ſent this Sickneſs to ſave him; That he had ſmitten him with this Infirmity to Cure him by it; That God knowing his inward Thoughts, ſaw that he had good Deſigns, but delayed the Execution of them, and therefore God had ſent him this Sickneſs to ſerve for an Admonition to him; That he had already begun to know the Lord, but he was moreover to receive the Sacraments, by which the World is redeemed, Sins are pardon'd, and Grace is diſtributed. The following Letter is addreſs'd to the ſame ſick Perſon, wherein he compares his Cure to that of the Man born blind. In Letter 84th. and 85th. he diſcourſes of the true Treaſures and the true Riches, and ſhews, that none but the Rich are truly happy.

The Funeral Orations upon Valentinian and Theodoſius are plac'd here after the Letters of St. Ambroſe. They are two admirable Pieces. The firſt was ſpoken in 392. in the preſence of the Siſters of Valentinian. There he praiſes the Vertues of this Prince, and makes no doubt but he was ſaved, tho' he died before he receiv'd Baptiſm, becauſe Faith and a deſire of receiving the Sacrament ſupplied the want of it. He promiſes to pray for him. In the Second he particularly commends the Clemency, the Charity and Humility of Theodoſius, and concludes with comforting his Son Honorius, before whom he ſpoke this Funeral Oration in 395.

It cannot be doubted but St. Ambroſe compos'd Hymns. St. Auſtin in his Book of Confeſſions, B. XII. and in his Book of Muſick, Ch. 9. commends the Hymn at Veſpers, Veni creator omnium, as St. Ambroſe's. He could not be deceiv'd in this Matter; but ſince he has not ſet down the number of thoſe Hymns which St. Ambroſe compos'd, it may be doubted whether all thoſe that go under his name be his. Thoſe for the daily Office appear to be more certainly his than the reſt; to which may be added the Hymns upon the Hexameron. As for the reſt they appear to be in another Stile, and of another Author. 'Tis certain that the Vexilla Regis is none of his.

St. Ambroſe wrote alſo other Books which we have not at preſent. We have already obſerved, That we have not now his Genuine Book of the Sacraments and of Philoſophy, which is many times cited by St. Auſtin. The ſame Saint cites alſo the Commentary of St. Ambroſe upon Iſaiah, in B. IV. to Boniface, Ch. 62. and B. II. againſt Julian. St. Ambroſe alſo mentions it in his Commentary upon St. Luke. We have not now his Inſtruction to Fritigilda, which Paulinus mentions in his Life, nor the Inſtructions to Panſophius.

But if ſome Books of St. Ambroſe have been loſt, it muſt be confeſs'd that ſeveral have been attributed to him which are none of his.

Firſt, There have been put out under his Name a multitude of Sermons, and not one of them his: There are 36 of them printed among thoſe of St. Maximus, 14 in the Appendix to St. Auſtin's Sermons, two of which are in both places. That which was the 64th. is the Tranſlation of a Diſcourſe of St. Baſil upon the words of the Rich-man, I will pull down my Barns. The Expoſition upon Ch. 31ſt. of the Proverbs is the 37. Sermon of St. Auſtin. The Benedictines did not think fit to print theſe, and ſo have only given the Catalogue of them. As for the reſt which are 58 in number, they have publiſh'd them here, but they confeſs that they are none of St. Ambroſe's: And indeed there is not one of them which has his Stile and Air.

Secondly, There have been attributed to St. Ambroſe ſome Treatiſes upon the Scripture, which having no Author that is known, have paſſed under ſeveral Fathers Names. Such is the Diſcourſe of the Dignity of the Humane Nature, which has alſo been attributed to St. Auſtin, under the Title of a Diſcourſe about the Creation of the Firſt Man, which Alcunius cites under the name of Albinus, and which has alſo been inſerted entire into the Book of the Spirit and the Soul. Such is alſo the Diſcourſe of the forbidden Fruit, which is amongſt the Sermons of St. Auſtin. The Diſcourſes upon Elijah and Eliſha are the Sermons of St. Maximus.

The Treatiſe of the 42 Stations or Encampings of the People of Iſrael in the Deſart, belongs to a pretty ancient Author, but it has not the Stile of St. Ambroſe. It uſes the Latin Tranſlation of Origen's Works.

I ſay

I ſay nothing here of a Commentary upon the Epiſtles of St. Paul, which is believed to be Hilary's the Deacon, becauſe I have ſpoken of it in another place. St. Ambroſe

The Commentary upon the Revelation is a very late Author's. He ſpeaks of the Lombards and cites St. Gregory. The name of the Right Author of this Commentary has been found at the end of on Oxford-Manuſcript, where it is attributed to Berengaudus, whom Dionyſius Carthuſianus cites with Bede and Haimo in his Commentary upon Ch. 10. of the Revelation.

To theſe Treatiſes may be added the Harmony of the Evangeliſts, St. Matthew and St. Luke concerning the Genealogy of Jeſus Chriſt; for it is not St. Ambroſe's, becauſe this Author follows the Hypotheſis of Africanus, which St. Ambroſe does not.

Thirdly, There are many Treatiſes upon different Subjects attributed to St. Ambroſe, whoſe true Authors have been diſcover'd.

The Treatiſe upon the Creed, which is better entituled in the Manuſcripts, a Treatiſe of The Trinity and the Reſurrection, is a Collection of Paſſages out of many Fathers. They have taken the liberty in the Roman Edition to make abundance of Additions and Alterations in it. The Benedictines will publiſh it juſt as it is in the Manuſcripts.

The Book of the Divinity of the Son is probably Gregory's of Bætica, as we proved, when we gave an account of the Works of St. Gregory Nazianzen.

The Treatiſe entituled of the Myſteries of Eaſter, is a Sermon which is improperly divided into Chapters. It has rather the Stile of St. Maximus than of St. Ambroſe.

The Book of the Sacerdotal Dignity is Gerbertus's, under whoſe Name it has been publiſhed by Mabillon in his Analecta, where 'tis Entituled A Paſtoral Book.

The Diſcourſe to a Virgin conſecrated to God has a quite different Stile from that of St. Ambroſe.

The Book of the Vocation of the Gentiles and the Epiſtle to Demetrias, are certainly none of St. Ambroſe's, ſince they were written ſince the Birth of the Pelagian Hereſy. We ſhall afterwards examine to whom they ought to be attributed.

The 29th Letter to Florianus is of a Stile much below St. Ambroſe's, and therefore it is rejected in the Appendix. 'Tis yet more Evident, that the 34th. which is a Relation of the Martyrdom of St. Agnes, is the Work of an Impoſter, who having written a Hiſtory as he himſelf pleas'd, added at the end, that it is St. Ambroſe's, who having found theſe Memoirs in ſome Divine Books, wrote them for the Edification of the Church and addreſs'd them to ſome Virgins. The Stile of this Relation ſhows the Author to be a Lyar, and diſcovers the Impoſture.

The 35th. Letter about the Invention of the Reliques of St. Gervaſius and St. Protaſius relates this Event after quite another manner than St. Ambroſe does in his Genuine Works, and is written in a Stile perfectly different from this Father's. The ſame may be ſaid of the 55th. Letter concerning the Invention of the Reliques of St. Vitalis and St. Agricola, which ends with this Form, Regnante Chriſto domino Noſtro, &c. which belongs to the Ages much later than St. Ambroſe.

The Two Prayers for preparation to the Euchariſt, have nothing at all of St. Ambroſe's Stile. There are found in ſome Editions, many other Meditaions and Prayers of the ſame nature, but none of them have any thing of his Genius.

The Book of the Combate between Vertues and Vices, which is alſo attributed to St. Auſtin and St. Leo, belongs to Ambroſius Autpertus, as is obſerved in the Preface to this Work, which is in the Appendix to the Sixth Book of the New Edition of St. Auſtin, p. 219.

The Expoſition of Faith is an Abridgment of St. Ambroſe's Book addreſs'd to Gratian.

The Book of the Holy Spirit is a fragment of ſome more conſiderable Treatiſes written by a Latin Author ancient enough, but different from St. Ambroſe.

The Book of Penance belongs to one Victor, as the laſt Words prove invincibly, nulla Capiaris oblivione Victoris. The very name of Victor is at the beginning of two ancient Manuſcripts. We ſhall enquire afterwards, whether it ought to be aſcribed to Victor Cartennenſis, or to Victor Tunonenſis.

'Tis not neceſſary to adverti'e the Readers that the Book of the Life and Manners of the Brachmans, is a ridiculous Diſcourſe, and unworthy of St. Ambroſe, or any Man of Senſe.

The Stile of St. Ambroſe is not always equally lofty, for he proportions it, as St Auſtin obſerves, to the things of which he treats. Sometimes it is very careleſs, ſometimes 'tis very labour'd, but 'tis always grave, ſerious and noble; it is ſhort, ſententious, and full of ſtrokes of Wit. The Books that he took pains about, are very ſmart, exact and ingenious, and adorned with Figures and Flowers of Rhetorick. His other Books, tho' they are leſs poliſh'd, yet have their ſweetneſs and ſmoothneſs. His words are choice enough, and his Expreſſions noble. He deverſifies his Matter with a wonderful variety of Thoughts and Words. He is ingenious at finding out the moſt natural and agreeable Turns of Wit. He does not raiſe great Paſſions, but he diverts and inſtructs his Reader, and inſinuates himſelf into his Mind and Heart by ſoft and pleaſant Strains. Neither does his Diſcourſe want ſtrength, and he urges a thing vigorouſly, when there is occaſion. As he joined together in the conduct of his Life a wonderful Generoſity and Inflexibility with all poſible prudence and moderation, ſo he knew how to temper in his Diſcourſes the boldneſs and authority of a Biſhop, with an Air of ſweetneſs and charity. We have already declared, what Judgment is to be made of his Commentaries upon the Scriptures, and of his dogmatical Books. His Books of Morality are certainly the moſt excellent of all his Works, and thoſe he took moſt pains about. There are ſome of his Letters which may paſs for Maſters-peices in their kind, particularly thoſe which are written to the Emperours. He who wrote them, plainly diſcovers that he was a Man brought up at Court, who has ſuch a free a free Air and eaſie Way as is not acquired but by ſeeing the World. The Conduct and Policy which he obſerved in the greateſt part of his Actions and Diſcourſes, diſcover likewiſe that he had been accuſtomed in his younger Years to manage great Affairs, and that he had a Genius very fit for them. He was but moderately learned, chiefly in Eccleſiaſtical Matters. But being born in an Age of great light, and having great ſharpneſs of Wit, and a wonderful facility of Speaking, and labouring continually in reading the Fathers that went before him, he became able to diſcharge with honour all the Offices of his Miniſtry, and to fill up the place which he poſſeſs'd to his Credit. St. Ambroſe

The Firſt Edition of the Works of St. Ambroſe, is that which Maffeius Venia an Auguſtin Monk, dedicated to the General of his Order, Ambroſius Coranus. The Time and Place where it was printed is not ſet down. The Second was made at Milan by the care of a Prieſt call'd Cribellius in 1490. Theſe Two Editions contain but a few Treatiſes.

[Cornelius à Brughem in his Catalogue of Books, printed before the Year 1500. mentions an Edition of St. Ambroſe's Epiſtles in 1480. in fol. Of the Generation of John. at Augsbourg 1476. Of the Flowers of Wiſdom, Homilies: Venice 1488. They ſeem by their Titles to be Spurious.

Two Years after, Amerbachius Printer at Baſle, made another Edition of the Works of St. Ambroſe much larger, but leſs correct. This Edition was reprinted in 1606, by Johannes Petri Printer alſo at Baſle, who added only a great Index.

Eraſmus undertook a New Edition of the Works of St. Ambroſe, which he divided into Four Tomes. The Firſt contains the Moral Works; The Second the Polemical; The Third the Orations, Epiſtles and Sermons; and the Laſt, the Commentaries upon the Old and New Teſtament. Theſe Four Tomes make Two Volumes. This Edition was many times reprinted at Baſle, and once at Paris by Chevallon, in 1529.

The Edition of Eraſmus being full of Faults, Johannes Coſterius a Regular Canon of Louvain, took the Pains to Correct the Text of St. Ambroſe by many Manuſcripts, and cauſed it to be printed anew at Baſle, in 1555, by Epiſcopius.

At laſt, Gillotius having gathered together a much greater Number of Manuſcripts, cauſed the Works of St. Ambroſe to be Printed at Paris by Merlinus, in the Year 1568. This Edition, tho' more correct than all the reſt, was little minded, and in a manner wholly Eclipſed, by the Reputation of the Roman Edition, which followed ſoon after. Cardinal Montaltus, who was afterwards Sixtus V. deſiring to purchaſe Reputation among Learned Men, undertook it while he was but a Cordelier and General of his Order, and cauſed Four Volumes of it to be publiſhed when he was Cardinal, in 1579. 1580, 1581, and 1582, which he Dedicated to Gregory XIII.

The 5th and 6th appeared under the Pontificate of Sixtus V. in 1585, and 1587.

This Edition was after that the Pattern and Original which was follow'd in the Edition at Paris, begun in 1586, and in all the other following Editions which are very numerous. 'Twas believ'd that a Book publiſh'd with ſo much oſtentation, valued ſo much by the Publiſher, printed in ſo fine a Character, and with ſo much care, muſt needs be very correct and perfect; and yet this Edition has many eſſential Defects which disfigure it. The firſt and moſt conſiderable is, that the Roman Correctors took the liberty to change, cut off, and add what they thought fit, tho' they had no ground to do ſo from the authority of any Manuſcript. They carried it ſo far, as that they did not content themſelves with changing thoſe Terms which appear'd to them harſh, and ſubſtitute others according to their fancy, but they alſo blotted out or added whole Lines and Periods, which made a perfectly new Sence, and altogether different from the Authors, as may be ſeen by comparing the ancient Editions and the laſt, with this Roman Edition. Secondly, They have inſerted into the Commentaries the whole Text of the ſacred Books, which hinders the reading the Commentary of St. Ambroſe without interruption. Thirdly, The Order which they have obſerv'd in ranging the Books is not natural. They have placed ſome Letters amongſt the Treatiſes upon the Holy Scripture, they have ſeparated Books that ought to follow one upon another, as the complaints of Job and David, whereof one is placed in the firſt Tome, and the other in the Second; they have joined together ſome Treatiſes which ſhould be ſeparated; they have rank'd the Letters in a very inconvenient Order. In a word, by too much refining they have corrupted all, as Faber ſays in a Letter to Fronto Ducæus, where he obſerves the Faults of the Roman Edition of St. Ambroſe. " I have found, ſays he to him, that nimis " fuere ingenioſi in alieno opere, as in the Books De interpellatione ſanctorum Job & David, which they " have ſeparated, and placed the one in the Firſt Tome, and the other in the Second, to do which they " were forc'd, quædam interpolare minime probabili exemplo. They have done the ſame in priore Apologia David; and in the Second that which is yet worſe; for becauſe it is ſaid in the 8th Ch. that the " Hiſtory of David with Bathſhebah is not a Hiſtory (which ſhows that this Book is none of St. Am- " broſe's, but ſome Origeniſts, who allegorizes almoſt all the Bible, as alſo it ſeems by the reading of " it, to be collected and made up out of Two or Three Sermons) they have taken away Five or Six " Lines, which are found in all the ancient Editions. Fourthly, they have made a particular Claſs of ſome ſuppoſititious Books, and yet they have left a great number of them amongſt St. Ambroſe's Genuine Works. There are ſome of them whoſe Forgery is ſo manifeſt, that they cannot be pardoned, ſuch as the Books de Arbore interdicta, de dignitate Hominis, de Vocatione Gentium, the Epiſtle ad Demetriadem in Symbolum Apoſtolorum, and many others. They muſt be very ignorant who believed that theſe Books were written by St. Ambroſe, and very impudent who left them among his Genuine Works, when they had a Deſign to make a diſtinct Claſs of thoſe that were ſuppoſititious.

St. Ambroſe

In ſhort, the Authors of this Edition have made no Notes, or mark'd in the Margin any different Readings; they have only added at the end the Theological and Scholaſtical diſſertations of one Ferdinand Wellofillus, which are a Collection of common Places and Paſſages of the Fathers upon different Queſtions, which are of no uſe at all for underſtanding the Text of St. Ambroſe.

Now to commend the Edition of the Benedictines, I need only ſay that they have avoided all the Faults of the Roman Edition: For Firſt, they preſcrib'd it to themſelves as an inviolable Law, that they would put nothing into the Text, which ſhould not be approved by the authority of one or more Manuſcripts, and they have chang'd nothing without acquainting us with the Manuſcript upon whoſe authority they did it. Secondly, They have taken out the Text of the Bible, and left the Commentary of St. Ambroſe continued after the ſame manner as he compos'd it, excepting only the diſtinction of Chapters, which is a great eaſe to the Reader. Thirdly, The Order which they obſerved in ranging the Books is plain and natural. Beſides this, they have noted the Chronology of each Diſcourſe, and rang'd the Letters according to the order of their Dates. Fourthly, They have not placed any Book that is manifeſtly ſuppoſititious among thoſe that are Genuine. They have only left among them the Second Apology of David, and the Books of the Sacraments, becauſe many learned Men believe them ſtill to be St. Ambroſe's, tho' it is very probable that they are not. Laſtly, They have prefix'd to every Chapter moſt uſeful Arguments, wherein they diſcover the time of each Work, and give the Contents of it. They have alſo placed at the bottom of the Pages, ſuch Notes as contain not only the different Readings of the Manuſcripts, but alſo very uſeful explications of difficult places in the Text, whoſe Sence they have diſcovered by the moſt diligent Enquiries with all poſſible exactneſs, without diverting to Queſtions which are of no uſe for underſtanding the Text of their Author. All which give us occaſion to ſay, That this Edition of the Works of St. Ambroſe is as perfect as it can be, and comes no ways ſhort of the late Edition of St. Auſtin.

St. EPIPHANIUS.

St. Epiphanius.

ST. EPIPHANIUS was born about the Year 332, in a Village of Paleſtine, near the City of Eleutheropolis, and paſs'd his Youth in the Monaſtick Diſcipline with St. Hilarion, Heſychius, and other Monks of Paleſtine. He tells us (Hereſy 26.) that he was like to have been ſurprized by the Hereticks called Gnoſticks, but God of his mercy preſerved him. He was choſen afterwards about the Year 366. Biſhop of Salamis, the Metropolis of the Iſle of Cyprus. In this place he acquired very great Reputation for his Ability and Piety; and happy had it been for him if he had not been engaged towards the latter end of his Life in the Diſpute of St. Jerom and Theophilus againſt the Origeniſts, which diſturbed his Repoſe, and created him a great deal of trouble. This Diſpute begun in the Year 391, between St. Epiphanius and John of Jeruſalem. He accus'd this John of maintaining the Errors of Origen, and going into Paleſtine, he Order'd Paulinianus, the Brother of St. Jerom, Deacon and Prieſt, in a Monaſtery which was not under his Juriſdiction. John of Jeruſalem complained immediately of this Action of Epiphanius, which was contrary to the Canons and the Diſcipline of the Church. St. Epiphanius maintains what he had done in a Letter which he wrote to John of Jeruſalem, produced by St. Jerom. This Conteſt farther exaſperated their Minds, which were already very much embitter'd upon the Subject of Origen; both the one and the other endeavour to engage Theophilus of Alexandria on their ſide. This Biſhop, who ſeem'd at firſt to favour the Party of John of Jeruſalem, at laſt declared againſt Origen, condemned his Books in a Council held in 399, and perſecuted all the Monks that were ſuſpected to favour his Memory. Theſe Monks being perſecuted, withdrew to Conſtantinople, where they were well enough received by St. John Chryſoſtom: Which ſo enraged Theophilus, that from that time he conceived a Mortal hatred againſt St. Chryſoſtom, as plainly appeared by his following Actions. Nevertheleſs Theophilus deſiring to ſtrengthen his Party, acquainted St. Epiphanius with what he had done againſt Origen, and ſollicited him to do the ſame thing. This Saint who had a great averſion to this Author, aſſembled a Council in the Year 401, in the Iſle of Cyprus, wherein he caus'd the Reading of Origen's Books to be condemned, and wrote to St. Chryſoſtom to exhort him to do the ſame thing: But he not approving of this Propoſition, St. Epiphanius came himſelf to Conſtantinople, by the perſwaſion of Theophilus, to cauſe the Decree of the Council of Cyprus to be put in execution there. Socrates and Sozomen tell us, That before he entered into the City, he Ordain'd a Deacon in a Church depending upon the Juriſdiction of Conſtantinople. Cardinal Baronius thinks that theſe two Hiſtorians are miſtaken, and that the Ordination of Paulinianus made by Epiphanius in Paleſtine, in a place depending upon John of Jeruſalem, gave them occaſion to think, that St. Epiphanius had ordained a Deacon in the Dioceſs of St. John Chryſoſtom. Howſoever this be, St. Epiphanius being come to Conſtantinople, would not hold communion with St. Chryſoſtom, and alſo did all that lay in his power to procure from the Biſhops that were then at Conſtantinople, an approbation of the Sentence of the Cyprian Council againſt Origen; but he found but very few willing to Sign the Condemnation of one that died in the Communion of the Church, upon ſo ſlight Grounds, and others refus'd to approve his Sentence. St. Epiphanius not being able to compaſs his Deſign by theſe means, reſolved to be preſent the next day in the Church of the Apoſtles, and there with a loud Voice, before all the People, to condemn the Books of Origen, and all thoſe who defended them. But when he was in the Church, St. Chryſoſtom advertiz'd him by his Deacon Serapion, that he he went about a thing that was againſt the Eccleſiaſtical Laws, and which would expoſe him to great danger, for it was to be feared, that the People would make ſome Sedition, of which he himſelf being the Author could could not complain, after he had been forewarn'd of it. This conſideration put a ſtop to St. Epiphanius's undertaking, who was ſo tranſported againſt Origen, that when the Empreſs Eudoxia had recommended to his Prayers the younger Theodoſius, who was ſeized with a dangerous Sickneſs, he caus'd this to be told her for an anſwer, That the Prince her Son ſhould not die, provided ſhe would ſhun the converſation of Dioſcorus and the other Defenders of Origen. The Empreſs being ſurprized with this Anſwer, which ſhe did not expect, ordered him to be told, That if God would take away her Son, ſhe would ſubmit to his Will, That it was in his power to take him away as he had given him to her, but it was not in the power of St. Epiphanius to raiſe him again from the dead, ſince he ſuffered his Archdeacon to die a little while ago. The heat of St. Epiphanius was a little abated, after he had ſpoken to Ammonius and his Companions, whom Theophilus had driven away for Origeniſm, for thoſe Monks gave him to underſtand that they maintain'd no heretical Doctrine, and that he had condemned them with too much precipitation. Whereupon he departed immediately to return to Cyprus, and 'tis ſaid, that being ready to embark, he told the Biſhops that conducted him to the Ship. I leave you the City, the Palace, and the Theatre. He died by the way, or ſoon after his Return in 402, or 403. St. Epiphanius.

The Books of St. Epiphanius, are Firſt of all his great Work of Hereſies, entituled, Παναρειον or Κιβώτον, that's to ſay, an Apothecary's-Shop, or Repoſitory of Remedies, which is divided into three Parts.

The firſt contains the Hereſies before Jeſus Chriſt, which amount to 46; The Second contains 23 of them, and the third eleven of them, ſo that this Book contains in all the Hiſtory of 80 Sects or Hereſies, the Catalogue of which may be ſeen.

The Letter written to two Monks ſerves for a Preface to the whole Work, and for an Anſwer to a preceeding Letter of thoſe two Monks, wherein they had deſired St. Epiphanius to ſet down in writing what he knew concerning Hereſies. He ſeems to have begun this Book in the Year 374, and ended it about the Year 376. In it he not only gives an Account of the Hiſtory, and the Errors of the Sects and Hereſies he writes about, but he alſo refutes them as well as he could, and employs one part of his Diſcourſe in eſtabliſhing the Doctrine of the Church.

The Second Work of St. Epiphanius is his Anchoratus, ſo called, becauſe it is a ſort of an Anchor to which the Faithful may adhere. In it he explains the Doctrine of the Church concerning the Myſtery of the Trinity; he proves the Reſurrection, and refutes the Errors of the Pagans, the Manichees, Sabellians and Arians. This Book was compos'd for the Chriſtians of Pamphylia before the foregoing Book, as appears by the Preface, where it is noted, that he wrote it in the 10th Year of the Emperour Valens, which is the Year 373.

After this Book followed his Anacephalæſis, or Recapitulation, which is an Abridgment of his great Book of Hereſies.

In the Treatiſe of Weights and Meaſures, having explained the ſignification of the different Notes that are to be found in the Greek Bibles, he gives an Account of the Weights, the Meaſures, and the Money of the Jews, and other Nations. In this Book he gives a Catalogue of the Canonical Books of the Old Teſtament, according to the Canon of the Jews, which comprehends the Books of Ruth and Eſther, and he writes the Hiſtory of the Greek Verſions of the Text of the Bible. He is of Opinion, that the Lxx Interpreters tranſlated all the Books of the Bible, and that they made this Verſion in ſeparate Cells, being all inſpir'd of God to compoſe it after the ſame manner. There is much Learning in this Treatiſe.

The Phyſiologus is a Treatiſe of a very particular Deſign, wherein he relates the true or falſe Properties of many Animals, and draws from them ſome Moral Reflections, good and bad, as well as he could.

The Treatiſe of the Twelve precious Stones, which were upon the Pontifical Garments of the High-Prieſt of the Jews, is an Hiſtorical Explication of the Names, the Figures and Properties of thoſe precious Stones. This Book has been cited by St. Jerom, in his Epiſtle 288 to Fabiola, and Anaſtaſius has made an Abridgment of it, which goes all under the Name of St. Epiphanius.

The Book of the Life and Death of the Prophets, is a Collection of an infinite Number of Fables and Trifles, which cannot be attributed to St. Epiphanius, without making him paſs for an Enthuſiaſt.

If we believe Petavius, the Nine Sermons, and the Treatiſe of the Myſteries of Numbers, which bear the Name of St. Epiphanius, are not this Biſhop's of Salamis, but ſome other Biſhops who had the ſame Name, as may be diſcerned by the Stile, and other Marks. Tho' I cannot perceive that theſe Books are more unworthy of St. Epiphanius than the Phyſiologus, neither do I find ſo great a difference in the Stile.

The Letter to John of Jeruſalem, tranſlated by St. Jerom, is made up of two Parts.

The firſt is about the Difference which he had with this Biſhop about the Ordination of Paulinianus, and concerning Origeniſm.

The Second contains a particular Matter of Fact, which St. Epiphanius relates in theſe Words: "When I entred into the Church of a Village of Paleſtine, called Anablatha, I found there a Cur"tain hanging over the Door, whereon was painted an Image like that of Jeſus Chriſt, or ſome
"Saint, (for I do not remember whoſe Picture it was, ſays he): But ſeeing in the Church of Chriſt
"the Image of a Man, contrary to the Authority of Holy Scripture, I tore it, and gave Order to the "Church-Wardens, to bury ſome dead body in this Curtain, and when they anſwer'd me in a mur-
"muring way, that if I would tear this Curtain, I ſhould give them another, I promiſed to do it,
"and now I perform my Promiſe.

The

St. Epiphanius.

The Firſt Part of this Letter is acknowledged by all the World as a Genuine Piece, but Baronius, Bellarmin, and ſome others are of Opinion, that this Second is ſuppoſititious. They alledge many conjectures to prove it, but I find only three that have any probability.

The Firſt is, That this Letter ſeems to be finiſhed before the Relation of this Hiſtory.

The Second is, Becauſe St. Epiphanius condemns in it the Uſe of Images as a thing contrary to the Authority of the Holy Scripture, and the practice of his own time.

The Third, Becauſe St. Jerom making an Extract out of this Letter in his Epiſtle to Pammachius, ſays nothing concerning this Hiſtory. Theſe Reaſons, however, appear not to me ſtrong enough to make me abſolutely reject this Letter. For firſt, altho' what concerns the principal Subject of the Letter was ended before the Second Part, yet it cannot be proved that the Letter was perfectly finiſh'd: And St. Epiphanius being to write of this particular Matter of Fact, could not do it, before he had made an end of the principal Affair, for which he wrote; beſides, no Man can ſay, that this Letter was finiſhed before theſe Words which are at the end of all, I wiſh that God may have you in his Holy keeping; Secondly, It is very poſſible that the Uſe of Images, which had been very rare in the firſt Three Ages of the Church, was not yet eſtabliſhed in Palæſtine and Cyprus, and that St. Epiphanius, who was a plain zealous Man, thought it was dangerous to introduce it, and that he alſo ſpoke in too rigid a manner againſt this Cuſtom. Laſtly, Tho' St. Jerom has tranſlated this whole Letter, yet he cites no part of it in his Apology to Pammachius, but thoſe places which were to his purpoſe, neither does he recite the whole Firſt Part, and we muſt not wonder, that he ſays nothing of the Second, ſince it did no way concern the Conteſt which he had with John of Jeruſalem. Moreover, this Second Part has the ſame Stile with the Firſt, and it agrees well enough with what St. Epiphanius ſays in Hereſy 27th. It is cited by the Author of the Caroline Books, B. IV. Ch. 25. and 'tis ſaid in the 7th Council, Art. 6. Tome 5. that the Iconoclaſts alledg'd, St. Epiphanius was of Opinion that Images ſhould be taken away, which cannot be meant of any other place but of the Second Part of this Letter. Thus tho' it be true, as appears by the Teſtimony of Gregory Nyſſen, in his Panegyrick upon Theodorus, and in his Treatiſe of the Divinity of the Son and the Holy Spirit, that from that time there were Pictures in ſome Churches, which repreſented the Hiſtories of Scripture, and of the Actions of Saints and Martyrs, yet it cannot be ſaid, that this Cuſtom was general; and it muſt be confeſs'd that St. Epiphanius diſapproved it, tho' without reaſon, and that he was miſtaken in ſaying, that it did not agree with the Holy Scripture: For I believe that it would be contrary to the Candor and Sincerity that Religion requires of us, to attempt to give another Sence to his Words.

Laſt of all, we have a Letter of St. Epiphanius written to Diodorus of Tarſus, related by Facundus in Ch. 3. of his IVth B. which is a kind of a Preface to the Book of the Precious Stones in the Garment of the Jewiſh High-Prieſt, written by St. Epiphanius at the requeſt of this Biſhop.

I ſhall not ſtay to give an Abrigment of St. Epiphanius's Treatiſe of Hereſies, which would be an uſeleſs and troubleſome Buſineſs: I ſhall content my ſelf with producing in ſhort the chief Dogmes, which he eſtabliſhes contrary to the Errors of the Hereticks.

Firſt, He proves the Unity of God againſt the Pagans, againſt the Valentinians, the Marcionites and the Manichees. He eſtabliſhes his Immenſity, his Almighty Power, his Infinite Greatneſs, his Spirituality, and his other Attributes, by refuting the Hereticks who believ'd the contrary. He proves the Myſtery of the Trinity, the Divinity of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, in many places, and chiefly in Hereſies 62, 69, 71, 74, and in his Anchoratus.

In Hereſ. 23 and 65, he ſhows that God created the World and the Angels.

He endeavours to explain in Hereſ. 70. in what Sence Man is created after the Image of God.

In Hereſ. 24 and 36. he ſhows that Sin is not a Subſtance, and that God is not the Author of it.

He explains the Myſtery of the Incarnation in Hereſ. 77, 30, 69. and ſhews that Jeſus Chriſt was one Perſon only, compos'd of the Divine and Humane Nature.

He ſhows in Hereſ. 77. that the two Natures were not confounded after their Union, and that they kept their own Properties.

He proves the Reſurrection in Hereſ. 42 and 64. and in the Anchoratus, where he maintains, That the ſame Fleſh which we now have ſhall be raiſed again.

He holds in Hereſ. 24 and 46. that Jeſus Chriſt deſcended into Hell, to ſave thoſe that had lived well and believed in God.

He teaches that the Soul is immortal and Spiritual, and that it partakes of Happineſs after Death. See what he ſays about this in Hereſ. 75.

In Hereſ. 8. he ſhows, that the Sacraments of the New Law are more Excellent and more Efficacious than thoſe of the Old.

In his Anchoratus he ſpeaks of Faith as a Diſpoſition neceſſary to the receiving of Baptiſm. Tho' he ſpeaks obſcurely enough of the Euchariſt in his Anchoratus, yet he ſays enough of it to make us underſtand, that it is truly the Body of Jeſus Chriſt, and that the words of his Inſtitution are to be underſtood according to the Letter, and without any Figure or Metaphor.

He acknowledges Free-will in Hereſ. 16. and yet he admits the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt.

In Hereſ. 30. he ſpeaks of the wonderful Effects of the Sign of the Croſs.

He proves the neceſſity of Eccleſiaſtical Traditions in many places, and chiefly in Hereſ. 69, 51, and 57. He ſhows the neceſſity and uſefulneſs of Faſting, in the Hereſ. 33, 75, and 80. There he obſerves. That the Chriſtians faſted during Lent, and every Wedneſday and Friday in the Year, except after Eaſter until Whitſunday. He ſuppoſes that theſe Feaſts are of Apoſtolical Tradition, and that that we are obliged to observe them, and that we must abstain from Meat in the time of a Fast: He says, that in the last Week of Lent, nothing but plain Meats were eaten, that's to say, Bread and Water, and that many pass'd the two or three last Days without eating any thing. St. Epiphanius.

In Heref. 76. he establishes the distinction between Bishops and Priests.

He ranks in the Order of the Clergy, Bishops, Priests, Deacons, and Sub-Deacons. The other Ministers, according to him, do not partake of Holy Orders.

These inferiour Ministers are the Readers, Deaconesses, Exorcists, Interpreters, Diggers and Porters.

He observes in Heref. 75. and at the end of Heref. 80. that the Assemblies of People in the Church were chiefly made on Wednesday, Friday, and Sunday, and also in some places on Saturday: That Baptism and the Celebration of the Eucharist were attended with such Ceremonies as were prescribed either by the Gospel, or by the Tradition of the Apostles. That Mattins were sung, and that Christians kneeled at their Prayers Day and Night. That Hereticks, Idolaters, and all those that were guilty of enormous Crimes, were excommunicated, and their Oblations not received.

He proves Prayers for the Dead in Heref. 76. and refutes Aëtius who said the contrary.

He says, in Heref. 78. that the Saints enjoy eternal Happiness, and that we ought to honour them.

As to the honour due to the Virgin, he keeps a middle way between the Antidicomarianites, who dishonoured her, by saying, That she had other Children besides Jesus Christ, and the Collyridians who ador'd her. He says, That we must honour her, but we must not adore her, nor give her superstitious Worship. Read the Heresies 78 and 79: where he testifies, that there is nothing certainly known concerning her Death, nor about the place where her Body is: yet it seems that his Piety induces him to believe that she never died, but he does not deliver this Opinion as a certain Truth.

He praises Virginity in Heref. 4, 8, 5, 61, and 80. but he does not condemn Marriage, nor yet second Marriages. There he declares plainly, that the Church does not admit any to Holy Orders, but such as will observe Celibacy, and that she excludes Bigamists.

And yet he confesses in Heref. 59. that there are still some place, where the Deacons and Subdeacons do not observe Celibacy; but he adds, That this is done upon sufferance, because of the weakness of Men, or the multitude of People. Lastly, he says, That 'tis a great sin to violate the Vow of Virginity.

He says in Heref. 59. That a Husband, who having divorced his Wife for Adultery or some other Crime, marries another, is free from Sin, according to the Authority of Scripture; and that he is no-wise unworthy of Eternal Life, and that he ought to be permitted to continue in the Church.

He would not have Women undertake any Ecclesiastical Function; and he proves in Heref. 79 That this ought not to be suffered. In short, If one would have an abridgment of the Doctrine, the Discipline, and the Morality of St. Epiphanius's time, he needs do no more but read what St. Epiphanius has said of them at the end of his Book about Heresies, where he has given the sum of them, so as to serve for an Antidote against all the Errors of Hereticks.

Any one that gives the least attention to the Doctrine of Epiphanius, which we have now represented, may easily perceive, that there is scarce any Author, who has made more Observations concerning the Doctrine and Discipline of the ancient Church, contrary to the Errors and Disorders of the Innovators of our Times: Yet they have endeavoured to find in his Writings part of their Errors, and have had the boldness to impute to us the Heresies which he refutes. This Scultetus has done with so much fraud, that 'tis impossible to read what he says about it, without conceiving an indignation against so unjust a procedure. He says First, That St. Epiphanius rejected the Invocation of Saints and the Virgin, in Heref. 79. but this is a meer Cheat. St. Epiphanius indeed there condemns those who adored the Virgin, and gave her that Soveraign Worship which is due to God only: He maintains that the Church neither adores the Virgin nor the Saints, although she has an Honour and due Respect for them. And do not we say the same thing? And can any other Doctrine be imputed to us, without a palpable Calumny? But, says Scultetus, St. Epiphanius says, in Heref. 75. That the Saints were prayed for, and therefore he cannot approve of their Invocation. This Author methinks should not have cited a place which so plainly opposes the Opinions which he maintains, which I shall set down entire. " As to what concerns the custom of reciting the Names of the Dead, what can " there be more useful and more reasonable? This is, First of all, to perswade those that are present " that the Souls of the Dead are still alive, and that they are not annihilated. Secondly, To make us " apprehend that there is good hopes of those that are dead. Moreover, Prayers are not only useful to " the Living, but also to the Dead; tho' they do not blot out all their Sins, yet they serve to expiate " some of those which they committed in this Life. We mention Sinners and Righteous Men; Sinners, " to implore the Mercy of God for them; Righteous Men, such as the Fathers, the Patriarchs, the Pro- " phets, the Apostles, the Evangelists, the Martyrs, the Confessors, the Bishops, the Hermites, and " all Christians, that Jesus Christ may be distinguished from all his Creatures, and that we may learn " to give to him the Worship that is due to him only; being perswaded that we ought not to " equal Mortal Men to the Lord, whatsoever Righteousness and Holiness they have. After this he " distinguishes Two Sorts of Saints, those that are on Earth, and those that are in the Heavenly Jeru- " salem; and he adds, that the Church does well to observe a Custom which she has received by Tra- " dition; That the Laws of our Fathers cannot be subverted, nor the Commands of our Mothers de- spised without impiety, according to the Words of Solomon, Hearken, my Son, to the Commands of St. Epiphanius. " your Father, and do not reject the Admonitions of your Mother. Jeſus Chriſt our Father has taught " us his Doctrine by Writing and by Tradition: The Holy Church our Mother has Laws which can- " not be deſtroyed nor abrogated. Nothing is greater nor more admirable than thoſe Laws, and all " thoſe who would oppoſe them, are ſelf-convicted of an Error. Can there be any thing more agree- able to the Doctrine of the Church, or more contrary to the principal Errors of the Innovators! But, ſays Scultetus, theſe Arabian Women who offered Sacrifices to the Virgin, did not believe her Eternal or In- finite. But tho' theſe Women did it, it may be, think ſo, yet they gave her that Worſhip which is due only to a Sovereign and Infinite Being, by offering Sacrifices unto her, and placing all their Religion in doing ſo.

The Second Objection of Scultetus is about the uſe of Images, which St. Epiphanius condemns in his Letter to John of Jeruſalem, and which he ſeems alſo to reject as contrary to the Law of the Goſpel. We have already anſwered this Objection, by ſaying, That indeed St. Epiphanius ſeems to have diſallow'd the uſe of Images, becauſe this Cuſtom was not then eſtabliſhed in his Country: But 'tis certain, and Baillée himſelf does not deny it, that 'twas then eſtabliſh'd in other Churches. Moreo- ver, we muſt not wonder, that St. Epiphanius ſpeaks of it as a Practice contrary to the Goſpel: For 'tis well known, that thoſe who ſpeak againſt Cuſtoms that were not eſtabliſhed in their own time, do ſometimes make uſe of expreſſions too vehement in rejecting them; as for Example, St. Cyprian condemning the practice of thoſe who did not put Water into the Chalice, makes no ſcruple to ſay, that their Cuſtom was contrary to the Law of Jeſus Chriſt. Many other Examples may be brought of this nature, and the Calviniſts themſelves muſt acknowledge, that the ſame is to be ſaid of the Words of St. Epiphanius, ſince they cannot affirm, that the uſe of Images, whereof St. Epiphanius ſpeaks in this place, is contrary to the Goſpel.

[This Excuſe is not defenſible: The New Teſtament is as ſevere againſt Ido- latry, as the Old was, and more, if we conſider upon how much nobler Foundations it is conſtituted. Neither is this only a Matter of Diſcipline; or if it is, yet it is not an indifferent thing. The Church of Rome was very ſenſible of this, when ſhe removed the Second Commandment out of the Catechiſms, by which ſhe orders her People to be inſtructed. If the Abu- ſes occaſioned by placing of Images in Churches, had never been more dangerous than they were in St. Epi- phanius's time, this Plea might have been valid, for thoſe Churches which ſtill deſired to retain them; or if the Church of Rome, in her Offices, Catechiſms, and Directions to her Prieſts, to guide them in their Sermons and Exhortations to the People, had taken all poſſible care to obviate all Objections whatſoever which could have been raiſed, ſhe could then have juſtly urged it. But Mr. Du Pin knows very well, that her conſtant connivance, if not Command, has long ago precluded her from all Pretences of this nature. She knows alſo, that the Laiety in all Countries of the Communion of the Chuch of Rome, where they have not been over-aw'd by a promiſcuous converſation with Proteſtants, have without check paid as groſs Acts of Worſhip to ſenſeleſs Ima- ges of (ſometimes fictitious) Saints, as ever the Heathens of old paid to the Images of Jupiter or Apis; and laſtly he knows, that his Church is in this point wholly inexcuſable, becauſe it has eſtabliſh'd, and ſtill maintains, a Cuſtom not mentioned at leaſt, if not expreſly forbidden in Scripture; unknown to the pureſt Ages of Chriſti- anity, oppoſed as contradictory to the Law of God at its firſt appearance, by Men eminent for Piety and Learn- ing, in the Time when they lived, and received as Saints by the Catholick Church after their Deaths, and abu- ſed by the ignorant People to the baſeſt Idolatry and Superſtition, in all Conntries where-ever it has been allowed.]

The Third thing which Scultetus pretends to find in the Books of St. Epiphanius contrary to the Doctrine of the Church, is the condemnation of the Sacrifice of the Maſs. He endeavours to prove that St. Epiphanius never taught it, beacuſe he ſays, in Hereſ. 55 and 42. That Jeſus Chriſt came to aboliſh the Sacrifices of the Old Law, by one Sacrifice only. The meaneſt Writer of Controverſies would eaſily anſwer this Objection, by ſaying, Firſt, That St. Epiphanius in this place ſpeaks only of the Sacrifices of the Old Law, to which he oppoſes that of Jeſus Chriſt upon the Croſs, and that he does no ways exclude the unbloody Sacrifice of the Euchariſt. Secondly, That the Sacrifice of the Euchariſt, properly ſpeaking, is not different from that upon the Croſs, and that it is always the ſame thing which is offer'd, tho' after a different manner. Thirdly, That St. Epiphanius acknow- ledges, that the Prieſthood of Melchiſedeck, and conſequently the Sacrifice, continued under the New Law.

The Fourth Objection of Scultetus is about Purgatory. He affirms that St. Epiphanius did not own it, becauſe he ſays in Hereſ. 59. That no Man can change his Condition after his death, and that then there is no more room for any one to repent and to merit Glory. But does it follow from this Pro- poſition which all Catholicks acknowledged, that thoſe who died in a State of Damnation could no longer hope for Salvation? Does it follow, ſay I, that thoſe who died in the Guilt of ſome ſmall Sins could not be purified from it after their deaths? All the Catholicks deny this Conſequence, and St. Epiphanius has plainly owned it to be falſe, when he ſays in Hereſ. 75. that Prayers for the Dead could expiate ſome Sins, tho' they could hot blot out great Crimes.

The Fifth Dogm of the Church which Scultetus oppoſes by St. Epiphanius, is the Vow of Con- tinence: But the Paſſages which he alledges, are ſo far from oppoſing it, that they plainly diſcover that it was uſed in the time of this Father, and that the Church puniſh'd thoſe very ſeverely who vio- lated it.

The laſt is about Baptiſm adminiſtred by Women. St. Epiphanius in Hereſ. 76. ſays, that it was not lawful for them to Baptize. Do not we ſay ſo alſo? But does it follow from thence that their doing of it in a caſe of neceſſity is not valid? This is what Scultetus ſhould prove, but it is not the Queſtion of St. Epiphanius.

Theſe

These are the false Consequences which Scultetus urges to oppose the Doctrine of the Church: But he does so grosly calumniate us, by charging upon us the detestable Opinions of some Hereticks, that he must have renounced all kind of Modesty, to affirm such manifest Untruths with so much boldness. St. Epiphanius.

First of all, He accuses us of making Women the Ministers of Baptism, as the Marcionites did. But where is it found that Women do administer Baptism in our Churches? They never do it but in great necessity. And 'tis no Heresy to say, That in this Case all Sorts of Persons may administer it, 'tis no part of the Error of the Marcionites or the Collyridians.

Secondly, He charges us with trusting to Revelations and Miracles, as the Nazarens did. But it is an Error to believe that there have been, and that there may be Revelations? That Man must have no Religion who says the contrary. The Hereticks are to blame for feigning false Miracles, but the Catholicks are not to blame for believing true ones.

Thirdly, He compares Transubstantiation to the Enchantments of Marcus, who having put white Wine into a Glass, made one part of the Liquor appear Red as Blood, another of a Purple colour, and a Third of a Blew. But what Affinity is there between our Holy and Sacred Mysteries, and the Diabolical Actions of these Ministers of Dæmons? What relation has our Doctrine to these Impieties?

The other accusations of Scultetus are no less Calumnious: For do we offer the Sacrifice of the Mass in honour of the Virgin, as the Collyridians did? Do we teach that Concubinate is lawful, as Aëtius did? Do we adore Idols? The Images to which we pay a bare External Respect, are they the Images of Simon and Helena, and other Hereticks? Are they not the Images of Jesus Christ and the Saints, to whose Persons only all our Worship is referred? Do we condemn Marriage and the use of Meats, as Tatian and the Encratites did? Do we believe that the Souls of the Wicked may be delivered out of Hell? In short, Is there any Similitude between all the Errors of the Hereticks related by St. Epiphanius, and the Doctrines of the Church? Do not we believe what the Church believed in his Time? Do not we Practise what she Practis'd? On the contrary, are not they the Innovators of our Time, who take part with the Hereticks of that Time against the Church? Do not they deny with Aëtius the distinction of Bishops and Presbyters? Do not they find fault with Prayers for the Dead, and the Honour which is given to Saints? Do not they condemn the Celibacy of Priests, the Vow of Virginity, the Monastick State, the Ceremonies, the Sign of the Cross the Solemn Prayers? These are the Errors which St. Epiphanius condemns in the Hereticks of his Time, and which he refutes by the Practise and Tradition of the Church And therefore that may justly be charged upon the Sect of Innovators, which Scultetus has unjustly charged upon Us, That their Doctrine is a Garment patched together, and made up of many Pieces, and many Shreds of ancient Heresies.

[Who is most in the right, Scultetus or our Author, will not be hard to judge, to any one who is acquainted with undisguis'd Popery; I say undisguis'd, because Mr. Du Pin goes upon the palliating Principles laid down by the Bishop of Meaux. There is no question but the Seeds of those Corruptions began to spring up in St. Epiphanius's Time, which afterwards grew so high in the Church; yet tho' they honoured the Dead who died in the Lord, and prayed for those who were guilty of lesser Sins, they neither called upon the former, nor believed a middle State for the latter, if St. Epiphanius's Authority be decisive, in those places which are faithfully urged by Scultetus. In the case of Images in Churches, Mr. Du Pin gives it up, because St. Epiphanius says expressly that it was against the Word of God: Contra auctoritatem Scripturæ. In the Matter of the Real Presence our Author and Petavius before him, lay great Stress upon a Passage in the Anchoratus Sect. 57. wherein speaking of the Sacrament as Christ's Body, he says, ὁ γὰρ μὴ πιστεύων εἶναι αὐτὸν ἀληθῶς, ὡς εἶπεν, ἐκπέπτωκε τῆς ζωῆς καὶ τῆς σωτηρίας; He that does not believe it to be the real Body of Christ, as he said himself, is fallen from Grace and Salvation. Now to know the full meaning of St. Epiphanius in these Words, we are to go back to the beginning of Sect. 55. There he raises a dispute of the meaning of Adam's being created after the Image of God, since there is so great disparity between their Natures: And he finds that this cannot be Physically understood, because to be κατ' εἰκόνα, and to be κατὰ φύσιν, are very different things; yet since it said in Scripture, we ought to believe it.

Now to prove this Assertion he urges the Institution of the Lord's Supper: Our Saviour said (says he) of the Bread, This is my Body; and yet it is not like Flesh in the least, so as to resemble Christ's Humane Nature, nor like the invisible Godhead, so as to resemble his Divinity: But because he has said it, we must not dispute it, since if we should dispute it, we should fall away from Grace and Salvation. This Illustration therefore cannot in reason be carried farther then the Original Question, which it was designed to illustrate; wherefore seeing that St. Epiphanius confessed, that when we say, that Man is created after the Image of God, we do not mean that he is created after the Nature of the Invisible, Incomprehensible, and Spiritual God; it is plain that his illustration of the Eucharist is equally figurative as this Expression of Man's Nature, which he is now explaining.

But it is needless to run through all the rest of the Articles here particularly named. St. Epiphanius's Authority is decisive of neither side; if it were, we must believe that divorces are lawful for other Causes besides Adultery, and that such Divorces perfectly dissolve the Marriage Bond; for this was his Opinion, as apperrs from Heref. 59. Sect. 4.]

The Stile of St. Epiphanius is neither beautiful nor lofty, on the contrary, it is plain, low, and mean, it is rude and unpolished; without Coherence and Connexion. He had much Reading and Learning, but no Faculty of discerning, nor exactness of Judgment. He often uses such things for Reasons to refute the Hereticks which are False. He was very Credulous and not very Accurate.

St. Epiphanius.

Accurate. He is miſtaken in many places about very conſiderable Matters in Hiſtory, and gave Credit too lightly to falſe Memoirs, or to uncertain Reports. He had much Zeal and Piety, but little Conduct and Policy.

The Works of St. Epiphanius were printed in Greek at Baſil by Oporinus in the Year 1544. Cornarius's Tranſlation of this Work, had been publiſhed and printed at Baſle by Robertus Ullinterus, in 1533. The ſame Printer cauſed it to be re-printed in 1540, and in 1545. It was alſo re-printed at Paris in 1564, at Baſle in 1560, and in 1578, and at Paris in 1612. with ſome Corrections of Jacobus Billius: The Phyſiologus was publiſhed by Gonſalus Ponce de Leon at Rome, in 1587. and printed afterwards at Antwerp in 1588. The Book of the Lives of the Prophets, was publiſhed in Greek and Latin with the Notes of Zehennerus, and printed at Scheuling in 1612. The Oration concerning the Burial of Jeſus Chriſt, was publiſhed in 1614.

At laſt, Petavius undertook a New Edition of St. Epiphanius, and having found the Verſion of Cornarius very defective, he made a new one, which he printed at Paris in 1622, together with the Greek Text review'd and corrected by two Manuſcripts. This Edition is in Two Volumes in Folio; The Firſt contains the Book of Hereſies; The Second contains the Anchorate, the Recapitulation, and the Book of Weights and Meaſures, of Petavius's Tranſlation, the Phyſiologus, the Book of Precious Stones, and the Homilies, together with the ancient Verſions of his Works, the Letter to John of Jeruſalem, the Life of St. Epiphanius written by Metaphraſtes, and the Animadverſions of Petavius, which are rather Critical and Chronological Diſſertations, than Notes to explain the Text of St. Epiphanius. This Edition was lately re-printed in Germany.

PHILO CARPATHIUS.

Philo Carpathius.

'TIS ſaid in the Life of St. Epiphanius, that this Saint Ordain'd one named Philo, Biſhop of Carpaſus, and that he committed to him the Charge of making Ordinations at Salamis in his abſence. Upon this Ground it has been thought that this Man lived in the time of St. Epiphanius, and that he was Biſhop of the Iſle of Carpathus, which is upon the Coaſt of Aſia, near the Iſle of Crete: There has alſo been attributed to this Philo, a Commentary upon the Canticles. But all theſe Suppoſitions are found to be Falſe: For, Firſt, The Life of St. Epiphanius, which is fill'd with an infinite Number of Fables and Forgeries, was written by a Modern Greek, and has no Authority, and can no more prove that there was a Philo, than that there was a Papius, or an Eudemon, or a Polybius, or a great many others, whom this Fabulous Author has feign'd to embelliſh his Hiſtory. Secondly, He does not ſay, that this Philo was Ordain'd Biſhop of the Iſle of Carpathus, which was not under the Juriſdiction of St. Epiphanius, but of a City call'd Carpaſus, which was in the Iſle of Cyprus, mentioned by Pliny. Now it does not appear that this City ever had a Biſhop. In ſhort, the Commentary upon the Canticles, is the Invention of ſome Modern Greek, which contains many things that may be found word for word in the Commentary of Gregory the Great. And tho' it were true that theſe places were added, as ſome Authors have ſuſpected, we cannot lay much ſtreſs upon an Author ſo little known as he is

Q. JULIUS HILARION.

Q. Julius Hilarion.

THIS Author, of whom the Ancients make no mention, has written a Chronicle, or a Book of the Duration of the World, from the beginning of the World down to the Year 397. which makes it credible that he lived about this time. He ſpeaks of a Treatiſe which he wrote about Eaſter; he believed that the World would be at an end 470 Years after Jeſus Chriſt, and he held the Opinion of the Millenaries, which ſtill confirms his Antiquity. His Treatiſe was firſt publiſhed by Pithæus, and inſerted into the Bibliothecæ Patrum.

OF

OF THE COUNCILS Held in the Fourth AGE of the CHURCH.

Of the Pretended COUNCIL of Sinueſſa.

THIS Council of Sinueſſa would be the firſt Council held in this Century, if the Acts which bear the Name of this Council were Genuine: But it notoriouſly known among all Learned Men, that they are ſuppoſitious, and that the Story on which they are grounded is a Fable, which has no Foundation in Antiquity. It is ſuppos'd in thoſe Acts, That this Council was aſſembled at the beginning of the Fourth Century, upon occaſion of the Fall of the Pope Marcellinus, who had ſacrificed to Idols; That it was held at Sinueſſa in a Grotto; That there were 300 Biſhops preſent at it; That the Pope Marcellinus having confeſs'd his Fault condemned himſelf, and that the Biſhops durſt not depoſe him, till he had pronounced Sentence upon himſelf. None of theſe things have any probability: For, Firſt, This Hiſtory is not founded upon the Teſtimony of any ancient Author: Secondly, St. Auſtin in his Book againſt Petilian, Ch. 16. defends the Innocence of Marcellinus againſt this Donatiſt, who accus'd him of having ſacrificed to Idols; and therefore to maintain the Acts of the Council of Sinueſſa, is to take part with the Donatiſts againſt the Church. 'Tis more probable that they were forg'd by the Donatiſts, to ſupport the Accuſation which they had made againſt this Holy Biſhop without Foundation. Thirdly, What probability is there that 300 Biſhops could be aſſembled in the time of the moſt violent Perſecution that ever the Church ſuffer'd, ſince it was all that Conſtantine could do, to aſſemble a Council ſo numerous, at a time when the Church was flouriſhing, and much farther ſpread. And certainly, if the Catholick Biſhops at the Conference of Carthage could reject the Acts of the Council of Cirtha, by ſaying, that there was no probability that a Council could be aſſembled in the time of Perſecution, tho' this Council was but a Synod of ſome African Biſhops, What may not be ſaid againſt a Synod that is ſuppos'd to conſiſt of 300 Biſhops? Fourthly, The Stile of theſe Acts is barbarous. and contain many things which do not in the leaſt belong to Marcellinus's Age. They make the Pagan High-Prieſt (whom they ridiculouſly call the Pontiff of the Capitol) produce what is ſaid in Holy Scripture of the Adoration of the Wiſe Men, to prove that Incenſe ſhould be offered to Idols. 'Tis ſaid, That 100 Chriſtians run to the Temple of Veſta to ſee Incenſe offered by Marcellinus: Their Names are recited, which are either almoſt all African Names, or ſuch as are ridiculous. 'Tis ſaid that 72 were choſen out of them to be Witneſſes of this Pope's Sacriledge. The ſynodical Part of theſe Acts is no leſs contrary to the Diſcipline of that time, than what is ſaid of the Fall of Marcellinus is contrary to the Hiſtory. 'Tis ſaid, That Marcellinus at firſt denied his Fault; That the Synod declared to him he ſhould be his own Judge; that the Biſhops durſt not judge him, becauſe it was not lawful for any body to judge the Firſt See. I ſay nothing of the Impertinences, which ſome of the Biſhops are made to ſay, that are unworthy of the Gravity and Simplicity of the Chriſtians of the Firſt Ages. Laſtly, He who forg'd theſe Acts, ſays, that Diocleſian was inform'd of the Condemnation of Marcellinus, when he was at War with the Perſians; which yet further diſcovers that theſe Acts are not ancient, ſince the Perſian War was ended before the Perſecution of Diocleſian, from whence it follows, that he who fell into ſo groſs a Fault in Chronology, is a modern Author, unworthy of any Credit.

The Council of Sinueſſa, 303.

Of the COUNCIL of Cirtha.

THE Violence of the Perſecution being a little abated in Africk, in the Year of Jeſus Chriſt 305. ſome Biſhops of Numidia aſſembled at the beginning of the Month of May in the City of Cirtha, in the Houſe of one Donatus, becauſe the Churches were not yet reſtor'd. The occaſion of this Synod was the Ordination of a Biſhop into the See of the City of Numidia in the room of Paul. The Biſhops which were preſent there, were Secundus of Tigiſis, Donatus of Maſcula, Marinus of Aquæ Tibilitanæ, Donatus of Calama, Purpurius of Limata, Victor of Garbis, Felix of Rotarium, Nabor of Centurio, and Secundus the younger. A Biſhop call'd Menalius would not be preſent for fear of being accus'd and convicted of having ſacrificed to Idols. Theſe Biſhops, who were afterwards

Of Cirtha, 305.

The Councils.

the Heads of the Donatiſt Faction, accus'd one another mutually in this Council, and all of them fearing leſt they ſhould be convicted of the Crimes of which they had accus'd one another; they pardon'd one another, referring themſelves to the Judgment of God: After which they ordained Silvanus Biſhop of Cirtha. You have the Acts of this Council in St. Auſtin, in his Third Book againſt Creſconius, Chap. 27.

Of the COUNCIL of Alexandria, under Peter Biſhop of that Church.

Of Alexandria 306.

IN the Year 306. Peter of Alexandria held a Council, wherein he depoſed Meletius, being convicted of having ſacrificed to Idols. We have not the Acts of this Council, and we know nothing more in particular of it.

Of the COUNCIL of Eliberis or Elvira.

Of Eliberis or Elvira, 305.

THE place [a] and time [b] of the Council of Eliberis are very uncertain. Some have thought that this Council was aſſembled in the City of Gallia Narbonenſis; others ſay, that this City was in Bætica; and the moſt Learned think that this City of Eliberis was the ſame with Granada. As to the time, ſome Authors have placed it at the end of the Third Century, others have remov'd it unto the end of the Fourth, but the moſt probable Opinion is, that it was aſſembled at the beginning of the Fourth Century, before the Councils of Arles and Nice, about the Year 305. The little Order that is obſerved in the Canons of this Council, the great variety of Rules that are to be found in it, and the multitude of Canons about different Matters, make ſome Learned Men think, probably enough, that the Canons attributed to this Council are an ancient Code, or an ancient Collection of the Councils of Spain. However this be, it cannot be doubted, but theſe Canons are very Ancient and very Authentick.

The Diſcipline which they eſtabliſh is very rigorous.

In the 1ſt Canon they are depriv'd of Communion, i. e. of Abſolution, even at the point of Death who have voluntarily Sacrificed to Idols after they were baptized.

The 2d eſtabliſhes the ſame Penalty againſt thoſe, who taking upon them after their Baptiſm, the Office of Prieſts to Falſe Gods, were obliged to offer up Sacrifices to Idols by themſelves or others, and who have alſo encreaſed their Guilt by Murders or Adulteries.

The 3d moderates this Penalty to thoſe who have only cauſed profane ſhows to be repreſented, and grants them Communion at the point of Death, provided they put themſelves under Penance, and that they do not afterwards fall into Adultery.

The 4th is, That if the Catechumens cauſe themſelves to be choſen Prieſts to falſe Gods, and act in profane Shows, their Baptiſm ſhall be delayed for three Years.

The 5th impoſes Seven Years Penance upon a Woman that ſhall beat her Servant-Maid in ſuch a manner, that ſhe dies within three Days after, if the Woman had a deſign to kill her; and Five Years Penance if ſhe had no ſuch deſign: She is acquitted if the Maid dies more than Three Days after.

In the 6th Canon it is ordain'd, That Abſolution ſhall be refus'd even at Death, to him who ſhall kill another by Treachery.

The 7th is, That thoſe who relapſe into Adultery after they have undergone Penance, ſhall not be received even at Death.

The 8th ſubjects a Woman to the ſame Penalty, who has forſaken her Husband without cauſe, to marry another.

The 9th declares, That 'tis not lawful for a Woman, tho ſhe has forſaken her Husband, becauſe of Adultery, to marry another; and that if ſhe does it, ſhe ought not to be admitted to Communion, till he whom ſhe has married be dead, or at leaſt till the extremity of Sickneſs make it neceſſary to grant it her.

The 10th allows Husbands to be Baptiz'd who have forſaken their Wives, and Wives who have forſaken their Husbands for Adultery, while they were Catechumens. But if a Chriſtian Woman marries a Man who has forſaken his Wife without reaſon, the Canon ordains, That the Communion of the Church ſhall be refus'd her, even at the point of Death.

The 11th ordains, That Baptiſm ſhall be delay'd for the ſpace of Five Years to a Catechumeneſs who has married a Husband that had divorc'd his Wife without cauſe.

[a] The Place.] The Name of this Council is very various; Some call it Libertinum, others Elibertinum, others Heberitanum, and ſome Eliberinum; but the more common Name is Eliberitanum, or Illiberitanum. The ancient Geographers mention only Two Cities call'd by this Name, whereof one was in Gallia Narbonenſis, and the other in Bætica. 'Tis thought that the firſt is Perpignan and the other in all probability is the City of Granada. The Firſt was deſtroy'd in the time of Pliny and Mela, and 'tis no wiſe probable that the Biſhops of Spain ſhould come ſo far to hold a Council. Wherefore it is much more probable that this Council was held at the Spaniſh Elvira, i.e. Granada.

[b] The Time.] Thoſe who ſaid that this Council was held after the Year 400. affirmed what is manifeſtly falſe, ſince at that time the enjoining Penance for thoſe who had ſacrific'd to Idols, was not debated: The ſame Reaſon proves that there is no probability that it was aſſembled after the Council of Nice. It ſeems to have been called before that of Arles; but I do not believe that it was called before the Perſecution of Dioclefian. There is more probability, that it was aſſembled when the Perſecution ended in the Weſt, and when Dioclefian had abdicated the Empire in the Year 304.

The

The 12th Canon denies Communion at death to Women who proſtitute their Daughters.

The 13th ſubjects to the ſame Penalty the Virgins conſecrated to God, who ſpend their Life in Licentiouſneſs, but it grants Abſolution at the Point of Death to thoſe who do Penance for their Fault.

The 14th treats Virgins with much moderation who have loſt their Virginity, if they marry thoſe who have abuſed them; for it ordains, That they ſhould be reſtored to Eccleſiaſtical Communion at the end of One Year, without being oblig'd to do Penance; but then it impoſes Five Years Penance, if they have had to do with other Men.

The 15th and 16th forbid the Faithful to beſtow their Daughters in Marriage upon Pagans, Jews or Hereticks, how great ſoever the number of Virgins be among Chriſtians; and it Ordains, That the Fathers who do it ſhall be ſeparated from Communion for the ſpace of Five Years.

The 17th denies Abſolution, even at the Point of Death, to thoſe who give their Daughters in Marriage to the Prieſts of falſe Gods.

The 18th forbids Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons, to leave their Churches to exerciſe Merchandize, and go to Fairs; but it allows them to Traffick in their own Province, and to ſend their Children, their Friends and their Servants to trade in Foreign Countries.

The 19th ordains, that Communion ſhall be refuſed, even at the Point of Death, to Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons, who have committed Adultery.

The 20th declares, That a Clergyman who is diſcovered to take Intereſt, ſhould be depoſed and removed: That the ſame Crime ſhould be pardoned in a Layman if he promiſes to amend it, but if he relapſes he is to be caſt out of the Church.

The 21ſt Canon is, That if any Inhabitant in a City ſhall be abſent from the Church for three Sundays together, he ſhall be ſeparated from Communion for ſome time, to ſignifie that he has been puniſhed for his Fault.

The 22d declares, That he who has abandoned the Church, to go over to a Sect of Hereticks, ſhall not be received back into the Church again, till he has done Penance for Ten Years: As for thoſe who were Children when they were entred into an Heretical Sect and return to the Church, The Canon ordains, that they ſhall be received without any delay.

The 23d declares, That the ordinary Faſts ſhall be obſerved except in the Months of July and Auguſt, becauſe of the weakneſs of ſome of the Faithful.

The 24th forbids thoſe to be admitted to Sacred Orders, who have been Baptiz'd out of their own Country, becauſe their Life is not known.

The 25th declares, That Credit ſhall not be given to the Letters of a Confeſſor, but only to Letters of Communion.

The 26th forbids Faſting on Saturdays.

The 27th forbids Biſhops and Clergymen to have in their Houſes ſtrange Women.

The 28th forbids Biſhops to receive Preſents from thoſe that are not in the Communion of the Church.

The 29th forbids to recite at the Altar the Names of thoſe that are poſſeſs'd, and does not permit them to make any Offering themſelves in the Church.

The 30th ordains, That the Orders of Sub-deacon ſhall not be given to thoſe who have committed Adultery in their Youth, leſt they ſhould riſe to a higher Degree, and that thoſe who have been Ordained ſhall be degraded.

The 31ſt declares, That thoſe may be admitted to Communion who have committed Adultery after Baptiſm, provided they have fulfilled their Canonical Penance.

The 32d declares, That when any Perſon fall ſick, they ought to be received into Eccleſiaſtical Communion by the Biſhop; but yet if the ſickneſs be violent, the Prieſt may grant them Communion, and even the Deacon if the Biſhop command him.

The 33d Canon preſcribes Celibacy to Prieſts and Deacons.

The 34th Canon is very obſcure: It declares, That Wax-Candles are not to be lighted in the Cœmeteries, becauſe we muſt not diſturb the Spirits of the Saints. Some underſtand by the Spirits of the Saints the Souls of the Dead: I think that it is more natural to underſtand by it, the Repoſe of the Spirits of the Faithful that are alive and may be troubled with a great multitude of Lights in the day-time.

The 35th redreſſes a dangerous Abuſe; it is ſet down in theſe Words. " We have thought fit to " hinder Women from ſpending the Night in the Cœmeteries, becauſe oftentimes under pretence of " praying they commit in ſecret great Crimes.

The 36th has very much exercis'd Divines. Thus it is expreſſed, " We would not have Pictures " placed in Churches, leſt the Object of our Worſhip and Adoration ſhould be painted upon the " Walls. Many Explications have been given of this Paſſage, but to me it ſeems better to underſtand it in the plaineſt Sence, and to confeſs that the Fathers of this Council did not approve the uſe of Images, no more than that of Wax-Candles lighted in full day-light: But theſe things are Matters of Diſcipline, which may be uſed or not, without doing any prejudice to the Faith of the Church.

The 37th Canon permits Baptiſm to be given at the Point of Death to thoſe who are acted by an Evil Spirit, and to Catechumens, and does not deprive them of Communion if they be faithful. Provided, adds the Canon, That they do no not publickly light Lamps, This addition is very abſcure, and there is no great neceſſity of explaining it.

The

The Councils

The 38th declares, That a Chriſtian who is neither Penitent nor Bigamiſt, may Baptize in a caſe of Neceſſity, thoſe who are on a Journey, being at a great diſtance from a Church, upon Condition that he preſent him to the Biſhop if he ſurvive, to be perfected by Impoſition of Hands.

The 39th ordains, That Impoſition of Hands ſhall not be deny'd to Pagans who deſire it after they are fallen into ſome Diſeaſe, provided they have led an honeſt Life. This Canon muſt be underſtood of that Impoſition of Hands, by which Pagans were plac'd in the Rank of Catechumens, which this Council calls making them Chriſtians.

The 40th forbids Land-Lords to allow their Farmers or Receivers what they have given for Idols; and if they do it, it impoſes upon them a Penance of Five Years.

The 41ſt declares, That the Faithful muſt be admoniſhed not to ſuffer Idols in their Houſes.

The 42d ordains, That thoſe who give in their Names to be entred into the Church, ſhall be Baptiz'd two Years after, if they lead a regular Life; unleſs they are obliged to relieve them ſooner upon the account of any dangerous Sickneſs, or that it is judg'd convenient to grant them this Grace ſooner becauſe of the fervor of their Prayers.

The 43d forbids the Celebration of the Feaſt of Whitſunday before Eaſter.

The 44th allows a Woman to be received who has formerly led a lewd Life, when ſhe is converted, and would be made a Chriſtian, after ſhe has renounc'd her Sins.

The 45th allows Baptiſm to be given a Catechumen, tho he has been long abſent from Church.

The 46th Impoſes ten Years Penance upon one of the Faithful, who has lived long in the practice of the ſame Sin, which it looks upon as an Apoſtacy.

The 47th ordains, That if one of the Faithful, who has a lawful Wife, has committed many Adulteries, fall Sick, and promiſe to commit this Sin no more, Communion ſhall not be deny'd him; but if after his Recovery he relapſe in his Sin, it ſhall never more be granted to him.

In the 48th it is ordain'd, That the Baptiz'd ſhall not put any more Money into the Boxes or Baſons, as was commonly done, leſt it ſhould be thought, that the Prieſt gave for Money what he had freely received. It adds, That not the Prieſts but the Miniſters ſhall waſh the Feet of the Baptiz'd.

The 49th forbids thoſe who poſſeſs an Eſtate in Land, to ſuffer the Fruits of it to be bleſs'd by the Jews.

The 50th ordains, That thoſe who eat with Jews ſhall be ſeparated from the Church.

The 51ſt forbids to admit into the Clergy thoſe who return from Hereſy, and pronounces the Sentence of Depoſition againſt ſuch if they are Ordain'd.

The 52d declares thoſe worthy of an Anathema, who publiſh Deformatory Libels.

The 53d declares, That a Perſon excommunicated cannot be received but by the Biſhop who excommunicated him, and forbids all others to receive him into Communion without the conſent of his own Biſhop.

The 54th ordains, That thoſe Pagans ſhall be ſeparated from the Church for three Years who have violated their Promiſe of Eſpouſals, unleſs one of the Parties contracted be found guilty of ſome Crime which hindered them from Marriage.

The 55th declares, That they ſhall be received into Communion at the end of two Years who were Prieſts of Falſe Gods, who have carried a Crown, but have not ſacrific'd nor laid out any Money to the Honour of Idols.

The 56th ſeparates from the Church a Pagan Magiſtrate, during the time that he diſcharges his Office.

The 57th excommunicates for three Years, thoſe Chriſtian Women who lend their Garments for a profane ſhow.

The 58th ordains, That thoſe who bring Letters of Communion ſhall be examined in all the Churches, and chiefly in that where the firſt Epiſcopal Throne is ſettled, that is, in the Metropolitical Church.

The 59th forbids Chriſtians to aſcend into the Capitol to Sacrifice there, or to ſee ſacrificing there, and impoſes ten Years Penance upon thoſe that fall into this Fault.

The 60th deprives thoſe of the Title of Martyrs, who are kill'd for overthrowing Idols publickly, becauſe the Goſpel commands us not to do any ſuch thing, and we never read that it was practis'd by the Chriſtians in the times of the Apoſtles.

The 61ſt impoſes a Penance of five Years upon him that marries his Wife's Siſter, unleſs the extremity of Sickneſs oblige us to give him the Peace of the Church ſooner.

The 62d declares, That an Actor of Plays or a Comedian who would be made a Chriſtian, ſhall not be received till he has renounced his Profeſſion.

The 63d denies Communion even at the Point of Death, to ſuch Women as being guilty of Adultery have murder'd their Infants.

The 64th treats with the ſame Rigor, thoſe Women who have continued all their Life-time in the habitual practice of Sin and Adultery; but as to thoſe who acknowledg'd their Crime before they were ſick, and forſook the Man with whom they had committed this Sin, it grants them Communion after ten Years Penance.

The

The 65th declares, That if a Clergy-man knows that his Wife commits Adultery and ſends her not away, he is unworthy of the Communion of the Church, even at the Point of Death, leſt it ſhould be thought that thoſe who ought to be a Pattern of a regular Life, ſhow an example of Licentiouſneſs. [This Canon is an authentick Evidence of the Marrying of the Clergy of the Church of Spain at this time.] The Councils.

The 66th declares, That he who marries his Daughter-in-law, ſhall not receive the Communion even at Death.

The 67th forbids Women that are of the Faithful or Catechumens, to have Footmen or Pages that are beautiful and well-ſhap'd.

The 68th delays the Baptiſm of a Catechumeneſs to the Hour of Death, who having committed Adultery, murder'd her Child.

The 69th impoſes but Five Years of Penance upon thoſe who have faln but once into the Sin of Adultery.

The 70th declares, That if a Woman commit Adultery with the conſent of her Husband, he is unworthy of the Communion at the Point of Death; nevertheleſs if he divorces her, he may be received after Ten Years Penance.

The 71ſt denies Communion even at the Point of Death to thoſe who have committed moſt infamous Crimes. [By infamous Crimes here is meant, abuſing their Bodies with Mankind.]

The 72d declares, That if a Widow commit Adultery, and afterwards marries the ſame Man with whom ſhe had committed this Sin, ſhe ſhall be diſcharged for Five Years Penance; but if ſhe marry another, ſhe cannot be reconcil'd, even at the Point of Death, and that if he to whom ſhe marries be one of the Faithful, he ſhall be put under Penance for Ten Years.

The 73d denies Communion, even at the Point of Death, to thoſe who have been the cauſe of the Condemnation or Death of any Man by their falſe Accuſations, and impoſes Five Years Penance if the Matter be of leſs conſequence.

The 74th Ordains, That a falſe Witneſs ſhall be puniſh'd proportionably to the greatneſs of the Crime of which he teſtified falſly: That if the Crime did not deſerve Death; and he proves, That he gave teſtimony with reluctancy, and that he continued long before he was willing to ſay any thing, he ſhall be acquitted for Two Years of Penance: But if he does not prove that he was conſtrain'd to give this falſe Teſtimony, he ſhall not be received into the Communion of the Church till Five Years after.

The 75th deprives thoſe of Communion, even at the Point of Death, who have falſly accus'd a Biſhop, a Prieſt, or a Deacon.

The 76th Ordains, That if a Deacon being guilty of a Crime ſuffers himſelf to be Ordain'd, he ſhall be put under Penance for Three Years, if the Crime be diſcovered by his own Confeſſion; and Five Years, if it be detected by the teſtimony of another,

The 77th declares, That if a Deacon who governs a People, Baptize any Catechumens without a Biſhop or without a Prieſt, the Biſhop ought to conſummate, as one may ſay, the Baptiſm by his Benediction; but if they die before this be done, they may be ſaved by the Faith which they had.

The 78th impoſes upon him who commits Adultery with a Pagan or Jewiſh Woman, a Penance of Three Years, if he himſelf confeſs his Sin, and one of Five Years, if he be convicted of it.

The 79th forbids playing at Games of Chance, and declares, that if any of the Faithful make profeſſion of playing, he ſhall be depriv'd of Communion; but if he forſakes this Cuſtom he may be reconciled at the end of one Year.

The 80th Ordains, That Freed-men whoſe Patrons are Secular Men, ſhall not be ſuffer'd to enter into the Clergy.

The laſt Canon forbids Women to write to Lay-men in their own Names. This Canon is difficult enough, Albaſpinæus underſtands it of Eccleſiaſtical Letters. I ſhould more willingly underſtand it of Familiar Letters.

I know very well, that are many Difficulties about the true Sence of many of theſe Canons. I have endeavour'd to explain them in the Extract which I made out of them, wherein I follow'd that Sence which appeared to me moſt natural, and moſt agreeable to the Genius of the Ancients. Thoſe that would inform themſelves more fully in this Matter, may read the Notes of Albaſpinæus, and the great Commentary of Mendoza, which contains many things that are no-wiſe uſeful for underſtanding theſe Canons; which are not ſo difficult when they are read without prejudice to one that underſtands ſomething of the Ancient Diſcipline.

Of the Pretended COUNCIL of Carthage againſt Cæcilian.

AFter the death of Menſurius Biſhop of Carthage, ſeveral Perſons who had a mind to the Biſhoprick of this City, aſſembled the neighbouring Biſhops, to Ordain a Biſhop of Carthage, without citing thither the Biſhops of Numidia. The deſign of thoſe Perſons did not ſucceed according to their deſires, for not one of them was choſen Biſhop, and there was placed in the room of Menſurius, Cæcilian Archdeacon of Carthage, who was Ordain'd by Felix Biſhop of Aptungis. The Biſhops of Numidia being offended becauſe they were not call'd to the Ordination of Cæcilian, and being ſolicited by ſome of his Enemies, came to Carthage in the Year 311. to the number of 70. They durſt not Of Carthage, 311.

enter into the Church where Cæcilian was, but being received by thoſe who call'd them, they cited him to come before them and defend himſelf. This Biſhop, without being daunted, anſwer'd them boldly; If there be any Proofs againſt me, let my Accuſer appear and produce them. But his Enemies having nothing Perſonal to object againſt him, accus'd Felix of Aptungis who had Ordain'd him, and ſaid that this Biſhop having been a Traditor could not give a valid Ordination, and conſequently Cæcilian was not then a Biſhop. Cæcilian either becauſe he miſtruſted the innocence of Felix, or becauſe he would not enter upon this Controverſie, made anſwer to his Enemies, That if Felix had not confer'd upon him Epiſcopal Orders, they might ordain him a-new as if he had been ſtill a Deacon. Purpurius Biſhop of Limata, a cunning and dextrous Man, adviſ'd thoſe of his Party, to make a ſhow of accepting this Propoſition; and when Cæcilian ſhould come to receive Ordination, then to put him under Penance, inſtead of laying hands on him to Ordain him Biſhop. This advice had been put in execution, if Cæcilian had not been detain'd by his Friends, who would not ſuffer him to truſt himſelf to the fury of his Enemies. Then the Biſhops of Numidia condemn'd him, tho' abſent, and Ordain'd Majorinus in his room. They alledg'd Three Reaſons for the Depoſition of Cæcilian. The Firſt was, Becauſe he would not appear before the Council. The Second, Becauſe he had been Ordain'd by Traditors. The Third, Becauſe being Arch-deacon, he had hindred, ſay they, the carrying of Victuals to the Confeſſors of Jeſus Chriſt, who were in Priſon. We have only one Article pronounced by the 70 Biſhops produc'd by St. Auſtin, in his Book againſt Fulgentius the Donatiſt. It is expreſs'd in theſe Words, by the Biſhop who pronounc'd it, call'd Marcianus: Our Lord has ſaid in the Goſpel, I am the true Vine, and my Father is the Husbandman; he will cut off and caſt forth every Branch that is in me, and beareth not Fruit. And therefore ſince it is ſaid, That the Branch which beareth not Fruit ſhould be caſt forth, we may truly ſay, That neither Traditors nor Idolaters, nor thoſe who are Schiſmatically Ordain'd by Traditors can continue in the Church of God, unleſs they be reconcil'd by Penance, after they have acknowledged and bewailed their Sin. Wherefore Cæcilian being Schiſmatically Ordained by Traditors ought to be Excommunicated. After the Biſhops had thus pronounc'd ſeverally their Sentences againſt Cæcilian, and Ordain'd Majorinus, they ſent a Circular Letter to all the Biſhops of Africa, exhorting them to ſeparate themſelves from the Communion of Cæcilian: But notwithſtanding this Letter, Cæcilian continued in Communion with a great part of the Biſhops of Africa, and with all the other Biſhops of the World, who declar'd themſelves in his favour, againſt the Numidians who made the Schiſm, and were call'd Donatiſts. Thus Cæcilian continued in his See, notwithſtanding the Judgment of this Synod, and did not ſo much as aſſemble a Council to abſolve himſelf from this Sentence, believing himſelf ſufficiently ſecur'd againſt the Conſpiracy of his Enemies, ſays St. Auſtin, by the Communion of the Roman Church, and of all the other Churches beyond the Sea, from whom he received, and to whom he wrote Letters of Communion. What we have ſaid of this Council is taken out of Optatus and St. Auſtin.

The Councils.

Of the COUNCIL of Rome.

Of Rome, 313.

Conſtantine becoming Maſter of Africk, after he had Conquered the Tyrant Maxentius, wrote to Anulinus Proconſul of Africk, to maintain the Party of Cæcilian, and to endeavour to reeſtabliſh Peace in the Church of Africk. This wiſe Magiſtrate ſent for Cæcilian, and his Adverſaries, read to them the Emperour's Letter, and exhorted them to be reconcil'd to one another: But ſome Days after, thoſe of Majorinus's Party preſented to him two Memorials; one was entitled, A Manifeſto of Cæcilian's Crimes, preſented by Majorinus's Party: And the other was a Petition, wherein they prayed that ſome Biſhops of Gaul might be given them for Judges. Thoſe who preſented theſe two Papers to Anulinus, earneſtly prayed him to ſend them to the Emperour. He did ſo, and the Emperour having regard to their Petition, gave them for Judges, Miltiades Biſhop of Rome, together with Rheticius Biſhop of Autun, Marinus Biſhop of Arles, and Maternus Biſhop of Cologn. Miltiades joyned to theſe Four, Fifteen Biſhops of Italy, and theſe Nineteen Biſhops aſſembled in the City of Rome, in the Year 313. and undertook to judge the Cauſe of Cæcilian. The firſt Day that they aſſembled, Majorinus's Party preſented to the Council a Memorial of the Crimes, whereof they accus'd Cæcilian: But the Judges having deſir'd them to produce their Accuſers and Witneſſes, they introduc'd ſome who were oblig'd to withdraw immediately, becauſe they declar'd, that they had nothing to ſay againſt Cæcilian. He for his part accus'd Donatus of having made a Schiſm at Carthage, and urged him to preſent before the Council, the Witneſſes and Accuſers which he had brought. Donatus promiſed that he would preſent them, and in the mean time was convicted of having re-baptiz'd, and re-ordain'd. The Second Day a New Memorial was given in againſt Cæcilian, but ſufficient Evidence could not be produc'd. The Judgment of the Seventy Biſhops of Numidia was alledg'd, for which the Judges had no great reſpect. The Third Day, the whole Cauſe was determin'd, Donatus was condemn'd, as being convicted of having re-baptiz'd, and laid his Hands upon Biſhops who were already Ordain'd: And Cæcilian was abſolv'd by the Sentence of all the Biſhops, and even by the ſuffrage of Miltiades who concluded the Deciſion. The Council having thus judg'd the Cauſe of Cæcilian and Donatus, endeavour'd to reſtore Peace among the other Biſhops, by ordering, that in thoſe Places where there had been a Biſhop of each Party, he who had been Ordain'd firſt ſhould continue Biſhop, and Care ſhould be taken to give another Biſhoprick to the other. Letters of Communion were alſo offer'd to be ſent to the Biſhops of Majorinus's Party, provided they would be Reconcil'd. At laſt, the Biſhops wrote to Conſtantine, inform'd him of their Deciſion, and aſſur'd him, that they had given their Judgment according to Juſtice and Equity. The Acts of this Council were extant in St. Auſtin's time, and they were alſo produced in the Conference

rence of Carthage, but now they are loſt. We have taken what we have ſaid, out of Optatus in Book Firſt, and out of St. Auſtin in his Abridgment of the Conference on the Third Day, in Ch. 11. of his Letter 162. now the 43d. and of Letter 50. now the 185.

Of the COUNCIL of Arles.

THE Biſhops of Majorinus's Party having loſt their Cauſe in the Council of Rome, addreſs'd themſelves to the Emperour, and complain'd of the Judgment which was given at Rome, ailedging that their Judges did not hear all that they had to ſay. The Emperour deſiring they might be ſolemly Judg'd, that ſo they ſhould have nothing to reply, call'd [a] a Conncil in the Year 314. in the City of Arles. This Council was compos'd of 33 Weſtern Biſhops [b], with ſome Prieſts and ſome Deacons. Marinus Biſhop of Arles preſided there; the Legates of Pope Sylveſter were preſent [c], but that the Emperour was not there [d]. The Council heard the Accuſations which were form'd againſt Cæcilian; but when his Accuſers could not prove him guilty of the Crimes whereof they accus'd him, they were rejected or condemned by the Council. After this Cauſe was judged, the Biſhops thought it their Duty, ſince they were aſſembled, to make ſome Rules concerning the Diſcipline of the Church; and they made 22 Canons. Of Arles, 314.

In the 1ſt they ordain, That the Feaſt of Eaſter ſhould be celebrated on the ſame Sunday in all the Churches of the World, and that the Biſhop of Rome ſhould give notice of the Day to the Churches according to Cuſtom.

In the 2d they enjoyn Miniſters to continue in the Churches where they were ordained.

In the 3d they excommunicate thoſe who make uſe of Arms in a time of Peace.

In the 4th they Ordain, That thoſe who run Races in the Cirque, ſhall be ſeparated from the Communion while they follow that employment.

In the 5th they make the ſame Regulation for thoſe who act upon the Theatre.

In the 6th they ordain, That Impoſition of Hands ſhall be given to thoſe, who having fallen Sick, declare, that they deſire to believe in Jeſus Chriſt.

In the 7th they permit the Faithful to enter upon Offices, without being deprived of the Communion of the Church; but upon Condition that the Biſhop of the place where they ſhall take an Office, ſhall ſuperintend their Conduct, and that if they do any thing contrary to the Diſcipline of the Church, they ſhall be ſeparated from his Communion.

The 8th determines the famous Queſtion about the re-baptization of Hereticks, and ordains concerning the Africans, who had always re-baptized them, That if any one leave a Hereſie, and return to the Church, he ſhall be ask'd concerning the Creed, and if it be known that he was baptized in the Name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt, Impoſition of Hands only ſhall be given him, that he may receive the Holy Spirit; but if he does not acknowledge the Trinity, he ſhall be re-baptized.

The 9th declares, That in order to their being received into Communion in a Foreign Church, they ſhould not any longer carry Letters of Recommendation from the Confeſſors, but Letters of Communion from their Biſhop.

In the 10th they ſay, That thoſe who find their Wives in the Act of Adultery muſt be counſelled not to marry others, while they are living, tho' the Laws permits them to do it.

In the 11th they ſeparate for ſome time from the Communion of the Church the Chriſtian Virgins that marry Infidels.

In the 12th they excommunicate the Clergy that are Uſurers.

[a] Call'd.] 'Tis certain that the Emperour call'd this Synod. We have in Euſeb. B. X. of his Hiſt. Ch. 5. the Letter which he wrote to Chreſtus Biſhop of Syracuſe, wherein he commands him to be preſent at this Council of Arles; he wrote of it likewiſe to all the other Biſhops. Some have ſaid that the Donatiſts appeal'd to a Council after the Deciſion of Rome, but St. Auſtin, who had ſtudied this Hiſtory exactly, ſays in an infinite number of places, that they complained only of the Judgment given at Rome, but did not Appeal till after the Deciſion of the Council of Arles.

[b] Compos'd of 33 Weſtern Biſhops.] Baronius thought that this Council conſiſted of 200 Biſhops, which he grounded upon a Paſſage of St. Auſtin, in his Book againſt the Epiſtle of Parmenianus, Ch. 5. but he miſunderſtood that Paſſage, for there he does not ſpeak of the Council of Arles, but of the Council of Rome, which conſiſted only of 19 Biſhops, and not of 200. as they are reckon'd in the Text of St. Auſtin, according to the common Editions; but this place has been reſtored in the laſt Edition, by a Manuſcript of the Vatican Library, and inſtead of reading as it was, Ut ducentos Judices apud quos vicli ſunt, victis litigatoribus credant eſſe poſtponendos, it is now thus reſtored, ut contra Judices, apud quos victi ſunt, victis litigatoribus credant, &c. There are but 33 Names at the head of the Councils Letter; but of theſe 33 there are 4 Prieſts and one Deacon, and 6 Exorciſts. They endeavour to prove that there was a greater number of Biſhops at this Council, becauſe Conſtantine in his Letter to Chreſtus, and the ſecond Council of Arles teſtify, That there were Biſhops in it from all Parts of the World: But theſe 19 Biſhops are found to be from all Parts of the Weſt, and ſo it is not neceſſary to admit a greater number of them, to verifie what is ſaid by Conſtantine and the Fathers of the ſecond Council of Arles. Ado ſays, that 600 Biſhops were preſent at this Council; but this is no-wiſe probable.

[c] Marinus Biſhop of Arles preſided there, &c.] His Name is at the head of the Biſhops, named at the beginning of the Epiſtle to St. Sylveſter, before thoſe of the Pope's Legates.

[d] That the Emperour was not there.] Some Authors have ſaid that he was, but they are miſtaken; for it appears by the Letter of Conſtantine, written after the Synod, that he was not, and the Donatiſts would not have appeal'd to his Judgment, if he had been preſent at the Sentence given by the Synod, and approved it.

In

The Councils.

In the 13th they ordain, That thoſe ſhall be turned out of the Clergy, who ſhall be proved by the Publick Acts to have delivered up the Holy Scriptures; but thoſe who they had ordained ſhall continue in their Station. They forbid Men to hearken to theſe Accuſations, unleſs they be proved by the Publick Acts.

In the 14th they ſeparate from the Communion until the Point of Death, thoſe who falſly accuſe their Brethren.

In the 15th they ſay, That the Deacons ſhould not offer, as they did in many places.

In the 16th they ordain, That thoſe who are ſeparated from the Communion, ſhall be reſtored no where elſe, but in the place where they were Excommunicated.

The 17th Ordains, That one Biſhop ſhall not deſpiſe the Judgment of another. This is rather a conſequence of the preceding Canon, than a Canon by it ſelf.

The 18th enjoyns Deacons in Cities to reverence the Prieſts.

The 19th grants to Foreign Biſhops the Power of celebrating the Oblation.

In the 20th the Biſhops of this Council forbids one Biſhop alone to ordain another Biſhop; they would have Seven of them meet if it be poſſible; but if this cannot be done, they do abſolutely forbid any one to Ordain, unleſs he has three Biſhops with him.

In the 21ſt they forbid Prieſts and Deacons, under pain of Depoſition, to relinquiſh the Churches, in which they were fixed by their Ordination.

In the 22d they declare, That Communion is not to be given to thoſe who having Apoſtatized, continue a long time out of the Church without doing Penance, waiting till they fall Sick to ask Communion; unleſs they recover their Health, and give Signs of a ſincere Repentance.

At laſt, the Biſhops of this Council wrote to St. Sylveſter Biſhop of Rome, as the chief Biſhop of the World, an Account of every thing that they had Ordained, that he might publiſh theſe Canons throughout the Catholick Church. They aſſure him in this Letter, that they were very ſorry, that he could not be preſent himſelf in Perſon at this Council, and they pray him to publiſh their Deciſions over all the World.

Of the COUNCILS of Ancyra and Neo-Cæſarea.

Of Ancyra and Neo-Cæſarea, 314.

THE Councils of Ancyra and Neo-Cæſarea, were held much about the ſame time as the Council of Arles. We know nothing of the Hiſtory, nor particular Circumſtances of theſe two Councils; we have only their Canons, which the ancient Church look'd upon as Rules that ought to be obſerv'd every where, ſince they have been put into the Code of the Canons of the Univerſal Church.

There are 25 Canons of the Council of Ancyra. The Firſt preſerves the Honour of the Prieſthood to thoſe Biſhops, who having ſacrificed to Idols repented of their Fault, and afterwards ſuffered for the Faith of Jeſus Chriſt. But it forbids them to exerciſe any part of the Sacerdotal Function, and will not ſo much as allow them to make the Offering or Preach. The Second uſes the ſame moderation to Deacons; but it permits Biſhops to ſhow them more Favour if they think it convenient.

In the 3d Canon it is Ordain'd, That thoſe who have been made to offer Incenſe, or to eat of Meats Sacrific'd to Idols, by Force and Violence, are not at all guilty, that they ought to be admitted to Communion, and that they may even be promoted to Eccleſiaſtical Dignities; provided they have teſtified their ſorrow for what happen'd to them: But for thoſe who were preſent at the Feaſts made to the Honour of Idols with mirth and jollity, it impoſes upon them Five Years Penance, One Year in the rank of Hearers, Two Years in the rank of Supplicants, and Two Years in the number of thoſe that are preſent only at the Prayers. Whereas thoſe who were preſent in mourning Apparel, and who lamented during the time of the Feaſt, if they did eat of the Profane Meat, it places them in the rank of Supplicants, or proſtrate Penitents for three Three Years, and afterwards it would have them receiv'd without having any ſhare in the Oblation; and if they did not eat at all, it leaves them only Two Years in the rank of the proſtrate Penitents, and permits them to partake of the Sacraments at the end of the Third Year. Nevertheleſs, it gives power to the Biſhops to ſhorten or lengthen the time of Penance, according to the behaviour of the Penitents.

The 6th concerns thoſe who have Sacrific'd to Idols, fearing Torments or the loſs of their Goods, and who deſire to be admitted to do Penance. The Synod orders, That they ſhould be among the number of Hearers till Eaſter-day, that afterwards they ſhould be Three Years Supplicants or Proſtrate, and then they ſhould be preſent at the Prayers, which is call'd Communicating without partaking of the Oblation. It excepts however the caſe of the danger of Death, in which it Orders, That they ſhould be receiv'd according to the Law made about it.

The 7th impoſes Two Years penance upon thoſe who were preſent at the Feaſts made in Honour of the Idols, but carried thither their own Meat, intending not to eat of that which was there preſented.

The 8th impoſes Seven Years Penance upon thoſe who Sacrific'd ſeveral times; and the 9th impoſes Ten Years Penance upon thoſe who forc'd their Brethren to do it.

The 10th Canon concerns the Celibacy of Deacons. The Council there Ordains, That if they declared at the time of their Ordination, that they would Marry, they ſhall not be depriv'd of their Function if they did Marry; but if they were Ordain'd without making this declaration, and afterwards Marry'd they ſhould be oblig'd to quit their Employment.

The 11th Ordains, That if Maids Contracted happen to be carried away by others than thoſe

to

to whom they were promiſed, they ſhall be reſtored to them again whatever violence they have ſuffered.

The Councils.

The 12th declares, That thoſe may be Ordain'd who have Sacrific'd to Idols before they were Baptized, becauſe they are purified from this Sin by Baptiſm.

The 13th Canon is about Suffragan Biſhops or Chorepiſcopi. 'Tis as follows in the Greek Text: 'Tis not lawful for Suffragan Biſhops to Ordain Prieſts or Deacons, nor for the City Presbyters in another Pariſh without the permiſſion of their Biſhop. 'Tis plain that this Canon is imperfect, and that ſomething muſt be ſupplied to make it ſence: For what mean theſe words, Nor to the City Presbyters, &c. Had Prieſts ever Power to Ordain other Prieſts in their own Churches? Had they ever permiſſion to do it out of their own Churches by the Biſhops Letters? Why ſhould not the Suffragans, who were above the Prieſts, have the ſame Power? There muſt be ſomething added: See what Dionyſius Exiguus has added in his Verſion. No more is it lawful for Prieſts to do any thing in the Diocеſs, without the permiſſion of the Biſhop in writing. This Addition is found in the ancient Code of the Roman Church, publiſhed by Queſnellus, and in the Verſion of Iſidore; and Juſtellus has reſtored it in the Greek Text, of the Code of the Univerſal Church.

The 14th condemns the ſuperſtition of ſome Clergymen who would not eat Meat. The Synod Ordains, That if they continued in this Superſtition, and would not eat Herbs boil'd with Meat, they ſhould be depriv'd of their Eccleſiaſtical Function.

The 15th declares, That if Prieſts ſell any thing belonging to the Church, while it has not a Biſhop, it ſhall be in the Power of the Biſhop who is choſen, either to make void the bargain, or to take the price of the thing that is ſold.

The 16th and 17th impoſes long Penances upon thoſe who have committed Crimes contrary to Nature.

The 18th forbids Biſhops, who cannot be receiv'd into their own Biſhopricks, to invade thoſe of others, and allows them only to keep the rank of other Presbyters; of which Honour it Ordains that they ſhall be depriv'd if they ſtir up Sedition againſt the Biſhop of the place.

The 19th ſubjects thoſe Virgins to the ſame puniſhment with Bigamiſts, who violate the Profeſſion that they have made, and forbids them to dwell with Strangers as if they were their Siſters.

The 20th impoſes Seven Years Penance for Adultery.

In the 21ſt the Synod obſerves, That the ancient Canons delay'd the abſolution of thoſe Women till Death, who having committed the Sin of Adultery murder'd their Infants; but to mitigate this Puniſhment, it impoſes upon them only Ten Years Penance.

The 22d delayeth the Abſolution of thoſe till the Point of Death who have committed wilful Murder, and till then it places them in the rank of proſtrate Penitents.

The 23d impoſes Seven Years of Penance for Manſlaughter.

The 24th ſubjects thoſe to a Penance of Five Years who meddle with Divination, and practiſe ſuperſtitious Actions.

The laſt is about a particular Caſe. A Man had defiled the Siſter of her to whom he was contracted, and afterwards married this laſt; her Siſter hang'd her ſelf for madneſs. The Synod Ordains, That all thoſe who were complices to theſe Crimes, ſhall be put under Penance for the ſpace of Ten Years.

Theſe Canons are ſigned by 18 Biſhops of the Dioceſs of Aſia, of Pontus, and of the Eaſt. Vitalis Biſhop of Antioch is the firſt among theſe Biſhops. 'Tis certain that he held the See of the Church of Antioch from the Year 311. until the Year 319. And after him there is the Name of Agricolaus Biſhop of Cæſaria in Paleſtine: But Euſebius makes no mention of this Biſhop, and he could be but a very little time Biſhop of that Church. Marcellus of Ancyra who is the Third, is famous enough in Hiſtory. Some think that Baſil of Amaſea ſuffered Martyrdom under Licinius, and St. Jerom affirms it in his Chronicon: Yet Philoſtorgius and St. Athanaſius reckon him among thoſe Biſhops who were preſent at the Council of Nice. The ſame St. Athanaſius mentions Lupus of Tarſus, and Longinus of Neocæſarea. There is mention made of Leontius of Cæſarea in Cappadocia in the Life of St. Gregory Nazianzen, where 'tis ſaid, That 'twas he who Baptized Gregory of Piſa in the time of the Nicene Council. The others are leſs known.

The Council of Neocæſarea made Fifteen Canons about the Diſcipline of the Church.

The 1ſt is, That if a Prieſt marries after he has been Ordain'd, he ought to be degraded; and if he commit Fornication or Adultery he ought to be puniſhed more rigorouſly, and put under Penance.

The 2d is, That if a Woman marry Two Brothers, ſhe ought to be excluded from the Communion of the Church, till the end of her Life; but at the Point of Death ſhe ſhall be abſolved, provided ſhe promiſes to break the Marriage. For if the Husband or the Wife die without being parted, the ſurviving Perſon can very hardly be admitted to Penance.

The 3d is, That the time of the Penance of thoſe who Marry often is regulated by the Canons, but it may be ſhortned proportionably to the Converſion of the Penitent, and the fervour of his Penance.

The 4th is, That he who having a deſire to commit Sin with a Woman, and did not accompliſh it, ſeems to have been ſaved by the Grace of God.

The 5th is, That if a Catechumen, who is in the rank of thoſe who pray with the Faithful, fall into Sin, he muſt be placed in the rank of Hearers, and if he continue to ſin, he is to be totally turned out of the Church.

The 6th commands thoſe Women to be Baptized who are ready to Lie-in.

The 7th forbids Prieſts to be preſent at the Marriage of Bigamiſts.

The Councils.

The 8th declares that he cannot be admitted into Holy Orders, whoſe Wife has been convicted of Adultery; and that if a Clergy-man's Wife commit Adultery, he ought to Divorce her, upon pain of being depriv'd of his Miniſtry, if he do not.

The 9th is, That if a Prieſt who has committed the Sin of the Fleſh before he was Ordain'd, confeſs his Crime, he ought no more to Offer, but he ſhall enjoy all his other Rights; for as to other Sins, 'tis thought, that they are pardoned by the Impoſition of Hands: But if he does not confeſs this Fault, and cannot be Convicted of it, he ſhall be left to his own Conſcience.

The 10th is, That a Deacon who ſhall commit the ſame Crime before his Ordination, ſhall be plac'd in the rank of the other Miniſters.

The 11 forbids to give the Order of Prieſthood to thoſe Perſons who are under Thirty Years of Age, tho' they have well deſerved, becauſe our Lord was Baptized, and begun to Preach at that Age.

The 12th is, That thoſe who have been Baptiz'd in their Sickneſs, can never be Ordained Prieſts, becauſe they ſeem to have embraced the Faith only through neceſſity, unleſs this Favour be afterwards granted them upon the account of their Faith and Zeal; and that there be but few Perſons who can be Ordained.

The 13th forbids the Prieſts in the Country to make the Oblation in the preſence of the Biſhop, or of the Prieſts of Cities, and does not allow them ſo much as to diſtribute the Bread of the Euchariſt, or to give the Cup, but it permits them to do both the one and the other in the abſence of the Biſhop, and the City-Presbyters.

The 14th declares, that Suffragans repreſent the 70 Diſciples, and ſo they are looked upon as the Brethren of the Biſhops, and have the honour of making the Oblation.

The laſt Ordains, That there ſhould be but Seven Deacons in each City, how great ſoever it be. Some of the Biſhops who were at the Council of Ancyra, ſubſcribed to this. Vitalis of Antioch preſided there, as well as at the Council of Ancyra. Which ſhows that theſe Two Councils were held after the Year 311. and before the Year 319.

Of the Firſt COUNCIL of Alexandria againſt Arius.

Of the Firſt of Alexandria, againſt Arius, 322.

SOme time after, Arius began to publiſh his Impiety, Alexander Biſhop of Alexandria, held a Council of near One hundred Biſhops of Egypt, wherein he Excommunicated Arius and his Followers. This Council was held in 322.

Of the pretended COUNCIL of Bithynia for Arius.

Of Bithynia for Arius, 322.

Euſebius of Nicomedia, and the other Biſhops who protected Arius againſt Alexander, held a Council the next Year in Bithynia, wherein they declare Arius Orthodox, and worthy of the Communion of the Church. Sozomen mentions this Council B. III. Ch. 15. of his Hiſtory.

Of the Second COUNCIL of Alexandria againſt Arius, held in the preſence of Hoſius.

Of the Second of Alexandria, againſt Arius, 324.

Hoſius being ſent to Alexandria from the Emperour, to compoſe the Differences which troubled the Churches of Egypt, held a Council in that City, which the Clergy of Mareotis, in a Proteſtation produced by St. Athanaſius, call an Oecumenical Council. It is not known what was determined in this Council. 'Tis probable that the Wiſe Biſhop of Corduba did what he could to reconcile Men's minds, and not being able to compaſs his Deſign, he would decide nothing. Socrates in B. 3. Ch. 7. of his Hiſtory, teſtifies, That in this Council the Terms of Subſtance and Hypoſtaſis were treated of, in oppoſition to Sabellius: And we learn from the Proteſtation of the Clergy of Mareotis, which we juſt now cited, that Colluthus a pretended Biſhop was degraded in this Council, and the Ordinations which he made were annull'd. Philoſtorgius ſays, That Alexander of Alexandria coming at this time to Nicomedia, and having ſpoken to Hoſius, cauſed the Conſubſtantiality of the Word to be determined by a Synodal Sentence. But we have no other Author who mentions this Judgment, neither is there any probability that it was given.

Of the COUNCIL of Nice.

Of Nice, 325.

Conſtantine ſeeing that he had laboured in vain to allay the Diſputes which divided the Church, thought it would be the moſt ready and effectual means to reſtore Peace, to call a numerous Synod compos'd of the Eaſtern and Weſtern Biſhops. This Council was called Oecumenical, i. e. a Council of the whole World, or the whole Earth, becauſe it was called together from all Parts of the Roman Empire, to which the Title of the World, or the Earth was given, and which did almoſt include the Catholick Church. This Council was aſſembled by the Order of the Emperour at Nice [a] a City of Bithynia, about the Month of July, in the Year 325 [b], in the Second Year of Conſtantine's

[a] By Order of the Emperour, &c.] Euſebius B. III. of the Life of Conſtantine, Ch. 6. ſays, That the Council of Nice was aſſembled by Order of the Emperour; and the Biſhops of this Council in their Letter to the Egyptians, ſay, That they were Summon'd to meet by the Emperour's Letters. Conſtantine ſays the ſame thing, all the Ancients are agreed in it.

[b] In the Year 325. Socrates aſſures us, That this Council was aſſembled at this time, and it could not be aſſembled ſooner nor later.

Reign [c].

Reign [c]. St. Sylvester was then Bishop of Rome, who sent thither Victor and Vincentius his Legates. 'Tis commonly held that this Council consisted of 318 Bishops; but those who were present at it, do not precisely determine this number [d], but say only that there were about 300 Bishops. 'Tis not certainly known, who presided in this Council, but it is very probable that it was Hosius [e], who held the chief place there in his own Name, because he had already taken cognizance of this Affair, and was much esteemed by the Emperour, who was there present. The Assembly was held in a Hall in his Palace [f]. 'Tis said that the Bishops presented Petitions to him, wherein they accus'd one another, and that he burnt them all without reading them: 'Tis also said, That many Philosophers came to Nice to oppose the Christian Religion, and that they were confounded by one simple Bishop: But these two Stories are not very certain. But 'tis certain, that they minded very closely the Cause for which they were assembled, which was the Heresy of Arius. St. Athanasius Deacon of Alexandria, and some others, disputed stoutly against him. When the Day was come that this great Affair should be determined, one of the Bishops made a Harangue to the Emperour, and afterwards they begun to enter upon the Business. Arius having explained his Opinions, was condemned with an unanimous Consent. After this Eusebius of Cæsarea presented a Confession of Faith, but the Council finding that it did not expressly enough reject the Error of the Arians, urged the Bishops who favoured this Heretick to make a clear Profession of the Divinity of the Son of God; and when the Council saw, that all the Terms which were used to dignifie the Divinity of the Son of God were eluded by these Bishops by far-fetched Explications, the Council was forced, for excluding all kind of Ambiguity to say, That the Son of God was Consubstantial to his Father. This Word was the subject of a great Dispute among the Bishops, which was allayed by the Prudence of the Emperour, who made them all agree in the Sence of this Word. And thus in the Confession of Faith, or in the Creed made by this Council, Profession is made, Of believing in one only God, the Creator of all things, visible and invisible and in one only Lord Jesus Christ the Son of God, begotten of the Father, the only Son of the Substance of the Father, God of God, Light of Light, very God of very God, begotten not made, Consubstantial to his Father, by whom all things were made in Heaven and on Earth, who descended for us Men and for our Salvation, who was incarnate and made Man, who suffered and rose again, and ascended into Heaven; and who shall come to judge the quick and the dead: And in the Holy Spirit. After this Creed followed an Anathema against those who should say, That there was a time when the Son of God was not, or that he was not before he was begotten, or that he was created of nothing, and that he was of another Substance and another Essence, or that he was created and subject to Change. All the the Bishops except Secundus of Ptolemais, and Theonas of Marmarica, Signed this Confession of Faith [g]. Eusebius of Cæsarea refused to Sign it at First, but he did it the next day. After this Arius, Secundus and Theonas, were condemned in the Council [h], and a Book of the First, entituled Thalia, was proscribed.

The Council having thus judged the Arians with rigor, treated the Meletians with more moderation. It permitted Meletius to continue in the City, and to retain the name of Bishop, and the honour annexed to that Office; but it absolutely forbad him to ordain any body: It preserved also the Rank, Honour and Office of those whom he had ordained, provided nevertheless that they should be confirmed by a more Sacred Imposition of Hands, which is a kind of Re-ordination [i]; that they should be inferiour to those who had been ordained by Alexander, and that they should have no hand

The Councils.

[c] In the Second Year of the Reign of Constantine.] It begun in the Month of August, and the Council was held in the Month of July.

[d] Those who were present at it, do not precisely determine this number.] Eusebius B. III. of the Life of Constantine, says, that there were at the Council of Nice more than 250 Bishops. Eustathius says, that there were to the number of 270. or thereabouts. St. Athanasius in his Book of the Decrees of the Council of Nice, and in his Epistle to the Monks, says, that they were about 300. yet the same St. Athanasius in his Letter to the Africans, St. Hilary in his Book of Synods, Ruffinus, St. Ambrose, St. Epiphanius, &c. call the Council of Nice, a Council of 318 Bishops. Socrates, Sozomen, and Marius Mercator, do not reckon precisely the same number, but they do not much differ from it.

[e] 'Tis not certainly known who presided in this Council, but 'tis probable that it was Hosius.] St. Athanasius in his second Apology, calls Hosius the Father and President of all the Councils. The Name of this Bishop is the First in all the Subscriptions. Alexander was much esteemed as appears by the Letter of the Council. Eustathius of Antioch is called the chief Bishop of the Council by Proclus and by Facundus. But it is more probable that Hosius presided there in his own Name, and not in the Pope's: For he no where assumes the Title of Legate of the Holy See, and none of the ancients say, that he presided in this Council in the Pope's Name. Gelasius Cyzicenus who first affirmed it, says it without any Proof or Authority.

[f] The Assembled was held in his Palace.] Eusebius says so expressly, B. III. of the Life of Constantine, Ch. 10. Socrates, B. I. of his History, Ch. 18. and Theodoret, B. I. Ch. 7. following herein the Testimony of Eusebius. 'Tis true, that this place is called by Eusebius himself in Ch. 7. a Sacred Place, but it is upon the account of the Assembly of the Bishops who were then in it.

[g] All the Bishops except Secundus and Theonas Signed this Creed.] This appears by the Letter of the Synod, and by the Testimony of Theodoret, B. I. Ch. 7. and of Philostorgius. Some say, that Eusebius and Theognis would not Sign the Condemnation of Arius, and that they were condemned in the Council. This is not true, and if they did alledge this distinction, it was after the Council of Nice, and not in the Council.

[h] Arius, Secundus and Theonas were condemned, &c.] This appears by the Letter of the Council, tho' St. Jerom affirms the contrary concerning Arius. St. Athanasius, who is more to be credited than St. Jerom in this matter, says several times that Arius was condemned in the Council of Nice. Socrates, Sozomen, and Theodoret do also testifie the same thing.

[i] Which is a kind of Re-ordination.] It is commonly thought that this Imposition of Hands, which the Fathers of this Council call, μυστικὴν χειροθεσίαν, was only a Ceremony; but Valesius has very well proved that it was a new Ordination; and this is the thing which the Word does properly signify.

In

The Councils.

in the Election of Biſhops. Nevertheleſs it permits the People and the Clergy to chooſe them Biſhops, if they were found worthy of it, provided that the Biſhop of Alexandria approve this Election. Laſt of all, the Council made a Decree concerning the Celebration of Eaſter, and ordained that this Feaſt ſhould be Celebrated only on the Sunday. Conſtantine wrote a general Letter to the whole Church, to acquaint them with the Deciſions of this Council, and the Biſhops wrote a Letter particularly to the Chriſtians of Egypt, wherein they inform them exactly of what had been ordained about the Cauſe of the Arians and Meletians, and about the Celebration of Eaſter.

St Ambroſe indeed ſeems to intimate that this Council made a Paſchal Cycle; but theſe Words muſt be ſo underſtood, as meaning only, That the Determination of the Council gave occaſion to make uſe of Cycles. St. Leo adds in Ep. 64. That the Council gave Order to the Biſhop of Alexandria to give notice every Year to the Biſhop of Rome, of Eaſter-day, that he might publiſh it to all the Churches of the World: But if the Council had made this Order, they would have ſignified it in their Letter to the Egyptians, where they ſpeak favourably of Alexander and his Church.

The Council of Nice did not only determine the differences which troubled the Church by its Deciſions, but alſo made Rules concerning the Diſcipline of the Church. Theſe Rules, which are called Canons, are in number Twenty, and there never were more Genuine [k], tho' ſome Modern Authors have added many more.

The Firſt Canon excludes from Sacred Orders, thoſe that made themſelves Eunuchs, but not thoſe who became ſo by Sickneſs, or by the Cruelty of Barbarians.

The 2d forbids to advance thoſe Perſons to the Orders of Prieſt or Biſhop, who were lately Baptized; and Ordains, that thoſe who ſhall be convicted of any Crime, ſhall be deprived of their Eccleſiaſtical Functions.

The 3d forbids Biſhops, Prieſts, Deacons, and other Clergy-men, to keep Women in the Houſe with them; yet it excepts Mothers, Siſters, and other Perſons of whom there can be no bad ſuſpicion.

The 4th Ordains, That a Biſhop ſhould be Ordained by all the Biſhops of the Province, if it can be done; but if it be too difficult to aſſemble them all, either becauſe of an urgent neceſſity, or becauſe of their great diſtance, he may be Ordained by Three Biſhops, provided that thoſe who are abſent be willing, and conſent by their Letter that this Ordination ſhould be made; but it adds, That the validity of what is done in the Province depends upon the Metropolitan.

The 5th Ordains, That none of thoſe who ſhall be ſeparated from the Church by the Biſhops in each Province can be received or reſtored to Communion in any other place; and that enquiry be the better made, whether their Biſhop has juſtly excommunicated them; they Ordain, That Two Synods ſhall be held every Year in every Province, one before Lent, and the other in Autumn.

The 6th Canon is famous for the ſeveral Queſtions it has occaſioned, The moſt natural Sence that can be given to it, is this: "We Ordain, That the Ancient Cuſtom ſhall be obſerved, which gives "Power to the Biſhop of Alexandria, over all the Provinces of Egypt, Lybia, and Pentapolis, becauſe "the Biſhop of Rome has the like Juriſdiction over all the Suburbicary Regions (for this Addition muſt "be ſupplied out of Ruffinus:) We would likewiſe have the Rights and Priviledges of the Church "of Antioch, and the other Churches preſerved; but theſe Rights ought not to prejudice thoſe of the "Metropolitans. If any one is Ordained without the conſent of the Metropolitan, the Council de"clares, That he is no Biſhop: But if any one is Canonically choſen by the Suffrage of almoſt all "the Biſhops of the Province, and if there are but One or Two of a contrary Opinion, the Suffrages "of the far greater number ought to carry it for the Ordination of thoſe particular Perſons. This Canon being thus explained has no difficulty in it. It does not oppoſe the Primacy of the Church of Rome, but neither does it eſtabliſh it. It preſerves to Great Sees their ancient Priviledges, that is, the Juriſdiction or Authority which they had over many Provinces, which was afterwards called the Juriſdiction of the Patriarch or Exarch. In this Sence it is, That it compares the Church of Rome to the Church of Alexandria, by conſidering them all as Patriarchal Churches. It continues alſo to the Church of Antioch, and all the other Great Churches, whatſoever Rights they could have; but leſt their Authority ſhould be prejudicial to the ordinary Metropolitans, who were ſubject to their Juriſdiction. The Council confirms what had been Ordain'd in the Fourth Canon, concerning the Authority of Metropolitans, in the Ordination of Biſhops. This explication is eaſie and natural, and we have given many Proofs of it in our Latin Diſſertation, concerning the ancient Diſcipline of the Church.

[Only ſo far, as it may by a Negative Argument, be hence very ſtrongly concluded, That the See of Rome then claimed none but Priviledges common to it, and other Metropolitical Sees.]

The 7th is, That ſince by ancient Tradition, the Church of Elias, or of Jeruſalem, has been honoured, this Prerogative of Honour ſhall be continued to it, but without prejudice to the Rights of its Metropolis.

The 8th declares, That the Novatians who return to the Church, may continue in the Clergy after they have receiv'd Impoſition of Hands, and made Profeſſion of following the Diſcipline of the Church.

[k] There were never more Genuine.] Theodoret and Ruffinus mention only theſe 20 Canons; tho' the latter reckons 22 of them, yet he own'd no more, becauſe he divided two of them. The Biſhops of Africa found but 20 of them, after they had enquired very diligently all over the Eaſt, for all the Canons made by the Council of Nice. Dionyſius Exiguus, and all the other Collectors of Canons have acknowledged but theſe 20. The Arabick Canons which Echellenſis publiſhed under the Name of the Council of Nice, cannot belong to this Council.

The

That if a Novatian Bishop in a City, where there is a Catholick Bishop, return to the Church, he shall not take the place of the Catholick Bishop, but continue in the Presbytery, unless the Catholick Bishop will allow him the Name of a Bishop: But if he will not, this Novatian Bishop shall continue Priest or Suffragan. The Councils.

The 9th or 10th Ordains, That those Priests shall be degraded, who are found either to have Sacrificed, or to have been guilty of other Crimes befor their Ordination.

The 11th imposes a Penance of Ten Years, upon those who voluntarily renounce the Christian Religion, without being forced, either by the loss of their Estate, or danger of their Life.

The 12th imposes Thirteen Years Penance upon those who having shown their Zeal for the Faith did afterwards Apostatize to obtain Offices: Nevertheless it permits this Penance to be shortned in favour of those who testify much Grief and Remorse.

The 13th renews the ancient Law, which Ordains, That dying Persons shall not be deprived of the last and most necessary Viaticum, that is, of Absolution; but upon condition, That if the sick Person recovers his health, he shall be placed only in the Rank of those who are present only at the Prayers of the Church. It leaves it at the Discretion of the Bishop, to give or to refuse the Communion to dying Persons who desire it.

The 14th turns back those Catechumens to the place of Hearers, who Apostatized when they were ready to receive Baptism, and enjoyns them to continue in that place for Three Years, before they can be restored to the place wherein they were before.

The 15th forbids the Translations of Bishops and Priests, and Ordains, That those who shall be Translated, shall return to their First Church.

The 16th forbids the receiving of Priests, Deacons or Ministers of another Church, without the consent of their Bishop.

The 17th Ordains, That Clergymen who are Usurers, or who take sordid Gain, shall be deposed.

The 18th forbids Deacons to give the Eucharist to Priests, because it is against the Canons, and contrary to Custom, and they have not the power to Offer nor to give the Body of Jesus Christ, to those who do Offer. It forbids them also to take the Eucharist before the Bishops, and advertises them, that they are but inferiour Ministers to Priests; That they ought to receive the Eucharist after them from the hand of a Bishop or a Priest; That 'tis not lawful for them to sit in the place of Priests, and threatens those who do not obey this Rule, with the deprivation of their Ministry.

The 19th Ordains, That the Paulianists shall be re-baptized, who return to the Church; and that if there be found any who had the Name of Clergy-men among these Hereticks, who are worthy of Holy Orders, they shall be deposed. It Ordains the same thing of Deaconesses who are reckoned among the Clergy, tho' they never received Imposition of Hands, that they shall be placed among the Laity.

The last Canon abolishes the Custom of some Churches, wherein they kneeled on Sunday and Whitsunday, and Ordains for keeping Uniformity, that they shall pray to God standing at this time in all Churches.

We must add to the History of this Council Two remarkable Stories related by Socrates and Sozomen, which Socrates says he learned from an old Man who assisted at this Council. The First is concerning Acesius a Novatian Bishop, who being asked by the Emperour, whether he approved the Decision of this Council, answer'd him, That he had received from his Ancestors the Faith which they had decreed, and that he always celebrated Easter on the Day which they had appointed. The Emperour having afterwards asked him, why then did he separate from the Communion of the Church? He alledged the Indulgence which the Church had given from the time of Decius, and said that those who had faln into Crimes ought never to be received into the Communion of the Church, and that they ought to expect pardon from God only, who only could grant it them. The Emperour hearing this Answer, answer'd him pleasantly, O Acesius take then a Ladder, and mount up to Heaven alone. The other Story concerns Paphnutius a Bishop in Egypt, who oppos'd the Canon, which was proposed in the Council for obliging Bishops, Priests and Deacons, to observe Celibacy. This good Man said, that tho' he had lived all his Life-time in Celibacy, yet he did not think, that this Yoke ought to be imposed upon the Clergy. Some question the truth of this Story; I believe they do it rather for fear least this Story might prejudice the present Discipline, than from any solid proof they have for it. But these Persons should consider, that this Canon is purely a matter of Discipline, and that the Discipline of the Church may change according to the Times, and that 'tis not necessary for the Defence of it, to prove that it was always Uniform in all Places.

[This would be an excellent Defence for the Discipline of the Church of Rome in this particular, if there were some Ages wherein Celibacy could more easily be preserved than it can in others; or if the Constitution of Mankind varied according to the Temporal Interests of any one private Church.]

What we have hitherto said, shews, That the Authentical Monuments of the Council of Nice are the Confession of Faith, with the Anathematism subjoined to it, the Letter of the Synod to the Egyptians, the Decree concerning Easter, and the Twenty Canons. I do not think that there ever were any other Acts of this Council[1], since they were unknown to all the ancient Historians. There

[1] I do not think that there ever were any other Acts of this Council.] If there had been any, St. Athanasius would have sent them to his Friend, who desired of him the History of the Council of Nice, or he would have is a Latin Letter of this Synod to St. Sylveſter, extant, but it is ſuppoſititious [m], which has no Authority, and which has all the Marks of Forgery, that any writing can have, as well as the pretended Anſwer of St. Sylveſter [n]. Neither is that Council genuine, which is ſaid to have been aſſembled at Rome by St. Sylveſter for the confirmation of the Council of Nice. The Canons of this Council are alſo Forged [o], which contain Rules contrary to the Practice of that time, and which it had been impoſſible to obſerve.

The Councils.

Conſtantine ſent a Letter to the Catholick Church, which is inſtead of a Synodical Letter of the Council, becauſe by this Letter he publiſhes what was decided concerning Eaſter. He ſays nothing of the cauſe of the Arians and Meletians, becauſe that particularly concerned the Egyptians to whom the Council gave an account of it. He condemned Arius and the Arians: He ſent this Heretick into baniſhment with Secundus and Theonas, who would not ſubſcribe the Decrees of the Synod; and the Council ending happily in the Month of Auguſt, in the Year 325. at the beginning of the Second Year of his Reign, he gave the Biſhops a noble Entertainment, and ſent them home loaded with Preſents, after he had exhorted them to Unity.

bid him read them: But he never did it, and he gives him an account of his own, of what was done in the Council. There is a Paſſage cited out of St. Athanaſius, to prove that he acknowledged other Acts of this Council. 'Tis taken out of the Book of Synods, where mention is made in the Verſion of it, of the Acts of the Council of Nice. But in the Greek it is only τὰ τῶν πατέρων, which has been written by the Fathers; and 'tis plain that he ſpeaks in this place of the Confeſſion of Faith. And that which farther ſhews that there never were any Acts of the Council of Nice, is, that the Fathers of the Council themſelves, in their Letter to the Egyptians, ſay, that their Arch-Biſhop Alexander, ſhould inform them particularly of all that paſſed in the Synod. In a word, neither Ruffinus, nor Socrates, nor Theodoret, nor any ancient Hiſtorian, had ever ſeen or known theſe Acts. St. Jerom ſays, that he had read the Acts of the Council of Nice, but he means only the Creed, the Canons, and the Subſcriptions. The Acts which Gelaſius Cyzicenus attributes to Dalmatius were made ſince the Council, and taken out of Euſebius, Theodoret, Socrates, Sozomen, and other Hiſtorians.

[m] The Letter of the Council to St. Sylveſter is ſuppoſit titious.] The Stile of it is barbarous and intricate. It begins with this Period which has no ſence: Gloriam corroborata de divinis myſteriis. Eccleſiaſticæ utilitatis quæ ad robur pertinent Eccleſiæ Catholicæ & Apoſtolicæ ad ſedem tuam Romanam explanata, & de Græco redacta ſcribere conſitemur; and afterwards, Nunc itaque ad veſtræ ſedis argumentum accurrimus roborari, and ſo on. It is all made up of ſuch kind of ſtuff, the date is ridiculous, wherein the Conſuls are called Sovereigns, an Epithete never given to them, and the Letter is Dated Five or Six Days after the Opening of the Council.

[n] The Anſwer of St. Sylveſter.] The Stile is like that of the former Letter; it ſuppoſes that St. Sylveſter added ſomething to the Council of Nice, it mentions the Cycle of Victorinus, who lived long after St. Sylveſter. The Date of the Conſuls alſo is falſe.

[o] The Canons of this Council are alſo forged.] The Inſcription of this Council diſcovers its Impoſture: There 'tis ſaid, that the Council was held in the preſence of conſtantine, in the City of Rome; but Conſtantine came not to Rome that Year. 'Tis alſo obſerved, that it conſiſted of 275 Biſhops: Who can think that Sylveſter aſſembled ſo numerous a Synod, and yet that it ſhould be unknown to all Antiquity? Why is it not mentioned in ſome ancient Author? The Firſt Canon concerning the time of Eaſter is Non-ſence. The Second is yet more unintelligible: Theſe are the Words of it; Ut unuſquiſque Epiſcopus vediens ad Parochiam ſuam, compaginem ſalutationis plebi tuæ innoteſcat. Thus the Stile of it is as barbarous as is poſſible. The Third Canon forbids the Clergy to appear before Secular Judges for any Cauſe whatſoever. This is contrary to the Diſcipline of that time. The Fourth declares, That thoſe who would enter into Holy Orders, ſhould paſs through all the Degrees, and be One Year Porters, Twenty Years Readers, Ten Years Exorciſts, Five Years Acolyths, as many Years Sub-deacons, and yet as many Deacons, and afterwards Prieſts, and that they cannot be Biſhops till the end of Six Years more; from whence it would follow, that none could be Ordained Biſhops till they were more than 60 Years old; which is ridiculous and contrary to the Practice of the Ancient Church.

Of the pretended COUNCIL of Antioch againſt Euſtathius.

Of Antioch againſt Euſtathius, 330.

IN this Council which was held in 330. Euſebius of Nicomedia, and thoſe of his Faction, depos'd Euſtathius, after the manner which we related, when we gave an Account of the Life and Writings of this Biſhop, and they choſe in his room Paulinus Biſhop of Tyre. 'Tis probable that in this Council they depos'd Aſclepas Biſhop of Gaza, and condemned Eutropius of Adrianople. However this be, this Council has not left any Monument in Writing.

Of the SYNOD of Cæſarea.

Of Cæſarea, 334.

ST. Athanaſius was cited to a Council held at Cæſarea in Paleſtine, in the Year 334. but he did not appear, and there is nothing known of this Synod.

Of the pretended COUNCIL of Tyre againſt St. Athanaſius.

Of Tyre, againſt St. Athanaſius, 335.

THE Emperour called a Council in the Year 335. in the City of Tyre, to judge the Cauſe of St. Athanaſius. He wrote a Letter to the Biſhops of this Synod, wherein he exhorts them to ſettle Peace and Concord in the Church: He recommended it to them to judge juſtly and without Prejudice, and threatned thoſe with baniſhment who would not appear at the Council. He ſent thither Count Dionyſius, with Guards to hinder any Diſorder. This Council conſiſted of Sixty Eaſtern Biſhops, or thereabouts. St. Athanaſius came thither with Forty Biſhops of Egypt; he was forced to appear there as a Criminal. Several Accuſations were propoſed which could not be proved, and ſo they inſiſted upon that of the Chalice, which they alledged he had cauſed to be broken in

Maræotis

Maræotis by his Prieſt Macarius. The Council ſent Deputies to the places to inform themſelves of the Truth or Falſhood of this Story. But ſince the Deputies were the greateſt Enemies of St. Athanaſius, who could not fail of returning their Information to his Diſadvantage, he thought himſelf obliged to retire, and appeal to the Emperour. Some time after, the Deputies returning with an Information, which they had made as they would themſelves, the Synod pronounced againſt him a Sentence of Condemnation and Depoſition. The Councils.

Of the SYNOD of Jeruſalem.

THE Synod of Tyre was not yet finiſhed, when the Emperour ſent a Letter to the Biſhops, wherein he ordered them to come preſently to Jeruſalem, to make there the Dedication of a Magnificent Church which he had built there. They obeyed the Emperour's Orders, and having perform'd this Ceremony with much Pomp, they made a Synod there, wherein they received Arius, &c. I know very well that Valeſius affirms, that Arius was then dead, and that the Council received only the Followers of Arius. But St. Athanaſius ſays plainly, in his Book of the Synods of Ariminum and Seleucia, That Arius and his Followers were received in this Council. We have in St. Athanaſius the Synodical Letter of this Council, written to the Egyptians and Alexandrians, wherein they write to them, that they had received Arius and his Party, after they were ſatisfied that they held very Orthodox Doctrines. Of Jeruſalem, 335.

Of the COUNCIL of Conſtantinople againſt Marcellus of Ancyra.

THE Council of Jeruſalem being ended, the Biſhops came to Conſtantinople, where they held alſo a Synod, wherein they depoſed Marcellus of Ancyra, as convicted by his Writings of renewing the Errour of Paulus Samoſatenus and Sabellius. He had been already accuſed of this Hereſy in the Council of Jeruſalem, and he had promiſed that he would retract it, and burn his Book; but refuſing to do it at Conſtantinople, he was there condemned and depoſed. Of Conſtantinople, againſt Marcellus of Ancyra, 336.

Of the COUNCIL of Conſtantinople againſt Paul Biſhop of that City.

AFter the Death of Conſtantine, Paul of Conſtantinople, who had been baniſhed, returned to Conſtantinople, according to the permiſſion which the Cæſars had given to the exiled Biſhops to return from their Baniſhment. But Euſebius of Nicomedia who had a mind to uſurp the See of this great City, and the Biſhops of his Party being Enemies to Paul, becauſe he was a Defender of St. Athanaſius, ſtirred up againſt him his Prieſt Macedonius, who accuſed him of leading a Life unbecoming the Prieſthood, and they preſently aſſembled a Synod at Conſtantinople, wherein they depoſed him, and choſe in his room Euſebius of Nicomedia. Of Conſtantinople, againſt Paul Biſhop of that City, 338.

Of the COUNCIL of Alexandria, in behalf of St. Athanaſius.

ST. Athanaſius being returned from Triers, whither Conſtantine had baniſhed him, re-entred upon the poſſeſſion of the See of Alexandria, and notwithſtanding the Condemnation of the Council of Tyre, was acknowledged as their Lawful Biſhop; yet being oppoſed a-new by the Euſebians, under the Empire of Conſtantius, he cauſed a Council of a 100 Egyptian Biſhops, or thereabouts, to aſſemble in the Year 340. who wrote in his Favour to all the Biſhops of the World, and cleared him from the Accuſations that were laid againſt him. This Letter is extant in the Second Apology of St. Athanaſius. Of Alexandria, in behalf of St. Athanaſius, 340.

Of the COUNCIL of Rome, under Pope Julius, in behalf of St. Athanaſius.

THE Euſebians deſiring to obtain the Favour of Pope Julius, ſent Deputies to him about the end of the Year 339. to requeſt of him a Council, to judge the cauſe of St. Athanaſius, and declared to him at the ſame time, That if he pleaſed, they would make him judge of their Difference. Julius anſwered them, That it was juſt a Council ſhould be aſſembled in what place they pleaſed; That there they might propoſe their Accuſations againſt St. Athanaſius, and anſwer what he had to ſay againſt them. The Euſebians without waiting for this Synod, where they could not be Judges, any more than St. Athanaſius, aſſembled often-times at Antioch, where they ordained one Gregory, to fill the See of Alexandria, and ſent him to ſeize upon it by main Force. St. Athanaſius underſtanding what they had done, retired to Rome, where he was kindly received by Pope Julius, who wrote immediately to all the Eaſtern Biſhops, that they ſhould come to Rome on the Day which he appointed there to appear before the Synod, which was to be aſſembled about the end of the Year 341. The Euſebians never appeared, and detained the Pope's Legates who brought this Letter, till the Month of January in the next Year. However, The Biſhops of Italy aſſembled in a Church of Rome, and examined the Cauſe of St. Athanaſius, and that of Marcellus of Ancyra. All the Accuſations which had been alledged againſt the former were propoſed, and after he had proved them all to be falſe, he was declared Innocent. Marcellus of Ancyra perſwaded the Biſhops that his Faith was Orthodox, and declared that his Books were miſ-underſtood, and ſo was acquitted alſo. At laſt, the Council prayed Julius to write to the Biſhops of the Eaſt; which he did in the Year 342. Of Rome, in behalf of St. Athanaſius, 341.

after

The Councils.

after the return of his Legates. We have often already ſpoken of this Letter of Julius, and therefore it is not neceſſary to ſay any thing more of it here.

Of the COUNCILS held at Antioch.

Of Antioch, 341, 342.

THE Eaſtern Biſhops having quitted the Deſign they had of appearing before a Council of the Weſt, or of taking the Pope for Judge of their differences with St. Athanaſius, aſſembled at Antioch, in the beginning of the Year 341. and there held a Synod of Ninety Biſhops or thereabouts. The occaſion of this Synod was the Celebration of the Dedication of the Church of Antioch. But as it was the Cuſtom of the Biſhops, when they were aſſembled to make ſome Eccleſiaſtical Rules, ſo theſe thought fit to compoſe New Confeſſions of Faith, and to make Canons concerning the Diſcipline of the Church.

In the Firſt of theſe Confeſſions of Faith, they declare, that they are not followers of Arius, and that they have no other Faith but what they received by Tradition; that they reſtore Arius, becauſe they found that his Doctrines were Orthodox, but that they do not follow him. After this Proteſtation there followed a Confeſſion of Faith, wherein they do not uſe the Word Conſubſtantial, but they declare, That they believe in one only Son of God, coexiſtent with his Father who begot him, by whom all things were made; and in the Holy Spirit. This was the Firſt Confeſſion of Faith that was made after that of the Council of Nice; and it was quickly followed by a Second made by the ſame Biſhops in the ſame place, wherein they enlarge much more upon the Attributes of Jeſus Chriſt: They ſay, That he was born of the Father before all Worlds, That he is God of God, Whole of Whole, a perfect Being, &c. That he is the perfect Image and exact Reſemblance of the Divinity, of the Subſtance, of the Will, the Power and Glory of the Father. They add, That the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, are not Three different Names, but Three Subſtances, and that they are one in Will. They pronounce an Anathema againſt thoſe who ſay, That there was an Age or a Moment before the Generation of the World, or who ſay, That he is a Creature formed like other Creatures. Theſe expreſſions of being one by Will, of being a Creature like others, and ſome others like them, which are in this Confeſſion of Faith, render it very much ſuſpected.

For this reaſon perhaps it diſpleaſed ſome Biſhops of the Synod, which obliged Theophronius Biſhop of Tyana to make a Third Confeſſion, which was approved by all, wherein they profeſs to believe in Jeſus Chriſt, The only Son of God, God, the Word, the Power and Wiſdom, by which all things were created, who was begotten of the Father before all Worlds, perfect God of perfect God, who exiſts in the Father Hypoſtatically. This Confeſſion of Faith has nothing that could render it ſuſpected, but only the omiſſion of the Word Conſubſtantial. Theſe are the Three Confeſſions of Faith which were made in this Council.

As to what concerns the Diſcipline of the Church, theſe Biſhops ſuppoſing that St. Athanaſius had been fairly judged in the Council of Tyre, though they had no more to do but ordain a Biſhop in his room. At firſt they caſt their Eyes upon Euſebius of Edeſſa, a Diſciple of Euſebius of Cæſarea, and of Patrophilus of Scythopolis: But this Prudent Man refuſing it, leſt he ſhould be affronted by the People of Alexandria who loved St. Athanaſius, they choſe Gregory, and prayed the Emperour to ſend him with a ſtrong Force to Alexandria, to take Poſſeſſion of that Church.

Afterwards they made 25 Canons concerning the Diſcipline of the Church, whoſe Authority has been Diſputed, upon the account of thoſe who made them. St. Chryſoſtom and Pope Innocent reject them, as being compoſed by Arians; yet they were inſerted into the Code of the Univerſal Church, and cited in the Council of Chalcedon, where ſome Canons of this Council of Antioch are quoted; and ſince that time they have had a place in all the Collections of Eccleſiaſtical Canons. And indeed, they contain the Wiſeſt and the Juſteſt Rules that ever were obſerved in the ancient Church; which has made ſome Authors believe, That part of them at leaſt were made by another Synod; but their Conjectures will not hold, and it is evident, that the 4th 12th and 15th were made by this Synod, ſince they are the ſame which St. Chryſoſtom and Pope Innocent reject, becauſe they were made by Arians. This being evident, ſay I, 'tis very probable, that all the other Canons were made by the ſame Council, eſpecially ſince in all the Collections, they are attributed to one Synod of Antioch only, which was held ſoon after the Council of Nice.

But we muſt carefully diſtinguiſh this Council of Antioch, of which we have juſt now ſpoken, that was held in the Year 341. from another Synod made up of a part of the ſame Biſhops, who aſſembled in the beginning of the Year 342. for this laſt was held after St. Athanaſius was acquitted, when the Biſhops of the Eaſt ſent back the Pope's Legates, after they had been detained till January, in the Year 342. 'Twas in the name of this Synod that they wrote a Letter to Julius, wherein they excuſe themſelves, for not being able to come to the Synod of Rome which he had aſſembled, both upon the account of the War with the Perſians, and becauſe of the ſhortneſs of the time between the delivery of Julius's Letter to them, and the Day which he had ſignified to them for the meeting of the Synod. They took it ill that Julius had written to them all alone, and had addreſſed his Letter only to Euſebius; but above all they complained, that he had taken into his Communion, Athanaſius and Marcellus, who were condemned and depoſed.

Probably 'twas in this laſt Synod that the Fourth Confeſſion of Faith was compoſed, which is produced by St. Athanaſius. It comes very near to that of the Council of Nice, ſaving only that it omits the Word Conſubſtantial. They made it, as St. Athanaſius obſerves, to ſend it into the Weſt to the Emperour Conſtans.

The

The 1ſt Canon of the Council of Antioch confirms the Decree of the Council of Nice, concerning the Celebration of Eaſter.

The 2d condemns thoſe who would never communicate, and who have an averſion to the receiving of the Euchariſt, and forbids the holding Communion with thoſe that are excommunicated, under the Penalty of being excommunicated themſelves.

The Councils.

The 3d forbids Clergy-men to forſake their Churches to abide in others, and ordains that he who will not return, being recall'd by his own Biſhop, ſhall be depoſed, and that the Biſhop who detains him ſhall be puniſhed by the Synod.

The 4th ordains, That in caſe a Biſhop being depoſed by a Synod, and a Prieſt or a Deacon being depoſed by his Biſhop, ſhall dare to diſcharge the Functions of their Offices before they be reſtored, they can never hope to be reſtored in another Synod; That they ſhall not be permitted to defend themſelves; and that all thoſe ſhall be excommunicated who have communicated with them, and knew the Judgment that was given againſt them.

The 5th is, That if a Prieſt or a Deacon deſpiſing his Biſhop, ſeparate from the Church, and make private Meetings, ſetting up a New Altar, and will not obey his Biſhop, when he ſhall be admoniſh'd and call'd back again two or three times, he can no longer hope to continue in his Office, and if he continue to trouble the Church, the Aid of the Secular Arm may be implored to chaſtiſe this ſeditious Perſon.

The 6th forbids the receiving of an excommunicated Perſon, until he has been reſtored to Communion by his Biſhop.

The 7th ordains, That no Perſon ſhall be received into Communion, who has not Letters of Peace, i. e. Letters teſtifying that he is not ſeparated from the Communion of the Church.

The 8th declares, That theſe Letters cannot be given by the Prieſts who are in the Country Villages, or at leaſt that they cannot addreſs them but only to their neighbouring Biſhops; but that the Suffragans may grant them.

The 9th ordains, That the Biſhops of the Province reverence their Metropolitan, and do nothing of conſequence without him, but only take care of the Dioceſs, to ordain Prieſts and Deacons, and to regulate the particular Affairs of their Church; but to do nothing more without the Metropolitan, who ought likewiſe to do no conſiderable thing without taking the Advice of the Biſhops of the Province.

The 10th regulates the Rights of Suffragans. In enjoyns them not to exalt themſelves above their Rank; to take care of the Churches which are ſubject to them, without meddling with the Affairs of others. It permits them in their own Churches to ordain Readers, Sub-Deacons and Exorciſts, but it forbids them to ordain Prieſts and Deacons, tho' they have even received Impoſition of Epiſcopal Hands, that is, tho' they have been ordained Biſhops. Laſtly, it ordains, That the Suffragan ſhould be ordained by the Biſhop of the City.

The 11th ordains, That in caſe a Biſhop, or a Prieſt, or another Clergyman addreſs to the Emperour without the Conſent of the Biſhops of the Province, and chiefly of the Metropolitan, he ought to be excommunicated and depoſed; but if he has any Affairs which oblige him to wait upon the Emperour, he may do it with the conſent of the Metropolitan and and the Biſhops of the Province, which ſhall be expreſſed in the Letters which they give him.

The 12th forbids Clergymen, who have been depoſed by their Biſhop, to addreſs themſelves to the Emperour, to obtain Reſtitution; and takes from them who ſhall do it all hopes of being reſtored.

The 13th forbids Biſhops to paſs from one Province to another to ordain there, unleſs they be called by the Metropolitan of the Province, and nulls every thing which ſhall be done by one Biſhop of a Province.

The 14th ſays, That in caſe the Biſhops of one Province cannot agree about judging of a Biſhop, the Metropolitan may call the Biſhops of the neighbouring Province, to judge and decide this Controverſy.

But it is ordained in the 15th, That if a Biſhop is condemned unanimouſly by all the Biſhops of the Province, he cannot be judged a-new, and that the Sentence of the Synod of the Province ought to remain firm.

The 16th declares, That if a Biſhop who has no Biſhoprick, invade a vacant Church, without the Authority of a Synod, he ought to be driven away from it, tho' the People of the Church whereof he is Biſhop ſhould chooſe him. It adds, That a Synod cannot be compleat and lawful without the preſence of the Metropolitan.

The 17th declares, That if any being ordained Biſhop, refuſe to accept of the Biſhoprick, he is to continue excommunicated, until ſuch time as he accepts it, or that the Synod of the Province has otherwiſe determined about it: But if it be none of his Fault, that he does not go to his Church, but becauſe the People of the Church will not receive him, it is ordained in the 18th Canon, that he ſhall have the Honour and Place of a Biſhop, upon condition that he do not any wiſe trouble the Church wherein he ſhall continue.

The 19th forbids the Ordination of a Biſhop without a Synod, and without the preſence of the Metropolitan. It adds, That 'tis convenient that all the Biſhops of the Province ſhould be preſent at this Synod with him; but if this cannot be done, yet they muſt be Summoned to it, and ſeveral of them muſt give their Suffrages, either in the Synod, or by Letters: That if the Ordination be made otherwiſe, it ſhall not be good; but if ſome particular Perſons out of a Spirit of Contradiction conteſt it after it is thus made, the Suffrages of the major part ſhould carry it.

The 20th ordains, That every Year two Synods ſhall be held in a Province; viz. the Firſt, the

The Councils.

Third Week after Eaſter, and the Second in the Month of July, that ſo Prieſts, Deacons, and in ſhort, all thoſe who pretend that their Biſhop has done them any Injury, may have recourſe to the Synod. It forbids alſo to keep theſe Synods without the Metropolitans.

The 21ſt forbids the Tranſlations of Biſhops.

The 22d forbids a Biſhop to meddle within the Dioceſs of another, and to make any Ordination there.

The 23d forbids a Biſhop to ordain his Succeſſor.

The 24th provides for the preſervation of the Church-Lands: It gives the management of them to the Biſhops; but it ordains, that the Prieſts ſhall take cognizance of the Lands of the Church, leſt after the Death of the Biſhop his Heirs ſeize upon them.

The Laſt regulates the uſes to which the Biſhop ſhould apply the Revenue of the Church: It ordains, That he ſhall diſpoſe of them, for the good of the Poor and of Strangers; and that he ſhall be content with neceſſaries, according to the command of the Apoſtle St. Paul; That he ſhall not keep the remainder to himſelf; That he ſhall not give it to his Brethren or to his Children, but that he ſhall diſtribute it according to the Advice of the Prieſts and Deacons; That if he does not do it, he ſhall be accountable to the Synod of the Province; and Laſtly, That if the Prieſts and the Biſhop be accuſed of conſpiring together, to appropriate to themſelves the Eccleſiaſtical Revenues, the Synod ſhall examine this Accuſation, and ſhall puniſh them if it be found true.

Of the COUNCIL of Antioch.

Of Antioch, 345.

THE Euſebians aſſembled alſo at Antioch, about the end of the Year 345. or the beginning of the next Year, and there made a large Confeſſion of Faith, which they ſent into the Weſt, by Eudoxus, Martyrius, and Macedonius. 'Tis quoted as well as the others by St. Athanaſius. There they make profeſſion of believing in Jeſus Chriſt, the only Son of God, begotten of his Father before all Worlds, God of God, Light of Light; and they condemn thoſe that ſay, that he is not God, or that he was made of nothing, and thoſe that ſay, There are Three Gods, and thoſe that confound the Divine Perſons. This Confeſſion is Catholick, tho' the Term Conſubſtantial is not found in it.

Of the COUNCIL of Milan.

Of Milan, 346.

THE Biſhops of the Weſt being aſſembled at this Council to find out ſome means of determining the Differences of the Biſhops which troubled the Peace of the Church, the Deputies of the Eaſtern Biſhops came thither, and propoſed that large Confeſſion of Faith laſt mentioned to them: The Weſtern Biſhops for their part declared, That the Nicene Creed muſt be approved, and Arius condemned. This Propoſition provoked the Deputies of the Biſhops of the Eaſt who retired in great anger. Urſacius and Valens were received into Communion in this Council, after they had preſented a Manifeſto, wherein they condemn the Hereſies of Arius and Photinus. The Error of the latter was alſo condemned in this Synod. This Council was held in the Year 346. For, Firſt, It was aſſembled when the Deputies of the Council of Antioch came into the Weſt, and brought with them their long Confeſſion of Faith; and St. Athanaſius ſays, That they did this Three Years after the Firſt Deputation, which they made about the end of the Year 342. Secondly, Liberius ſays, in his Letter to Conſtantius, compoſed in the Year 354. That it was then Eight Years ſince the Legates who came from the Eaſt, withdrew from the Council of Milan in great diſcontent. Laſtly, St. Athanaſius ſays, that Conſtantius commanded him to appear at Milan, in the Fourth Year of his Abode in the Weſt; and he came in 341. and therefore this Synod was held about the end of the Year 345. or the beginning of the Year 346.

Of the COUNCIL of Cologne againſt Euphratas.

Of Cologne, againſt Euphratas, 346.

THere is commonly placed in the Year 346. a Synod which is thought to have been held at Cologne, and wherein 'tis ſaid that Euphrates Biſhop of this City was depoſed, for denying the Divinity of Jeſus Chriſt. The Acts of this Council are extant in the Second Tome of the Councils, p. 615. But I find there is great probability that theſe Acts were forged, and that this Hiſtory is falſe: For this Euphratas, who is ſaid to have been depoſed in this Synod, in the Year 346. i. e. in the next Year after the Conſulſhip of Amantius and Albinus, was preſent the Year after at the Council of Sardica as a Catholick Biſhop, and was alſo one of the Deputies whom the Council ſent into the Eaſt, as appears by the Teſtimonies of St. Athanaſius and Theodoret. Is it poſſible that a Biſhop, who was a little before convicted of denying the Divinity of the Son, and then depoſed, ſhould be preſent at the Council of Sardica among the Catholick Biſhops, and ſhould be choſen for a Deputy by the whole Council? Some ſay, that this Council was held after that of Sardica; but this Hypotheſis which is contrary to the Date of the Acts, may alſo be eaſily deſtroyed: For Maximinus of Triers who is thought to have preſided at this Council, as the Acts teſtify, died ſoon after the Council of Sardica, ſince it is certain, by the Teſtimony of St. Athanaſius, in his Epiſtle to thoſe that lead a Monaſtick Life, That Paulinus the Succeſſor of Maximinus, was Biſhop of Triers when Urſacius and Valens retracted, i. e. in the Year 349. But from the Year 347 to 349. Euphratas was always out of France, and conſequently it is impoſſible that he ſhould be Depoſed by Maximinus of Triers.

There is alſo another Argument which proves the Acts of the Council of Cologne to be forged. Servatus Biſhop of Tongres, ſays, that he reproved Euphratas in the preſence of St. Athanaſius. Now this this Bishop could not have seen St. Athanasius, but upon Two Occasions. First, when this Saint was at Triers; and Secondly, when Servatus was sent into the East by Magnentius: But he could not reprove Euphratas in the presence of St. Athanasius, neither when this Father was at Triers, since Euphratas could not be accus'd of this Error before the Council of Sardica, nor when he was sent Deputy into the East; for then Maximinus of Triers, who is said to have presided at the Council of Cologne, was dead, as we have just now shown. The Councils.

The Subscriptions of these Acts do also plainly discover their Forgery: For there you may read the Names of Desiderius of Langres, and of Simplicianus of Autun, who lived in the Fifth Age of the Church; there is also the Name of Discolus Bishop of Rheims, who is not to be found in the Catalogue of the Bishops of that Church. Lastly, Severinus who is said to have been Ordained in the room of Euphratas, was still alive in the Year 402. according to the Testimony of Sulpitius Severus. 'Tis true the Names of Desiderius and Discolus are amongst the Names of the Bishops of France, in the Subscriptions of the Letter of the Council of Sardica; but 'tis probable that he that forged these Acts, took from thence these Names, and added to them the Names of the Bishopricks. However it be, these Acts were unknown to all the ancient Historians, who make no mention of this History, nor of the Council of Cologne. The First who cited them is the Author of the Acts of Servatus of Tongres, which the Learned now own to be suppositious. After him Servatus Lupus mentions them in the Life of Maximius: Hogerius Abbot of Lobbes, and some Modern Authors mention them; but their Authority is of little weight in so ancient a Matter as this.

Of the COUNCIL of Sardica.

THE Emperours Constantius and Constans desiring to restore Peace to the Church, called a Synod of the Eastern and Western Bishops at Sardica, in the Year 347 [a]. Thither came 100 Bishops from the West, and 73 Bishops from the East [b]. But those of the East having declared to those of the West, that they would not be present at the Council, unless St. Athanasius, Marcellus, and the other Bishops that were condemned, were excluded from Ecclesiastical Communion, and the Western Bishops refusing to accept of this Condition, the Council was divided, and the Eastern Bishops withdrew. Those of the West, of whom Hosius was the Head and President [c], did notwithstanding hold a Synod in their absence, to treat of the Faith, and of the Accusations charged upon St. Athanasius, and the other Catholick Bishops; and to make Canons concerning the Dicipline of the Church. In Matters of Faith, they all Agreed, that they must not make any new Creed, but must hold to that of the Council of of Nice: Yet some particular Persons would have made a new Creed, in imitation of the Bishops of the East, but all the Council disapproved their Design. The Creed then drawn up is preserved by Theodoret, Ch. 8. of the 2d B. of his History. Afterwards the Council took into their consideration, the personal Accusations against St. Athanasius and Marcellus of Ancyra. The First justified himself and was acquitted; the Second having alledged that Eusebius and his Adversaries took for Affirmations what he propos'd as Objections, was also restored. Asclepas Bishop of Gaza was restored; Theodorus of Heraclea, Narcissus of Neronius, Stephen of Antioch, George of Laodicea, Menophantus of Ephesus, Ursacius of Singidunum, Valens of Mursa, and Patrophilus of Scythopolis, were Excommunicated and Deposed. Of Sardica, 347.

Lastly, The Council produced Twenty Canons, and wrote Three Letters. The First which was addressed to all the Bishops, is to the Church of Alexandria by St. Athanasius, and by St. Hilary in his Fragments; the Second is to Julius, which is in St. Hilary in the same place, and the Third produced by St. Athanasius. There was also a long Letter to the Emperours, which was in St. Hilary's Book, but is not now in his Fragments, nor any where else.

On the other side, the Eastern Bishops who withdrew from Sardica, assembled at Philippopolis, and wrote a Letter from thence, which they dated from Sardica, addressed to all the Bishops of the World. There they cry out upon St. Athanasius, Marcellus of Ancyra, and Asclepas, and make them

[a] The Emperours Constantius and Constans called a Council at Sardica in the Year 347.] Socrates B. II. Ch. 20. and Sozomen B. III. Ch. 11. testify that it was called in this Year. St. Athanasius confirms this Epocha, because he says, that it was held a Year after the Council of Milan. It appears by the express Testimonies of St. Athanasius, that this Council was called by the Emperours. Hosius says the same thing in his Letter to the Emperour, and the Historians, Socrates, Sozomen, Theodoret and Sulpitius. Severus follow this Opinion. Socrates indeed says, the Bishops of the East complain'd, that Julius had allowed too little time for coming to the Synod; but he confounds what they say about the Council of Rome, with what concerns the Council of Sardica.

[b] Thither came 100 Bishops from the West, and 73 from the East.] St. Athanasius in his Letter to those that lead a Monastick Life, says, that this Council consisted of 170 Bishops or thereabouts. Now it appears by the Subscriptions of the Letter of the Bishops of the East, that these Bishops from the East were 73. St. Athanasius indeed says, That the Letter of the Council of Sardica containing his Absolution, was signed by 300 Bishops, but this is to be understood not only of those who were present at the Council, but also of those who subscribed after the Council was over, to its Synodical Letter.

[c] Of whom Hosius was Head and President.] The Name of this Bishop is the First in the Subscriptions which are in St. Athanasius, who says, That he was the Head and President of all the Councils where he was present. Theodoret says expressly, That he presided in this Council, B. II. Ch. 15. of his History, as well as Sozomen, B. 3. Ch. 11. and the Council of Chalcedon in their Discourse to Marcianus, Tome IV. of the Councils, p. 825. Petrus de Marca has affirmed, That he presided in this Council, in the Name of the Pope, but his Opinion is not founded on any solid Argument. The Pope's Legates signed after him, and declared, That they only represented his Person: Julius Roma per Archidamum & Philozenum Presbyteros.

pass

The Councils.

paſs for wicked Rogues. They declare, That they do not join with the Biſhops of the Weſt, becauſe they had received into their Communion thoſe Biſhops who were depoſed in the Eaſt, and upon the account of this pretended violation of their Authority, they excommunicate Hoſius, Protogenes, Gaudentius, Maximinus and Julius. They complain that the whole World was turned upſide down, and the whole Church diſturbed for the ſake of One or Two wicked Fellows. They accuſe the Biſhops of the Weſt of Arrogance, and reprove them for endeavouring to eſtabliſh a new Law, to give themſelves the liberty of examining a-new what had been determined in the Eaſt. They obſerve that the ancient Diſcipline of the Church is contrary to this Practice, and that the Judgments given in the Eaſt ought to be confirmed in the Weſt, as thoſe of the Weſt were received in the Eaſt. They prove this Rule by ſeveral Examples. Laſtly, they add to this Letter a Confeſſion of Faith, wherein they make profeſſion of Believing in the Son of God, begotten of the Father before all Worlds, God of God, Light of Light, who created all things; and they condemn thoſe who ſay, That the Son was made of nothing, or that he is of another Subſtance than the Divine Subſtance, and that he is not of God, or that there was a time when he was not the Son of God; as alſo, they anathematize thoſe who ſay, That there are Three Gods, or that Jeſus Chriſt is not God, or that there is not one Chriſt only the Son of God, or that he is the ſame Perſon with the Father or the Holy Spirit. This Letter which is preſerved in the Fragments of St. Hilary, is addreſſed to Gregory of Alexandria, to Amphion of Nicomedia, and to ſeveral other Biſhops, and among the reſt to Donatus of Carthage. For which reaſon the Donatiſts urge it in the Conference of Carthage, and the Catholick Biſhops being ignorant of this Hiſtory, ſay, That the Council of Sardica was made up of Arian Biſhops. Some ſay, That Paul of Conſtantinople was reſtored in the Council of Sardica, others who follow Epiphanius, ſay, That Photinus was condemned there. They are both miſtaken, for Paul was dead, and Photinus was not condemned in this Synod.

I have only now to give an Abridgment of the ſubject Matter of the Canons of the Council of Sardica. Theſe Canons were not compoſed as thoſe of other Councils in the form of Laws; but they are propoſitions made by Hoſius and ſome other Biſhops, which are approved by all the Synod.

In the 1ſt Hoſius ſays, That they ought wholly to aboliſh a wicked Cuſtom and pernicious Abuſe, by hindering Biſhops to paſs from one See to another. And having declared that Avarice and Ambition are the only cauſes of theſe Tranſlations, becauſe there is no Example of a Biſhop who ever quitted a great Biſhoprick to take a little one. He propoſes for a ſevere puniſhment of this Fault, that thoſe who are guilty of it ſhall be excluded from Lay-Communion. And all the Fathers of the Council anſwered, We agree to it.

In the 2d Canon Hoſius adds, That the ſame Sentence ought to be pronounced againſt thoſe who excuſe themſelves, becauſe they were deſired by the Faithful of their Second Church; and the Synod ordains that it ſhall be ſo.

The three following Canons concern Eccleſiaſtical Deciſions. It had been ordained in the Council of Antioch, That the Deciſion of the Council of the Province could not be invalidated, and that if the Biſhops of the Province could not agree, they ſhould call in thoſe of the Neighbouring Province.

The Council of Sardica falls foul upon theſe Two Deciſions: For in the Third Canon Hoſius propoſes, Firſt, that it ſhould be forbidden to appeal to Judges of a neighbouring Province; and Secondly, he ſays, That for the Honour of the Memory of St. Peter, he judged it convenient, with the leave of the Council, to Ordain, That if a Biſhop condemned in his own Country thought himſelf innocent, thoſe who had judged him ſhould write of it to the Biſhop of Rome, to enquire whether the Cauſe of the Biſhop accuſed ſhould be examined a-new: That if he, and the Judges whom he ſhould name were of this Opinion, they muſt proceed to a new Deciſion upon the place; but if he did not think fit that the Cauſe ſhould be examined a-new, then the Sentence already paſt muſt ſtand good.

Gaudentius adds in the Fourth Canon, That a Biſhop depoſed by a Synod of the Province, who deſires this new Deciſion, muſt not be expell'd his See, till the Biſhop of Rome has determined, whether the Cauſe ought to be determined a-new.

Laſtly, In the 5th Canon, according to the Greek, and the 7th according to the Edition of Dionyſius Exiguus, Hoſius ſays, That when the Biſhop of Rome thinks fit that the Cauſe of a Biſhop ſhould be examined a Second time, he ought to write to the Biſhops next adjoyning to his Province, That they examine the whole Matter with Care and Exactneſs; That he muſt alſo be impowred to ſend Legates in his own Name to this New Synod, unleſs he think it more convenient to leave the judging of the Cauſe to the neighbouring Biſhops of the Province only, without ſending thither his Legates. The Biſhops of the Council approve theſe Propoſitions of Hoſius and Gaudentius. Theſe three Canons have occaſioned great Diſputes, which would quickly vaniſh, if Men would confine themſelves to the Words of the Council of Sardica, which ſufficiently diſcover; Firſt, That the Diſcipline which theſe Fathers eſtabliſh is New; Secondly, That they do not give the Biſhop of Rome power to judge the Cauſe of a Biſhop, in his own Tribunal at Rome; but they only give him Authority to enquire whether it were well or ill determined; and in caſe that he find it was determined wrong to order a New Deciſion of it in the Country, and by the neighbouring Biſhops of the Province where it was determined, whither he might ſend Legates in his own Name to be preſent, if he thought it convenient. This is the Natural Sence of the three Canons of this Council, which I have explained more at large, in my Second Diſſertation of the Diſcipline of the Church.

The 5th Canon, according to the Edition of Dionyſius Exiguus declares, That if there remains but one Biſhop in a Province, and he will not ordain other Biſhops, the Biſhops ought to come to him and joyn with him in ordaining; but if he perſiſt in his unwillingneſs and will not meet them them for ordaining Biſhops, the neighbouring Biſhops alone may then ordain them without his Conſent. This is the Propoſition of Hoſius, to which the Council agreed.

The 6th is, That a Biſhop ought not to be ordained in a Borrough or little City, where a Prieſt is ſufficient, leſt the Dignity of a Biſhop be leſſened.

The following Canons are about the Journeys of Biſhops to Court. Hoſius for hindering them to go thither continually, and importune the Emperour by their frequent Petitions, thought fit to ordain, Firſt, That none of the Biſhops ſhall go to Court, unleſs he be required by the Emperour's Letters.

Secondly, That thoſe who ſhall have Requeſts or Petitions to make for the Poor of their Churches, ſhall only ſend thither a Deacon.

Thirdly, That this Deacon, before he goes to Court, ſhall addreſs himſelf to his Metropolitan, to whom he ſhall make known the occaſion of his Petitions, and of whom he ſhall obtain Letters of Requeſt and Recommendation.

Fourthly, That thoſe who ſhall go to Rome, ſhall addreſs themſelves to the Biſhop of that City, who having examined their Petitions, ſhall write of them to Court if he finds them Juſt.

Fifthly, Gaudentius adds, That for putting theſe Rules in Execution, the Biſhops which lie upon the Road, ſhall ask the Biſhops whom they ſhall ſee going to Court, and if they find that they have not obſerved the Canons above-mentioned, they ſhall not receive them into their Communion. But becauſe theſe Rules were New, Hoſius moderates this Penalty, and ſays, That they muſt firſt make them known to theſe Biſhops, and perſwade them to ſend a Deacon to Court from the place where they ſhall be, and then return to their own Dioceſs. Theſe Propoſitions are approved by the Council, and contained in the Canons 8, 9, 10, 11, 12.

In the 13th Hoſius ſays, That he thought it neceſſary to ordain, That Biſhopricks ſhall only be given to thoſe who have diſcharged the Offices of Reader and Deacon, or Prieſt, for a conſiderable time. The Biſhops of the Council approve this Propoſition.

In the 14th Hoſius ſays, That it ought to be ordained, that a Biſhop ſhould not continue longer than three Weeks in the Dioceſs of another, and out of his own. All the Biſhops are of this Opinion: But Hoſius moderates this Law in the following Canon, in favour of thoſe who have an Eſtate out of their Dioceſs, and who are obliged to continue there more than three Weeks for their Affairs, but he would have them forbidden after this time is ſpent, to go to the great Church of the City, and orders them to be preſent only at the Offering of a Prieſt.

In the 16th Hoſius propoſes the renewing of that Law, which forbids a Biſhop to give the Communion to him who is excommunicated by his own Biſhop: And the Biſhops of the Council ſay, That this Rule will preſerve Peace and Concord.

The 17th allows Prieſts and Deacons, who are condemned by their own Biſhop to appeal to the Judgment of the Biſhops of the Province.

In the 18th the Biſhop Januarius deſires, that a Biſhop may be forbidden to ſollicite the Clergy of another Biſhop, that he may ordain them in his own Dioceſs. The Council anſwers, That theſe Conteſts occaſion Diſcord among Biſhops, and is of Opinion, that it ought not to be done.

Hoſius adds in the 19th Canon, That the Ordination of a Clergy-man of another Dioceſs ought to be void, and that the Biſhop who ſhall do it, ought to be puniſhed.

In the 20th the Biſhop Aëtius having remonſtrated, that many Prieſts and Deacons, Strangers, continued a long time at Theſſalonica, the Synod ordains, That the Rules made with reſpect to Biſhops may oblige theſe Perſons.

The 21ſt Canon according to the Edition of Dionyſius Exiguus, which we have followed, declares, That according to the Remonſtrance of the Biſhop Olympus, the Council is of Opinion, that a Biſhop forced away from his own Dioceſs, for the Defence of the Diſcipline of the Church, or of the Faith and Truth, may continue in the Biſhoprick of another, till he can return to his own, for it would be great Inhumanity not to receive him who is perſecuted, and that on the contrary, much Civility and Kindneſs ought to be ſhewn to him.

There are in the Greek two other Canons which concern a particular Buſineſs. The Biſhop Gaudentius ſays to the Biſhop Aëtius, That ſince he had had no trouble in his Dioceſs, from the time that he was Biſhop of it, he thought that he ought to receive thoſe who were ordained by Muſæus and Eutychianus. Hoſius judged that he ought not to admit thoſe who being ordained would not continue in the Churches to which they are named. He adds, That Eutychianus and Muſæus ought not to be look'd upon as Biſhops, but if they deſired Lay-Communion, it ſhould not be refuſed them.

Theſe Canons end with theſe Words in the Edition of Dionyſius Exiguus. The whole Council hath ſaid; The Catholick Church ſpread over all the Earth, ſhall obſerve what has been now ordained.

However, The Canons of the Council of Sardica were never received by the Catholick Church, as general Laws. They were never put into the Code of the Canons of the Univerſal Church, approv'd by the Council of Chalcedon. The Eaſt never received them, neither would the Biſhops of Africa own them. The Popes only uſed them, and cited them under the Name of the Council of Nice, to give them the greater Weight and Authority.

Of the Firſt COUNCIL of Sirmium.

THE Firſt Council of Sirmium was made up of Weſtern Biſhops; it was held in the Year 349. Two Years after that of Milan. Photinus who had been already excommunicated, was there condemned, but he could not be forced away from his See, and therefore the Weſtern Biſhops only gave notice to the Eaſtern of the Judgment they had given againſt this Heretick. This is related in the Fragments of St. Hilary.

Of the Firſt of Sirmium, gave 349.

The Councils.

Of the Second COUNCIL of Sirmium.

Of the Second of Sirmium, 351.

THE Second Council of Sirmium was made up of Eaſtern Biſhops, aſſembled by the Emperour Conſtantius, in the Year 351. Baſil of Ancyra entred the Liſts there againſt Photinus, and convicted him of Hereſy. He was afterwards Depoſed by the Biſhops, and ſent into baniſhment by the Authority of the Emperour. In this Council was made the Firſt Creed of Sirmium, wherein the Biſhops make profeſſion of believing in Jeſus Chriſt the only Son of God, born of his Father before all Worlds, God of God, Light of Light, by Whom all Things were made. There they anathematize thoſe that ſaid, He was created of nothing, or of another Subſtance, or that he was not of God, or that he was made in Time; Thoſe that ſaid there are Two Gods, or thoſe who on the contrary averr'd, That the Father, or at leaſt one part of him, was born of Mary, and alſo thoſe who make no diſtinction of the Three Divine Perſons, or who ſaid, That the Divinity was changed into Fleſh, and that it was ſubject to Sufferings and Changes. This is the Sum of that long Creed quoted in Greek by St. Athanaſius, and in Latin by St. Hilary, who has conſidered and explained it as a very Orthodox Confeſſion of Faith.

Of the COUNCIL of Arles.

Of Arles, 353.

CONſtantius had a long time deſired to get Athanaſius condemned by the Weſtern Biſhops. To compaſs this Deſign, he aſſembled a Synod in the Year 353. in the City of Arles. The Pope ſent for Legates Vincentius of Capua, and another Biſhop of Campania called Marcellus; and ordered them to deſire the Meeting of a Council in the City of Aquileia. Theſe Legates being arrived at the Council of Arles, deſired that they would begin with handling the Doctrine, and with condemning the Errour of Arius, before they ſpoke of the Cauſe of St. Athanaſius: But Urſacius and Valens who had no other Deſign but to procure the Condemnation of St. Athanaſius, would not admit this Propoſition; and forced the Biſhops of the Council, and even the Pope's Legates to ſubſcribe the condemnation of this Saint. There was none but only Paulinus Biſhop of Triers that continued ſtedfaſt, and for this Reaſon he was baniſhed immediately.

Of the COUNCIL of Milan.

Of Milan, 355.

LIberius being informed of the Fall of his Legates, ſendeth Lucifer Biſhop of Calaris, to wait upon the Emperour, and deſire of him a new Synod. The Emperour granted him one, and caus'd it to meet at Milan, in the Year 355. but it did not anſwer the Pope's Expectation. The Emperour cauſed the Biſhops of the Eaſt and the Weſt to be Summoned to it; but yet it was compos'd only of the Weſtern Biſhops. There came almoſt 300 to it. Thither they brought Euſebius of Vercelles, and Lucifer of Calaris, who was the Pope's Legate, together with Pancratius the Prieſt, and Hilary the Deacon. Theſe were invited to the Synod, and were urged to ſubſcribe the Condemnation of St. Athanaſius: They anſwer'd, That they muſt Firſt handle Matters of Faith; That they ſaw in the Aſſembly ſome Hereticks, or ſuch as were ſuſpected of Hereſy; That in the Firſt place they muſt make profeſſion of the Faith contained in the Nicene Creed. Dionyſius of Milan took Pen and Paper, to write down and ſign the Creed: But preſently Urſacius and Valens took them by force out of his hands. Thereupon there aroſe a great Tumult, the People were put in a Commotion, and the Biſhops withdrew to the Palace, where they were preſſed to ſign a Letter written in the Emperour's Name againſt St. Athanaſius. There were but few Biſhops who cou'd reſiſt the Emperour's ſollicitations, and thoſe who were ſo ſtedfaſt as to do it, viz. Euſebius of Verſeilles, Dionyſius of Milan, and ſome others, were ſent into baniſhment. Baluzius in his new Collection of Councils, has cauſed the new Acts of this Council to be printed, taken out of the Life of Euſebius of Vercelles, publiſhed by Ughellus in the Firſt Tome of his Italia Sacra; but there is no probability that they are Authentical.

Of the COUNCIL of Biterræ, or Beziers.

Of Biterræ, or Beziers, 356.

THE French Church had not yet been toſſed with the Storms which troubled the Peace of all the Churches in the World. Saturninus Biſhop of Arles, a factious Man, was the Firſt who brought thither the fire of Diviſion. He aſſembled in the Year 356. a Council at Beziers, and us'd all his Endeavours to make it receive the followers of Arius; but St. Hilary oppoſed him ſtoutly, and having deſired him to treat of Doctrinal Matters, offered to convict Urſacius, Valens, and Saturninus of Hereſy. Inſtead of harkning to him they wrote to Court againſt him, and he was ſent into baniſhment, together with Rhodanius Biſhop of Tholouſe. After he was forced away, the Biſhops of this Council being devoted to the Intereſts of Saturninus, did whatever he deſired; but the other Biſhops of France would never communicate with him, nor with Urſacius and Valens, and would not ſuffer other Biſhops to be Ordain'd in the room of thoſe that were baniſhed.

Of

Of the Third COUNCIL of Sirmium.

THE Second Creed of Sirmium was made in that City, in the Year 357. by Potamius Bishop of Lubon, a City of Spain, in the presence of Valens, Ursacius, Germinius, and some other Bishops. This Creed is Arian. In it they reject the Word Consubstantial, and they declare, That the Father is greater than the Son, and that the Son had a beginning. Of the Third of Sirmium, 357.

Of the COUNCIL of Antioch.

THE Eastern Arians seeing that those of the West had plainly made Profession of their Error, did also publickly declare themselves in a Council assembled at Antioch, in the Year 357. Eudoxius Bishop of that City, a Patron of Aëtius, Acacius Bishop of Cæsarea in Palæstine, Uranius Bishop of Tyre, and some others, did there condemn the Words Consubstantial, and like in Substance, and wrote to Ursacius, Valens, and Germinius, to thank them, because by their means the Bishops of the West had embraced their Doctrine. Of Antioch, 358.

Of the COUNCIL of Ancyra.

THE greatest part of the Eastern Bishops opposed this Design of Eudoxius, and could not endure that he should make so publick a Profession of the Impious Doctrine of Aëtius. George Bishop of Laodicea wrote a Circular Letter upon this Subject, wherein he exhorted his Brethren to join together for defending the Faith of the Church. Basil of Ancyra presented this Letter to many Bishops who were assembled in his City for Dedicating his Church, about the Feast of Easter, in the Year 358. These Bishops wrote a Synodical Epistle related by St. Epiphanius, wherein they First confirmed the Creeds of the Eastern Bishops made at Antioch, at Sardica, and at Sirmium, and then condemned the Heresy of Aëtius, and professed to believe the Son of God to be like his Father. There follow after their Creed 18 Anathematisms, wherein they condemn these following Impious Dogmes, viz. That the Son of God is not like to his Father, That he is unlike in Substance, That he is a Creature, That he is another God than God the Father, &c. At the end of these Anathematisms there is one against those who say, That the Father and the Son are Consubstantial. St. Hilary who explains the others, makes no mention of this Last, because the Deputies of this Synod durst not bring it to Sirmium. Of Ancyra, 358.

Of the Fourth COUNCIL of Sirmium.

SOON after the Council of Ancyra, there was a Council held at Sirmium, wherein the Bishops of Italy and the West were present. Therein was made a Collection of the Creeds of Antioch, of the First of Sirmium, of that of Sardica, and that of Ancyra, which Eustathius Bishop of Sebastea, and Eleusius Bishop of Cyzicum, presented to be signed by all the Bishops, who made no Scruple to do it. Of the Fourth of Sirmium, 358.

Of the Fifth COUNCIL of Sirmium.

Constantius having appointed two great Synods, one in the East at Seleucia, and the other in the West at Ariminum, some Eastern Bishops before they went to Seleucia, met together at Sirmium, where they made a new Confession of Faith, which was dictated by Marcus of Arethusa, after a long Conference with the other Bishops, and was signed by those that were present. Therein they make profession of believing the Son of God to be in all things like to his Father; but they reject the name of Substance, as a Term that ought not to be used in speaking of the Trinity, because it is not found in Scripture, and is not intelligible by the People. Nevertheless Basil of Ancyra added in his Subscription, That the Son of God was in all things like to his Father, not only by the consent of Will, but also in Substance and Essence. This Creed has the Names of the Consuls at the beginning, which displeased many. Of the Fifth of Sirmium, 359.

Of the COUNCIL of Ariminum.

WHile these things were a doing in the East, the Western Bishops assembled from all Parts to Ariminum. The Emperour had sent his Letters Mandatory for them, and provided for them publick Carriage, and Money for performing their Journey; but the Bishops of France and Britain thought it below them to accept of these Offers, and chose rather to travel at their own Expence. There came about 400 to the Synod, which began about the Month of July, in the Year 359. Ursacius and Valens proposed there the Creed which was made a little before at Sirmium; but the Council confin'd themselves to that of Nice, and would not receive any other. This is declared by a solemn Decree which was sign'd by all the Bishops, and to it they subjoined Anathematisms against the Error of Arius, which are related at the end of St. Hilary's Fragments. Ursacius, Valens, Germinius and Demophilus refusing to acquiesce in this Definition, were condemn'd by the unanimous consent of all the Bishops. Matters being thus determined in the Council to the advantage of the Faith of the Church, the Bishops sent Deputies to Constantius, with a Letter, wherein they give him an account of what Of Ariminum, 359.

The Councils.

what they had done: But on the other ſide Urſacius, Valens, and their followers, ſent alſo Deputies to the Emperour, and having much greater Intereſt in the Emperour, they prepoſſeſs'd him, and hindred him from giving audience to the Deputies of the Synod. And ſo he did nothing but write back to them, that he had not time to hear the Twenty Deputies which the Synod had ſent to him, becauſe he was obliged to go againſt the Perſians; and that he had given them Order to wait till his Return to Adrianople, becauſe he would examine Matters of Religion, with a Mind calm and diſengaged from all other Buſineſs. The Council anſwered him, That they would never depart from what they had done, and they earneſtly prayed him to permit the Biſhops to return to their Churches before the rigour of the Winter. In the mean time, the Deputies of the Council aſſembled at Nice, a City of Thrace, and declared all that was done at Ariminum, null and void. Urſacius, Valens, and Germinius, approved a Confeſſion perfectly, like that of Sirmium, wherein they declare that the Son of God is like his Father in all things, and reject the Terms of Subſtance and Hypoſtaſis. Urſacius and Valens recited this Confeſſion of Faith at Ariminum, and the Emperour ſent his Commands to the Governour, that he ſhould not ſuffer any Biſhop to go away till he had Signed it, and gave order to ſend thoſe into baniſhment who ſhould continue Obſtinate, provided they were no more than Fifteen. At firſt they all teſtified much Conſtancy, but by little and little they ſuffered themſelves to be overcome through Emulation, and the greateſt part of them Sign'd the Confeſſion of Faith: There were but Twenty that held out to the laſt, but in the end they were overcome alſo, and Signed as well as the others. Nevertheleſs ſome of them, as Phegadius Biſhop of Tongres, added Profeſſions of Faith to their Subſcriptions, wherein they expreſly condemn the Hereſy of Arius. When all the Biſhops had Signed the Confeſſion of Faith, they wrote to the Emperour, that they had fully ſatisfied his Commands, by agreeing with thoſe of the Eaſt, and rejecting the Word Subſtance; and therefore they prayed him earneſtly to give Order to the Governour to ſuffer them to go to their Churches. The Emperour gave them leave: And thus ended this Council, whoſe beginning was Glorious, and end Deplorable.

Of the COUNCIL of Selucia.

Of Seleucia, 359.

WHile theſe things were doing in the Weſt, the Eaſtern Biſhops aſſembled at Selucia, and there raiſed Diſputes, which they maintained with extream Heats. There came to this Synod 160 Biſhops of two different Parties, altogether oppoſite to one another. One of them were pure Arians who maintained, That the Son of God was not at all like in Subſtance to his Father. There were about 40 of this Party. The others called Semi-Arians, made profeſſion of believing the Son of God to be like in Subſtance, and rejected the Errours of Arius and Aëtius; thoſe of this Party were 105. The other Biſhops were probably Catholicks, Defenders of the Conſubſtantiality. There was an Officer from the Emperour's Court, called Leonas, preſent at the Council, for hindering any Tumult. The Firſt Aſſembly was held on the 23d of September, in the Year 359. Leonas required the Biſhops to propoſe what they were to treat of. The Semi-Arians, whereof the chief were George of Laodicea, Eleuſius of Cyzicum, Sophronius of Pompeiopolis, Silvanus of Tarſus, Macedonius of Conſtantinople, Baſil of Ancyra, Euſtathius of Sebaſtea, and St. Cyril of Jeruſalem, maintain'd, That Perſonal Cauſes ſhould be firſt examined, before they handled Matters of Faith. On the contrary, the Arians, whereof the Heads were Acacius of Cæſarea, George of Alexandria, Uranius of Tyre, Eudoxius of Antioch, maintained, That they ſhould firſt begin with matters of Faith; and they carried it againſt the others. They propoſed, that the Nicene Creed ſhould be rejected, and a new one ſhould be made: But the Biſhops of the other Party ſaid, That they received the Council of Nice, and found nothing to be blam'd in it, but only the Word Conſubſtantial. Hereupon there aroſe a great Diſpute which laſted till Night. To put an end to it, Sylvanus of Tarſus ſaid with a loud Voice, That it was needleſs to make a New Creed, that they had nothing to do, but Sign that which was made at Antioch, by a Synod held there for the Dedication of the Church. The Acacians ſeeing that this Propoſition was approv'd, withdrew, and the next Day the other Biſhops being ſhut up in the Church, cauſed the Creed of Antioch to be Signed by all the Biſhops. On the third Day, Leonas re-aſſembled the Biſhops of both Parties. The Acacians deſired that the Biſhops who were divided from them and depos'd, ſhould withdraw; they complained that they were not ſuffer'd to ſpeak freely in the Firſt Aſſembly; and they propoſed a Confeſſion of Faith, wherein they declare, That they did not refuſe to approve the Creed made at Antioch, but that they were obliged to reject more expreſly the Terms, Conſubſtantial and like in Subſtance, which troubled the Church; That they did alſo condemn thoſe who ſaid, that the Son of God was not like the Father, and that they made profeſſion of believing with the Apoſtle, that he was the Image and Reſemblance of the Father. They add, That the Creed of Sirmium was perfectly like theirs. This Confeſſion of Faith is related by St. Epiphanius with the Subſcriptions of 39 Biſhops of this Party. St. Hilary obſerves, That the greateſt part of thoſe who Signed it being Anomæans, were forced to explain the Profeſſion which they then made, by ſaying, That the Son was like his Father as he was his Father, but he was not like him as he was God. The Fourth Meeting was ſpent in Diſputes which came to no end. Wherefore Leonas ſeeing that there was no means left to reconcile them, declared that he would put an end to the Council, and that he would not be preſent the next Day at the Aſſembly of the Biſhops. The Acacians took occaſion from thence to appear no more. The other Biſhops, after a Citation of them, depos'd Acacius, George of Alexandria, Uranius of Tyre, and Six other Biſhops of their Party, and excommunicated Nine of them. They reſtored Cyril of Jeruſalem, and ordained one named Anianus Biſhop of Antioch, in the room of Eudoxius; but this Anianus was immediately ſent into baniſhment.

The

The Succeſs of what was done both by the one and the other Party in this Council, depended upon the Will of the Emperour; the buſineſs was, who ſhould firſt engage him. The Deputies of the Acacians came firſt to Conſtantinople; and they were quickly followed thither by thoſe of the Semi-Arians, whereof the chief were Euſtathius of Sebaſtia, Baſil of Ancyra, Sylvanus of Tarſus, and Eleuſius of Cyzicum; they were aſſiſted by St. Baſil, who was as yet but a Deacon. The Emperour would have the Cauſe of the Faith diſcuſs'd in his own preſence. 'Tis ſaid that Aetius entred upon a Conference with Baſil of Ancyra, and was convicted of Hereſy. However this be, Theodoret ſays, that Euſtathius of Sebaſtea preſented to the Emperour a Confeſſion of Faith, wherein it was ſaid, That the Son of God was not like his Father, and accus'd Eudoxius of maintaining it; that the Emperour having given it to this Biſhop he denied it, and ſaid that it was Aetius's, and that Aetius, having acknowledged it for his, was driven out of the Palace. While theſe things are doing, the Nicene Creed, which was ſign'd at Ariminum, was brought to Conſtantinople, and the Emperour having propos'd it, it was Sign'd by all the Biſhops of both Parties. [That made in Nico a City of Thrace.] The Councils.

Of the COUNCIL of Conſtantinople.

THE Acacians having ſtay'd at Conſtantinople, aſſembled there a Council of 50 Biſhops, in the beginning of the Year 360. Thither they invited the Biſhops of Bithynia who were of their Party, and they approv'd and publiſh'd in this Synod the Creed of the Council of Ariminum, changing only a few things in it. Afterwards they condemn'd Aetius, and Excommunicated three Biſhops who would not Conſent to his Condemnation. But as they condemn'd this Heretick only out of Policy, that they might obtain the favour of the Emperour who could endure him no longer; ſo they revenged themſelves afterwards upon all the Biſhops which oppos'd them in the Synod of Seleucia, and depos'd the Heads of the Semi-Arian Party, who were Macedonius of Conſtantinople, Baſil of Ancyra, Eleuſius of Cyzicum, Euſtathius of Sebaſtea, Heortaſius of Sardis, and Dracontius of Pergamus. In the Second Seſſion, they added to theſe Silvanus of Tarſus, Sophronius of Pompeiopolis, Elpidius of Satala, and Cyril of Jeruſalem. They alledg'd many Pretences for depoſing of them, and ordain'd in their room Perſons of Aetius's Party. Eudoxius poſſeſs'd himſelf of the See of Conſtantinople. Of Conſtantinople, 360.

Of the SYNOD of Melitine.

THere is mention made in the Council of Conſtantinople, whereof we have juſt now ſpoken, of a Synod held at Melitine about the Year 357. This Synod was compos'd of Biſhops of Acacius's Party, ſince they alledge his Authority in the Council of Conſtantinople, and condemn Elpidius for having received a Prieſt who had been depos'd in this Synod. St. Baſil in Letter 74 teſtifies, That Euſtathius of Sebaſtea was depos'd in this Council. St. Cyril was preſent there, if we may believe the Biſhops of the Council of Conſtantinople. This is all that we could learn of this Synod, of which we have very little in Antiquity. Of Meli-tine, 357.

Of the SYNOD of Antioch.

THE Church of Antioch continuing vacant by the departure of Eudoxius, Meletius was ordain'd Biſhop of it by a Synod which Conſtantius call'd in 361. 'Tis ſaid that ſome time after being invited to preach before the Emperour upon theſe words of the Proverbs, God hath Created me in the beginning of his ways, he declared openly for the Faith of the Church; whereupon the Eudoxians call'd a Second Synod at Antioch, and depos'd him, under pretence that he had receiv'd into his Communion ſome Clergy-men who were depos'd by Eudoxius, and ordain'd Euzoius, in his room. Afterwards they made a Confeſſion of Faith, wherein they diſcover plainly their impious Doctrine, making no ſcruple to declare, That the Son of God was not at all like his Father in Subſtance, and that he was created of nothing. This was the laſt Synod held under Conſtantius, and the laſt of the Creeds made by his Order. Of Antioch, 361.

Of the COUNCIL of Alexandria.

ST. Athanaſius being returned to Alexandria after the Death of Conſtantius, held a Council there to enquire what way they ſhould take with the Arians who were willing to be reconciled to the Church. In this Council the State of the Church of Antioch was conſidered, and the Biſhops deputed, Aſterius Biſhop of Amaſea, and Euſebius of Vercelles, to make Peace in that Church. The Queſtion of the three Hypoſtaſes was debated in this Council; and it was determin'd that it did not concern the Faith, and that thoſe who ſay there are three Hypoſtaſes in the Trinity, are of the ſame Opinion with thoſe who ſay there is but one, becauſe they underſtand the ſame word differently. In it they alſo ſpeak of the Myſtery of the Incarnation, and determine, That the Word did not only take a Body but alſo a Soul, and a Mind. We have loſt the Synodical Letter, but the Letter which St. Athanaſius wrote to the Church of Antioch by the Order of the Council, is ſtill extant. He enjoyns them to receive the Chriſtians who aſſembled in the ancient Church of Antioch, without exacting of them any other Condition, ſave only, that they condemn the Hereſy of Arius; and be oblig'd to receive the Of Alexandria, 362.

The Councils.

Faith of the Nicene Council, and that they reject their Error who believed the Holy Spirit to be a Creature. He adverties them, that no New Creed was made in the Council of Sardica; he gives them an Account of what was determined in the Council of Alexandria, concerning the Hypoſtaſis, and the Incarnation: He exhorts them to labour for Peace, and to ſhun ſuch Queſtions as tended only to foment Diviſions. This Letter was Sign'd by the Deputies of Lucifer, of Paulinus and Apollinarius, and by Paulinus himſelf who approv'd it when it was brought to Antioch.

Of the COUNCIL of Paris.

Of Paris, 362.

THE Weſtern Biſhops who had been abuſed in the Synod of Ariminum, being conſcious of their Fault, endeavour'd to repair it by aſſembling many Synods to annul what had been done there, and to maintain the Nicene Faith. France was none of the laſt that teſtified her Zeal upon this occaſion. St. Hilary aſſembled there many Councils for Re-eſtabliſhing the Faith of the Council of Nice. We have yet in the Fragments of St. Hilary, a Letter of a Council held at Paris, wherein the Biſhops that were there preſent acknowledge, That they had done ill to conſent in the Synod of Arminium, that they ſhould ſpeak no more of the Word, Subſtance. They profeſs to believe, that the Three Perſons of the Trinity are of the ſame Nature, and of the ſame Subſtance, and they condemn Auxentius, Urſacius, Valens and Saturnius. This Council was in the Year 362.

Of the COUNCIL of Italy.

Of Italy, 362.

'TWas not only in France that the Synod of Ariminum was rejected: The Biſhops of Italy alſo nulled and voided all that had been done in this Synod, and Anathematiz'd Urſacius and Valens as the Heads of the Arians. We have in the Fragments of St. Hilary a Letter written upon this ſubject in the name of the Biſhops of Italy to the Biſhops of Illyricum.

Of the COUNCIL of the Egyptian Biſhops, held at Antioch.

Of the Egyptian Biſhops held at Antioch, 363.

THE Emperour Jovian, a moſt pious Prince, being at Antioch in the Year 363, deſir'd of St. Athanaſius and the Egyptian Biſhops, who were come to wait upon him in that City, that they would explain to him the Faith of the Church. Theſe Biſhops being aſſembled, propos'd to him no other Creed but that of the Council of Nice, and rejected the Error of the Macedonians who denied the Divinity of the Holy Spirit. It is commonly thought that this Council was aſſembled at Alexandria: But it appears by the Letter which it preſented to the Emperour, related by Theodoret Ch. 3. of the 4th. B. of his Hiſtory, That it was compos'd of ſome Egyptian Biſhops, repreſenting all the other Biſhops of their Province, who had deputed them: Which plainly ſhews, That this Council was held out of Egypt, in the place where the Emperour was, that is, in Antioch, where 'tis certain St. Athanaſius came to wait upon Jovian.

Of the COUNCIL of Antioch under Meletius.

Of Antioch, under Meletius, 363.

THE Acacians ſeeing that the Emperour Jovian favoured the Catholicks, joyned themſelves with Meletius Biſhop of Antioch, and held a Council in that City, wherein they declared, That they would embrace the Faith of the Council of Nice, and receive the Term, Conſubſtantial: But at the ſame time they add, That this Term muſt be underſtood in the ſence, which ſignifies, That the Son of God was begotten of the Subſtance of his Father, and that he is like in Subſtance to his Father; That we muſt not believe that there was any Paſſion in this ineffable Generation; That we muſt not make uſe of the Word, Subſtance, according to the natural ſence of this Term; That it was not us'd but to deſtroy the Error of Arius, who ſaid, That the word was made out of nothing, an Error which was revived by the Anomæans. Theſe Biſhops having made this Declaration in their Letter to the Emperour, approve the whole and entire Creed of the Council of Nice.

Of the COUNCIL of Lampſacus.

Of Lampſacus. 365.

HYpatianus the Deputy of the Biſhops of the Helleſpont, deſired a Council of the Emperours Valens and Valentinian. They appointed one at Lampſacus, where the Biſhops aſſembled in the Year 365. After they had deliberated for the ſpace of Two Months what they ſhould do, they null'd all that had been done at Conſtantinople by the Intriguing of Eudoxius and Acaſius. They declared that the Son of God was like in Subſtance to his Father, and adher'd to that Profeſſion of Faith which was made in the Synod of Antioch, while the Dedication of the Church of that City was celebrated. They Ordain afterwards, That the Biſhops depos'd by the Anomæans, ſhould re-enter into their Churches, from which they had been unjuſtly forced away, and they appointed them for Judges the Orthodox Biſhops of their Province, and ſome of thoſe that were neareſt to it. They ſent Deputies to Valens who was then at Heraclea; but they were not well receiv'd, becauſe Eudoxius had prepoſſeſſed the Emperour, who Ordain'd, That the Churches ſhould be given thoſe of his Party. He oblig'd alſo Eleuſius of Cyzicum, in a Synod held in the Year 366, to agree with Eudoxius; but this Biſhop repented of it, and publickly teſtified the ſorrow he had for being overcome by the Sollicitations of the Emperour.

Of

Of the COUNCIL of Singedunum, Compos'd of Arian Biſhops.

Of Singedunum, of Arian Biſhops, 366.

Germinius Biſhop of Sirmium made in 366. a Confeſſion of Faith, wherein he makes profeſſion of believing in Jeſus Chriſt the only Son of God, our Lord and our God, the true Son of God, of the true Father, God, begotten before all Worlds, like in all things to his Father, in Divinity, in Majeſty, in Greatneſs, in Power and in Wiſdom. This Confeſſion of Faith diſpleas'd Urſacius, Valens and the other Arian Biſhops, who deſired of him an Account of his Faith. The only Anſwer that he made to them was, that he would not ſeparate from them: Wherefore they aſſembled at Singedunum a City of Mœſia, and from thence wrote to him to diſſuade him from maintaining that the Son of God was in all things like his Father. This Letter is preſerved in the Fragments of St. Hilary. 'Tis Dated December 16th. in the Year 366. Germinius anſwer'd them, [That he made Profeſſion of believing the Son of God to be in all things like to his Father, except the Innaſcibility, God of God, Light of Light, Begotten before all Ages, who is not made of nothing, but begotten of God his Father. In ſhort he ſays, That he does not depart from the Creed drawn up by Marcus of Arethuſa, which had been formerly ſign'd by Urſacius and Valens.

Of the SYNODS held by the Semi-Arians.

The Synods of 365. & 366.

THE Biſhops who are cal'd Semi-Arians, aſſembled many Councils after the Synod of Lampſacus: They held one at Smyrna compoſed of the Biſhops of Aſia, one in the Province of Pamphylia, another in Iſauria, and one in Lycia. Theſe Councils wrote Letters not now extant, that were carried to Pope Liberius by Euſtathius the Deputy of theſe Biſhops, who ſent him into the Weſt to make a Reconciliation with thoſe who made Profeſſion of adhering to the Nicene Creed. Euſtathius diſcharged his Deputation, approv'd the Nicene Creed, and obtained Letters of Commendation from Libertius. He brought theſe Letters to a Synod which was held in Sicily, wherein the Faith of the Conſubſtantiallity was approved; and returning afterwards into the Eaſt, he receiv'd the Letters of a Synod of Illyricum held in the Year 367, which declared the Trinity to be Conſubſtantial, and particularly eſtabliſhed the Divinity of the Holy Spirit. The Letter of this Council is related by Theodoret B. IV. of his Hiſtory. About the end of this Letter the Biſhops of this Council exhort thoſe of the Eaſt to chooſe for filling up the vacant Biſhopricks, either the Children of Biſhops which were dead, if they found them capable, or the ancient Prieſts, and not to Ordain for Prieſts or Deacons ſuch Perſons as came out of the Palace or the Army, but to take them out of the inferiour Clergy. The Deciſion of this Synod was confirm'd by an Edict of the Emperour, addreſs'd to the Aſiaticks, wherein he declares that the Term Conſubſtantial, ſignifies not only that the Son is like to his Father, but that he is of the ſame Nature and the ſame Subſtance.

Of the SYNOD of Tyana.

Of Tyana, 368.

Euſtathius being returned from the Eaſt with Letters of Commendation from the Weſtern Biſhops, came to a Synod aſſembled at Tyana in the Year 368, compoſed of the Biſhops who had declared in Jovian's time, That it was neceſſary to maintain the Faith of the Conſubſtantiality. Euſtathius having read there the Letter of Liberius and the other Weſtern Biſhops, was there admitted to Communion, and the Anomœans were reconciled to the Semi-Arians. A Synod was appointed at Tarſus; but the Emperour Valens hindred its Meeting there, and cauſed one to be held in Caria, wherein the Term Conſubſtantial was rejected.

Of the COUNCIL of Gangra.

Of Gangra, 370.

THE preciſe time of this Council is not known. Some have thought that it was held between the Council of Antioch and that of Nice. Others following the Teſtimony of Socrates and Sozomen, place it after the Council of Seleucia. This Opinion is confirmed, becauſe that Euſebius who firſt ſign'd the Canons of this Council, was probably the Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadoſia, the Predeceſſor of St. Baſil, who held the See of this Church from the Year 362, to the Year 371. This Council condemns the Errors of one Euſtathius who is different from the Biſhop of Sebaſtea, who under pretence of leading a more perfect and auſtere Life, eſtabliſhed ſuch Practices as were contrary to the Laws of the Church. In the Letter of the Synod, he and his followers are Accus'd, Firſt, Of condemning Marriage, and parting Wives from their Husbands; Secondly, Of forſaking the Publick Aſſemblies of the Church to keep private Meetings; Thirdly, Of reſerving the Oblations for themſelves only; Fourthly, Of parting Servants from their Maſters, and Children from their Fathers, under pretence of making them lead a more auſtere Life; Fifthly, of permitting Women to be habited like Men; Sixthly, Of deſpiſing the Faſts of the Church, and obſerving others, according to their own fancy, even on Sundays; Seventhly, Of believing that it was forbidden in all Times to eat Meat; Eighthly, Of rejecting the Oblations of married Prieſts; Ninthly, Of deſpiſing Holy Places, and the Tombs of the Martyrs; Tenthly, Of believing that none can be Sav'd without parting with all their Goods. Theſe Errors are condemned in Twenty Canons, which have been plac'd in the Code of the Canons of the Univerſal Church.

The 1ſt. condemns thoſe who diſallow Marriage, and believe that a Married Perſon cannot be Sav'd.

The

The Councils.

The 2d. thunders an Anathema againſt thoſe who condemn ſuch as eat Fleſh, excepting only the Blood of thoſe things that have been offered to Idols, and things ſtrangled.

The 3d. is againſt thoſe who teach their Slaves to deſpiſe their Maſters, inſtead of ſerving them with reſpect.

The 4th. is againſt thoſe who ſay, we muſt not take the Communion from the hand of a married Prieſt.

The 5th. againſt thoſe who deſpiſe the Houſe of God, and the Aſſemblies there kept.

The 6th. condemns thoſe who would have another than the Publick Church, who deſpiſe it, and would have the Eccleſiaſtical Functions performed without a Prieſt approved by the Biſhop.

The 7th. and 8th. are againſt thoſe who receive the Eccleſiaſtical Offerings out of the Church, without the conſent of the Biſhop, or of thoſe whom he has entruſted.

The 9th. is againſt thoſe who keep their Virginity, not becauſe of its Excellency, but becauſe they think Marriage to be an abominable thing.

The 10th. againſt thoſe who inſult over Married Perſons.

The 11th. againſt thoſe who deſpiſe the Agapæ, that's to ſay, the Feaſts of Charity.

The 12th. againſt thoſe who fanſie themſelves to be more Holy than others, becauſe they wear a ſingular Habit, and condemn thoſe that wear decent Apparel.

The 13th. pronounces an Anathema againſt thoſe Women who leave off their own Habit, and wear Men's Apparel.

The 14th. againſt thoſe who forſake their Husbands out of Deteſtation of Marriage.

The 15th. againſt thoſe who abandon their Children, who do not Feed them, nor Educate them in Piety, but neglect them under pretence of Devotion.

The 16th. againſt thoſe Children, who under pretence of Piety forſake their Parents, and ſhow them no more that reſpect which they owe them next to God.

The 17th. againſt thoſe Women who cut their Hair, to deſtroy the Sign of that Submiſſion which they owe to their Husbands.

The 18th. pronounces an Anathema upon thoſe who Faſt on Sundays, under pretence of leading a more auſtere Life.

The 19th. is againſt thoſe who break the Faſts of the Church without Neceſſity, and in Contempt.

The 20th pronounces an Anathema againſt thoſe who abhor the Aſſemblies and the Sacrifices which are made in honour of the Martyrs, and deſpiſe their Memories.

At laſt, the Fathers of this Council conclude with theſe excellent Words: "We ordain theſe things "not to conclude thoſe who would, according to the Advices of Holy Scripture, exerciſe themſelves in "the Church by theſe practices of Continence and Piety, but againſt thoſe who uſe theſe kinds of "Auſterities for a Pretence to ſatisfy their Ambition, who deſpiſe thoſe who lead an ordinary Life, "and who introduce Innovations contrary to Scripture and the Eccleſiaſtical Laws. We admire Vir"ginity when it is accompanied with Humility; we praiſe Abſtinence which is joyn'd with Piety and "Prudence. We reſpect that Retirement which is made with Humility; but we alſo honour Mar"riage. We do not blame Riches when they are in the hands of Perſons that are Juſt and Benefi"cent; we eſteem thoſe who cloath themſelves Modeſtly, without Pride and Affectation, and we "abhor uncivil and voluptuous Apparel: We have a Reverence for Churches, and we approve the "Aſſemblies which are there made as Holy and Uſeful: We do not confine Piety to Houſes. We "honour all places built to the Name of God; we approve the Aſſemblies which are kept in the "Church for the publick Good: We praiſe the Largeſſes which the Faithful give to the Church to be "diſtributed among the Poor. In a word, We wiſh and deſire that theſe things may be obſerv'd in the "Church, which we have learn'd from the Scripture and the Tradition of the Apoſtles.

Of the COUNCIL of Laodicea.

Of Laodicea, between 360 & 370.

IT has been commonly believed, That this Council was more ancient than that of Nice, but the Regulations which are contain'd in its Canons, do ſufficiently diſcover, that it was held at a time wherein the Church flouriſhed, and had been a long time delivered from the Pagan Perſecutions; which ſhows that this Council could not have been aſſembled before the middle of the Fourth Century. 'Tis very probable that it was celebrated between 360 and 370. We know nothing of its Hiſtory; but we have 60 Canons of this Aſſembly, which regulate many conſiderable Points of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, and have been received by the whole Church, and put into the Code of the Canons of the Univerſal Church.

The 1ſt. of theſe Canons declares, That by a kind of Condeſcention, the Communion ought to be given to thoſe who are married a Second time, after they have for ſome time given themſelves to Faſting and Prayer.

The 2d. is, That the Communion out to be given to thoſe Sinners who have done Penance for their Crimes.

The 3d. is, That thoſe ought not to be promoted to a Biſhoprick who were lately baptiz'd.

The 4th. That Clergy-men ought not to be Uſurers.

The 5th. That Ordination ſhould not be made in the preſence of thoſe who are in the Rank of Hearers.

The 6th. That Hereticks ſhould not be ſuffered to enter into the Houſe of the Lord.

The 7th. That in order to the receiving of Hereticks, ſuch as the Novatians, the Photinians, the Quarto Decimani, they ought firſt to abjure and anathematize all Hereſies, and chiefly that whereof they made Profeſſion; and then after they are inſtructed in our Doctrine, they ought to be anointed with Chriſm; and laſtly, made partakers of the Holy Myſteries.

The

The 8th. That they muſt be wholly baptiz'd a new who come from the Sect of the Montaniſts.

The 9th. That the Faithful ought to be forbidden to go to the Cœmiteries or Churches of Hereticks to pray there with them, and that thoſe who do it ought to be excommunicated, and do Penance for their Fault. The Councils.

The 10. That Catholicks ſhould not give their Daughters in marriage to Hereticks.

The 11th. That Prieſteſſes ſhould not be ordained in the Church.

The 12th. That the choice of Biſhops ſhould be approv'd by the Metropolitan, and by the Biſhops of the Province.

The 13th. That the choice of a Biſhop ſhould not be wholly left to the People.

The 14th. That the Holy Myſteries ought not to be ſent at Eaſter as a Benediction.

The 15th. That none but the Canon-Chanters who ſit in high Chairs, and read in Books, ſhall ſing in the Church.

The 16th. That the Goſpel ſhould be read together with the other Books of Scripture, on Saturday.

The 17th. That many Pſalms ſhould not be read together, but between every Pſalm a Leſſon.

The 18th. That the ſame Prayers ſhould be read at Mattins as at Veſpers.

The 19th. That after the Biſhop's Sermon, the Prayers of the Catechumens ſhall be read apart by themſelves, and when theſe are gone forth, then ſhall be the Prayer of the Penitents; and Laſtly, after theſe have withdrawn having received Impoſition of Hands, the Prayer of the Faithful ſhall be made at three times ſucceſſively: That the Firſt Prayer ſhall be made in ſilence, but the Second and Third Prayers ſhall be pronounced with a loud Voice, and after that the Peace ſhall be given; that when the Prieſts ſhall give it to the Biſhop, The Laity ſhall give it to themſelves, and afterwards the Oblation ſhall go on till it be finiſhed; and that none but thoſe who are Holy ſhall be ſuffered to approach the Altar to receive the Communion.

The 20th. forbids Deacons to ſit in the preſence of a Prieſt without his leave, and it ordains likewiſe, That the other Miniſters and all the inferiour Clergy ſhall ſhow the ſame reſpect to Deacons.

The 21ſt. forbids Miniſters to do the Offices of Deacons, and to touch the Holy Veſſels.

The 22d. and 23d. forbids Miniſters and Readers to carry the Stole.

The 24th. forbids all the Eccleſiaſticks to go to a Publick Houſe.

The 25th. declares, That Miniſters muſt not give the Holy Bread nor bleſs the Cup.

The 26th. That thoſe who were never ordained by Biſhops, muſt not meddle with exorciſing in the Church, or in Houſes.

The 27th. That thoſe Eccleſiaſticks who are invited to the Love-Feaſts, muſt not carry any Meat away with them to their own Houſes.

The 28th. That theſe Feaſts muſt not be made in Churches.

The 29th That Chriſtians muſt not obſerve the Ceremonies of the Jews, nor Feaſt on Saturday; but they muſt labour on this Day, and abſtain from labour on Sundays.

The 30th. That an Eccleſiaſtick or Monk, muſt not waſh in the Baths with Women.

The 31ſt. That Men ought not to give their Children in marriage to Hereticks.

The 32d, That the Bleſſing of Hereticks ought not to be received.

The 33d. That the Faithful ought not to pray with them.

The 34th. That a Chriſtian ought not to forſake the Martyrs of Jeſus Chriſt to go and honour falſe Martyrs which have been Hereticks.

The 35th. That Chriſtians ought not to forſake the Church to invoke Angles, and keep Meetings in private.

The 36. That thoſe ought to be caſt out of the Church who practice Magick, Judicial Aſtrology, and Witchcraft, &c.

The 37. That the Faithful ought not to celebrate the Feaſts of Jews or Hereticks.

The 38th. That they ought not to uſe the unleavened Bread of the Jews, nor follow their Ceremonies.

The 39th. That they ought not to celebrate the Feaſts of Pagans.

The 40th. That the Eaſtern Biſhops ought to be preſent at a Synod to reform others there, or to be reform'd themſelves.

The 41ſt. and 42d. That a Clergy-man muſt not go out of his Dioceſs, without Canonical Letters, without the permiſſion of his Biſhop.

The 43d. That the Porters ſhould not leave the Gates of the Church for a moment under pretence of Praying.

The 44th. That Women ought not to come near the Altar.

The 45th. That none ought to be baptized in the Second Week of Lent.

The 46th. That he who is to be baptized, ought to be inſtructed in the Faith, and that he ought to give notice on Holy-Thurſday to the Prieſts or the Biſhop, that he will preſent himſelf to Baptiſm.

The 47th. That thoſe who were baptized during their Sickneſs, ought to be inſtructed when they recover their health.

The 48th. That thoſe who are baptized, after Baptiſm, ſhould be anointed with Heavenly Chriſm.

The 49th. That no Offerings ſhould be made during Lent but on Saturdays and Sundays.

The 50th. That they ſhould not break their Faſt in the laſt Week of Lent; but Faſt throughout the whole Lent, eating nothing but dry Meats.

The 51ſt. That the Feaſts of the Martyrs ought not to be obſerved in Lent, but on Saturdays and Sundays.

The 52d. That Marriages ſhould not be celebrated in Lent.

The Counc. ils.

The 53d. That Chriſtians ought not to behave themſelves diſorderly at Marriage-Feaſts, nor Dance there but take their Repaſt Modeſtly.

The 54th. That Clergy-men ought not to be preſent at the Shows or Balls, that are made during Marriage-Feaſts, but ariſe and be gone before the Mask begins.

The 55th. That neither Clergy-men nor Lay-men, ought to make Feaſts at Taverns, by paying every one their Club.

The 56. That Prieſts ought not to enter, nor go up into the Pulpit, before the Biſhop be come into the Church, unleſs he be ſick or abſent.

The 57th. That Biſhops muſt not be plac'd in Towns, nor Villages, but Viſitors, who ought to do nothing without the Advice of the Biſhop who is in the City, and that the Prieſts ought to obſerve the ſame thing.

The 58th. That neither Biſhops nor Prieſts ought to make the Oblation in their own Houſes.

The 59th. That private Pſalms ought not to be ſung in Churches, nor any Books read there which are not Canonical, but only the Canonical Books of the Old and New Teſtament.

The 60th and Laſt Canon contains an Enumeration of the Canonical Books of the Old and New Teſtament. It places in the number of the Canonical Books of the Old Teſtament thoſe which the Jews acknowledged; and in this number it places Eſther, Job and Ruth, but not Tobit, Judith, Eccleſiaſticus, Wiſdom, nor the Books of the Maccabees. The Canonical Books of the New Teſtament are the Four Goſpels, the Acts, and the Seven Canonical Epiſtles, and the Fourteen Epiſtles of St. Paul, but the Revelation is not in this Catalogue.

Of the COUNCIL of Rome under Damaſus.

Of Rome, under Damaſus, 370.

IN the Year 370, Pope Damaſus aſſembled a Council at Rome, in whoſe Name a Synodical Letter was written againſt the Arians, produced in Greek by Theodoret, B. VI. of his Hiſtory, Ch. 23. and by Sozomen, B. II. Ch. 22. and publiſhed in Latin by Holſtenius. It is addreſs'd to the Biſhops of Illyricum, and not to the Biſhops of the Eaſt, ſince theſe laſt are mentioned in the Third Perſon. This Synod confirms the Faith of the Council of Nice; and declares that Auxentius Biſhop of Milan was condemned by the Biſhops of France. It excommunicates thoſe who do not believe that the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit are one and the ſame Divinity, and one and the ſame Subſtance. It obſerves, That the Council of Ariminum, could not prejudice the Deciſions of the Council of Nice, becauſe thoſe who made the Creed of Ariminum, proteſted afterwards againſt what they had done, and alſo becauſe neither the Biſhop of Rome, whoſe Judgment was chiefly to be waited for, nor Vincentius of Capua, nor many other Biſhops, did ever conſent to the Deciſion of the Council of Ariminum. Laſtly, they ſay, That they hope that the Biſhops who hold not the Doctrine eſtabliſhed by the Nicene Creed, ſhould quickly be deprived of their Biſhopricks, and they exhort the Biſhops of Illyricum conſtantly to defend the true Faith.

Of the COUNCIL Of Rome againſt Urſicinus.

Of Rome, againſt Urſicinus, 372.

THIS Council was held in the Year 372. againſt Urſicinus the Anti-Pope. In it the Aſſociates of this pretended Biſhop are condemned, and among others Florentius of Puteoli, and the Biſhop of Parma.

Of the COUNCIL of Valence.

Of Valence, 374.

IN the Year 374, Phœbadius or Fegadius Biſhop of Agen, and 20 Biſhops more aſſembled at Valence to ſettle ſome Commotions of this Church, and having regulated this Affair, they made Four Canons for the Reformation of Diſcipline.

In the Firſt they forbid thoſe to be Ordained for the future who have been twice Married, or thoſe who have eſpous'd a Widow, whither they did it before or ſince their Baptiſm: But they do not meddle with the Ordinations of Bigamiſts made before their Deciſion, leſt they ſhould diſturb the Church.

In the 2d. Canon they Ordain, That Penance ſhall not immediately be allowed to thoſe Virgins, who Married after they had made a Vow of Virginity, and that they ſhall not be receiv'd until they have made full ſatisfaction.

The 3d. Canon delays Abſolution of thoſe till death, who having been baptized, did partake in the Profane Sacrifice of Devils, and exhorts them in the mean time to do Penance for their Fault, and to wait for the Remiſſion of it from the Mercy of God.

In the laſt place they declare, That all thoſe Deacons, Prieſts, and Biſhops muſt be depoſed, who confeſs themſelves guilty of ſome great Crime, whether they did really commit it, or only accuſe themſelves falſly of it. There is a Letter prefixed to theſe Canons, wherein they addreſs to the Biſhops of the Five Provinces, and of Gaul, after which there follows another Letter written to the Church of Frejus, wherein the Synod acquaints it, That tho' the Biſhop Concordius had ſpoken in behalf of one Acceptus, who probably had accuſed himſelf of ſome Crime whereof he was not guilty, yet the Synod did not think fit to make an Exception in his favour from the general Rule which they had made. To give a Reaſon of this Rule they add, That tho' they knew that many Perſons accuſe themſelves of thoſe Crimes which they have not committed, from the dread they have of the Prieſthood, yet Men being more inclined to judge ill than well, they thought fit that all thoſe who had ſaid ill of themſelves ſhould be removed from the Prieſthood, whether it were true or falſe, for fear of giving occaſion of Diſputes, by thoſe Accuſations which might be urged againſt the Miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt of ſuch Crimes, whereof they might be convicted by their own Teſtimony. This Synod conſiſted of 21 Biſhops. Phœbadius of Agen is the firſt; in it there is found alſo the Name of Rhodanius of Tholouſe, of Juſtus of Lyons, of Britto of Triers, of Florentius of Vienna, and of Concordius of Arles. 'Tis obſerved in ſome Manuſcripts, That it conſiſted of 30 Biſhops, but perhaps this number ought to be corrected, by making it 21. The Councils.

ſaid

Of the COUNCIL of Antioch for reſtoring Peace in that Church.

THE Church of Antioch for a long time had been rent in Pieces with Diviſions. After the Depoſition of the Great Euſtathius, ſome rigid Catholicks had always maintain'd themſelves without a Biſhop, till Lucifer Ordain'd one Paulinus; but the greateſt part of the Catholicks acknowledged Meletius for their lawful Biſhop. The Eaſt favoured this laſt, Egypt and the Weſt adher'd to Paulinus. St. Baſil us'd all his Endeavours in vain to reconcile them, for he could not compaſs it; but Nine Months after his Death, as is obſerv'd by St. Gregory Nyſſen in the Life of St. Macrina, in the Year 378, a Council was held at Antioch, wherein the Two Parties were reconciled, upon condition that no Biſhop ſhould be Ordain'd in his room who ſhould die firſt, but the Survivor ſhould continue ſole Biſhop. Theodoret ſays, That Paulinus would not accept this Condition, but the Biſhops of Italy affirm the contrary in the Letter of the Council of Aquileia, and in the Fifth Letter of the Council of Italy. There was receiv'd in this Synod a Confeſſion of Faith ſent from the Weſt, which is call'd the Tome of the Weſt, as it is declar'd in the Fifth Canon of the Council of Conſtantinople. 'Tis probable, That this Tome is either the Synodical Letter of Damaſus, or the Anathematiſms which follow it. Baronius ſays, That Deputies were named in this Council, and he grounds this Conjecture upon a Paſſage of St. Gregory Nyſſen, who ſays, That he was deputed by a Council; but it cannot be known at preſent, whether he ſpeaks of this Council or of another. Of Antioch, 378.

In ſhort, Valeſius attributes to this Council the Letter 69 of St. Baſil, written by ſeveral Biſhops, to the Biſhops of Italy and France, wherein mention is made of a Writing of the Biſhops of the Weſt: but this Conjecture cannot be maintain'd, ſince there are among the Biſhops, in whoſe Name this Letter was written, the Names of St. Baſil Biſhop of Cæſarea, and Theodotus of Nicopolis, who were dead when the Synod, which we now ſpeak of, was held; beſides that there is no mention in it of the Reconciliation of Meletius and Paulinus, which was not till after the death of St. Baſil.

Of the COUNCILS of Conſtantinople.

FOR the better underſtanding the Hiſtory of the Council of Conſtantinople, which is called the Second General Council, we muſt diſtinguiſh Three Aſſemblies of Biſhops held at Conſtantinople at Three ſeveral times. Of the Firſt of Conſtantinople, 381.

The Firſt was held in the Month of May in the Year 381. It was compos'd of all the Biſhops of the Eaſtern Empire, except Egypt. Meletius of Antioch preſided in the Aſſembly, and confirmed St. Gregory Nazianzen in the See of the Church of Conſtantinople. There is ſome probability that in this Synod the Canon was made, wherein the Election of Maximus is condemned, who endeavoured to invade the See of the Church of Conſtantinople, and alſo the Canon wherein the ſecond place of Honour is granted to the Biſhop of Conſtantinople. However this be, Meletius died before the end of this Synod, his Body was carried back to Antioch, and the Eaſtern Biſhops choſe in his room, Flavianus, contrary to the Promiſe that was made while Meletius was alive, That no Perſon ſhould ſucceed in the room of the Biſhop that died firſt.

Of the Second COUNCIL of Conſtantinople.

WHEN Flavian was Ordain'd, the Eaſtern Biſhops returned to Conſtantinople, at the beginning of the Year 382. They were never after ſo favourable to Gregory Nazianzen, becauſe he reprehended the Ordination of Flavianus, as a thing contrary to the Agreement that was made; and therefore this Saint had no ſooner propoſed to withdraw, but almoſt all the Biſhops conſented to it. After his retirement, the Council Ordained Nectarius Biſhop of Conſtantinople. 'Tis to this Synod that the Canon and Creed of the General Council of Conſtantinople are attributed. In it was read the Letter of the Weſtern Biſhops aſſembled at Aquileia, wherein they deſire that a General Council of the Eaſt and Weſt may be held at Alexandria. The Eaſtern Biſhops anſwer'd, That they could not go farther off, and they only ſent Three Deputies into the Weſt, to acquaint them with their deſires of Peace, and to inform them of the truth of their Doctrine. Of the Second of Conſtantinople, 382.

The Weſtern Biſhops being diſſatisfied with this, and with what was Ordain'd in the Council of Conſtantinople, complained to the Emperour, Firſt, That they had Ordained Flavianus in the Room of Meletius, contrary to the Promiſe made while he was alive; Secondly, That they had Ordain'd Nectarius Biſhop of Conſtantinople without any regard to Maximus who had been Ordain'd by the Patriarch. Thirdly, That they had avoided the calling of a General Council, that they might hold one at Conſtantinople. At laſt, they pray that a General Council may meet at Rome to determine all Differences: For ſay they, 'tis fit that the Eaſtern Biſhops ſhould not deſpiſe the Judgment of the Biſhop of Rome, and the Biſhops of Italy, ſince they have waited for the Judgment of Aſcolius of Theſſalonica.

We

The Councils. We do not, add they, aſſume to our ſelves the Prerogative of this Examination, but we expect to have a part in the Judgment, becauſe the Judgment ought to be common to all thoſe who are of one and the ſame Communion.

Of the Third COUNCIL of Conſtantinople.

Of the Third of Conſtantinople, 383.

THIS Letter from thoſe of the Weſt, was deliver'd in the Year 383, to a Synod aſſembled at Conſtantinople, whereof Nectarius was Preſident. The Biſhops of this Council made anſwer, That they wiſhed they could be preſent at Rome to treat there of the Affairs of the Church; but not being able to do it leſt they ſhould leave their Churches in a forlorn condition, they thought it would be ſufficient to give them an account of all that they had ordain'd. They ſay therefore, That they have approved the Creed of the Council of Nice, That they admit one and the ſame Divine Majeſty in Three Perſons, That as to the Incarnation they have a very Orthodox Doctrine, being perſuaded that Jeſus Chriſt took a Body, Soul and Spirit, and that he is a perfect Man. They prove that this is their Doctrine by the Tome of the Weſt, which they approved at the Synod of Antioch. As to the manner of Governing the Churches, they declare, That according to the Canons of the Council of Nice, they believed that the Biſhops of each Province, ought to ordain the Biſhops of their own Province, and call in to their aſſiſtance their Neighbours alſo, if they thought fit: That according to this Law Nectarius was ordained Biſhop of Conſtantinople in the General Synod, with the Conſent of the People and Clergy of Conſtantinople, and in the preſence of the Emperour; that after the ſame manner Flavianus was ordain'd by all the Biſhops of the Province and of the Dioceſs of the Eaſt, and that St. Cyril was ſome time ago ordain'd Biſhop of Jeruſalem by the Biſhops of the Province. They exhort the Weſtern Church to approve of what they had done, and to admoniſh them to preferr the Edification of the Church, before the Inclinations they might have to any particular Perſons, that ſo they might re-eſtabliſh a perfect Union among all the Members of the Church. This is what is contained in the Letter of this Synod related by Theodoret. This Council is not different from that mention'd by Socrates Ch. 10. of B. V. of his Hiſtory, and by Sozomen, Ch. 12. of B. VII. In which were preſent the Chief Biſhops of all the Sects, ready to defend their own Opinions: But Nectarius confounded them all, by asking them if they would referr themſelves to the ancient Catholick Authors, who lived before the beginning of theſe Diſputes: For ſome being willing to accept of theſe Terms, and others refuſing to do it, the Emperour who ſaw them divided, deſired of every one their Confeſſion of Faith, and when they had preſented them to him, he tore all thoſe in which there was not Profeſſion made of believing the Conſubſtantial Trinity, and made an Edict againſt all Hereſies.

The Creed of the Council of Conſtantinople is not very different from that of Nice. The Fathers of this Council have only added ſome more expreſs Terms, to denote the Divinity of the Holy Spirit, by calling him, The quickning Lord who proceedeth from the Father, who is to be worſhipped and glorified together with the Father and the Son, who ſpake by the Prophets. They make Profeſſion alſo, of believing one only Holy and Apoſtolick Church, of confeſſing one Baptiſm only for the Remiſſion of ſins, of looking for the Reſurrection of the dead, and the Life of the World to come. This Creed was not at firſt received by all Churches, and there were ſome that would add nothing to the Nicene Creed. For this cauſe it was perhaps, that no other Creed but that of Nice was read in the Council of Epheſus, and there it was alſo forbidden to make uſe of any other: But this of Conſtantinople was authentically approved in the Council of Chalcedon, where it was read after that of Nice.

It was a long time before the Canons of this Council was approv'd by the Weſtern Biſhops: Not only St. Leo rejected them in his Epiſtle 53, now the 80, but alſo Gelaſius in his Epiſtle to Dardanus, and St. Gregory in his Epiſtle 25 of B. VI. rejects them, as not being received in the Weſt; but however, they have been received in the Eaſt, and are put in the Code of the Cannons of the Univerſal Church. 'Tis not eaſy to tell how many Canons were made in the Three Councils of Conſtantinople, whereof we have juſt now ſpoken, nor to which of the Three they are to be attributed, and whether they are all made in one and the ſame Synod. The Verſion of Dionyſius Exiguus contains but Three of them; but the Second contains that which is the Third in the Greek, and the Laſt is reckon'd for the Fourth which concerns the Ordination of Maximus. But the Code of the Canons of the Univerſal Church, adds to theſe a Fifth, which concerns the Tome of the Weſtern Biſhops, a Sixth about the Form of Eccleſiaſtical Deciſions, and a Seventh concerning the manner of receiving Hereticks. Photius, Zonaras, Balſamon, and the other Greeks, acknowledged theſe laſt Canons, and attribute them to the Council of Conſtantinople, ſo that there can be no Queſtion, but they were made by one of thoſe three Councils of which we have ſpoken, but it is more probable, that they were made by the Laſt. Firſt, Becauſe Dionyſius Exiguus has not put them in his Collection of Canons; Secondly, Becauſe Socrates and Sozomen mention only the Four firſt when they ſpeak of the firſt and Second Council of Conſtantinople; Thirdly, Becauſe 'tis plain that theſe Canons are an Addition, or Supplement to the Three other Canons; Fourthly, becauſe it appears that the Fifth Canon was made by ſome Biſhops, who had a Confeſſion of Faith of the Biſhops of the Weſt, which they call a Tome, and which they approv'd. Now the Biſhops of the Third Council of Conſtantinople ſpeak of this Confeſſion in their Letter to the Biſhops of the Weſt, and give it the Name of a Tome; which ſhows that the Fifth Canon and this Letter were from the ſame hand. Laſtly, Nicholas the I. in his Letter to the Emperour Michael, cites the Sixth Canon of this Council, as belonging to the Council of Conſtantinople; but he obſerves that it is not to be found in his Code of the Canons. Theſe Reaſons ſhew, That the Four firſt Canons of the Council of Conſtantinople; belong to the Firſt and Second Synods, but but rather to the Firſt than the Second, becauſe of the Fourth which is againſt the Ordination of Maximus, and that the three following belong to the Third Synod held in 383. The Councils.

The 1ſt. of theſe Canons confirms the Creed of the Council of Nice, and pronounces an Anathema againſt all the Hereſies that are contrary to it, eſpecially againſt the Eunomians, the Anomœans, the Arians, the Eudoxians, againſt the Semi-Arians who were Enemies to the Holy Spirit, againſt the Marcellians, the Photinians and Apollinariſts.

The 2d. Canon conſiſts of Four Parts: In the Firſt the Biſhops of one Dioceſs are forbidden (taken the name of Dioceſs for many Provinces) to go out of their own Dioceſs; and 'tis ordained according to the Canons, That the Biſhop of Alexandria ſhall govern Egypt only; That the Biſhops of the Eaſt ſhall govern the Eaſt, ſaving always to the Church of Antioch its Privileges and Prerogatives, which are mention'd in the Sixth Canon of the Council of Nice; That the Biſhops of the Dioceſs of Aſia ſhall regulate what concerns their own Dioceſs; That thoſe of Thrace ſhall govern only the Churches of Thrace, and thoſe of Pontus the Churches of Pontus.

The Second Part forbids every Biſhop in particular to go out of the Bounds of his own Country to Ordain, or to meddle with the Affairs of the Churches in another Dioceſs.

The Third ordains, That the Synod of every Province ſhall regulate what concerns its own Province, as had been ordain'd by the Council of Nice.

The Laſt Part declares, That the Churches which are among the Barbarians, that's to ſay, thoſe that are without the Roman Empire, ſhall be governed according to their ancient Cuſtoms, becauſe in theſe Countries there is no diſtinction of Dioceſſes or Provinces.

The 3d. Canon grants to the Biſhop of Conſtantinople the firſt Place of Honour next to the Biſhop of Rome: Some have pretended that this Canon is to be extended to Juriſdiction; but this Explication is contrary to the Terms in which it is conceiv'd, and was never approv'd by Practice, tho' the Biſhop of Conſtantinople taking occaſion of this Prerogative of Honour, endeavoured afterwards to uſurp the Dioceſſes of Thrace, of Aſia, and of Pontus, which at laſt were ſubjected to him by the Determination of the Council of Chalcedon. The Reader may ſee this more largely explained in the firſt Diſſertation about the ancient Diſcipline of the Church.

The 4th. Canon declares, That Maximus was never Biſhop, that his Ordinations are null, and that all that he did ought to be made void.

The 5th. Canon, which is the firſt of thoſe of the Third Council, approves the Tome of the Biſhops of the Weſt, and of thoſe of Antioch who acknowledge one and the ſame Divinity in the Three Perſons of the Trinity. There is alſo mention made of this Tome in the Council's Letter, and 'tis probable that this was the Synodical Letter of Damaſus, ſent to the Council of Antioch held in the Year 378.

The 6th. Canon regulates the Form of Eccleſiaſtical Deciſions, and ordains, Firſt, That all ſorts of Perſons ſhall not be admitted to accuſe Biſhops of Crimes which concern Religion; That no Hereticks, Schiſmaticks, Perſons excommunicated, condemned, and in a word, all thoſe that are ſeparated from the Communion of Biſhops ſhall not be allowed to do it. Secondly, That the Accuſation of a Biſhop ſhall be carried to the Biſhops of his own Province. Thirdly, That if the Biſhops of the Province cannot judge of the Crimes whereof a Biſhop is accus'd, recourſe muſt be had to the Synod of the Dioceſs. Fourthly, That thoſe who accuſe a Biſhop, ought in writing to ſubject themſelves to the ſame Penalty, to which they expoſe him that is accus'd, if they be convicted of Calumny. Laſtly, That if any one ſlighting theſe Laws, ſhall addreſs himſelf either to the Emperour or Secular Judges, or ſhall deſire a General Council, without acquieſcing in the Judgment of the Biſhops of the Dioceſs, he ought to be heard no longer, ſince he has violated the Canons, and overthrown the Diſcipline of the Church.

The laſt Canon is concerning the manner of receiving Hereticks, who offer themſelves to return into the Boſom of the Church. It ordains, That the Arians, Macedonians, Sabbatians, Novatians, Quartodecimani, Tetratites and Apollinariſts, ſhall be receiv'd after they have made Profeſſion of Faith, and Anathematiz'd their Errours, By the Unction of the Holy Spirit, and the Chriſm wherewith they ſhall be anointed on the Forehead, the Eyes, the Hands, the Mouth, the Ears at the pronouncing of theſe Words: This is the Seal of the Holy Spirit. As to the Eunomians, the Montaniſts, the Sabellians, and all the other Hereticks, the Council ordains, That they ſhall be received like Pagans; that's to ſay, That at firſt they ſhall receive Impoſition of Hands to give them the Name of Chriſtian; That afterwards they ſhall be plac'd in the rank of Catechumens; That they ſhall be exorcis'd by blowing three times upon their Faces, and into their Ears; That they ſhall be catechiz'd, and that for a long time they ſhall be permitted to hear only the Holy Scripture in the Church; and at laſt they ſhall be baptized.

Of the COUNCIL of Aquileia.

THE Council of Aquileia was aſſembled in the Month of September of the Year 381. It ſhould have been compos'd of the Biſhops of the Eaſt and Weſt; but St. Ambroſe having declared that it was needleſs to weary the Eaſtern Biſhops with ſuch a Journey, none but the Weſtern Biſhops were obliged to come thither, and thoſe of the Eaſt were only left at their Liberty to come there if they thought fit. There were about thirty Biſhops preſent at the Council, together with the Deputies of the Biſhops of France and Africa. Valerian was Preſident. In it two Biſhops of Dacia and Mœſia, nam'd Palladius and Secundianus, were accus'd of Arianiſm; there was read to them before the Council, a Letter of Arius, but they would neither approve, nor condemn it, and anſwered Of Aquileia, 381.

The Councils.

only, That they ſhould ſee in two Days time, that they were both Catholicks. This Day being come they appeared before the Council; but they would not acknowledge it for a Judge, deſiring a General Council compos'd of the Eaſtern and Weſtern Biſhops; nevertheleſs they examined them, convicted them of the Hereſy of Arius, and condemned them. The Acts of this Council, the Letter which they wrote to the Biſhops of France and Spain, to thank them for the Deputies they had ſent, and the Letter addreſs'd to the Emperours, wherein there is an account of what they had done, and prays them to hinder the Hereticks from entering into the Church, are ſtill extant. It complains afterwards of the Crimes of an Arian Biſhop named Valens; and Laſtly, it ſupplicates the Emperours to hinder the Aſſemblies of the Photinians. All theſe Monuments are extant in St. Ambroſe.

The Biſhops of this Council wrote a Letter to the Emperour, praying him to drive away Urſicinus, which was publiſh'd by Sirmondus, and is in the Second Volume of the Councils, p. 998.

They wrote alſo a Letter which is found in the ſame place, in which they give the Emperour an Account of the State of the Eaſtern Empire, they thank him for reſtoring to the Catholicks the Eaſtern Churches; but they complain that many things were chang'd there, and that thoſe were not kindly us'd, who had always been in the Communion of the Weſtern Churches, as Timotheus of Alexandria and Paulinus of Antioch. They pray that a General Council may be aſſembled at Alexandria, to examine thoſe who ought to be admitted into Communion, and thoſe to whom Communion muſt be denied. This Letter was delivered to the Emperour, at the time of the Second Council of Conſtantinople, and was read in this Council.

At laſt, when the Biſhops underſtood what had been done in the Eaſt without conſulting them concerning the Ordination of Flavianus and Nectarius, they complained of it by another Letter, whereof we have already ſpoken, preſerved in the ſame Volume of the Councils, p. 345. They teſtifie alſo by a Fourth Letter which precedes theſe, how much they could have wiſhed that the Council which they deſired had been held, and how neceſſary it would have been. Theſe Letters do not properly belong to the Council of Aquileia, but were written ſome time after in the name of thoſe Biſhops which were there aſſembled, and for executing what they had Order'd. For which Reaſon, it was thought neceſſary to mention them here.

Of the COUNCIL of Saragoſa.

Of Saragoſa, 381.

WHile the Biſhops of Italy were thus labouring to procure the Peace of the Church of Rome, thoſe of Spain were no leſs buſied in allaying the Commotions which were rais'd upon occaſion of Priſcillian and his Diſciples. The Council of Saragoſa was aſſembled upon this account about the Year 381, where having condemned Priſcillian and his followers, they made ſome Canons againſt their Practices.

The 1ſt. forbids Women to meddle with Teaching and Expounding Articles of Faith.

The 2d. pronounces an Anathema againſt thoſe who faſted on Sundays from a ſuperſtitious or falſe Principle; and againſt thoſe who entred not into the Churches during Lent, but hid themſelves in their Houſes or in the Fields.

The 3d. anathematizes thoſe who having receiv'd the Euchariſt did not eat it in the Church.

The 4th. forbids any to be abſent from the Church from the 15th. of December until the Epiphany.

The 5th. forbids Biſhops under pain of Excommunication to receive thoſe who are excommunicated by their own Biſhops.

The 6th. declares, That thoſe of the Clergy muſt be caſt out of the Church, who abandon the Miniſtry out of vanity to turn Monks.

The 7th. declares, That it is not lawful for any to take to himſelf the Title and Name of Doctor, but only thoſe to whom it is granted.

The 8th. forbids Virgins to be veiled, that are devoted to Jeſus Chriſt, except they be Forty Years old.

'Tis eaſy to perceive that all theſe Canons are made againſt the Priſcillianiſts, who affected a ſingular Way of living.

Of the COUNCIL of Sida in Pamphylia.

Of Sida in Pamphylia, 383.

ST. Amphilocius aſſembled in 383, a Council of 25 Biſhops at Sida, a City of Pamphylia, againſt the Hereſy of the Maſſalians or the Euchaitæ. This Council condemned the Errors of theſe Hereticks, and wrote a Synodical Letter to Flavianus Biſhop of Antioch: It is not now extant. Photius had read it, and he tells us of it in Volume 52 of his Bibliotheca.

The ſame Photius ſpeaks in this place of a Synod held againſt theſe Hereticks at Antioch by Flavianus. There were preſent in it Three Biſhops and 30 Prieſts and Deacons of the Church of Antioch. There Adelphius a Ring-leader of the Hereſy of the Maſſalians was condemned, and they would not receive him tho' he ſhould have abjur'd his Hereſy, becauſe they were perſuaded that he would not do it ſincerely. Theſe Hereticks making no ſcruple of renouncing their Doctrine with their mouth. Flavianus ſent an account to the Oſroenians of what paſs'd in this Synod.

Of

Of the COUNCIL of Bourdeaux.

THIS Council was aſſembled by the Order of the Emperour Maximus, and condemned Inſtantius a follower of Priſcillian, and had condemned Priſcillian himſelf if he had not appeal'd to the Emperour. See what we have ſaid upon this Subject p. 191. 'Tis ſaid, That afterwards there was a Council held at Triers where St Martin was preſent. But this Aſſembly of Biſhops who came to Court to deſire the condemnation of the Priſcillianiſts, deſerves not the Name of a Council. See Sulpitius Severus's Account of it in his Dialogues of the Life of St. Martin. The ſame Sulpitius Severus, at the end of his Second Dialogue, mentions a Council held at Niſmes in St. Martin's time, but he acquaints us with nothing that paſs'd in it.

Of the COUNCIL of Capua.

THE Council of Capua was aſſembled by the Emperour Valentinian in the Year 390, to determine the Difference which was between Flavianus and Evagrius, the Succeſſor of Paulinus in the See of Antioch. In it Theophilus of Alexandria and the Biſhops of Egypt were named for Judges of this Cauſe. But Flavianus would not acknowledge them for Judges, and told the Emperour boldly, who had order'd him to come to Conſtantinople, that he might ſend him to Alexandria. Sir, if they accuſe my Manners or my Faith, I am ready to ſubmit my ſelf to the Judgment of my Accuſers themſelves; but if they would have my Primacy and See, I will have no Diſpute with any body about it, neither will I reſiſt thoſe who aſpire to this Dignity; And therefore give the See of Antioch to whom you pleaſe. This reſolute Anſwer, made the Emperour wonder, who ſent him back to Antioch to govern his Church. But tho' the Synod of Capua had not been aſſembled but for this Affair, yet in it they treated of other things. Bonoſus a Biſhop was informed againſt there, becauſe he had the boldneſs to affirm that the Virgin Mary had Children by Joſeph after the Birth of Jeſus Chriſt. The Council refer:'d this Cauſe to Anyſius Biſhop of Theſſalonica, and the other Biſhops of Macedonia. They forbid him to enter into his Church. This Biſhop being diſgraced by this Judgement, conſulted St. Ambroſe, whether it were lawful for him to enter into it. This Saint anſwered him, That he ought to do nothing contrary to the Judgment given by the Biſhops of Macedonia: And they deſiring to ratify their Judgment by the Opinion of the Biſhop of Rome, wrote an account of it to Siricius, who anſwered them, That the Council of Capua having referred this Cauſe, it did not belong to him to Judge of it, but to them to determine it. We learn all this from the Letter of Siricius, which was formerly attributed to St. Ambroſe.

This Synod treated alſo of Re-baptization, of Re-ordinations, and Tranſlations of Biſhops, as it is obſerv'd in the 48th. Canon of the Code of the Canons of the Church of Africa, which is conceiv'd in theſe Words, We have declared what was Ordained in the Council of Capua, That it was not lawful to uſe Re-baptization, Re-ordination, and the Tranſlation of Biſhops. This is all we know of this Council.

Of the COUNCILS of Rome, and of Milan, againſt Jovinian.

Siricius condemned Jovinian and his followers in a Synod of his Clergy, and his Condemnation was confirmed by a Synod of Milan. We have the Letters of theſe Two Synods. In the Firſt it is determined, That tho' we ought not to deſpiſe nor condemn Marriage, yet Virgins are more to be honoured. The Second contains the Proofs of this truth, and in it is ſhown, That the Bleſſed Virgin loſt not her Virginity by bringing forth Jeſus Chriſt into the World.

Of the COUNCIL of the Novatians held at Sangarus.

Socrates mentions in the 21ſt. Ch. of the 5th. B. of his Hiſtory, a Council of the Novatians held at Sangarus about the end of this Century, wherein it was declared a thing indifferent to celebrate the Feaſt of Eaſter on Sunday or another day, againſt what was Ordained in another Synod held before that at Pazus.

Of the Firſt COUNCIL of Carthage.

THO' this Council was celebrated in the Year 348, yet we have hitherto delayed to ſpeak of it that we might give an Idea of all the African Councils of the Fourth Age together. This was a general Council of the African Biſhops, and Gratus Biſhop of Carthage who was preſent at the Council of Sardica, preſided in it. He ſpoke firſt to his Brethren, and ſaid, "That we muſt firſt give thanks to "God who hath put an end to the Schiſm, and inſpired the Emperour Conſtantine, (it muſt be read "Conſtans) to ſend Paulus, and Marcarius into Africa to procure Peace there, and for the Liber- "ty which the African Biſhops have enjoyed of meeting together in Provincial Councils, and aſ- "ſembling from all the Provinces of Africa; that afterwards we muſt examine the Heads, about "which it will be neceſſary to make ſome Decrees, according to the Divine Laws, and the Inſtructi- "ons of Holy Scripture; but then we muſt have ſuch a regard to this time of Peace, that we neither "weaken the Obligation of the Laws, nor yet prejudice the preſent Unity by too much ſeverity.

The 1ſt. Head which he propoſed was about Rebaptization. He ask'd, whether that Man ought to be re-baptiz'd who at his Baptiſm made Profeſſion of believing the Trinity. The Biſhops anſwer'd: God forbid, We declare that this Re-baptization is unlawful, contrary to the Orthodox Faith and the Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline.

to

The Councils.

The 2d. Head was to remedy the abuſe which the Donatiſts were guilty of in giving the Name of Martyrs to Fanaticks, who laid violent Hands on themſelves, or threw themſelves head-long from Precipies. Gratus was of Opinion, That they ſhould be forbidden for the future to honour theſe falſe Martyrs, and that thoſe Lay-men ſhould be put under Penance, who medled with Depoſing of Clergy-men. The Biſhops approved his Opinion, and ſaid, That the ſame was Ordained in the Provincial Councils.

In the 3d. they forbid thoſe Perſons who profeſs Virginity, to cohabit or have any familiarity with any Perſons of the other Sex, under the pain of Excommunication for the Laity, and of Depoſition for the Clergy. The Reaſon which they give for this Law is excellent: We muſt, ſay they, ſhun the occaſions of Sin, remove all kind of Suſpicion, and avoid the Snares which the ſubtilty of the Devil uſes to deſtroy ſimple Souls which are not upon their guard, under pretence of Charity and Love to our Neighbour.

The 4th. contains the ſame Prohibition to Widows.

In the 5th. the Biſhop Privatus remonſtrates, That a Biſhop ought not to be permitted to receive a Clergy-man belonging to another Biſhop, unleſs he has the Permiſſion of his own Biſhop; neither ought he to Ordain a Lay-man of another Dioceſs without the conſent of his own Biſhop. He alledges the Authority of the Council of Sardica to prove that this Order ought to be obſerv'd.

In the next, another Biſhop nam'd Nicaſius remonſtrates, that it does not become clergy-men to take upon them the charge of Secular Affairs. Gratus confirm'd this Remonſtrance by the Authority of Scripture, and the Biſhops approved it.

In the 7th. another Biſhop propos'd, That a Prieſt or a Layman of another Dioceſs ſhould not be receiv'd into Communion, unleſs he had a Letter from his own Biſhop.

In the 8th. 'tis Ordain'd after the Propoſition made by Evagrius, and according to the Opinion of Gratus, That thoſe ſhall not be Ordained, who have been Guardians, or managed ſeveral other ſorts of buſineſs, till their Accounts be made up and ended.

The 9th. forbids them to chooſe Clergy-men to be Treaſurers or Collectors of the Publick Taxes.

The 10th. forbids Biſhops to invade the bounds of the neighbouring Dioceſſes.

The 11th. regulates the numbers of Judges neceſſary to ſit upon a Clergy-man. A Deacon who is accus'd ought to be judg'd by three neighbouring Biſhops, a Prieſt by ſix, and a Biſhop ought not be judg'd by leſs than twelve.

In the 12th. Antigonus Biſhop of Madaura, complains, that after he had made and ſign'd an Agreement with Optantius, (who probably was his Rival in the Biſhoprick) by which they agreed to divide the People between them, yet this Optantius continued ſtill contrary to this Agreement, to win the Affections of all the People. The Biſhops decree that the Agreement ſhould ſtand good.

In the 13th. Abundantius Biſhop of Ardrumetum ſays, That in the Council of his Province, Prieſts were forbidden to take Intereſt. Gratus repreſented that it was not neceſſary to make any Canon about this, that they needed only put the Law in Execution which was written in the Goſpel; and that if Uſury was to be condemned in Lay-men, it was much more damnable in Clergy-men. All the Biſhops approv'd his Judgment.

The Laſt Canon enjoyns Clergy-men and Laymen to obſerve theſe Canons, and thoſe which had been made by other Councils, under the pain of Excommunication for Lay-men, and Depoſition for Clergy-men.

Of the Second COUNCIL of Carthage.

Of the Second of Carthage, 390.

FRom the Inſcription of this Council corrected by a Manuſcript of the Vatican we learn, that it was aſſembled under the third Conſulſhip of Valentinian and Neoterius, that's to ſay in the Year 390, on the 14th. of June, at Carthage in the Church of St. Perpetua; That Genethlius Biſhop of Carthage, preſided there, and that Biſhops came thither from different Provinces. Genethlius opens the Council by giving thanks to God for the coming of the Biſhops to Carthage according to the Letters which he had written to them. He ſays, That tho' all the Biſhops were not preſent at this Council, yet it was to be believ'd that thoſe who were abſent were united in Spirit with it. He recommends afterwards the Biſhops to defend the Faith of the Trinity.

The 2d. Canon renews the Law eſtabliſhed in the preceding Council concerning the Celibacy of Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons.

The 3d. forbids Prieſts to bleſs the Chriſm, to conſecrate Virgins, and to reconcile Penitents at a Publick Maſs. This is one of the moſt ancient Monuments where the name of Maſs occurs to ſignify the Publick Prayers which the Church made at offering the Euchariſt.

The 4th. Canon permits Prieſts to reconcile Penitents who are Sick and in Danger, with the Biſhop's leave.

The 5th. forbids the making New Biſhopricks without the leave of the Biſhop of the place.

The 6th. forbids the admitting any Perſons of bad Reputation as Accuſers of Biſhops.

The 7th. confirms the Rule made in many Councils, which forbids a Biſhop to receive a Perſon excommunicated by his own Biſhop.

The 8th. declares, That if a Prieſt excommunicated by his own Biſhop, undertake to offer up Sacrifices criſices in private, and to ſet up Altar againſt Altar, thereby making a Schiſm, he ought to be anathematiz'd, becauſe there is but one Church, one Faith, and one Baptiſm. The Councils.

The 9th. forbids Prieſts to celebrate Maſs in all kinds of places: It is call'd in this place, Agenda.

The 10th. ordains, That a Biſhop accus'd, who would juſtify himſelf, if he cannot call together more, ought at leaſt to defend his Cauſe before Twelve Biſhops, a Prieſt before Six, and a Deacon before Three, one of which ought to be their own Biſhop.

The 11th. forbids Biſhops to intermeddle in the Dioceſſes of others.

The 12th. declares, That Biſhops ſhall not be ordained without the Conſent of the Primate, that's to ſay, the Metropolitan, and that in a caſe of neceſſity three Biſhops are ſufficient to ordain a Biſhop, provided they have the Conſent of the Metropolitan.

The 13th. is the Concluſion of this Council, which ordains, That all the Biſhops ſhall obſerve the Canons which ſhall be ſign'd by all the Biſhops preſent. Some Criticks have doubted of the Truth of this Council, becauſe the Names of Aurelius and Alypius are found in it, who were not Biſhops when it was aſſembled: But theſe Names are not found in the Edition corrected by the Vatican Manuſcript, but in their places there are the Names of Genethilus and Felix.

Of the COUNCILS of Cabarſuſſa and Bagaïs.

THeſe two Councils are two Aſſemblies of Donatiſt Biſhops of contrary Parties: In the Firſt of which Primianus head of one Party, Biſhop of Carthage, was depos'd, and Maximian in the Second. St. Auſtin quotes the Synodical Epiſtles of theſe two Councils; that of the Firſt in the Commentary upon Pſal. 36. and that of the Second in divers places of his Books againſt Creſconius and Petilian. This Father ſays, That the Firſt Council was held in the Year 393, and conſiſted of a 100 Biſhops; and yet there are but 43 in the Subſcriptions of the Council: The Second which was celebrated the next Year, conſiſted of 310 Biſhops. Of Cabarſuſſa and Bagaïs, 393, 394.

Of the COUNCIL of Hippo.

THis Council was held at Hippo under the Third Conſulſhip of Theodoſius and Abundantius, that's to ſay, in the Year 393, on the 5th. of October. Its Canons were inſerted into the Council of Carthage, in 397. Of Hippo, 393.

Of the COUNCIL of Carthage, in the Year 394.

THis Council is mentioned in the Code of the Canons of the African Church, where it is obſerv'd, that it was held under the Third Conſulſhip of Arcadius, and the Second of Honorius on the 24th, of June, and that Deputies are nam'd in this Council to attend at the Council of Ardrumetum. Of Carthage, 394.

Of the COUNCILS of Carthage, in the Year. 397.

UNder the Conſulſhip of Cæſarius and Atticus, who were Conſuls in the Year 397, according to the vulgar Æra, the Biſhops deputed from the Provinces of Africa, came to Carthage; but they were not all preſent there at the ſame time: Some came on the 26th. of Auguſt, a Day appointed for the Council, others came not till ſome time after. Nevertheleſs, Aurelius Biſhop of Carthage, having conferr'd with the Biſhops who came firſt, and received Letters from the Biſhops of the Provinces, who had not yet ſent their Deputies, caus'd the Canons which the Biſhops, with whom he had conferred, thought fit to make, and thoſe which were propos'd by Letters from the Biſhops of Byzacena, to be read to thoſe that were preſent. Theſe Canons were received in the Council, which confirmed thoſe which had been made in the Council of Hippo. Of Carthage, 397.

The 1ſt. Canon orders all the Churches of Africa, to inform themſelves every Year by the Biſhop of Carthage, on what Day Eaſter ſhould be celebrated.

The 2d. ordains, That every Year a Council ſhall meet, to which every one of the Provinces of Africa was to ſend three Deputies, excepting only the Province of Tripolis, which could ſend but one, becauſe of the ſmall number of Biſhops in that Province.

The 3d. requires, That the Canons ſhould be read to thoſe who were to be ordain'd, that they might not be ignorant of them.

The 4th. forbids the Ordination of Deacons, and Conſecration of Virgins before the Age of 25 Years, and forbids Readers to Salute the People, that's to ſay to addreſs any Speech to them, when they read the Goſpel in the Church.

The 5th. ordains, That the Sacramens ſhould not be given to the Catechumens during the Solemnity of Eaſter, but only the Salt which was uſually given them; becauſe if the Faithful do not change the Sacraments during theſe Feaſts, the Catechumens ought much leſs to do it. 'Tis hard to ſay, what this Sacrament is, which the Council forbids to give to the Catechumens during the Feaſt of Eaſter. It cannot be the Euchariſt, for that was forbidden to be given them at all times. But the 37th. Canon of the Greek Code of the Canons of the African Church explains it, by obſerving that the Catechumens were forbidden to offer Honey and Milk on any other Day, but Eaſter-Day.

The 6th. forbids the giving of the Euchariſt to the Dead.

The 7th. regulates the delays of Accuſations brought againſt a Biſhop: It orders that their Cauſes ſhall be carried to the Tribunal of the Metropolitan; but that a Biſhop cannot be excluded from Communion, for not appearing till one Month after he ſhall be cited by the Metropolitan's Letters; and that if he bring a lawful Excuſe for his abſence, one Month more of delay ſhall yet be given him; but if he appear not in that time, he ſhall be excluded from Communion till he be acquitted. And if he be not preſent at laſt at the Univerſal Synod which is held every Year, he is to be look'd upon as ſelf condemn'd; he ought not ſo much as to communicate with his People, while he is excluded from the Communion of other Biſhops; that his Accuſer ought not to be excommunicated, unleſs he fail to appear on the Day when the Cauſe is to be heard, and that no Perſon of a bad Reputation ought to be admitted to accuſe a Biſhop, unleſs the Buſineſs be about perſonal Cauſes which are not Eccleſiaſtical.

The Councils.

The 8th. regulates the number of Biſhops which are requiſite to judge Prieſts and Deacons. It requires five for judging a Prieſt, and two for judging of a Deacon. It ordains, That the delays ſhall be obſerv'd which are contain'd in the forementioned Canon; and as to others of the Faithful, it declares, That the Biſhop of the place may take cognizance of them, and judge them alone.

The 9th. ordains, That if a Clergy-man being accus'd before the Eccleſiaſtical Tribunal, remove the Cauſe to the Civil Magiſtrates, tho' he even gain the Cauſe, he ſhall loſe his Place, if it be a Criminal Cauſe; and if it be a Civil Cauſe, he ſhall loſe what he had gain'd.

The 10th. declares, That if a Perſon who has appeal'd from one Eccleſiaſtical Tribunal to other Eccleſiaſtical Judges of greater Authority, be by them acquitted, the Sentence given by the former Judges ought not to prejudice the latter, unleſs they be convicted of being byaſs'd by Paſſion, or corrupted by Favour. It adds, That it is never lawful to appeal from thoſe Judges that are choſen, even tho' they were not a ſufficient number.

The 11th. forbids the Children of Biſhops and Clergy-men, to act in profane Shows, or to be preſent at them, becauſe it is unworthy of Chriſtians to be preſent in a place where Blaſphemies are ſpoken.

The 12th. forbids Clergy-men to give their Daughters in marriage to Pagans, or Heriticks and Schiſmaticks.

The 13th. forbids Clergy-men to make Donations while they are alive, or by their laſt Will, to ſuch Perſons as are not Catholicks, tho they ſhould be of their Kindred.

The 14th. forbids them to emancipate their Children unleſs they be adviſ'd by their Kindred, or the Children be come to ſuch an Age, that the Sins which they commit can no longer be imputed to their Parents.

The 15th. forbids them to be Farmers or Procters, or to get their Livelyhood by diſhoneſt Traffick:

The 16th. forbids them to receive more than they had lent.

The 17th. forbids them to co-habit with Strange Women, and permits them only to live with their Mothers, their Grand-Mothers, their Aunts, their Siſters, their Neeces, and thoſe of their Domeſticks who dwelt in the Houſe with them before their Ordination.

The 18th. Ordains, That none ſhall be Ordain'd Prieſts, Biſhops, and Deacons, unleſs they have converted all thoſe who liv'd in the Houſe with them.

The 19th. declares, That Readers are to be obliged, when they come to Age, to Marry, or to make the Vow of Chaſtity.

The 20th. forbids Biſhops to undertake any thing in the Dioceſſes of their Neighbours.

The 21ſt. forbids them to detain the Clergy of their fellow-Biſhops.

The 22d. Ordains, That no Clergy-man ſhall be Ordained who has not been examined by the Biſhops, and approved by the Suffrages of the People.

The 23d. That in the Prayers the Name of the Father ſhall not be put in the place of the Name of the Son, That at the Altar the Prayers ſhall always be addreſſed to the Father; That thoſe who have compoſed private Prayers ſhall not make uſe of them, until they have conferred about them with Clergy-men of good Learning.

The 24th, That nothing but Bread and Wine mingled with Water ſhall be offered for the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt.

The 25th. That Clergy-men and thoſe who make Profeſſion of Chaſtity, ſhall not go to ſee Widows or Virgins without the permiſſion of the Biſhop or ſome Prieſts, that they ſhall not be with them alone, but with other Eccleſiaſticks, or ſuch Perſons as the Biſhops or the Prieſts ſhall appoint them: That Biſhops and Prieſts alſo ſhall not viſit them alone, but in company with other Eccleſiaſticks or Chriſtians of known Probity.

The 26th. forbids the Metropolitan to aſſume the Title of Prince of the Prieſts, or the Sovereign Prieſt, and declares, That no other Name ought to be given him but that of Biſhop of the Firſt See.

The 27th. forbids Eccleſiaſticks to eat or drink at an Inn unleſs it be in a Journey.

The 28th. forbids Biſhops to undertake a Voyage beyond Sea without the conſent of the Metropolitan, from whom they ſhould receive Letters recommendatory.

The 29th. declares, That the Sacraments of the Altar ought not to be celebrated by any Perſons but by ſuch as are faſting, except on Holy Thurſday: So that if the Memory of one that is dead is to be celebrated in the Afternoon, the Prayers muſt only be read without adminiſtring the Sacrament.

The 30th. forbids Clergy-men and Biſhops to make Feaſts in the Churches, and Orders, That the People ſhall be hindred from doing it, as much as is poſſible.

The 31ſt. leaves Biſhops the liberty to regulate the time of Penance.

The 32d. forbids Prieſts to reconcile Penitents without asking leave of the Biſhop, unleſs urgent neceſſity enforce the doing of it in his abſence. It adds, That Penitents whoſe Crimes are very publick and and known by all the Church, ſhould receive Impoſition of Hands in an high Place near the Biſhop's Throne.

The 33d. Ordains, That when Virgins happen to loſe their Relations who took care of them, the Biſhop, or in his abſence, the Prieſt, ought to place them in a Nunnery, or commit them to the care of Women of known Probity. The Councils.

The 34th. That Sick Perſons ſhall be baptized, who cannot anſwer any longer, when thoſe who are by them teſtify that they deſired it.

The 35th. That the Grace of Reconciliation ſhall not be denied to Sorcerers, Comædians, and other Infamous Perſons, nor even to Apoſtates, when they are converted.

The 36th. hinders Prieſts from conſecrating Virgins without the Biſhop's permiſſion, and abſolutely forbids them to make the holy Chriſm.

The 37th. forbids Clergy-men to dwell in ſtrange Cities, unleſs the Biſhop or the Prieſts of both Places be ſatisfied, that they have juſt and lawful Reaſons to do ſo.

Almoſt all the Canons which we have now mentioned were made by the Council of Hippo, except ſome which were added by the Biſhops of Byzacena. Theſe laſt are the 35th. and ſo on to the 47th. in the Code of the African Canons: There is one beſides of the Council of Hippo, which is the 47th. in the 3d. Council of Carthage. This contains a Catalogue of the Canonical Books of the Old and New Teſtament, in the number of which are the Five Books of Solomon, the Books of Tobit, of Judith, of Eſther, the Maccabees, the Three Epiſtles of St. John, that of St. Jude, and the Revelations. 'Tis added in the Council of the Biſhops of Byzacena, That it ſhall be lawful to read publickly the Paſſions of the Martyrs.

What concerns the Canonical Books was alſo repeated in a Council held in 418, under Pope Boniface, wherein it was propoſed, That the Churches of Italy ſhould be conſulted about this Canon.

There were Two or Three Canons beſides of this Council which were explained in the Synod of Carthage, that we now ſpeak of, whereof the Firſt declares, That a Biſhop ſhall not be Ordained but by Three Biſhops; the Second, That thoſe who have no Teſtimonials, and do not remember that they were baptized, ſhall be baptized a-new; and the laſt declares, That the Donatiſts ſhall be receiv'd only to the Rank of Lay-men.

The other Canons were made in this Council of Carthage. The Firſt, as appears by the Code of the Canons of the African Councils, is the 48th. wherein Honoratus and Urbanus Legates from the Province of Mauritania, ſay, That they have for a long time expected thoſe of Numidia, and declare, That they approve the Nicene Creed, and the Canon which forbids any to celebrate the Holy Sacrifice unleſs he be faſting. They ſay that Siricius and Simplicianus ought to be conſulted about the caſe of Infants baptized by the Donatiſts, whether they may be Ordain'd in the Church or no.

In the 37th. the ſame Legates ſay, That Re-baptizations, Re-ordinations, and Tranſlations of Biſhops being forbidden in the full Synod of Capua, they beg leave to addreſs themſelves to the Governour of their Province, to drive away Creſconius, who had removed from Rhegium to Tuburnia, and would not depart from thence tho' he had been many times admoniſhed. The Council granted them this leave.

In the 39th. the ſame Perſons deſire, that it may be Ordain'd, that the Ordinations of Lay-men cannot be made but by 12 Biſhops: But Aurelius having remonſtrated that this was impoſſible in ſome Provinces, it was Ordain'd, That Three of them at leaſt ſhould meet. But he adds in the next Canon, That if there be any difference, ſome other Biſhops ſhall be called in to examine what is ſaid againſt the Perſon who is to be Ordain'd.

The 41ſt. declares, That the Biſhop of Carthage ſhall publiſh Eaſter-day immediately after the Synod, which ſhall be aſſembled every Year at Carthage.

The 42d. forbids the erecting a Church into a Biſhoprick which was put under the Juriſdiction of a Biſhop without his conſent.

The 43d. is againſt thoſe who ſatisfy themſelves with governing their Dioceſs without attending at Synods.

The 44th. declares, That Clergy-men ought not to be taken from their own Biſhops to make them Biſhops, without their conſent.

In the 45th. Aurelius Biſhop of Carthage remonſtrates, That commonly leave is deſired by him from the Biſhop of the place to Ordain one of his Clergy-men; but he deſires to know what is to be done if he refuſes it.

Numidius obſerves upon this Propoſal, that it was always lawful for the Biſhop of Carthage, to take thoſe who were deſir'd of him, and Ordain them tho' they were of another Dioceſs. Epigonius declares in the name of the Biſhops, That it is his Right: But Poſthumianus remonſtrates, That it may happen that a Biſhop ſhall have but one Prieſt, and it is not juſt to take him away from him. Aurelius anſwers, That a Biſhop may eaſily ordain many Prieſts, but that it is more difficult to find fit Perſons to be Biſhops; and therefore tho' a Biſhop ſhould have but one Prieſt, he ought to give him that he may be made a Biſhop. Poſthumianus replies, That therefore it is juſt, that another Church which has many Clergy-men, ſhould furniſh that which has given the one Prieſt to be a Biſhop; and Aurelius anſwers him, That the Biſhop who has many Prieſts, ſhall be perſuaded to give ſome of them to him who has given his own Prieſt to be a Biſhop.

The 46th. Canon, which ſhould be the laſt, declares, That the Biſhops which have been ordain'd in a Church, where there was never any before, with the conſent of the Biſhop of the Place, ſhall continue in their Biſhopricks; but that they ſhall only govern the People whereof they have been ordain'd Biſhops.

After

The Councils.

After this Canon follows the Approbation and Subſcription of the Biſhops, which is found in Canon Fifty.

Of the COUNCIL of Carthage held in the Year 398, call'd the Fourth.

Of Carthage, 398.

THere are 104 Canons which contain the Ordination and Manners of Biſhops, Prieſts, and other Eccleſiaſticks, which are attributed to a Council of Carthage call'd the Fourth. The Preface declares, That it was held under the Conſulſhip of Honorius and Eutychianus, that's to ſay, in the Year 398, and that Aurelius Biſhop of Carthage preſided in it. But there is ſome difficulty about the truth of theſe Canons; they are neither in the Code of the African Church, nor in the Collection of Canons entitled, The Council of Africk, nor in the Collection of Ferrandus, nor in that of Dionyſius Exiguus, and there is not ſo much as one of them cited in theſe places. In a Manuſcript of Cardinal Barberini, theſe Canons are entituled Ancient Statutes of the Eaſtern Church; but this cannot be the true Title, becauſe the Ceremonies of the Ordination of the leſſer Orders, as they are deſcribed in the Canons of this Council, are agreeable to the Practice of the Weſtern Church, who gave them by delivering the Holy Veſſels, and is not agreeable to the Practice of the Eaſtern Church which never made uſe of this Ceremony, but conferr'd them by Impoſition of Hands. In other Manuſcripts they are entituled, Ancient Statutes of the Church. They agree well enough to the Church of Africa, as appears by the Firſt Canon, where it is Ordain'd, That a Biſhop ſhall be interrogated, about the Errors common in Africa, whether he believes the Conſubſtantial Trinity; if he believes the Reſurrection of this Fleſh; if he believes that 'tis the ſame God who is the Author of the Old and New Teſtament, of the Law and the Goſpel; if he held that the Devil is not wicked by Nature, but become ſo by his own Will; if he did not condemn Second Marriages; if he did not find Fault with thoſe who eat Meat; if he believed that Baptiſm pardoned all Sins, Original Sin, as well as the other actual Sins: Laſtly, if he held that a Perſon may be ſaved out of the Church. Theſe are the Errors of the Manichees, Donatiſts, and Pelagians which were common in Africk. As to the Article which concerns Original Sin, it is ſomething ſurprizing that it ſhould be found ſo expreſly ſet down in a Synod held in 398, ſince Pelagius did not publiſh his Error in Africa till 411, and was not condemned till 412. But it may be this Error was already known, tho' Celeſtius was not yet come into Africa; and there is no doubt but the Church of Africk from that time maintained Original Sin. Howſoever this be, this diſcovers that theſe Canons belong to the Weſtern Church, and even to the Church of Africa. I ſee no reaſon ſtrong enough to convince me that this Preface is ſuppoſititious. The other Canons agree well enough with the Diſcipline of the African Church. The Reaſon why they are not found in the Ancient Collections, may be, becauſe they made a Body of Canons a-part by themſelves for Eccleſiaſticks. They are cited under the name of the Council of Carthage, by Iſidore, by Hincmar, by Burchardus, by Ivo Carnutenſis, and by Gratian.

The 1ſt. of theſe Canons ordains, That he who is to be promoted to the Epiſcopal Dignity ſhall be examined as to his manner of Life, his Learning and his Faith. As to his manners, it commands that Enquiry be made, if he be Prudent, Teachable, Moderate, Charitable, Humble, Affable and Merciful: As to his Learning, if he be Enlightned and Inſtructed out of the Law of God, if he be Skilful in the Underſtanding of the Scriptures, and Vers'd in the Knowledge of the Dogmes of the Church: As to his Faith, the Canon requires that he be examin'd whether he believes the Conſubſtantial Trinity; whether he believes that the Son of God aſſum'd real Fleſh and a Soul, and that there are two Natures and one Perſon only in Jeſus Chriſt; and whether he affirms, That he was really dead, and ſhall riſe again to judge the Quick and Dead. It adds, That he who is to be ordained muſt alſo be ask'd, If he believes that the ſame God is the Author of the Old and New Teſtament; If he believes that the Devil was not wicked by Nature, but became ſo by his own Free-will; If he believes that the ſame Fleſh which we now carry about with us ſhall be rais'd again; If he be perſuaded of a future Judgment, of future Puniſhments and Glory; If he does not condemn Marriage and ſecond Marriages; If he does not blame the uſe of Meats; If he communicates with Penitents that are reconcil'd; and if he holds that Baptiſm blots out Actual and Original Sin. Theſe are the things about which the Fathers of this Council would have him to be examin'd who is to be ordain'd; and they add, that if he be found well inſtructed in all theſe Points, he may be ordain'd Biſhop with the Conſent of the Clergy and the Laity, in the Aſſembly of the Biſhops of the Province, by the Authority, and in the Preſence of the Metropolitan. That after he has received the Holy Orders of Biſhop, he ought not to govern himſelf according to his Paſſion or Fancy, but according to the Canons of Councils. They add, That Care ſhould be taken, that none be ordain'd but ſuch as are arriv'd at the Age which the Holy Fathers require for the Ordination of a Biſhop.

The 2d. ordains, That when a Biſhop is ordain'd, two Biſhops ought to lay the Book of the Goſpels upon his Head and Neck, and hold it there, and that while one of the Biſhops who are preſent, pronounces the Bleſſing upon him, all the other Biſhops who are preſent, muſt touch his Head with their Hands.

The 3d. That at the Ordination of a Prieſt all the other Prieſts ſhould lay their Hands upon his Head, while the Biſhop Conſecrates him, and lay Hands upon him.

The 4th. That none but the Biſhop ſhall lay Hands upon a Deacon, when he is ordain'd becauſe he is not ordain'd for the Prieſthood, but for the Miniſtry.

The 5th. That the Sub-Deacon who does not receive Impoſition of Hands at his Ordination, ought to receive the Pattin and Chalice empty from the Hand of the Biſhop; and the Flaggons with Water, and the Baſon and Towel, from the Hand of the Arch-Deacon.

The

The 6th. That the Acolyth at his Ordination ought to learn from the Biſhops after what manner he ſhould behave himſelf in his Miniſtry; That he receive from the Archdeacon a Candleſtick with a Wax-Candle, to inſtruct him, that he is deſign'd for lighting the Wax-Candles in the Church; and that he alſo receive an empty Flagon to give Wine for the Euchariſt of the Blood of Jeſus Chriſt. The Councils.

The 7th. That the Exorciſt receive at his Ordination from the Hand of the Biſhop a Book wherein are written Exorciſms, and that the Biſhop ſpeak to him theſe Words; Receive theſe, and get them by heart, and have thou the Power of laying hands upon the Poſſeſs'd and Catechumens.

The 8th concerns the Ordination of a Reader, which was made in Africk, by giving him the Book of the Goſpels, and ſaying to him, Be Thou a Reader of the Word of God.

The 9th. concerns the Ordination of a Porter, to whom the Biſhop gave the Keys, ſaying unto him, Behave your ſelf as one that muſt give an account to God of thoſe things which are lock'd up under theſe Keys.

The 10th. Commands, That Virgins who would be conſecrated by the Biſhop, ſhould preſent themſelves in Habits agreeable to their Profeſſion and Vocation, like to thoſe which they are to uſe for the future.

The 11th. declares, That Widows and Nuns who are employ'd about the Baptiſm of Women ought to be capable of inſtructing others, and giving an account of their own Faith.

The 12th. That thoſe who are contracted, and preſent themſelves to receive the Benediction of Marriage, ought to be accompanied with their Kindred, and to abſtain from the uſe of Marriage the Night after the Benediction.

The 13th. That the Biſhop ought to have a Lodging near the Church.

The 14th That his Houſhold-Stuff ſhould be of little worth, his Table and Diet mean, and that he ought to acquire Authority by his Faith and his Merit, and not by external Pomp.

The 15th. That he ought not to read the Books of Pagans, nor thoſe of Hereticks, but in caſe of neceſſity, and when occaſion requires it.

The 16th and 17th. That he muſt not take upon him the Care of Widows, of Orphans and Strangers, but that he diſcharge this Care upon his Arch-Prieſt, or Arch-Deacon.

The 18th. That a Biſhop ought not to be Executor of a Laſt Will and Teſtament.

The 19th. That he ought not to plead a Cauſe.

The 20th. That he ought not to trouble himſelf with Domeſtick Affairs, but apply himſelf wholly to Reading, Prayer, and Preaching of the Word of God.

The 21ſt. That he ought not to diſpenſe with his going to the Synod, unleſs there be great neceſſity, and that if he does not go, he muſt ſend a Deputy to approve every thing that ſhall be ordain'd by the Synod, without prejudice to the Truths of Faith.

The 22d. That a Biſhop ſhall not ordain Eccleſiaſticks without the Conſent of his Clergy, and that he ſhall deſire the Teſtimony and Approbation of the Laity.

The 23d. That he ſhall hear no Cauſe but in the preſence of his Clergy, and that the Sentences which he ſhall give in the abſence of his Clergy ſhall be null and void.

The 24th. That he ſhall be excommunicated who goes out of the Church in Sermon time.

The 25th. That if the fear of God does not reconcile the Biſhops, they ought to be reconciled together by the Synod.

The 26th. enjoyns Biſhops to exhort the People of their Dioceſſes to live in Peace.

The 27th. forbids the Tranſlations of Biſhops which are made through Ambition; and as for thoſe which are made for the Good of the Church, it ſays, they ought to be made upon the Requeſt of the Clergy and People by Order of the Synod: neither does it permit Clergy-men to remove unto another Church, without the leave of their Biſhops.

The 28th declares, That a Synod may examine a-new the Condemnation of a Biſhop.

The 29th. That a Biſhop who accuſes a Clergy-man or Lay-man, ought to exhibit his Information againſt him to the Synod.

The 30th. forbids Eccleſiaſtical Judges to judge in the abſence of the Party accus'd.

The 31ſt. declares, That Biſhops ought to uſe the Goods of the Church, not as their own proper Goods, but as ſuch of which they have only the uſe.

The 32d. declares all Sale or exchange of Eccleſiaſtical Goods to be null and void, which is made without the Conſent of the Clergy.

The 33d declares, That the Biſhops and Prieſts who are forced to go into their Neighbour's Churches ſhall be received, and that they ſhall be invited to Preach and to Celebrate the Euchariſt there.

The 34th. That a Biſhop being ſeated, ſhall not ſuffer a Prieſt to continue ſtanding before him.

The 35th, That a Biſhop ſhall ſit on a Seat rais'd on high in the Church, or in the Aſſembly of his Prieſts; but in his Houſe he ſhall converſe with them as his Collegues and Brethren.

The 36th. That the Prieſts who govern the Churches, ſhall ſend for the Holy Chriſm before Eaſter.

The 37th. That the Deacon ſhould look upon himſelf as the Miniſter of the Prieſt, as well as of the Biſhop.

The 38th. That he may give the Euchariſt to the People in the preſence of the Prieſt, if neceſſity enforce it, and the Prieſt be willing.

The 39th. That he ſhall not ſit down but with the Prieſt's leave.

The 40th. That in a meeting of Prieſts, he muſt not ſpeak but when he is ask'd.

The 41ſt. That he ſhall not make uſe of a Surplice but at the time of Oblation.

The 42d. That a Miniſter who diſcharges faithfully his Miniſtry ought to be preferred to a higher Dignity.

The Councils.

The 43d. That Chriſtians who ſuffer for Religion, ought to be honoured, and their neceſſities provided for.

The 44th. forbids Clergy-men to ſuffer the Hair of their Heads or Beards to grow.

The 45th. exhorts them to make known their Vocation by their Modeſty in their Apparel and Countenance, and forbids them to diſtinguiſh themſelves by their Habit or their Shooes.

The 46th. forbids them to co-habit with Strange Women.

The 47th. and 48th. forbids them to walk in publick Places, and appear at Fairs.

The 49th. deprives them of their Rewards who are not preſent at Vigils.

The 50th. declares, That thoſe Miniſters ſhould be depriv'd of their Miniſtery who do not do their Duty, or do it negligently.

The 51ſt. 52d. and 53d. require all Miniſters, how able ſoever they be, to earn their living by an honeſt Trade, yet without failing in their Duty.

The 54th. forbids the Advancement of thoſe Miniſters higher, who envy the Prerogative of others.

The 55th. commands Biſhops to excommunicate thoſe who accuſe their Brethren unjuſtly, and forbids the admitting of them into the Clergy, even tho' they ſhould amend.

The 56th. ordains thoſe Miniſters to be degraded who are Traytors or Flatterers.

The 57th. obliges Slandering Miniſters to make Satisfaction.

The 58th. declares, That his Teſtimony is not to be received without Examination, who often goes to Law.

The 59th. That the Biſhop ought to reconcile thoſe Miniſters that are at difference, and that he who will not obey him ſhall be puniſhed by the Synod.

The 60th. declares, That a Miniſter ought to be remov'd from his Miniſtry, who ſpeaks laſcivious words.

The 61ſt. That thoſe Miniſters ought to be reprimanded who Swear by the Creatures, and if they continue to do it, they muſt be excommunicated.

The 62d. That the ſame ſeverity muſt be us'd to a Miniſter who ſings at Meals.

The 63d. is againſt thoſe Eccleſiaſticks who break a Faſt without inevitable neceſſity.

The 64th. declares, That he ought not to be accounted a Catholick who Faſts on Sundays.

The 65th. That the Feaſt of Eaſter ought to be celebrated on the ſame day.

The 66th. That an Eccleſiaſtick who believes that his Biſhop has condemned him unjuſtly, may have recourſe to the Judgment of the Synod.

The 67th. That ſeditious Perſons, Uſurers and revengful Perſons, ought not to be Ordain'd.

The 68th. That thoſe muſt not be ordain'd who are in the Rank of Penitents, and that if a Biſhop has ordain'd any of them through miſtake they ought to be depoſed, but if he knew their condition, he ſhall be deprived of the Power of Ordination.

The 69th. makes a Biſhop liable to the ſame Penalty, who ſhall ordain a Widow, or a Woman divorced.

The 70th. enjoins Eccleſiaſticks to ſhun the Society and Feaſts of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks.

The 71ſt. Ordains, That the Name of a Church ſhall not be given to the Aſſemblies of Hereticks.

The 72d. That none ſhall Pray or ſing with them.

The 73d. That thoſe ſhall be excommunicated who ſhall Communicate or Pray with them.

The 74th. That the Biſhop ſhall impoſe Penance upon him that deſires it, without reſpect to the Quality of the Perſon.

The 75th. That negligent Penitents ſhall be later received.

The 76th. declares, That if a Perſon having deſired Penance, perceive himſelf to be ſeiz'd with a Diſeaſe, and loſe his Underſtanding before the Prieſt can come to him, Penance ſhall be granted him upon the Teſtimony of thoſe who affirm that he deſired it, and if it be thought that he will quickly die, he ſhall be immediately reconciled, and the Euchariſt ſhall be put into his Mouth; but yet if he recover his health, he ſhall be put under Penance.

The 77th. That Penitents who fall ſick ſhall receive the Viaticum, that's to ſay, the Euchariſt.

The 78th. That thoſe who are thus receiv'd, ought not to think themſelves abſolv'd, if they recover their health, without Impoſition of Hands.

The 79th. That if Penitents die in a Journey or at Sea, before the Communion can be given them, yet they ſhall ſtill be commemorated in the Prayers and Oblations.

The 80th. That Impoſition of Hands ſhall be given to Penitents during all the times of Faſting.

The 81ſt. That Chriſtian Burial ſhall be given to Penitents.

The 82d. That Penitents ought to uſe Kneeling even at thoſe times when the Faithful are exempt from it.

The 83d. The Poor and Aged muſt be honoured.

The 84th. That the Biſhop ought not to hinder any Perſon to enter into the Church, whether he be a Heretick, Jew or Pagan, until the Maſs of the Catechumens begins.

The 85th. That the Catechumens who would be baptized, ought to give in their Names, and after that be prepar'd for Baptiſm by abſtaining from Wine and Meat, and by Impoſition of Hands.

The 86th. That Novices, or thoſe who are newly baptiz'd, ought for ſome time to abſtain from Feaſts and Shows, and to live in Continence.

The 87th contains the Sentence of Excommunication againſt a Catholick, who carries his Cauſe juſt or unjuſt before a Judge of another Religion.

The 88th. excommunicates him who forſakes the Aſſembly of the Church to be preſent at Shows.

The

The 89th. caſts thoſe out of the Church who practice Sooth-ſaying or Enchantments, and who are addicted to Jewiſh Superſtitions.

The 90th. declares, That the Exorciſts ought every day to lay Hands on the Poſſeſs'd.

The 91ſt. charges the Poſſeſs'd to take care that the Churches be ſwept.

The 92d. declares, That the Exorciſts ſhall feed the Poſſeſs'd who continue in the Churches.

The 93d. That Oblations ſhall not be received from the Brethren that are ſeparated from the Church.

The 94th. That their Preſents ſhall be rejected who oppreſs the Poor.

The 95th. blames thoſe who refuſe to give, in Memory of the dead, wherewithal to feed the Poor.

The 96th. ſays, That in judging a Cauſe, the Faith and Conduct of the Accuſer and Accuſed muſt be inquired into.

The 97th. That the Superiour of Nuns ought to be approved by the Biſhop.

The 98th. That a Lay-man ought not to teach in the preſence of Prieſts, unleſs they command him.

The 99th. That a Woman how Skilful and Holy ſoever ſhe be, ought not to take upon her to teach in an Aſſembly,

The 100th. That ſhe ought not to take upon her to baptize.

The 101ſt. That the young Widows which are weak ought to be maintain'd at the Expence of the Church to which they belong.

The 102d. declares, That it is the fault of the Biſhop or the Curate of the Pariſh, if the Widows and Nuns, are forced through neceſſity, to have too much familiarity with the inferiour Miniſters.

The 103d. That the Widows who are maintained at the Expence of the Church, ought to be very diligent and conſtant in the Service of God, that they may edify the Church by their Prayers and Works.

The 104th. excommunicates Widows who marry again, after they have made Profeſſion of Celibacy.

Baluzius has added yet one Canon more to theſe, which is againſt thoſe who cauſe Schiſms and Diviſions in the Church of Jeſus Chriſt, which is the Pillar and Foundation of the Faith of Chriſtians. There were many Biſhops at this Council, and they all ſubſcribed, but there are none now extant, beſides the Subſcriptions of Aurelius of Carthage, of Donatianus of Talabreca, or Telepta, and of St. Auſtin.

The Councils.

Of the COUNCIL of Carthage in the Year 399.

IT was a ſettled Cuſtom in Africk, that National Councils ſhould be held at Carthage very often. There was one in 399, in the Month of April, which is mentioned in the Code of the Canons of the African Church, which informs us, That this Council ſent Epigonius and Vincentius Deputies to the Emperour, to obtain a Law to forbid the taking of thoſe out of Churches who had fled thither, whatſoever Crimes they had been guilty of.

Of Carthage, 399.

Of the COUNCIL of Carthage in the Year 401, commonly call'd the Fifth.

'TIS commonly thought this Council was in the Year 398, but it appears by the Code of the Canons of the African Church, that the greateſt part of the Canons attributed to this Council were made in Two Aſſembiles held in the Year 401, in the Months of June and September; and therefore we follow this Code in the Abridgment of the Canons of this Council.

Of the Fifth of Carthage, 401.

Aurelius remonſtrates, That it was neceſſary for relieving the Churches of Africk, which were under great Neceſſity and Grief, to depute ſome Biſhops into the Weſt, and particularly to St. Anaſtaſius Biſhop of the Apoſtolical See, and to Venerius Biſhop of Milan. He repreſents that the Church of Africk was ſo abuſed and had ſuffered ſo great a Deſolation, That it had no Deacon who was ſufficiently learned, and much leſs a Prieſt; that therefore one might hear every day the Complaints of an infinite number of languiſhing People, and that if the Biſhops did not relieve them they muſt be accountable to God for the loſs of their Souls.

The 1ſt. Canon of this Council, which is the 57th. in the Greek Code of the African Church, confirms what had been ordain'd in a former Synod, That it ſhould be lawful to Ordain thoſe, who having been baptized in their Infancy among the Donatiſts, were afterwards reconciled to the Church; and it leaves it to the Prudence of the Biſhops to conſider, whether or no they might not receive a whole Donatiſt Church with its Biſhop, who ſhould deſire to be re-united to the Catholicks.

In the 2d. Aurelius ſays, That the Emperours ought to be intreated to deſtroy the Remainders of Idolatry, and to demoliſh ſome Temples which were yet ſtanding.

In the 3d. That they muſt alſo be deſired to give Orders, that it ſhall not be lawful to Summon a Clergy-man for a Witneſs before a Secular Judge, who has been Arbitrator or Judge of ſome Difference.

The 4th. That they muſt be deſired to forbid the Feaſts and Dancings which are made to the honour of Falſe Gods.

The 5th. That they muſt be prayed to hinder the ſhowing of Sports, Plays and Comedies, on Sundays and Feſtivals, particularly at Eaſter-time, when it happens ſometimes that more People go to the Circus than to the Church.

The 6th. That they muſt be entreated to give Order, that no Perſon ſhall defend an Eccleſiaſtick condemned by the Biſhops, under the pain of Correction and a Fine.

The

The Councils.

The 7th. That they muſt be deſired to hinder Commedians who turn Chriſtians from being forced to exerciſe their Profeſſion.

The 8th. That the Power of enfranchiſing Slaves in the Church muſt be deſired.

The 9th. declares, That if one Equitius a Biſhop, be found in Italy, who had been condemned in Africk, leave ſhall be deſired to make a Proceſs againſt him.

Theſe are the Canons of the Firſt Aſſembly in the Year 401.

The other Aſſembly was held the ſame Year on the 13th. of September. In it were read the Letters of Pope Anaſtaſius, who exhorted the Biſhop of Africk not to diſſemble the Vexations which they ſuffer from the Donatiſts. Nevertheleſs the Biſhops were of Opinion, that they ſhould be treated with gentleneſs, and that a Letter only ſhould be written to the Governours of Cities, to pray them to cauſe thoſe Churches to be reſtored to the Catholick Church, which the Maximianiſts had uſurped. This is found in the Canons 66 and 67, of the Greek Code of the Canons of the African Church.

The 68th. permits the Biſhops for Peace-ſake, to receive into the Catholick Clergy, thoſe Clergymen of the Donatiſts who ſhould be converted.

The 69th. declares, That ſome ſhall be deputed to the Donatiſts, to remonſtrate to them, that they ought to be reconciled to the Church.

The 70th. Ordains Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons to have no more to do with their Wives, under pain of Degradation; for the leſſer Orders, it does not oblige them to Celibacy.

The 71ſt. forbids a Biſhop to forſake the principal Church of his Dioceſs and make his abode at another.

The 72d. declares, That Children ought to be baptized, when there is no proof, nor teſtimony that they have been already baptized.

The 73d. renews the Canon which Ordains, That the Biſhop of Carthage ſhall publiſh Eaſter-day.

The 74th. forbids him, who has the care of a Church committed to him after the death of its Biſhop, to continue there more than one Year; and obliges him to cauſe a Biſhop to be choſen; and if he neglects it, the Canon ordains that at the end of the Year, another Steward ſhall be choſen for the Church.

The 76th. is againſt the Biſhops who abſent themſelves without cauſe from the National Council.

The 77th. is againſt a particular Biſhop named Creſconius, who refuſed to come thither. The Council Ordains, That he ſhall come to the Firſt National African Council, and if he did not, that a Sentence ſhould be paſs'd againſt him.

The 78th. names Deputies for deciding a Difference of a Church in Africa.

The 79th. declares, That thoſe Clergy-men are not to be admitted to juſtify themſelves who have continued a Year without taking pains to take off the Excommunication which was pronounced againſt them.

The 80th. ordains, That if a Biſhop give Holy Orders to a Stranger, or if he make a Monk of another Monaſtery, Superiour of his own Monaſtery, he ſhall be ſeparated from the Communion of the other Biſhops, and ſhall enjoy only that of his own Church, and that he who was made Clergy-man or Superiour, ſhall not enjoy that Honour.

The 81ſt. is againſt thoſe Biſhops who ſhould make Hereticks or Pagans their Heirs, tho' they ſhould be of their Kindred.

The 82d. declares, That the Emperour ſhall be deſir'd to grant the Power of ſetting Servants free to the Church.

The 83d. is concerning the Care which Biſhops ought to take, to hinder the Faithful from honouring Falſe Relicks and Falſe Martyrs.

The 84th. declares, That the Emperour ſhould be requeſted to demoliſh the remaining Temples and Idols.

The 85th. and Laſt gives Power to the Biſhop of Carthage to Dictate and Subſcribe, in the name of the whole Council, the Letters which the Council thought fit to write and ſend. Theſe are the Canons of the Fifth Council of Carthage, which is commonly plac'd in the Year 398, but was indeed in the Year 401, according to the two Codes of the Canons of the African Church.

The Reflections which may be made on the Councils of Africa of which we have juſt now ſpoken, are theſe; Firſt, That there were in Africa a great number of Biſhops; Secondly, That the Title of Metropolitan in Africa, was not as in other places, affixed to the Biſhop of the Civil Metropolis, but to the Antiquity of the Biſhoprick; Thirdly, That the Biſhop of Carthage had much Authority over all Africk; That he enjoy'd great Juriſdictions and Prerogatives; in a word, That he was as it were, the Exarch or Patriarch of all Africa; Fourthly, That Synods were very often held in Africa, and they were diſtinguiſhed into two ſorts, one Provincial and the other National or General, which were commonly held at Carthage, where the Biſhops deputed from the Provinces aſſembled under the Authority of the Biſhop of that City; Fifthly, That they handled Matters of Diſcipline, and made ſuch Canons as they ſaw the Juncture and State of Affairs requir'd; Sixthly, That their Diſcipline with reſpect to Clergy-men, was very Regular and Exact; Seventhly, That they endeavour'd to maintain the Eccleſiaſtical Authority by the Aſſiſtance of the Imperial Laws; Laſtly, That they made many Canons very uſeful for all Chriſtians. Theſe Reflections ſeem'd neceſſary for explainnig what I have ſaid of theſe Councils, and they may conduce to repreſent and diſcover the uſefulneſs of Councils in general.

Of

Of the COUNCIL of Conſtantinople, in the Year 394.

BAlſamon has preſerv'd a Fragment of this Council held at Conſtantinople on the 27th of September, in the Year 394. It was compos'd of three Eaſtern Patriarchs, Nectarius of Conſtantinople, Theophilus of Alexandria, and Flavianus of Antioch, and of Sixteen Biſhops of the Eaſt and of Aſia. In it the Difference was examin'd that was between Agapius and Bagadius, who both pretended to the Biſhoprick of Boſtra. Bagadius had been depos'd by two Biſhops. The Council diſapproves this Judgment, and declares, That as a Biſhop cannot be ordained but by three Biſhops, ſo neither can he be depos'd by leſs than three. Theophilus ſays, That three Biſhops are not ſufficient, but all the Biſhops of the Province ſhould aſſemble if it be poſſible, and all the Synod approv'd his Judgment. This is all we know of this Council.

Of the COUNCIL of Alexandria, in the Year 399.

THeophilus aſſembled in the Year 399, a Council at Alexandria, wherein he condemned the Books of Origen. Juſtinian quotes a Fragment of the Letter of this Council in his Epiſtle to Menas.

Of the COUNCIL of Cyprus, at the ſame time.

WIthin a little time after St. Epiphanius, being perſwaded by the Letters of Theophilus, held a Council in the Iſle of Cyprus, and there alſo caus'd the Books of Origen to be condemned.

Of the COUNCIL of Turin.

THE Biſhops of Africk were not the only Biſhops who took care to maintain the Diſcipline of the Church about the end of the Fourth Century: Thoſe of Gaul and Spain have alſo left us authentical Monuments of their Paſtoral Vigilance. The former in the Canons of the Council of Turin, and the latter in thoſe of the Council of Toledo, for theſe two Councils were aſſembled in the Year 400, or thereabouts.

The Council of Turin determined ſeveral Differences between the Churches and Biſhops of Gaul.

The 1ſt is, That which Proculus Biſhop of Marſeilles had with the Biſhops of Gallia Narbonenſis, of which he would be acknowledged Metropolitan. The Council, for Peace-ſake granted to the Perſon, and not to the See of Proculus, the Juriſdiction of a Primate over all the Churches in the Second Narbonenſis.

The 2d Difference was between the Biſhops of the Churches of Arles and Vienna, who conteſted the Right of Primacy. The Synod declares, That this Right belongs to him who ſhall prove that his City is the Metropolis; but in the mean time it ordains, as a Proviſion for preſerving Peace, That the Biſhops of theſe two Churches ſhall have under their Juriſdiction the Churches which are neareſt to their own Cities, and that they ſhall live hereafter in Peace, without diſturbing one another, by uſurping the Churches that are remote.

The third Queſtion which was to be determined in this Synod, concerned Four Biſhops, who had made Ordinations contrary to Order: The Council remits their Fault, on condition that they will not relapſe into it any more, and Ordains, That for the time to come, thoſe who ſhall relapſe into it, ſhall be diſabled from coming to Synods, and that thoſe who ſhall be ſo ordained, ſhall be depriv'd of the Prieſthood.

The 4th is concerning a Lay-man called Palladius, who complained of a Sentence given againſt him by his own Biſhop Triferius, before whom he was not able to prove a Crime of which he had accus'd a Prieſt. The Council confirms the Sentence of Triferius, leaving him nevertheleſs the Liberty to ſhow favour to Palladius.

It confirms alſo in the 5th Canon another Sentence of the ſame Biſhop, given againſt the Prieſt Exuperantius, who had vomited forth many Calumnies and Reproaches againſt him.

The 6th Canon is againſt thoſe who communicated with Felix Biſhop of Triers, who was of the Faction of the Ithacians.

The 7th forbids Biſhops to take Clergy-men from any one of their Brethren, to ordain them in their own Churches, and to receive thoſe into Communion who have been excommunicated in ſome other place.

The 8th declares, That thoſe who have been ordained contrary to the Canons, and who being ordain'd have had Children, ought not to be advanc'd to higher Orders.

Of the COUNCIL of Toledo.

THIS Council was held in the Year 400. and compos'd of Nineteen Spaniſh Biſhops aſſembled at Toledo, who having made Profeſſion of the Faith, and condemned the Errors of the Priſcillianiſts, made Canons concerning Diſcipline. The Firſt thing which they ordained was, That the Canons of the Council of Nice ſhould be obſerv'd: And afterwards they made 20 other Canons.

In the 1ſt they permit the Order of Deacon to be given to married Perſons, provided they be chaſte, and preſerve Continence; but they impoſe no other Penalty upon a Deacon or a Prieſt who has not liv'd in Continence, and who had Children before the Law which the Biſhops of Luſitania made upon this Subject: They impoſe upon them, no other Penalty, but that they ſhall not be capable of riſing to a higher Dignity.

The Councils.

[Continence in theſe Canons is to be underſtood of abſtaining from the Rites of Marriage.

The 2d Canon forbids the ordaining of a Perſon who has done publick Penance: It adds, That if neceſſity require, he may be made a Porter, or at moſt a Reader; but upon Condition, that he neither read the Epiſtles nor Goſpels; and that if any ſuch Perſon has been Ordain'd Deacon, he ſhall be only in the rank of Sub-Deacons, without being capable of laying on of Hands, or touching Holy Things. 'Tis obſerved afterwards, that a Penitent is he, who having done Publick Penance after his Baptiſm, for Murder, or ſome other Crime of like Nature, has been publickly reconcil'd at the Altar of God.

[i.e. The Elements of the Euchariſt.

The 3d Canon declares, That if a Reader marry a Widow, he cannot be advanced to higher Orders, and that at moſt he ſhall only be a Sub-Deacon.

The 4th, That a Sub-Deacon who Marries again, ſhall be put in the rank of Porters or Readers, without being capable of reading the Epiſtles or Goſpels; That he who ſhall Marry a third time ſhall be ſeparated from the Church for the ſpace of two Years; and after he is reconciled, he ſhall never riſe higher than the rank of Lay-men.

The 5th deprives a Clergy-man of Eccleſiaſtical Orders, who being deſign'd for the Service of ſome Church in the City or Country, ſhall not be preſent at the Sacrifice which is made there every Day.

The 6th forbids Virgins conſecrated to God, to have any familiarity with Eccleſiaſtical Men, who are not of their near Kindred.

The 7th gives leave to Clergy-men who have Wives that do not behave themſelves well, to bind them and ſhut them up in their Houſes, and forbids them to eat with them till they have done Penance.

The 8th excludes thoſe from Holy Orders, who have been in the Wars after they have received Baptiſm.

The 9th forbids Virgins and Widows to pray with Strangers in their Houſes, except in the preſence of the Biſhop, a Prieſt, or a Deacon.

The 10th declares, That thoſe muſt not be ordain'd, who have a dependence upon ſome Family, or who are engaged in ſome Farm, unleſs thoſe upon whom they depend, conſent to it.

The 11th declares, That if a Man in Power has robbed a Clergy-man, or a poor Monk, and will not appear before the Biſhop to give an account of what he has done, he ought to be excommunicated till he reſtores the Goods which do not belong to him.

The 12th forbids to receive a Clergy-man from another Biſhop, unleſs he be a Schiſmatick, and declares all thoſe Excommunicated, who ſeparate from Catholicks to join with Schiſmaticks.

The 13th Ordains, that thoſe who come to Church and do not receive the Communion ſhall be admoniſhed, that they muſt either communicate, or be put in the rank of Penitents, and if they will do neither, they ſhall be excommunicated.

The 14th ordains, That he ſhall be driven away as a Sacrilegious Perſon, which having received the Euchariſt from the hand of the Biſhop, does not eat it.

The 15th declares, That we muſt neither eat nor converſe with a Lay-man or Clergy-man who is excommunicated.

The 16th impoſes a Penance of ten Years for Adultery.

The 17th declares, That he who has a Concubine and a Wife both together, ought to be excommunicated, but that he ought not to be excommunicated who has only a Concubine; ſo that it is neceſſary for every one that is a Member of the Church, to ſatisfie himſelf either with one Wife or one Concubine. This Canon may give ſome trouble to thoſe, who know not that the Word Concubine, which is at preſent odious, was formerly taken for a Woman, to whom the Marriage Promiſe was given, tho' ſhe was not married with all the Solemnities which the Laws required in Marriage; as St. Auſtin has explained it in the 5th Chap. of the Book, about the advantages of Marriage.

The 18th declares, That we ought not to communicate with the Widow of a Biſhop, a Prieſt, or a Deacon, if ſhe marries again, and that ſhe ought not to be reconciled until the Point of Death.

The 19th inflicts the ſame Penalty upon the Daughter of a Biſhop, a Prieſt, or a Deacon, who marries after ſhe has been conſecrated to God.

The 20th is expreſſed in theſe Words: Altho' it is obſerved almoſt every where, not to conſecrate Chriſm without the Biſhop, yet becauſe we are informed that in ſome places the Prieſts do conſecrate it, we have ordain'd, that for the future, none but the Biſhop ſhall conſecrate the Holy Chriſm; and that he ſhall ſend it through all his Dioceſs. And to the end that this Canon may be put in execution, every Church ſhall ſend to the Biſhop a Deacon or Sub-Deacon about Eaſter, that he may fetch Chriſm for that day. 'Tis certain, that the Biſhop can conſecrate Chriſm at all times, which the Prieſts cannot do without the Authority and Permiſſion of the Biſhop. The Deacons cannot adminiſter the Holy Chriſm, 'tis only lawful for the Prieſts to do it in the abſence of the Biſhop, or by his Order, if he be preſent.

Theſe are the Eccleſiaſtical Canons which were made at the end of the Fourth Century, and the beginning of the Fifth.

An Abridgment of the Doctrine of the Fourth AGE of the Church.

THO' there was nothing taught in the Fourth Age of the Church, which was not believed in the Three Firſt; yet it muſt be confeſſed, that in it the chief Myſteries of Religion were very much clear'd up and explained. As to the Divinity and Attributes of God, there was nothing almoſt added to what was ſaid by the ancient Fathers, and they were even leſs handled in this Age then in the preceding. But the Myſtery of the Trinity, as we have ſeen, was the Subject of an infinite number of Books written by the Authors of this Age, and of many Synodical Deciſions. The Divinity of the Son of God and the Holy Spirit was eſtabliſhed. It was proved, That theſe two Perſons are of the ſame Subſtance with the Father; Eſſence and Subſtance was carefully diſtinguiſhed from the Perſon; many Arguments were urged whereon to ground this Doctrine; and the Objections which the Hereticks proops'd againſt it, were anſwered.

There was ſome Difference among the Catholicks, about the Word Hypoſtaſis; Some would have it ſaid, That the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, were Three Hypoſtaſes, and others maintain'd that we ought to ſay, That they were but one and the ſame Hypoſtaſis; but this ſeeming Difference conſiſted only in a Queſtion about a Word, which depended upon the ſignification of the Word Hypoſtaſis, which one Party took for the Perſon, and the other for the Nature. All the Fathers of this Age acknowledged, that the Word was a Perſon, diſtinguiſhed from the Perſon of the Eternal Father, and that his Generation was Eternal; but they did not think of explaining how this Generation is made; and they confeſs'd, That it is ineffable and incomprehenſible: neither did they inſiſt upon a multitude of ſubtle Queſtions concerning the Myſtery of the moſt Holy Trinity, and they always continued in the Simplicity of the Faith, which they eſtabliſhed upon the Authority of Scripture and of Tradition. They taught alſo, That the Word appeared to the Patriarchs, and in this ſence they ſaid that he was viſible. Tho' they treated not ſo much in this Age of the Myſtery of the Incarnation, as in the next, yet it was explained very clearly, and not only the Errors of Arius and Apollinarius were condemned, who denied that Jeſus Chriſt had a Soul or Humane Underſtanding different from the Divinity; but even the Errors of Neſtorius, Eutyches, and all the other Hereticks were rejected beforehand, who either diſtinguiſh Two Perſons in Jeſus Chriſt, or confound the Two Natures and their Properties. They believed the Incarnation to be neceſſary for the Redemption of Mankind, and acknowledged, that none can be ſaved without Faith in Jeſus Chriſt. Some taught alſo, that Jeſus Chriſt preached the Goſpel to thoſe in Hell, but this Opinion was rejected by many. They affirmed that there were great numbers of Angels and Devils. They determined nothing about the Day of Judgment, and they did all almoſt confeſs, that Men are wholly ignorant of it. They looked upon what the Ancients ſaid concerning the Reign of Jeſus Chriſt upon Earth, for the ſpace of a 1000 Years as a mere groundleſs Imagination. They almoſt all acknowledged, that the Souls which are innocent and purified from their Sins, enjoy Happineſs before the Day of Judgment; and that the Souls of the Wicked are condemned to Eternal Fire, immediately after their Death: Yet they confeſs'd, that after the Reſurrection, their Happineſs or Miſery ſhould ſtill be encreaſed. They believed, that the Souls of Men were Spiritual and Immortal; but they doubted, Whether they were immediately created by God, or produced by the Souls of their Fathers and Mothers. They ſpoke more of Grace than thoſe who lived in the preceding Ages, and yet they aſcribed always very much to Free-Will. Original Sin, begun to be better known. They excluded from the Kingdom of Heaven, Children who died without Baptiſm; but they did not affirm that they ſhould endure the Torments of Fire. They acknowledged the Efficacy and neceſſity of Baptiſm. The Impoſition of the Hands of the Biſhop, or the Anointing with Holy Chriſm, was looked upon as a Sacrament which brought down the Holy Spirit upon the Baptized. They maintained againſt the Novatians, that the Church had power to impoſe Penance, and to forgive the moſt Enormous Sins. They taught clearly, That the Bread and Wine of the Euchariſt, were changed into the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt. They gave the Name of a Sacrifice to the Celebration of the Euchariſt, and performed it with particular Ceremonies. They were perſwaded that Men ought to be Ordained, to make them capable of diſcharging the Eccleſiaſtical Functions. They approved of Marriage, and would have the Perſons to be married, contracted in the Face of the Church, and in the preſence of a Prieſt who gave a Bleſſing. They honoured Virginity, and commended thoſe who profeſſed it; and looked upon thoſe as Sacrilegious Perſons who violated that Profeſſion. They had much Reverence and Veneration for the Bleſſed Virgin, and for the Saints; they prayed to them, and alſo honoured their Reliques. They prayed for the Dead. We have often taken Notice of their Opinion concerning the Authority of Holy Scripture and Tradition. They taught, that there was but one Catholick Church, out of which there was no Salvation, and to whoſe Authority all Men ought to ſubmit, becauſe it can neither ceaſe to be, nor Err in Matters of Faith.

Wherefore one may ſay in general, That the Doctrine of the Fourth Age was the belief of the Church of that Age, and ſo the Church not being capable of changing her Belief, it neceſſarily follows, That the Doctrine of that Time, is not at all different from that which the Church teaches ſtill at this Day.

An Abridgment of the Diſcipline of the Fourth AGE of the Church.

THE Diſcipline of the Church, conſiſts either in the Government, or in the Policy, or in the Ceremonies, or in the Practiſes which concerns Manners and Chriſtian Perfection. It cannot be doubted but theſe Three Points, and eſpecially the Two former, were very much improved in the Fourth Fourth Age of the Church. For before this time, the Church which had been continually toſs'd and troubled with Perſecutions, could never ſettle one conſtant and uniform Form of Government, nor celebrate the Myſteries with the Pomp and Splendor of Ceremonies: But when once ſhe was perfectly delivered from the Yoke of Tyranny, under which ſhe had groaned before, and eſtabliſhed by the Authority of a Chriſtian Emperour, ſhe made Rules and Laws for the Government of her ſelf, and joined to the purity of Faith the Magnificence of Ceremonies. Thus, tho' there had been ſome Rules for the Government of the Churches of the Firſt Ages, which were eſtabliſhed by Cuſtom and Tradition, and there were already many Ceremonies practis'd; yet it may be affirm'd that theſe things were very much improv'd in the Fourth Age of the Church, as will eaſily appear by comparing what was Ordain'd and Practis'd in that Age, with what was done in the foregoing.

Firſt, As to the Government of the Church. It was in the Fourth Age that the Body of the Churches were perfected, and that certain Rules were eſtabliſhed for Eccleſiaſtical Deciſions. The Diſtinction, Diſtribution and Subordination of Churches were ſettled for the moſt part according to the Form of the Civil Government. The Civil Provinces form'd the Body of an Eccleſiaſtical Province. The Biſhop of the Civil Metropolis was look'd upon as the firſt Biſhop of the Province. Some Rights and Prerogatives were aſſigned to him, and the care of overſeeing the whole Province was committed to him. In every Province there was held twice a Year Provincial Councils, which the Metropolitan called together, and over which he preſided. When a Biſhop died, all the Biſhops of the Province were called together to ordain a Succeſſor in his room. He was commonly choſen by the Clergy and People of the Vacant Church; the Metropolitan was to be preſent at this Ordination, and he could not do it unleſs two Biſhops of the Province were with him, and the reſt conſented to it. As many Civil Provinces made one diſtrict, which was called a Dioceſs, ſo many Eccleſiaſtical Provinces made one Eccleſiaſtical Dioceſs, of which the Biſhop of the Principal City was the Head. This Biſhop had the Rights, Prerogatives, Privileges of Honour and Juriſdiction over the whole Dioceſs; he enjoyed alſo the Right of Ordaining Metropolitans, which belong'd formerly to the Biſhops of the Province. The Biſhop of the Church of Rome was in poſſeſſion of the Primacy which he receiv'd from Jeſus Chriſt, as being Succeſſor to St. Peter Prince of the Apoſtles. This Primacy gave him great Rights and Prerogatives in the whole Church, to maintain the Faith, and cauſe the Holy Canons to be obſerved. It happened ſometimes, but ſeldom, that he abuſed his Power and Authority, but when this happened, the Church was ſatisfied that ſhe could remedy the Abuſe. So when Liberius had ſubſcribed to an Arian Creed, and condemned St. Athanaſius, the other Biſhops did not think themſelves obliged to follow his Example. The Churches of Alexandria, of Antioch, and ſome others, had alſo their Privileges founded upon Eccleſiaſtical Cuſtom. The Church of Jeruſalem had a degree of Honour, and acquired by little and little ſome Juriſdiction. Laſtly, the Biſhop of Conſtantinople procured to himſelf the Second Rank of Honour, and in a little time aſſumed to himſelf the Juriſdiction over Thrace, Pontus, and leſſer Aſia. The Suburbicary Churches had in a manner no other Metropolitan but the Biſhop of Rome. The Churches of Gaul and Spain were Governed by Metropolitans and Provincial Synods. The Churches of Africa had no fixed Metropolitan; this Dignity belong'd to the moſt ancient Biſhop of the Province: But the Biſhop of Carthage had great Rights and Prerogatives, and even a kind of Juriſdiction over all Africk. As to the Churches without the Roman Empire, they had no certain Form, and they were for the moſt part govern'd by one Biſhop only, who had under him many Prieſts. The Prieſts took care of the People together with the Biſhops: There were alſo Churches in the Cities and the Country, where they preſided over the Aſſemblies of the People, as Pariſh-Prieſts do now. There were alſo Suffragans who held a middle place between Biſhops and Prieſts: There was no Biſhop, Prieſt, Deacon or Miniſter ordain'd, but who was engaged to do his Duty in one certain Church, and this he was obliged to diſcharge.

As for Eccleſiaſtical Deciſions, a Biſhop never judged any thing without the Advice of his Clergy. Provincial Councils were commonly held Twice a Year, where the Determinations and Differences of the Biſhops of the Province were examined: There all Eccleſiaſtical Differences were firſt decided, Matters of Faith only excepted. But thoſe who thought them-

[Whoever has attentively read the foregoing account of the Controverſies by which the Church was divided in this Age, and of the Synods that were convened to determine them, can make a very true Judgment whether this is not ſaid (to ſave himſelf) by a Man, who having in his other Writings appeared ſo zealouſly for the Privileges of the Gallican Church againſt the Pretenſions of the Court of Rome, thought himſelf obliged to inſert this Period for the ſatisfaction of his ſcrupulous Brethren. Theſe Abridgments are deſigned to be heaps of Concluſions from Premiſes already laid down in the precedent Work, ſo that tho' this Propoſition were true in it ſelf, it were here impertinent, becauſe it cannot be collected from what went before, which makes me think that this Period belongs more to the Licenſers than the Author. I need only appeal to this very Hiſtory, from which two Concluſions may be certainly drawn. Firſt, That the Orthodox Biſhops who were perſecuted by Conſtantius and Valens in the Eaſt, were glad to fly to Rome for ſhelter, and would, as all Men naturally do, make the moſt of the Aſſiſtance they found, that poſſibly they could. Secondly, that every Metropolitical See was equally concerned to preſerve its own Rights, and the reſt of the Church thought it only a Matter of Diſcipline inſtituted for the ſake of Order and Decency, that one Church had the Rights of a Metropolis, rather then another. This laſt Mr. Du Pin takes pains himſelf to prove, from whence at leaſt this muſt be plain, That he muſt believe that in the Fourth Age of the Church, all the Supremacy that was allowed to the Church of Rome was only Titular out of its own Juriſdiction; and then the Primacy granted to St. Peter could not have then been underſtood to belong to any of his Succeſſors, (even tho' we ſhould allow them to have thought that St. Peter had a real Authority) ſince the reſt of the Church plainly acted without any regard to it, and teſtified no remorſe for it afterwards.]

themſelves injured, quickly had recourſe to the Biſhop who preſided over the Dioceſs, and to his Synod. The Biſhop of Rome pretended to have this Juriſdiction over all the reſt, and the Council of Sardica granted him ſomething like it. But the Eaſtern Churches and many others maintained the Authority of their Dioceſan or National Synods: All the Biſhops thought themſelves Judges of Matters of Faith. When any queſtion of Faith became a publick Diſpute, the Biſhops of the Great Sees were conſulted, and chiefly the Biſhop of Rome, whoſe Opinion was of great weight, as well upon the account of his Primacy, as becauſe he anſwered in the Name of all the Weſtern Biſhops, and was a Witneſs of their Doctrine. The General Council of the Eaſtern and Weſtern Biſhops, was looked upon as the Sovereign Judge for deciding all ſorts of Eccleſiaſtical Controverſies. Excommunication or Separation from the viſible Communion of the Church, was the Eccleſiaſtical Penalty, which was made uſe of againſt all thoſe who were convicted of an Error or a Crime; if they repented they were put under Penance, and then they might be reſtored to the Communion of the Church; but if they were obſtinate, they were wholly caſt out. The Churches were united together by Letters of Communion. 'Twas forbidden to receive any one into the Church who had been Excommunicated, by his own Biſhop, without his Conſent. And ſo thoſe who were excommunicated, were ſeparated from the Communion of all the Churches in the World. If any particular Church, any Biſhops, or any other Perſons ſeparated themſelves from the Body of the Church, or continued ſeparated from it, they were looked upon as Schiſmaticks. Tranſlations of Biſhops were forbidden; they were very rare in the Weſt; but the Ambition of ſome Biſhops made them common in the Eaſt. Many Canons were made for hindering Biſhops and Clergy-men from going to Court. A Biſhop was forbidden to meddle with the Affairs of another Dioceſs, or to Ordain any Perſons out of his own. Perſons of an unblameable Life, were made choice of to enter into Holy Orders; they were depoſed when they committed any Crime. In many Churches the Age and the neceſſary Times were preſcribed at which any one could be raiſed to Eccleſiaſtical Orders. The Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons were obliged to Celibacy in the Weſt; which Law was not eſtabliſhed in the Eaſt. The Church begun then to have great Riches, which came to her from the Liberality of the Emperours, and others of the Faithful. The Sacraments were adminiſtred gratis, and it was forbidden to take or give any thing for a Spiritual Benefit. Many very uſeful Canons were made concerning the Life and Manners of Eccleſiaſticks. In a word, Nothing can be greater or Wiſer than the Laws which were made at this time, concerning the Government of the Church; but it muſt be confeſſed, That they were not always very exactly obſerved, and that the Intereſts and Paſſions of Men, the Ambition of Biſhops, and the Will of Princes, cauſed them often to be violated, contrary to the Intention of the Church, which uſed all her Endeavours to maintain them.

When Chriſtians began in the Reign of Conſtantine to perform Divine Service publickly with Pomp and Solemnity, there is no doubt but the Ancient Eccleſiaſtical Ceremonies were then perfected, and that new ones were added to render the Celebration of the Holy Myſteries more venerable to the People. Some of the chief of them were theſe:

Baptiſm was adminiſtred to Infants and Adult Perſons with many Ceremonies. They were dipped Three times into the Water. Exorciſms and Anointings were in uſe. Milk and Honey were given to the Catechumens. The Solemn times for Adminiſtring Baptiſm were Eaſter and Whitſunday, and alſo Epiphany in ſome Churches. The Adult were prepared for Receiving this Sacrament a conſiderable time before, and there were many Degrees of Catechumens, as we have already obſerved. After Baptiſm the Biſhop conferred the Fulneſs of the Holy Spirit, by Impoſition of Hands in the Latin Church, and by Unction in the Greek. The Times and Degrees of Publick Penance for Crimes committed after Baptiſm, were ſettled by an Infinite number of Canons, yet it was always left to the Diſcretion of the Biſhop, to leſſen or encreaſe them. Publick Penance was impoſed for all the great Crimes, which the Penitents were either convicted of, or confeſſed themſelves to be guilty of. Abſolution was not commonly refuſed for any Crime; but Penance was never granted twice. The Holy Sacrifice of the Euchariſt was celebrated with Ceremonies. The Euchariſt was commonly given to the Laity in both Kinds; but upon certain occaſions they gave it in one kind only. The Bread which was conſecrated was ordinary Bread, broken into many pieces. The Faithful were often preſent at the Holy Sacrifice; Catechumens and Penitents were debarred from it; the Euchariſt was received in the Act of Adoration. The Laity received alſo the Bread of the Euchariſt into their hands, but the cuſtom of carrying it to their Houſes was very rare, and it was commonly ſpent all in the Church, while they were faſting. The Love-Feaſts or Feaſts of Charity, were removed in moſt Churches; almoſt all thoſe that were preſent at the Sacrifice received the Communion; and ſo Chriſtians receiv'd the Body of Jeſus Chriſt very often, and yet were perſwaded, that they ought to be Holy and Innocent to receive it worthily. Before the Communion-Office began, there were ſome Prayers which were made for Catechumens and Penitents. The Holy Scripture was read in the Aſſemblies of Chriſtians, and the Biſhop or one of the Prieſts preached the Word of God. Theſe Aſſemblies were held in Churches conſecrated to God, and built magnificently; they were made very ſplendid, and Divine Offices were celebrated there with much Pomp and Splendor. Singing of Pſalms was alſo uſed; Wax-Candles were lighted chiefly during the Nocturnal Offices. The Dead were buried with much Ceremony and Pomp, the great Feſtivals were celebrated with much Solemnity. Proceſſions began to be introduced. Prayer for the Dead was a common Practice in the Church; they were commemorated at the celebration of the Euchariſt. The Invocation of Saints and Martyrs, and the Celebration of their Feſtivals were common in all the Churches; the uſe of Croſſes was frequent; the Sign of the Croſs was made very often; there were Images in many Churches. A Bleſſing was given for Marriage; but the Church never gave it for Second Marriages, and they even put Bigamiſts under Penance for ſome time. Marriages contracted between Perſons who could not lawfully Marry according to the Civil Laws, were looked upon as null. Divorce for Adultery was permitted in ſome Churches. Orders were conferred by Impoſition of Hands. Biſhops had the ſole Power of Ordaining Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons, and of Confirming. Solemn Baptiſm alſo, and the Abſolution of Publick Penitents was reſerv'd to them. The number of leſſer Orders was not fixed; there were more or fewer of them in different Churches. There were Deaconeſſes in almoſt all Churches. The Myſteries were carefully concealed from thoſe who were not yet baptized. The Biſhops, Prieſts, Deacons, and the Laity, had their Places in the Churches. In ſhort, Divine Service was performed with much Decency, Modeſty, Gravity and Pomp.

Faſting is one of the chief external Practices which concern Manners: The Chriſtians of the Fourth Age were very Religious in obſerving it. Lent was eſtabliſhed in all Churches, tho' it was longer or ſhorter in different Places. The Feaſts of Wedneſday and Friday, (or Saturday in the Church of Rome) were alſo Religiouſly obſerved. During the time of Faſting, they waited till Night in Lent before they eat any thing, and till three a Clock in the Afternoon in other Faſts; and all this time they commonly abſtained from Meat and Wine in almoſt all Churches. The Monaſtick State was eſtabliſhed in this Age, and became very common in a little time. There quickly appeared a great number of Monaſteries full of an infinite number of Monks, who retir'd from the World, obſerv'd Celibacy, liv'd in Obedience, kept exceſſive Faſts, and perform'd very great Auſterities. Many Virgins were alſo conſecrated to God, made a Vow of Virginity, and liv'd in common under the Government of an Abbeſs. The Monks and Nuns were both under the Juriſdiction of their Biſhops. There were very few Monks who were Prieſts; ſome were taken out of Monaſteries to be made Biſhops. There were alſo ſome Hermits, who dwelt alone in the Deſarts. The Chriſtians were conſtantly at Prayers, and gave great Alms to the Poor, aſſiſted the Sick, viſited Priſoners, and did ſeveral other Works of Charity. They ſometimes undertook Pilgrimages to viſit the Holy Places; but tho' the Holy Fathers approved the Devotion, yet they feared the Accidents which might happen upon it, and were not of Opinion, that theſe kind of Journies ſhould be undertaken raſhly and lightly. They did not tolerate ſuperſtitious Practices, nor any new Devotions founded upon the Imaginations of private Perſons, but they recommended the Practice of Evangelical Counſels, and exhorted all Chriſtians to go on to that Perfection which is deſcribed in many Places of the Goſpel.

Theſe are ſome part of the Points of Diſcipline of the Fourth Age of the Church: I ſhall not ſtay now to obſerve many others, nor to prove theſe by Authentical Teſtimonies: becauſe my Deſign is not to make a Diſſertation upon this Subject, which would be longer then all this Volume, but only to give a ſlight Idea of the Diſcipline of that Time. Neither ſhall I undertake to Collect or Abridge what the Writers of this Age have ſaid of Morality, which would be an infinite Work; and the Reader ought to be ſatisfied with the Extracts that are made in the body of our Book, taken from the fineſt Paſſages of the Authors here mentioned.

The End of the Second Volume.

A CHRO-

A CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE OF THE ECCLESIASTICAL AUTHORS Mentioned in this VOLUME.

Giving an Account of the Time of their Birth, their Names, Country and Employments, when they Flouriſhed, with the Time of their Deaths.

EUSEBIUS.

BORN in the Reign of Galienus, about the Year 264. Ordained Biſhop of Cæſarea in Palæſtine, in 313. Flouriſhed under Conſtantine. Died in the Year 338.

CONSTANTINE.

Born in the Year 273. The firſt Chriſtian Emperour. Elected the 6th of Auguſt 309. Died May 22. 337.

C. VECTIUS AQUILINUS JUVENCUS,

A Prieſt of Spain. Flouriſhed about the Year 329.

RHETICIUS,

Biſhop of Autun. Flouriſhed at the beginning of the Fourth Century.

EUSTATHIUS,

Born about the end of the Third Century. Elected Biſhop of Antioch, in the Year 323. Flouriſhed from that time to the Year 330. Died about the Year 335.

PETER,

Ordained Biſhop of Alexandria in the Year 300. Suffered Martyrdom in 311.

ALEXANDER,

Ordained Biſhop of Alexandria in 305. Died about the end of the Year 325.

St. ATHANASIUS,

Born about the Year 300. Ordained Biſhop of Alexandria in 326. Maintained the Faith of the Church until the Year 373. Died about the Year 373.

St. JACOBUS NISIBENUS,

Flouriſhed at the end of the Third, and the beginning of the Fourth Century. Died about the Year 340.

MARCELLUS,

Biſhop of Ancyra, Flouriſhed about the Year 325. till the Year 336.

HOSIUS,

Born Anno 267. Biſhop of Corduba. Flouriſhed from the beginning to the middle of the Fourth Century. Died in 358.

JULIUS,

Ordained Biſhop of Rome in the Year 335. Died in 352.

ASTERIUS,

An Arian Philoſopher. Wrote about the Year 330.

THEODORUS,

Biſhop of Perinthus. Flouriſhed about the Year 330.

TRYPHILIUS,

Biſhop in Cyprus. Flouriſhed under Conſtantius.

HELIODORUS,

A Prieſt. Under the ſame.

DONATUS,

Under Conſtantine and Conſtantius.

VITELLIUS, and MACROBIUS, Under Conſtantius.

St. ANTHONY the Abbot.

Born about the Year 250. He Retired into his Solitude in the Year 270. and Flouriſhed till the middle of the Fourth Century. Died An. 356.

St. PACHOMIUS,

Abbot. Flouriſhed at the end of the Fourth Century. Died about the Year 400.

ORESIESIS,

Diſciple of St. Pachomius. Flouriſhed at the end of the Fourth Century.

THEODORUS,

Prieſt. Succeſſor of St. Pachomius. Flouriſhed at the ſame time.

MACARIUS, A Monk of Sceta; MACARIUS, Abbot in Thebais, and MACARIUS, Diſciple of St. Anthony. Flouriſhed all about the end of the Fourth Century.

SERAPION,

Biſhop of Thmuis. Ordained in the Year 340.

EUSEBIUS EMISENUS,

Flouriſhed from the Year 330. Died abous the Year 350.

BASIL,

Ordained Biſhop of Ancyra, in the Year 336. Died after the Year 360.

LIBE-

LIBERIUS,
Ordained Biſhop of Rome in the Year 352. Driven away in 356. Reſtored in 358. Died in the Year 366.

St. HILARY,
Ordained Biſhop of Poitiers about the Year 350. Sent into Exile in 356. and reſtored in 360. Died Anno 367.

LUCIFER,
Biſhop of Calaris. Flouriſhed about the middle of the Fourth Century. Died about the Year 370.

MARIUS VICTORINUS,
Of Africa. Flouriſhed about the end of the Fourth Century. Died about the Year 370.

St. PACIANUS,
Biſhop of Barcelona. Flouriſhed about the end of the Fourth Century. Died about the Year 380.

GREGORY,
Biſhop of Elvira in Spain. Flouriſhed from the Year 357. to the end of that Century.

PHÆBADIUS,
Biſhop of Agen. Flouriſhed from the Year 350. almoſt to the end of the Century. Died about the Year 395.

St. OPTATUS,
Biſhop of Milevis. Wrote about the Year 370. Died in the Reign of Valentinian, about the Year 372.

ACACIUS,
Biſhop of Cæſarea in Palæſtine. Succeeded Euſebius in the Year 338. Died in 366.

PHOTINUS,
Biſhop of Sirmium. Diſcovered his Error about the Year 344. Died in 376.

AETIUS,
Taught his Errors in the Year 340. Died in 366.

EUNOMIUS,
Diſciple of Aëtius. Publiſhed his Errors from the Year 350. till near the end of the Century. Died about the Year 395.

GEORGE,
Of Laodicea. Began to appear about the Year 320. and was ordained Biſhop in 330. Died about the Year 359.

APOLINARIUS the Father,
Prieſt of Laodicea. Flouriſhed under Conſtantius and Julian.

APOLINARIUS the Son,
Biſhop of Laodicea. Flouriſhed under Conſtantius and Julian. Died about the Year 370.

TITUS,
Of Boſtra. Flouriſhed in the Reigns of Julian and Jovian.

DIDIMUS the Blind.
Born towards the Year 300. Profeſſor in the School of Alexandria. Flouriſhed about the middle of the Fourth Century. Died about the Year 395.

PETER,
Biſhop of Alexandria. Ordained in the Year 373. Died in 381.

LUCIUS,
The pretended Biſhop of Alexandria. Invaded that See in the Year 373.

AQUILIUS SEVERUS,
Died about the Year 370.

EUZOIUS,
Died about the Year 390.

St. CYRIL,
Ordained Biſhop of Jeruſalem in 356. Died about the Year 386.

St. EPHREM,
The Syrian Deacon of Edeſſa. Flouriſhed from the Year 360. Died in the Year 378.

DAMASUS,
Ordained Biſhop of Rome in the Year 366. Died in 384.

St. BASIL,
Born in the Year 328. Ordained Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia in 369. Died in the Year 379.

St. GREGORY NAZIANZEN,
Born about the Year 328. Flouriſhed from the Year 368. Died in the Year 389.

St. GREGORY NYSSEN,
Born in 230. Conſtituted Biſhop of Nyſſa in 371. Died in 395.

St. CÆSARIUS,
Born about the Year 330. An Officer of the Emperour. Died in the Year 369.

St. AMPHILOCHIUS.
Ordained Biſhop of Iconium in 375. Died about the Year 395.

MAXIMUS,
A Philoſopher. Flouriſhed about the end of the Fourth Century.

EUSEBIUS VERCELLENSIS,
Flouriſhed under the Emperours Conſtantius and Valens. Died in the Year 370.

MELETIUS,
Choſen Biſhop of Antioch in the Year 361. Died in 380.

DIODORUS,
A Prieſt of Antioch. Who Flouriſhed about the Year 370. and was ordained Biſhop of Tarſus in 375.

HILARY,
Deacon of Rome. Flouriſhed under Liberius and Damaſcus.

PRISCILLIAN,
MATRONIANUS,
TIBERIANUS,
} Executed in 384.

DICTINIUS
Died about the beginning of the Fifth Century.

ITHACIUS or IDACIUS,
Biſhop of Oſſobona. Flouriſhed about the end of the Fourth Century.

FAUSTINUS,
A Luciferan Deacon preſented his Petition to the Emperours in the Year 384.

PHILA-

A CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE.

PHILASTRIUS,
Biſhop of Breſcia. Died in 387.

TIMOTHY,
Ordained Biſhop of Alexandria in 381.

NECTARIUS,
Choſen Archbiſhop of Conſtantinople, Anno 382. Died in 397.

GELASIUS,
Biſhop of Cæſarea in Paleſtine. Flouriſhed about the end of the Fourth Century.

SIRICIUS,
Biſhop of Rome. Succeeded Damaſus in 386.

SABINUS,
Biſhop of the Macedonians at Heraclea. Flouriſhed about the end of the Reign of Theodoſius.

AMBROSE,
Of Alexandria, Diſciple of Didymus. Died about the Year 375.

THEOTIMUS,
Biſhop of Tomi in Scythia. Flouriſhed at the end of the Fourth Century.

EVAGRIUS,
Ordained Biſhop of Antioch in 386. Died in 393.

St. AMBROSE,
Born about the Year 340. Baptized and Ordained Biſhop of Milan in 374. Died in the Year 396.

St. EPIPHANIUS,
Born Anno 332. Ordained Biſhop of Salamis in the Year 366. Died in 402 or 403.

PHILO CARPATHIUS,
A Suppoſititious Author.

Q. JULIUS HILARION,
Died about the Year 400.

A CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE of the COUNCILS held in the Fourth Age of the Church.

The Figures ſhew the Year in which they were held according to the Vulgar Account.

The Suppoſititious Council of Sinueſſa		303
	Cirtha	305
	Alexandria	306
	Eliberis or Elvira	335
	Carthage againſt Cæcilian	311
	Rome	313
	Arles	314
	Ancyra	cod.
	Neocæſarea	cod.
	Alexandria	322
	Bithynia	323
	Alexandria	324
	Nice	325
	Antioch	330
	Cæſarea	334
	Tyre	335
	Jeruſalem	335
	Conſtantinople	336
	Conſtantinople	338
	Alexandria	340
The Council of	Rome	342
	Antioch	341, 342.
	Antioch	345
	Milan	346
	Cologne	cod.
	Sardica	347
	Sirmium, I.	349
	Sirmium, II.	351
	Arles	353
	Milan	355
	Beziers	356
	Sirmium, III.	357
	Antioch	358
	Ancyra	cod.
	Sirmium, IV.	cod.
	Sirmium, V.	359
	Ariminum	cod.
	Seleucia	cod.
	Conſtantinople	360
	Melitine	357
	Antioch	361
	Alexandria	362
	Paris	cod.
	Italy	cod.
The Council of	The Biſhops of Egypt at Antioch	363
	Antioch under Meletius	cod.
	Lampſacus	365
	Singidunum	366
Synods held by the Semi-Arians		365, 366
	Tyana	368
	Gangra	370
	Laodicea between	360 and 370
	Rome under Damaſus	370
	Rome under Urſicinus	372
	Valentia	374
	Antioch for reſtoring Peace in that Church	378
	Conſtantinople, I.	381
	Conſtantinople, II.	382
	Conſtantinople, III.	383
	Aquileia	381
	Saragoſſa	cod.
	Sida	383
	Bourdeaux	384
	Capua	390
The Council of	Rome and Milan againſt Jovinian	cod.
	The Novatians at Sangara	cod.
	Carthage, I.	348
	Carthage, II.	390
	Cabarſuſſa and Bagaïs	393, 394
	Hippo	393
	Carthage	394
	Carthage	397
	Carthage, IV.	398
	Carthage	399
	Carthage, V.	401
	Conſtantinople	394
	Alexandria	399
	Cyprus	cod.
	Turin	400
	Toledo	cod.

A TABLE of all the Writings of the Eccleſiaſtical Authors mentioned in this Volume.

EUSEBIUS of Cæſarea.

Genuine BOOKS ſtill Extant.

AN Apology for Origen in five Books; compoſed by him and the Martyr Pamphilus, with a Sixth by himſelf alone.
A Treatiſe againſt the Philoſopher Hierocles.
Fifteen Books of Evangelical preparation.
Twenty Books of Evangelical Demonſtration.
A Chronicon divided into Two Parts.
An Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory divided into Ten Books.
A little Treatiſe of the Martyrs of Paleſtine.
Five Books againſt Marcellus of Ancyra, of which the Three laſt are entituled, Of Eccleſiaſtical Theology.
Four Books of the Life of Conſtantine.
An Oration of Conſtantine's to the Aſſembly of the Saints.
A Panegyrick upon Conſtantine.
A Treatiſe of Topicks.
A Letter preſerved by Theodoret.
A Tranſlation of the Evangelical Canons, and of the Letter to Carpianus.

BOOKS Loſt.

The Ten laſt Books of Evangelical Demonſtration.
Part of the Firſt Part of his Chronicon.
A Paſchal Cycle.
Five Books of the Theophany or Incarnation.
Ten Books of Commentaries upon Iſaiah.
Thirty Books againſt Porphyrie.
A Treatiſe of the ſignification of the Names which the Jews give to other Nations.
A Deſcription of the Holy-Land and the Temple.
Three Books of the Life of Pamphilus.
Little Tracts upon the Martyrs.
A Commentary upon the 150 Pſalms.
The Evangelical Canons and the Letter to Carpianus in Greek.
A Commentary upon the Firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians.
A Treatiſe of the Poligamy of the Patriarchs.
Eclogues upon the Bible.
Letter to Alexander and Euphration, cited in the Second Council of Nice.
An Apology and Refutation.
An Oration made at the Dedication of the Church of Jeruſalem.

Suppoſititious BOOKS.

A Commentary upon the Canticles.
Lives of the Prophets.
Sermons publiſhed by Sirmondus.
A Concordance tranſlated by Ambroſe Camaldulenſis.

CONSTANTINE the Empetour.

Genuine BOOKS ſtill extant.

An Oration made to the Convention of the Saints.
An Oration to the Fathers at the Council of Nice.
A Prayer.
Several Letters, of which ſee a Catalogue in p. 15. &c.
Several Edicts in favour of the Chriſtian Religion, of which you have a Catalogue in p. 16, 17, &c.

BOOKS Loſt.

Several Harangues.
Several Letters.
Several Edicts.

Suppoſititious BOOK.

The Donation of Conſtantine to the Biſhop of Rome.

JUVENCUS.

Genuine BOOK ſtill Extant.

A Poem upon the Life of Jeſus Chriſt.

BOOK Loſt.

Hymns.

RHETICIUS.

BOOK Loſt.

A Commentary upon the Canticles.

EUSTATHIUS of Antioch.

Genuine BOOKS ſtill Extant.

A Treatiſe concerning the Witch of Endor.
Fragments of his Book upon the Soul, and of his Diſcourſe cited by Theodoret.

BOOKS Loſt.

A Treatiſe againſt the Arians.
Homilies.
Letters.
A Treatiſe of the Soul.

Suppoſititious BOOK.

A Commentary upon the Creation.

PETER of Alexandria.

Genuine BOOK Extant.

Canons upon Penance.

BOOKS Loſt.

A Treatiſe upon the Divinity.
A Diſcourſe upon Penance.
A Sermon againſt the pre-exiſtence of Souls.
A Myſtagogical Diſcourſe.

ALEXANDER of Alexandria.

Genuine BOOKS ſtill Extant.

Two Letters againſt Arius, produced by the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtorians.
Paſtoral Letter publiſhed by Cotelerius.

St. ATHANASIUS.

Genuine BOOKS ſtill Extant.

Two Treatiſes againſt the Gentiles, whereof the Second is Entituled, Of the Incarnation.
An Apologetick to the Emperour Conſtantine.
A Letter to the Egyptians, Entituled, The Firſt Diſcourſe againſt the Arians.
A Letter to all the Orthodox Biſhops.
Firſt Apology.
Second Apology.
Four Treatiſes againſt the Arians.
Letter to thoſe that lead a Monaſtick Life.
An Hiſtorical Treatiſe to thoſe that lead a Monaſtick Life.
A Letter to Serapion concerning the Death of Arius.
A Treatiſe of Synods.
Two Letters extant in the Works of Lucifer.
A Letter written in the Name of the Council of Alexandria.

A Letter

A TABLE of all the Writings of the Eccleſiaſtical Authors, &c.

A Letter written in the Name of the Council of Antioch.
A Letter to the Biſhop of Egypt, Arabia, &c.
A Letter to the Africans.
A Letter to Epictetus.
A Sermon upon theſe Words, My Father hath given me all things.
An Epiſtle to Adelphius.
Two Letters to Serapion upon the Divinity of the Son and the Holy Ghoſt.
An Expoſition of the Faith.
A Letter concerning the Hiſtory of the Deciſion of the Council of Nice.
A Letter concerning the Opinion of St. Dionyſius of Alexandria, upon the Trinity.
A Treatiſe of the Union of the Humane Nature with the Word.
Two Treatiſes of the Incarnation againſt Apollinarius.
A Treatiſe againſt the Followers of Sabellius.
An Epiſtle to John and Antiochus.
An Epiſtle to Palladius.
An Epiſtle to Dracontius.
An Epiſtle to Marcellinus upon the Pſalms.
An Homily on the Sabbath, and of the Circumciſion.
A Treatiſe of the Words of Jeſus Chriſt, Whoever ſhall be guilty of blaſphemy againſt the Holy Ghoſt, &c.
Two Letters to Serapion upon the Divinity of the Holy Ghoſt.
A ſhort Diſcourſe againſt the Arians.
Conference between St. Athanaſius and the Arians in the Preſence of Jovian.
Epiſtle to Ammon.
A Fragment of a Feſtival Epiſtle.
An Epiſtle to Ruffinian.
The Book, Entituled, An Abridgment of the Holy Scripture.
The Life of St. Anthony, [interpolated extremely, if not Spurious.]

BOOKS Loſt.

A large Treatiſe of Faith.
A Treatiſe upon theſe Words of Jeſus Chriſt: My Soul is troubled even unto Death.
Some Dogmatical Treatiſes.

Suppoſititious BOOKS.

A Treatiſe to prove that there is but one Jeſus Chriſt.
A Treatiſe of the Incarnation againſt Paulus Samoſatenus.
A Refutation of the Hypocriſie of Meletius.
A Treatiſe concerning Virginity.
A Treatiſe of the Teſtimonies of Scripture for the Trinity.
An Homily of the Annunciation of the Virgin.
The Life of St. Syncletica.
The Creed which bears the name of St. Athanaſius.
An Expoſition of Faith upon the Incarnation.
A Diſputation againſt Arius.
A Letter to Liberius.
An Explication of theſe Words of Jeſus Chriſt, Go to the Village, &c.
A Homily upon the Paſſion.
A Homily upon Seed-time.
A Diſcourſe againſt all Hereſies.
A Diſcourſe of the Aſcenſion of Jeſus Chriſt, and of Melchizedech.
A Letter to Jovian.
A Book of Definitions.
Seven Dialogues of the Trinity.
A Book entituled, A Tragedy.
Queſtions to Antiochus, &c.
A Homily upon Eaſter-Eve.
A Fragment of a Letter to Eupſichius.
Eleven Books of the Unity and of the Trinity.
An Exhortation to the Monks.
A ſhort Inſtruction to the Monks.
Letters of St. Athanaſius to the Popes Marcus and Felix.
A Relation of the Paſſion, and of the Image of Jeſus Chriſt in the City of Berytus.
A Fragment upon the Incarnation againſt the Diſciples of Paulus Samoſatenus.
A Fragment upon the Sabbath.
Seven Homilies, publiſhed by Holſtenius.
Four Diſcourſes, publiſhed by F. Combefis.
Fragments and Commentaries upon Job and the Pſalms, cited in the Catenæ upon the Scriptures.

JACOBUS NISIBENUS.

BOOKS Loſt.

Twenty three Treatiſes cited by Gennadius, the Titles of which are ſet down in Pag. 49.

MARCELLUS of Ancyra.

BOOKS Loſt.

Treatiſes on different ſubjects, and particularly againſt the Arians; Euſebius cites ſeveral Paſſages in them, which he Refutes.

HOSIUS.

Genuine BOOK ſtill Extant.

A Letter to Conſtantius.

BOOKS Loſt.

Several Treatiſes againſt the Arians.
A Letter to his Siſter in Praiſe of Virginity.

JULIUS.

Genuine BOOKS ſtill Extant.

A Letter to the Biſhops of the Eaſt.
A Letter to the Egyptians, produced by St. Athanaſius.

Suppoſititious BOOKS.

A Letter to Dionyſius concerning the Incarnation.
A Letter to Docius upon the ſame Subject.
The Two Decretals attributed to this Pope.

ASTERIUS.

BOOKS Loſt.

Commentaries upon the Epiſtle to the Romans, upon the Goſpels, and upon the Pſalms.

THEODORUS.

BOOKS Loſt.

Commentaries upon St. Matthew, St. John, the Epiſtles of St. Paul, and upon the Pſalms.

TRYPHILLIUS.

BOOKS Loſt.

Commentaries upon the Canticles, and ſeveral other Books.

HELIODORUS.

BOOK Loſt.

A Book of the Nature of Principles.

DONATUS.

BOOKS Loſt.

A Treatiſe of the Holy Ghoſt.
A Letter on the ſame Subject.

VITELLIUS.

A TABLE of the Writings of the Eccleſiaſtical Authors, &c.

VITELLIUS.

BOOK Loſt.

A Book ſhewing that the Servants of God are hated by the World; and ſome other Writings concerning Diſcipline.

MACROBIUS.

BOOK Loſt.

A Treatiſe addreſſed to Confeſſors and Virgins.

A Treatiſe Addreſſed to Confeſſors and Virgins.

St. ANTHONY.

Genuine BOOKS Extant.

Seven Letters to Monaſteries.
An Exhortation to Monks.
A ſhort Rule.

Suppoſititious BOOKS.

A Sermon againſt Vice.
Other Sermons.

St. PACHOMIUS.

Genuine BOOKS Extant.

A Rule for the Monks.
Moral Precepts.
Eleven Letters.

ORESIESIS.

Genuine BOOK ſtill Extant.

A Treatiſe of the Inſtitution of Monks.

THEODORUS.

Genuine BOOK Extant.

A Letter concerning Eaſter.

WORKS Loſt.

Several other Letters.

The MACARII.

Genuine BOOKS Extant.

Fifty Homilies or Diſcourſes to the Monks.
Seven ſmall Tracts.
A Rule for the Monks.
Another Rule in the Form of a Dialogue.

BOOK Loſt.

A Letter cited by Gennadius.

SERAPION.

Genuine BOOK ſtill Extant.

A Treatiſe againſt the Manichees.

BOOKS Loſt.

A Treatiſe upon the Titles of the Pſalms.
Several Letters.

EUSEBIUS EMISENUS.

BOOKS Loſt.

A Treatiſe againſt the Jews.
Another againſt the Gentiles.
Another againſt the Novatians.
A Commentary upon the Epiſtle to the Galatians.
Several Homilies upon the Goſpels.

Suppoſititious BOOK.

A Homily in Latin.

BASIL of Ancyra.

BOOKS Loſt.

A Treatiſe againſt Marcellus of Ancyra.
A Treatiſe of Virginity.
Some other ſmall Tracts.

LIBERIUS.

Several Letters. See the Catalogue, p. 63.

St. HILARY.

Genuine BOOKS ſtill Extant.

Twelve Books of the Trinity.
A Treatiſe of Synods.
Three Diſcourſes addreſſed to Conſtantius.
Fragments.
Conference with Auxentius.
Commentaries upon the Pſalms, and upon St. Matthew.

BOOKS Loſt.

A Treatiſe againſt Urſacius and Valens.
An Hiſtorical Treatiſe.
A Tract againſt Dioſcorus.
Commentaries upon Job.
Commentaries upon the Canticles.
A Collection of Hymns.
A Treatiſe of Myſteries to Fortunatus.
Letters.

Suppoſititious BOOKS.

A Hymn and Letters to his Daughter Apra.

LUCIFER.

Genuine BOOKS ſtill Extant.

Five Books for St. Athanaſius, againſt Conſtantius and againſt the Arians.

VICTORINUS of Africa.

Genuine BOOKS ſtill Extant.

Four Books againſt Arius.
A Treatiſe in Defence of the Term Conſubſtantial.
Three Hymns of the Trinity.
A Poem of the Maccabees.
A Treatiſe againſt the Manichees.
A little Tract about the beginning of Day.

BOOKS Loſt.

Commentaries upon St. Paul.

St. PACIANUS.

Genuine BOOKS ſtill Extant.

Three Letters againſt the Novatians.
A Treatiſe of Baptiſm.

GREGORY of Batica.

BOOKS Loſt.

Several Treatiſes.
A Book concerning Faith; unleſs this be the ſame with the 49th Diſcourſe among St. Gregory Nazianzen's.

PHÆBA-

A TABLE of the Writings of the Eccleſiaſtical Authors, &c.

PHÆBADIUS.

Genuine BOOK ſtill Extant.

A Treatiſe againſt the Second Creed of Sirmium.

OPTATUS.

Genuine BOOKS ſtill Extant.

Six Books againſt the Schiſm of the Donatiſts.

Suppoſititious BOOK.

A Seventh Book.

ACACIUS of Cæſarea.

BOOKS Loſt.

A Treatiſe againſt Marcellus of Ancyra.
The Life of his Predeceſſor Euſebius.
Seventeen Volumes of Commentaries upon the Scripture.
Seven Volumes upon divers Subjects.

PHOTINUS.

BOOKS Loſt.

A Treatiſe againſt the Gentiles.
A Treatiſe addreſſed to the Emperour Valentinian.
A Conference with Marcellus of Ancyra, cited by St. Epiphanius, Hæreſ. 71.
Several other Diſcourſes.

AETIUS.

BOOK Loſt.

An Impious Libel upon the Trinity, whereof St. Epiphanius relates ſome Fragments, Hæreſ. 76.

EUNOMIUS.

BOOKS Loſt.

Seven Books of Commentaries upon the Epiſtle to the Romans.
Several Diſcourſes againſt the Church.
An Apology againſt the Treatiſe of St. Baſil.

GEORGE of Laodicea.

Genuine BOOKS ſtill Extant.

Two Letters produced by St. Athanaſius.
A Circular Letter againſt Aëtius. cited by Sozomen.

BOOKS Loſt.

A Treatiſe againſt the Manichees.
The Life of Euſebius Emiſenus.

The APOLLINARII.

Genuine BOOK ſtill Extant.

A Tranſlation of the Pſalms in Verſe.

BOOKS loſt.

Several Commentaries upon the Scriptures.
Treatiſes againſt the Arians, againſt Origen, and againſt ſeveral other Hereticks.
A Treatiſe againſt Porphyrie, divided into Thirty Books.
A Treatiſe of the Truth of the Chriſtian Religion againſt Julian.
Some Letters.
A Poem containing the Hiſtory of the Jews, divided into twenty four Books.
Tragedies and other Poetical Pieces, the Subjects whereof were Piety.
The Goſpels and the Epiſtles in Dialogues.

TITUS of Boſtra.

Genuine BOOK ſtill Extant.

A Tranſlation of Three Books againſt the Manichees.

BOOKS Loſt.

The Fourth Book againſt the Manichees, and the Greek Text of all the Four.
Some other Diſcourſes.

Suppoſititious BOOKS.

Commentaries upon the Goſpel of St. Luke.
A Sermon upon Palm-Sunday.

DIDIMUS of Alexandria.

Genuine BOOKS ſtill Extant.

A Tranſlation of his Treatiſe concerning the Holy Spirit; made by St. Jerom.
A Tranſlation of his Commentaries upon the Canonical Epiſtles.
A Fragment of a Tract againſt the Manichees.

BOOKS Loſt.

See the Catalogue of them, p. 103.

PETER of Alexandria.

Genuine BOOK ſtill Extant.

A Letter quoted by Theodoret, Book IV. Ch. 22, of his Hiſtory.

BOOK Loſt.

A Letter to thoſe that were Baniſhed, whereof Facundius cites two Fragments.

LUCIUS.

BOOKS Loſt.

A Letter upon the Feaſt of Eaſter.
Some other Treatiſes.

AQUILIUS SEVERUS.

BOOK Loſt.

The Hiſtory of his Life, Entituled, Cataſtrophe.

EUZOIUS.

BOOKS Loſt.

Several Treatiſes of which we have no Knowledge.

St. CYRIL of Jeruſalem.

Genuine BOOKS ſtill Extant.

Eighteen Catechetical Diſcourſes to the Catechumens.
Five Myſtagogical Lectures.
A Letter upon the Apparition of the Croſs.
A Letter concerning the Preſentation of Jeſus Chriſt in the Temple.

Suppoſititious BOOK.

A Letter to St. Auſtin.

St. EPHREM the Syrian.

See the Catalogue of his Works, p. 118, 119, and 120.

A TABLE of all the Writings of the Eccleſiaſtical Authors, &c.

DAMASUS.

Genuine BOOKS ſtill Extant.

Two Letters to St. Jerom, to be found in the Works of that Father.
A Letter to the Biſhops of Illyricum.
A Letter to Paulinus.
Anathematiſms ſent to Paulinus.
A Letter to the Biſhops of the Eaſt againſt Timothy, produced by Theodoret.

Suppoſititious BOOKS.

A Letter of Damaſus to St. Jerom.
A Decretal Epiſtle.
Epigrams, Epitaphs, and other Poems.

St. BASIL.

Genuine BOOKS ſtill Extant.

431 Letters of this Saint.
Three Canonical Letters to St. Amphilochius.
Nine Homilies upon the beginning of Geneſis.
Two Homilies upon the Creation of Man.
A Homily upon Paradiſe.
A Homily concerning Watchfulneſs, upon the 6th. Chapter of Proverbs.
Twenty two Homilies upon the Pſalms.
A Commentary upon the Sixteen firſt Chapters of Iſaiah
Five Books againſt Eunomius.
A Book concerning the Holy Ghoſt, to St. Amphilochius.
Two Books of Baptiſm.
Thirty one Homilies upon divers Subjects.
Three Treatiſes concerning a Monaſtick Life.
A Treatiſe of Judgment, and another of Faith.

Aſcetical Diſcourſes, viz.

The greater and leſſer Rules.
The Book of a Monaſtick Life.
The Conſtitutions.
A Treatiſe of the Chaſtiſements of Monks.
A Treatiſe concerning Virginity.

BOOKS Loſt.

Commentaries upon the whole Bible.
A Genuine Liturgy.
Some other Treatiſes.

Suppoſititious BOOKS.

Letters to Julian and to Apollinarius.
Commentaries upon the Pſalms.
A Panegyrick upon St. Barlaam.
A Diſcourſe of Conſolation.
An Admonition to his Spiritual Son.
A Treatiſe of the Praiſes of a Solitary Life.
Three Liturgies.
A Grammar.

St. GREGORY NAZIANZEN.

Genuine BOOKS ſtill Extant.

Forty Four Diſcourſes or Sermons.
A Letter to Evagrius.
A Letter to Nectarius.
Letters to Cledonius, Entituled, Diſcourſes 51ſt and 52d.
Several Poems.
A Diſcourſe in Latin concerning Biſhops.
242 Letters.
His Laſt Will and Teſtament.

Suppoſititious BOOKS.

The 47th, 48th, 49th, and 50th Diſcourſes.
The Paraphraſe upon Eccleſiaſtes.

St. GREGORY NYSSEN.

Genuine BOOKS ſtill Extant.

A Treatiſe upon the Creation of the World.
A Treatiſe of the Formation of the World.
A Treatiſe concerning the Witch of Endor.
A Book of the Life of Moſes.
Two Treatiſes upon the Inſcriptions of the Pſalms.
A Homily upon the Sixth Pſalm.
Homilies upon Eccleſiaſtes and the Canticles.
Twelve Books againſt Eunomius.
The greater Catechiſm.
A Treatiſe concerning Faith, addreſſed to Simplicius.
A Diſcourſe upon the Great Abraham, or of the Divinity of the Son and of the Holy Ghoſt.
A Treatiſe on the Trinity to Ablabius.
A Treatiſe to Euſtathius.
A Treatiſe of the Difference between the Nature and Hypoſtaſis.
A Treatiſe of common Notions.
Two little Treatiſes againſt Apollinarius.
A Treatiſe againſt the Manichees.
A Treatiſe of the Soul.
Another Treatiſe of the Soul, and of the Reſurrection.
A Treatiſe to Jerius of untimely Death of Children.
A Treatiſe of Virginity.
Sermons upon ſeveral Subjects, whereof ſee the Catalogue, p. 179.
Funeral Orations and Panegyricks.
A Canonical Epiſtle to Letoius.
Letter to Olympius.
Letter concerning the Profeſſion of a Chriſtian.
A Treatiſe of the End that a Chriſtian ought to propoſe to himſelf.
A Letter concerning Pilgrimages.
A Letter to Flavianus.

BOOKS Loſt.

Commentaries upon the Proverbs, and an entire Commentary upon Eccleſiaſtes.
Commentaries upon the Epiſtles of St. Paul.
Some other Books whereof we have no Knowledge.

Suppoſititious BOOKS.

A Latin Treatiſe containing the Paſſages in the Old Teſtament to prove the Divinity.
A Book of Philoſophy written by Nemeſius.

St. CÆSARIUS.

Suppoſititious BOOKS.

Dialogues upon ſeveral Queſtions in Divinity.

St. AMPHILOCHIUS.

Genuine BOOKS ſtill Extant.

A Synodical Letter, publiſhed by Cotelerius.
Several Fragments quoted by Theodoret in the Councils of Epheſus and Chalcedon, and by ſeveral Authors.

BOOKS Loſt.

Several Homilies upon the Scripture.
Some Letters.

Suppoſititious BOOKS.

Eight Sermons publiſhed by F. Combefis.
The Life of St. Baſil.

MAXIMUS.

BOOK Loſt.

A Treatiſe concerning Faith.

EUSEBIUS.

A TABLE of the Writings of the Eccleſiaſtical Authors, &c.

EUSEBIUS VERCELLENSIS.

Genuine BOOK ſtill Extant.

Three Letters.

BOOK Loſt.

A Tranſlation of Euſebius's Commentary on the Pſalms.

MELETIUS.

Genuine BOOK ſtill Extant.

A Homily upon theſe Words in the Proverbs, God hath created me, &c. quoted by St. Epiphanius, Hæreſ. 73.

DIODORUS of Tarſus.

BOOKS Loſt.

A Treatiſe of Deſtiny.
A Treatiſe of the Holy Ghoſt.
A Treatiſe againſt Hereticks.
Commentaries upon ſeveral Books of the H. Scripture.
A Treatiſe againſt the Jews, and againſt the Melchiſedechians.
Treatiſes of the Trinity, of the Reſurrection, of the Soul, and of Providence.
A Tract to Euphronius againſt Ariſtotle.

HILARY the Deacon.

BOOKS attributed to him.

Commentaries upon St. Paul, which carry the Name of St. Ambroſe.
Queſtions upon the Old and New Teſtament, which bear St. St. Auguſtin's Name.

PRISCILLIAN.

BOOKS Loſt.

Some little Diſcourſes.

MATRONIANUS.

BOOKS Loſt.

Some Pieces in Verſe.

TIBERIANUS.

BOOK Loſt.

His Apology.

DICTINIUS.

BOOKS Loſt.

Some little Treatiſes.

ITHACIUS.

BOOK Loſt.

A Treatiſe in form of an Apology againſt the Priſcillianiſts.

Suppoſititious BOOK.

A Book againſt Varimadus.

FAUSTINUS.

Genuine BOOKS ſtill Extant.

Seven Books againſt the Arians and the Macedonians, falſly attributed to Gregory of Bætica.
His Petition to the Emperours Valentinian and Theodoſius.

PHILASTRIUS.

Genuine BOOKS ſtill extant.

A Treatiſe of Hereſies.

TIMOTHY of Alexandria.

Genuine BOOKS ſtill Extant.

Canonical Reſponſes.

BOOK Loſt.

A Letter to Diodorus.

NECTARIUS.

Genuine BOOKS ſtill Extant.

A Homily upon the Holy Martyr Theodorus.

GELASIUS of Cæſarea.

BOOKS Loſt.

A Continuation of the Hiſtory of Euſebius.
Some Homilies and Treatiſes.

SIRICIUS.

Genuine BOOKS ſtill Extant.

A Letter to Himerius.
The Second and Third Letter to the ſame.
The Fifth to Anyſius.
The Fourth is dubious.

SABINUS.

BOOKS Loſt.

A Hiſtory of the Councils or a Collection of their Acts.

AMBROSE of Alexandria.

BOOKS Loſt.

A Dogmatical Treatiſe againſt Apollinarius.
A Commentary upon Job.

THEOTIMUS.

BOOKS loſt.

Short and Sententious Tracts in form of Dialogues.

EVAGRIUS of Antioch.

BOOKS Loſt.

Treatiſes of which we know nothing.

St. AMBROSE.

Genuine BOOKS ſtill Extant.

A Treatiſe of the Creation of the World, compoſed of Nine Sermons, and divided into ſix Books.
Upon the Terreſtrial Paradiſe.
Upon the Hiſtory of Cain and Abel; divided into 2 Books.
Of the Ark, and of the Life of Noah; not perfect.
Two Books upon the Life of Abraham.
A Treatiſe of Iſaac and the Soul.
A Treatiſe of the Benefits or Advantages of Death.
A Treatiſe of forſaking the World.
Two Books of Jacob and a happy Life.
A Diſcourſe of the Life of the Patriarch Joſeph.
A Diſcourſe upon the Benedictions of the Patriarchs.

The

A TABLE of the Writings of the Eccleſiaſtical Authors, &c.

The Book of Elias, and of Faſting.
A Treatiſe of Naboth and the Poor.
A Treatiſe upon Tobit.
Four Books concerning the Interceſſion or the Complaints of Job and David.
The firſt Apology for David.
An Explication of Twelve Pſalms, viz. Pſal. 1, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 43, 45, 47, 48, 61.
A Book upon Pſal. 119.
A Commentary upon the Goſpel of St. Luke, divided into Ten Parts.
Three Books of the Offices of Miniſters.
Three Books concerning Virgins, to Marcellina.
A Treatiſe concerning Widows.
A Treatiſe of Virginity.
A Diſcourſe of the perpetual Virginity of Mary.
An Exhortation to Virginity.
A Book of Myſteries.
Two Books of Penance.
Five Books concerning Faith, or of the Trinity.
Three Books of the Holy Spirit.
A Treatiſe of the Incarnation.
Ninety two Letters.
Funeral Orations upon Valentinian and Theodoſius.
Hymns for the Office, and upon the Six Days of the Creation.

BOOKS Loſt.

Part of the Treatiſe of the Ark, and of Noah.
A Treatiſe of the Incarnation, whereof Theodoret quotes a Fragment.
A Treatiſe upon the Sacraments, and of Philoſophy.
A Commentary upon Iſaiah.
Inſtruction to Fritigildis.
Another Inſtruction to Panſophius.
Caſſiodorus mentions ſome Homilies upon the Book of Wiſdom, a Commentary upon all the Prophets, and a Commentary upon the Epiſtles of St. Paul.
A Commentary upon all the Pſalms, according to Trithemius.

Suppoſititious WORKS.

A Second Apology for David.
Commentaries upon the Canticles.
A Treatiſe of the fall of a Virgin conſecrated to God.
Several Hymns upon Feſtivals.
All his Sermons upon the Year and upon the Feaſts.
A Diſcourſe upon the Dignity of Humane Nature.
A Sermon upon the Forbidden Fruit.
The Treatiſe of the Forty two Manſions or Encampments of the Children of Iſrael.
A Commentary upon the Epiſtles of St. Paul.
A Commentary upon the Apocalypſe.
The Harmony of the Evangeliſts, St. Matthew and St. Luke, concerning the Genealogy of our Saviour.
A Treatiſe upon the Creed.
A Diſcourſe of the Divinity of the Son.
A Treatiſe entituled, Of the Myſtery of Eaſter.
A Diſcourſe to a Virgin conſecrated to God.
A Diſcourſe of the Vocation of the Gentiles.
An Epiſtle to Demetrias.
The 29, 34, 35, and 55 Letters.
The Preparatory Prayers for ſaying of Maſs.
The Book of the Combat between Virtues and Vices.
The Expoſition of Faith.
A Treatiſe of the Holy Spirit.
A Book of Penance.
A Hiſtory of the Life and Manners of the Brachmans.

St. EPIPHANIUS.

Genuine BOOK ſtill Extant.

The Book againſt Hereſies, Entituled, Panarium.
The Recapitulation or Abridgment of his Book of Hereſies.
A Diſcourſe of Faith, Entituled, Ancoratus.
A Treatiſe of Weights and Meaſures.
The Phyſiologus.
A Treatiſe of the Twelve precious Stones.
A Book of the Life and Death of the Prophets.
A Letter to St. John of Jeruſalem.
Nine Sermons, dubious.

PHILO CARPATHIUS.

Suppoſititious BOOK.

A Commentary upon the Canticles.

Q. JULIUS HILARION.

Genuine BOOK ſtill Extant.

A Chronicon, or a Treatiſe of the Duration of the World.

A TABLE of the Acts, Profeſſions of Faith, and Canons of the Councils mentioned in this Volume.

Councils.	Years held in	Acts, Profeſſions of Faith, and Canons.
Of Sinueſſa	303	Suppoſititious Acts.
Of Cirtha	305	Acts in St. Auguſtin.
Of Alexandria	306
Of Elvira	306	81 Canons.
Of Carthage	307	Fragments of its Acts in Optatus and St. Auguſtin.
Of Rome	313	Some Fragments of its Acts in Optatus.
Of Arles	314	22 Canons, and a Letter to St. Sylveſter.
Of Ancyra	314	25 Canons.
Of Neocæſarea	314	15 Canons.
Of Alexandria	322
Of Bithynia	323
Of Alexandria	324
Of Nice	325	A Profeſſion of Faith, a Decree concerning Eaſter.
Of Antioch	330	25 Canons and a Letter to the Egyptians.
Of Cæſarea.	334
Of Tyre	335
Of Jeruſalem	335	A Synodical Letter in Favour of Arius.
Of Conſtantinople	336
Another of Conſtantinople	338
Of Alexandria	340	A Synodical Letter in Favour of St. Athanaſius.

A TABLE of the Acts, Profeſſions of Faith, Canons, &c.

Councils.	Years held in	Acts, Profeſſions of Faith, and Canons.
Of Rome	341	A Letter written by Pope Julius, in the Name of the Council, in 342.
Of Antioch	342	Three Profeſſions of Faith, and 25 Canons.
Another of Antioch	345
Of Milan	346	A Profeſſion of Faith.
Of Cologne	346	Suppoſititious Acts.
Of Sardica	347	20 Canons, two Synodical Letters; one by the Biſhops of the Weſt, another by thoſe of the Eaſt, and a Profeſſion of Faith made by ſome Biſhops.
Of Sirmium, I.	349
Of Sirmium, II.	357	A long Profeſſion of Faith.
Of Arles	353
Of Milan	355	Doubtful Acts, taken out of the Life of Euſebius Vercellenſis.
Of Beziers	356
Of Sirmium, III.	357	A Second Profeſſion of Faith.
Of Antioch	358	A Letter to Urſacius and Valens.
Of Ancyra	358	A Synodical Letter, a Profeſſion of Faith, and 18 Anathematiſms.
Of Sirmium, IV.	358	A Collection of Profeſſions of Faith.
Of Sirmium, V.	359	A Profeſſion of Faith, with the Names of the Conſuls.
Of Ariminum	359	A Catholick Definition, a Condemnation of Urſacius, Valens, and Germinius: A Letter to the Emperor, before his Subſcription to the Profeſſion of Faith of the Eaſt; a Letter to the Emperor after his Subſcription.
Of Seleucia	359
Of Conſtantinople	360
Of Melitine	357	A Profeſſion of Faith.
Of Antioch	361	A Letter to the Catholicks of Antioch, written by St. Athanaſius.
Of Alexandria	362
Of Paris	362	A Letter of this Council.
Of Italy	362	A Letter to the Biſhops of Illyricum.
Of the Egyptian Biſhops at Antioch	363	A Letter to Jovian.
Of Antioch	363	A Letter containing a Profeſſion of Faith.
Of Lampſacus.	365
Of Singidunum	366	A Letter to Germinius.
Of Illyricum	366	A Synodical Letter confirmed by an Edict of the Emperour.
Of Aſia	366
Of Sicily	365
Of Tyana	368
Of Gangra	370	A Letter and 20 Canons.
Of Laodicea	370	60 Canons.
Of Rome under Damaſus	360, and 370
Of Rome againſt Urſicinus.	372	A Letter to the Biſhops of Illyricum.
Of Valence	372	A Synodical Letter and four Canons.
Of Antioch	378	A Profeſſion of Faith call'd The Tome of the Weſtern Church, ſigned in this Council.
Of Conſtantinople	381, 382, 383	A Profeſſion of Faith and 7 Canons.
Of Aquileia	381	Acts of the Council, a Letter to the Biſhops of the Eaſt.
Of Saragoſſa	381	8 Canons.
Of Sida	383
Of Bourdeaux	384
Of Capua	390
Of Rome and Milan	390
Of Sangarus	390
Of Carthage, I.	348	14 Canons.
Of Carthage, II.	390	23 Canons.
Of Cabarſuſſa & Bagaïs	394	Acts in St. Auguſtine.
Of Hippo	393	The Canons are in the Council of Carthage of the Year 397.
Of Carthage	394	47 Canons.
Of Carthage	397	105 Canons.
Of Carthage, IV.	398
Of Carthage	399
Of Carthage	401	28 Canons.
Of Conſtantinople	394	Acts.
Of Alexandria	399	Fragment of its Acts in the Epiſtle to Menna.
Of Cyprus	399
Of Turin	400	8 Canons.
Of Toledo	400	21 Canons.

A TABLE of all the Genuine extant Writings of the Eccleſiaſtical Authors, according to the Order of their Arguments, that are mentioned in this Volume.

Treatiſes in Defence of the Chriſtian Religion, againſt the Pagans and Jews.

A Treatiſe of Euſebius againſt Hierocles.
The Books of the Evangelical Preparation and Demonſtration, by the ſame Author.
An Oration of Conſtantine to the Aſſembly of the Saints.
A Treatiſe of St. Athanaſius againſt the Gentiles.
St. Gregory Nazianzen's Third and Fourth Diſcourſe againſt Julian.
St. Ambroſe's 17, 18, 40, and 58 Letters.
The firſt Part of the Books of Philaſtrius and St. Epiphanius concerning Hereſies.

A TABLE of the Works of the Authors, according to the Subjects.

Books againſt Hereticks.

Euſebius's Book againſt Marcellus of Ancyra.
St. Athanaſius's Treatiſe againſt the Arians. See the Catalogue of the Hiſtorical and Dogmatical Books.
Serapion's Treatiſe againſt the Manichees.
St. Hilary's againſt the Arians.
Lucifer's Books againſt Conſtantius and againſt the Arians.
Victorinus againſt Arius.
——againſt the Manichees.
St. Pacianus's Letters againſt the Novatians.
Optatus's Book againſt the Donatiſts.
Titus of Boſtra againſt the Manichees.
A Fragment of Didymus's againſt the ſame Hereticks.
St. Baſil's Book againſt Eunomius, and other Dogmatical Treatiſes of his.
St. Gregory Nazianzen's Diſcourſe of Theology.
——other Diſcourſes of his.
——Two Letters to Cledonius againſt Apollinarius, and ſeveral other Dogmatical Treatiſes againſt the Arians.
——A Diſcourſe againſt the Manichees.
Meletius's Homily and Profeſſion of Faith.
Fauſtinus's Book againſt the Arians and Macedonians.
St. Ambroſe's Book of the Trinity and of the Holy Ghoſt.
——Two Books of Penance againſt the Novatians.
Philaſtrius and St. Epiphanius's Treatiſes againſt all Hereſies.

Diſcourſes upon the Articles of Faith in general.

St. Cyril of Jeruſalem's Catechetical Letters.
The great Catechiſm or Inſtruction of Gregory Nyſſen.
St. Epiphanius's Book againſt all Hereſies.
——His Anchoratus.

Upon the Trinity.

Euſebius's Books of Divinity againſt Marcellus of Ancyra.
——His Letters to the Church of Cæſarea.
Alexander's Letter againſt Arius.
St. Athanaſius's Diſcourſes upon the Trinity.
——Four Treatiſes againſt the Arians.
——Homilies upon theſe Words: My Father hath given all things, &c.
——Letter to Serapion.
——Expoſition of Faith.
——Letter to Maximus.
——Treatiſe againſt the Sabellians.
——Short Treatiſe againſt the Arians.
St. Hilary's Twelve Books of the Trinity.
——againſt Auxentius.
Lucifer's Books.
Victorinus againſt Arius and his Tract concerning the Word Conſubſtantial.
——His Hymns upon the Trinity.
Phœbadius his Diſcourſe againſt the Second Sirmian Creed.
George of Laodicea's Circular Letter.
Didymus's Treatiſe upon the Holy Ghoſt, Tranſlated into Latin by S. Jerome.
Damaſus's Anathematiſm and Letter.
St. Baſil's Dogmatical Letters; particularly the 41ſt, 63, 64th, 65th, 74th, 78th, 141ſt, 203d, 204th, 325th, 343d, 344th, 387th, 399th, and 401ſt.
——Five Books againſt Eunomius.
——A Diſcourſe concerning the Holy Ghoſt to Amphilochius.
——Homilies 9th, 12th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 25th, 27th, 29th, 31ſt, upon different Subjects.
St. Gregory Nazianzen's Diſcourſes 25th, 31ſt, 32d, 33d, 34th, 35th, 36th, and 45th.
St. Gregory Nyſſen's Twelve Books againſt Eunomius.
——A Treatiſe concerning the Faith addreſſed to Simplicius.
——A Treatiſe of the Divinity of the Son and of the Holy Ghoſt.
——A Treatiſe to Euſtathius.
——Of Notions.
St. Amphilochius's Synodical Letter.
Meletius's Homily and Profeſſion of Faith.
Fauſtinus's Seven Books againſt the Arians.
Creeds and Profeſſions of Faith of the Councils.
St. Ambroſe's Five Books concerning the Trinity.
——His Three Books concerning the Holy Ghoſt.
——His 9th, and 42d Letters.

Upon the Incarnation.

St. Athanaſius's Treatiſes.
——His Treatiſe of the Incarnation.
——Epiſtle to Adelphius.
——Treatiſe of the Union of the humane Nature with the Word.
——Two Treatiſes of the Incarnation againſt Apollinarius.
——Letter to Epictetus.
St. Gregory Nazianzen's 46th Diſcourſe, and the Two Letters to Cledonius, which are entituled the 51ſt and 52d Diſcourſes.
St. Gregory Nyſſen's two little Treatiſes againſt Apollinarius.
——Sermon upon the Nativity.
St. Ambroſe's Treatiſe upon the Incarnation.

Miſcellanies.

St. Optatus againſt the Donatiſts.
St. Gregory Nyſſen concerning the Soul.
——Another Treatiſe of the Soul, and of the Reſurrection.
——Of Deſtiny.
——Of the Death of Infants.
Siricius's Five Letters.
St. Ambroſe's Diſcourſe of perpetual Virginity.
——Two Letters concerning Penance.

Upon the Diſcipline of the Church.

Conſtantine's Letters and Edicts.
Peter of Alexandria's Canons concerning Penance.
St. Athanaſius's Letters to Dracontius and Ammon.
St. Pacianus's Letters, and his Treatiſes of Baptiſm.
Optatus's Books againſt the Donatiſts.
St. Cyril's Five Myſtagogical Letters, and ſome of the others.
The greateſt part of St. Baſil's Letters, and chiefly the Canonical Letters to Amphilochius, and the 63d, 79th 190th, 191ſt, 192d, 196th, 244th, 289th, 304th, 305th, 340th, 381ſt, 391ſt, 408th, 410th, 412th, 413th, 417th.
St. Baſil's two Books of Baptiſm.
——A Treatiſe of Virginity.
——The End of his Book concerning the Holy Ghoſt to Amphilochius.
St. Gregory Nazianzen's Diſcourſes 31ſt, 39th, and 40th.
St. Gregory Nyſſen's Treatiſe concerning Virginity.
——Canonical Epiſtle to Letoïus.
——Letter concerning Pilgrimages.
Siricius's 2d, 3d, and 4th Letters.
St. Epiphanius's Letter to St. John of Jeruſalem.
St. Ambroſe's Book of Myſteries.
——Three Books of Virgins.
——Exhortation to Virginity.
——Treatiſe concerning Widows.
——Two Books of Penance.
——Treatiſe of Elias, and of Faſting.

——Letters

——Letters 2d, 5th, 6th, 19th, 23d, 25th, 26th, 56th, 57th, 61ſt, 62d, 64th, 75th, 82d.
Canons of the Council.

Books of Morality and Piety.

Conſtantine's Prayer.
St. Athanaſius's Letters to Dracontius and Ammon.
——Homily upon the Sabbath and the Circumciſion.
The Life of St. Anthony.
St. Anthony's Letters.
——His Rule.
St. Pachomius his Letters, Rules and Precepts.
Oreſieſis of the Inſtitution of Monks.
Theodorus's Letter.
Homilies, Tracts, and Rules of the Macarii.
All St. Ephrem's Works.
Several Letters of St. Baſil, and chiefly the Four firſt which are not of the Number of the other Letters, and the 1ſt, 19th, 165th, 166th, 184th, 302d, 383d, 411th.
——Treatiſes concerning a Monaſtick Life.
——Of Judgment and of Faith.
——Greater and Leſſer Rules.
——Book of a Monaſtick Life.
——Conſtitutions, and a Treatiſe of the Chaſtiſements of Monks.
——Three Homilies of Faſting.
——Homilies 3d, 4th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 15th, 21ſt, 22d, 23d, and 24th.
——Panegyricks upon St. Julitta, St. Gordus, and St. Mamas and Barlaam.
The greateſt part of St. Gregory Nazianzen's Sermons, and all his Poems.
——Diſcourſe concerning Biſhops.
St. Gregory Nyſſen concerning Prayer.
——Moſt of his Sermons and Panegyricks.
——Diſcourſe concerning Virginity.
——Letter to Olympius.
——Treatiſes of the Profeſſion, and of the End of a Chriſtian.
——Letters concerning Pilgrimages.
Nectarius's Homily upon the Martyrdom of Theodorus.
St. Ambroſe's Books of Offices.
——Books of Virgins and Widows.
——Of Penance.
——The greateſt part of his Diſcourſes upon the Holy Scripture, and chiefly that of Naboth concerning Riches, and that of Tobit upon Uſury.
——His 37th and 38th Letters.

COMMENTARIES AND DISCOURSES Upon the Holy Scripture.

Books of Criticiſm.

EUſebius's Treatiſe of the Places in the Holy Land.
——Evangelical Canons and Letters to Carpianus.
Euſtathius of Antioch's Diſcourſe of the Pythoniſs, or Witch of Endor.
St. Gregory Nyſſen's Treatiſe on the ſame Subject.
Fragment of St. Athanaſius's Feſtival Epiſtle.
St. Athanaſius's Abridgment of the Scriptures.
——Book to Marcellinus upon the Pſalms.
St. Gregory Nyſſen's Treatiſe upon the Inſcriptions of the Pſalms.
Queſtions upon the Old and New Teſtament, believed to be written by Hilary the Deacon.
St. Ambroſe's Preface upon St. Luke.
St. Epiphanius of Weights and Meaſures.
——Phyſiologus.
——Of the Twelve precious Stones on the Breaſt of the High-Prieſt.
——Of the Life and Death of the Prophets.

Upon the Old Teſtament.

Victorinus's Tract upon the beginning of Day.
St. Baſil's Commentary upon the beginning of Geneſis.
——Two Homilies upon the Creation of Man.
——A Homily upon Paradiſe.
St. Gregory Nyſſen of the Creation of the World.
——Of the Formation of Man.
——Of the Life of Moſes.
St. Hilary's Commentary upon the Pſalms.
Tranſlation of the Pſalms in Verſe, by Apollinarius.
Twenty Two Homilies of St. Baſil upon the Pſalms.
St. Gregory Nyſſen's Homily on the fifth Pſalm.
St. Baſil's Homily upon the ſixth Chapter of Proverbs.
——Commentary upon the ſixteen firſt Chapters of Iſaiah.
St. Gregory Nyſſen's Homily upon Eccleſiaſtes and the Canticles.
Victorinus's Poem upon the Maccabees.
St. Ambroſe's Treatiſe of the Creation of the World, and the reſt that follow in the firſt Volume of his Works.

Upon the New Teſtament.

Juvencus's Paraphraſe of the Goſpels, in Verſe.
St. Hilary's Commentary on St. Matthew's Goſpel.
St. Gregory Npſſen upon the Lord's Prayer, and upon the Beatitudes.
St. Athanaſius upon theſe Words of our Saviour, Whoever ſhall Blaſpheme, &c.
——Fragments upon theſe Words of our Saviour, My Soul is heavy even unto Death, &c.
Commentaries upon all the Epiſtles of St. Paul, attributed to St. Ambroſe, but believed to belong to Hilary the Deacon.
St. Gregory Nyſſen's Homily upon the fifteenth Chapter of the Firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians.
Didymus's Commentary upon the Canonical Epiſtles.
St. Ambroſe's Commentary upon St. Luke's Goſpel.
——Letters 7th, 8th, 27th, and the five following, alſo 43d, 44th, 50th, 65th, and the nine following.

Hiſtorical Diſcourſes.

Euſebius's Apology for Origen.
——Chronicon.
——Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory.
——Treatiſe concerning the Martyrs of Paleſtine.
——Books of the Life of Conſtantine.
——Of the Names of Places in the Holy Land.
——Panegyrick upon Conſtantine.
Conſtantine's Letters and Edicts.
——Harangue to the Council of Nice.
Juvencus's Poem of the Life of Jeſus Chriſt.
St. Athanaſius's Hiſtorical Treatiſes.
——Apologetick to Conſtantius.
——Letters to the Egyptians, and to the Orthodox.
——Firſt Apology.
——Second Apology.
——Hiſtorical Treatiſes to thoſe that lead a Monaſtick Life.
——Letter to Serapion, upon the Death of Arius.
——Diſcourſe of Synods.
——Letters to Lucifer.
——Letters to the Biſhops of Egypt, Arabia, &c.
——Letters of the Council of Alexandria.
——Letter to Jovian.
——Letter to the Africans.
——Letter to John and Antiochus.

——Letter

An INDEX of the Principal Matters, &c.

——— Letter concerning the Opinion of Dionyſius of Alexandria.
——— Letter concerning the Deciſion of the Council of Nice.
——— Epiſtle to Palladius.
——— Conference with the Arians.
——— Life of St. Anthony.
Hoſius's Letter to Conſtantius.
Julius's Letter to the Eaſtern and Egyptian Biſhops.
Liberius's Letters.
St. Hilary's Treatiſe of Synods.
——— Diſcourſes to Conſtantius.
——— Fragments.
——— Conference againſt Auxentius.
Peter of Alexandria II. his Letters.
St. Cyril's Letter upon the Apparition of the Croſs.
Damaſus's Letters.
The greateſt part of the Letters of St. Baſil.
St. Gregory Nazianzen's Diſcourſes 7th, 25th, 26th, 30th, 41ſt and ſome others.
——— His Panegyricks, which are Sermons 6th, 10th, 11th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 22d, 23d, and 24th.
——— Firſt Poem upon his Life.
——— Diſcourſe upon Biſhops.
——— His Teſtament.
St. Gregory Nyſſen's Funeral Orations and Panegyricks.
——— Letter to Flavianus.
Euſebius Vercellenſis his Three Letters.
Marcellinus and Fauſtinus, Luciferians, their Petition addreſſed to the Emperours Valentinian and Theodoſius.
St. Ambroſe's Letters, 20th, 22d, and 24th.
——— Panegyrick on Theodoſius and Valentinian.
Philaſtrius of Hereſies.
St. Epiphanius of Hereſies.
——— An Abridgment of it by himſelf.
——— His Hiſtory of the Lives and Deaths of the Prophets.
Hilarion's Chronicle.

A General INDEX of the Principal Matters contained in the Second Volume.

The Figures ſhew the Pages, and the Small Letters the Notes.

A.

Aſtinence from Meats. Uſage and Uſefulneſs of it. III. Faſting conſiſts not in abſtaining from Meats, 150.
Acacius of Cæſarea, ſucceeds Euſebius, 97. His Doctrine and Writings, ibid. Difference with St. Cyril, ibid. Death, ibid.
Achillas Biſhop of Alexandria, 27.
Aceſius a Novatian Biſhop, 253.
Adultery. Canons againſt Adulterers, and againſt other Sins of Uncleanneſs, 140, 141, &c. 196.
Arian Pope. Upon what occaſion he implored the Succour of Charlemaign, 19.
Aëtius. Hiſtory of his Life, and of his Condemnation, 98, 99. Death. 99.
Africanus's Chronicon, 5.
Agapæ. Feaſts of Charity, 268, 269.
Agapetus Pope, ſent by Theodatus to the Emperour Juſtinian, ——— 18.
Agapius Biſhop of Cæſarea, 2.
Agapius Biſhop of Boſtra. Difference with Bagadius for that Biſhoprick, 285.
St. Agnes, 207, 209.
Alexander Biſhop of Alexandria. Ordination, 27. Aſſembles a Council at Alexandria againſt Arius, ibid. Letter to his Collegues, ibid. Another Letter of this Biſhop, ibid. Advertiſement or Paſtoral Letter, ibid. Aſſiſts in the Council of Nice, 28. Death, ibid.
Alexandria. Council of Alexandria, of the Year 306. under Peter Biſhop of that City, 242. Council in 323, againſt Arius, 250. Another Council againſt Arius, in 324, ibid. Another in 362, to determine how the Arians, that deſired to be reunited to the Church, ſhould be received, 265. Another in 341, in favour of St. Athanaſius, 255. Council of Alexandria in the Year 399, where the Books of Origen were condemned, 284.
Alipius, Prieſt of Alexandria, defends St. Athanaſius before Conſtantine, 29.
Alms. Effects and Neceſſity of Alms-Deeds, 151, 181. Exhortation to it, 166. Not to be done to Perſons unworthy, 207.
Alms of Conſtantine, 12, 15.
Ambroſe of Alexandria. His Writings, 196.
St. Ambroſe Biſhop of Milan, 198. Time and Place of his Birth, ibid. and [a]. [b]. Parents, 198. Prodigy at his Birth, ibid. 199. Education and Studies, ibid. Elected Governour, ibid. And after Biſhop, 200. Avoided being Biſhop, ibid. At laſt Ordained, ibid. and [c]. —— acquits himſelf worthily in the Function of the Miniſtry, ibid. Perſecuted by Juſtina, ibid. and 201. Writings, ibid. 202, &c. Stile, 232. —— Editions of his Works, 233.
St. Amphilochius. His Country, 184. Ordained Biſhop of Iconium, ibid. Aſſiſts in the Council of Conſtantinople, and holds one at Sida againſt the Maſſilians, ibid. Handſome reply to the Emperour Theodoſius, ibid. Writings, 185.
Ancyra. Council there in 314, 248. Its Canons, ibid. 249. Another Council in 358, againſt Aëtius, 263.
Anger. Contrary to the Spirit of Chriſtianity, 153.
Angels. Not to be adored, 5.
Antioch. A pretended Council held there in 330. againſt Euſtathius, 254. Councils of Antioch in the Years 341, and 342. Upon what Subject, 256. Another in 345. 258. Another in 358. which condemned the Terms Conſubſtantial and of like Subſtance, 263. —— Synod in 361. Conſtantius's Order, 265. Another Council there in 363, under Meletius, 266. Another in 378, to reſtore Peace in that Church, 271.
St. Anthony, Inſtituter of the Monaſtick Life. Time and Place of his Birth, 53. His Parents, ibid. In what Time, and in what Country he began to Build Monaſteries, 54. He came to Alexandria during the Perſecution of Maximinus, and why afterwards returned to his Monaſtery, 53. His Miracles, ibid. His Death, 54. The Author of his Life, 35, 54. Books attributed to him, ibid.
The Apollinarii. Their Life 100. [a]. [b]. Knowledge and Writings, 100, 101. [c]. Doctrine and Errours, 101. Condemnation of Apollinarius and his Followers, ibid. His Genius, 102, 103, Loſs of his Writings, 102. Edition of his Books, ibid.
Apollonius Tyanæus, by whom compared with Jeſus Chriſt, 6.
Apra, Daughter of St. Hilary, 64.

An INDEX of the Principal Matters, &c.

Aquileia, Council of Aquileia, 221. and [d] 273.

Arius Prieſt of Alexandria. Diſcovers his Opinions in the Council of Nice, 2. His principal Errours, 7. Condemnation of his Hereſie by Alexander, 27.--St. Athanaſius oppoſes him in the Council of Nice, 28. Who joined with him, 2. His Death, 13. Councils held upon occaſion of his Hereſie, 250.

Ariminum. Synod there in 359. Hiſtory of it, 263, 264.

Arles. Council there under Conſtantine againſt the Donatiſts, 12. Another Council in 314. 247. & [a]. [b]. ——Canons of that Council, ibid. and 248. Another upon occaſion of St. Athanaſius, 262.

Arnaud de Pontac. Edition of St. Jerom's Verſion of Euſebius's Chronicon. 5.

Arſenius. A Meletian Biſhop, 29. Aſſemblies of the Faithful, upon what Accounts permitted, 2.

Aſterius. Why, and by whom put among the Eccleſiaſtical Writers, 52. his Writings, ibid. Not Biſhop of Amaſea, ibid.

Aſtolphas, Brother to Rachiſius King of the Lombards, takes Ravenna, 19. Demands Peace of Pepin, and breaks it ſoon after, ibid. Beſieges Rome, ibid.

Athalaricus and Theodatus, maintain themſelves in the Poſſeſſion of Rome, 18. They are driven from thence by Beliſarius, ibid.

St. Athanaſius. His Country, 28. [a]. His Parents unknown, ibid. [b]. The Baptiſm he is ſaid to confer upon ſome Children, eſteem'd a Fable, ibid. [d]. He accompanies Alexander to the Council of Nice, when he was but a Deacon, ibid. His promotion to the Biſhoprick of Alexandria, ibid. and [e]. endeavours of the Arians to drive him thence, ibid. The Biſhops that favoured Arius, accuſe him of having impoſed a New Tribute upon the Egyptians, and of conſpiring againſt the Life of the Emperour, who notwithſtanding, declares him Innocent, 29. Accuſed again of Murdering Arſenius, ibid. Called to the Council of Cæſarea, but appears not, and why. Cited to that of Tyre, he appears, ibid. His Accuſation by a lewd Woman fabulous, ibid. Retires from the Council, and is depoſed, ibid. Another Accuſation againſt St. Athanaſius, ibid. He is baniſhed to Triers, and recall'd by Conſtantine's Son, ibid. and 30. [h]. New Accuſations againſt this Saint, 30. ——He retires to Rome, and is well received by Pope Julius, ibid. Is juſtified in a Council held at Rome, ibid. Is abſolved by the Council of Sardica, and recall'd in 348. 31. Letters and Edicts to abrogate all that had been done againſt St. Athanaſius, ibid. Re-enters his Dioceſs, where he is favourably received, ibid. A Report ſpread againſt him, ibid. He flies to the Deſart, ibid. Where he compoſed ſeveral Books, ibid. Being returned from the Deſart, he aſſembled a Council at Alexandria, and why, ibid. Flies again to the other ſide of the Nile, 32. Goes to Antioch to meet the Emperour Jovian, where he held a Synod, What was done in it, ibid. His Death, ibid. His Works, 32, 33, 34, &c. Abridgment of his Works, 39, 40, &c. His Genius, Stile and Doctrine, 46, 47, 48. Editions of his Works, 48. His Funeral Oration, 167. Synods for and againſt St. Athanaſius, 254, 255.

Auxentius, an Arian Biſhop, 201.

B.

Baptiſm. Neceſſity and Effects of Baptiſm, 84, 85. 109, 170, 178. It is not lawful to Repeat it when conferred in the Name of the Trinity, 93, 96. Effects of Baptiſm, 47, 93. Diſpoſitions neceſſary to the well Receiving it, 109. The Ceremonies of Baptiſm, 113. 171. The Receiving of Baptiſm not to be deferr'd, 154, 155, 171. The Miniſters of Baptiſm, 88, 89. The Baptiſm of Hereticks, 88, 89, 96, 140, 143.

Barbarians, When, and how they made themſelves Maſters of Italy and Rome, 18.

St. Barlaam. His Panegyrick, 156.

Baſil of Ancyra. His Life and Doctrine, 59. Book againſt Marcellus of Ancyra, ibid.

St. Baſil Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia. Names of his Father and Mother, 122. By whom brought up, ibid. His Life, ibid. and 123. His Qualities and Epiſcopal Actions, ibid. &c. His Death, 124. His Funeral Oration, 167. A Chronological Catalogue, and an Abridgment of his Letters, 124, and to 143. His other Writings, 144, &c. to 157. His Character, 157, Judgment on, and Abridgment of his Doctrine, 157, 158. Editions of his Works, 158. Names of the Tranſlators of his Works, 159. Project for a new Edition of them, ibid.

Beliſarius a Roman Captain, takes by force the City of Rome, 18.

Beziers. Council there in 356.

Bithynia. Pretended Council of Bithynia in 323, for Arius, 250.

Biſhops. Are above Prieſts, 96, 237. Qualities neceſſary in a Biſhop, 48.

Bourdeaux. Council there in 383. Againſt Inſtantius a Priſcillianiſt, 275.

Bruno. Biſhop of Signi, 59. Writings attributed to him, ibid.

Byzantium. By whom named Conſtantinople, 13.

C.

Calaris. Metropolitan City of Sardinia, 79.

Chalice. Reſpect due to Chalices wherein the Euchariſt is Conſecrated, 40, 94.

Callinicus. A Meletian Biſhop, 29.

Capua. Council of Capua in 390. By whom held, and why, 275.

Carthage. A pretended Council there in 311. where Cæcilian is Elected Biſhop of Carthage by Felix Biſhop of Aptungis 245. I. Council of Carthage in 348. 275. Its Hiſtory ibid. and 276. II. In 390. ibid. Its Canons, ibid. and 277. Another Council of Carthage in 394. 277. Another in 397. Its Canons, 277. &c. Another in the Year 398. Called the Fourth, 280. Hiſtory of this Council, ibid. Canons, 281. &c. Another in the Year 399. 283. Another in 401. called the Fifth, ibid. Canons, ibid. and 284.

Catechumens. Diſtinction of different Sorts of Catechumens, 108. Diſpoſition requiſite in Catechumens for receiving Baptiſm, 109.

Celibacy. More perfect than a Married State, 77. Canons againſt Perſons in Orders, who do not keep it, 141, 196, 197, 207, 243, 248.

St. Cæſarius. His Panegyrick, 165. Life and Employment 184. Not Author of the Dialogues attributed to him, ibid.

Cæſarea of Paleſtine. Synod held there in 334. Whither St. Athanaſius was cited, but appeared not, 29, 254.

Charlemaigne, or Charles the Great. Defeats Deſiderius King of the Lombards, and ſhuts him up in Pavia, 19. Surrenders to the Pope all the Cities which Pepin his Father had given him, ibid. Is made Patricius by Pope Adrian, ibid. In what time and by whom declared Emperour, ibid. His Treaty for the Diviſion of Italy with the Grecian Emperour, ibid. The Succeſſors of Charlemaigne have been Kings of Italy and Soveraigns of Rome, ibid.

Charles Martel, Maire of the Palace, or General of France, 19.

Charles the Bald. Gives up to the Romans the Right of Soveraignty, 19. Suffragans how ordained, 129, 130. Their Power, 249, 250, 257.

Chriſtian. The Name uſeleſs to thoſe who lead a Life unworthy of a Chriſtian, 142.

Chriſtophorſon. Judgment upon his Tranſlation of the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, 4.

An INDEX of the Principal Matters, &c.

Church. Authority and Mark of the Catholick Church, 81, 82, 111. But one Catholick Church ſpread over the whole Earth, 90, 112. Principal Mark of that Church, 90, 91.

Churches of the Eaſt. Divided upon occaſion of that of Antioch, 123, 130, 136, 137, &c. 187, 188.

Church of Rome. Its Authority, 90.

Churches Principal, and their Rights.

Church of Jeruſalem. Eſtabliſhment of their Dignity, 107. 252.

Churches of Gaul. Difference for Primacy, 285.

Circus. Canon againſt thoſe which run in the Circus, 247.

Cirtha, City of Numidia. Council there in 305. The Names of the Biſhops that aſſiſted in it, 241.

Clergy. Canons concerning the Qualities, Life, and Manners of Prieſts, Biſhops and other Clerks, 141, 142, 143, 205, 207, 247, 248, 249, 250, 268, 270, 273, 276, 277, 280, 281, 284, 285, &c. Not ſubject to Publick Penance, 26. 143. Immunities and Exemptions, 15, 16. Edicts of Conſtantine in their favour, ibid.

Cologne. Council of Cologne in 346. againſt Euphratas, 258.

Communion. How it ought to be Received, 114. Of frequent Communion, 137.

Confirmation. Given by the Biſhop with the Holy Chriſm, confers the Holy Ghoſt, 85.

Conſtantius Emperour of the Eaſt, 30. Cauſes Pope Liberius to be impriſoned, 18.

Conſtantinople. Council there in 336, againſt Marcellus of Ancyra, 255. Another in 338, againſt Paul Biſhop of that City, ibid. Another in 360. by the Acacians, 265

Conſtantine, the firſt Chriſtian Emperour, 11. His Parents, ibid. Proclaimed Emperour by his Souldiers, ibid. Defeats the Tyrant Maxentius, ibid. Goes to Milan to Celebrate the Marriage of his Siſter with Licinius, 12. Quarrels with him, ibid. His care for the Church and what belonged to it, ibid. Aſſembles a Council at Rome, ibid. Gives Judgment at Milan in favour of Cæcilian againſt the Donatiſts, ibid. Declares War againſt Licinius, ibid. Makes Laws in favour of the Chriſtians, and for the Celebration of the Lord's Day, ibid. Abrogates the Edicts of Licinius againſt the Chriſtians, ibid. Labours to appeaſe the Quarrel between Alexander and Arius, ibid. Aſſembles a Council of both the Eaſt and Weſt at Nice, where he Aſſiſts. What paſs'd there, ibid. What he did at Jeruſalem, 13. His Zeal for the Chriſtian Religion, ibid. Unblamable if he had not favoured the Biſhops of Arius's Party againſt St. Athanaſius, ibid. He calls to Tyre the Fathers of the Council of Jeruſalem, and why, ibid. Baniſhes St. Athanaſius to Triers, ibid. His Baptiſm, ibid. In what Place and by whom, ibid. His Death, and how long he Reigned, 14. His Character, ibid. Is put among the Saints by the Greeks, 14. Account of his Speeches by Euſebius, 14, 15. Diſcourſe upon the Feaſt of Eaſter, 15. Letters, ibid. and 16. Edicts in favour of the Chriſtian Religion, 16, 17. Suppoſititious donation, 17, &c.

Conſtantius Chlorus. The only Emperour in the Tenth Perſecution, that did not perſecute the Chriſtians, 11. and [a].

Conſtans Emperour, Protector of St. Athanaſius, Died in 350. 31.

Conſubſtantial. When and where that Word was firſt uſed, 2.

Councils. Hiſtory and Abridgment of the Councils held in the Fourth Century, 241, &c. to the end.

Councils of Cabarſuſſa and Bagaïs in 393 and 394, 277.

Councils of Conſtantinople. I. In 381. 271. II. In 382, ibid. III. In 383. 272. Another in the Year 394. 285.

Couſin Preſident. His French Tranſlation of Euſebius's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, and his Judgment upon that Author, 4.

Creed. of the Creed of St. Cyryl, 110.

Croſs. Sign of the Croſs, 111, 115. Apparition of a Croſs, 12, 115. Invention of the true Croſs, 13.

St. Cyprian the Martyr. His Character by St. Gregory Nazianzen, 166.

Cyprus. Council of Cyprus in the Year 399, where the Books of Origen were condemned, 285.

St. Cyril of Jeruſalem. Life and Ordination, 107. Judgments for and againſt him, ibid. 115. His Quarrel with Acacius, who Aſſembled a Council againſt him, in which he is Depoſed, and upon what pretence, 107. And is ſo again in the Council of Conſtantinople, ibid. His Succeſſors, ibid. Catechetical Lectures juſtified, ibid. [d]. [e]. [f]. Letters attributed to him, 115. Judgment upon his Stile and Doctrine, ibid. Different Editions of his Works, ibid.

D.

Damaſus Pope. His Ordination diſturbed by Urſicinus, 120. His Genuine Letters, 121. Suppoſititious Letters, 122. Poems and Epigrams, ibid. Editions of his Works, ibid. Council under Damaſus, 270. Tome ſent to the Eaſt by Damaſus, 271.

Deacons. Canons concerning them, 247, 248, 253, 257, 261, 269, 276, 278, 280, 284, 285.

Dead. Prayer of the Church for the Dead, 8, 237, 238, 289.

Dedication. Dedication or Conſecration of a Church neceſſary before Celebration in it, 39, 40.

Depoſition. What is neceſſary for the Depoſition of a Biſhop, 285.

Deſiderius King of the Lombards, invades the Exarchate of Ravenna, 19.

Deſtiny. Againſt Deſtiny, 6, 15, 179, 188, 206.

Dianius. Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia, enemy to St. Athanaſius, 122, 132.

Dictinius. Errors and Writings of this Priſcillianiſt, 191.

Didymus of Alexandria. His profound Learning, 103. Catalogue of his Works, ibid. Abridgment of his Book of the Holy Ghoſt, ibid. &c. Excellency of that Book, 104. Commentaries upon the Canonical Epiſtles, 105. Treatiſe againſt the Manichees, ibid.

Diodorus of Tarſus. His Life, 188. His Writings, ibid. His Doctrine, 125, 189.

Dionyſius of Alexandria. His Opinion upon the Trinity, 42.

Diſcipline of the Church. Canons concerning the Diſcipline of the Church, 140, 141, 195, 196, 197, 242, &c. to 245. 247, 248, &c. 252, 256, &c. 260, 267, 268, 273, 276, &c. 280, 283, &c. Abridgment of the Diſcipline of the Church in the Fourth Century, 287, &c. to the end. Regulation of the Diſcipline of the Church. See the Extract of the Canons of the Councils, from p. 241. to the end.

Diviners. Canons againſt thoſe who pretend to Divination, 143, 249.

Divine. Qualities neceſſary in a Divine, 170.

Divinity of the Jews, by whom embraced, 5.

Doctrine. Abridgment of the Doctrine of the Church in the Fourth Century, 287.

Donatiſts. Hiſtory of them, 12, &c. 15, &c. 241, 246. Refutation of their Error, 87, 88, &c. Convicted of delivering up the Scripture, and of making a Schiſm, 89, 90. Judgment given againſt them, 90, &c. Several Books againſt them, 93, 94, 95, 96.

Donatus Biſhop of Carthage, chief of the Donatiſts, not Biſhop of Calama, 66. and [a]. Writ ſeveral little Treatiſes, ibid. and [b].

Duties of Chriſtians, and principally the Eccleſiaſtical, 205, &c.

Drunkenneſs. A Diſcourſe againſt this Vice, 153.

An INDEX of the Principal Matters, &c.

E.

Egypt. Council of the Biſhops of Egypt in 363, held at Antioch, 266.

Elvira. Council held in that City in the Year 305. The time of this Council not certainly known, nor the Name of the City, 242. and [a]. [b].

St. Ephrem the Syrian, Deacon of Edeſſa. Time of his Birth, Country and Life, 115. Writings juſtified, 116, &c. Catalogue of his Works, 118, &c. Their Editions, 120.

St. Epiphanius. Time and Place of his Birth, 234. Education, ibid. Election to the Biſhoprick of Salamis, ibid. Quarrel with John of Jeruſalem, ibid. Aſſembles a Council in the Iſland of Cyprus, ibid. Comes to Conſtantinople, ibid. Will not Communicate with St. Chryſoſtom, ibid. Eudoxia conjures him to pray for her ſick Child, and his Anſwer, 235. His Death, 235. His Writings, ibid. &c. Doctrine 236, 237. Stile and Genius, 239. Editions of his Works, 240.

Epiſcopacy. Monks ought not to refuſe it when they are worthy, 44, 45. When they are to Refuſe and when Accept it, 45, 160, 161, 200.

Evagrius of Antioch. A Biſhop of Paulinus's Party, 198. His Books upon different Subjects, ibid.

Euchariſt. Sacrilege to Profane it, 91, 94, 115, 149, Sacrifice of the Euchariſt, 96, 113, 114. Celebration of the Euchariſt, and Ceremonies then uſed, 48, 96. 113, 114. To be taken faſting, 203.

Eugenius the Tyrant. When defeated and killed, 230.

Evil not a Subſtance, 59. Not a Nature incorruptible, and uncreate, 179.

Eulalius and Boniface their Schiſm. By whom appeaſed, 18.

Eunomius, Diſciple of Aëtius. Country, 99. Life, Errors, Writings and Genius, ibid. Book of St. Baſil written againſt him, ibid. St. Gregory Nyſſen's Book againſt him, ibid.

Euſebius of Cæſarea. Country, 1. and [b]. Surname, 1. and [a]. By whom ordained Prieſt, 1. During the Perſecution exhorts the Chriſtians to ſuffer courageouſly for the Faith, and remains firm in it, 2 [c]. Is ſuſpected to have offered Incenſe to Idols, 1. Succeeds Agapius in the Biſhoprick of Cæſarea, 2.---And protects Arius, ibid. Signs the Profeſſion of Faith of the Council of Nice, 2. And in the mean time holds Correſpondence with the Arians, ibid. Refuſes the Biſhoprick of Antioch, ibid. Aſſiſts at the Councils of Antioch, Tyre and Conſtantinople, ibid. Makes a Panegyrick in honour of Conſtantine, ibid. Death, ibid. Works, 2, 3. Account of his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, and other Works, 3, 4, 5, &c. to 9. His Judgment upon the Trinity, 6, 7. Upon the other Points of Religion, 7, 8. A Judgment upon ſome of the Works of this Author, 8. Of his Sermons, 8, 9. His Character, 9. Whether he be to be called a Saint, 10. and [f]. Different Editions of his Works, 10, 11.

Euſebius of Nicomedia, 2, 9, 22.

Euſebius Vercellenſis. His Country, 186. Aſſiſts at the Council of Milan, from whence he is ſent into Exile; and at that of Alexandria, ibid. His Death, ibid. Called Confeſſor by the Ancients, ibid. Letters and Writings, ibid.

Euſtathius Biſhop of Antioch. Country, 21. and [a]. Life, 21, 22. Aſſiſts at the Council of Nice, 21. and [c]. Unjuſtly depoſed, 22. and [d]. [e]. [f]. [g]. Writings, 23, 24. and [k]. [l]. [m]. [n]. Commentary upon the beginning of Geneſis falſly attributed to him, 24.

Euſtathius of Sabaſtea. Quarrels with St. Baſil: His Frauds, 123, 124, 130, 135.

Euzoïus, an Arian Author, 106. Different from the famous Arian, Euzoïus Biſhop of Antioch, 106.

Exarchs eſtabliſhed at Ravenna, 18.

Excommunication. The ancient manner of it, 137.

F.

Faſt. The Uſefulneſs and Obligation of Faſting, 150, 181, 203, 243, 268, 369. Faſt of Wedneſday and Friday, 26, 226, 290. Faſt of Lent, 48, 195, 226. Canons concerning Faſting, 26, 195, 268, 269, 282.

Fauſtinus, a Luciferian. His Petition to the Emperors Valentinian and Theodoſius, 192.

Felix. Ordained Biſhop of Rome, in the Place of Liberius, who was baniſhed, not a lawful Pope, 61, 62. and [a]. Neither Saint, nor Martyr, ibid. 1. and [b].

Flacillus Biſhop of Antioch, 6.

Fulradus Abbot of St. Denys. Received in the Name of Pepin the Exarchate of Ravenna, which he immediately reſtored to the Pope, 19.

G.

Galerius Emperour, 11.

Galienus Emperour, 1. and [c].

Gangra. Council of Gangra in 370. 267.

St. Gaudentius, Succeſſor to Philaſtrius, 193.

Gelaſius of Cæſarea. Author of ſome Writings, 196.

George of Laodicea. Driven from the Church by Alexander, engaged in the Party of Arius, and Author of ſome Books, 100.

George, Uſurper of the Church of Alexandria, killed in a Popular Sedition, 31.

St. Gervaſius, and St. Protaſius, 226.

God. Of the Nature of God, 5. Of his Providence and Juſtice, 9. &c.

St. Gordius, Martyr. His Panegyrick, 155.

St. Gorgonia, Siſter to St. Gregory Nazianzen. Her Panegyrick, 165.

Grace. What Opinion we ought to have concerning the Queſtions of Grace and Free-Will, 58. Neceſſity of Grace, 119, 149, 154.

Gregory III. and Zachary, Popes. Demand Succours of Charles Martel, 19.

Gregory of Bætica. Life, Writings and Genius, 85.

Gregory, Father of St. Gregory Nazianzen. Life and Conduct, 159, Funeral Oration for him, 166.

St. Gregory Nazianzen. Names of his Father and Mother, and Time of his Birth, 159. His Life, ibid. and [c]. Ordained Prieſt by his Father, afterwards Biſhop by St. Baſil, ibid. Abridgment of his Sermons, 160, &c. to 172. Subject of his Poems, 172, &c. to 175. Letters and Will, 175. Their Number, ibid. His Commendation, ibid. Editions of his Works, 175, and 176.

St. Gregory Nyſſen. Time of his Birth and Ordination, 176. Life, ibid. Writings, 177, &c. to 182. and [c]. [d]. [e]. His Character, 183. Editions of his Works, ibid. Perſecutions he ſuffered from the Arians, 131, 135.

H.

Heliodorus, Prieſt. Book of his, concerning Principles, 53.

Heraclius, Count. Raiſes a Tumult in Alexandria, againſt Athanaſius, 38.

Heraclius. Ordained Biſhop of Jeruſalem, 107.

Heremius. Ordained Biſhop of Jeruſalem, 127.

Hereticks. Conſtantine's Edicts againſt them, 17.

Hierocles, Philoſopher. His two Books againſt the Chriſtian Religion, 2, 6.

Hilary, Ordained Biſhop of Jeruſalem, 107.

St. Hilary Biſhop of Poictiers. His Life, 64, &c. His Ordination, ibid. Baniſhed by the Order of the Emperour Conſtantius, and why, ibid. Aſſiſts at the Council of Seleucia, ibid. and 65. His Writings, 65, 66. Diſpute againſt Auxentius, ibid. Abridgment of his Books of the Trinity, 66, &c. And of his other Books, 69, &c. to 78. Judgment upon his Style, Genius and Doctrine, 79. Editions of his Work, ibid.

Hilary

An INDEX of the Principal Matters, &c.

Hilary the Deacon. His Life, 189. His Works, ibid.
Q. Julius Hilarion, Author of a Chronicle.
Hippo. Council of Hippo in 393. 277.
Homicide. Canons againſt it, 140, 141, 142, 143, 182.
Hoſius Biſhop of Corduba. In what time he generouſly Confeſſed the Faith: When? 50. The Donatiſts falſely calumniate him, ibid. Why ſent by Conſtantine to Egypt, ibid. Preſides in the Councils of Nice and Sardica; and what he did there, ibid. Communicates with Urſacius and Valens, and ſubſcribes the Second Sirmian Creed, ibid. Why, and by whom accuſed, 51. Hiſtory of the two Luciferians, touching him, ibid. How long he lived, ibid. His Death, ibid. His Writings, ibid. His Authority could not prejudice the Truth, 86, 87.
Hoſpital of St. Baſil at Caſarea, 165.
Humility. Exhortation to Humility, 154.

I.

Jacobus Niſibenus. Life and Miracles, 49. His Writings, ibid.
Iconium, Metropolis of Lycaonia, 184.
St. Jerom. His Tranſlation of Euſebius's Chronicon, 4.
Jeruſalem. Synod there in 335. for the Dedication of the Church built there in 255.
JESUS CHRIST. His Divinity, 44.
Images defaced by St. Epiphanius, at Anablatha.
Incarnation of JESUS CHRIST. Explication of that Myſtery, 5, 7, 8, 44, 47, 111, 149, 170, 171. Its Cauſes and Effects, 9, 43.
Inſtantius a Priſcillianiſt, 190, 275.
Joy of a Chriſtian in Afflictions, 151.
Iſchyras, a falſe Prieſt. His Hiſtory, 29.
Iſion, a Meletian Biſhop, 29.
Italy. Council of Italy in 362. againſt the Synod of Ariminum, 266.
Ithacius or Idacius, Biſhop. A Spaniſh Author, Enemy of the Priſcillianiſts, 191, 192.
Judgment Laſt. In what place it will be made, 75, 77.
Judgments Eccleſiaſtical, 249, 257, 278, 279, &c.
Julian the Apoſtate. Succeeds Conſtantius, and concerns not himſelf in the Affairs of the Chriſtians, 31. Sends an Order to Alexandria to drive St. Athanaſius thence, and what followed thereupon, 31, 32. Declaration againſt Julian, 162, 163.
St. Julitta. Her Martyrdom, 151.
Julius Biſhop of Rome. Aſſembles a Council at Rome, and declares St. Athanaſius innocent, 51. His Judgment in favour of that Saint, 30, 40. Hiſtory of the Life of this Pope, 51. His Writings, ibid. His Letters upon the Incarnation, and his Decretals ſuppoſitious, 52. Death, ibid.
Juſt. Of the State of their Souls between their Death and the laſt Judgment, 165.
Juſtina an Arian. Perſecutes St. Ambroſe, 200, 223, &c.
Juſtinian Emperour. Become Maſter of Italy: Treats the Popes hardly, 18.
Juſtinian the younger. Cauſes Pope Sergius to be baniſhed, 19.
Juvencus, a Chriſtian Poet. His Life and Writings, 20, 21.

K.

Kings. Reſpect and Obedience due to them, 39, 41, 91, 92. Ought not to meddle with Matters of Faith, 41, 224, 225, 226. Ought to protect Religion, 222.

L.

Lampſacus. Council there in 365. Under the Emperours Valens and Valentinian, 266.
Laodicea. Council celebrated between 360 and 370. the Canons of it received by the whole Church, 268, &c.
St. Lawrence. Hiſtory of his Martyrdom, 207. A good Action of his, ibid.
Law of the Jews but for one Nation, 6.
Leo Iſauricus. Would have killed Pope Gregory II. 19.
Leontius, Governour of Rome, puts Pope Liberius in Priſon, 19.
Liberius Biſhop of Rome, Succeſſor to Julius, 60. Impriſoned by Conſtantius, 18. Letter to the Biſhops of the Eaſt, attributed to him, is not Genuine, 60. Maintains the Party of St. Athanaſius with Vigour, 61. Therefore baniſhed, ibid. He ſigns the Condemnation of St. Athanaſius, approves an Heretical Profeſſion of Faith, 62. and [c]. Returns to Rome, and changes his Opinion, 63. Defends St. Athanaſius, and the Faith of the Church, ibid. His Death, ibid. and [d]. Letters and Writings, ibid. A Judgment upon this Biſhop, ibid.
Liberty of the Chriſtian Religion, where firſt allowed, 12.
Licinius, Emperour of the Eaſt, Loſes a Battle againſt Conſtantine in Pannonia, 12. Second Battel in Thrace, between them, ibid. Publiſhes Edicts againſt the Chriſtians, and perſecutes them, ibid. Overcome at the Siege of Nicomedia, throws himſelf at Conſtantine's Feet, who gives him his Life, ibid. Put to Death afterwards by Conſtantine at Theſſalonica, ibid.
Longinus firſt took upon him the Quality of Exarch or Vice-Roy of Italy, 18.
Lord's Day. Celebration of the Lord's Day, 12, 14, [c]. 17, 26. Not to Faſt on it, 203. Succeeded the Jewiſh Sabbath, 45.
Lucifer Biſhop of Calaris, Deputed by Pope Liberius to Conſtantinople, 79. Aſſiſts at the Council of Milan, and vigorouſly defends St. Athanaſius, ibid. His Conſtancy and Steadineſs cauſes his Exile, ibid. Genius and Writings, ibid. Unadviſedly ordains Paulinus Biſhop of Antioch, 80. Separates from the Church, ibid. Judgment upon his Style, ibid. Subject of his Writings, ibid.
Lucilla, a Lady of Carthage, her Hiſtory, 89.
Lucius Biſhop of Alexandria, an Arian, Author of ſome Letters touching the Feaſt of Eaſter, and of ſome Books upon ſeveral Subjects, 106.
Ludovicus Pius, Son of Charlemaign. Sends Bernard to Rome, and why, 19.
Luitprandus King of the Lombards, 19.

M.

Macarius, Prieſt of Alexandria. Defends St. Athanaſius before Conſtantine, 29. Accuſed of breaking a Chalice, ibid.
The Macarii. How many of them, 55. Their Works, 56, 57. Rules attributed to the Macarii, 58.
Maccabees. Their Panegyrick, 167.
Macrobius, a Donatiſt Prieſt, Author of a Book addreſſed to Confeſſors and Virgins, 53.
Magick. Canons againſt Magicians, 269.
Mamas Martyr. His Panegyrick, 156.
Marcellus of Ancyra. Wrote againſt his Brethren, and why? 3. i. 6. Life, Fortune and Actions, 50. St. Athanaſius always defended him, ibid. Fragments of his Works, ibid. Judgment upon his Doctrine, ibid. Refutation of his Errours, 6.
Marcellus Biſhop in Campania. Sent by Pope Liberius to the Council of Arles, 61.
Marcellinus Biſhop of Rome, Never Sacrificed to Idols.
Marcellina, St. Ambroſe's Siſter, 210.
Marriage. Not forbidden, 47, 110. Canons againſt Marriages forbidden by the Laws. See St. Baſil's Canons of Penance, 140. and [c]. In what manner married Perſons ought to behave themſelves, 110.
Marriage between Brother and Siſter-in-Law forbidden, 137. 140. Divorce, 237. Polygamy forbidden, 197. Of the Marriage of Children under the Power of their Parents, 142. 229. Second and Third Marriages, 140, 141, 142, Marriage with Infidels forbidden, 223.
Martyrs. Hiſtory and Commendation of the Forty Martyrs, 156.

Martyrs, may be ſaved without Baptiſm, 110.
Matter, not Eternal, 5.
Matronianus a Priſcillianiſt, 190.
Maxentius, Tyrant. Deſtroys Rome, afterwards Conquered by Conſtantine, 11.
Maximus, Philoſopher of Alexandria, 186. His Panegyrick, 167. Procures himſelf to be ordained Biſhop of Conſtantinople, 160. His irregular Manners, 169. His Writings, 186.
Meletius. His Life, Ordination and Actions, 187.
Melitius. Author of the Sect of Melitians, condemned by Peter of Alexandria, 26. 242.
Melitians. Schiſmaticks, 28. and [f]. Judgment of the Council of Nice concerning them, 251.
Melitine. Synod there about the Year 357. 265.
Metropolitan. His Authority and Rights, 257, 269, 277, 278. Ought not to aſſume the Quality of Prince of Prieſts, or Sovereign Prieſt, 278.
Meſſiah. Came into the World for all Mankind, 6.
Milan. Council there in 346. To find means of terminating the Differences between the Biſhops. Another Council in 355, under Pope Liberius. Another againſt Jovinian, 390.
Monks. Inſtitution of Monks, 53. Precepts and Inſtructions for Monks, 124. 156. A good Deſcription of Monks anciently, 164. Of their Habits and of the Auſterity of their Life, 165. Might be Ordained Biſhops, 45.
Muſculus a Proteſtant. His Tranſlation of Euſebius's Hiſtory, what, 4.
Myſteries, hidden from Catechumens and Pagans, 48.

N.

Narſes Count. Delivers Italy from the Tyranny of the Barbarians, 1.
Nature. Not evil of it ſelf, 59.
Nectarius Biſhop of Conſtantinople. His Death, 195. A Judgment upon this Author, ibid.
Neocæſarea. Council there in 314. 248. Canons, 248, 249, &c.
Nice in Bithynia. Hiſtory of the Council of Nice, and Circumſtances concerning it, 2, 7, 12, 15, 23, 250, &c. The Nicene Creed, the only Rule of Faith, 42.
Nicephorus Calliſtus, compoſed an Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, and when, 4. Put many uncertain and Fabulous Stories into it, ibid.
Niſibis a City of Meſopotamia, 49.
Niſmes. Council held in that City in the Time of St. Martin, 275.
Nonna, Mother of St. Gregory Nazianzen, 166.
Novatian. Character of that Heretick, 83. Refutation of his Doctrine, ibid. 216, &c.

O.

Optatus Biſhop of Milevis. Time when he lived, 87. Died in the Reign of Valentinian, ibid. & [c]. Number of his Books, 87. and [d]. [e]. Abridgment of his Books againſt the Donatiſts, 87, 88, &c. Judgment upon his Stile and Doctrine, 96. Editions of his Books, 97.
Oreſiieſis, Succeſſour to St. Pachomius. Treatiſe concerning the Inſtruction of Monks, 55.

P.

St. Pacianus Biſhop of Barcelona. Time of his Death, 81. An Extract of his Writings, 81, 82. A good ſaying of his, 82. His Doctrine, 84. Editions of his Works, 85.
St. Pachomius. Author of a Monaſtick Life, 54. Country and Relations, ibid. Life and Time of his Death, 55. Rules and Letters, ibid.
Palæmon Hermit, Maſter of St. Pachomius, 54.
Pamphilus Martyr, Friend to Euſebius, 1. and [a]. And not his Brother, 1. [a]. Suffered two Years Impriſonment, and after Martyrdom, 1. Compoſed Apologies for Origen with Euſebius, 2. Life written by Euſebius, 3.
Permenian a Donatiſt, his Miſtakes, 88.
Paris. Council of Paris in 362. where Auxentius, Urſacius, Valens, and Saturnus were condemned, 266.
Patrophilus, an Arian Biſhop. Enemy to Euſebius Vercellenſis, 186.
Paul I. Pope, wrote to Pepin, 19.
Paul of Emiſa. Aſſiſts at the Council of Seleucia, 59. St. Jerom's Judgment upon his Works, ibid.
Paulinus of Antioch. His Ordination unlawful, 136.
Penance. Which is true 77. Abſolution to be granted to Sinners, 82, 83. and [c]. Neceſſity of Penance, ibid. 180. Qualities of true Penance, 83, 118, 217. Publick Penance, 84. 217. and [e]. Canons of St. Baſil concerning Penance, 140. and [c]. Canons of St. Gregory Nyſſen upon the ſame Subject, 181, 182. Canons of Peter of Alexandria concerning Penance and Idolaters, 26. Canons of the Council of Elvira concerning Penance, and depriving of thoſe that are guilty of ſome Crimes of Communion even when they are dying, 242, &c. Other Canons of the Councils of the Fourth Century; See the Extract of the Councils. If a Judge who has condemned Criminals to Death ought to do Penance, 227.
Pepin Beſieges Padua, 19. and afterwards cauſes Aſtolphus to raiſe the Siege of Rome, and obliges him to execute the Treaty of Peace, ibid.
Perſecution. Flight in Perſecution, 26, 40, 41. Of the Arians againſt the Church, 41, 71, &c. To be ſuffered with Conſtancy, 151.
Peter Biſhop of Alexandria, under the Emperour, and in what time he ſuffered Martyrdom, 25, and [a]. The Acts of his Martyrdom doubtful, 25. and [b]. His Canons are drawn from one of his Diſcourſes upon Penance. 26.
Peter another Biſhop of Alexandria, Succeſſor to St. Athanaſius, 105. Driven away by Palladius Governour of the Province, and retires to Rome, ibid. Fragments of his Letter, 106. Death, ibid.
Phœbadius Biſhop of Agen. His Steadineſs in the Council of Ariminum, 85. Subſcribes nevertheleſs a Profeſſion of Faith made by the Arians, 86. Laments his Fault and Repairs it, ibid. Writes a Book againſt the Second Sirmian Creed, ibid.
Philaſtrius Biſhop of Breſſia. His Life, 193. Judgment upon his Treatiſe of Hereſies, 194.
Philo-Carpathius. A Suppoſititious Author, 240.
Philoſtratus. An Author not to be credited, 6.
Photinus Biſhop of Sirmium. His Country, Errour, Writings, Condemnation, 98.
Pilgrimage. Uſe and Abuſe of Pilgrimages, 182.
Plato. His Doctrine agreeable to Moſes's, but not free from Errour as that of the Holy Scripture, 6.
Popes. Popes never received from Conſtantine the Empire of Rome, 18. and [e]. Subject to the Grecian Emperours, ibid. Obliged to the Kings of France for their Temporalities, 19. At laſt became Sovereigns of the City of Rome, and by what Degrees, ibid.
Prayer. What it is to Pray, 151.
Prieſts. Formerly preſided in the Aſſemblies of the Faithful in ſome Churches, 48.

Pretextatus Governour of Rome, baniſhes Urſicinus by the Emperour's Order, 120.
Priſcillian. Hiſtory of that Heretick, 190. Councils celebrated againſt him and his Followers, 274.
Providence of God, extends to all Creatures, 206.
Pſalms. Uſefulneſs of Pſalms, 45, 46. Diviſion of the Pſalms, 177. Remarks upon the Pſalms, 75, 76.

R.

Rachiſius. King of the Lombards, 19.
Rapes. Forbid and puniſhed by the Eccleſiaſtical Laws, 137, 141.
Reformers. Character and Genius of the Reformers, 193.
Religious Perſecuted well received at Conſtantinople by St. Chryſoſtom, Cauſe of Theophilus's hatred to that Saint, 234.
Religion Chriſtian. Proofs of it, 5, 6, 15, 42, 178. Edicts of Conſtantine for Religion, 15, 16.
Relicks. Reſpect due to them, what? 90, 96, 226.
Repentance: See Penance.
Reſurrection. Proofs of the Reſurrection, 8, 112.
Rheticus Biſhop of Autun. Life and Writings, 21.
Rhodanius Biſhop of Thouloſe, 262.
Riches. Their Uſe, 75, 77, 151, 203.
St. Romanus, a Deacon of Antioch, Martyr, 9.
Rome. Council held there in 313, in favour of Cæcilian, 246. Another in 341, under Pope Julius, for St. Athanaſius, 253. Another in 370, under Damaſus, 270. Another in 372, againſt Urſicinus, ibid. Another in 390, againſt Jovian and his Followers, 275.
Ruffinus, Judgment upon his Tranſlation of Euſebius's Hiſtory, 14.

S.

Sabinus, a Macedonian Author, 198.
Saints. Veneration and Prayer to Saints, 8, 156, 237.
Sangarus. Council of the Novatians there in 390, 275.
Saragoſſa. Council of Saragoſſa in 347. 274.
Sardica. Council there in 347. 259. Its Canons and Letters, ibid. &c.
Saturninus Biſhop of Arles, Sided with the Arians.
Scaliger (Joſeph.) Firſt collected the Greek Fragments of Euſebius's Chronicon, 5.
Scripture Holy. Canonical Books of the Sacred Scripture, 45, 46, 111, 270, 279. The Rule of Faith, 47, 48.
Seleucia. Council of Seleucia in 359. Hiſtory of it, 264. and c.
Septuagint. Hiſtory of their Verſion, 5, 111.
Serapion Biſhop of Thumis, different from him of Arſinoe, 58. His Life and Writings, ibid.
Sergius Pope. By whom Baniſhed, 19.
Servatio Biſhop of Tongres. By ſurpriſal Signs a Profeſſion of Faith made by the Arians, 86.
Silverius and Vigilius Popes, ill uſed by Juſtinian, 18.
Simony, Receiving Money for the Adminiſtration of the Sacraments to be Deteſted, 137.
Sin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, in what ſence unpardonable, 46. Diſtinction of Sins, 83, 84.
Singing the Prayers in Churches, 133.
Singedunum. Council there in 366. Compoſed of Arian Biſhops, 267.
Sinueſſa. Council held there in 303. The Acts of it Suppoſititious, 241.
Siricius Pope, Succeſſor to Damaſus, 196. Abridgment of his Letters, ibid. and 197.
Sirmium. I. Council of Sirmium in 349. 261. II. Council there in 351. 262. III. In 357. 263. IV. In 358. ibid. V. In 359. ibid.
Socrates Hiſtorian. Begins his Hiſtory where Euſebius ends, 4.
Solitude. Its Uſefulneſs, 124.
Soul. Immortal and Spiritual, 9, 47, 110, 236. Book of the Soul by Euſtathius of Antioch, 22. Queſtion concerning the Soul of Samuel, 24. Grace and an inclination to Sin to be found at the ſame time in the ſame Soul, 57. Of its Nature, 57, 58, 74, 79, 174, 177, 179, 183, 201.
Sozomen Hiſtorian. Begins his Hiſtory where Euſebius Ends his, 4.
Stephen, II. Pope, makes a Truce with the King of the Lombards, 19. Has recourſe to Pepin, ibid.
Sida in Pamphylia. Council there in 383, againſt the Maſſalians or Euchaitæ, 274.
Synods, held by the Semi-Arians in 365, and 366, 267.
Syrianus. Uſes the Faithful of Alexandria ill, even in the Church, 31.

T.

Tabenna. Monaſtery in Egypt, Founded by St. Pachomius, 54.
Taverns. Canons againſt Taverns, 269.
Teſtament New. For all Mankind, and the Law of the Jews for the Nation only, 6.
Theater Canons againſt Stage-Players, 244.
Theft. Vide Violence.
Theodatus. Sends Pope Agapetus to Juſtinian, 19.
Theodorus Biſhop of Perinthus. Life and Writings, 18.
Theodorus Diſciple of St. Pachomius his Letters, 55.
Theodorus Martyr, 181. and c.
Theodoret Hiſtorian. Begins his Hiſtory where Euſebius ends his, 4.
Theodoric King of the Oſtrogoths makes himſelf Maſter of Italy and Rome, 18. Appoints a Viſitor over that Church, and ſends Pope John to the Grecian Emperour, and why, ibid.
Theoſebia. Wife to Gregory Nyſſen, 176, and c.
Theotimus Biſhop of Tomi, his Writings, 198.
Tiberianus, a Priſcillianiſt, 191.
Timothy of Alexandria. Life, 195. Abridgment of his Canons, ibid.
Titus of Boſtra. Circumſtances of his Life, 102. Aſſiſts at the Council of Meletius held at Antioch, ibid. Subject of his Book againſt the Manichees, ibid. and 103. The Opinion we ought to have of it, 103. Commentary upon St. Luke's Goſpel attributed to him, not his, ibid. His Death, 102.
Toledo. Council there in the Year, 400. 285. Canons of it, ibid. 286.
Triers. Council ſaid to be held there in the Time of St. Martin, 275.
Trinity. Euſebius's Opinion upon the Trinity, 7. Explication of the Myſtery of the Holy Trinity, and Proofs of the Divinity of the Son and Holy Ghoſt, 27, 44, 47, 48, 66, &c. 110, 111, &c. 146, 147, 178, 220, 251, &c.
Triphillius Biſhop in Cyprus, 52.
Turin. Council there in 400. 285. Hiſtory of it, ibid.
Tyana. Synod held there in the Year 368.
Tyre. Pretended Council of Tyre in 335, againſt St. Athanaſius, 254.

V.

Valence. Council there in 347. Its Canons for the Reformation of Diſcipline, 270.
Valens Biſhop of Murcia, 99.
Valens Emperour. In what Year and by whom Baptized, 32. His Edict, and what he ordained by it, ibid.
Valeſius. His Tranſlation, of Euſebius's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, 10.

Victo-

Victorinus of Africa. His Converſion, 80. His Baptiſm, ibid. Writings againſt Arius and againſt the Manichees, 81. Other Works, ibid.
Vigilance Chriſtian, recommended, 151.
Violence, exerciſed by the Donatiſts againſt the Catholicks, 91, 92. The Church did not exerciſe any againſt them, ibid. Princes might uſe their Authority to procure a Re-union of Schiſmaticks and Hereticks, 92.
Violence and Theft. Canons againſt theſe Sins, 141. 182.
Vincenſius of Capua. Sent to the Council of Arles by Pope Liberius, 61.
Virgins. Conſecrated to God. Made a Vow of Virginity, 94. Had a Veil, ibid. 210. Penance impoſed on thoſe who violated their Vow of Chaſtity, 142, 213. Not to be condemned without good Proof of their Guilt, 221.
Virginity. The moſt perfect State, 8, 47, 110, 150, 179, 228, 230.
Virginity Perpetual of Mary, 212. 228.
Vitellius a Donatiſt. Author of a Book for his Party, and another againſt the Gentiles, 53.
Vito a Prieſt, 30 and 1.
Vows. Indiſcreet Vows forbidden, 142.
Urſicinus, his Conteſt againſt Pope Damaſus, 120, 121.
Uſury. Condemnation of Uſury, 181. 203. Canons againſt Uſury, 141, 247, 253, 268.
Uſurers. Diſcourſe againſt Uſurers, 181. 203.

W.

Wiſdom. Book of Wiſdom attributed by the Latins to Solomon, 78.
Women, Not to be clad with Eccleſiaſtical Habits, 137.
Word. Not a Creature drawn from naught, 27.
Witch of Endor. Hiſtory of it Explained, 23. 24.

ADVER-

ADVERTISEMENT.

THE French Copy of this Book is so very uncorrectly Printed, that those who took Care of this Translation, found it necessary in great Numbers of Places to examine it by those Original Books which were quoted or epitomized: So that though very many Faults were amended in the Body of this Translation, yet upon a Review of the Work since it came from the Press, several others were observed, which are here set by themselves, lest they should be imputed to the Printer's Carelessness.

ERRATA in the French Text.

PAge 4. col. 1. line 6. from bot. read B. 1. C. 12 col. 2. l. 2. r. C. 17. p. 10. l. ult. for 13. r. 15. p. 11. l. 4. r. Hopperus. p. 21. l. 3. r. B. VIII. c. 1. ibid. col. 2. l. 3. r. Theodoret. B. 1. c. 7. p. 27. l. 30. dele and Theodoret. p. 33. col. 1. l. 4. r. τῆι Ευσεβίου. p. 35. col. 2. l. 6. r. c. 21. for c. 17. and l. 7. r. c. 23. for c. 14. p. 51. l. 18. from bot. r. B. 1. c. 5. p. 63. l. 4. from bot. for 6. r. 16. p. 70. l. 40. for Ariminum and Ancyra, r. Ariminum and Seleucia. ibid. l. 17. from bot. r. exhorts the Western. p. 85. l. 4. from bot. r. composed by Potamius and Subscribed by Hosius. p. 100. l. 15. r. ch. 15. of B. IV. p. 102. Nazianzen's Words end at Admiration of all Mankind. p. 107. l. 21. r. Eustathius of Sebastea. ibid. col. 1. l. 1. r. B. 11. c. 38. l. 2. r. B. 4. c. 20. p. 145. l. 22. from bot. r. ch. 15. B. III. p. 183. l. 24. from bot. r. Margunius. p. 221. col. 1. l. 2 dele p. 824. p. 223. l. 8. from bot. for 383. r. 388. p. 233. l. 16. for 1606. r. 1506. p. 237. and p. 239. for Aëtius r. Aërius. p. 250. l. 33. r. B. I. for B. 3. p. 256. for Edessa r. Emisa. p. 258, 259. for Servatus of Tongres, r. Servatio.

Those likewise who are acquainted with the French Language, know what a Liberty the French Writers take in altering of Proper Names, and in bringing them to the Genius of their own Tongue: For which Reason they will easily pardon some Mistakes of that kind in so long and various a Work as this. However, lest any one should think that this has been neglected, which might occasion Confusion, when the same Persons Names otherwise turned occur in other Books, the following Catalogue was drawn up; in which those Names to which no Page is set, are several times to be met with, whereas the others are hardly ever mistaken any where else. Bostria (p. 9.) for Bostra. Eucherus (p. 24.) for Eucherius. Zosinus (p. 27*) for* Zosimus. Eudoxus for Eudoxius. Cotelierius for Cotelerius. Vurimadus for Varimadus. Tapsa for Tapsus. Emesa for Emisa. Rhebadius (p. 50*) for* Phebadius. Damascus (p. 33.) for Damasus. Docus (p. 51.) for Docius. Elpidus and Elpides for Elpidius. Poëmius (p. 135.) for Poëmenius. Narsetes for Narses. Logothera (p. 158.) for Logothera. Fumanus for Fumancellus. Doaza (p. 169.) for Doara. Florus Magister (p. 205.) not to be divided. Brughem (p. 233.) for Beughem. Marcina (p. 179.) for Macrina.

CORRIGENDA.

PAge 3. line 22. read Euphration. l. 27. dele of. p. 5. l. 43. for with r. which. p. 7. l. 24. for formerly r. formally. p. 9. l. 23. dele C. p. 10. l. 1. r. Offices for Officers. l. 31. for revised r. reprinted. ibid. l. 5. from bot. for Four r. Fourteen. p. 13. l. 25. for the, r. their. p. 17. l. 28. r. Clergy. p. 19. l. 37. for as it plainly appears, r. he declaring himself openly. p. 22. b. l. 8. r. suffered Paulinus to have been. p. 24. col. 2. l. 7. for S. Austin, r. S. Justin. p. 26. l. 18. dele not. p. 27. l. 14. from bot. for the best, r. a Masterpiece. p. 33. l. 12. r. so that. p. 36. l. 2. r. Frenchman. p. 37. l. 16. for the Act, r. Action. p. 39. l. 33. r. Retractation. p. 41. l. 9. before goes, r. he. p. 44. l. 33. dele so that. p. 46. l. 48. r. do not mean. p. 52. l. 28. for who Heracleus, r. which Heraclea. p. 53. col. 1. l. 8. r. by the latter, for the last by. p. 63. l. 35. for two Volumes, r. 2d. Volume. p. 65. l. 18. from bot. for viz. r. Vir. p. 68. l. 3. r. perception. p. 73. col. 2. after l. 1. add 459. To Vincentius of Capua. p. 82. l. 8. for Doctrine r. Doctor. p. 87. l. 32. for since St. Jerom's, r. in St. Jerom's p. 100, b. l. 6. r. but it was. p. 107. col. 1. l. ult. r. of the Words. p. 108 col. 1. l. 8. r. wrote some. p. 116. l. 8. for Aversation r. Aversion. p. 122. l. 44. r. 1672. [in Octavo; his Poems. l. 45. dele in Octavo. p. 135. l. 4. r. pretended for little. 136. l. 39. r. his Carriage deserved. p. 146. l. 20. r. at Laciza. p. 154. l. 10. for honest, r. decent. p. 170. l. 9. for 41*st.* r. 32*d.* ibid. l. 40. for of r. and. and for and r. of. p. 171. l. 28. r. his Custom. p. 173. l. 2. for likeness r. Lightness. ibid. l. 15. from bot. for Hermetical. r. Eremetical. p. 190. l. 18. for Provocation r. Vocation. p. 193. l. 11. Marg. Note from bot. dele. p. 198. l. 31. r. Sozomen commends him. p. 215. l. 11. from bot. for it is, r. is it. p. 222. col. 2. for Lieutenancy r. Vicariate twice. 238. l. 10. from bot. Marg. Note. for she knows, r. he knows. p. 241. l. 5. for pretended r. supposititious. 244. l. 36. r. Defamatory Libels. p. 256. l. 35. for though, r. thought. p. 259. l. 7. from bot. after is, for to the Churches of Alexandria. r. produced. ibid. l. 6. after third, add, is to the Churches of Alexandria. p. 94. The Sentence As if a Belief—should have been placed in the Margin against believed to be the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ. p. 117. The Sentence Mr. Du pin—should have been against these Words, in the next Line, Other Criticks of his Way.

FINIS.

ADVERTISEMENT.

THE French Copy of this Book is ſo very uncorrectly Printed, that thoſe who took Care of this Tranſlation, found it neceſſary in great Numbers of Places to examine it by thoſe Original Books which were quoted or epitomized: So that though very many Faults were amended in the Body of this Tranſlation, yet upon a Review of the Work ſince it came from the Preſs, ſeveral others were obſerved, which are here ſet by themſelves, leſt they ſhould be imputed to the Printer's Careleſſneſs.

ERRATA in the French Text.

PAge 4. col. 1. line 6. from bot. read B. 1. C. 12 col. 2. l. 2. r. C. 17. p. 10. l. ult. for 13. r. 15. p. 11. l. 4. r. Hupperus. p. 21. l. 3. r. B. VIII. c. 1. ibid. col. 2. l. 3. r. Theodoret. B. 1. c. 7. p. 27. l. 30. dele and Theodoret. p. 33. col. 1. l. 4. r. τῆς Ἐυσίου. p. 35. col. 2. l. 6. r. c. 21. for c. 17. and l. 7. r. c. 23. for c. 14. p. 51. l. 18. from bot. r. B. 1. c. 5. p. 63. l. 4. from bot. for 6. r. 16. p. 70. l. 40. for Ariminum and Ancyra, r. Ariminum and Seleucia. ibid. l. 17. from bot. r. exhorts the Weſtern. p. 85. l. 4. from bot. r. compoſed by Potamius and Subſcribed by Oſius. p. 100. l. 15. r. ch. 15. of B. IV. p. 102. Nazianzen's Words end at Admiration of all Mankind. p. 107. l. 21. r. Euſtathius of Sebaſtea. ibid. col. 1. l. 1. r. B. II. c. 38. l. 2. r. B. 4. c. 20. p. 145. l. 22. from bot. r. ch. 15. B. III. p. 183. l. 24. from bot. r. Margunius. p. 221. col. 1. l. 2 dele p. 824. p. 223. l. 8. from bot. for 383. r. 388. p. 233. l. 16. for 1606. r. 1506. p. 237. and p. 239. for Aëtius r. Aërius. p. 250. l. 33. r. B. I. for B. 3. p. 256. for Eduſſa r. Emiſa. p. 258, 259. for Servatus of Tongres, r. Servatio.

Thoſe likewiſe who are acquainted with the French Language, know what a Liberty the French Writers take in altering of Proper Names, and in bringing them to the Genius of their own Tongue: For which Reaſon they will eaſily pardon ſome Miſtakes of that kind in ſo long and various a Work as this. However, leſt any one ſhould think that this has been neglected, which might occaſion Confuſion, when the ſame Perſons Names otherwiſe turned occur in other Books, the following Catalogue was drawn up; in which thoſe Names to which no Page is ſet, are ſeveral times to be met with, whereas the others are hardly ever miſtaken any where elſe. Boſtria (p. 9.) for Boſtra. Eucherus (p. 24.) for Eucherius. Zoſinus (p. 27) for Zoſimus. Eudoxus for Eudoxius. Cotelierius for Cotelerius. Vurimadus for Varimadus. Tapſa for Tapſus. Emeſa for Emiſa. Rhebadius (p. 50) for Phebadius. Damaſcus (p. 33.) for Damaſus. Docus (p. 51.) for Docius. Elpidus and Elpides for Elpidius. Poëmius (p. 135.) for Poëmenius. Narſetes for Narſes. Logothera (p. 158.) for Logothera. Fumanus for Fumancellus. Doaza (p. 169.) for Doara. Florus Magiſter (p. 205.) not to be divided. Brughem (p. 233.) for Beughem. Marcina (p. 179.) for Macrina.

CORRIGENDA.

PAge 3. line 22. read Euphration. l. 27. dele of. p. 5. l. 43. for with r. which. p. 7. l. 24. for formerly r. formally. p. 9. l. 23. dele C. p. 10. l. 1. r. Offices for Officers. l. 31. for reviſed r. reprinted. ibid. l. 5. from bot. for Four r. Fourteen. p. 13. l. 29. for the, r. their. p. 17. l. 28. r. Clergy. p. 19. l. 37. for as it plainly appears, r. he declaring himſelf openly. p. 22. b. l. 8. r. ſuffered Paulinus to have been. p. 24. col. 2. l. 7. for S. Auſtin, r. S. Juſtin. p. 26. l. 18. dele not. p. 27. l. 14. from bot. for the beſt, r. a Maſterpiece. p. 33. l. 12. r. ſo that. p. 36. l. 2. r. Frenchman. p. 37. l. 16. for the Act, r. Action. p. 39. l. 33. r. Retractation. p. 41. l. 9. before goes, r. he. p. 44. l. 33. dele ſo that. p. 46. l. 48. r. do not mean. p. 52. l. 28. for who Heracleus, r. which Heraclea. p. 53. col. 1. l. 8. r. by the latter, for the laſt by. p. 63. l. 35. for two Volumes, r. 2d. Volume. p. 65. l. 18. from bot. for viz. r. Vir. p. 68. l. 3. r. perception. p. 73. col. 2. after l. 1. add 459. To Vincentius of Capua. p. 82. l. 8. for Doctrine r. Doctor. p. 87. l. 32. for ſince St. Jerom's, r. in St. Jerom's p. 100, b. l. 6. r. but it was. p. 107. col. 1. l. ult. r. of the Words. p. 108 col. 1. l. 8. r. wrote ſome. p. 116. l. 8. for Averſation r. Averſion. p. 122. l. 44. r. 1672. [in Octavo; his Poems. l. 45. dele in Octavo. p. 135. l. 4. r. pretended for little. 136. l. 39. r. his Carriage deſerved. p. 146. l. 20. r. at Laciza. p. 154. l. 10. for honeſt, r. decent. p. 170. l. 9. for 41*ſt.* r. 32*d.* ibid. l. 40. for of r. and. and for and r. of. p. 171. l. 28. r. his Cuſtom. p. 173. l. 2. for likeneſs r. Lightneſs. ibid. l. 15. from bot. for Hermetical. r. Eremetical. p. 190. l. 18. for Provocation r. Vocation. p. 193. l. 11. Marg. Note from bot. dele. p. 198. l. 31. r. Sozomen commends him. p. 215. l. 11. from bot. for it is, r. is it. p. 222. col. 2. for Lieutenancy r. Vicariate twice. 238. l. 10. from bot. Marg. Note. for ſhe knows, r. he knows. p. 241. l. 5. for pretended r. ſuppoſititious. 244. l. 36. r. Defamatory Libels. p. 256. l. 35. for though, r. thought. p. 259. l. 7. from bot. after is, for to the Churches of Alexandria. r. produced. ibid. l. 6. after third, add, is to the Churches of Alexandria. p. 94. The Sentence As if a Belief—ſhould have been placed in the Margin againſt believed to be the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt. p. 117. The Sentence Mr. Du pin—ſhould have been againſt theſe Words, in the next Line, Other Criticks of his Way.

FINIS.

A NEW

HISTORY

OF

Eccleſiaſtical Writers:

Containing an ACCOUNT

Of the LIVES and WRITINGS of the

PRIMITIVE FATHERS;

A

Judicious Abridgment

AND

A Catalogue of all their WORKS;

WITH

Cenſures Determining the GENUINE and SPURIOUS:

AND A

Judgment upon their Style and Doctrine:

Alſo their various Editions.

Together with

A Compendious Hiſtory of the COUNCILS.

Written in FRENCH

By Lewis Ellies du PIN, Doctor of the SORBON.

VOLUME the THIRD,

Containing the AUTHORS that Flouriſhed in the Beginning of the FIFTH CENTURY.

LONDON,

Printed by J. H. for Abel Swall and Tim. Childe, at the Unicorn at the Weſt-End of St. Paul's Church-yard. MDCXCIII.

1693

UMI

PREFACE.

SINCE the Publication of the former Volumes of this Bibliotheca in our Language, we have had an account, That the Author was cenſured for it at Paris: It was reaſonable enough to expect, that ſome notice would be taken of that great freedom, with which he ſo induſtriouſly aſſerts the Privileges of National Churches, againſt the Pretenſions of the Court of Rome; eſpecially if ever the French King ſhould command thoſe of his Clergy, who aſſiſted in the General Aſſembly in 1682. to make ſuch Submiſſions as the Court of Rome would accept of. The great care which M. Du Pin has taken to get full Approbations from ſeveral Doctors of the Sorbonne, to every Volume, ſeem'd ſufficient to ſecure him from any ignominious Cenſures which he might have been in danger of at home; but when a Man meets with Enemies upon other Accounts, they will fall upon him for thoſe things which at any other time would not have been regarded.

It is commonly ſaid, That the firſt beginning of M. Du Pin's Misfortune, proceeded from a private Quarrel of the Biſhop of Meaux's, who was angry with him for publiſhing a Tranſlation of the Pſalms, when himſelf had publiſh'd another not long before This was interpreted to be a Trial of Skill in an inferior Presbyter, who preſumed to conteſt with ſo great a Biſhop, that had ſo long been famous for his skill in Writing: It touch'd M. de Meaux the more ſenſibly, becauſe M. Du Pin is ſaid to have corrected ſeveral Things in his Tranſlation, wherein the Biſhop was miſtaken. Therefore, ſince he could take no hold of that, without expoſing himſelf, which he would not run the hazard of, he collected ſeveral bold Expreſſions in M. Du Pin's Bibliotheca, and exhibited an Accuſation of Hereſie againſt him to the Arch-biſhop of Paris, who accordingly proceeded upon it.

This Accuſation was ſeconded by the Pope's Nuncio, who concerned himſelf ſo far in this Matter, that M. Du Pin thought it neceſſary to yield to his Dioceſan, who oblig'd him to retract ſeveral Propoſitions, and to mollifie others that were thought too hard, and to ſubmit his Book entirely to the Arch-biſhop's Mercy. How great that was, appears by the Arch-biſhop's Condemnation and Cenſure of M. Du Pin's Bibliotheca, printed at Paris, with M. Du Pin's Retractation annex'd to it. I have not been able to procure the Condemnation it ſelf, but the Author of the Hiſtoire des Ouvrages des Scavans, has printed an Extract out of it in his laſt Volume, which ſays, That the printed Cenſure condemns M. Du Pin's Bibliotheca, becauſe it contains, "Several Propoſitions that are falſe, raſh, ſcandalous, capable of giving offence to "pious Ears, tending to weaken the Arguments that are brought from Tra-"dition for the Authority of the Canonical Books, and of ſeveral Articles of Faith, "injurious to General Councils and the Apoſtolick See, erroneous and leading to "Hereſie; and, therefore, it forbids all Perſons to read it, or to keep it by them.

This Ordonnance of the Arch-biſhop of Paris was ſeconded by an Order of the Parliament of Paris, bearing date April 25. 1693. which ſays, "That the Gens "de Roy acquainted the Court, that they thought it was their Duty to inform them, "That the Arch-biſhop of Paris had lately condemned a Book, Entituled, A new "Bibliotheca of Eccleſiaſtical Authors, written by M. Ellies Du Pin, Doctor in Divinity "of the Faculty of Paris, becauſe it contain'd Propoſitions contrary to ſound Do-

" trine: That the cognizance of every thing that relates to the Faith belonging " to the Church, and the decision of those Matters to the Bishops within their re- " spective Dioceses, the suppression of the Books which they condemn, and the " afflictive Punishment of those who persist in Opinions which have been censured by " the Bishops, belong to the Kings Officers, and principally to the Court, the De- " positary of Sovereign Justice: That they have nothing to object against the Au- " thor of this Book, because he has submitted himself to the Judgment of his Bishop, " and because it appears by a Writing, which he has published, That he has retra- " cted some of those Propositions which he had advanced, and explain'd the rest in " such a manner as frees them from all suspicion of Error: That they are willing to " believe, That the Faults which M. Ellies Du Pin fell into, and which deserv'd the " Censure pronounced against him, proceeded rather from the Greatness of the " Work that he undertook, than from any formed Design of introducing new Opi- " nions; and, besides, that there is a great deal of Learning in his Books: That " they were oblig'd to take notice to the Court, upon this occasion, of the Care, " the Application and Vigilance, which the Arch-bishop of Paris shews to preserve " sound Doctrine in his Dioceses, and to stifle every thing, in the beginning, which " may disturb the Peace and Tranquillity of the Church. And, therefore, they omitted " nothing in those Stations in which they had the Honour to be placed, that could " second such good Designs; and this it was that obliged them to demand of the " Court, That those Books that the Arch-bishop had condemned, might be suppres- " sed; and that all Booksellers should be forbidden to sell them, till they should be " corrected according to the Writing of the said Du Pin, annex'd to the Arch-bi- " shop's Censure, and that the Corrections should be approved by him the said " Arch-bishop. The Gens de Roy withdrawing, the Court took the Matter into " Deliberation, and it was Resolved, That all Booksellers and others, should be com- " manded not to sell or keep by them any Copies of the said Books, which have " hitherto been printed; and it was Ordered, That they should be brought forth- " with into the Greffe of the said Court there to be suppressed; with very expres " Prohibitions to all Persons to Reprint that Book in any manner whatsoever for the " time to come, without the Advice and Consent of the Arch-bishop of Paris. So far the printed Extract out of the Register of the Parliament of Paris.

If we may judge of all those things which M. Du Pin has retracted or mollified by that Specimen in the Histoire des Ouvrages des Scavans, the Proceedings against him have been spiteful and malicious, rather to satisfie those particular Persons who are concerned to see his Credit lessened, than because he really deserv'd so rough a Treatment. He acknowleges, for instance, That the Title of Mother of God, given to the blessed Virgin, is not only an innocent Expression, but was always consecrated to her, and ought to be used; That when he said, That there are no positive Authorities for Purgatory in the Writings of the Fathers of the 3 first Centuries, he expressed himself too generally; That when he says, That S. Cyprian was the first that spoke very clearly of the necessity of the Grace of Jesus Christ, he did not pretend to say, That the Fathers did not speak clearly concerning it, before him; That when he said, That General Councils called about Matters of Faith, have seldom given Peace to the Church, he did not mean, That Councils do not bring Peace, or that they ever take the wrong side: These are all the Doctrinal Retractations which the Author of the above-mentioned Extract has taken notice of; and then adds, That his Explications are often very much forced.

It is evident enough, from this short Specimen, That his Accusers had no Inclination to spare him, but would make him smart for all that Liberty with which he made his Abridgments, and passed his Censures upon the Writings of the ancientest Fathers of the Church. In Justice, they ought also to have proceeded against those Doctors of the Sorbonne who gave the Approbations, that are prefixed to the several Volumes, wherein they commend the Faithfulness and Judiciousness of his Extracts, and propose his Work as extreamly useful to all sorts of Men: These Doctors certainly knew very well what they did; they knew what use Protestants would make of this Work and of their Approbations; yet this did not, it seems, deter them from giving ſuch Characters as no Man could give who was not himſelf in earneſt, or at leaſt would have others believe him to be ſo: Accordingly the firſt Volume, againſt which there has been the greateſt Clamour, was not animadverted upon for near ſix Years.

ter

It appears by the Order of the Parliament, That that Court acted only ex Officio, and that that Illuſtrious Body has a great value for M. Du Pin. Otherwiſe the Gens de Roy would not have made ſuch Excuſes for a Man, upon whoſe Writings they are then paſſing Cenſure; but the Pope's Nuncio is at preſent too great a Man to be deny'd ſatisfaction, when he may be gratified with ſo ſmall a Sacrifice; and it is probable, That the Arch-biſhop of Paris, who went along with his Maſter in the greateſt Oppoſitions which he made to Pope Innocent XI. was willing to embrace this Opportunity to ſhew the Pope how zealouſly he is concerned for the Intereſts of the See of Rome; eſpecially, when he can gratifie a private Revenge at the ſame time.

In the Second Edition of the Firſt Volume of M. Du Pin's Bibliotheca, when he gives an Account of the Condemnation of Paulus Samoſatenus by the Council of Antioch, he has this Expreſſion, "Enfin apres l'avoir accuſe de tous les Vices "Ordinaires aux Eveques des grands Sieges, ils diſent qu'ils l'ont condamne principalement a Paris qu'il renouvelloit l' Erreur d' Artemas. In ſhort, after they have accuſed him of all thoſe Vices that are ordinary in Biſhops of great Sees, they ſay they condemned him, principally at Paris, becauſe he revived the Error of Artemas. Theſe Words, at Paris, make the latter part of the Period non-ſenſe; and could ſignify nothing to the Author's Purpoſe if they had been Senſe: it ſhould be read, principalement parce qu'il renouvelloit; principally becauſe he revived: And ſo it is in the Engliſh (edit. 1. p. 193. edit. 2. p. 173.) This unfortunate Erratum coming juſt after a very ſevere Character of Paulus Samoſatenus, out of Euſebius, put every body upon making a Parallel between this Ancient Biſhop of Antioch and the preſent Archbiſhop of Paris: And if the Reports that are ſpread againſt this Archbiſhop are true, the Compariſon was too juſt to be overlooked; and it is ſaid at Paris, That this Sentence, thus faultily printed in the ſecond Edition, did M. Du Pin a great deal of Miſchief.

A Cenſure thus carried on, will be ſo little to our Author's Diſadvantage, that few Perſons will think the worſe of this Book upon that account; it is his Misfortune that he lives in a Country where he had no other way to ſave his Liberty, and perhaps his Life, but by yielding to the Storm: And, according to the Principles of his Religion, he was bound to ſubmit to his Dioceſan. But this will leſſen the Authority of any Books that M. du Pin may hereafter print upon Eccleſiaſtical Matters, becauſe Fear of giving Offence will make him extreamly cautious, and he will dread a ſevere Inquiſition that may ſet upon every thing which he ſhall write.

Thoſe who are unacquainted with Antiquity will be hereby further confirmed in their Opinion, of the Impartiality of our Author, in his Abridgment of the Writings of theſe Ancient Doctors of the Church, when they ſee how ſeverely he has been dealt withal upon that account: Otherwiſe it is very probable that ſome might think him too favourable in his Accounts of Monkery, Invocation of Saints and ſome other Superſtitions which aroſe very early, and which were a means of introducing, in a courſe of Ages, ſuch enormous Abuſes into the Church; but tho' ſome Errors have a more ancient Original than is commonly believed, yet that ought not to be wondred at by any Man, who believes that the Church was never Infallible ſince the Apoſtle's Days. Still, as we read downwards, we ſhall ſee how that Primitive Simplicity, which adorn'd the Profeſſion of the firſt Chriſtians, who were almoſt always under Fear of Perſecution, leſſened and wore away. Thoſe who were ſenſible of the decay of the Primitive Zeal, ſought to retrieve it by placing great Merit in the practice of monaſtical Auſterities, whereby they hoped to obtain that Reward which was believ'd to be peculiarly reſerved for thoſe who laid down their Lives for the Name of Chriſt: This put them upon all thoſe Opinions that tended to mortify, not only forbidden Luſts, but alſo the allowed Appetites of Human Nature, which the Chriſtian Religion intended to regulate, and not to remove. And when thoſe who could not be Martyrs, ſaw what Honours were paid to thoſe who had formerly ſuffered for the Truth, it raiſed raiſed in them an Emulation to do ſomething for the ſake of Jeſus Chriſt, that ſhould be more diſagreeable to Fleſh and Blood than Death itſelf. This, I believe, is the moſt probable Reaſon of that great Ardour wherewith ſo very many Perſons bound themſelves under Vows to embrace a Monaſtical Life, in the fourth and fifth Ages of the Church. The firſt Monks were ſome Ægyptians, who in the tenth Perſecution fled into the Deſerts of Thebais; there they accuſtomed themſelves to Retirement, and Uſe taught them to reliſh the Satisfactions of a Contemplative ſtate: When the Storm was over, they returned home, and eaſily perſwaded others, who had then, as they thought, no other way of ſhewing their Zeal for Jeſus Chriſt, to embrace this auſtere Courſe of Life. In ſuch warm Climates this was not ſo extraordinarily difficult: Thoſe Eaſtern People could live upon a very little, better than other Men; ſo that the terrible Mortifications, mentioned in the oldeſt Aſcetical Books, were not ſo impracticable, as we, at this Diſtance of Place and Time may be apt to think them. The Monk in Sulpicius Severus, who heard Poſthumianus give an account of the Abſtinences of the Eaſtern Monks, cries out, Edacitas in Græcis Gula eſt, in Gallis natura. Exceſſive Eating is Luxury in a Greek, it is Nature in a Gaule: And though one can hardly believe all that Poſthumianus there relates, of the Abſtinence of the Monks of Nitria and Cyrene, yet it is moſt certain that they put a mighty Force upon Nature, ſuch a one as nothing but the modern Practices of ſome of the Mahometan Derviſes could make us believe to be poſſible.

But though the Honours paid to Martyrs, which gave Riſe to an Opinion, That they could intercede for us in Heaven, or at leaſt hear our Prayers, together with the Love which moſt Men then ſhewed for a ſingle and a retired Life, may ſeem too exceſſive, yet the Opinions and Practices of theſe Ages were, generally ſpeaking, very venerable. One ſees a great and a ſerious concern for the Truths of the Goſpel in almoſt all their Writings; one ſees a ſincere Reſpect paid by Men of all Parties, to the Cenſures of the Church, and to the Perſons of thoſe with whom they were entruſted. They always diſtinguiſhed between the Faults of Men and their Character and Employment, and when they puniſhed the one, they took care not to caſt a Diſreſpect upon the other; by which means they preſerved a real Veneration for Holy Things in their Minds, though their Diviſions run as high, and were as eagerly managed as ever they have been ſince. This is not the only Age wherein Men have met with Temptations, and have ſhewn their Frailty, by being too weak to withſtand them; ſo that an Acquaintance with the Opinions and Practices of theſe earlier Ages, before a general Corruption had infected the Church, will be of great Uſe to ſuch as value Religion and Godlineſs for their own ſakes, when it ſuggeſts ſuch Thoughts as can only be effectual to reſtore that Senſe of Piety and Charity which is ſo generally loſt amongus.

July 25.
1693.

W. W.

ERRATA.

PAge 96. line 10. from bottom. read 140*th*, ibid. l. ult. r. that Hoſhaana, p 97. l. 22. r. againſt Jovinian, p. 99. l. 3. r. altered in it, p. 100. l. 15. from bot. for ſpeaking. r. when he ſpeaks, p. 112. l. 12. r. publiſhed five, ibid. l. 25. for Sons of Men. r. Sons of God, p. 192. l. 6. from bot. del. being, p. 204 l. ult. for yea. r. yet. p. 206. l. 5. r. working by Love, ibid. l. 18. from bot. for ſuſpicious. r. ſuſpected, l. ult. r. Opinator, p. 208. l. 28. r. Zozimus's, l. 29. r. for their making default, p. 215. l. 16. r. he maintains, p. 217. l. 2. r. This Practice is forbidden in very ſtrong Terms, and upon, p. 222. l. 20. for retrait. r. re-examine, p. 226. l. 16. for Parents. r. Relations.

Proper Names miſtaken.

Ruſinus for Ruffinus, Zoſimus for Zozimus, Province of Byzacena for Provincia Byzacena. paſſim. S. Maura (p. 106.) for S. Maurus. Lodevæ (p. 210.) for Lodeve.

CONTENTS of the Third Volume.

Of the Lives and Writings of the Eccleſiaſtical Authors that Flouriſhed in the Beginning of the Fifth Century, viz.

Evagrius Ponticus 1
Mark the Hermit 2
Simplicianus Biſhop of Milan 3
Vigilius Biſhop of Trent 3
Prudentius 4
Diadochus Biſhop of Photice 5
Audentius 5
Severus Endelechius 5
Flavianus, Presbyter of Antioch 6
St. John Chryſoſtom 6
Antiochus and Severianus 52
Aſterius of Amaſea 53
Pope Anaſtaſius I. 58
Chromacius Biſhop of Aquileia 58
Gaudentius Biſhop of Breſcia 59
John Biſhop of Jeruſalem 61
Theophilus Biſhop of Alexandria 62
Theodorus Biſh. of Mopſueſtia 64
Palladius 66
Pope Innocent I. 67
St. Jerom 73
Rufinus Toranius 107
Sophronius 111
Sulpicius Severus Ibid.
St. Paulinus 113
Pelagius the Monk 119
Cœleſtius, Diſciple of Pelagius 120
Niceas 120
Olympius 120
Bachiarius 121
Sabbatius 121
Iſaac 121
Paulus Oroſius 122
Lucian, Avitus, Evodius and Severus 122
Marcellus Memorialis 123
Euſebius 123
Urſinus, Monk 123
Macarius, Monk 123
Heliodorus, Presbyter of Antioch 123
Paul 123
Helvidius and Vigilantius, Hereticks 124
St. Auguſtin 125
The firſt Vol. of his Works 126
The ſecond Volume 135
The third Volume 169
The fourth Volume 175
The fifth Volume 175
The ſixth Volume 176
The ſeventh Volume 187
The eighth Volume 191
The ninth Volume 195
The tenth Volume 200
Pope Zoſimus 207
Pope Boniface I. 210
Syneſius Biſhop of Ptolemais 211
Polychronius. 215

The COUNCILS held between the Beginning of the Fifth Century, and the Year 430.

Canons of a Roman Synod believed to be held under Pope Innocent I. 216
Council of Milevis. 217
Councils held by S. Chryſoſtom at Conſtantinople, and at Epheſus in 400, and 401. 217 Council ad Quercum, in the Suburbs of Chalcedon, in 403. Ibid.
Council of Carthage in the Year 403. 218
Council of Carthage, in the Year 404. 218
Council of Carthage, in the Year 405. 218
Council of Carthage, in the Year 407. 218
Two Councils of Carthage, in the Year 408. 219
Council of Carthage, in the Year 409. 219
Council of Carthage, in the Year 410. Ibid.
Council of Ptolemais, in the Year 411. 220
Conference of Carthage, in the Year 411. Ibid.
Council of Cirta, or Zerta, in the Year 412. 221
Firſt Council of Carthage, againſt Cœleſtius, in the Year 412. Ibid.
Conference of Jeruſalem, in the Year 415. Ibid
Council of Dioſpolis, in the Year 418. Ibid
Second Council of Carthage, againſt Cœleſtius and Pelagius. Council of Milevis againſt the ſame, in the Year 416. 222
Council of Carthage, held about the End of the Year 417. Ibid.
Council of Carthage, in the Year 418. Ibid.
Council of Tella or Zella, and ſome other Councils in Africa, in the Year 418. 224
Councils of Carthage, concerning the Cauſe of Apiarius, 418, and 419. Ibid.
Council of Ravenna. 227
Council of Carthage, in the Year 420. 228
Council of Conſtantinople, in the Year 426. ibid
Council of Carthage, againſt Leporius. ibid
Council of Conſtantinople, in the Year 428. ibid

An

An Alphabetical Table of the Names of the Authors mentioned in this Volume.

Anaſtaſius 58
Antiochus 52
Aſterius 53
Audentius 5
S. Auguſtin 125
Avitus 122
Bachiarius 121
Boniface 210
Cœleſtius 120
Chromacius 58
S. John Chryſoſtom 6
Diadochus 5
Endelechius Severus 5
Evagrius 1
Evodius 122
Euſebius 123
Flavianus 6
Gaudentius 59
Heliodorus 123
Helvidius 124
S. John of Jeruſalem 61
S Jerom 73
Innocent I. 67
Iſaac 121
Lucian 122
Mark 2
Marcellus Memorialis 123
Macarius 123
Niceas 120
Olympius 120
Oroſius 122
Palladius 66
Prudentius 4
Paulus 123
Paulinus 113
Pelagius 119
Polychronius 215
Rufinus 107
Sabbatius 121
Severianus 52
Simplicianus 3
Severus 122
Sophronius 111
Sulpicius Severus Ibid.
Syneſius 211
Theodorus 64
Theophilus 62
Vigilantius 124
Vigilius 3
Urſinus 123
Zoſimus 207

An Alphabetical Table of the Councils held, from the Year 400, to the Year 430.

Councils of Conſtantinople, in the Year 400, and 401. 217
Council of Carthage, in 403. 218
At Carthage, in 404. Ibid.
The ſame, in 405. Ibid.
The ſame, in 407. Ibid.
The ſame, in 408. 219
The ſame, in 409. Ibid.
The ſame, in 410. Ibid.
Conference of Carthage, in 411. 220
Council of Carthage againſt Cœleſtius, in 412. 221
Second Council againſt the ſame, in 416. 222
Council of Carthage, in 417. Ibid.
Council of Carthage, in 418. Ibid.
Councils of Carthage, in 418, and 419, concerning the Cauſe of Apiarius 224
Council of Carthage, in 420. 282
Council in the Suburbs of Chalcedon againſt S. Chryſoſtom, in 403. 217
Council of Conſtantinople, in 426. 228
Council of Carthage, in 427. ibid
Council of Conſtantinople, in 426.
Council of Carthage, in 427.
Council of Conſtantinople, in 428. 228
Council of Dioſpolis, in 418. 221
Council of Epheſus, in 400, and 401.
Conference of Jeruſalem, in 415. 221
Council of Milevis, in 402. 217
The ſame againſt Cœleſtius and Pelagius, in 416 222
Council of Ptolemais, in 411. 220
Roman Synod under Innocent I. in 430. 216
Council of Ravenna, in 419.
Council of Zirta, in 412. 221
Council of Zella, in 418. 224

BIBLIOTHECA PATRUM:

OR, A

NEW HISTORY

OF

Eccleſiaſtical Writers.

TOME III. PART I.

CONTAINING

An Account of the LIVES and WRITINGS of the Primitive FATHERS, that Flouriſhed in the Beginning of the Fifth Century of Chriſtianity, with Cenſures upon all their BOOKS, determining which are Genuine, and which Spurious.

EVAGRIUS PONTICUS.

Evagrius Ponticus.

Evagrius Ponticus, a Diſciple of the Macarii (not Evagrius of Antioch, mentioned in the Second Volume, nor Evagrius Scholaſticus) was ordained Deacon of Conſtantinople by S. Gregory Nazianzen. He Sided with the Defenders of Origen, and left Conſtantinople; but returned thither in the Year 379, to meet Melanius, and there took upon him the Habit of a Monk. From thence he retired into the Solitudes of Nitria, where he ſpent the reſt of his Life untill about the Year 406. Socrates affirms that he wrote very uſefull Books: "One, ſaith he, is intituled, The Monk, or, Of an Active Life; the Other, The Gnoſtick; i. e. Of a Contemplative Life, or for Enlightned Men. This Book is divided into Fifty "Chapters. The Third is intituled Antirrheticus, which is a Collection of Paſſages out of Scripture againſt the Temptations of the Devil; divided into eight Parts, according to eight Sorts "of Thoughts. He wrote, beſides Six hundred Gnoſtick Problems, Two Books of Sentences: "Whereof one is Addreſſed to the Cœnobites, and the other to a Virgin. Whoſoever reads thoſe "Books, will eaſily ſee their Worth, and find them to be worthy of admiration. Palladius, Evagrius's Diſciple, in the 86*th*. Chapter of his Monaſtick Hiſtory, ſpeaks much in his Commendation, and obſerves that his Writings were either Books of Piety, or Monaſtical, or Polemical Books; and this agrees with what Socrates ſaid before. S. Jerom in his Second Book againſt Pelagius, ſays, That he wrote to Virgins, to Monks, and to Melanius, and that he compoſed a Treatiſe of Apathy, i.e. Of freedom from Paſſion; and that the Books of this Author were known in the Weſt as well as in the Eaſt, becauſe ſome of them had been Tranſlated by Ruffinus his Diſciple. Gennadius mentions this Author in his Catalogue of Eccleſiaſtical Writers; and ſays, That he had Tranſlated into Latin Evagrius's Treatiſe againſt the Eight principal Temptations, One hundred Sentences for the Anchorets, Fifty for learned Men, and ſome other Sentences that were ſomething obſcure: He ſpeaks alſo of certain Rules dedicated to the Monks and Nuns. There is a Book commonly aſcribed to this Author, entituled, The Lives of the Fathers; and ſome have believed that Gennadius ſaid ſo: but they miſunderſtood him; for he doth not ſay that Evagrius was the Author of thoſe Lives, but that the Book intituled, The Lives of the Fathers, did make mention of Evagrius as a learned and pious Man: and accordingly we find in the 27*th*. Chapter of the Second Book of thoſe Lives, that Evagrius is mentioned, and his Learning and Piety are commended; whereas it is not likely that Evagrius would have commended himſelf.

Evagrius Ponticus.

We have ſome Fragments of this Author's Works, and ſeveral of his Sentences in the Code of the Monaſtick Rules, in the Lives and Apophthegms of the Fathers, in the Aſcetick Treaſure, publiſhed by Pouſſin, and particularly amongſt the Works of S. Nilus, where there are ſeveral of Evagrius's Writings; whether S. Nilus quoted them, or whether it happened by the Additions of Tranſcribers, is uncertain. Socrates, Chap. 7. of the Third Book of his Hiſtory, cites a paſſage of Evagrius, taken out of his Gnoſtical Treatiſe, where it is ſaid, That it is impoſſible to define the Divinity, and to expound the Trinity. The ſame Author afterwards cites two paſſages of Evagrius in the 23d. Chapter of the 4th. Book of his Hiſtory; whereof one is taken out of the Gnoſtical Book, and the other out of the Practical Book. Maximus, S. John Damaſcene and Antony, quote many Sentences of this Author, which are found amongſt the Works of S. Nilus.

Cotelerius in the Third Volume of his Monuments of the Greek Church, Page 68, &c. hath given us part both of the Gnoſtical and of the Practical Books of Evagrius, which he took out of two Greek Manuſcripts, and out of Authors who quoted thoſe Diſcourſes. They begin with a Letter to Anatolius, which is as a Preface to the whole Work of the two Books: This Preface is followed by 71 Chapters or Sentences drawn from the Gnoſtical Book, which are written without Order, and confounded one with another: There is more Order in the 100 Chapters drawn from the Practical Book. The following Treatiſe contains eleven Inſtructions for the Monks. And this is what Cotelerius could find of the Works of Evagrius.

His Antirrhetical Treatiſe, or of the Eight Evil Thoughts, is equally imperfect, as we have it: For that which Bigotius hath given in Greek, the Tranſlation whereof was found in S. John Damaſcene, and in the Bibliotheca Patrum, before the Book of S. Nilus of the Eight Vices, is not the intire Treatiſe of Evagrius, but only an Epitome containing the Titles, and the Summ of thoſe Eight Chapters, as Bigotius judiciouſly obſerves, and may be proved by the Teſtimony of Socrates; who aſſures us, That that Book of Evagrius contained ſeveral paſſages of Scripture, whereas there is not one in this.

Some alſo aſcribe to Evagrius the Hiſtory of an Hermite called Pacon, related in Palladius, Chap. 29. and to be found amongſt the Works of S. Nilus, publiſhed by Suarez at Rome, who obſerves that this Treatiſe was aſcribed to Evagrius in his Manuſcript, as well as the following, which is a Dogmatical Letter concerning the Trinity; the Author whereof refutes the Errors both of the Arians and Macedonians. This Letter belongs to Evagrius, who writ it while he was at Conſtantinople with S. Gregory Nazianzen.

It is very probable alſo, that the Sentences or Maxims which are from Page 543, to 575, of the Writings attributed to S. Nilus, are written by Evagrius, as Holſtenius confeſſes, upon the Authority of Manuſcripts. The Greek Manuſcripts have quoted ſome of them under his Name, and they have great relation to thoſe which Gennadius ſpeaks of. To theſe muſt be added thoſe which we find under the Name of Evagrius, at the latter end of the Firſt Volume of the Bibliotheca Patrum, in Greek and Latin, of the Year 1624; and a ſmall Treatiſe of the Names of God, which is very obſcure, publiſhed by Cotelerius in the Second Volume of his Monuments of the Greek Church, p. 116.

MARK.

Mark.

MARK the Hermite, of whom we are to ſpeak in this place, lived about the end of the Fourth Century; Palladius and Sozomen ſpeak of him as of a very holy Man. He compoſed ſome Aſcetical Treatiſes, which have been attributed by Bellarmine and ſome others to one Mark, who lived under Leo the Emperour, in the Ninth Century: But Photius having made a very exact Extract of thoſe Treatiſes, it is impoſſible they ſhould be of a Man that lived ſince him; And therefore they muſt be aſcribed to that Mark who lived about the latter end of the Fourth Century. This is what he ſaith of it in the Two hundredth Volume. "I have read Eight "Books of Mark the Monk, whereof the Firſt is intituled, Of the Spiritual Life; it may be "profitable to thoſe who have undertaken to lead a Religious life, i.e. to be Monks as well as "the following; in which he ſhews, That they are deceived who think to be juſtified by their "Works; ſhewing, that this is a very dangerous Opinion. He adds to this Inſtruction whol-"ſome Precepts, that lead to a Spiritual life. The Third Book is of Repentance; his deſign here "is to ſhew, that this Vertue is of uſe at all times. This Book aims at the ſame end as the fore-"going, and the ſame uſe may be made of it. His Style is clear enough, becauſe he makes uſe "of common terms, and ſpeaks of things in general; but he wants the ſmoothneſs of Old A-"thens. If there be ſome darkneſs, it doth not proceed from the terms he uſeth, but from the "things he treateth of; which are of ſuch a nature, that it is eaſier to comprehend them by "practice than by diſcourſing. Wherefore you ſhall find the ſame obſcurity not only in the "Books now mentioned, but alſo in thoſe that follow, and in all the Books of thoſe that have "written of the Monaſtick life, and have diſcourſed of the Motions and Paſſions of the Soul, as "well as of the Actions which they produce; it being impoſſible to teach with Words thoſe things "that depend upon practice. The Fourth Book, by way of Queſtions and Anſwers, ſhews, "That by Baptiſm we have received not only the Pardon and Remiſſion of our Sins, but alſo

"the

" the Grace of the Holy Spirit; and many other Spiritual gifts. The Fifth is a kind of Con" ference of the Spirit with the Soul: whereby he proves, That we our selves are Authors of our " Sins, and that we ought to accuse no body else upon that account. The Sixth is in the form " of a Dialogue between Mark and an Advocate, who discourse of these following Subjects:
" That none is to seek revenge for an injury received, because the wrong we suffer is to be looked " upon as a punishment for our Sins; he adds, that it is difficult to please Men, and that Prayer " is to be preferred before any other labour. He concludes, by explaining wherein the Desires of " the Flesh consist. He treats of Fasting in the Seventh Book, that is not written by way of " Dialogue. The Eighth is directed to a Monk called Nicolas, treating of the ways of appea-
" sing of Anger, and of quenching of Lust. There is also a Ninth Book against the Melchisede-
" chians, wherein he spareth not his own Father who had been tainted with that Heresie. Those that would read usefull Books, will not lose their time in reading of this. The Order of these Books is not the same in all Copies; In some those are found last which we have named first. This Observation of Photius is verified by the Latin Edition of these Eight Books, which were published by Johannes Picus, President of the Inquests in the Parliament of Paris, and inserted into the Bibliotheca Patrum. The Four first are there in Photius's order; but the Fifth in his order is the last there; the Sixth is the last but one; and the Book concerning Fasting is immediately after that dedicated to Nicolas the Monk. That against the Melchisedechians is lost. This Author attributeth much to the Faith and Grace of Jesus Christ, and very little to the good Works and free Actions of Men, differing therein from most of the Ascetical Writers. He likewise ascribeth much to the vertue and efficacy of Baptism; and pretends, that it delivers us not only from Death, but also from Lust; and puts us in a condition of doing either good or evil: So that they who have received Baptism are as free either to good or evil as the first Man was. His Opinion is, That a perfect Christian is free from Temptations and from Passions; and maintains, that many of the Gospel-admonitions have the nature of Precepts; An ordinary excess of spiritual Men. In short, it cannot be denied that among many true Maxims, there may be some stretched, and contrary to Truth and right Reason: which is but too common in the most part of Books of a Spiritual Life, both Ancient and Modern. The Original Greek of these Homilies is not only among the MSS. of the King's Library, and in some others, as Oudin hath observed; but also in the First Volume of the Greek and Latin Bibliotheca Patrum, Printed at Paris 1624.

Mark.

I say nothing of another Mark, a Deacon of Gaza in Palestine, who is reckoned to be the Author of the Acts of S. Porphyrius of Gaza, related by Metaphrastes and by Surius; because I resolved not to ingage in writing any Account of the Acts of the Martyrs, being unwilling to lanch into a Sea where it is difficult to avoid being often Shipwrackt.

SIMPLICIANUS, Bishop of Milan.

SIMPLICIANUS, Bishop of Milan, Successor to S. Ambrose, exhorted S. Austin by his Letters to exercise his Parts, and apply himself to expound the Holy Scripture: So that he may be said to have been to S. Austin, what Ambrose was to Origen. We have several Expositions of hard places of Scripture which S. Austin dedicated to him. He also wrote a Letter, wherein he asked Questions, as if he had been to learn, and yet instructed by his questioning. This is what Gennadius observes of this Author. S. Ambrose writ several Letters to him; and we have two Letters of S. Austin, wherein he answered several Questions of Simplicianus, concerning some obscure Passages of the Holy Scripture. This Bishop held the See of Milan but a little while, for he died towards the latter end of the Year 400, or in the beginning of the Year 401.

Simplicianus, Bishop of Milan.

VIGILIUS of Trent.

THere were several of this Name (a). He that we speak of is the Bishop of Trent (b), who suffered Martyrdom under the Consulship of Stilichon, in the Year 400 or 405 of Jesus Christ, to whom S. Ambrose wrote a Letter, which is the 24th amongst his Letters. Gennadius affirmeth, Vigilius of Trent.

(a) There were several of this Name.] This is the ancientest. There was another of Africa, who writ upon the Revelations, mention'd by Cassiodorus in the 9th. Chap. of his Institutions. Gennadius, Chap. 51. speaketh of a Deacon called Vigilius, who wrote a Rule for the Monks. Vigilius, Bishop of Tapsus in Africa, famous for his Writings against Nestorius and Eutyches, is a different Person from all these. There was one Vigilius, the Seventh Bishop of Brescia after Philastrius. One Vigilius a Bishop subscribed in the Council of Agatha or Agde. But these Names cannot be taken one for the other, without mistaking the Chronology and History.

(b) Bishop of Trent.] It is certain that Vigilius, Bishop of Trent, lived at the latter end of the 4th. Century, because the 24th Letter of S. Ambrose is directed to him. Usuardus saith, that he suffered Martyrdom under the Consulate of Stilichon, who was Consul in 400 and 405. There is more probability that it was in 400, because in that very Year Sisinnius suffered Martyrdom.

Vigilius of Trent.

firmeth, that this Vigilius, Biſhop of Trent, wrote a Letter or ſmall Book in commendation of Martyrs, dedicated to Simplicianus; which contained the Acts of thoſe who ſuffered Martyrdom in his time by the Cruelty of the Barbarians. Surius mentions this Letter, May 23. And it is believed that that Simplicianus, to whom it is dedicated, is the Succeſſor of S. Ambroſe in the Church of Milan (c). There he gives an Account of the Martyrdom of Siſinnius and his Companions.

(c) 'Tis believ'd that that Simplicianus to whom it is dedicated, is the Succeſſor to S. Ambroſe in the Church of Milan.] This Conjecture of Miræus is indeed probable; this Letter is directed to one Simplicianus a Biſhop. He of Milan lived at that time; and Paulinus obſerves in the Life of S. Ambroſe, that the Reliques of Siſinnius were ſent to Milan. It is true that Gennadius having ſpoken of Simplicianus as of an Author and Biſhop known to him; and then, ſpeaking of Vigilius his Letter, he doth not ſay that it was directed to him, but only, ad quemdam Simplicianum, to one Simplician; which makes it doubtfull, Whether it was to the Biſhop of Milan that this Letter was directed. But perhaps Gennadius did not think upon it. However, Vigilius, Biſhop of Trent, both lived and wrote at the ſame time that Simplicianus was Biſhop of Milan.

PRUDENTIUS.

Prudentius.

Quintus Aurelius Prudentius Clemens was born in Saragoſſa, a City of Spain, in the Year 348 (a); and being called to the Bar, was afterwards made a Judge in two conſiderable Towns, and then promoted by Honorius the Emperor to a very honourable Office. But at the Age of 57 Years, he reſolved to mind the things of his Salvation, and to ſpend the reſt of his life in compoſing of Hymns to the praiſe of God, and the honour of the Saints; with ſome Poems againſt the Pagan Religion, and touching the Duties of Chriſtians. Theſe particulars of his Life are ſet forth by himſelf in a Preface to one of his Poems. The Catalogue of his Poetical Works, to the moſt whereof he gave Greek Titles, is as follows:

Pſychomachia, or The Combat of the Soul. There he deſcribes in Hexameter Verſe the Conflict of Vertue againſt Vice in the Soul of a Chriſtian; and particularly of Faith againſt Idolatry, of Chaſtity againſt Uncleanneſs, of Patience againſt Anger, of Humility againſt Pride, of Sobriety againſt Exceſs, of Liberality againſt Covetouſneſs, and of Concord againſt Diſſention.

Cathemerinon, or Poems concerning each days Duty; they contain ſeveral Odes or Songs about the moſt ordinary Exerciſes of Chriſtianity: As for example; Prayers and giving of Thanks at lying down and riſing up, before and after Meals, about Faſting, upon the Death of Kindred or Friends, of the Nativity of Chriſt, and upon the Epiphany.

After theſe Hymns come ſeveral others, entituled Περὶ στεφανῶν, or of Crowns, becauſe made in Commendation of Martyrs.

The following Poems regard ſeveral Points of the Chriſtian Religion, and are therefore entituled Apotheoſis, or Treatiſes upon the Divinity. In theſe he refuteth the Errors of the Heathens, of the Jews, Sabellians, Arians, and Apollinarians, and diſcourſes of the Nature of the Soul, of Original Sin, and of the Reſurrection.

Hamartigenia is a Treatiſe concerning the Original of Sin, againſt the Errors of Marcion.

The two Books againſt Symmachus oppoſe Idolatry. In the firſt is ſhewed the Original and Baſeneſs of falſe Deities; and there is an Account of the Converſion of the City of Rome. In the ſecond Petition which Symmachus preſented to the Emperors, to obtain the Re-eſtabliſhment of the Altar of Victory, and of the Service of the Gods, with the Ceremonies of the Pagan Religion, is anſwered.

The laſt of Prudentius his Works is an Abridgment of ſome Hiſtories of the Old and New Teſtament in Diſtichs. Gennadius ſpeaks of a Book written by Prudentius, called Dittochæon, i. e. Double food, wherein he had compriſed the Hiſtorical Part both of the Old and New Teſtament according to the Perſon's names. This Book is very like that we now ſpeak of, but only written in a looſer Style, and far from the beauty of his other Works. And whereas Prudentius calls the Dittochæon a conſiderable Book upon the Old and New Teſtament, this is a ſmall one

(a) In the Year 348.] He ſaith in the Preface to the Cathemerinon, that he was born under the Conſulſhip of Salia; for ſo we are to read and underſtand that place.

Oblitum veteris me Saliæ Conſulis arguens
Sub quo prima dies mihi.

Moſt Authors underſtood not the meaning of it; as, Aldus, Sixtus Senenſis, Poſſevinus, and even Labbée, who believed that he was Conſul in a City called Meſſalia, which is thought by Labbée to be Marſeilles; That's a miſtake: They took the Name of the Conſul Salia, who was Conſul with Philippus in the Year 348, for the Name of a Town; and ſo they aſcribed to Prudentius the Conſular Dignity that belonged to Salia, under whoſe Conſulſhip Prudentius came into the World. In the ſame place he ſays that he was 57 Years old when he began to write, which ſhews that it was in the Year 405.

upon

upon some places only; which makes me think that it is simply an Epitome of Prudentius's whole Work (b). Prudentius.

However, Gennadius says, that Prudentius wrote a Commentary upon the Hexameron as far as to the Creation and Fall of the First Man: But that Book is lost.

Prudentius is no very good Poet, he often useth harsh Expressions not reconcilable to the Purity of Augustus's Age.

Prudentius's Works were printed and published at Rome, by Aldus Manutius, in the Year 1501, in Quarto. This Edition was followed by those of Germany, and others which are conformable to them; where are added Erasmus's Notes upon the Hymns upon Christmas, and the Epiphany, and those of Sichardus upon the Psychomachia. The Edition of Antwerp of 1540. in Octavo, contains the Annotations of Antonius Nebrissensis and Sichardus. That of 1564. was made after the Notes and Corrections of Putmannus, Graffemburgius and Victor Giselinus, who added his own Commentaries. Most of the late Editions, which are numerous, have been made after that. In 1613. Prudentius was printed at Hanover with Weitzius's Notes; and in 1614. the two Books against Symmachus were printed at Paris, with the Commentaries of Grangæus: The last Edition of Prudentius was at Amsterdam, in 1667, in Twelves, with the Notes and Corrections of Nicolaus Heinsius.

(b) Prudentius his whole Work.] This Abridgement is ascribed by some to Amœnus; and Georgius Fabricius observeth, that it goes under his Name in a Manuscript belonging to one of Strasburg. It is also printed under the same Name in some Editions of the Bibliotheca Patrum. In all the Manuscripts, Prudentius is said to be the Author of it; and Aldus says, that he saw an Ancient one where the Title of it was Dittochæon, or Dyrrochæon: But it is not to be wonder'd at, if the Abridgement of Prudentius's Works made by one Amœnus, should be taken for the very Work of Prudentius, and perhaps this is the Cause of its being lost.

DIADOCHUS.

IT is well known that Diadochus was Bishop of Photice, a City of Epirus, but the time wherein he lived is not known. Bellarmine and others that mention him, place him at the End of the Fourth Century, but without proof. However he is ancienter than Maximus, who quotes him in his Answers to Thalassius. Photius in the 201 Volume saith, That he had read a Book of that Bishop, which contained Ten Definitions and One Hundred Chapters, and observes that this Book is usefull for those who design to live a Spiritual Life. The Ten Definitions prefixed before the Hundred Chapters are not extant: These (as we learn by the Titles which Photius hath preserved of them) were properly Reflections upon the principal Perfections of a Spiritual Life. The hundred Chapters of the Spiritual Life were published by Turrianus; they contain several Maxims concerning a Religious and Spiritual Life; they are written with a plain Stile, as most Ascetical Treatises are. There are several false Thoughts, and such spiritual Notions, as will not be relished by every Body. Diadochus.

[Spiritual in the Ascetical Style is to be understood of those extraordinary Exercises and Mortifications, which the old Monks and Hermites obliged themselves to observe, over and above the ordinary Duties of the Christian Life, that every Christian was by his Profession, made at his Baptism, bound to practise.]

AUDENTIUS.

WHat Gennadius observeth of this Author, whom he mentions immediately after Prudentius, is this: "Audentius a Spanish Bishop wrote a Book against the Manichees, Arians, "and Sabellians, and chiefly against the Photinians, who are now called Bonosiacks; he intituled "this Book, A Treatise of Faith against all Hereticks. He there shews, that the Son of God "is co-eternal with the Father, and that he did not begin to be God when he made himself "Man, and that he was born of the Virgin Mary. Audentius.

SEVERUS ENDELECHIUS.

WE have a Bucolick, or Pastoral Poem, of one Severus Endelechius, about the End whereof there is a Discourse of the Efficacy of the Sign of the Cross, and of the Christian Religion, to the embracing of which Tityrus exhorts his Companion. This Author lived since Constantine, but the time is not known. His Poem is pretty well writ. It is likely he lived about the End of the Fourth, or the beginning of the Fifth Century. Severus Endelechius.

FLAVIANUS.

Flavianus.

FLAVIANUS Presbyter of Antioch, having governed that Church during the Arian Perſecutions, in the Abſence of Meletius his Biſhop, was after his Death, in the Year 380, choſen by the oriental Biſhops to fill that See, which was not to be looked upon as vacant, ſince Paulinus, Collegue to Meletius, was yet alive. This Ordination renewed the Schiſm of the Church of Antioch. The Weſtern Biſhops, who of a long time favoured Paulinus, could not endure that a Biſhop ſhould be ordained while he lived, againſt the Agreement made with Meletius, That the Surviver ſhould remain ſole Biſhop. They complained lowdly of that Injuſtice; but thoſe who ſided with Meletius being the Major part, would not ſuffer Paulinus, and ſo nothing was enacted againſt Flavianus. The Death of Paulinus in the Year 389, did not put an End to the Diviſion of the Church of Antioch; his Party acknowledged Evagrius for their Biſhop, whom Paulinus ordained before his Death, and accuſed Flavianus before Theodoſius. This Emperour commanded him to go to Rome, there to be judged: But Flavianus excuſed himſelf becauſe of the Winter, promiſing to execute the Emperour's Orders in the Spring following. But the Synod of Capua in the Year 390, remitted this Buſineſs to Theophilus and the Biſhops of Egypt. The Emperour commanded Flavianus to repair to Alexandria, which he refuſed to do, and anſwered the Emperour, That if they found fault with his Doctrine he was willing to be judged even by his Enemies; but if the Queſtion was about his Biſhoprick, he would not diſpute the matter but readily quit it. The Emperour admiring his Conſtancy, ſent him back to Antioch, and ſuffered him to live quietly: His reſolution provoked St. Ambroſe, and the Weſtern Biſhops: But Theophilus endeavoured to appeaſe that Quarrel by a milder way than a determinate Sentence: Evagrius being dead, no other Biſhop was ordained in his room, and there were but few Chriſtians at Antioch, who owned not Flavianus for their Biſhop. But he did not communicate with the Weſtern Biſhops before the Year 398, when S. Chryſoſtom undertook to make his Peace with Anaſtaſius Biſhop of Rome, and with the Weſtern Biſhops. And thus was Flavianus acknowledged by all as the lawfull Biſhop of Antioch, and ended his Days in peace, in the Year 404. S. Chryſoſtom often commends him in his Sermons. He deſcribes his Journey to the Emperour's Court, to get a Pardon for the People of Antioch; and tells the particulars of the Speech he made. Theodoret alſo ſpeaks much to his Advantage, and obſerveth, l. 4. of his Hiſtory, c. 25. that Diodorus and he maintain'd the Faith of the Church againſt the Aſſaults of the Arians. He adds, that Flavianus did not then preach, but furniſhed Diodorus with Notions and Arguments from Scripture to uſe in his Sermons; but when he was Biſhop of Antioch he preached himſelf. Theodoret in his Dialogues quotes ſome places of this Father's Homilies touching the Incarnation; he quotes a Homily upon S. John Baptiſt, upon the Theophany, and a Homily upon Eaſter: An Homily upon Judas's Treachery, a Homily upon S. Luke, and another upon theſe words. The Spirit of the Lord is upon me. None of theſe Homilies, nor any other of the Works of this holy Biſhop are extant, unleſs perhaps ſome of his Sermons are among thoſe that are attributed to S. Chryſoſtom.

[Photius cod. 52. of his Bibliotheca ſpeaks of a Letter written by Flavianus to the Biſhops of Oſrhoëne, and of another to an Armenian Biſhop.]

S. JOHN CHRYSOSTOM.

S. John Chryſoſtom.

SAint JOHN, Sir-named CHRYSOSTOM, becauſe of his Eloquence (a), was of Antioch; his Father's Name was SECUNDUS, and his Mother's ANTHU-

(a) Sir-named Chryſoſtom, &c.] It is not known when he was firſt called by that Name, ſo juſtly given him: Some ſay he had it in his Life-time, but neither S. Jerom, nor S. Auguſtin, nor Theodoret, nor any other among the Ancients, give him that Name, but call him onely John of Conſtantinople. Sozomen obſerves, that Antiochus Biſhop of Ptolemais, had this Name given him, but does not ſay, that it was common to him with our Saint. Many Authors have written his Life, but very few have done it faithfully. Palladius alone may be credited in this Caſe. Bigotius publiſhed the Original Greek of this Author, and with him may be joined Socrates, Sozomen and Theodoret, who have in their Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtories, given an Account of ſeveral Circumſtances of the Life of St. Chryſoſtom. Theodoret made ſome Speeches in his Commendation, the Extracts whereof are preſerved by Photius, in the 273 Volume. Little regard is to be had to the other Writers of his Life: for they have filled their Relations with Fables. The firſt of them is George, who is thought to have been Biſhop of Alexandria. Some think that part of his Relation was taken out of S. Cyril of Alexandria, but that is not probable. This Author lived about the Year of Chriſt 600. After him Leo the Emperour, Simeon Metaphraſtes, an Anonymus Author, S. John Damaſcene, Coſmas Veſtitor, John Euchaïta, the Patriarch Philotheus, and Matthæus Camariota, have written Lives and Panegyricks of our Saint; but very ill, and ſtuffed with many Fables.

S A (b). He loſt his Father when he was young (c), and his Mother took care to breed him up like a Chriſtian. He learned Rhetorick under Libanius, and Philoſophy under Andragathius, both very famous in their profeſſion. He firſt deſigned to follow the Law (d), but ſoon altered his Mind, and became a Church-man. He left Libanius his School to ſtudy the Scriptures, and had for his Tutors Diodorus and Carterius Superiors of the Monks, that were in the Suburbs of Antioch. He was afterwards baptized by Meletius, and choſen by this Biſhop to be Reader. He was ſo highly eſteemed, that he was mark'd out by an Aſſembly of Prelates to be made Biſhop, as well as Baſil his Friend (e). But knowing the Day when they were to ordain him, he hid himſelf, avoiding that Dignity with as much Care, as others ſought for it with earneſtneſs. About the Year 374, he retired to a Mountain near Antioch, where he lived with only one old Monk the Space of four Years; then he choſe to dwell in a Cave for two Years, after an auſtere manner. The ſeverity of a ſolitary Life, and continual Labour did much impair S. Chryſoſtom's health, which obliged him to return to Antioch, about the Year 380. There the great Meletius ordained him a Deacon, and ſoon after he went to the Council of Conſtantinople, where he died. After his Death S. Chryſoſtom ſided with Flavianus, who made him Prieſt, and having received that Order he gave himſelf wholly to preaching, and therein got ſuch reputation, that after the Death of Nectarius Archbiſhop of Conſtantinople, he was with general Conſent choſen to fill up that See. The Emperour was obliged to uſe all his Authority to make him leave Antioch, and at laſt he was forced to take him away ſecretly. Theophilus Biſhop of Alexandria, whom the Emperour had ſent for to ordain S. Chryſoſtom, had more inclination for one Iſidorus a Presbyter; wherefore he ſecretly oppoſed the Ordination of S. Chryſoſtom. But Eutropius and other Officers of the Court upheld S. Chryſoſtom ſo far, that Eutropius (to oblige Theophilus to ordain him) ſhewed him a Memorial containing ſeveral Heads of an Accuſation formed againſt him, and put it to his choice, whether he would ordain St. Chryſoſtom, or prepare himſelf for his Trial upon thoſe Accuſations. Theophilus choſe the former, and ordained S. Chryſoſtom the firſt Day of March 398. This was the beginning of that hatred which Theophilus bore to St. Chryſoſtom, and which proceeded further than can well be believed, as we ſhall ſee afterwards. S. John Chryſoſtom.

S. Chryſoſtom being entred upon the Government of the Church of Conſtantinople, began with endeavouring to reform the manners of the Clergy, and then fell to reproving the Vices of the Court; and this got him the ill-will of many, for he was of a ſevere Temper not agreeable to men of the World; and his way of living was ſingular and retired. They found fault, that he always eat by himſelf, and would never appear at thoſe Feaſts where he was invited, which they looked upon as proceeding from Scorn and Contempt of others, though it was only an Effect of his Conſtitution and Weakneſs of Stomach, or of his great Sobriety. He diſcharged the Duties of his Office with wonderfull Exactneſs and Care, knowing that the Revenue of the Church is the Patrimony of the Poor; he cut off the ſuperfluous Expences of his Predeceſſours, to increaſe the Allowances of Hoſpitals for the Sick. And the Hoſpital at Conſtantinople not being large enough, by reaſon of the great Number of Sick and Strangers, he cauſed ſeveral others to be built, and for each of them he appointed two Prieſts to take care of the Sick and Strangers.

(b) His Mother's Anthuſa.] There was another John, Son of Publia, mentioned by Theodoret in his Hiſtory, l. 3. c. 19. for in the firſt place all Hiſtorians aſſure us, that S. John Chryſoſtom's Mother was called Anthuſa; as Palladius in his Life, c. 5. Socrates in his Hiſtory, l. 6. c. 3. Secondly, Publia was an old Woman in the Time of Julian the Emperour, in the Year 362. according to Theodoret, and S. Chryſoſtom's Mother, was alive in 404, as appeareth by his own Letters, the 238th, and 239th, and ſhe was but 40 Years of Age in the Year 368. In ſhort, John the Son of Publia was an only Child; whereas S. Chryſoſtom had a Siſter older than himſelf, to whom he writ his 238th Letter.

(c) He loſt his Father when he was young.] St. Chryſoſtom ſays it in his firſt Book of Prieſthood, c 1. Some have affirmed that his Parents were Pagans, but he ſays himſelf in the firſt Homily againſt the Anomæans, that he was bred and brought up in the Church; and it is clear by the place we have quoted out of his Book of the Prieſthood, that his Mother was a Chriſtian when his Father died, which was ſoon after he was born.

(d) He firſt deſigned to follow the Law.] Some ſay, that he was called to the Bar, but Palladius, Socrates and Sozomen, only ſay, that when he was fit for it he quitted it. There is a Letter of Libanius to one John to congratulate him for a publick Pleading, wherein he had ſpoken much to the Praiſe of the Emperour and of his Children. But this John is not our S. John Chryſoſtom, who was then a Prieſt: For this was the Emperour Theodoſius, who left the Empire to his Sons about the Year 393. S. Chryſoſtom indeed confeſſeth in his firſt Book of the Prieſthood, that he did follow the Bar, but does not mention his Pleading. Such was his Eloquence, that Libanius at his Death ſaid, that he alone was worthy to ſucceed him, if the Chriſtians had not ſnatched him away.

(e) Baſil his Friend.] It is not certainly known who this Baſil was, nor Biſhop of what place; but it is certain, that he was not the great S. Baſil, Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia. Socrates and Sozomen, have improperly confounded them; for Baſil Chryſoſtom's Friend was of his own Age, and inſtructed by the ſame Maſters, as appeareth by the beginning of S. Chryſoſtom's Book of the Prieſthood; whereas S. Baſil was much older, and was Biſhop of the Church of Cæſarea, before St. Chryſoſtom was 25 Years old: Photius tells us, that Baſil S. Chryſoſtom's Friend, was Baſil of Seleucia. This is yet a groſſer miſtake, becauſe this latter was not ordained Biſhop before the Year 431, and he lived till 458. Baſil S. Chryſoſtom's Companion, was rather Biſhop of Raphanea, or another of the ſame Name Biſhop of Biblos, whoſe Names are found in the Subſcriptions of the Council of Conſtantinople.

gers.

S. John Chryſoſtom.

gers. He particularly provided for Virgins and Widows. He conſtantly preached to the People, exhorting them not to neglect the publick Service. And he is ſaid, firſt to have inſtituted ſolemn Proceſſions in Conſtantinople.

But his Paſtoral care was not reſtrained to his particular Church, but extended it ſelf alſo to the Churches of Thracia, Pontus, and Aſia. He pulled down ſome Temples of falſe Deities that were ſtill in Phœnicia. To the Goths that were infected with Arianiſm, he ſent Prieſts, Deacons and Readers that ſpake their Language, thereby to endeavour the Converſion of that People from their Error: He alſo ſent Miſſionaries to the Scythians that inhabited along the Danube. He wrote to the Biſhop of Tyre againſt the Marcionites of thoſe parts, offering him the Emperor's help: But he never did the Church a more ſignal Service, than when he re-united the Eaſt and Weſt, by reconciling Flavianus with the Weſtern and Egyptian Biſhops.

He aſſembled at Conſtantinople a Synod of Two and twenty Biſhops about September in the Year 400. Euſebius, Biſhop of Valentinople in Aſia, came to it, and preſented to the Council a Petition containing Seven Articles againſt Antoninus Biſhop of Epheſus, the Metropolitan of Aſia. He was accuſed, Firſt, Of Melting the holy Veſſels, and converting them into Money, which he beſtowed upon his Son. 2*dly*. That he had taken a Marble Stone from the entrance of the Baptiſtery, to uſe in his own Bath. 3*dly*. That the Pillars which remained after the Building of the Church were uſed to ſupport the Roof of his own Hall. 4*thly*. That he kept a Servant who was guilty of Man-ſlaughter. 5*thly*. That he had ſold the Lands, which were left to the Church by Baſilina, Mother to Julian the Emperor, as if they had belonged to his own Eſtate. 6*thly*. That he had again taken his Wife, whom he had put away, and had two Children by her. 7*thly*. That a Cuſtom was introduced by him, ſo as to become almoſt a Law, to take Money for the Ordination of Biſhops, proportionably to the value of their Biſhopricks. Antoninus appear'd at the Council that was called by S. Chryſoſtom, where theſe Accuſations were brought againſt him by Euſebius. They inſiſted particularly upon the laſt, as being the moſt important. Antoninus denied all; and could not be convicted, becauſe there were no Witneſſes; Wherefore the Council deputed three Biſhops to go into Aſia, and hear the Witneſſes that were to be produced by the Accuſer. One of theſe three Biſhops being Antoninus his friend, feigned himſelf ſick, that he might not inform againſt his friend. The two others went to Hypæpæ, a City in Aſia, where they waited to no purpoſe for Witneſſes, becauſe the Accuſer was agreed with the accuſed, either through fear of his Power, or becauſe he had no ſufficient Proofs. The Deputies, weary of waiting, went away, having written a Letter, in which they Excommunicated Euſebius as an Impoſtor for making default. Sometime after Antoninus died, and his Death cauſed new Troubles in the Churches of Aſia. In this juncture of time the Clergy of Epheſus and the Biſhops of that Province made application to S. Chryſoſtom, and prayed him to come into their Countrey, to eſtabliſh ſome Order in the Church of Epheſus. He came thither in the end of Winter, of the Year 401, and aſſembled a Synod of Seventy Biſhops, wherein Six Biſhops were depoſed, who were convicted of giving Antoninus Money for their Ordination. The Heirs of that Biſhop were enjoyned to return them the Money he had received: and they Ordained Heraclides a Deacon, Biſhop of Epheſus. What concerned the Church of Epheſus being thus regulated, S. Chryſoſtom returned through Nicomedia, where he turned out Gerontius, who was formerly S. Ambroſe's Deacon, but went to the Eaſt and was ordained Biſhop of Nicomedia: He ſettled in his room Panſophius; and going on in his Journey, in every place, he took from the Novatians and Quartodecimani the Churches which they were in poſſeſſion of.

While S. Chryſoſtom was doing theſe things in Aſia, Severinus, Biſhop of Gabala, a famous Preacher, (to whom, at his going away, he had committed the care of his Church) did all he could to get the applauſe both of the Nobility and People. This begot ſome jealouſie in S. Chryſoſtom, who expelled him out of Conſtantinople after he returned; and this he did by the Sollicitation of a Deacon of his, named Serapion. But the Empreſs cauſed him to come again, having reconciled them, though with much difficulty.

This Reconciliation was followed by another quarrel with Theophilus Biſhop of Alexandria, an old enemy to S. Chryſoſtom. The Hiſtorians repreſent that Biſhop as an ambitious Man, paſſionate, fierce, covetous, and cunning; who would never yield, but compaſs every thing he undertook; who eaſily provoked Men to be his Enemies, and ſooner or later would undoe them: He was no friend to S. Chryſoſtom, becauſe he was obliged to ordain him againſt his will: but the hatred he bore to him broke out upon the account of three Egyptian Monks, Dioſcorus, Ammonius, and Euthymius, Sir-named the Long-brethren. Theophilus was very angry with them, becauſe they reproved his Conduct, and received Iſidore that was become his enemy: He condemned them in a Synod of Alexandria, aſſembled in 399, becauſe they would not ſubſcribe the Condemnation of Origen. After this Condemnation he went himſelf with Souldiers to drive them away, with all the Monks that lived under their Rule. Theſe poor Monks not knowing whither to go, becauſe Theophilus perſecuted them every-where, came to Conſtantinople, and repreſented to S. John, the Violences of their Biſhop, beſeeching him to have compaſſion on them. S. Chryſoſtom gave them leave to ſay their Prayers in a Church he aſſigned for them, but did not admit them to the Communion of the Euchariſt. He only writ to Theophilus to re-eſtabliſh them. On the contrary, Theophilus ſent Men to Conſtantinople, who delivered to the Emperor a form of Accuſation againſt theſe Monks; who in their own defence, accuſed their Biſhop alſo. S. John Chryſoſtom

Chrysostom gave Theophilus notice of it, who answered him fiercely: That he ought to have known, that by the Canons of the Council of Nice, a Bishop is forbidden to judge of Causes that are out of the limits of his own Jurisdiction: That he had no right to receive Accusations against him; and that if he must be judged, the Judgment belong'd to the Bishops of Egypt, and not to the Bishop of Constantinople. S. Chrysostom having received this Letter, exhorted both the one and the other to Peace; but neither were disposed towards it. The Monks accused by Theophilus, and some of their Brethren, perswaded of their innocence, continually Petition'd the Emperor; who yielding to their Supplications, at last appointed Judges; who after examination of the Accusations against the Long-brethren, found them to be Calumnies, and so gave Judgment against some of the Monks that were the Authors of them. All this happened in the Year 401. S. John Chrysostom.

In the Year 402, S. Epiphanius, Bishop in Cyprus, (who held with Theophilus, because he was a great enemy to Origen) came to Constantinople. S. Chrysostom invited him to take a lodging in his House; but Epiphanius, pre-ingaged by Theophilus, writing to him, gave him this answer; That he was so far from lodging in his House, he would not so much as enter into it, nor joyn in the publick Prayers whilst he was there, unless S. Chrysostom first banish'd the Long-brethren, and condemn'd Origen. S. John having refused to doe it, S. Epiphanius designed to go himself into the Apostle's Church on the Lord's-day, and there publickly condemn Origen's Books, and excommunicate the Long-brethren with their Adherents. But as he was going, he met with Serapion the Deacon, who told him from S. Chrysostom, that he undertook things against Order, and against the Canons: That he had ordained a Deacon out of his own Diocess, and celebrated the Eucharist, without permission from the Ordinary; and that he was about a thing that was neither just nor reasonable, and dangerous for himself, for he had to doe with a populace which would soon be up; and that S. Chrysostom would not answer for what might happen. This discourse made Epiphanius withdraw, and desist from his enterprise. The Long-brethren after this went to him, and complained that he condemned them before hearing, and without conviction; they shewed, that they had not dealt so with him, having every-where defended both his Works and his Person. Epiphanius reflecting upon this Remonstrance, and considering what Troubles Theophilus had engaged him in, returned towards Cyprus. At his going away he told the Bishops, I leave you the Town, the Palace, and the Theater. He died before he got to his own Country.

After the departure of S. Epiphanius, S. Chrysostom made a Speech against the Disorders of Women: The Empress Eudoxia supposing that it was meant of her, complained to the Emperor, and urged Theophilus to come to Constantinople. This Bishop, who waited for an opportunity to destroy S. Chrysostom, came immediately about the beginning of the Year 403, and brought with him several Egyptian Bishops. Those of Asia that were deposed by S. Chrysostom, or were not satisfied with his behaviour, repaired likewise to Constantinople. Theophilus had his Apartment in one of the Empress's Houses; from whence he sent the Accusers of John to the Emperor, who commanded that both they and Chrysostom should appear before Theophilus his Synod, to be judged there. S. Chrysostom denied them to be his Judges; affirming, That it appertained to the Bishops of his, and of the adjacent Provinces, and not to Strangers, to take cognizance of that matter. Notwithstanding this reason, which Theophilus himself had alledged to avoid being judged by S. Chrysostom, he held a Synod of Six and Thirty Bishops, in the Suburbs of Chalcedon, to condemn S. Chrysostom. One John exhibited Nine and Twenty Articles against him.

S. Chrysostom was cited to the Synod to answer those Accusations, but he sent three Bishops and two Presbyters, who in his behalf declared to Theophilus and his Synod, That he was ready to submit to any that might be his Judges, but not to Theophilus his professed Enemy, nor to the Egyptian Bishops, who could not regularly judge the Bishops of Thrace. S. Chrysostom objected in writing, particularly against Theophilus; because when he came out of Alexandria, he said, I am going to depose John: Against Acacius of Berœa, because he threatned him long before: Against Severianus and Antiochus, because of the quarrels betwixt them, which were publick and notorious. He so much depended upon his innocency, that he promised to appear at the Synod, if these four Bishops would retire: They did not hearken to this Proposition, but cited him to the Synod three times. He answered still, That he would justifie himself before a more numerous Synod; but he had reason to reject a Council, where his Enemies were to be his principal Judges. However, his Process was brought before the Council. Theophilus was present, and received the Memorials of Accusation which himself had made. One Isaac a Monk, whom S. Chrysostom had reproved, for going abroad oftener than Monks ought to doe, exhibited a Bill against him with Nine Articles: After examination of some of them, Paul of Heraclea, President of the Council, required the Bishops to give their Opinions: They all declared that S. Chrysostom ought to be deposed; and having delivered their Opinions, they wrote a Letter to the Emperor, and another to the Clergy of Constantinople, giving notice of the Judgment they had given against S. John Chrysostom. After this, three Bishops of Asia, deposed by S. Chrysostom, Petitioned the Council for their Restauration; and it is probable that it was granted them. And, on the contrary, Heraclides, who had been ordained Bishop of Ephesus, was deposed. This is what Theophilus his Caballing obtained of the Council: the Acts whereof were extant in Photius's time, who gives an Epitome of them in the 59th. Volume of his Bibliotheca. They were divided into Thirteen Acts or Sessions.

S. John Chryſoſtom.

The news of S. Chryſoſtom's depoſition ſtirred up a great Sedition at Conſtantinople; the Emperor commanded that he ſhould be baniſhed, and the People reſolved to keep him by force: But three days after he went out of the Church of his own accord, to ſurrender himſelf to them that had order to ſeize him, and was conveyed to a ſmall Town of Bithynia. His going away increaſed the tumult of the People, who both with Prayers and Threatnings addreſſed to the Emperor to call him back; which ſo amazed Eudoxia, that ſhe became Petitioner for his return, and ſent one of her own Officers to fetch him. When he was come back, he would not perform the Epiſcopal Functions till he was reſtored by a more numerous Synod than that which depoſed him; he beſought the Emperor to call one, and in the mean time withdrew to a place without the City: But the People, impatient of delays, led him into the Church, and he was reſtored by Thirty Biſhops, and Theophilus was obliged to depart.

After this, it ſeemed that S. Chryſoſtom had nothing to fear; but of a ſudden a new Storm aroſe againſt him. Towards the end of the Year 403, the Empreſs Eudoxia cauſed her Statue to be ſet up near the Church: The People, in honour to the Empreſs, celebrated ſome publick Games by that Statue. S. Chryſoſtom looking upon theſe as indecent things, preached againſt them: This provoked the Empreſs, who ſtill preſerved a grudge againſt him, and reſolved to have a new Aſſembly of Biſhops, to drive him out of the Church of Conſtantinople. It is ſaid that the Saint hearing of it, provoked her yet more, by beginning a Sermon with theſe words: Now Herodias is in a fury again; now ſhe demands the Head of John in a Charger once again: However, at the end of that Year, Theophilus being afraid to go to Conſtantinople, ſent thither three Biſhops from Egypt; who being aſſembled with them that were then at Court, and ſome others come from Syria, Pontus and Phrygia, they undertook to judge S. Chryſoſtom. He went to them, and deſired to ſee his Accuſation, or to know his Accuſers, that he might make his defence about the Crimes laid to his charge: But theſe Biſhops declared, that it was not neceſſary to examine, whether the things alledged againſt him were true or falſe; It was enough for his Condemnation, that he returned to his Biſhoprick when depoſed by a Council, and was not abſolved by another Council; becauſe it was provided in the Fourth Canon of the Council of Antioch, That whoſoever was guilty of this, could never hope to be reſtored, nor ſo much as be admitted to plead for himſelf. Elpidius and Tranquillus, who defended S. Chryſoſtom; anſwered, That this Canon was made by Arians; and that he was reſtored by thoſe Biſhops that communicated with him. The Biſhops of the Council denied that the Canon was made by Arians; and inſiſted upon this, That the Number of thoſe who depoſed S. Chryſoſtom, was greater than of thoſe that communicated with him at his return to his Church. On this ground they confirmed the Sentence of Depoſition, which the firſt Council pronounced againſt S. Chryſoſtom.

By virtue of this Judgment, the Emperor, at the beginning of Lent, 404, forbad him to go to the Church: He obey'd, and left the Clergy alone to perform Divine Service. But he was not ſuffered to be long at reſt, for upon Holy Saturday, Lucius, Captain of the Guards, came with Souldiers into the great Church in the Evening, and drove away forty Biſhops that communicated with S. Chryſoſtom, all the Clergy, and part of the People: Then he placed armed Men about the Sanctuary, entred into the Baptiſtery, and miſuſed thoſe that were there. Some Souldiers that were not yet baptized, went to the Altar, and ſpilt upon their Cloaths the conſecrated Elements that were in the holy Veſſels. This Violence was followed by the Prince's Edicts againſt S. Chryſoſtom, and againſt thoſe that communicated with him. The next day the People met together in the publick Baths, and were driven out by force: So that ſuch as were for S. Chryſoſtom were obliged to meet in ſeveral places of the Town; and were afterwards called by their Enemies Joannites. They did not yet dare to meddle with the Perſon of S. Chryſoſtom, who was ſo much beloved of the People, that they were ready to take up Arms to prevent his being taken away. This Saint, unwilling to be the cauſe of a Civil War, got away from thoſe Guards that the People ſet about him, and put himſelf into the hands of thoſe that were to take him. He was led to Nice; and the ſame day that he went, which was the 20th. of June, there happened a Fire in the great Church, which burnt it to the ground, with the Palace joyning to it. Seven days after one Arſacius, an old Man of Eighty years of Age, Brother to Nectarius, was ordained in the room of S. Chryſoſtom. This Arſacius furiouſly perſecuted S. Chryſoſtom's friends. This Saint tarried not long at Nice, but left it on the 13th. of July to go to Cucuſus, the place of his Exile, where he arrived in September. He endured much by the way, but was kindly received by Dioſcorus Biſhop of the place. In the mean time Laws were publiſhed at Conſtantinople againſt thoſe that adhered to S. Chryſoſtom; Three of them are in the Theodoſian Code. The Firſt of the Firſt of September, l. 16. tit. 2. c. 3. It is againſt Foreign Clerks, who kept Meetings in private places. The Second of the Tenth of the ſame Month, is tit. 4. c. 5. of the ſame Book: By this Law thoſe are to be Fined who ſuffered their Slaves to go to private Meetings. The Third in the ſame place, c. 6. forbids all the Meetings of thoſe that did not communicate with Arſacius Biſhop of Conſtantinople, Theophilus Biſhop of Alexandria, and Porphyrius who was choſen Biſhop of Antioch in the place of Flavianus. All theſe Laws are againſt them that took John's part, and held private Meetings, and refuſed to communicate with thoſe Three Patriarchs. About the latter end of that Year a ſhower of Hail of extraordinary bigneſs did much miſchief in Conſtantinople; and the Empreſs died ſoon after: John's friends look'd upon both theſe accidents as Judgments from God for the injurious uſage of S. Chryſoſtom.

The

The Patriarchs of the Eaſt having declared againſt S. Chryſoſtom, he could expect no relief, but from the Weſtern Biſhops, and particularly from the See of Rome, which had always been the refuge of Biſhops that were unjuſtly perſecuted in their own Country. To prevent Pope Innocent, Theophilus ſent him a Letter by one of his Readers, acquainting him with S. Chryſoſtom's depoſition. This being publickly known in Rome, Euſebius, Deacon of Conſtantinople, petition'd the Pope that he would ſuſpend his Judgment, till he were rightly informed of the matter. Three days after came four Biſhops, ſent by S. Chryſoſtom, who delivered to the Pope a Letter from him, imploring his ſuccour, and that of the Biſhops of the Weſt; with another Letter from Forty Biſhops and the Clergy of Conſtantinople; which declared, That S. John Chryſoſtom was condemned unjuſtly, and without being heard. S. Innocent being perſuaded that Theophilus had not proceeded regularly, ſent Letters of Communion to S. Chryſoſtom, as well as to the Biſhops that condemned him; and declared, that it was requiſite to call an unexceptionable Council both of Eaſtern and Weſtern Biſhops. Theophilus afterwards ſent to Rome the Acts of the Council held againſt S. Chryſoſtom; but this altered not the Pope's reſolution; who declared, that he could not refuſe Communion with S. Chryſoſtom before a new Council had condemned him. Soon after Theoctenus brought a Letter from Five and twenty Biſhops, ſignifying to the Pope, that S. Chryſoſtom had been expelled out of Conſtantinople, and ſent into Exile; the ſame was afterwards confirmed by another Letter of Fifteen Biſhops, brought by the Biſhop of Apamea; and by the Teſtimony of Palladius of Helenopolis, who was forced to flee to Rome; and by Letters from the Clergy of Conſtantinople, which gave an Account of the Violences exerciſed againſt their Biſhop, and the whole Church of Conſtantinople. The Pope, moved with theſe things, writ to S. Chryſoſtom and to his Clergy thoſe Letters which are preſerved by Sozomen in his Hiſtory, *l.*8. c. 26.

S. John Chryſoſtom.

S. Chryſoſtom's friends every-where publiſhed theſe Letters, and wrought ſo far with Innocent, that he obtained of Honorius, Emperor of the Weſt, a Letter to his Brother Arcadius, in the behalf of S. Chryſoſtom; by the which he requeſted of his Brother, that a Council might be aſſembled at Theſſalonica, where Theophilus ſhould appear as one accuſed. Three Biſhops, Two Presbyters, and Two Deacons, were deputed to carry this Letter, with the Letters of ſeveral Weſtern Biſhops, written in favour of S. Chryſoſtom. But theſe Deputies were ſtopt at Athens by the Governour, and ſent by Sea with a Guard to Conſtantinople. They were not permitted to enter into the Town, but were convey'd to a Caſtle in Thrace, where they were ſhut up. A Counſellor of State, called Patricius, went thither to ask for the Letters; they anſwered, That their Order was not to deliver them to any but the Emperor, and the Biſhops to whom they were directed. Patricius withdrawing after this Anſwer, another Officer, named Valerius, was ſent to take them by force. The next day Money was proffered them, to admit to their Communion Atticus, who ſucceeded Arſacius in the See of Conſtantinople. They refuſed it, and demanded to be ſent back. When they could not be made to comply, they were put into an old Veſſel with Twenty Souldiers, that carried them to Lampſacus, where they ſhifted their Veſſel, and arrived at Otranto, a Port of Calabria, Twenty Days after their Embarquing, and Four Months from their departure out of Italy. This Deputation was dated in the Year 404.

In the mean time S. Chryſoſtom being unhealthy in the place of his Exile, was obliged often to ſhift his Quarters, as appeareth by his 131ſt. Letter. But notwithſtanding his baniſhment and infirmities, he ſtill ſent Prieſts and Monks to preach the Goſpel among the Goths and Perſians, and to take care of the Churches of Armenia and Phœnicia; as appears by his 14th. 123d. 126th. 203d. 204th. 206th. and 207th. Letters. But his Enemies would not let him be quiet, but perſuaded the Emperour to ſend him further to Pityus, a Town upon the Euxine Sea: Immediately Souldiers were ſent to convey him thither; The uſage which he endured, and the fatigue of the Journey ſo weakned him, that he fell ſick of a violent Fever, which carried him off in a few hours. In the place where he died, there was a Church of S. Baſiliſcus Martyr, where he was buried the 4th. of November, 407, having been Three Years, Three Months, and Four and Twenty Days in baniſhment: Aged Sixty Years, and Ten Years Ordained Biſhop of Conſtantinople. After his Death, the Eaſt and the Weſt were divided for ſome time upon his account, becauſe thoſe of the Weſt reverenced his Memory; and the others on the contrary look'd upon him as a condemn'd Biſhop, whoſe Name they refuſed to inſert into the Diptychs; That is to ſay, in the Regiſters of thoſe that were to be mentioned with Honour at the Celebration of the Euchariſt. One would have thought that the Emperour Arcadius his Death happening Five Months after, ſhould have removed the greateſt obſtacle, which hindered the Biſhops of the Eaſt from doing juſtice to the Memory of S. Chryſoſtom: but Theophilus exerciſed his hatred againſt him, even after his death: He wrote againſt him a book full of Invectives, and reproachfull Railings; and prevented, while he lived, any honour to be done to the Memory of S. Chryſoſtom in the Eaſt.

When Theophilus was dead, the Spirits of the Eaſtern Biſhops began to relent, and they began to be more favourable to the Memory of that Saint. Alexander Succeſſour to Porphyrius in the See of Antioch, was the Firſt, who in the Year 413, inſerted the Name of S. Chryſoſtom into the Diptychs, and who by that means was re-admitted to communicate with Pope Innocent. Acacius of Berœa likewiſe received Letters of Communion from the Pope, upon condition that he ſhould not ſhew any hatred againſt S. Chryſoſtom afterwards.

About

S. John Chryſoſtom.

About the Year 428. Atticus Biſhop of Conſtantinople, inſerted the Name of S. Chryſoſtom into the Diptychs, and exhorted S. Cyril of Alexandria to do the ſame. This Biſhop ſcrupled it at firſt: But at laſt S. Iſiodore Peluſiota perſuaded him to do it. Thus all the Churches did right to the Memory of S. Chryſoſtom, and Peace was reſtored.

The Number of S. Chryſoſtom's Works is ſo great, that the Ancient Criticks durſt not pretend to make a Catalogue of them: S. Iſiodore and Suidas, look'd upon it as almoſt impoſſible. George and Nicephorus ſay, that he compoſed above a Thouſand Volumes. Suidas and Caſſiodorus affirm, that he wrote Commentaries upon the whole Bible: From all which it is evident, that how many ſoever of S. Chryſoſtom's Works are yet extant, they are fewer than they have been, and ſo much the rather; becauſe among thoſe that we have, ſome are none of his, though they bear his Name.

The 65 Homilies upon Geneſis, are the Firſt of S. Chryſoſtom's Commentaries of the Bible, according to the Order of the ſacred Books; the Thirty two firſt were preached in Lent, in the third Year of his being Biſhop. This Subject was interrupted by the Feſtivals; for he was to preach upon the Paſſion of Jeſus Chriſt. After Eaſter, he undertook to expound the Acts of the Apoſtles, and was near a Year about that Work: Afterwards he betook himſelf to his former Task, and finiſhed his Expoſition of Geneſis, in Thirty four Homilies. Theſe Homilies are Commentaries upon Geneſis, rather than Sermons. And he applies himſelf particularly to explain the Text of Scripture literally. The Examples of Vertues or Vices ſpoken of in the Text, which he expounds, are commonly the Subject of his Homilies. The Style is plain, and without thoſe Figures and Ornaments which are to be found in his other Sermons.

The Nine Sermons of S. Chryſoſtom upon ſingle paſſages of Geneſis, are more florid, and contain more moral Thoughts. The Firſt is, upon the firſt Words of Geneſis. In the Beginning God created the Heavens and the Earth: in it he treats of Faſting and Alms-deeds.

The Second is upon theſe Words of the firſt Chapter, v. 26. Let us make Man after our own Image: There he gives the reaſon why Moſes ſpeaking of the Creation of Man, uſes the Expreſſion, God ſaid, Let us make; whereas he ſaid of the Creation of other things, God ſaid, Let them be: And there he ſhews wherein this Reſemblance with God conſiſts.

In the Third he makes ſome further Reflexions upon Man being like God, and upon the Dominion given to him over other Creatures; and there he anſwers the Queſtion, Why Beaſts fall upon and kill Man; and confeſſes that it is, becauſe Man by Sin has loſt the Empire he had over them. S. Auſtin quotes this Homily in his Firſt Book againſt Julian, and produces a paſſage out of it to prove Original ſin.

In the Fourth the three kinds of ſervitude which Mankind is fallen into by ſin are diſcourſed of, which are, the Subjection of the Wife to her Husband, that of one Man to another, and that of Subjects to their Princes. He inſiſts much upon this laſt, and occaſionally ſpeaks of the Attention Men ought to give to Sermons.

In the Fifth he ſhews, that thoſe who live well purchaſe their Liberty; and declaims againſt thoſe that refuſe to aſſiſt the Poor.

The Sixth, Seventh, and Eighth, are concerning the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil. In the Firſt he ſhews, that Adam knew Good and Evil before he taſted the Fruit of that Tree. In the Second he ſays, that it is ſo called, becauſe Evil is more perfectly known after Commiſſion; there he alſo explains thoſe Words of our Saviour to the good Thief: This Day ſhalt thou be with me in Paradiſe. The Third is about God's forbidding Man to eat of the Fruit of the Tree.

The Ninth is upon the Names of Abraham and Noah, where he diſcourſes of brotherly Correction.

The Tenth Homily upon Geneſis in the Engliſh Edition is not genuine; it has the ſame Preface with the Third Homily upon David and Saul; it is written in a ſwelling Style, and full of Metaphors, and quite different from the firſt Part.

The following Sermons are upon the Hiſtory of Hannah, Samuel's Mother, in the firſt Book of Samuel; but it treats of ſeveral Subjects.

The Preface to the Firſt is upon the Faſt of the laſt Lent, and upon the Sermons which he had made ſince againſt the Gentiles; and after Flavianus his return upon the Feaſts of the Martyrs, and againſt ſwearing. After this he reſumes the Subject of Providence, which he was entred upon: he demonſtrates, That it is God who gave unto Man the knowledge of the things which he ought to know; That ſickneſs and death have their uſe: He takes notice that the Love which Parents have for their Children is an effect of Providence, and that Mothers are not leſs concerned in the Education of their Children than Fathers: And upon occaſion of this laſt Reflection, he relates the Hiſtory of Hannah, and he ſpeaks of it in the following Sermon, and thereupon he Diſcourſes of Moderation, of Modeſty, and the Reverence due to Prieſts, and of Grace before and after Meat.

In the Third, he ſpeaks of the Obligation which lies upon Men, to give their Children good Education.

In the Fourth, upon the ſecond Part of Hannah's Song, he reproves thoſe who neglect Divine Service to go to Plays and publick Shows, and diſcourſes of the uſefulneſs of Prayer.

In the Fifth he ſhews their Errour, who go to Church only upon great Feſtival Days. He expounds the reſt of Hannah's Hymns, and he ſpeaks of the Advantage of Wealth above Poverty.

Theſe

S. John Chryſoſtom.

Theſe five Diſcourſes were preached by S. Chryſoſtom in Antioch, about Whitſuntide, after Flavianus his Return. In this laſt Sermon, he mentions a Diſcourſe upon the firſt Part of Hannah's Hymn not extant.

There are three Sermons about David and Saul. In the firſt, after a Declamation againſt thoſe that frequent Plays to the neglect of Holy Worſhip, and a Declaration that they ſhould be excommunicated, he treats of patience, and forgiving of Enemies; propoſing for an Example David's Action, who would not kill Saul, though God had delivered him into his Hands.

In the ſecond, that Action is commended, and preferred before all the other great Actions of that King. He proſecutes the ſame Argument in the third Diſcourſe, where he alſo complains of thoſe that were given to Plays: He obſerves, that it is as great an Act of Vertue to bear an Injury patiently, as to give Alms.

At the End of theſe there is another Sermon againſt Idleneſs, which hath no relation to the Reſt.

The Homilies upon the Pſalms, are Commentaries rather than Sermons: S. Chryſoſtom does not inlarge ſo much upon Moral Topicks, as to give the ſence and underſtanding of the Text. He follows the Verſion of the LXX, but he often hath recourſe to the differences of the Ancient Greek Verſions, and quotes even the Hebrew Text in ſome places to clear difficulties: There are ſome Pſalms upon which we have no Homilies of S. Chryſoſtom, as the firſt and ſecond; but there are upon the third, and following to the 13th; upon the 41ſt and 43d, and ſo on to the 117th; and from the 119th to the laſt; which make in all ſixty Homilies, which certainly are S. Chryſoſtom's. To theſe may be added, the Homily upon the thirteenth Pſalm, and two others upon the fiftieth, which have likewiſe S. Chryſoſtom's Style. Thoſe upon the 51ſt, 95th, and 100th, are more doubtfull; yet I ſee no reaſon that we ſhould reject them. It is not ſo of the Commentaries upon the 101ſt Pſalm, and upon the ſix that follow, which are Theodoret's. The Commentary upon the 119th, belongs to ſome modern Greek, that ſpeaks againſt the Iconoclaſts, and takes out of Theodoret's Commentaries part of what he writes. There are alſo four Sermons upon particular paſſages of the Pſalms, but they muſt not be joined to the reſt; becauſe they are not Explications of the Text of the Pſalms, but Sermons upon diſtinct Subjects.

Theſe are a Diſcourſe upon theſe words of the 44th Pſalm: The Queen ſtandeth at thy right hand, preached in Conſtantinople ſome Days after Eutropius his Diſgrace, who had retired into the Church, but was gone out again. He ſpeaks in his Preface, of the Advantage of reading the Holy Scripture. He deſcribes afterwards how the Church was beſet, when Eutropius had taken Sanctuary there. He relates what he had done to help him, and with what ſincerity he had ſpoken, without fearing the Threatnings uttered againſt him. He obſerves that he was taken by his own fault, for the Church had not forſaken him, but he had quitted it: But yet it was no wonder that he reaped no greater benefit from that Sanctuary, becauſe he entred not into it with a Chriſtian heart; That when any Man flies into the Church to take ſanctuary there, he ought to go in with his Mind as well as with his Body; becauſe the Church is not made up of Walls, but of an Holy Union among the Members of Jeſus Chriſt. Upon occaſion of this Eunuch's Diſgrace, he ſhews how little Solidity there is in the goods of this World, and draws a fine Picture of the Inſtability of Riches, and then concludes with an excellent Deſcription of the Church. " Nothing, ſays he to his Auditors, is ſtronger than the Church; Let it be " your Hope, your Haven and Refuge: It is higher than the Heavens, of a larger extent than " the Earth: She never waxeth old, but ſtill retaineth her ſtrength and vigour, for this cauſe the " Scripture calleth her a Mountain, to ſhew her ſtability; a Virgin, becauſe ſhe cannot be cor- " rupted; a Queen, becauſe of her Magnificence and Splendour; and it gives her the Name of " Daughter, by reaſon of her Union with God, &c.

Both the Sermons upon theſe words of the 48th Pſalm, Be not thou afraid when one is made rich, were likewiſe preached in Conſtantinople. In them he recommends Alms-deeds and Hoſpitality; and he toucheth upon the Neceſſity of being preſent at Divine Service.

The Homily on theſe words of the 145th Pſalm, My Soul, bleſs thou the Lord, is a Sermon for the Holy Week, called then the great Week. The reaſon of that Name S. Chryſoſtom gives in the beginning of his Diſcourſe, which is this. " This Week, ſays he, is called the great Week, " becauſe Jeſus Chriſt wrought great Myſteries at this Time: He delivered Man from the Ty- " ranny of the Devil, he overcame Death, bound the ſtrong armed Man, blotted out Sin. But " as this Week is the great Week, becauſe it is the firſt of Weeks; for the ſame reaſon Saturday " is called the great Day: and for this cauſe many of the faithfull do upon this Day double " their Exerciſes; ſome faſt with greater Auſterity, others watch continually, others beſtow " much on the poor: ſome apply themſelves with greater Zeal, to the Practice of good Works, " and by their Piety bear witneſs to the Mercy of God: Emperours themſelves honour this " Week, they grant a Vacation to all Magiſtrates, that ſo being freed from worldly Care, they " may ſpend theſe Days in the Worſhip of God: They give honour alſo to this Day, by " ſending Letters every where to command the Priſon doors to be opened. Let us alſo have " regard to theſe Days, and inſtead of Palm-branches, let us offer him our Hearts. Then he " explains the Pſalm, My Soul, praiſe thou the Lord. The royal Prophet, ſays he, cries out " Praiſe the Lord, O my Soul; why does he direct his Diſcourſe to the Soul? to teach us that

S. John Chryſoſtom.

" the Soul ſhould apply her ſelf to the words that are uttered: For if he that prayeth doth not " underſtand his own words, how would he have God to give ear to him? God often doth not " grant our Petitions, but that is for our good; he deferrs ſome time, not to deceive us with " vain hopes, but to make us more zealous and diligent, for the fervency of Prayer commonly " ceaſeth when we have what we deſired: ſo that to keep up our Devotion, God is pleaſed to " with-hold his Gifts. He obſerves in this Sermon, that the Righteous after Death, live with " us, pray with us, and are amongſt us, &c.

S. Chryſoſtom writ a Commentary upon Iſaiah: but we have only part of it from the beginning, to the eleventh Verſe of the eighth Chapter. Both the hiſtorical and ſpiritual Sence is ſet forth with much ſolidity and clearneſs.

There are alſo five Homilies of his upon theſe words of Iſaiah, ch. 6. I ſaw the Lord upon an high Throne, and one concerning the Seraphim ſpoken of in the ſame place; they are moral Diſcourſes upon various Subjects, and eſpecially of the reverence due to ſacred things, and of the dignity of the Prieſthood; there is a very remarkable paſſage concerning the Eccleſiaſtical and the Civil Power. " Uzziah, ſaith he, went himſelf into the Holy of Holies to offer Incenſe: being King " he would uſurp the Prieſthood: I will, ſaid he, burn Incenſe, for I am worthy to do it. Oye " Princes keep within the Limits of your own Power: The bounds of Eccleſiaſtical power " differ from thoſe of ſecular Government. The King rules over earthly things, the Churches " Juriſdiction relates to heavenly goods. God hath committed to Kings the things of the Earth, " and to me thoſe of Heaven: when I ſay, to me, I mean to Prieſts. So that, though a Prieſt " prove unworthy of his Office, yet for all that, you ought not to deſpiſe the dignity of the " Prieſthood. God hath made the Body ſubject to Kings, and the Soul to Prieſts. The King " pardons corporal Offences, but the Prieſt remits Sins. The one compels, the other " exhorts; the one impoſes a law, the other gives counſel; one uſes ſpiritual Weapons, the " other ſenſible Arms; one wages War againſt Barbarians, and the other againſt Devils. But " the Eccleſiaſtical power is the nobler of the two, wherefore the King receives the Prieſt's bleſſing, and in the old Law the Prieſts anointed the Kings. But this King would go beyond his " bounds, and extend his Power too far, and enter the Temple by force, to offer Incenſe: but what " did the Prieſt ſay to this? Sir, you are not permitted to offer Incenſe. Behold this is a generous " liberty; here was a Soul that could not flatter baſely. You are not, ſays he, to go into the " Sanctuary, nor to offer Incenſe to the Lord, that's reſerved for me to do. King Uzziah " could not bear this reproof, but tranſported with pride, he opens the Sanctuary and burns Incenſe. The Prieſt is deſpiſed, the ſacerdotal Function is ſet at nought: The Prieſt is without " power: for the Prieſt's right is only to reprove freely, and to admoniſh judiciouſly. Having " then adviſed the King with that boldneſs which became him, and the King refuſing to yield, " but on the contrary preparing Arms to aſſert his Authority; the Prieſt crieth out, I have " done what my duty commanded me to do, I have no power to go further, O Lord defend " the Prieſthood which is deſpiſed; thy Laws are violated, and Juſtice is overthrown, undertake " for them. This is the Account which S. Chryſoſtom gives of the High-prieſt's Conſtancy in the fourth Homily. In the fifth he ſpeaks of his Meekneſs. " I have ſhewed you the firmneſs of " the High-prieſt; now take notice of his lenity, for we have need not of Courage only, but " much more of Meekneſs, becauſe Sinners hate to be reproved, and ſeek all occaſions to avoid " admonition: and ſo muſt be drawn and reſtrained with Mildneſs and Charity.

In the Homily concerning the Seraphim he ſpeaks of that Celeſtial Hymn, Holy, Holy, Holy: He ſays, that formerly that Hymn was ſung only in Heaven, but ſince the Lord appeared upon Earth, we are allowed the benefit of that divine Conſort. " Wherefore, ſays he, when the " Prieſt is by the holy Table to offer the Euchariſt, he does not utter that Hymn, but after he " has named the Cherubim and Seraphim, and the Congregation have lifted up their Hearts to " God. This paſſage diſcovers the Antiquity of this Preface to the Office of the Euchariſt.

To theſe Homilies ſhould be joined the Sermon upon Iſaiah, ch. 45. v. 7. I am the Lord, I form the Light and create Darkneſs, I make Peace and create Evil.

There is no Commentary of S. Chryſoſtom's upon Jeremiah (f); but only one Homily upon Ch. 10. v. 23. of that Prophet, where he proves the freedom of man's Will.

To theſe Homilies upon the Prophets muſt be added two Sermons of the obſcurity of Prophecies, wherein he gives reaſons why prophecies are dark. He tells us in the firſt, that the Prophets ſpake obſcurely of the Evils which were to come upon the Jews; becauſe that had they ſpoke plainly, they might have been ill uſed, and perhaps killed by the Jews. This he proves by an infinite Number of Examples of Prophets killed by them, for telling the truth. It is added, that Prophecies were dark, that the Jews might not underſtand them, till they were to comprehend them. In the ſecond, he ſays, that the Event has cleared the Prophecies, that the Veil which covered them was taken off in the New Teſtament, and ſo the obſcurity wherein they were wrapt up has been diſſipated. At laſt he obſerves, that the Old Teſtament having (f) There is no Commentary of S. Chryſoſtom's upon Jeremiah.] There was a Manuſcript in ſome Libraries that went under S. Chryſoſtom's Name; but it was ſo pitifull a buſineſs, that it was not judged worth publiſhing: no more than ſome Scholia upon the Goſpels of S. Matthew, S. Mark, and S. Luke.

been been written in Hebrew, is the leſs clear, becauſe Verſions commonly make the Sence more obſcure.

S. John Chryſoſtom.

This Father's Commentaries upon the New Teſtament are more full and entire.

S. Matthew's whole Goſpel is expounded in fourſcore and ten Homilies (g), and that of S. John in eighty ſeven. There are four and fifty Homilies upon the Acts, and thirty two upon the Epiſtle to the Romans; forty four upon the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians; thirty upon the ſecond; a Commentary upon the Epiſtle to the Galatians; four and twenty Homilies upon that to the Epheſians; fifteen upon the Epiſtle to the Philippians; twelve upon that to the Coloſſians; eleven upon the firſt to the Theſſalonians; five upon the ſecond: Eighteen upon the firſt to Timothy; ten upon the ſecond; ſix on the Epiſtle to Titus; three upon that to Philemon; and thirty four upon the Epiſtle to the Hebrews. It is ſaid, that theſe laſt were collected after the Death of S. Chryſoſtom, by a Prieſt called Conſtantine who had been his Diſciple: but there is no proof of this; and it is more likely that he writ them himſelf. Part of theſe Homilies were preached at Antioch, and the other at Conſtantinople (h).

Theſe Homilies conſiſt of two parts: The firſt contains a Commentary upon the Goſpel, the other a moral Exhortation to the People. In the Commentary he gives a reaſon of the Contents of the Goſpel, examines all the circumſtances thereof, weighs the words, and diſcovers in thoſe places which ſeem moſt plain, great Numbers of fine things, to which no attention would have been given, had he not taken notice of them. He keeps ſtill to the literal Sence, and of all Explications he always chuſes, not the moſt ſubtle, but the moſt natural. He ſeeks for no allegorical or figurative Sence. He uſeth no far fetched notions to prove his opinions; avoids all intangled and hard Queſtions, contenting himſelf to make clear and uſefull Obſervations upon the Hiſtory and upon the Text of St. Paul. He gives a perfect light to all the places of this Apoſtle's Epiſtles, which ſeem moſt difficult, and particularly to thoſe, which are thought to ſpeak of Predeſtination and of Grace. His expoſitions remove all that which at the firſt view makes them appear terrible and fearfull. Every-where God is repreſented as a good and mercifull Being, and willing to ſave all Men, and who affords them all neceſſary means of Salvation, Men are exhorted to anſwer that Call of God; ſince it is their own fault if they be not ſaved; for thoſe that are damned damn themſelves. He tells them often, that God requireth no impoſſible thing of them: That with God's help they may keep the Commandments, and practice Vertue. S. Chryſoſtom finds theſe comfortable Thoughts in the paſſages of S. Paul, which ſeem moſt terrifying; and endeavours to prove, that they are not contrary to the mind of (g) S. Matthew's whole Goſpel is expounded in 90 Homilies.] In the Tranſlation there are 91, but the 29th is divided into two, though it is but one in the Greek Original; and ſo the Tranſlation ought to be mended in the Number of the Homilies upon S. Matthew, and the Greek Text to be corrected in the Number of the Homilies upon S. John; for though it diſtinguiſhes 88 Homilies, yet there are but 87, becauſe the Preface is not to be reckoned one of them.

(h) Part of theſe Homilies were preached at Antioch, and the other at Conſtantinople.] Photius obſerves, that it is eaſie to know which Homilies St. Chryſoſtom preached at Antioch; becauſe they are more elaborate than thoſe that were preached at Conſtantinople. But though this general Rule may ſerve to diſtinguiſh them, yet ſome particulars in the Homilies themſelves are remarkable, to determine where they were preached. It is evident, that the Homilies upon Geneſis, were preached at Conſtantinople, as we obſerved before after Photius, for he ſpeaks poſitively in the 33d Homily upon Geneſis, which is the 28th according to Photius, who reckoneth but 61 Homilies upon Geneſis. Eraſmus believed, that the 54 Homilies upon the Acts were not S. Chryſoſtom's; and Sir Henry Savil ſeems to have doubted of it: but without ground, for they are written in his ſtyle, and in ſeveral places he diſcovers himſelf. The ſtyle of the Homilies upon the Pſalms, ſhews that they were preached at Antioch, not to mention the Authority of George of Alexandria, and ſome other modern Greeks that confirm the ſame. It cannot be known when he made the Commentary upon Iſaiah. The ſeventh Homily upon S. Matthew, ſhews plainly, that it was preach'd at Antioch; for he ſays there, that they, to whom he ſpake, boaſted of being Inhabitants of that City, where the Name of Chriſtians took its beginning. That Town is again pointed at in the 68th Homily, according to the Latin, and the 67th according to the Greek: Whereby it is manifeſt, that theſe Homilies were preached at Antioch. In the 21ſt Homily upon the Epiſtle to the Corinthians, he plainly ſays, that he was preaching at Antioch. In the 3d Homily upon the Epiſtle to Titus, he makes mention of Daphne, a Suburb of Antioch, as belonging to the Town where he preached. The Sermons upon the Epiſtle to the Coloſſians were preached at Conſtantinople; for in the 3d Homily he ſpeaks with Epiſcopal Authority, threatning Sinners to deny them the Peace of the Church; he alſo mentions the Epiſcopal Throne whereon he was ſitting, and calls himſelf Biſhop. Of the ſame time are the Homilies upon the Epiſtles to the Theſſalonians: In the eleventh upon the firſt Epiſtle he ſays, that he preſided over them that heard him. The ſame is to be taken notice of in the 4th Homily upon the ſecond Epiſtle. In the 4th upon the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, he threatens to put thoſe out of the Church, who ſhould hire Mourners at the Funerals of their Relations, which juſtifies his being Biſhop. In the 26th Homily upon the ſecond Epiſtle to the Corinthians, there are theſe words, That the Son of Conſtantine cauſed his Father to be buried in this City. As to the reſt, there is no certain proof from what he ſays, to tell us where they were preached: but the ſtyle of the Homilies upon the Epiſtles to the Romans, and to the Galatians, being ſmoother and more poliſhed; whereas that of the Homilies upon the Epiſtles to the Epheſians, Philippians, and Philemon, being careleſs and without Art; we may believe, according to Photius his Rule, that the former were preached at Antioch, and the latter at Conſtantinople.

this

S. John Chryſoſtom.

this Apoſtle. The Expoſition he gives of the moſt difficult places, is no ways forced; yea, it ſeemeth very often to be the moſt ſimple and natural. However, to my thinking, it is always the moſt profitable and edifying, and the fitteſt to be preached to the People, which are much edified by ſuch Remonſtrances as tend to practice, but can reap little or no fruit from Speculations about God's eternal Decrees, and other abſtracted matters, that have but little Relation to the Government of Life and Manners.

All the Exhortations that conclude S. Chryſoſtom's Homilies, are ordinarily about ſome points of Morality; as about the fear that men ought to ſtand in of God's Judgments, the Neceſſity of Repentance, the Contempt of Riches, forgiving of Enemies, Humility, Abſtraction of the Heart from worldly things, diligent Meditation upon the Holy Scriptures, and God's Laws; an Abhorrency of Plays and Shows, Charity towards the Poor, Alms, and Hoſpitality; brotherly Reproof, the Duties of Husbands to their Wives, of Parents to their Children, of Maſters to their Servants, of Lay-men towards their Paſtours, Patience in Afflictions, that Holineſs wherewith Men ſhould come to the Sacraments; the Benefit of Prayer, and the Conditions required therein, of Faſting, and the Advantages of a monaſtical and ſolitary Life, Aſſiduity in divine Offices, Attention to preaching, Sobriety, Purity, Modeſty, Meekneſs, Clemency, Contempt of Death, and many other like Subjects, which he handleth with ſuch familiar, and yet ſuch ſolid and convincing Reaſons, that there are no Diſcourſes more capable of inſpiring Notions of Piety and Vertue. He does not go about, as moſt Preachers do, to ſet forth ſtudied Notions, which divert the Underſtanding, but do not touch the Heart. He goes to the bottom of things, ſearches the ſecret folds of Man's Heart; and not contented to have diſcovered and deſcribed Vice, he begets an horrour of it; He ſets forth the moſt powerfull Motives to deter Chriſtians from it, and the moſt proper means to correct it, and to practice true and ſolid Vertue. He ſtretches nothing too far, but diſtinguiſhes exactly the matter of a precept from the Advice therein contained: He is neither too meek nor too ſevere: He is neither too familiar, nor keeps too much diſtance; never complies beyond what is meet, nor terrifies to diſcouragement: In a word, his Exhortations are an excellent pattern of preaching to the People.

The Sermons in the Fifth Volume upon ſeveral Texts of the New Teſtament, are not Commentaries, but moral Inſtructions, or Homilies upon different Subjects.

The Firſt is of Forgiveneſs of our Enemies, upon the parable of that Debtour, to whom his Maſter remitted Ten thouſand Talents, and yet afterwards exacted the hundred Pence from him that owed them to him. He ſpeaks of the exact Account that Men muſt render to God. "Rich Men, ſaith he, muſt give account for the uſe of their Riches; poor Men of their pati"ence; Judges of the Diſcharge of their Office; but above all, Church-men ſhall account for "their Miniſtery; they ſhall be more ſtrictly examined. It ſhall be asked of him to whom the "Word of God was committed, whether out of Idleneſs or Flattery, he omitted none of thoſe
"neceſſary things which his Miniſtery obliged him to ſpeak; if he explained all and concealed
"no truth. A Biſhop charged with the direction of a Dioceſs, hath yet a far greater Account to "give: his Examination will be not only about his Doctrine, and his helping of the Poor, but
"eſpecially about the Orders which he ſhall have conferred, and a Thouſand other obligations
"of the Prieſthood. S. Chryſoſtom ſpeaking of S. Peter in that Homily, calleth him the Head of "the Body of the Apoſtles, the Mouth of the Diſciples, the Firmament of the Faith, the Foun"dation of Confeſſion, and the Fiſherman of the whole Earth.

The Second Sermon of this Volume is againſt Dancing and Luxury; there he ſhews, that Preachers are bound to reprove Vice, and that they ought never to forbear, though their preaching ſeems to be without Fruit: Then he begins to explain the Parable of Dives and Lazarus, making ſeveral moral Reflexions on the particulars of that Parable in the four following Sermons. The laſt is quoted by Photius in the 277th Volume of his Bibliotheca, where he ſpeaks of an Earth-quake at Antioch, where he preached theſe Sermons. He obſerves in the Fourth, that God does not permit any to return from the Dead, and gives the reaſon of it.

The Seventh Sermon is an Expoſition of the Parable of the Man that was ſick of the Palſie; he uſes Jeſus Chriſt's Words, concerning that ſick Man, and his Cure, to prove the Divinity of Jeſus Chriſt.

The Eighth is upon theſe Words of Jeſus Chriſt in S. Matthew, Chap. 26. v. 39. Father, if it be poſſible, let this Cup paſs, &c. There he explains the Myſtery of Chriſt's Incarnation, and in what ſence he feared Death, and would have avoided it.

The Ninth on theſe words of S. Matthew, Enter in at the ſtrait Gate, is againſt publick Shews: At the latter End of it the caſe of Dives is compared with that of Lazarus.

The Tenth contains an Expoſition of the Lord's Prayer: This Prayer is not written in S. Chryſoſtom's ſtyle.

The Eleventh is upon the Reſurrection of Lazarus. That Diſcourſe is none of S. Chryſoſtom's, the ſtyle, elocution, and the very thoughts, are quite different from his.

The Twelfth is upon the Title of the Acts of the Apoſtles: where after a Diſcourſe, concerning the Eſtabliſhment and Perpetuity of the Church, which could neither be ſhaken nor ruined by the ſevereſt Perſecutions; he ſhews, that a Chriſtian Life, and good Works, are more to be valued, than the Gift of working Miracles; he ends with a Commendation of the Biſhop of Antioch, whom he calls the Succeſſor of S. Peter. For, ſaith he, it is one of the Prerogatives of our City

City is to have had for our Maſter S. Peter the firſt of the Apoſtles. It was juſt, that that City, which had the advantage of bearing firſt the Name of a Chriſtian City, ſhould have for her Biſhop the firſt of the Apoſtles: But having enjoy'd that happineſs, we would not ingroſs it to our ſelves, but conſented he ſhould go to Rome, the Imperial City: Yet in giving, we have not loſt him, we have him ſtill; we have not his Body, but his Faith; and having S. Peter's Faith, we may truly ſay, we have S. Peter himſelf. S. John Chryſoſtom.

He juſtifies himſelf in the Thirteenth for the length of his Prefaces; he ſhews there the Uſefulneſs of Reproof, and treats of the Converſion of S. Paul, and of the changing of his Name, and reproves them that neglect to labour in their own converſion, under pretence that God will convert them. God, ſaith he, forceth no man; he draweth only them that are willing to go to him; he is willing to ſave us; but that is, if we be willing to be ſaved.

The Fourteenth is upon theſe words of S. Paul, Rom. c. 5. v. 3. Rejoycing in tribulations. Here he ſhews what is the fruit of afflictions, and of perſecutions.

The ſame Subject is handled in the following diſcourſe, upon theſe words of the ſame Apoſtle: All things work together for good to them that love God.

The Preface of the Sixteenth is againſt ſuch as frequent not the Aſſemblies of the Faithfull in Churches; and then he expounds theſe words of the Apoſtle, If thine enemy hunger, feed him; exhorting Men to forgive injuries.

In the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Sermons he makes many very uſefull reflections upon theſe words of S. Paul, Salute Aquila and Priſcilla. In theſe diſcourſes we have an example, juſtifying how many Moral Thoughts may be ſuggeſted by a ſubject which of it ſelf ſeems dry and barren. For what is there more ſimple in appearance, and of leſs inſtruction, than this Salutation of S. Paul? Yet by a wonderfull Art S. Chryſoſtom makes uſe of it for the explanation of many important inſtructions. As about the reſpect we ought to have for the Poor, Charity towards our Brethren, the ſmall regard that is to be had to Nobility, the profit of working with our own hands, and the reverence due to Church-men, &c.

The Nineteenth and Twentieth Sermons are about what S. Paul ſaith of Marriage in 1 Cor. c. 7. from which he takes occaſion to ſpeak againſt Dancing, Feaſting, and other profane Pomps of Weddings. He teaches what ought to be the end of Marriage among Chriſtians, and how it is to be uſed. " Marriage, ſaith he, is a remedy againſt Fornication, let us not therefore diſhonour " it by filthy Pomps. Chriſtians ought to baniſh from their Weddings deviliſh Pomps, filthy " Songs, laſcivious Conſorts, undecent Dancings, obſcene Words, Riots, exceſſive Laughter; and " they ought to introduce the Servants of Jeſus Chriſt, and his Prieſts; to have Jeſus Chriſt in " Perſon in the midſt of them, as of the Marriage in Cana. Let no man tell me it is the cuſtom; " do not tell me of a cuſtom, if it is ſinfull. If the thing be Evil in it ſelf, how old ſoever the " uſe of it be, retrench it: If it be Good, and not uſual, bring it in. But know that this cuſtom " is not ancient, but an Innovation. Remember the Marriage of Iſaac with Rebecca, of Rachel " with Jacob; the Scripture tells us how thoſe Weddings were kept; it ſhews indeed, that there " was a Feaſt more ſplendid than ordinary; that the Relations and Neighbours were invited, " but there were no Fiddles, no Dancing, nor any other ſhamefull Exceſſes of our Age. Now " at Weddings ſuch laſcivious Songs are ſung, as teach Adultery, and inſpire fooliſh Love; the " Gueſts full of Wine do attend the Bride with impure Diſcourſes. With what reaſon can you " pretend to require Chaſtity in a Woman, whom you have taught from the very Firſt day to " be impudent, and before whom you ſuffer that to be ſaid and done, which your Foot-men " would bluſh to doe or hear? To what purpoſe do ye bring in a Prieſt to crave a bleſſing, and " the next day your ſelves commit baſe actions? In the ſame Homily there are a great many Exhortations of the ſame nature againſt ſuch diſorders, which are not leſs frequent in our days, than they were in the time of this Biſhop. Afterwards he adviſeth both Men and Women to behave themſelves holily in Marriage; and not only to avoid Adultery, but not ſo much as give an occaſion of ſuſpicion: He proves that Second Marriages are not forbidden, though it is better to forbear, and concludes with a ſenſible Declamation againſt Adultery and Fornication.

The Twenty-firſt is upon theſe words, 1 Cor. c. 10. Our Fathers were all under the cloud, &c. After a large Expoſition of which words, he ſpeaks of Alms-deeds, and of the neceſſary Diſpoſitions to communicate worthily.

The Twenty-ſecond is upon theſe words of S. Paul. There muſt be Hereſies. He commends the Old Agapæ, or Feaſts of Charity.

The Twenty-third is of Alms-deeds, and the care which Men ought to have of ſuch as are in want. This ſhould be placed among the Sermons of Morality.

The Twenty-fourth is upon theſe words, 2 Cor. c. 4. Having the ſame Spirit of Faith, &c. He gives great Praiſes to Virginity, and to a Monaſtick life; which he deſcribes in theſe words: " Doe you not take notice of thoſe Monks who live privately, and dwell upon the tops of Moun- " tains? What Auſterities and Mortifications doe they not practiſe? They are covered with Aſhes, " cloathed with Sackcloth, loaden with Chains and Irons, ſhut up in little Cells, ſtruggling con- " tinually with Hunger, they ſpend their time in Watchings to blot out part of their Sins. He obſerves alſo, that though Virginity is a ſuper-natural Gift, yet it is unprofitable if it be not accompanied with Charity and Meekneſs.

S. John Chryſoſtom.

The Twenty-fifth is upon the ſame Text; he oppoſes the Manichees, and exhorts them to give Alms.

The Twenty-ſixth upon the ſame words, preſſes the Duty of Alms-giving.

The Twenty-ſeventh is upon theſe words, 2 Cor. Bear a little with my folly. He lays down Rules very judicious, both at what time and upon what occaſions a Man may commend himſelf.

The Twenty-eighth reproves them who abuſe what S. Paul ſaith, Phil. c. 1. v. 18. What matters it how Chriſt is preached? His Diſcourſe is about Prayer and Humility.

In the Twenty-ninth he treats of the Marriage of Chriſtians, and of the Duties of thoſe that are Married.

The Thirtieth is upon theſe words, 1 Theſſ. c. 4. v. 13. But I would not have you to be ignorant, Brethren, concerning them which are aſleep, that ye ſorrow not even as others which have no hope. He diſcourſes of the way how Chriſtians ſhould bear with the Death of Relations, and confirms what he ſays by the Examples of Job and of Iſaac.

The Thirty-firſt is concerning the Duty of Widows, on theſe words, 1 Tim. c. 5. v. 9. Let not a Widow be choſen of leſs than Sixty years. He there diſcourſes of Children's Education.

The following Sermons have leſs relation to Texts of Scripture, being, for the moſt part, upon ſolemn Feſtival-days.

The Thirty-ſecond is about Judas's Treaſon, where he ſpeaks of the neceſſary Diſpoſitions to communicate worthily.

The Thirty-third concerns the Feſtival of Chriſtmas, which was celebrated for Ten years before in the Eaſt upon the 25th of December, as it had been before at Rome. S. Chryſoſtom proves by ſeveral reaſons, that this was exactly the day of Jeſus Chriſt's Nativity.

The Thirty-fourth and Thirty-fifth are upon the Paſſion of Jeſus Chriſt: In the latter he ſpeaks of forgiving Enemies upon occaſion of the good Thief.

The Thirty-ſixth is upon the Reſurrection from the Dead.

The Thirty-ſeventh is a Sermon upon the Reſurrection of Jeſus Chriſt, preached upon Eaſter-day.

The Thirty-eighth upon the Aſcenſion, was preached in a Church of Martyrs.

The Thirty-ninth and Fortieth Sermons are upon Whit-ſunday. In the former he anſwers that curious Queſtion, Why Miracles are not wrought now, as they were in the time of the Apoſtles?

The Forty-firſt is of the Dignity of the Euchariſt, and the reſpect we ought to ſhew to the holy Myſteries. This diſcourſe ſeems to me to be neither of the Style nor the Order of S. Chryſoſtom.

The Seven following Sermons being Panegyricks upon S. Paul, were tranſlated by Anianus, who lived in Athalaricus his time.

The Forty-ninth is of Meekneſs.

The Fiftieth upon the Converſion of S. Paul, was preached at Antioch after that upon the Title of the Acts.

The Fifty-firſt is upon the Inſcription in the Temple of Athens, To the unknown God, ſpoken of Acts, c. 17. v. 17.

The Fifty-ſecond is upon the beginning of the Firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians: Paul called an Apoſtle, &c.

The Fifty-third ſhews the Profitableneſs of Reading the holy Scripture. It is dedicated to perſons newly baptized; there he extolls the Quality of an Apoſtle. It is one of the Four upon the beginning of the Acts, preached at Antioch before Flavianus.

The Fifty-fourth of Chriſt's Prayers and Qualities, is the Firſt Sermon upon the Incarnation.

The Fifty-fifth is againſt thoſe that Faſt at Eaſter.

The Fifty-ſixth againſt ſuch as obſerve the Jewiſh Faſts.

In the Fifty-ſeventh he ſpeaks of Alms-deeds, upon occaſion of the Hoſpitality practiſed towards the Prophet Elijah, who was reliev'd by the Widow of Sarepta.

The Fifty-eighth of the Pleaſures of the Life to come, and of the Vanity of this World's goods.

The Fifty-ninth is againſt thoſe that deſpair, when they receive not what they ask of God, or who petition for unjuſt things; he there occaſionally ſpeaks of the Duty of Husbands towards their Wives.

In the Sixtieth he compares Riches with Poverty; treats of the manner how Sinners are to be reproved, and blames thoſe who call upon God againſt their Enemies.

The Sixty-firſt begins with an Exclamation againſt thoſe that communicate unworthily: He ſhews that a Preacher is not to preach God's Word with complaiſance, but to reprove Vice with fervency, becauſe this is profitable for Sinners to make them know and confeſs their Sins.

The Sixty-ſecond concerns Martyrs; there he proves, That the beſt way of honouring Martyrs, is to imitate their Vertues.

The Sixty-third is againſt thoſe who teach, That Daemons govern the affairs of this World, and againſt ſuch as doe not endure with patience the Chaſtenings of God; and, laſtly, againſt thoſe who are ſcandalized at the proſperity of the Wicked, and the misfortune of the Righteous.

In

In the Sixty-fourth he treats of S. Paul's action in reſiſting S. Peter; and endeavours to prove, that both did it by agreement for the inſtruction of the Faithfull.

S. John Chryſoſtom.

The Sixty-fifth is a Diſcourſe, or rather a Treatiſe againſt Jews and Gentiles, to prove the Divinity of Jeſus Chriſt.

The Sixty-ſixth is another Treatiſe againſt thoſe who were offended, becauſe of the miſchiefs that happened to the City, and the perſecution of the Prieſts, and of the Faithfull. It is an excellent Explanation of that hard Queſtion, Why there is ſo much evil in the World, if the Providence of God governs it? Both theſe Pieces ſhould be put among S. Chryſoſtom's Treatiſes.

The Sixty-ſeventh is an Homily concerning the Two Paralyticks of the Goſpel: There he proves the Divinity of the Son of God.

The Preface to the Sixty-ſeventh is about the Uſe that Men are to make of Sermons preached in the Church. He gives a reaſon why the Acts of the Apoſtles are read in the Church at Whitſuntide. Laſtly, he ſhews that the Miracles of the Apoſtles proved the Certainty of Chriſt's Reſurrection, and rendred it more famous. This Sermon follows that which he made upon the Title of the Acts.

In the Sixty-eighth, having reproved thoſe who complained that his Sermons were either too long or too ſhort, he gives a reaſon of altering S. Paul's Name, and that of Abraham, and of the Signification of that of Adam.

The Sixty-ninth Sermon was preached at Antioch, in the abſence of the Biſhop. He commends the Martyrs, and treats of Contrition of Heart, and of Alms-deeds.

The Seventieth is upon the Feaſt of S. Baſſus Biſhop and Martyr, upon an Earthquake that happened at Antioch, and upon the Words of Jeſus Chriſt, Matthew, c. 11. v. 29. Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly of heart.

The Seventy-firſt is a Panegyrick upon S. Droſis.

The Seventy-ſecond is a Sermon of Penance, mention'd in the Ninth Homily of Penance.

All theſe Sermons now mention'd were preached at Antioch by S. Chryſoſtom, when he was Prieſt of that Church. There are but two more in this Volume preached at Conſtantinople; the firſt was after the expulſion of Gainas from the City; and the other was after S. Chryſoſtom's return from his firſt Exile.

At the latter end of the Fourth Volume there are Three Sermons of the ſame. The Firſt was preached at Antioch by S. Chryſoſtom immediately after his being made Prieſt. This Sermon is a Panegyrick upon Flavianus, who Ordained him. It is the Firſt that S. Chryſoſtom ever preached. The Two others in the ſame place were preached towards the latter end of his Life: The Firſt at the time when they contrived his Depoſition and former Baniſhment; the Second after he was recalled: In it there is an excellent Compariſon of Sarah ſeized upon by the King of Egypt, and of the Church of Conſtantinople, deprived of his preſence, by the Caballings of Theophilus an Egyptian Biſhop; and a dextrous Commendation of the Empreſs Endoxia.

The firſt Volume contains ſeveral other Sermons, preached for the moſt part at Antioch: The firſt Twenty-one are called Sermons of Statues; becauſe they were preached at the time, and upon the occaſion of a ſedition in Antioch, in the beginning of the Year 388, wherein the People had thrown down and dragged about Streets the Statues of Theodoſius, and of the Empreſs Flaccilla.

The firſt Sermon is upon theſe words of S. Paul to Timothy; Uſe a little Wine for thy Stomach's ſake, and often Infirmities, wherein he alledgeth ſeveral reaſons, why God permits his Saints to be afflicted; he preached it ſometime before that Tumult, which obliged him to diſcontinue his preaching. But the heat of that ſedition was no ſooner over, and the People of Antioch, aſtoniſhed with the fearfull Threatnings of the Emperour, had acknowledged their fault, and turned their fury into Mourning; but he reſumed the Chair for the comfort of that deſolate People: And Flavianus their Biſhop as a good Father, went to the Emperour to aſſwage his Anger.

The firſt Sermon of S. Chryſoſtom upon this Subject, is that which is called the ſecond of Statues: There he bewails the Unhappineſs of that City, exhorting the Inhabitants to implore the Mercy of God by fervent Prayers, and turn away his Wrath by good Works, to prevent the Danger that threatned them. This Diſcourſe is very eloquent: Here are ſome Fragments whereby one may judge of the reſt. "What ſhall I ſay? What ſhall I ſpeak of? Our preſent Con"dition calls for Tears rather than Words, Lamentations rather than Diſcourſes, and Prayers
"rather than Sermons. The blackneſs of our Action is ſo great, the Wound we have given to "our ſelves is ſo deep, and ſo hard to be cured, that we have need to apply our ſelves to an Al-
"mighty Phyſician. Then having compared the Miſery of that City to that of Job, he adds,
"Seven Days have I kept ſilence, as formerly did Job's Friends: Give me leave to open my "Mouth, and bewail our Miſery. —I groan, I weep, not for the ſeverity of the Threatnings,
"but for the exceſs of our Folly: For though the Emperour were not angry with us, and
"ſhould forbear to puniſh us, how ſhould we ſuffer the ſhame of our Action? After this, he deſcribes very elegantly the Happineſs which that City enjoyed before that Mutiny, and the Miſery it was now reduced to; and concludes this Deſcription with theſe Words. "The great City
"of Antioch is in danger of being utterly deſtroyed; ſhe that lately had an infinite Number of "Inhabitants, will ſhortly prove a Wilderneſs; none in this World can help her: For the of"fended

S. John Chryſoſtom.

" ſended Emperour hath no equal upon Earth, he is the Sovereign and the Maſter of all Men. " All we can do is to make our Application to the King of Heaven; let us addreſs our ſelves to " him, and call upon him for help. If we obtain not Mercy from Heaven, we have no re- " miſſion to hope for. He obſerves, that God permitted that Miſchief, to puniſh the People for their Blaſphemies, and teaches rich Men what uſe they are to make of their Riches.

The next Sermon was preached when Flavianus was gone to Court to ſollicite the Buſineſs of the City of Antioch: There he repreſents the Charity of Flavianus, who would undertake that Journey: He tells them the things that the Biſhop was to repreſent to the Emperour, and bids them hope that theſe Remonſtrances will be heard, affirming that he is confident of all through God's Mercy. " God, ſays he, will ſtand betwixt the petitioning Biſhop, and the Emperour " addreſſed to; he will ſoften the King's Heart, and put in the Biſhop's Mouth the Words which " he ſhould ſpeak. He intreats the People to pray earneſtly, that God would mollifie the Spirit of the Emperour. He ſpeaks of faſting in Lent, affirming that right faſting is to abſtain from Sin. At laſt he adviſes the People to avoid three Vices, Evil ſpeaking, hatred of their Neighbour, and Blaſphemy.

He goes on to inſtruct and comfort the People of Antioch, in the following Sermons. In the 4th he praiſes God, that the Chriſtian's Affliction in the City of Antioch, had put them upon thoughts of their Salvation, and exhorts them to Patience: And in the laſt place, inveigheth againſt Swearing, and promiſes to ſpeak of it all the Week. This Sermon was preached upon Munday of the Firſt week in Lent.

Next day he continued the ſame Subject, encouraging the People of Antioch to bear with Conſtancy and Generoſity all the Threatnings againſt them, and not to fear either Death or Sufferings. He ſhews, that Sin is the only thing that Chriſtians ought to fear, and he ſpeaks again eagerly againſt Swearing.

The 6th Sermon was preached the next Day after, for the Conſolation of the People that were intimidated by the Magiſtrate. He giveth God thanks that Flavianus was arrived before thoſe that carried the News of the Mutiny. He tells the reaſons that the Biſhop was to uſe to the Emperour, and explains a Law, that was to be urged: He tells them, That Sin only was to be feared, and that Swearing ought to be avoided.

The 7th and 8th were preached upon Thurſday and Friday of the ſame Week: He comforts the People, and explains the beginning of Geneſis, which was then begun to be read in the Churches in Lent. He diſcourſes againſt Swearing, and reminds them, that it was the ſixth Day, that he had preached againſt that Sin, and that it ſhould be the laſt time: Which ſhews, that the 15th Sermon followeth this, for there he tells them, that though he had reſolved the Day before to ſpeak no more of God's Command not to ſwear, becauſe he had ſufficiently diſcourſed on that Subject the Days before, yet he found himſelf obliged to inſiſt upon it, till he ſaw them reformed.

The 16th Homily was preached upon Saturday, in the ſecond Week in Lent: Becauſe, he ſays, at the latter End, behold we have paſſed the ſecond faſting Week. He ſpeaks of the foregoing Sermon, as of his laſt, though it had been preached ſome Days before.

It is very likely, that the 9th and 10th Sermons follow this, and that they were preached before the Judges, ſent by the Emperour, had frighted the People; for S. Chryſoſtom ſays nothing there concerning the Deſolation of the City, but handleth ſome Points of Morality, particularly againſt Swearing, and againſt thoſe that refuſed to hear Sermons after Dinner.

The Officers of the Emperour having erected a Chamber of Juſtice at Antioch, to puniſh the Town for their ſedition, and to condemn thoſe that were moſt guilty; dreadfull was the Conſternation of the People, which made them think of nothing elſe, but how they might appeaſe the Judges, and mitigate the ſeverity of the Judgment. S. Chryſoſtom deſcribes the Day of that Judgment, as the moſt dreadfull thing in the World: He ſays, that all the People expected nothing but Death, ſome fled, others hid themſelves, the Streets were empty; that the reſt of the Inhabitants aſſembled near the Palace-gate, waiting there for their Condemnation: That within the Palace, all was full of Men put to the Torture, or ſentenced to Death: That Mothers wept for their Children, and Siſters for their Brethren: In one word, That the whole City was in a fearfull Deſolation, in expectation of all manner of miſchief. In this ſad Conjuncture of Affairs, the Hermites left their ſolitude to come to Antioch, to ſollicite the Judges in behalf of the People; The Clergy alſo attended to move them to Clemency: And every one did his endeavour to work upon them, by all the Tokens of regret and ſubmiſſion, that can be given in ſuch occaſions. The Judges moved with theſe things, and touched eſpecially by the Remonſtrances of the Monks, inclined to Mercy, and contented themſelves to take from Antioch, the Quality of Metropolis of the Eaſt, and to forbid the acting of publick Spectacles for the recreation of the People: Having in the mean time ſent to priſon ſome of the Magiſtrates, and Chief men of the City, till they ſhould know the reſolution of the Emperour. This Judgment was no ſooner pronounced, but S. Chryſoſtom opened his Mouth to return God thanks for the Succeſs, as he doth in the 10th, 11th, 12th, and 13th Homilies, which were preached one after another, thoſe ſucceſſive Days after the Judgment. But ſome having again ſtruck a new Terrour into the People, S. Chryſoſtom endeavours to ſettle them in the 14th Homily.

The 18th Homily was preached by S. Chryſoſtom, after Mid-Lent, as he ſaith in the beginning, complaining of ſome who rejoyced, that half the time of faſting was over, and of the Impatience which the Inhabitants of Antioch ſhew'd, becauſe they were deprived of their bathings and pleaſures. He takes notice, that they had not been deprived of them above 20 Days.

ence

S. Chryſoſtom being fallen ſick, appeared not in ten Days, but was no ſooner able to go abroad, but he began again, and preached the 19th and 21ſt Sermons, that are particularly directed to the People come out of the Country to Antioch, about the Feaſt of Eaſter.

S. John Chryſoſtom.

The 22d was preached towards the end of Lent. He diſcourſeth there of the neceſſary qualifications, to communicate worthily at Eaſter; affirming, that it is abſolutely needfull to forget injuries, and to be reconciled; from whence he takes occaſion to ſpeak againſt Enmities and reſentments; he adds threatnings againſt ſuch as had not yet left their Cuſtom of Swearing, notwithſtanding his manifold Exhortations to this purpoſe in the time of Lent.

The laſt Sermon upon the ſame ſubject is the 20th, about the Return of Flavianus, who came back to Antioch before Eaſter, having obtained of the Emperour's Clemency, pardon for the City of Antioch. In this Diſcourſe S. Chryſoſtom eloquently deſcribes the wonderfull Conduct of Flavianus, the Diſcourſe he had with the Emperour, the Anſwers of that Prince, and the rejoycing of the People at Antioch, when they received the welcome News of the pardon granted them. This is the true Order of thoſe 22 Sermons of S. Chryſoſtom, which is much perverted in the Editions.

The other Homilies in this Volume, are either Sermons upon ſome points of Doctrine, or of morals, or panegyricks upon Saints. The Sermons of the former kind are theſe: ſix Homilies of the incomprehenſible Nature of God againſt the Anomæans, the laſt whereof was preached at Conſtantinople; a Diſcourſe of the Conſubſtantiality againſt the Arians, quoted by Theodoret in the ſixth Council. A Diſcourſe of the Judgment, which follows immediately after the laſt. One againſt thoſe who like the Pagans, kept the firſt Days of the Months, preached upon New-years-day: A Sermon of Jeſus Chriſt's Baptiſm; a Diſcourſe about the Devil's Temptations; ſix Sermons againſt the Jews: The Homilies of Penance, which formerly were more in Number, and are now to be reduced into the following Order. The firſt beareth that Title in the firſt Volume; the ſecond and third are loſt, the fourth and fifth are alſo right ſet down in the firſt Volume: We have neither the ſixth nor the ſeventh, except that which is in the 4th Volume be one of theſe two, for it is falſly intituled, The third Homily of Penitence, ſeeing he ſays in the beginning, that he had been ſome Days without preaching; whereas it is evident by the beginning of the 4th Homily of Penance, that he had preached the four firſt Homilies of Penance one after another without interruption. The 9th is the 65 Sermon of the 5th Volume of Penance, and of the ſorrow of King Ahab. The 10th Homily is the 9th in the firſt Volume, and the laſt is the eleventh.

The Diſcourſe againſt the Gentiles, is not a Sermon, but a Treatiſe which is to be placed amongſt S. Chryſoſtom's Treatiſes: But the Diſcourſe of Baptiſm, is a Homily directed to the Catechumens.

The Diſcourſe of Anathema's is S. Chryſoſtom's, though ſome Criticks have doubted it. It is his Style, and therein he ſpeaks of the Homilies of the incomprehenſible Nature of God; and it was quoted near 400 Years ago by Philotheus, Patriarch of Conſtantinople; as written by S. Chryſoſtom. He proveth in that Homily, that an Anathema is not lightly to be pronounced againſt any, nor others raſhly to be condemned.

The two Treatiſes of Prayer, are probably written by S. Chryſoſtom: but the ſix Diſcourſes about Providence, which are in the ſame Volume are none of his, no more than the laſt of Penance, and Continence, which are ſuppoſed to belong to John, the Faſter, Patriarch of Conſtantinople, who lived long after S. Chryſoſtom.

The Firſt of S. Chryſoſtom's Panegyricks, is upon S. Philogonius Archbiſhop of Antioch: the Second upon S. Babylas, likewiſe Archbiſhop of Antioch: the Third upon Maximus and Juventinus Martyrs, who ſuffered Martyrdom under Julian the Apoſtate. Theſe two Sermons were preached one after the other upon the 24th, and the 26th of January, after the Three firſt Homilies of Lazarus, as is noted in the Fourth. The Third is of S. Pelagia a Virgin of Antioch, who threw her ſelf headlong rather than loſe her Virginity. The Fourth of S. Ignatius Biſhop of Antioch. The Fifth of S. Romanus Martyr of Antioch. The Sixth is a Diſcourſe to the Praiſe of the Seven Macchabees. The Seventh is a Panegyrick upon S. Meletius. The Eighth of S. Lucianus Martyr of Antioch, preached the next Day after the Feaſt of Chriſt's Baptiſm. The Ninth upon S. Julianus. The Tenth is a ſecond Diſcourſe upon S. Romanus the Martyr. The Eleventh is a ſecond Diſcourſe of the Macchabees. The Twelfth is a third Diſcourſe upon the ſame Subject. The Thirteenth is of S. Domnina, and of her two Daughters, Berenice and Proſdoce, who choſe a voluntary Death before the Violation of their Virginity. The Fourteenth of S. Euſtachius Biſhop of Antioch. The Fifteenth is a Diſcourſe of Helias and S. Peter. The Sixteenth is of the Egyptian Martyrs. The Seventeenth upon S. Barlaam Martyr in Caſarea in Cappadocia. The Panegyrick upon the Martyr Phocas, and the Fragment of that of S. Thecla, which is in the ſame Volume, are not of S. Chryſoſtom's Style: But the Diſcourſe upon all the holy Martyrs, is an excellent Sermon worthy of S. Chryſoſtom. Among the reſt, this is one of the fineſt Paſſages there. " The Devil, ſays he, has introduced Death into the World, and " God makes uſe of Death to introduce us into Heaven by Martyrdom. Martyrdom is a Com- " bat, the Martyrs are on the one Side, and Tyrants on the other: The Tyrants are armed, and

S. John Chryſoſtom.

" the Martyrs naked: Yet they that are naked get the Victory, and they that bear Arms are " vanquiſhed. What Wonder is this? He that is beaten proves Victor over him that beats him: " He that is bound overcomes him that is at liberty: He that is burnt tames him that burns " him; and he that dies ſurmounts him that puts him to Death. It is Grace that works theſe " Miracles, they are above the ſtrength of Nature.

The ſixth Volume of the Greek and Latin Edition of Paris contains ſeveral Sermons, which Fronto Ducæus, and other Criticks, have judged not to be of S. Chryſoſtom's Style. Fronto Ducæus paſſes this Judgment upon it: " We have collected in this ſixth Volume ſome Sermons " which are not upon whole Books of Scripture, but upon ſome places, written in a Style " differing from that of S. Chryſoſtom's Works; for theſe Diſcourſes are Dramatical and full of " Proſopopœia's, the Style is ſententious and conciſe, with frequent Allegories; and we find not " there thoſe Similitudes and other Beauties ſo frequent in S. Chryſoſtom's Works; and yet the " Authors of theſe Sermons lived either in the Time of S. Chryſoſtom, or not long after him. " But we ought not to wonder, that ſome of theſe are quoted under S. Chryſoſtom's Name, in " very ancient Councils; becauſe they were already publiſhed under his Name, and Councils " do not uſually examine narrowly into the Authors of thoſe Books which they quote: Being " contented to debate the Queſtions offered, and to oppoſe to Heretical Errours the Writings re- " ceived in the Church; as did the Apoſtles and other Fathers who quoted Apocryphal Books. That's the Judgment which this Learned Jeſuit makes of the Sermons contained in this Volume; but if we would know whether it is juſt, we muſt examine them ſtrictly one after another.

The Firſt Homily, (the Author whereof ſhews, that there is the ſame Law-giver both of the Old and New Teſtament,) is not S. Chryſoſtom's, though Photius quotes it under his Name; for, 1. The Style is quite different from S. Chryſoſtom's: 2. The order and diſpoſition of this Homily differs much from thoſe of S. Chryſoſtom. 3. It is full of Allegories, which are very rare in S. Chryſoſtom. 4. Moſt of the Thoughts are unworthy of him. 5. There is great Confuſion. 6. It both begins and ends in a different manner from the Homilies of S. Chryſoſtom. 7. It is obſerved at the End of that Diſcourſe, that it was written in a Time when the Roman Empire was under Oppreſſion. 8. The Bleſſed Virgin is there often called Θεοτόκος; ſo that it is plain, this was not done without Affectation.

The two following Homilies upon two Places of the Beginning of Geneſis, are unworthy of S. Chryſoſtom for the ſame Reaſons.

The Homily upon theſe Words of Abraham to his Servant, Gen. 24. v. 2. Put thine hand under my Thigh, &c. is more rational than the foregoing, as to its Notions, but the Style is too conciſe and cloſe, and comes not near the eaſineſs of S. Chryſoſtom. Yet this Diſcourſe is ancient and worth reading, and I am apt to believe that it may have been written by Severianus of Gabala, to whom the following Sermon of the brazen Serpent lifted up by Moſes in the Wilderneſs, is attributed in the Manuſcripts, and under whoſe Name it is quoted by S. John Damaſcene, in the three firſt Diſcourſes about Images, by Pope Adrian I. Ch. 26. and by the Aſſembly of Biſhops at Paris, in the Year 824. The Author treats of the Trinity, and of the Divinity of the Holy Ghoſt. It appears both by the Style, and by the Beginning, that it is written by the ſame Author as the foregoing.

The four Homilies upon Job, are Sermons written by a Monk of the latter Times, who having ſtudied Iſocrates his Oration to Demonicus, coldly imitates him in his four Diſcourſes, where there is neither Wit, nor Order, nor Eloquence, nor Thought, nor Reaſoning; yet he fooliſhly fanſies that he out-did S. Chryſoſtom, in Point of Eloquence, many Bars length.

The fifth Homily upon Job, is the 22d of thoſe Homilies, which Simeon Logotheta compoſed out of ſeveral Paſſages taken out of S. Chryſoſtom.

The Homily upon this Verſe of Pſalm 38. Man diſquieteth himſelf in vain, comes nearer to S. Chryſoſtom's Style, and yet is not quite the ſame.

The Oration of the Turtle-Dove, or of the Church, is an impertinent Diſcourſe, like the Treatiſe, intituled, the Supper, falſly aſcribed to S. Cyprian, from which the Author of this hath taken ſome of his Impertinencies.

The Homily upon the Prophet Elias is more valuable, and yet ſeems not to me to be S. Chryſoſtom's. I ſhould rather attribute it to Severianus of Gabala, as well as the three following, of Joſeph, Suſanna, and the three Children in the fiery Furnace.

The Homily of Seals written in the ſame Style with the foregoing, does certainly belong to Severianus of Gabala, being quoted under his Name by Theodoret in the third Dialogue, and by Adrian I. The ſame Character and Style may be found in the Sermons of Faith, and of the Law of Nature; in that of the Holy Trinity; in the Diſcourſe of the Divinity of the Holy Ghoſt, quoted by Photius under S. Chryſoſtom's Name; in the Sermon upon Pentecoſt; in the Sermon preached before Arcadius Theodoſius's Son, upon the words of the beginning of S. John, In the beginning was the Word, &c. in the Sermon of Circumciſion, that of the Remembrance of Martyrs, and upon Jeſus Chriſt's being Shepherd and Sheep; in that upon theſe words of S. Paul, My grace is ſufficient for thee; in that of the prodigal Son, of Herodias's Daughters dancing; in that upon the Words of Matth. 13. The Jews being aſſembled took counſel; in the Sermon of the Ten Virgins, the Homily of the Woman taken in Adultery, and of the Phariſees; in that upon Good-Friday, of the Man that was born blind, and upon theſe words of Jeſus Chriſt, Matth. 6. Take heed heed that you do not your Alms before Men to be ſeen of them; in the Sermon againſt Hypocriſie; in that upon the beginning of the Year; in the Homily about the barren Fig-tree; in the Sermon of the Phariſee's Feaſt; that of Lazarus and Dives; and in that upon the beginning of Pſalm 92, which is the 105th in the 5th Volume of S. Chryſoſtom, of the Eton Edition. The Author of theſe Homilies, writes in a ſhort, conciſe Style; enlarges much upon Dogmatical points, and very little upon Moral ones: What he ſays is intermixt with Allegories: In a word, if one compares theſe Homilies one with another, and with them that are certainly written by Severianus, he will find that they are very like. S. John Chryſoſtom.

The Homilies of the Theophany, and the Marriage in Cana, are two inconſiderable Diſcourſes unworthy of S. Chryſoſtom.

That of the evil Woman, is yet worſe. It was compoſed by ſome modern Greek, who having read in Hiſtory that S. Chryſoſtom had made a Diſcourſe againſt Women, made one to repreſent it: In which either he, or ſome body elſe, hath put theſe words in the beginning, that Sozomen relateth: Herodias is mad again, and asketh for S. John's Head. The reſt of this Diſcourſe is a continual Repetition of impertinent things.

The Homily of the Canaanitiſh Woman, is alſo in Latin among the Homilies upon ſeveral paſſages of the New Teſtament, aſcribed to Origen, and in the Collection of Homilies upon S. Matthew, Hom. 14th and 17th. But here it is in Greek, and larger. The Doctrine, and Thoughts of this Diſcourſe are rational enough, but the Style is very different from S. Chryſoſtom's.

The Sermons upon S. John the Fore-runner of Jeſus Chriſt; upon the Apoſtles, S. Peter and S. Paul; upon the Twelve Apoſtles, S. Thomas the Apoſtle, and S. Stephen; are unworthy of S. Chryſoſtom, not only for the Subſtance, but alſo the Style. Yet the laſt of them is ſomething more rational than the foregoing. The Diſcourſe of S. Thomas is quoted under S. Chryſoſtom's Name, in the ſixth Council, and in that of Lateran, under Pope Martin I.

The Homilies of the Annunciation, Theophany, and the Reſurrection, have no Relation to S. Chryſoſtom's Style.

The Sermon concerning the Woman of Samaria, is a Diſcourſe, whoſe beginning is quite of another Style than S. Chryſoſtom's: The latter End is taken word for word from the 31ſt. Homily of S. Chryſoſtom, upon the Goſpel of S. John.

The four Sermons of the Aſcenſion, publiſhed by Voſſius, are not unworthy of S. Chryſoſtom, though the Style is not altogether the ſame with that of this Father's Works: In all probability, they are part of thoſe Two and Twenty which Photius read, which he mentions in the 25th Volume, as well as the Sermon upon the ſame Subject, cited by Facundus, l. 11. c. 14.

The Homily which proves, that a Diſciple of Jeſus Chriſt ought never to be angry, does not come near to the Style, or the loftineſs of S. Chryſoſtom.

The Sermon of the falſe Prophets, is a Declamation made by ſome Greek, rather than a Diſcourſe really preached by S. Chryſoſtom, before his Death, as the Title proves.

The Homily of the publick Games in the Cirque, is a pitifull Diſcourſe, not worth reading.

The Sermon of Chriſt's Nativity, Page 493. is quoted by S. Cyril, as S. Chryſoſtom's, in his Treatiſe to the Empreſſes, mentioned in the Council of Epheſus; there is no conſiderable difference of Style; which convinces me that it is S. Chryſoſtom's, or at leaſt, that it was taken out of his Works.

The three following Sermons, the Firſt whereof, is upon the Words of S. Luke's Goſpel, ch. 2. Cæſar Auguſtus made a Decree, that all the World ſhould be taxed, &c. the Second upon the Anſwer given to Zachariah, Ch. 1. of S. Luke, and the Third upon S. John's Conception, are all written in the ſame Style, very different from S. Chryſoſtom's; they contain abundance of inſipid Obſervations upon the Text of S. Luke, which one cannot read without Tediouſneſs and Trouble.

The Homily upon the Parable of the Houſholder, that hired Work-men into his Vine-yard, doth much reſemble S. Chryſoſtom's Style; if it be not his, it belongs to ſome ancient eloquent Author, and ought to be placed among thoſe Diſcourſes, which though perhaps not genuine, yet are not to be deſpiſed. Some Fragments of them may be found amongſt the Homilies, which were collected out of the Works of S. Chryſoſtom.

I think the ſame Judgment ought to be made concerning the Sermon, or rather the Fragment of the Homily upon the Publican, and the Phariſee, and of that about the blind Man, and Zacheus, which are unworthy of S. Chryſoſtom.

A Diſcourſe made to prove, that Monks ought not to uſe rallery or freedom of Speech, is of the kind and ſtyle of S. Chryſoſtom; there is a digreſſion againſt thoſe that kept Women with them. The Authors of S. Chryſoſtom's Life obſerve, that he wrote ſix Orations upon that Subject. This might perhaps be one of them.

The Panegyrick upon S. John the Evangeliſt, is not worth any thing, but is a pitifull Diſcourſe made up of obſolete and ſenſeleſs Words.

The ſecond Homily of the Holy Croſs, is written by the Monk Pantaleon, Deacon of Conſtantinople, who lived in the 13th Century: The firſt Diſcourſe upon the ſame Subject, does not belong to a better Author.

The beginning of the Homily of S. Peter's Abjuration, is likewiſe written by ſome modern Greek, who added at the latter End an Exhortation, taken out of S. Chryſoſtom's Diſcourſe upon theſe words of S. Paul, Having the ſame Spirit, &c.

The

S. John Chryſoſtom.

The Homily of Bread and of Alms, is a Collection of ſeveral Notions of S. Chryſoſtom's upon that Subject.

The Diſcourſe of Eaſter, is very like S. Chryſoſtom's Style.

The Sermon about Jeſus Chriſt's ſecond Coming, is a Preface annexed to the moral Exhortations of the 25th, and 31ſt Homilies, upon the Epiſtle to the Romans.

There are ſeveral other Sermons in the Greek Edition of S. Chryſoſtom, printed at Eton, which were not inſerted into the Greek and Latin Edition of Paris, as not belonging to S. Chryſoſtom, or elſe but Collections out of this Father's Works.

In the 5th Volume, page 680, there is one upon theſe words Pſal. 92. Dominus regnavit, &c. and upon thoſe of S. Paul, When Jeſus Chriſt ſhall have given up the Kingdom to the Father, wherein he ſpeaks of Baptiſm.

Another in the ſame Volume, page 740. of thoſe Women that brought Spices to embalm the Body of Jeſus Chriſt: Wherein the Author proves, that the Evangeliſts do not contradict one another, upon the Subject of Chriſt's Reſurrection: Both theſe Homilies are well enough written, but they are not S. John Chryſoſtom's.

There is a Third in the ſame Volume, page 789. upon theſe words of S. Paul, The good that I would, I do not, but the Evil that I would not, I do. The Author ſhews there, in what Sence Jacob was a Type of Chriſt, and declaims againſt publick Shews. This Diſcourſe is full of Allegories contrary to S. Chryſoſtom's Cuſtom: It may be attributed to the Author of the following Diſcourſe on theſe ſame words of the ſame Apoſtle: My Grace is ſufficient for thee.

The 123d Homily in the ſame Volume, pag. 807. upon theſe words of the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, When we ſin wilfully, there remains no more Oblation, is a Collection out of the 20th, 15th, and 14th Homilies of S. Chryſoſtom, upon the Epiſtle to the Hebrews.

The Homily upon the Nativity of Jeſus Chriſt in the ſame Volume, pag. 843. where the guardian Angels of Countrys and Provinces are diſcourſed of, is cited by Photius under S. Chryſoſtom's Name: Yet the Style ſhews it not to be S. Chryſoſtom's: It is more probable, that it belongs to Severianus of Gabala.

At the latter End of this Volume are ſeveral other Homilies, yet more unworthy of S. Chryſoſtom: Viz. the ſecond Panegyrick upon S. Stephen, the Homily upon Palm-Sunday, upon the Thief, upon Judas his Treaſon, and many Sermons upon Eaſter, &c.

The ſixth Volume is intermixt with ſeveral Homilies, which are only Fragments or Collections, taken out of the genuine Works of S. Chryſoſtom, ſuch as theſe following Sermons; Of Charity, pag. 742. Of Meekneſs, pag. 750. Sermons concerning Faſting, pag. 883. A Diſcourſe againſt thoſe that ſlept upon the Saturday before Whitſunday, pag. 857. That the Salvation of the Soul is to be preferred before the Welfare of the Body, pag. 893. That Prieſts ought not to be upbraided with living at Eaſe, pag. 896. Three Diſcourſes of Penance, pag. 903. That we ought not to weep for the Dead, pag. 943. Of Patience, pag. 949. Of the Soul's Salvation, pag. 961. Againſt thoſe that abuſed Virgins conſecrated to God, pag. 971. A Diſcourſe againſt Hereticks, pag. 979.

Laſtly, The 7th Volume from pag. 271, to 587. contains above a hundred Sermons upon all ſorts of Subjects, whereof ſome are not printed in the Greek and Latin Edition of Paris; namely, thoſe that are either unworthy of S. Chryſoſtom, impertinent and fooliſh, or diſcourſes of modern Authors, or Collections and Fragments taken out of S. Chryſoſtom. The Catalogue and Titles are in the Table of that Volume.

I believe, that moſt of S. Chryſoſtom's Sermons, which Photius profeſſes to have read, and which are not, now extant, ought to be placed in the ſame rank. In the 25th Volume of his Bibliotheca, he ſpeaks of a Book bearing the Name of S. Chryſoſtom, intituled, Remarks upon the Death of Jeſus Chriſt: " Which, ſays he, contained two and twenty ſhort Sermons, upon the Death " of Jeſus Chriſt: There were beſides, as he adds, in the ſame Volume, two and twenty Diſcourſes " upon the Aſcenſion, and ſeventeen upon Whitſunday. S. Chryſoſtom did not uſe to make ſhort Sermons; his are generally long and full; he abounded in words and notions which he could not eaſily contract. Yet Photius hath taken no notice, that theſe Diſcourſes were not S. Chryſoſtom's.

But he ſays, in the 274th Volume, concerning three Diſcourſes of the beheading of S. John the Baptiſt, that their Subject and Method were very different from the other Sermons of this Father, as well as their Style, which was flat, and far from the Elegancy of S. Chryſoſtom. The extracts in the ſame place, which he made out of a Diſcourſe, concerning the 40 Martyrs aſcribed to S. Chryſoſtom, do prove his Aſſertion.

Among thoſe Homilies, which he abridges in the 277th Vol. there are ſeveral which are rejected, as not being S. Chryſoſtom's (i), but Severianus's of Gabala, or of ſome other ancient Authors.

(i) There are ſeveral which are rejected as not being S. Chryſoſtom's.] There are Extracts, out of the Homily of the Holy Ghoſt, out of the Diſcourſe upon theſe Words, Jeſus Chriſt is the laſt, &c. of the Sermon upon the Incarnation, and the Guardian Angels; of the Treatiſe which proves, that both the Old and the New Teſtament have the ſame Law-giver; of the Diſcourſe upon theſe Words of S. Paul, My Grace is ſufficient for thee, &c. The Homily of the Holy Ghoſt is in the ſixth Volume of the Paris Edition: See the 221ſt, and 222d page. The Homily upon the Nativity, and of the Angels, are in the Eton Edition, Vol 5. pag. 843. That of the Law-giver in the Old and New Teſtament, is the firſt of the ſixth Volume of the Paris Edition: There is alſo in the ſame Volume the Diſcourſe upon thoſe Words of the Apoſtle, My Grace is ſufficient for thee; the Sermon upon theſe Words, 2 Cor. c. 11. If any one be in Chriſt, let him be a new Creature, &c.

But

But one ought not to paſs the ſame Judgment upon thoſe which Theodoret quotes in his Dialogues, which are certainly S. Chryſoſtom's, and which are now extant, moſt of them (k) at leaſt. S. John Chryſoſtom.

Facundus l. 4. c. 2. quotes a Sermon of S. Chryſoſtom's, in Commendation of Diodorus, this Diſcourſe was publiſhed both in Greek and Latin, by the Learned Bigotius, with the Life of S. Chryſoſtom, written by Palladius: It is a Thankſgiving of that Saint to Diodorus of Tarſus, who had publickly commended him. He there confeſſeth, that the Commendations given him by Diodorus, did put him to ſome trouble: " For, ſays he, with much humility, great praiſes do " not leſs check the Conſcience than Sins, when a Man finds not in himſelf thoſe Vertues which " are commended by others. After that, he returns upon Diodorus the Praiſes which he had given him; and as he was compared with S. John Baptiſt, becauſe of his Name; he ſhews that Diodorus deſerved that Name better than he, having all the Vertues of that holy Fore-runner of Jeſus Chriſt.

Laſtly, Cotelierius in the third Volume of his Monuments, hath publiſhed an Homily under S. Chryſoſtom's Name, upon theſe words of Matt. 20. By what Authority doſt thou theſe things? This Diſcourſe is written by ſome ancient Author, but not S. Chryſoſtom; it has his Genius, the reflections are juſt, and the reaſons ſolid: But one does not find that over-flowing Eloquence, nor that abundant fruitfulneſs which was ſo peculiar to S. Chryſoſtom, though it is not unworthy of him. There the Anomæans are refuted; and he proves, that none ought to pretend to penetrate into Myſteries with humane reaſon; but that we ought to depend upon what the Scripture ſays, without ſearching further.

Theſe are almoſt all the Sermons that are attributed to S. Chryſoſtom, which were printed in Greek and Latin. There are ſeveral other Manuſcripts in Libraries, that falſly bear the Name of this great Saint, and which are not only unworthy of him, but alſo are not worth publiſhing. For in my opinion, it is equally prudent to ſuppreſs the ill pieces that are in Libraries, as to publiſh thoſe that are worth it. It is a kind of Theft, to keep in obſcurity from the publick thoſe Monuments that may be uſefull: But it is alſo a great impoſition upon the World, to ſet forth ſuch Books as ſerve for nothing elſe, but to weary the Readers, to increaſe the Number of bad Books, and to fill Libraries with unprofitable Volumes. I wiſh, that as Men prohibit the ſelling of bad Wares, ſo they would forbid publiſhing of bad Books, though they are under the Name of great Men. Had this Law been obſerved in the Common-wealth of Learning, from the beginning of Printing, the World would not have been over-whelmed with infinite Loads of bad Books, which cauſe ſo much Confuſion in all Arts and Sciences, and particularly in Divinity. This may be ſaid by the bye, upon occaſion of the vaſt Number of Sermons, which have been Printed under S. Chryſoſtom's Name. But it is leſs to be wondered at, that the modern Greeks, to advance the worth of their own productions, which of themſelves were of very little value, would raiſe them, by the glorious Name of our Saint. That which is moſt ſurpriſing, is, that Men ſhould have the impudence to give Diſcourſes written by Latin Authors, the Name of a Greek Father. It may ſo happen, that the Original Greek of ſome Book might be loſt, and that nothing might remain but a Verſion, as upon the Sermon of S. Joſeph, and Continency quoted by S. Auſtin, which is in Latin, among the Works of S. Chryſoſtom: But it is impoſſible, that Sermons taken out of the Works of Latin Fathers, or which were viſibly compoſed at firſt in Latin, ſhould be written by a Greek Father. As for example, it were ridiculous to ſay, that the Diſcourſe of Adam and Eve, which is made up of ſeveral paſſages of S. Auſtin, and which contains the 31ſt, and 32d Chapters of Gennadius his Book of Eccleſiaſtical Dogmes: It were, I ſay, ridiculous to believe that this was ever written by S. Chryſoſtom: And that Man is little acquainted with the ſtyle of Authors, that cannot perceive, that the imperfect Commentary upon S. Matthew, is written by a Latin Author; and that moſt of the Homilies upon the Old and New Teſtament, whereof we have no Greek Originals, and which are found in the Latin Editions of S. Chryſoſtom, mixt with his own proper Works, were compoſed originally in Latin and not in Greek. Theſe are, the ſecond Homily upon Geneſis, and thoſe that follow, to the 16th, from pag. 206. of the laſt Edition, at Lyons, to pag. 222. Eight Sermons upon ſeveral Hiſtories of the Books of Kings, from pag. 243. to pag. 250. Five Homilies upon Job, pag. 261, &c.

(k) But one ought not to paſs the ſame Judgment upon thoſe which Theodoret quotes in his Dialogues, which are certainly S. Chryſoſtom's, and which are now extant moſt of them.] He quotes a Diſcourſe preached by S. Chryſoſtom, after the Speech of the Gothick Ambaſſidour, which is not found among S. Chryſoſtom's Diſcourſes. The ſecond paſſage which he quotes in the firſt Dialogue, is taken out of the Homily of the Nativity, Vol. I. pag. 426. The Homily which Theodoret cites, under this Title, Adogmatical Homily, ſhewing that which is ſaid of Jeſus Chriſt, ſeems unworthy of the Power, and of the Divinity, is that which is entituled, Of Conſubſtantiality, which is in the firſt Volume, pag. 360. The place which he quotes out of the Commentary upon Pſal. 41. is not in that which is now extant: I have not found the Homily of the Confuſion of Languages, nor the Paſſage taken out of the Homily, preached in the great Church. The Homilies againſt thoſe who affirm, that Dæmons govern the things of this World, againſt thoſe that faſt upon Eaſter-day, and the Homily of Chriſt's Aſſumption, are among thoſe that we have; as well as the Paſſages taken out of Theodoret's Commentaries upon the Epiſtle to the Epheſians, upon the Goſpel of S. John, and that of S. Matthew.

S. John Chryſoſtom.

Two other Homilies, pag. 267. Two Prefaces upon the Pſalms, pag. 269, and 270. A Diſcourſe upon the Uſefulneſs of the Pſalms, pag. 272. Homilies upon Pſalms, 9th, 14th, 22d, 24th, 25th, 26th, 29th, 33d, 37th, 38th, 39th, 40th, 42d, 68th, 71ſt, 84th, 90th, 93d, 95th, 96th, 121ſt, 122d. A Sermon upon theſe Words, Wiſdom, Chap. 3. They ſeem dead in the Eyes of Fools, and of Men without Senſe. Four Homilies upon four places of Iſaiah, pag. 598th, 613th, and 614th. An Homily upon Jeremiah, pag. 616th. A Sermon of the three Children, pag. 617th. One of Suſanna, ibid. and one upon Zach. Chap. 6. pag. 619. Almoſt all theſe Diſcourſes have the ſtyle of the Latin Preachers, they are full of Sentences, Antitheſes, Figures, and playing upon Words (l), which are uſual in Latin Authors. One neither meets with the Eloquence, nor the Copiouſneſs, nor Fruitfulneſs, nor Sublimity of the Expreſſions of S. Chryſoſtom, and the method is quite different from his (m): In a word, the matters there treated of are not ſuch as S. Chryſoſtom uſes to diſcourſe of (n).

We cannot judge otherwiſe of the greateſt part of thoſe Homilies upon ſeveral paſſages of the four Goſpels which are not in the Greek, viz. the 27 Homilies upon S. Matthew, in the ſecond Volume of the Lyons Edition, pag. 465, &c. to 502. Of the 14 Homilies upon S. Mark, from pag. 503, to pag. 519. Of ſix Homilies upon S. Luke, from pag. 519, to pag. 529. Of that upon Zacchæus, pag. 551. and of 13 Homilies upon S. John, from pag. 164, to pag. 172. All theſe Homilies are either Sermons of Latin Authors, whereof ſome are among thoſe of S. Chryſologus (o), or extracts from the imperfect Commentary upon S. Matthew, or Verſions of ſome paſſages of S. Chryſoſtom, collected and ſtitched up together.

The 59 laſt Homilies upon the Statues, which are in the fifth Volume of the Edition of Lyons, from pag. 75, to pag. 188. are of this laſt ſort as well as ſeveral other Homilies upon different Subjects, from pag. 287, to pag. 298, and from pag. 312, to pag. 335. Three Sermons of Penance and Confeſſion, and ſome Sermons of Faſting, and Alms-deeds, from pag. 361, to pag. 376. And laſtly, common places upon Providence, Riches, Blaſphemies, Debaucheries, and Pleaſures, and upon ſome other matters of Morality which are in the ſame Volume, from pag. 582, to pag. 601.

The imperfect Commentary upon S. Matthew (p), divided into 54 Homilies, is undoubtedly written by a Latin Author, who quotes the old Latin vulgar Verſion, and cites Apocryphal Books. There are alſo erroneous Notions, and contrary to S. Chryſoſtom's Doctrine.

(l) Almoſt all theſe Diſcourſes have the Style of the Latin Preachers, &c.] They are full of alluſions to words, of rhiming Sentences, as Pſal. 33. Eja fratres mei, hic modo reſpondere volo; quanti modo dicunt; nolo, qui jam dicebant, volo. To this may be added, this fine Notion. Oracula ſanctæ lectionis, quæ ſonant in auribus veſtris, nidum faciant in cordibus veſtris. One may find alſo Explications of Latin and Greek Terms, as upon Pſal. 90. Meridies dicitur, quia dividit diem; meros enim pars eſt diviſæ diei. And upon Pſal. 118. Veritas tres ſunt ſyllabæ & ſeptem literæ, quia in ſeptima die Deus requievit ab operibus ſuis. There are ſeveral ſuch paſſages which juſtify their Author to be a Latin. The ſtyle is ſententious, conciſe, and full of Antitheſes, and ſtrokes of Wit, which are ordinary faults in the Latin Preachers, to which S. Chryſoſtom was never liable.

(m) The method is quite different from his.] St. Chryſoſtom divides his Diſcourſes into three Parts. The firſt is a Preface: The ſecond an Expoſition of one or more places of Scripture: And the third a moral Exhortation. This Diviſion may always be obſerved, in S. Chryſoſtom's Sermons. Theſe have nothing like, they have neither Preface, nor moral Exhortation, neither do they conclude with the Doxology. The Author divides the Scripture into Verſes, and cites Latin Authors, as S. Cyprian and Hippolytus; which S. Chryſoſtom never did.

(n) In a word, the matters treated of, are not ſuch as S. Chryſoſtom uſes to diſcourſe of.] St. Chryſoſtom always handleth Points of Morality, or common Doctrine; he never inſiſts upon thorny and hard Queſtions, but avoiding them carefully, he expounds the Letter of the Scripture, and that in a plain way. The Author of theſe Sermons doth the quite contrary, he fills them with common places, upon Original Sin, Predeſtination, Grace, and hardning of the Heart, &c. Queſtions which S. Chryſoſtom never meddled with. This Author ſeeks for the allegorical and myſtical Sence, and takes little notice of the literal. In ſhort, nothing can be imagined more unlike to S. Chryſoſtom's way of writing, than the Sermons here examined.

(o) All theſe Homilies are either Sermons of Latin Authors, whereof ſome are among thoſe of S. Chryſologus.] The 13th, and 16th, are amongſt thoſe attributed to S. Chryſologus: The 17th is among thoſe that are attributed to Origen; the 6th is taken out of the 15th Homily of S. Chryſoſtom, upon S. Matthew. The 21ſt and 22d, are part of the 32d and 33d Homilies of the imperfect Work upon S. Matthew: The 25th is taken out of the 37th Homily of the ſame. The 27th and 28th, out of the 40th Homily. The Commentary upon S. Mark, is written by ſome ignorant Monk.

(p) The imperfect Commentary upon S. Matthew, &c.] The Author of this Treatiſe cites the Scripture according to the vulgar Verſion, he quotes Apocryphal Books, as that of Seth, Ezechias, and the Itinerary of S. Clement. He has heretical Notions concerning the Trinity, as in the 49th Homily, where he calls the Catholicks Homoouſian Hereticks. In the 7th Homily, he rejects the Baptiſm of Hereticks. In the firſt Homily he ſpeaks ill of Marriage; and condemns ſecond Marriages, Homily 32d. Sixtus Senenſis pretends that theſe Errours, and eſpecially thoſe that concern the Trinity, have been added ſince, becauſe they are not in ſome ancient Manuſcripts, and alſo becauſe in ſome places, he teaches the Divinity of the Son. However, he confeſſes with all the Criticks, that it is not S. Chryſoſtom's, but a Latin Authors: There are ſome ſhort Commentaries upon S. Mark, S. Luke and S. Matthew aſcribed to S. Chryſoſtom, and printed at Paris 1576. which bear S. Chryſoſtom's Name, but are none of his.

The

The Latin Sermon ſuppoſed to have been preached by S. Chryſoſtom, after his Return from Aſia, is written by one that deſigned to exerciſe himſelf; as alſo the Diſcourſes of S. Chryſoſtom, and Severianus upon their reconciliation, which are at the latter End of the 7th Volume of the Eton Edition, and of the ſecond of that of Paris. They rather belong to ſome Rhetorician, who deſired to be thought eloquent, than Sermons written in earneſt. S. John Chryſoſtom.

And now we are come to the Books which S. Chryſoſtom writ in his Study, which are almoſt all collected in the 4th Volume. The firſt and moſt excellent are the ſix Books of the Prieſthood, which, according to Suidas's Obſervation, exceed all the other Books of S. Chryſoſtom, both for Elevation of Style, Beauty of Elocution, and Sweetneſs and Elegance in the Choice of his Words: " S. Iſiodore Peluſiota obſerves, in the 156th Letter of his firſt Book, that " all thoſe that read that Book reap a conſiderable Advantage from it, ſeeing that on the one " ſide this Book repreſents the Prieſthood as an Eminent Dignity, not to be approached unto, " but with much reſpect: And on the other ſide, it teaches Men to enter into it with great " purity and innocence. It is compoſed with ſo much ſubtilty, diſcretion, and exactneſs, that " as they who perform as they ought the Duties of the Prieſthood, do find there a Picture of " their Vertues; ſo they who negligently go about the functions of their ſacred Miniſtry, can- " not but diſcover there the repreſentation of their Vices and Sins. And indeed there is not any one Book in all Antiquity, that ſpeaks more nobly concerning the Honour and Functions of the Prieſthood. It is in form of a Dialogue between his friend Baſil, and himſelf, and divided into ſix Books. The firſt is a kind of Preface, in which, having ſpoken firſt of the intimate Friendſhip that was betwixt S. Baſil, and him, and of the Deſign they had to embrace a retired Life; he relates, that when it was noiſed abroad, that they would make both Baſil and him Biſhops, he did not diſcover to Baſil his reſolution to retire, and that having hid himſelf at the time of the Election, Baſil was choſen and conſecrated Biſhop. On this occaſion, Baſil is introduced complaining of that Deceit, and accuſing him of refuſing the Biſhoprick out of Vanity.

S. Chryſoſtom juſtifies himſelf from the injury that Baſil pretended to have received of him, by ſhewing that there are innocent Cheats, which are cauſes of much good. He proves in the ſecond Book, that he had deceived him to his own advantage, by giving him an opportunity of exerciſing his love to Jeſus Chriſt after a moſt excellent manner, in feeding his Sheep. Afterwards he diſcourſes of the Vertue, and Wiſdom, which that Office required, proving how great the Charge of Paſtours is by the great difficulty of healing Souls fallen ſick, either by the Contagion of Vice, or by Errours in Faith. Baſil interrupting him there, and telling him, that therefore he was to blame, for avoiding the Cure of Souls, ſince it was the beſt way to juſtifie his love of Jeſus Chriſt; he anſwers, That he did it, becauſe he thought himſelf unworthy of it; but on the contrary, that Baſil was very capable of it. And then to excuſe himſelf towards thoſe, who thought, that by his refuſal he had offended them that had choſen him; he anſwers in the firſt place, That none ought to be afraid of offending Men, when they cannot any other ways avoid it, but by offending God: 2. He ſhews, that he was ſo far from diſgracing them by his Denial, that he pretended on the contrary, that he obliged them very much, by not expoſing them to the reproaches to which they might otherwiſe have been ſubject, and the falſe reports which might have been raiſed againſt them. " Is it not certain, ſays he, that had I accepted the " Biſhoprick, then thoſe that love to caluminate might have ſuſpected, and ſpoken many things, " not only of me, but alſo of my Electours? They would have ſaid, for example, that they " had reſpect to Riches, or were blinded with the Luſter of Birth, or won by my Flatteries. " I know not whether they would not have dared to ſay, that I had bribed them with Mo- " ney. But, thanks be to God, I took from them all theſe occaſions of Evil-ſpeaking, and " they can no more tax me with Flattery, than they can accuſe theſe good Men of being corrupted. " For why ſhould he, that beſtowed Money, or uſed Flattery to get an Office, ſuffer another " to take it when he might have it himſelf? Again, what might not have been ſaid, by de- " tracting Men after my coming to the Office? Could I have made Apologies ſufficient to an- " ſwer their Accuſations? Though all my Actions had been without reproach, had they found " no pretence to blacken me? But now they have none, for I have delivered thoſe that might " have choſen me from all imputations; No complaints will be made of them; It will not be " ſaid publickly, They have entruſted young Fools with the higheſt, and moſt conſiderable " Offices; they have expoſed God's Flock to all ſorts of Corruption; Chriſtianity is now made " a jeſt of, and they delight to render it ridiculous; Now the mouth of iniquity muſt be ſtop- " ped: For if Calumniatours do thus complain of You (addreſſing himſelf to Baſil) you will " let them ſee, that a man's Wiſdom is not to be judged of by the Number of his Years, nor " old Age meaſured with Gray-hairs; and that not young Men, but Neophytes are to be exclu- " ded from Eccleſiaſtical Dignities. Thus he concludes the ſecond Book.

To defend himſelf againſt ſuch as accuſed him of refuſing the Biſhoprick out of pride, he ſays, that it is not to be preſumed, that any Man could refuſe ſo eminent a Dignity out of Vanity, and that ſuch as are of that opinion muſt needs be deſpiſers of that high Office. To undeceive them, he ſpeaks of the Prieſthood in theſe Terms. " Though the Prieſthood is exerciſed upon Earth, " yet it ought to be reckoned amongſt heavenly Goods, ſince neither Man, nor Angel, nor " Archangel, nor any created Power, but the Holy Ghoſt himſelf, eſtabliſhed that ſacred Order,

" and

S. John Chryſoſtom.

" and made men think, that they exerciſed a Miniſtry of Angels in a mortal Body. Wherefore " whoſoever is raiſed up to the Prieſthood, ought to be as pure as if he were already in Heaven, " among thoſe bleſſed Spirits. When you ſee our Lord placed, and offered upon the Altar, The " Biſhop celebrating the Sacrifice, and praying for the whole People dyed, and made red with " his precious Blood, do you think that you are amongſt Men, and upon Earth? Do you " not believe your ſelves to be taken up into Heaven for that moment? And do you not put " off the thoughts of the fleſh? Do you not behold heavenly things with a pure Spirit, and a " naked Soul? O Miracle! O Bounty of God! He that is above with his Father, ſuffers him- " ſelf to be touched by the hands of all in this moment, and gives himſelf to be held and " embraced by thoſe that deſire it. Afterwards he compares the Divine Myſteries to Elias his Sacrifice, which cauſed Fire to come down from Heaven to conſume the Victims. He ſaith, that the Biſhop in like manner cauſeth by his Prayers, not Fire from Heaven, but the Holy Ghoſt to deſcend upon the Altar. Having thus exalted the Dignity of the Prieſthood, becauſe of the Power which they have to conſecrate the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, he diſcourſes of their Power of binding and looſing Sinners, which is not leſs honourable, nor leſs uſefull to the Salvation of Men. " For, ſaith he, living as yet upon the Earth, they diſpoſe of the things of " Heaven, and they have received a Power which God would give neither to Angels, nor to " Archangels; having ſaid unto Men, and not to them, What you ſhall bind on Earth, ſhall be " bound in Heaven; and whatſoever ye ſhall looſe on Earth, ſhall be looſed in Heaven. Temporal " Princes have a power to bind, but that is the Body only, whereas Epiſcopal Power bindeth " the Soul, and reacheth unto Heaven, becauſe God ratifieth above, what the Biſhops do here " below, and the Maſter confirmeth the Sentence of his Servants. This Power is as much above " the Temporal, as Heaven is nobler than the Earth, and the Soul than the Body. It were " madneſs to deſpiſe a Power, without which we could hope for no Salvation, nor the poſſeſſion " of the promiſed Goods: For if none can enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, unleſs he be firſt " regenerated with Water, and the Holy Ghoſt: And if he that eateth not the Fleſh of the Lord, " and drinketh not his Blood, is deprived of Eternal Life: And if it be theſe holy Hands, I mean " by the hands of Biſhops, that all theſe things are done: How can either the Fire of Hell be " avoided, or the Crowns prepared for us in Heaven, be obtained without their help? They and " only they, are intruſted by God with theſe ſpiritual Births, and that regeneration which is " wrought by Baptiſm: By them we put on Chriſt, we are united to the Son of God, and be- " come Members of his ſacred Body. Biſhops do not judge of the Leproſie of the Body, as the Prieſts " did under the old Law; they judge of that of the Soul, and they do not onely enquire whether " Souls be purified, but they have power alſo to purify them: Wherefore thoſe that deſpiſe them, " commit a much greater Crime, and are worthy of a much ſeverer Chaſtiſement than Dathan, " and his Companions.

Having thus exalted the Dignity of the Prieſthood, he diſcovers the Dangers that attend this Office on all ſides: He compares a Biſhop that has the Care of a Dioceſs, with a Pilot that hath the Charge of a Ship. " But a Biſhop, ſaith he, is more agitated with Cares, than the Sea with " Winds and Storms: The firſt Rock he meets with, is vain Glory, Anger, Peeviſhneſs, Envy, " Quarrelling, Calumnies, Accuſations, Lying, Hypocriſies, Treachery, and precipitate Violence " againſt the Innocent; joy to ſee thoſe that ſerve the Church, neglect their Duty; and ſorrow " to ſee them diſcharge it worthily; love of Praiſe, deſire of Honour, which is one of the moſt " pernicious paſſions of the Soul; Diſcourſes where pleaſure is more looked after, than the profit " of the Hearers, ſervile Flatteries, baſe Complacency, Contempt of the Poor, degenerate Ci- " vilities towards rich men without reaſon, favours ill-beſtowed, which prove hurtfull both to " the giver and to the receiver; guilty fear, baſhfulneſs in ſpeaking, falſe modeſty, ſilence, cow- " ardice and fear of reproving great Men. There is no ſlavery equal to ours, which makes us " do even ſhamefull things to pleaſe Women. They have got ſuch Power, that they give and " take away Biſhopricks, even to whom, and from whom they pleaſe: Hence it is, that all " things are turned upſide down: Thoſe that ſhould obey, will be Directours of thoſe that are " to command. Yet I pretend not to tax all Biſhops with the Crimes now mentioned, there " being many; I ſay many, who have not been caught in theſe ſnares, and who far exceed thoſe " in number, that are unhappily fallen into them. Neither will I ſay, that the Epiſcopal Dig- " nity is the cauſe of theſe Evils, I am not ſo extravagant as to have any ſuch thought. The " Sword is not the cauſe of Murder, nor Wine of Drunkenneſs, &c. All wiſe Men accuſe and " puniſh ſuch as abuſe God's Gifts, as the true Authors of thoſe Abuſes: And the Epiſcopal Dig- " nity is ſo far from being guilty of theſe Evils, that it may rather complain, that Men do not " exerciſe it well: We are thoſe whom it may upbraid. Since we diſhonour it as much as in " us lies, when we admit the firſt that comes, who having not examined their own ſtrength, " nor conſidered the greatneſs and importance of that Office, receive it readily, as ſoon as it is " offered. And when they are obliged to act, being blinded with Darkneſs, they engage their " People in a thouſand Diſorders. For, from whence think you, do ſo many Troubles ariſe in " the Church? I ſee no other Spring of them beſides the want of Circumſpection, and Choice in " the Election of Biſhops.

He Diſcourſes afterwards of the neceſſary qualities in a Biſhop, and affirms, that the firſt is to have no deſire to that Dignity, which ought to be looked upon with reſpect, and ſuch a moderation moderation as may inspire Men with a Desire to avoid so important and difficult an Office: And also, that when a Man engages in it, he should not stay for the Judgment of others, to quit it, but having committed faults unworthy of the same, he should depose himself. " Perhaps, says he, it will be objected to me, that I contradict the Words of S. Paul, That he that " desireth to be a Bishop, desireth a good work, but I am so far from opposing, that I do only " follow them, since it is the desire of the Power and not of the Work which I condemn. The second quality noted by S. Chrysostom as requisite in a Bishop, is to be clear-sighted and vigilant, because he lives not for himself, but for a great People. The Third, according to his Opinion, is Meekness; he observes, That a Bishop ought not to be Peevish, Violent or Angry; and that whatsoever his other Vertues be, if these be in him, he is not worthy to be a Bishop. He saith further, That the Vices of a Bishop are of worse consequence than those of a private Man, because, when they are once discovered, they cause a general Scandal, and draw others by their example; and besides, the least faults of a Bishop, being magnified by envious Men, will utterly ruine his Reputation. In the next place, he gives an account of the Disputes and Dissentions which commonly attend the Election of a Bishop, and that the reason of it is, because they do not all agree in the only design which they ought to have, which is to chuse the Wisest and most Vertuous. " They, says he, have all different Pretences of promoting a Man to an Office; " one will have this Man because he is of a Noble Family; another votes for the other, because " he is rich, and a third endeavours to advance his Friend, or his Kinsman: This last goes by Ca- " balling and getting of Favour: No Man chooses the most worthy; no Man hath respect either " to Vertue or Merit. Then he concludes this Book by a Description of the three main duties of a Bishop, viz. The care of Widows, of Virgins consecrated to God, and their obligation to do Justice to the People, and to help them in their necessities.

S. John Chrysostom.

S. Chrysostom having ended this Discourse, Basil told him, That had he sued for that Dignity, his fear might have been rational, but having been chosen when he sought it not, he ought to think himself secure in accepting it. S. Chrysostom answers, That not only those that seek for Ecclesiastical Promotions thro' Ambition, but also those that do not discharge them well shall be severely punished, because they should have refus'd them, knowing that they were above their Capacity; and that even those shall be without excuse, who through insufficiency do not perform their Functions in the Church as they ought, under pretence that they were forced to accept of them; neither shall they be acquitted before God, who chuse Insufficient Men, by saying that they were deceived, and that they knew them not. This ought to oblige those that are to chuse, to consider well what choice they make? and those that are chosen, to examine themselves, Whether they are capable of the Dignity to which they are to be promoted. He discourses afterwards of a Bishop's Learning, that being to preach God's word with Strength and Knowledge, to refute Pagans, Jews and Hereticks, and to instruct the Faithful, he hath great need of Learning, of Prudence and Eloquence.

He goes on in the next Book to speak of the Conditions which are necessary to exercise the Ministry of God's Word, as we ought: He observes, That Commendation is not to be regarded, and that Envy and Malice is to be despised; but that a good Reputation is to be maintain'd by constant labour: That a good Bishop ought not to be proud for being praised, nor dejected when he is blamed; and that his only aim in his Discourses should be to please God. " This, saith " he, is the only Rule, and the only Object which they ought to propose to themselves in this " excellent Ministry, and not to be applauded and praised. If Men do commend them, let " them not reject their Commendations; if they do not, let them not desire it, nor be concerned " at the omission: This is sufficient comfort for him in his Labour; yea, the greatest he can have, " if he knows in his Conscience, that he hath studied his Discourses for no other end, than that " they might be acceptable to God only; adding, that he cannot be envious against, nor jealous " of those who have more talents than himself.

In the last Book he proves, That Bishops have need of a higher degree of Vertue than Monks, because they are exposed to many more dangers; and that it is easier to live well in a Solitude than as a Bishop; yea, that whatsoever Vertues Monks may have, yet they are not fit to be Bishops, because the accidents of a Bishop's life may easily excite those Vices and Infirmities which were hid in Solitude. Lastly, he declares, That the trouble he was in, when they spake of making him Bishop, made him resolve to hide himself. He sets forth this trouble by two Comparisons; the one by describing the vexation which a Princess, incomparable both for Beauty and Vertue, might be in, who being passionately beloved by a Prince, should be forced to marry a mean and contemptible Man; the other, by describing the astonishment of a Clown, that was forced to take upon him the Conduct of both a great Land-Army, and of a Navy that was ready to give Battel to a dreadful Enemy. He concludes by comforting Basil, who was afflicted to see himself ingaged in so hard an Employment, and loaded with so heavy a Burden.

Some say, that he writ these excellent Books when he was very young, which is not likely. Others think with Socrates, That he composed them while he was a Deacon; but it seems rather, that he made them in his Retirement, before he was ordained Deacon, about the Year 376.

S. John Chryſoſtom.

The three Books in defence of a Monaſtical Life, againſt thoſe that blamed that ſtate, were the firſt fruits of S. Chryſoſtom's Retreat. In the firſt he argues for a Monaſtical way of life, becauſe of the uſefulneſs and neceſſity of ſeparating from the World. In the Second he anſwers the Gentiles, who complained that their Children forſook them to retire into deſart places; and then he comforts the Chriſtians who were troubled to ſee themſelves bereaved of their Children that embraced a Solitary Life, to dwell in Wilderneſſes. He affirms in theſe Books, That a Monk is more glorious, more powerful and richer than a Man of the World; repreſenting the great difficulty of ſaving our ſelves in the World, and how hard it is to bring up Children to Chriſtianity; and comparing the condition of a Monk with that of Saints and Angels.

The ſhort Diſcourſe upon the compariſon of a Monk with a Prince, is upon the ſame Subject. He ſhews, That Men are miſtaken, who preferr the condition of Kings before that of Monks and retired Men. Firſt, Becauſe the greatneſs of Kings ends with them, whereas the advantages of a retired Life continues after death. 2. Becauſe the advantages of Retirement are much more conſiderable than the Fortune of Great Men. 3. Becauſe it is more glorious for a Man to command his Paſſions, than to rule whole Nations. 4. Becauſe the War of a Monk is nobler than that of a great Captain, and his Victory more certain; the one fights againſt inviſible Powers, and the other againſt mortal Men; the one engages for the defence of Piety, and the honour of God, the other for his own Intereſt or Glory. 5. Becauſe a Prince is a charge to himſelf and to others by reaſon of thoſe many things which he needs; whereas a Monk wants nothing, does good to all, and by his Prayers obtains thoſe Graces, which the moſt powerful Princes cannot give. 6. Becauſe the loſs of Piety may ſooner be repaired than the loſs of a Kingdom. Laſtly, Becauſe, after death, a Monk goeth in ſplendor to meet Jeſus Chriſt, and entreth immediately into Heaven; whereas, tho' a King ſeems to have ruled his Kingdom with Juſtice and Equity (a thing very rare) yet they ſhall be leſs glorious and not ſo happy, there being a great difference in point of Holineſs, between a good King, and a holy Monk, who hath beſtowed all his time and care upon praiſing God: But if this King hath lived ill, who can expreſs the greatneſs of thoſe puniſhments that attend him? He concludeth in theſe words; "Let us not "admire their Riches, nor preferr their happineſs before that of theſe poor Monks. Let us never "ſay, that this rich Man is happy, becauſe he is cloathed with ſumptuous Apparel, carried in "a fine Coach, and followed by many Footmen: Theſe Riches and great Pomps laſt but for a "time, and all the Felicity that attends them ends with the Life, whereas the Happineſs of "Monks endures for ever.

It was likewiſe in his Solitude that he writ the two Books of Compunction of Heart, whereof the firſt is dedicated to Demetrius, and the ſecond to Stelechius. In theſe Books he diſcourſes of the neceſſity and conditions of a true and ſincere Repentance; affirming, That Chriſtians ought to have their ſins always in view, to abhorr them with all their Heart, to lament, and continually beg of God the forgiveneſs of them: That this ſorrow ought to be a motion of that Charity which the Holy Ghoſt inſpireth into our Hearts, and to be animated with the fire of a Divine Love, which conſumeth ſin, and is accompanied with a Spirit of Mortification and Diſintereſtedneſs from the Goods of this World, with an eſteem of the Treaſures of Heaven, and of Spiritual Vertues. He ſaith in the firſt Book, That it is not Grace only which makes us do good, ſince we ought our ſelves to contribute on our part, all that depends upon our Wills and Strength; wherefore, ſaith he, God's Grace is given to every one of us, but it abideth only in the Hearts of them that keep the Commandments, and departeth from them that correſpond not with it; neither doth it enter into their Souls, who begin not to turn to the Lord. When God converted S. Paul, he foreſaw his good Will before he gave him his Grace.

The Three Books of Providence were compoſed by S. Chryſoſtom, when he came out of his Solitude, and returned to Antioch. There he comforteth a Friend of his, one Stagirius, who having quitted the World, was ſo tormented with an Evil Spirit, that he was ready to fall into Deſpair; exhorting him to look upon that affliction as a Grace of God rather than a Puniſhment; for as much as it appears by the moſt notable Examples both of the old and of the new Law; that from Adam to S. Paul, Troubles and Afflictions have commonly been the lot of the Saints and Righteous Men: For this reaſon theſe Books are intituled, Of Providence, becauſe they clear that great Queſtion which ſo much perplexed the learned Gentiles, Why the Righteous are afflicted and perſecuted if there be a Providence over-ruling the things of the World? He ſheweth there, that this Queſtion hath no difficulty, if Men believe, that there is another Life, a Heaven and a Hell: For, ſaith he, ſince every one is puniſhed or rewarded in another World, to what end are we concerned at what happens in this? If wicked Men only were perſecuted here, we ſhould eaſily believe, that out of this World there is neither Puniſhments nor Rewards; and were there none but good Men in affliction, Vertue might be looked upon as the cauſe of Adverſity, and Crimes the reaſon of Proſperity. Of neceſſity therefore there muſt be in this World righteous and wicked Men, ſome happy and others unhappy. He adds, That by God's permiſſion the Righteous are afflicted, to expiate their ſins, and to correct them for their faults. He ſaith further, That God makes uſe of the Righteous Man's Fear, to oblige others to look to themſelves, and to mind their own Salvation. But why doth it happen, That ſuch as lived well before they were tempted by Afflictions ſhould fall into ſin, when Temptation cometh? S. Chryſoſtom anſwereth, Firſt, That many ſeem to be Righteous before Men, who are great Criminals before God,

God, that ſearcheth the Hearts. Secondly, That God permits the moſt righteous to fall into ſin; to humble them, to keep them from Pride, and from an Opinion of their own Merit; and to put them in mind, that if they have any thing that is good, it is not of themſelves, but of the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt. S. John Chryſoſtom.

The Book of Virginity is written with much Prudence and Wiſdom: For, whereas moſt of the Authors that have written of Virginity, could not forbear, whilſt they commended this Vertue, to condemn marriage, or at leaſt, to ſpeak ſlightingly of it. On the contrary, S. Chryſoſtom anſwereth, at firſt, thoſe Hereticks that condemned Matrimony; and proveth, that their Virginity will not only be unprofitable, but alſo pernicious; adding withall, that as many as condemn Marriage, are Deſpiſers of Virginity: It being a greater advantage to be what it is, a good thing, a nobler and more excellent than another good thing, than ſimply a Vertue in oppoſition to Vice. " I commend Matrimony, ſaith he, it is the Haven of Continency for thoſe that " will uſe it well; but there are excellent perſons, who have no need of that help, and are able " to quench the Fire of Luſt by praying, watching, and lying upon the Ground. Theſe I ex- " hort to Virginity, but forbid them not to marry: If they follow not my Advice, I condemn " them not; I excommunicate thoſe that commit Adultery and Fornication, but commend " thoſe who make an holy uſe of Matrimony. Marriage is good, that's my Opinon, but Virgini- " ty is better. This I own, and if you will have my Sence, It is as much above Matrimony as " Heaven is above the Earth, and makes Men like to Angels.

Afterwards he makes an Objection to himſelf againſt Virginity, which ſeems natural enough: If it be better to live unmarried, why did God inſtitute Marriage? why did he make Women? and ſhould all Men embrace Virginity, how ſhould Mankind be propagated? To anſwer theſe Queſtions, S. Chryſoſtom goeth back as far as the creation of the firſt Man, and takes notice, That while he was in the earthly Paradiſe with Eve, he was taken up with a Converſation with God, that he was then freed from Luſt and the deſires of the Fleſh, and lived in a perfect Virginity, and the whole World was at that time a vaſt Solitude. But Man having diſobey'd God's Commands, and becoming mortal and corruptible, with that happy Life which he enjoyed, he loſt alſo the glory of Virginity; ſo that Sin being the cauſe of Death, became at the ſame time the cauſe of Marriage. It is probable, that tho' there had been no Marriage, yet the World might have been peopled, and that God had created other Men as he had done the firſt: adding, That it is not the frequent uſe of Marriage that multiplieth Mankind, but God's Bleſſing; and he believes, that Marriage is more neceſſary to the World at preſent, for a remedy againſt Incontinency, than for the preſervation of Mankind; he grants, That it is neceſſary for the weak, but that Virginity is far more honourable and profitable too. He pretendeth, That whatſoever S. Paul ſaid of Marriage ought to induce Men to embrace Virginity; and at laſt he deſcribes the troubles and inconveniencies of a married life, and oppoſes to them the quiet, liberty, ſweetneſs, pleaſure, and other advantages of a ſingle one, and then concludes with this noble Sentence; " Here below we are ſeriouſly to work out our Salvation; let him that has a Wife live as if he " had none; and he that hath not ſhould endeavour with Virginity to get all other Vertues, " that ſo in the next World he may not lament the diſorders that he committed whilſt he was " in this. This Treatiſe of Virginity is quoted in the 19th Homily upon the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, preached at Antioch. It was by conſequence compoſed in that Town, S. Chryſoſtom being a Deacon, or newly ordain'd Prieſt.

The two Treatiſes againſt the cohabitation of Clerks and Women, were compoſed, if Palladius may be believed, at Conſtantinople, againſt the abuſe of thoſe Churchmen, who lodged devout Women with them, or themſelves lodged in the Women's Houſes.

Againſt theſe Diſorders S. Chryſoſtom wrote two Books, whereof the firſt reproveth the Virgins that dwelt with Churchmen; and the ſecond admoniſheth Churchmen who admitted Women into their Lodgings, and ſhews, That ſuch mixt-habitation is an occaſion of ſcandal, and cannot be wholly free from ſin.

In the Diſcourſe to a young Widow, he both comforts and exhorts her, To continue in her Widowhood. He made another little Book on purpoſe to ſhew, That ſhe ought not to marry again; where he proves, That tho' ſecond marriages be not abſolutely forbidden, yet it is much better to continue in Widowhood.

The ſmall Treatiſe upon this Paradox, That no Man is offended but by himſelf, was written by S. Chryſoſtom in his Exile. It is upon a Subject very proper to adminiſter Comfort to a Man in Perſecution, for he proveth there by ſeveral Examples out of Holy Scripture, That Perſecutions and Vexations are ſo far from doing any harm to thoſe that are tormented wrongfully, that they make them more happy and glorious, and that nothing but Sin can make Men truly miſerable.

In the firſt Exhortation to Theodorus, who is thought to be the Perſon who afterwards was made Biſhop of Mopſueſta; he adviſeth him to do Penance for quitting a retired life to return into the World; ſhewing him, That how great ſoever his fault might be, yet he might hope for Pardon from God's Mercy, becauſe he always granteth it to thoſe that truly and earneſtly repent; which Penance is not to be judged of according to the length of Time, but by the diſpoſition of the Heart, and which conſiſts in a change of life. Afterwards he repreſents Heaven, Hell and Judgment, whereof he maketh an excellent Deſcription, to oblige him to do Penance, and then he he comforts him, by the hope that his Repentance will recover, not only his former Innocence, but alſo an higher degree of Holineſs and Perfection.

S. John Chryſoſtom.

Among the Examples which he mentions to confirm this Truth, he citeth the Hiſtory of that famous Thief who was converted by S. John, which Euſebius takes out of Clemens Alexandrinus.

The ſecond Diſcourſe to Theodorus containeth ſome milder Motives, to oblige him to forſake a Secular life; where he repreſents the Labours and Cares of the World, to make him out of love with it. This laſt Exhortation ought to be placed firſt: Theſe Treatiſes were written at Antioch.

All S. Chryſoſtom's Letters were written during his Baniſhment.

The firſt is a Circular Letter to Innocent Biſhop of Rome, Venerius Biſhop of Milan, and Chromatius Biſhop of Aquileia, in which, having deſcribed the attempts of Theophilus; the Injuries which he receiv'd from him; the Injuſtice and Violence exerciſed towards him; and the Diſturbance in the Churches of the Eaſt, upon his account, very eloquently, he entreats them to write to the Eaſt to tell them, That what was done againſt him, was to be look'd upon as of no force, as being done againſt the Laws, in his abſence by his Enemies, and to the prejudice of thoſe proffers which he had made to appear before lawful Judges; and conſequently, that ſuch as acted ſo Uncanonically were to be puniſhed according to the ſeverity of Eccleſiaſtical Laws; declaring, That he was ready to juſtifie his Innocence, and to convince his Accuſers of Impoſture and Violence before uncorrupt Judges.

There is another Letter to Pope Innocent, wherein he thanks him for the good Offices which he had endeavoured to do him; but it was written long after the former, in the third Year of S. Chryſoſtom's baniſhment.

The Letter to the Biſhops and Prieſts that were put in Priſon for defending his Innocence, and refuſing to communicate with Arſacius, was written in the firſt Year of his Exile. There he commends the Conſtancy and Courage of theſe generous defenders of Juſtice, whom he ſcruples not to call Martyrs.

The ſeventeen following Epiſtles are directed to the Widow Olympias, who was united to him by the bonds of an intimate Friendſhip; he comforteth her for the Perſecutions ſhe had endured, the Affliction ſhe was in, and for the Sickneſs ſhe lay under.

Theſe are ſome of the Maxims which he lays down to comfort her and himſelf. "Nothing is to be feared but ſin, all other accidents of this life are but a Fable and a Comedy; Afflictions, Perſecutions, Sickneſſes and Death it ſelf ſhould not move us; theſe are to be born with patience for God's ſake, no other Bleſſing is to be compared with Patience. We are neither to deſire Death, nor to neglect Sickneſs; not the Perſecuted but Perſecutors are Objects of pity; and the latter are ſo much the more to be lamented, becauſe, like Men in a Frenzie, they feel not their Diſtemper. This preſent life is but a paſſage, all the Goods of this World are but Duſt and Smoak. Such Chriſtian thoughts as theſe employ'd the Spirit of S. Chryſoſtom in his Exile, and furniſh'd him with matter for the Letters he writ to his Friends: He thanked them likewiſe in his Epiſtles, for the care they had of him, and for the generous Methods which they followed to juſtifie him; with other Letters to oblige his Friends to continue ſtedfaſt to him, to let them hear of him, to let them know what they might do for him, and to pray them, That they would write to him. Theſe are the ſubjects of the greateſt part of 225 Letters written to his Friends. Some are concerning the Affairs of the Church in Phœnicia, the Converſion of the Goths, and the helping of the Poor; which ſhew, That tho' he was baniſhed and deprived of his Biſhoprick, yet he preſerved an Epiſcopal Spirit, and Paſtoral Watchfulneſs.

The Judgment which the learned Photius makes of theſe Letters, is this: (Vol. 36. of his Bibliotheca) "I have read, ſaith he, the Letters which S. Chryſoſtom writ to ſeveral perſons in "the time of his Baniſhment; the moſt uſefull are thoſe ſeventeen to Olympias, and that to Innocent Biſhop of Rome; wherein he gives an account of the Perſecutions which he ſuffered, "as much as the extent of a Letter could permit. The Stile of theſe Letters is not very diſferent from that of his other Works, for it is clear and lofty, florid, pleaſant and perſuading. "The Letters to Olympias are not ſo artleſs as the others, becauſe he could not ſuit an Epiſtolary Stile, with the Matter he was to write, which, if we may ſo ſay, has done Violence to "the Laws of the art of Writing.

This Reflection of Photius is particularly to be apply'd to the Letter directed to Pope Innocent, and the other Weſtern Biſhops, wherein he deſcribeth the Perſecutions which he endur'd with great force of Eloquence. There is not among theſe Letters That directed to Cæſarius the Monk: Peter Martyr was the firſt that quoted it in theſe latter times; and ſince he did not tell whence he took it, and that the words ſeem'd contrary to the Doctrine of the Church, and of S. Chryſoſtom upon the Euchariſt, thoſe of the Church of Rome did long ſuſpect Peter Martyr as guilty of Impoſture, and look'd upon the fragment of that Letter as a piece of his own Invention. But ſince that time, Bigotius having found an ancient Manuſcript of the Verſion of that Letter in the Dominican's Library at Florence, it was no longer doubted, but that Peter Martyr took from thence the fragment which he quoted, and I think we ought not to reject it as unworthy of S. Chryſoſtom: For tho' the Greek Original is not extant entire, yet, ſomeſomething of S. Chryſoſtom's Eloquence appears in that Verſion: and this Letter is mentioned by ſeveral Greek Authors (q), who have taken ſeveral Quotations that are Printed with the ancient Verſion. S. John Chryſoſtom.

By this Letter it appears, that Cæſarius to whom it was written, admired a certain Book, wherein it was averred, That in Jeſus Chriſt there was ſuch an Union, or mixture of Humanity with Divinity, that they made but one Nature: S. Chryſoſtom tells him, that this was the Errour of Apollinarius, Arius, Sabellius, and Manichæus, about the Incarnation of Jeſus Chriſt. And to inform him better, he bids him take notice, that there were two Natures in Chriſt; and each of them doth preſerve its Properties, without mixture, and without confuſion, tho' united together in the ſame Perſon: to explain this truth, he alledges the Example of the Euchariſt, and ſaith, † That as Bread is called Bread before the Sanctification, but that after the Divine Grace hath hallowed it by means of the Prieſt, it ought no longer to be called Bread, but to bear the Name of Chriſt's Body, tho' it remains in the ſame nature of Bread, and that Men do not ſay, that they are two Bodies, but One onely Body of Jeſus Chriſt; ſo we ought to ſay, that the Divine Nature being united with the Humane, makes but one Chriſt, and one Perſon. And yet it muſt be acknowledged, that each of theſe Natures continueth perfect and intire, without mixture, and without confuſion; for if there remained but one Nature, how could it be ſaid that there is Union? Theſe words of S. Chryſoſtom, inſtead of deſtroying the real-Preſence of Jeſus Chriſt in the Euchariſt, do ſuppoſe and prove it invincibly: for otherwiſe how could he affirm, that the Body of Jeſus Chriſt is as truly in the Euchariſt, as the Divine Nature is in the Perſon of Jeſus Chriſt? He ſaith indeed, that the Bread remains in its own Nature. Which ſeemeth to be againſt Tranſubſtantiation: but we may underſtand by Nature, the conſiſtency and appearance of Bread. In a word, this paſſage is not harder to be underſtood, than thoſe of Theodoret and of Gelaſius, who uſe the ſame Compariſon: Nay it is much eaſier, becauſe S. Chryſoſtom in ſeveral places explaineth his Opinion very clearly upon the real Change of the Bread, and Wine into the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt.

[† The words in the Original are theſe, Sicut enim antequam ſanctificetur PANIS, PANEM nominamus, Divinâ autem illum ſanctificante Gratiâ, mediante Sacerdote, Liberatus eſt quidem Appellatione panis, dignus autem habitus eſt DOMINICI CORPORIS appellatione, etiamſi natura Panis in eo permanſit, & non duo corpora, ſed unum corpus filii prædicatur: Sic & hic Divinâ ἐνὶ προσώπου, id eſt, inſidente corporis Naturâ unum filium, unam Perſonam, utraque hæc fecerunt: Agnoſcendum, tamen inconfuſam & Indiviſibilem rationem, non in unâ ſolum Naturâ, ſed in duabus perfectis: Thus tranſlated into Engliſh, by the Learned Defender of the Expoſition of the Doctrine of the Church of England, againſt the Biſhop of Meaux. " For as [in the Euchariſt] before the Bread is " Conſecrated, we call it Bread, but when the Grace of God by the Prieſt has Conſecrated it, it is no longer " called Bread, but is eſteem'd worthy to be called the Lord's Body, altho' the Nature of Bread ſtill remains in it; and " we do not ſay there be two Bodies, but one Body of the Son; ſo here the Divine Nature, being joyn'd with " the [Humane] Body, they both together make up but one Son, one Perſon. But yet they muſt be Confeſſed " to remain without confuſion, after an indiviſible manner, not in one Nature, but in two perfect Natures.

Now if we ſuppoſe that S. Chryſoſtom deſigned his Compariſon to be juſt, or believed that it was ſo, it will not be eaſie to find other words more expreſſive of the Sence of the Church of England in this matter, than thoſe here made uſe of: and there is no Diſpute, but thoſe who took ſo much Pains to conceal this Teſtimony, believed that the greateſt force that could be put upon this Paſſage, could never perſuade unconcerned Readers, that the Perſon who wrote it believ'd that Doctrine of the Euchariſt, which is at preſent taught in the Church of Rome.]

This Letter ends with an Expoſition of his Doctrine, about the Myſtery of the Incarnation of Jeſus Chriſt, in theſe words. " It muſt be Confeſſed, that the ſame Jeſus Chriſt who is " Mortal, hath two complete Natures, the Divine, and the Humane, and yet he is one and the " ſame only Son, not diviſible into two, who comprehends in himſelf the Properties of both " Natures, without any Alteration. They are not two Perſons, but the ſame God, Lord, and " Saviour, Word of God, who hath put on our Fleſh, but animated Fleſh, not Fleſh without " Soul, as the impious Apollinarius maintains. To this we are to hold; let us avoid thoſe that " ſeparate the two Natures, for tho' there are two Natures in Jeſus Chriſt, yet their Union is indiſſo- " luble and inſeparable. We ought to acknowledge that this Union is made in one and the ſame " Perſon, and Hypoſtaſis of the Son. Neither let us hear thoſe who affirm, That after this " Union there is but one Nature in Chriſt; ſince they are obliged by their own Hypotheſis, to " aſcribe Sufferings to the Divine Nature, which is impaſſible. The Verſion of this Letter which Bigotius could not get Printed at Paris, for ſome particular Conſiderations ‖, was Printed after the Latin Copy, by Mr. le Moyne, at the end of the firſt Volume of his Varia Sacra, at Amſterdam, annexed it to his Edition of Palladius's Life of S. Chryſoſtom, which was Printed at Paris, 1680. In his Preface, he Vindicated its Authority againſt thoſe Exceptions, which had before been made to it: and being afraid that the Licenſers might ſuppreſs it, he reſerved ſome few entire Printed Copies of the Book, before it came into their hands. His fears proved very Reaſonable, for ſome of the Doctors of the Sorbonne, whereof Mr. Grandin, and Mr. Favre were charged as Principal, ſuppreſſed the Letter it ſelf, and cut out ſo much of the Preface of Mr. Bigotius, as related to it, without taking care to fill up the Blank. The Learned Vindicator of the Expoſition of the Doctrine of the Church of England, againſt M. de Meaux, tells the Story, and Prints that part of Bigotius's Preface which was eraſed, with S. Chryſoſtom's Letter to Cæſarius, at the end of his Vindication, in London, 1688. And this explains Mr. Du Pin's particular Conſiderations, leaving every Body to gueſs at the true Reaſon.]

[‖ The matter of Fact was in ſhort this; Bigotius having brought a Copy of this Letter from Florence, (q) By ſeveral Greek Authors.] Theſe Authors are Anaſtaſius in the MS. Collections of the Library of Clermont, Nicephorus Patriarch of Conſtantinople, in two MSS. in Mr. Colbert's Library, an Author that wrote againſt the Severians, publiſhed by Turrianus; S. John Damaſcen, Tom. 4. Var. Lect. Caniſii p. 211. [Theorianus in Legatione ad Armenios, p. 74.]theſe Fragments are in the Rotterdam [and London] Editions.

dam, 1685. and with the Greek Fragments in the Margin at Rotterdam, by Achers, 1687. This Edition was publickly ſold at Paris, which ſhews, that tho' it was not ſuffered to be Printed in France, before it was more exactly examined, yet they never deſign'd to ſuppreſs it. And indeed the moſt Skilful Criticks having well conſidered it, do confeſs that it was written by an ancient Author, and is not unworthy of S. Chryſoſtom: and the Learnedeſt Divines of the Church of Rome agree, that the Doctrine ſet forth in this Letter, is agreeable to that of this Father, and do not find it a difficult thing to expound that paſſage concerning the Euchariſt.

S. John Chryſoſtom.

The Liturgy attributed to S. Chryſoſtom now Extant, in all probability is not written by him: It is a Liturgy of the Church of Conſtantinople, made or altered at leaſt ſince S. Chryſoſtom, to which his Name was given, becauſe it was for the uſe of the Church of Conſtantinople [and to give it more Authority.] We do not find there the Prayers and Ceremonies, which S. Chryſoſtom mentions in his Homilies, as in uſe in his time, in the Celebration of the Euchariſt; and there were ſome things which do not ſuit with the Cuſtoms of that Age. The Manuſcripts of this Book are very different; in ſome there are the Names of S. Chryſoſtom, of Pope Nicholas II. and of the Emperor Alexius Comnenus, who lived long after S. Chryſoſtom. Theſe paſſages indeed are not found in that which was tranſlated by Eraſmus, but for all that, there is enough to prove that that Liturgy is not of the time of S. Chryſoſtom.

This Father is one of the moſt Eloquent Chriſtian Orators, and his Eloquence is the more to be eſteemed, becauſe it is without Affectation and Conſtraint: Fruitfulneſs of thought, and abundance of Words and Notions is natural to him; tho' he did not tye up himſelf as S. Gregory Nazianzen, and S. Baſil did, to an Attick purity; yet there is a lofty Greatneſs in his Stile; His Style is pure and pleaſant; His Diſcourſe is beautifyed with a wonderful Variety of Conceptions and Figures; He extendeth his Matters, by an infinite Variety of Expreſſions; He is very ingenious in finding out Similitudes between things, abundant in Examples and Compariſons; His Eloquence is popular, and very proper for Preaching; His Style is natural, eaſie and grave; He equally avoideth Negligence, and Affectation; He is neither too plain, nor too florid; He is ſmooth yet not effeminate; He uſeth all the Figures that are uſual to good Orators very properly, without employing falſe ſtrokes of Wit, and he never introduces into his Diſcourſes, any Notions of Poets or prophane Authors, neither does he divert his Auditory with Jeſts; His Compoſition is Noble, his Expreſſions Elegant, his Method Juſt, and his Thoughts Sublime; He ſpeaks like a good Father, and a good Paſtor; He often directs his words to the People, and expreſſes them with a Tenderneſs and Charity becoming an holy Biſhop; He teacheth the principal Truths of Chriſtianity, with wonderful Clearneſs, and diverts with a marvellous Art, and an agreeable way of ranging his Notions, and perſuades by the ſtrength and ſolidity of his Reaſons; His Inſtructions are eaſie; His Deſcriptions and Relations pleaſant; His Inducements ſo meek and inſinuating, that one is pleaſed to be ſo perſuaded; His Diſcourſes how long ſoever are not tedious, there are ſtill ſome new things which keep the Reader awake, and yet he hath no falſe Beauties, nor uſeleſs Figures; His only Aim is to convert his Auditors, or to inſtruct them in neceſſary Truths; He neglects all Reflections, that have more ſubtilty than profit; He never buſies himſelf to reſolve hard Queſtions, nor to give myſtical Sences, to make a ſhew of his Wit, or Eloquence; He ſearcheth not into Myſteries, neither endeavours to comprehend them; He is contented to propoſe, after an eaſie way, palpable and ſenſible Truths, which none can be ignorant of, without danger of failing of Salvation; He particularly applies himſelf to moral Heads, and very ſeldom handleth ſpeculative Truths; He affects not to appear Learned, and never boaſts of his Erudition; and yet whatever the Subject be, he ſpeaks with Terms ſo ſtrong, ſo proper, and ſo well choſen, that one may eaſily perceive he had a profound Knowledge of all ſorts of Matters, and particularly of true Divinity.

He proveth the truth of the Chriſtian Religion, by the ſtrongeſt, the moſt probable, and ſenſible Reaſons; He urgeth Miracles, Prophecies, and other Proofs of the truth of Religion; but particularly inſiſts upon the miraculous Eſtabliſhment of the Church, and in this Argument he triumphs; He ſhews that it is impoſſible, that the Doctrine of Jeſus Chriſt could have been received, and believed all the world over, notwithſtanding the oppoſition of Secular Powers, the Contradictions of the Wiſe men in the World, and the endeavours of Devils, had it not been ſupported by the power of God himſelf: "For, ſays he, there is need of more than humane Ability, "to produce ſuch wonderful Effects, both in the Earth, and upon the Sea, and to oblige Men already prejudiced by extravagant Opinions, and prepoſſeſſed with prodigious Malice to ſuch Actions; yet Jeſus Chriſt delivered all mankind, not only Romans, but Perſians alſo, and all other barbarous Nations from their Calamities: And to bring about theſe Wonders, he made uſe of no Arms, and was at no expence; raiſed no Armies, and fought no Battles; but by eleven Men, who at firſt were unknown, deſpicable, ignorant, Ideots, poor, naked, and without Arms; He perſuaded different Nations, and made them embrace an high Philoſophy, not only relating to the Government of this preſent Life, but alſo to things to come, and Eternity ſelf; His power over all minkind was ſuch, as that it made them aboliſh the Laws of their Fathers, renounce their ancient Cuſtoms, and follow new ones; He ſpoiled them even of the love of thoſe things they were moſt fond of to faſten their Affections, upon ſuch things as are moſt difficult and painful. But the Promulgation of the Goſpel, and the ſetling of the Church, are not the only Proofs of the truth of our Religion, the Stedfaſtneſs and perpetuity of the Church,

In lib. Quod Chriſtus ſit Deus: In Orat. de S. Babyla: contra Gentes: In expoſit. Pſ. xliv. Hom. contra Judæos: Hom. 4. in illud, Vid. Dominum lib. Quod unus Chriſtus ſit Deus.

Church is alſo in S.* Chryſoſtom's Opinion an invincible Argument of it. " For he addeth, that " it is not only a thing worthy of Admiration, that Jeſus Chriſt ſhould ſettle his Church over " all the Earth, but alſo that he ſhould render it invincible againſt ſo great numbers of Enemies as " aſſaulted it on every ſide. The Gates of Hell that cannot prevail againſt it, are the Dangers " which ſeem to hurry it to the very Gates of Hell. Doe you not perceive the truth of that " prediction of Jeſus Chriſt..... Tho' Tyrants took up Arms againſt it, tho' Soldiers conſpired " her Deſtruction, tho' the People raged furiouſly, tho' a contrary Cuſtom oppoſed it ſelf, tho' " Preachers, Philoſophers, Magiſtrates, and rich Men ſtood up to deſtroy it; The Divine word " breaking with greater force than fire it ſelf, conſumed theſe Thorns, cleanſed theſe Fields, and " diſſeminated the Seed of preaching over the whole Earth. And though ſuch as believed the " Goſpel were ſhut up in Priſons, ſent into Baniſhment, ſpoiled of their Goods, thrown into " the Fire, caſt into the Sea, and expoſed to all manner of Torments, Reproaches, and Perſecu- " tions, and tho' they were treated every where, as publick Enemies; yet they multiplyed daily; " their being perſecuted increaſed their Zeal..... Thoſe Rivers of Blood cauſed by the Maſſa- " cres of the Faithful, before their Eyes excited their Piety, and the Pains they endured inflamed " their Zeal.

S. John Chryſoſtom In Pſ. xliv.

This ſame Saint obſerves in another place, that Chriſtians are never ſo diſorderly in their Behaviour, and ſo cold in their Devotion, as when he that ſits on the Throne is of their Religion. " Which, ſaith he, juſtifies that this Religion is not eſtabliſhed by the Powers of the World, " and is not upheld and preſerved by Earthly force.

Orat. contra Gentiles, de S. Babyla.

S. Chryſoſtom's way of dealing with Hereticks is not leſs rational, than that which he uſeth towards Heathens and Jews. He expoundeth the Myſteries very plainly, and proveth them by Teſtimonies of Holy Scripture, and the Authority of the Church, not pretending to penetrate, or give the Reaſons of them, and to anſwer thoſe Difficulties, which have no other Foundation but humane Reaſonings. He confeſſes, that he does not underſtand the Reaſons of what he believes. " I know, ſaith he, that God is every where, and entire in every part of the World, but I know " not how this can be. I doubt not, but that God is without beginning, but I conceive not how " that is, for humane Reaſon cannot comprehend a thing that hath no beginning. I know that " the Son is begotten of God the Father, but I cannot imagine how that was done. He believes that the Divine Nature is ſo high and unſearchable, that it is not poſſible to comprehend it; and purſues this Reaſoning ſo far, that he ſticketh not to ſay, that Seraphims and Angels themſelves do not ſee the Subſtance of God, but only an Emanation of his Divine Light. This paſſage hath made ſome modern Greeks ſuppoſe, that the Saints do not ſee the Subſtance of God, but only a Corporeal Light, ſuch as (they ſay) appeared upon Mount Tabor. This alſo hath exerciſed the Subtilty of our Divines, who conſtitute Happineſs in the Viſion of the Subſtance of God: And yet S. Chryſoſtom hath reſpect in this paſſage, neither to that Light of the Modern Greeks, not to the Diſputes of the Schoolmen; his only deſign is to ſhew againſt Aetius, that the Divine Nature is not to be comprehended, and that evident Reaſons of the Myſteries are not to be given.

Orat. 1. de incompreh. Homil. 24. in Joannem.

Ib. Orat. 1.

It is not neceſſary to inlarge upon the Opinions of S. Chryſoſtom, concerning the Myſtery of the Trinity; it is certain, that he maintained the Faith of the Council of Nice, and that he proved the Divinity both of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt; yet it ought to be obſerved, that he was of Meletius's opinion, concerning the Signification of the word Hypoſtaſis, and that he owned Three Hypoſtaſes, and one Nature in God.

As to the Myſtery of the Incarnation, tho' he was equally contrary to the Error of thoſe who diſtinguiſhed two Perſons in Chriſt, and that of thoſe who confounded the two Natures, and their Properties; yet he in ſeveral paſſages of his Writings, declared againſt the latter Opinion very eagerly.

Ep. ad Cæſarium, Homil. de Conſub. in lib. Quod Chriſtus ſit Deus. V. Theodor. in Dialog.

In his Panegyricks of the Saints, he aſcribeth to them all manner of Felicity; he places them in Heaven, in the ſame Rank with Angels, and Archangels, of Prophets, and Martyrs; and yet in other places, he ſeems to affirm, that their Happineſs is referred to the Day of Judgment; but theſe may agree well enough, if we ſay, that he ſpake in the latter of a perfect and conſummated Happineſs.

Homil de B. Philog. Hom. de S S. Homil. 39. in ep. 1. ad Cor. & Hom. 28. in ep. ad Hebr. Hom. 29. Matth.

Angels, if we believe S. Chryſoſtom, are ſo called, becauſe they declare the Will of God unto Men; for which cauſe the Scripture repreſenteth them with Wings: They take care of Men, are preſent at Divine Services, and every Chriſtian hath his Guardian Angel.

Homil. 3. de Incompreh. Hom. 3. in ep. ad Coloſſ. Hom. 14. in ep. ad Hebr.

The Devil is not wicked of his own Nature, but is become ſuch by Sin. God permits him to tempt Men for their good. It is a Childiſh thing to believe, that thoſe are Angels which the Scripture calleth the Children of God in Geneſis, and of whom it is ſaid, that they converſed with the Daughters of Men; ſince they are of a ſpiritual and incorporeal Nature.

Hom. de Diabolo tentatore. Hom. 22. in Geneſim.

He Confeſſes in ſeveral places, that the Fall of the firſt Men was prejudicial to the whole Race, which ever ſince is become ſubject to Pains, Sickneſſes, and Death, from which it was free before Sin: He acknowledgeth, that an inclination to Evil, and Luſts, are Conſequences of the firſt Man's ſin: but he ſeemeth not to have owned Original ſin, after the ſame manner that S. Auſtin doth; at leaſt it cannot be denied, that he hath given another Sence to thoſe places of S. Paul which which ſeem to prove it moſt. As for Example, when he expoundeth that famous paſſage, Rom. 5. 12. By One man ſin entred into the World, &c. He underſtandeth of Death what S. Paul ſaith of Sin, becauſe it is the Wages of Sin; and upon thoſe other words of the ſame Chapter, As by the diſobedience of one, many are become Guilty, &c. This Sentence, ſaith he, ſeems to have much of Difficulty: for how can it be, that one only Man having ſinned, many ſhould be made guilty by his ſin? We may eaſily conceive, that the firſt Man being become mortal, it was neceſſary, that his Off-ſpring ſhould be mortal likewiſe; but what Likelihood, and what Reaſon is there, that a man ſhould be a Sinner, becauſe of anothers diſobedience? ... What then ſignifyeth the word Sinner? In my Opinion it ſignifyeth nothing elſe, but a condemned Man, ſubject to Pain and Death: This is a way of ſpeaking which does not agree with S. Auguſtin's Doctrine: Tho' it is not hard to defend S. Chryſoſtom, by ſaying, That tho' he ſpake thus, yet he admitted all that Divines own concerning Original ſin: For what is Original ſin, according to them? It is either a Privation of Original righteouſneſs, or Luſt with the guilt of Sin, or pain and Guilt together. But S. Chryſoſtom acknowledges all theſe: for in the firſt place he Confeſſeth, that by the firſt Man's ſin, all men were deprived and ſpoiled of the State of Innocence, that they are become not only mortal, and ſubject to Pain and Grief, but alſo inclined to Evil. Thus, in his Opinion, Luſt is an effect of the firſt Man's ſin; and that Concupiſcence in men, makes them unworthy of eternal Life, if the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt ſaveth them not by Baptiſm.

S. John Chryſoſtom.

He aſcribes much to the ſtrength of Free-will; He always ſpeaks as if he believed that it depends upon our ſelves to do good or evil, and affirms that God always gives his Grace to thoſe who on their ſide doe all they can; That we muſt begin, and God makes an end; That he followeth the motions of our Wills, and giveth them their Perfection; yet he owns the neceſſity of Grace to do good, but ſubmits it ſtill to our Will: So that according to him, We are to will and chuſe the good, and God gives us the neceſſary Grace to fulfil the ſame; he prevents not our Will, that our Liberty may not be prejudiced; he worketh good in us, but that is when we are willing: when our Will is determined, he draweth to himſelf, but only thoſe who do all their endeavours to come near to him. Thoſe Principles about foreknowledge, and Predeſtination, agree very well with theſe Concluſions. God did not predeſtinate men, but as he foreſaw their merits: foreknowledge is not the cauſe of the event of things, but God foreſaw them becauſe they ſhall happen. He calls all men; Jeſus Chriſt died for all men; he prepared his Grace for all, he predeſtinated thoſe whom he foreſaw would uſe his Grace well: He Confeſſes, that no man is free from ſin in this Life, nay he excepteth not the holy Virgin Mary.

De verbis Jer. Hom. 1. Hom. 2. in 1. ad Cor. Hom. 41. in Geneſim. Hom. de tribus pueris. Hom. 12. in ep. ad Hebr. & 8. in ep. ad Phil. & 19. ibid Hom. 17. in Joan. Hom. 18. in ep ad Rom. & 12. in ep. 1. ad Cor. In Matth. Hom. 83. Hom. 45. in Joan. In orat. de S. Pelagia. Serm. de Zachæo. Hom. 34. in Matth. Hom. 80. in ep. ad Rom. Hom. 16. & 18. in ep. ad Rom. & Hom. de obſcur. Prophet. Serm. 5. de Lazaro. Hom. 45. in Matth.

Hom. de Bapt. Chriſti.

S. Chryſoſtom attributes much vertue and efficacy to Sacraments, but he requires very holy diſpoſitions, that Men may be the better for them. " He ſaith, That Circumciſion and the other " Sacraments of the Jews, did not blot out Sins, but cleanſed only Bodily filthyneſſes; whereas " our Baptiſm hath far greater Vertue purifying the Soul, delivering it from ſin, and filling it " with the Grace of the Holy Spirit: that John's Baptiſm was indeed more excellent, than that " of the Jews, but much inferior to ours, becauſe it conferred neither the Holy Ghoſt, nor the " remiſſion of Sins, but only exhorted Men to Repentance. The Baptiſm of Jeſus Chriſt, not " only frees the Soul from ſin, but alſo ſanctifyeth it, wherefore it is called the Laver of Regeneration, becauſe it reneweth the Soul through Grace. Yet he does not believe, that Baptiſm produces theſe Effects in thoſe of riper years, unleſs they are well diſpoſed to receive it. " He exacts " from thoſe that come to this Sacrament, that they be watchful in the things of their Salvation, " diſingaged from worldly Cares, and that they renounce all diſorderly Converſation: that they " be zealous in their Devotion, and baniſh from their Hearts all thoughts unbecoming ſo holy " an Action, and keep their Souls prepared for the coming of this great King.

In Serm. ad Illuminandos.

Ibid.

And becauſe the Clinicks, (that is ſuch as receive Baptiſm at the point of Death) have not time thus to prepare themſelves, he doubts of their Salvation. He ſpeaketh of their Condition in ſuch terms, as deſcribe the Caſe of a dying man very naturally, who deferred to repent of his Sins till the hour of Death, and then would receive the Sacraments. " Altho', ſaith he, Sacraments con- " tain the ſame Graces, when the Preparation is different, yet all may not receive them. They " receive Baptiſm laying upon their Beds, you receive it in the boſom of the Church, which is the " Mother of all the Faithful; they receive it weeping, and you with joy; they with groans, and " you with thankſgiving; they in the heat of a Fever, and you under the Senſe of the heavenly " Grace: every thing here hath a Relation to the Grace received, there every thing diſagrees " with it; there are ſighings and tears, while the Sacrament is adminſtred, Children cry, the " Wife tears her Hair, Friends are dejected, Servants weep, the whole Houſe is in Mourning; " and if you mind the Spirit of the ſick Perſon, you ſhall find it more full of Sorrow, than that " of the Standers by; for as a ſtormy Sea divides into ſeveral Waves, ſo his Soul being agi- " tated with troubles is torn with a thouſand Diſquiets, racked with infinite Troubles. ..... " In this torture comes in a Prieſt, whoſe Preſence is more dreadful both to the Company, and " to the ſick Man, than the Sickneſs it ſelf: his Viſit ordinarily cauſeth greater Deſpair, than the " Phyſicians Sentence, that there is no hope of Recovery. They imagine that Sacraments, tho'

" Inſtruments

" inſtruments of the Spiritual life, are infallible tokens of Corporal death. But this is not yet " the end of his Miſery, nor the height of his Affliction; ſometimes while Neceſſaries for the " Sacrament are preparing, the Soul departs out of the Body; and often, tho' remaining in the " Body, yet it receives not the fruit of the Sacrament; for when the Sick perſon knows no " body, hears not the Prayers, and cannot utter the Words whereby he is to engage with God, " when he is half dead; what benefit can he reap from the Sacrament? S. John Chryſoſtom.

S. Chryſoſtom doth not diſcourſe oftner, nor in higher terms of any one Myſtery, than of the Euchariſt. He ſays in many places, that the Body and Blood of Chriſt are upon the Altars: That Jeſus Chriſt hath left us his Body and Blood: That the Bread and Wine become the Body and Blood of Chriſt: That we ought not to doubt of it, ſeeing Chriſt himſelf affirmeth it: That it is a ſurprizing Miracle, comparable to the greateſt Wonders: That by vertue of Chriſt's Words, in the Celebration of this Myſtery, Chriſt is offered in Sacrifice: That Jeſus Chriſt offereth himſelf to God the Father: That this Sacrifice is made without ſhedding of blood: That Angels and Arch-angels are preſent at it: That fire from Heaven conſumeth the things offered, and changeth them into the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt: That this Table is to be approached unto with reverence and trembling: That there is need of Holineſs, to receive holy things: That Penitents ought not to come near; and that theſe Myſteries muſt be hid from Catechumens: That Men ought not only to be freed from Sin, but alſo from Earthly affections, and penetrated with divine Love, tranſported with an holy Zeal, and poſſeſſed with fervent Charity. Three ſorts of Prayers were made at the Celebration: The Firſt for thoſe that were poſſeſſed; the Second for Penitents; and the Third for the Faithfull. There was mention made of the Dead, and Invocation of Saints; The Sanctus was recited; The Catechumens and Penitents were put out; The Energumenes were brought in at the Conſecration, and Prayers were made for them.

Hom. 51. & 83. in Matth. Hom. 45. in Joan. Serm. de de prodit. Judæ. Hom. 45. & 46. in Joannem. L. 3 *de Sacerdot. c.*4. Hom. 24. in ep. ad Cor. Hom. 3. in ep. ad Eph. Hom. 51. in Matth. Hom. 52. de S. Euſtathio. Hom. 14. & 17. in ep. ad Hebr. l. 6. de Sacer. c. 1. Hom. 51. in Matth. Hom. 15. in ep. ad Cor. Serm. de prodit. Judæ. Hom. in S. Euſt. Hom. 33. in Nat. Domini. Serm. de prodit. Judæ.

S. Chryſoſtom wiſht that all thoſe who were preſent might communicate; and ſticks not to ſay, That all thoſe that are unworthy to communicate, are not worthy to partake of the Prayers: And that as he who finds not himſelf guilty of any Sin, ought to communicate every day; ſo he, on the contrary, that hath committed Sin, and repented not, ſhould not doe it, even upon Feſtival-days.

Hom. 83. in Matth. Hom. 21. ad Pop. Hom. 22. ad Pop. Ant. l. 6. *De Sacerdot. c.*4. Hom. in Chriſti Natalem.

The Sacrament was adminiſtred to dying perſons, and it was preſerved in a Box.

Hom. 72. in Matth.

Laſtly, That none but the Prieſts alone have the power to adminiſter the Euchariſt, which is the great thing that exalteth their Dignity.

Hom 41. in 1. ad Cor. Hom. de Seraphim.

But there is another Power inveſted in them which is not inferior to the other, which is that of binding and looſing, of retaining and remitting of Sins. It were to be wiſhed that Men needed no Repentance, but that they might keep their Baptiſmal purity without ſpot: But it being impoſſible not to Sin, God hath prepared the remedy of Repentance. Thoſe that are guilty of high Crimes, as Murther, Adultery, or Fornication, and the like, are put out of the Church and enjoyned publick Penance; but if they mend their faults, they may come in again, having purified themſelves by Repentance. As many as continue in Sin, and yet will come into the Church, notwithſtanding the Admonitions of Chriſt's Miniſters, aggravate their crime. Men may hope for pardon, whatſoever their Sin be; but let them have a care of being too confident: Few days are enough to get pardon for Sin. * " God, ſaith he, in the Ninth " Homily of Repentance, doth not conſider the length, but the zeal of Penance. If you " have ſinned ſeveral times, repent; come into the Church and put away your Sins. As you " uſe to riſe up as often as you fall, ſo as often as you have ſinned repent of your Sin, and " never deſpair. If you ſin a ſecond time, repent again; and beware leſt ye fall into that " conſternation, which may make you loſe the hope of future benefits. Tho' ye ſhould ſin " in the laſt day of your life, yet enter into the Church by repentance; this is the time of Re- " medy, and not of Judgment: God requireth not the penalty of Sin, but grants pardon " for it. He wiſely addeth in the following Homily, That none ought to deſpair, but every " one ought to beware of preſumption; for theſe two extreams are equally dangerous, becauſe " Deſpair hinders Men from riſing again, and Preſumption makes thoſe fall that ſtood upright " before: Sloth cauſes us to come ſhort of Heaven, and Deſpair precipitates into an Abyſs " of Malice.

Hom. 17. & 83. in Matth. Hom. 24. in ep. ad Cor. Hom. 33. in Matth. * L. 3. de Sacerdot. ibid. Hom. ad illumin. Hom. de Davide & Saul. Hom. de Diab. tentatore. Hom. de B. Philogonio. Hom. 9. de Pœnitentiâ.

And thus S. Chryſoſtom obſerves a juſt Medium between the exceeding Severity of ſome who thruſt Men into deſpair, and the ſoft Compliance of others, who promiſe Remiſſion without a true and ſincere Repentance. Whoſoever hath committed Sin, muſt own and confeſs it before God, if he would obtain pardon: He muſt be truly affected with a ſenſible grief for his wickedneſs; he muſt truly return to the Lord, and be converted; abhorr his iniquity, forſake his vicious habits, after his courſe of life, and love God with all his heart, and above all things, and doe every thing for his ſake, &c.

In Hom. de Pœnit.

S. John Chryſoſtom.

The onely thing that may ſeem difficult in S. Chryſoſtom's Diſcourſes concerning Penance, is what he ſaith of Confeſſion of Sins: For in ſeveral places he ſeems to affirm, That it is not neceſſary to confeſs to Men, but that it is ſufficient to confeſs to God, who knoweth the ſecrets of the heart. Thoſe paſſages are remarkable, and have often been alledged by the Enemies of Confeſſion. It has been anſwered by ſome, That S. Chryſoſtom ſpoke onely in oppoſition to a publick Confeſſion, ſuppoſed to have been aboliſhed by Nectarius; but theſe Men doe not obſerve, that moſt of theſe paſſages, even the moſt expreſs, are taken out of the Homilies preached at Antioch by S. Chryſoſtom. The beſt, and the moſt natural Anſwer is, That S. Chryſoſtom does not ſpeak in thoſe places of thoſe enormous Crimes that are ſubject to Canonical Penance; but in general of ſuch light offences as Chriſtians daily commit; for the remiſſion whereof, they need neither Confeſſion nor Abſolution, but only true Motions of inward repentance. He likewiſe diſcourſeth of that ſort of Sins, when he ſaith, That they are forgiven by Tears, by Alms, by Humility, by Prayer, and other remedies of that nature. However, S. Chryſoſtom was very ſevere in the puniſhment of Sinners; and he not only wiſht that notorious Sinners might be put out of the Church, and enjoyned Penance, as Adulterers and Blaſphemers; but he threatned alſo to excommunicate thoſe who came to the holy Myſteries negligently, and ſuch as lived in hatred and quarrels, that minded Stage-plays, were envious, proud, &c. Neither would he have great Lords to be ſpared; * For, ſaith he, as to Eccleſiaſtical Correction, Princes are but as other Faithfull, there ought to be no diſtinction. He adds, That the Miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt ſhould doe their Duty, tho' there were no hope that their reproof could prevail: Yet he would not have the Sword of the Church uſed lightly, or that Anathema's ſhould be indiſcreetly pronounced. This is the ſubject of the diſcourſe concerning Anathema's; wherein he endeavours to refute thoſe, who without lawfull authority, undertook boldly to condemn their Brethren, and to pronounce Anathema's upon ſuch matters as they were ignorant of. And he obſerves, that Men ought to be extreamly reſerved in this caſe, and not to publiſh Anathema's inconſiderately againſt any: But when there is neceſſity, it ought to be done with an intention to cure, and not to deſtroy thoſe that are under that penalty. † He ſaith further, in another place, That Zeal muſt be temper'd with Mercy, for otherwiſe it degenerates into Fury, and other Men's faults are not hardly to be judged of.

Hom. 21. ad Pop. Ant.
Hom. 9. de incompreh. Dei natura.
Hom. 8. de Pœnitentiâ.
Hom. 9. de Pœnitentiâ.
Hom. 20. in Geneſim.
Hom. in Pſ. 50.
Hom. 11. in Lazarum.
In Hom. de non evulgandis fratrum peccatis.
Serm. de pœnit. & mœſtitia Regis Achab.
Hom de bapt. Chriſti.
* Hom 22. ad Pop. Ant.
De Davide & Saul, Hom. 3.
Hom. 17. in Matth.
Hom. 4. in ep. ad Hebr.
In lib. contra gent. de S. Babyla. Hom. de Anathemate. † Hom. 9. in Geneſim.

In Hom. de SS. In Orat. de S. Babyla. Hom. de B. Philogonio. Hom. 2. ad pop. Antioch Hom. 1. in ep. ad Theſſ. Hom. 1. in illud Modico vino utere. Hom. 21. in Acta. Hom. 41, 42. in 1 ad Cor.

In S. Chryſoſtom's time Martyrs were had in honour; they were commemorated in the publick Services; their Feſtivals were kept, and their Relicks reverenc'd; not that they believed there was any vertue in thoſe Bones, but becauſe the ſight of their Graves, Urns, or Bones, affected and awakned the Mind, after the ſame manner, as if the Dead were preſent, and prayed with us; becauſe the ſight of their precious Relicks made an impreſſion upon the Mind. They viſited the holy Places with Devotion; but S. Chryſoſtom obſerves, that the chief intention of thoſe Pilgrimages ought to be the aſſiſting of the Poor. The Dead were pray'd for: and S. Chryſoſtom exhorts their Relations to give Alms in their behalf.

Hom de bapt. Chriſti.

Ibid.

Hom 3. de Incompreh.

Sundays and great Feſtivals were kept with great Solemnity. S. Chryſoſtom exhorteth Chriſtians to ſpend that day in Exerciſes of Devotion: He zealouſly reproveth all thoſe who employ that day about Buſineſſes or Recreations; affirming, That God's Curſe will light upon their Labours, and diſſipate what they get by neglecting his Service. In ſeveral places he encourageth the Faithfull to frequent Divine Service and the Publick Prayers of the Church, and ſhews that they are more powerfull and of greater efficacy, than private ones: He reproves thoſe that gave attention to Sermons, but would go out as ſoon as the Sermon was ended. "When I preach, (ſays he, in the Third Diſcourſe of the incomprehenſible Nature of God) I "that am Chriſt's Servant as you are, you come in throngs to hear me; you hearken to my "words, and exhort one another, and attend with patience unto the end; but when Jeſus Chriſt "appeareth in the Myſteries, the Church is empty; you go out as ſoon as you have heard "the Sermon, which is a ſign that you have profited nothing; for had the Truths preached "unto you made any impreſſion upon your Minds, you would have ſtay'd in the Church, and "have partaken of theſe ſtupendious Myſteries with reverence and devotion; but, alas! you "depart immediately after the Sermon, as if you came only to hear a Conſort of Muſick. "Some, to excuſe themſelves, uſe this weak reaſon; We can pray at home, but can hear no "Sermons but at Church: You deceive your ſelves; for tho' ye may pray at home, yet your "Prayer cannot have the efficacy of that in the Church, where ſo many Prieſts join their Prayers with yours, and where a common Voice crieth to Heaven to implore God's mercy. "Common Prayer is a wonderfull Conſort, proceeding from a Concord of Charity: To which we "are to add the Prayers of the Prieſts, who are ſet over the Aſſemblies; that the Prayers of "the People, tho' weaker of themſelves, may gather ſtrength by being joined to thoſe of "God's Miniſters.

The

The Faſt of Lent was exactly obſerved, with Abſtinence from Meats; but for any Bodily Infirmity it might be diſpenſed with. Two days of the week were exempt from Faſting, that the Body might have ſome Reſpite.

S. John Chryſoſtom.

S. Chryſoſtom looks upon the Holy Scripture, As the ground and Rule of all the truths of Religion; He exhorts all the Faithful to read it exactly: and this Advice he preſſes an infinite number of times; He expounds it Litterally, and draws from it edifying moral Inſtructions, but he never propoſes any forced Allegories, nor reſolveth thoſe Queſtions that have more of Curioſity than Profit, as moſt Writers of Commentaries, whether Ancient or Modern very frequently do: I ſhould never make an end, if I ſhould Collect all the common places of S. Chryſoſtom upon moral Subjects: I ſhall only mention two or three of the moſt conſiderable upon every Subject, and point at ſome others.

Hom 3 & 4. de Statuis. Hom. 11. in Geneſ. Serm 3. & 4. de Lazaro. Hom. 1. & 2. in Matth. Hom. 10. 30, 32, 58.

in Joannem. Hom. 11. & 31. in Eundem. Hom. 1. in ep. ad Rom. Hom. 9. in ep. ad Coloſ. Hom. 19. in Acta.

Opinions of S. Chryſoſtom upon ſeveral moral Principles.

Of the Love of God.

MOST Men have taken up a falſe Notion of the Love of God, looking upon it as an Act of the mind, which thinks it has a Love for God, and expreſſes it with words. S. Chryſoſtom to undeceive them of this Error, proves by a compariſon with the love men have for the Creature, that the love which they ought to have for God, is a ſtrong cleaving of the Heart to God, which is the Rule, Principle, and Motive of all their Actions, and which begets in them a contempt of all that is not God. " If thoſe (ſaith he in his Comment " upon Pſalm 91.) that are in love with Corporeal Beauties, have no Senſe for all other things " in the World, and follow no buſineſs, but that of beholding continually an Object which " is ſo dear and ſo acceptable to them; Can a man that loveth God, as God ought to be " loved, have any Senſe afterwards of the good and evil, of the Pleaſures and Afflictions of " this Life? No truly, for he is above all theſe things, and his delight is only in good things " that are Immortal, and of the ſame Nature with him whom he loveth; thoſe that love the " Creatures do quickly change, 'tho unwillingly, their Affection, for Oblivion; becauſe the " things which they love decay and corrupt; but this ſpiritual love hath neither end nor bounds, " but contains in it ſelf more Pleaſure and Profit than any thing elſe, and nothing is able to " extinguiſh it.

He compareth the love that we ought to have for God, with that which covetous Men have for riches; in the Sixth Homily upon the Second Epiſtle to Timothy. " It is a ſhameful " thing, ſaith he, that Men poſſeſſed with a violent Paſſion for riches, ſhould ſhew nothing " of that love which they ought to have for God; and that, we have leſs Conſideration for " God, than covetous Men have for wealth. For to get Money they watch much, undertake " long Journeys, expoſe themſelves to Dangers, Hatred and Ambuſhes, and undergo all " Extremities, but we refuſe to bear with the leaſt word for God, or to expoſe our ſelves to " the leaſt hatred for his Service, &c.

In the Third Homily upon 1 Cor. he tells Chriſtians, That they love Jeſus Chriſt leſs than their Friends. " Many, ſaith he, have endured the loſs of their Goods, for the Service " of their Friends; but none are willing, I will not ſay, to be deprived of their Goods for " Jeſus Chriſt, but even to be reduced to mere Neceſſaries for his ſake, or to content themſelves with what they have at preſent. We often bear with Affronts, and make our ſelves " Enemies for our Friends; but none will incurr the Hatred of any for the Service of Jeſus " Chriſt, and both this Hatred and Love are looked upon as unprofitable things; we never " deſpiſe a Friend when we ſee him hungry, but would not give a Morſel of bread to Jeſus " Chriſt who cometh to us daily . . . . . if our Friend be ſick we viſit him immediately; but " tho' Chriſt is often detained in Priſon in the Perſons of his Members, we come not at him. " When a Friend is going a Journey we melt into tears, but tho' Chriſt daily departeth from " us, or rather we daily put him away by our ſins, yet we are not affected with Grief upon " that Account.

Laſt of all, S. Chryſoſtom obſerveth Hom. 52. upon the Acts, That, " Whoſoever loveth God " truly, will deſpiſe all the things of this World, even thoſe that are the moſt precious and illuſtrious. Glory and Shame are indifferent things to him; he is no more Sollicitous than if " he were left alone in the World: He deſpiſeth Temptations, Scourgings, Dungeons, with " as much Courage, as if all theſe were endured by another, or as if his Body were a Diamond; he laughs at the Pleaſures of this Life, and is not in the leaſt ſuſceptible of Paſſions.

See the Twentieth Homily upon S. Matthew, where he ſhews that God is to be loved not in Words but in Deeds. Hom. 30. upon 2 Cor. Hom. 3. upon 1 Tim. Hom. 52. upon the Acts.

Of

S. John Chryſoſtom.

Of the Love of our Neighbour.

" CHarity (ſaith S. Chryſoſtom in the Sixth Homily upon the Epiſtle to Titus) is the greateſt " of all Vertues, it brings the Lovers thereof to the very Throne of God. Virginity, " Faſting, and Auſterities profit only thoſe that practiſe them; but Alms-deeds reach to all, " and embrace all the Members of Jeſus Chriſt: Now there is no Vertue greater than that " which reunites ſcattered and ſeparated parts. Charity is the Badge of Chriſtian Religion, " whereby the Diſciples of Jeſus Chriſt are known: That is it which cures our Crimes, cleanſes " the Spots of our Souls, it is as a Ladder to aſcend into Heaven, and it joyns all the parts of " Chriſt's Body together.

See the Sixtieth Homily upon S. Matthew, the 15th. and 78th. upon S. John, the 40th. upon the Acts, the 8th. upon the Rom. the 32d. upon 2 Cor. the 9th. upon Epheſ. the Second upon the laſt to Tim. the 33d. upon 1 Cor. the 4th. upon Theſ. the 10th. upon the Epiſtle to the Epheſ. the Second upon the Epiſtle to the Philippians.

Of Alms-deeds.

THE firſt effect of Charity is to give Alms, and the Obligation to Alms-deeds, is included in the Commandment of Loving our Neighbours as our ſelves. S. Chryſoſtom recommends this Vertue in ſo many places, that he ſaith himſelf in the 89th. Homily upon S. Matthew, That they upbraided him with ſpeaking of nothing elſe. " Giving of Alms " (ſaith he in ſeveral places) renders Men like unto God, cleanſeth from ſin, and appeaſeth " the Anger of God. To give to the Poor, is to give unto God, it is to lend to him upon " Uſe. We are not only adviſed, but commanded to give Alms. Men are not Maſters but " only Stewards of their Goods. God who is the Soveraign Lord hath entruſted them with " the rich, that they might relieve the poor. All other good works are unprofitable with- " out Alms-deeds. Alms ſhould be given with Joy, and in abundance. Men ought not to " ſtay till Death to diſpoſe of their Charity; but if they have done nothing in their Life- " time, it is good to leave to the poor after Death, and give them as much as to a Child, or " at leaſt as to a Servant. Theſe Principles and Maxims S. Chryſoſtom repeateth often in his Homilies, as the Thirtieth Homily upon Geneſis, that upon Pſalm 101. the Second Sermon concerning Lazarus, the Seventeenth Homily upon 2 Cor. the Sixth upon Titus, The 5th. 35th, 45th, 47th, 48th, 52d. 66th. 78th, 80th, 86th, upon S. Matth. The 23d, 25th, 27th, 40th, 76th, upon S. John, the Seventh upon Coloſ. the 11th, 15th, 18th, upon Rom. the 20th, 21ſt, and 43d, upon 1 Cor. the 5th, Homily of Penance, the Sermon upon the Petition of the Sons of Zebedee, the firſt Homily of Faſting, and in an infinite number of places beſides.

Of Riches and Poverty.

AS the Luxury of Riches hinders Men from giving of Alms, ſo we ought not to wonder that S. Chryſoſtom preaching upon Charity, declaims vehemently againſt Riches, and ſpeaks in Commendation of Poverty. " Riches (ſaith he in the Second Homily of Statues) are not " forbidden, if a good uſe be made of them. But what Probability is there that Men ſhould " not neglect Jeſus Chriſt who is naked, while they build marble Palaces for themſelves? O " wretched Man! to what purpoſe is the Magnificency of thy Houſe? This Palace will not, " but thy good works will follow thee. .... To day rich, and to morrow poor. I muſt " confeſs, that I cannot forbear ſmiling when I read in Wills and Teſtaments, I give and " bequeath to ſuch a one, the Revenue of my Eſtate for Life, and to ſuch a one the Fee- " ſimple. To ſpeak Properly, we have but the uſe of things, the Propriety belongs not to " us, and tho' we ſhould poſſeſs them all our Life-time, yet will they leave us when we " die .... Poverty is a ſingular advantage to thoſe that know how to uſe it well. It is a " Treaſure that cannot be taken away, a ſupport that cannot fail, and a Sanctuary that cannot " be violated. If you ask the Admirers of that fooliſh Magnificence, what is the Object of their " Admiration? They will anſwer you, that it is either the brave Horſe that carrieth this new Cra- " ſus, or his rich Livery, his gilded Clothes, or the delicate Meats that are ſet before him, or the " Pleaſures he enjoyeth. This is what is admired, and what cannot be too much deplored; and " yet none of theſe Commendations are directed to this rich Man, they all belong to his Horſe, " his Clothes or his Equipage, they admire how well he is mounted, they praiſe his Men, his " Clothes, but they ſay nothing of his Perſon. Can there be a greater Folly? But on the other " ſide, if you ſee a poor Man in want, and under contempt, deſpiſed by thoſe that ſee him, make " much

" much of him, and by your eſteem of him, the Beholders will be excited to Vertue. They " will tell you, that he is an indigent Fellow, a Wretch; but do you ſay on the contrary that he is " a happy Man, becauſe he hath God for his Friend, becauſe he hath not faſtned his Heart to periſh- " ing Riches, nor defiled his Conſcience. With ſuch Chriſtian Diſcourſes as theſe inſtruct your Bre- " thren; let both your Praiſes and your Contempts have no other Aim than the Glory of the " Almighty.... One may commend, reprove, and be angry for God's ſake. If you find a Servant, " a Friend, a Neighbour, robbing, or committing Lewdneſs; If you hear one telling a Lye, or " Blaſpheming; If you perceive that your Neighbour is going to proſtitute his Soul at a Play, call " him back, check, and correct that Sinner: Theſe good works will be done to the Honour of " God. If this Servant, or this Friend hath offended you, and is departed from his Duty, for- " give him, that will be Forgivneſs for God's ſake; make alſo Friends and Enemies to your " ſelves for God's cauſe. Do you ask how? thus it is: Never contract that ſort of Friendſhip which " is gotten by Luxury, Intereſt or Ambition, but ſeek to make you ſuch Friends, as may adviſe " you to Moderation under a great Fortune, and Comfort you in Adverſity, who may prompt " you only to Honeſty, and who by their Counſels and Prayers may unite you to Jeſus Chriſt. " If you ſee a lewd Perſon, one full of dangerous Opinions, break off all commerce with " him.... If you ſpeak in any Company, let your words be Godward. He did ſo often Diſ- " courſe againſt Riches, and the abuſe of them, that he ſaith himſelf, in the Sermon againſt Eu- " tropius, upon Pſalm 44. that they accuſed him of hating rich Men. " But, ſaith he, why ſhould " I not ſpeak continually againſt them, ſince they ceaſe not to torment the Poor? I complain " not of them becauſe they are rich, but becauſe they uſe their Riches ill: for I make this Pro- " feſſion, Never to blame any Body for being wealthy, but for with-holding what is not his own. " ... The preſent Life (addeth he) is a Pilgrimage; let no man ſay, I have a Town, a Houſe, " an Eſtate, &c. No Man hath any thing here below: all the good things of this Life, are the " Inſtruments of our Journey; we are travelling as long as this Life laſteth. Some gather wealth " in this Journey, and bury Gold in the way, and pray tell me, when you are come into an " Inn, do you furniſh it with ſuperfluous Houſhold-ſtuff? No certainly, you are contented to " eat and drink there, and to be gone as ſoon as you can. This Life is an Inn, we are ſcarce " come into it, but we are obliged to quit it, therefore let us do it readily; let us keep nothing " here, that we may loſe nothing in the next Life. You are Travellers in this Life, and leſs than " Travellers; for a Traveller knoweth, when he cometh into his Inn, and when he goeth out, " &c. In this dreadful Ignorance I loſe a great deal of time; and while I am laying up of " Proviſions, God calls me, and upbraids me thus, Thou Fool! whoſe ſhall theſe things be which " thou haſt prepared? for this very Night thy Soul ſhall be demanded of thee.... But what, " will ſome Perſons ſay, muſt be done in this Caſe? even this, Hate temporal Goods, love eter- " nal Life, part with your Eſtate, I do not ſay with all, but with what is ſuperfluous; do not covet " what is another's; ſpoyl not the Widow, nor rob the Orphan; raviſh not the Goods of this " World, but take Heaven by violence; Jeſus Chriſt approves of this violence, &c. Do not " vex the Poor, but doe him Right, &c.

S. John Chryſoſtom.

See Hom. 4. upon S. Matthew, where he proves by the Example of the Three Children, that were caſt into the Fiery Furnace, that Riches are not to be worſhipped: The 9th. Homily upon S. Matthew, where he ſhews, that we ought not to be lifted up, becauſe of Riches: The 20th, and 64th, againſt the deſire of wealth: The 42d. againſt Luxury and Pleaſures: The 48th. againſt exceſs in Clothes: The 80th. and 81ſt. Homilies againſt Covetouſneſs: The 88th. againſt the Luxury of Women: And, the 19th. Homily upon S. John, concerning the uſe that ought to be made of Riches.

Of Forgiving, and againſt Revenge.

THE Second effect of Charity towards our Neighbour, is forgiving of our Enemies, in oppoſition to a Spirit of Revenge, of Enmity and Reſentment. S. Chryſoſtom declaims ſeverely againſt this Vice, in an Homily purpoſely compoſed on that Subject, which is the Twenty-ſecond, concerning Statues. Theſe are ſome of his Notions. " The revengefull Man, ſaith he, is not " leſs unworthy of the Communion, than the Blaſphemer and Adulterer. The lewd Perſon puts " an end to his Crime when he has ſatisfied his impure Deſire; but he that keeps up an obſtinate " Hatred, ſins continually, and never makes an end. The fire of Luſt is ſpent by enjoyment; " but that of Hatred feeds it ſelf, and is renewed every moment. With what face then can we " implore the Mercy of God, whilſt we are full of bitter hatred againſt our Brethren? Your Bro- " ther hath done you an injury; but doe you not often commit injuries againſt God? Doe you " compare the Servant with his Maſter? In the mean time, he that wrongeth you, was perhaps " wrong'd by you before: But what wrong hath God ever done you? or rather what benefits " hath he not taken pleaſure to beſtow upon you, and you in requital return only injuries to him " again? In a word; pretending to be revenged of others, you puniſh your ſelves: The hatred " you harbour, is your own tormenter, to tear your own bowels. Is there any thing more un- " happy than he who meditates revenge? He is a Mad-man that never enjoyeth any reſt, his

S. John Chryſoſtom.

" Heart being filled with Storms and Troubles: He abhorreth all the Actions, the Words, and " the very Name of his Enemy. And to what end is this Fury, and theſe Torments? We ought " to forgive our Enemies to prevent the pains we feel by hating them. What folly is it to ſeek " revenge at our own coſt; to doe our ſelves a great miſchief, that another may receive a leſſer, &c.

See the 61ſt. Homily upon S. Matthew; the 39th. upon S. John; the 38th. upon the Acts; an Homily upon the Epiſtle to the Theſſalonians, and ſeveral other places.

Of Faſting.

NExt to giving of Alms, Faſting is one of the moſt powerfull means to obtain pardon for Sin; but that Faſting may be profitable, it muſt be accompanied with a regular life. This S. Chryſoſtom takes notice of almoſt every-where, when he diſcourſes of Faſting. See how he expreſſeth himſelf, in the Second Homily of Statues. " I doe not call Faſting a meer abſtinence " from Meats, but forbearance from Sin: For Faſting is not able of its own nature to blot out " the pollution of our offences, except neceſſary diſpoſitions doe attend it.... Let us therefore " have a care, that in Faſting, we fall not ſhort of the price and reward that belongs to it: But " let us learn perfectly to practiſe it holily. Afterwards he ſets forth the qualities of a Faſt by " the example of that of the Ninevites.... He (ſaith our Author) offers an injury to Faſting, who " defines it to be an abſtinence from Meats. You Faſt, Brother; but ſhew me your Faſting by " your Works: but you will ask me, what Works? I require therefore, that when you ſee a " poor Man, you be ſure to help him in his miſery; that you reconcile your ſelf to your enemy; " that another Man's Glory may not excite your Envy; and that you ſhut your Eyes when you " meet an handſome Woman: For Faſting reſpects not the Mouth barely, but the Ear, the " Hands, the Feet, and all the other Parts of the Body. Covetous Hands ſhould faſt, and " touch no more other Men's goods; the Feet ſhould faſt, and run no more to profane Shews; " and the Eyes ſhould faſt, by turning aſide from that beauty, whoſe ſight is ſo dangerous.

In the Fourth Homily of Statues, he lays down the ſame Maxims again. " We ſee, ſaith he, " nothing but People making merry, and ſaying one to another; Victory, all is our own, Mid- " lent is over. My advice to theſe is, That they ſhould conſider, whether the inward Man is " in a better condition than it was when the Faſt begun: For then indeed we have reaſon to re- " joyce, when our Faſting does not end with thoſe Vices that it began with, and when we are " come to the Feſtival of Eaſter with a Conſcience purified by Faſting. I know ſome who, in " the middle of Lent, do dread already that of the next year.... Can there be a greater weakneſs? " But whence cometh it? Even from this, That we make Faſting to conſiſt only in forbearing " of Meats, and not in the reforming of our Manners.

" There may be (ſaith he in the 22d. Homily) ſeveral reaſons not to Faſt; but there is none not " to correct a vicious habit. You have broken your Faſt, becauſe of a bodily infirmity. Well: " But why doe you not forgive your Enemy? Is there any corporal indiſpoſition that hinders? " Laſtly, He obſerveth in the 7th. and 11th. Homilies upon Geneſis, that the true Faſt is abſti- " nence from Sin; for forbearance of Meat was introduced to reſtrain the motions of the Fleſh, " and to ſuppreſs the Paſſions. See the Homilies of Faſting and of Alms-deeds, and the 57th. upon S. Matthew.

Upon this; That Man is obliged to doe all for God, and to direct all his Actions to him alone.

COncerning a Chriſtian's Duty, S. Chryſoſtom diſcourſeth thus in the 23d. Homily, againſt thoſe that kept the Feaſts of the New-Moons. " S. Paul (ſaith he) commands us to doe all things " to the Glory of God: For whether you eat, or whether you drink, or whatſoever ye doe, doe all " to the Glory of God. You will ask what relation have theſe things to the Glory of God? In- " vite a poor Man to your Table; this is called to eat and drink to the Glory of God. You may " alſo work for God by ſhutting up your ſelves in your own Houſes: How, and by what means, " will you ſay? When you hear the Diſorders and Inſolencies committed in the Streets, by lewd " Men, then ſhut your doors, have nothing to doe with that helliſh Crew, and you ſhall keep " your Houſes for the Glory of God. You may alſo glorifie the Lord both by your Praiſes " and by your Contempt: As for example; When you ſee a wicked Man gorgeouſly apparell'd, " and ſumptuouſly adorned with the ſpoil of the Countries, which he hath brought to deſolation, " and attended with a great number of Servants; and ſome weak Soul is blinded with that vain " luſtre, diſcover to him his errour, and make him ſee the vanity of that inſignificant Pomp, and " pity the happineſs of that unhappy Man. Thus may Men deſpiſe things for the Glory of God. " This contempt is an inſtruction for thoſe that are witneſſes thereof. We prove God to be pre- " ſent at all the actions of our lives, even in our purchaſes and ſales, when we are contented with " an

" an honeſt gain, and when we take no advantage of other Men's neceſſities to advance the rates " of our Commodities.

" In your Faſts and Prayers, in your Contempt and Praiſe, in your Silence and Diſcourſes, in " Selling and Buying, think always on the Glory of God.

S. John Chryſoſtom.

See upon the ſame Subject the 6th. Homily upon S. Matthew, the 79th. upon the ſame, the 9th. and 14th. upon the Acts, and the 18th. upon the Romans.

Of the neceſſary Diſpoſitions to communicate worthily.

NOne of the Fathers have ſpoken more powerfully and largely than S. Chryſoſtom, concerning the neceſſary Diſpoſitions to communicate worthily, nor more dreadfully againſt unworthy Communicants.

He requireth in the firſt place, that thoſe who draw near to the Lord's Table, ſhould put away their Sins. " It is written (ſaith he in the Firſt Sermon of Penance) That without Holineſs no " Man ſhall ſee God; but whoſoever is unworthy to ſee God, is not worthy to partake of the " Body and Blood of Chriſt; wherefore S. Paul will have a Man to examine himſelf, &c. Reform " the Diſorders of your life paſt, and then come to that holy Table, and participate of that Sacri- " fice with a pure and unſpotted Conſcience.

" He ſaith the ſame things in the 22d. Homily of Statues; Seeing we are advancing into Lent, " let us advance in Vertue; it is in vain to run, except we get the prize of the Race: Our Au- " ſterities and Faſtings will profit us nothing, if we come not to the holy Table with an exact " purity of Heart: For Lent, Prayers and Sermons are appointed in the Church, for no other " purpoſe, but to make us participate ſafely of the unbloody Sacrifice, and to waſh away with " the Waters of Repentance, the filthineſſes of our Sins; without this our labour is vain: But if " by Abſtinence you have corrected one Vice, and gained one Vertue, and put off one evil habit, " then you may boldly take place at the Table of the Lord.

" He recommends the ſame thing in the Homily of Seraphims. I tell you plainly, ſaith he, " I pray, I beſeech you not to come to the Lord's Table with a Conſcience defiled with Crimes: " For to communicate in this condition, is not Communion, but Condemnation; and tho' you " ſhould a thouſand times come to the Body of Jeſus Chriſt in that condition, yet inſtead of recei- " ving benefit by it, you would become the more guilty. Let Sinners therefore keep away; that is, " thoſe who perſevere in their Sin. This I warn you of betimes, even now, that when the day " of that heavenly Feaſt ſhall come, you may not ſay, I am unprepared, you ſhould have gi- " ven me warning.... I know that we are all guilty, that no man can boaſt of having a pure " heart in this World: That's not the worſt; but that not having a pure heart, they will not " draw nigh unto him that can purifie them.

But to be pure is not ſufficient, according to S. Chryſoſtom, to partake of that holy Table; " Men muſt have a care beſides, that they come not thither negligently. " Let no Man (ſaith " he in the 83d. Homily upon S. Matthew) approach this Sacred Table with diſguſt, negligence " or coldneſs; but let all come with a longing deſire, with zeal and love.... You ought there- " fore to watch over your own actions carefully, knowing that thoſe who receive unworthily the " Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, are threatned with a dreadfull puniſhment. If you cannot " endure, without horrour, Judas's crime, who ſold his Maſter; and the Jews ingratitude, who " crucified their King; beware alſo of becoming guilty of profaning the Body and Blood of Je- " ſus Chriſt: Let no Judas, no covetous Man come hither; let none but true Diſciples of Jeſus " Chriſt be preſent at that Feaſt, &c. For this Reaſon this holy Father obſerves in the Homily of Judas's Treachery, that this holy Altar is not to be approached unto without reverence.... That no Hypocrite, no Man full of iniquity ought to come near to this Sacred Table. According to " theſe Principles, (he ſaith in the 17th. Homily upon Hebrews) That, generally ſpeaking, no " reckoning is to be made either of thoſe who communicate but once in the Year, or of thoſe that " doe it often, or ſuch as receive ſeldom; but of thoſe that communicate with a pure Conſcience, " a clean Heart, and a blameleſs Life. Let as many as are thus diſpoſed come always; and as " many as are not, let them not come once, becauſe they cannot but draw God's Judgments " upon themſelves, and become worthy of Condemnation. Doe you think that Forty days " Penance is ſufficient to cleanſe you from all your Sins?

See upon the ſame Subject the 52d. Homily againſt thoſe that Faſt at Eaſter; the Homily upon the Nativity of Jeſus Chriſt; the 7th. Homily upon S. Matthew; the 24th. 27th. and 41ſt. upon 1 Cor. the 3d. upon the Epiſt. to the Epheſians; the 17th. upon the Epiſt. to the Hebrews; the 5th. upon Titus and ſeveral other places.

Of

S. John Chryſoſtom.

Of Prayer.

" GOD requireth of us fervent and conſtant Prayer; he often with-holds thoſe things that " we ask of him to excite our Zeal. This Obſervation is found in the Firſt Homily concerning Statues, in thoſe upon Geneſis, in the Commentary upon Pſal. 7. and in the Homily upon theſe Words, Phil. 1. What then? Chriſt is preached. He deſcribeth both the Conditions and the Effects of Prayer in the 2d. Homily upon Hannah. In the 5th. Homily upon the ſame Subject, he ſheweth the Strength and Virtue of Prayer; He lays down the Neceſſity of Prayer in ſeveral places of his Works. See the 22d. Homily upon S. Matthew, the 36th. upon S. John; he ſpeaks of Thankſgiving in the 25th. upon Matthew, in the 35th. upon S. John's Goſpel, and in the 14th. upon 2 Cor.

Of Attention in Prayer.

" WE pay leſs reſpect to God, than a Servant doth to his Maſter, a Soldier to his General, or " even a Friend to his Friend; for we ſpeak to our Friends with attention: But whilſt our " Knees are on the ground, and we are treating with God about the buſineſs of our Salvation; " whilſt we beg pardon for our Crimes, we faint, our Mind is at Court, or at the Bar, and there " is no correſpondence betwixt our Thoughts and our Words. We daily commit this fault, &c.

" Many go into the Church, and there utter a great number of Prayers; and then come out, " not knowing what they have ſaid: They move their Lips, but they do not apply their Minds " to their Diſcourſes. What? you hearken not to what you ſay, and would you have God hear it? " I kneeled, ſay you, but your Heart was ſome-where elſe: Your Mouth uttered Petitions, but " your Mind was about Bargains, Trading, Exchange or Viſits. It is in the time of Prayer that the " Devil aſſaults us, knowing that then we profit ſpiritually; he ſuggeſts to our Spirits a multi- " tude of Thoughts. See the 36th. Homily upon the Acts, wherein he exhorts Chriſtians to pray in the Night.

Of Humility, againſt Pride.

HUmility, according to S. Chryſoſtom, is the principle of all Vertues, and the ground of all good Works. This he proveth in the 47th. Homily upon S. Matthew: " We ſhould not be " lifted up for our good Works, but acknowledge our unworthineſs before God. Vertues are like " Riches; if we expoſe them publickly, we are in danger of loſing them; to preſerve them, they " muſt be hid. The more good we doe, the leſs we ſhould boaſt of it; if we be proud for it, we " loſe its reward. The greateſt Action, and the moſt acceptable to God, is to entertain low " Thoughts of our ſelves.... Nothing conduces more to make us beloved of God, than to reckon " our ſelves moſt imperfect; that is the heighth and perfection of Wiſdom.

See the 3d. Homily upon S. Matthew; the 4th. upon the ſame Goſpel; the latter end of the 25th. and 65th. upon the ſame; the 28th. 38th. 41ſt. and 48th. upon S. John; the 21ſt. upon the Romans; the 11th. upon 2 Theſſal. and the 2d. Homily upon the Epiſtle to Titus; where he ſpeaks againſt the love of Glory.

Of Chriſtian Watchfulneſs.

S. Chryſoſtom deſcribeth in ſeveral places the various Devices which Satan uſeth to tempt us, very eloquently. Upon this Subject one may conſult the Homily of the Tempter, where he proves that Temptations are profitable for us, provided we ſtand always upon our guard, and watch continually over our ſelves. This he recommends in that place, and in the 13th. Homily upon S. Matthew; where he proves, that in this World the Devil's temptations are to be reſiſted: In the 14th. where he ſhews that the diſeaſes of the Soul are not to be neglected; and in many other places, where he gives both Precepts and Means to avoid Temptations and Sins.

Againſt

Againſt Covetouſneſs.

S. Chryſoſtom declares his Indignation againſt Covetous Men in many places, and the Picture which he makes of them is enough to beget in us an abhorrency to them. Thus he ſpeaks of them, Hom. 9. upon 1 Cor. "What can be more impudent, ſhameleſs and bold, than a miſera- "bly covetous Man? A Dog is more modeſt than the covetous Man, who ſeizeth upon that which "is another Man's. Nothing is more filthy, than thoſe Hands which take all; nothing more "cruel, than that Mouth which devoureth all, and is never ſatisfied. Look not upon his Face "and Eyes, as if they were the Eyes and Face of a Man. The covetous Perſon is never contented, "till he hath got all that the World hath; all is brutiſh in his Face; he is Inhumanity it ſelf, &c. In the 39th. Homily upon 1 Cor. he ſheweth how abominable a thing a covetous Man is, who having gathered great quantities of Corn, to ſell it dear, laments, becauſe it is growing cheap. In another place, Hom. 18. upon the Epiſtle to the Epheſians; he ſays that Covetouſneſs is a kind of Idolatry. He carries the ſame Notion in the 64th. Homily upon S. John. In a word, all his Homilies are full of Invectives againſt covetous Men; He writes againſt Uſury in the 56th. Homily upon S. Matthew, in the 12th. upon the Romans, and in the 15th. upon 1 Cor.

S. John Chryſoſtom.

Of Meekneſs, and againſt Anger.

THo' S. Chryſoſtom's Zeal gave his Enemies occaſion to accuſe him of being paſſionate; yet one may eaſily judge by his Writings, that he was a great lover of Meekneſs, and that he diſapproved of Paſſion; See his Moral Exhortations, in the 29th. Homily upon S. Matthew, the 33d. and 48th. upon S. John, the 6th. upon the Acts, and the 17th. upon the Epiſtle to the Epheſians.

Againſt Envy.

"ENvy is the moſt abominable of Sins: Hell never produced one more to be abhorred. Other "Sinners have ſome pleaſure; but the Envious Man torments himſelf, whilſt he torments o- "thers. Envy hath been the cauſe of all miſchief. This crime is ſo much the more dangerous, "becauſe no Penance is enjoyned for it. Men fanſie they may blot it out by ſome ſmall Alms, or "a ſhort Faſt; they do not weep bitterly for it, as for Adultery or Fornication, &c.

Theſe are ſome of S. Chryſoſtom's Notions about Envy, taken out of the 40th. Homily upon S. Matthew. One may read upon the ſame Subject the Homily upon Pſal. 49. Hom. 37. upon S. John, the 3d. upon 1 Cor. the 24th. and 27th. upon 2 Cor. and the 3d. upon the Epiſtle to the Philippians.

Againſt Drunkenneſs.

"THere is not a more dangerous or hatefull Sin than Drunkenneſs, ſaith S. Chryſoſtom, in the "firſt Diſcourſe upon theſe words of S. Paul to Timothy, Uſe a little Wine for thy ſtomach's "ſake, and thine often infirmities. A Drunkard is a dead Man living, voluntary ſick, a perſon "uſeleſs either for the Commonwealth, or for his Family; one whoſe preſence is intolerable, "whoſe breath, voice and ſteps are equally odious.

See the 27th. Homily upon the Acts, the 25th. upon the Epiſtle to the Romans. See alſo the 56th. Homily upon S. Matthew, and the 27th. upon the Acts.

Againſt Swearing and Blaſphemies.

S. Chryſoſtom diſcourſeth againſt Swearing and Blaſphemies almoſt in all the Homilies of Statues, where he declaimeth vehemently againſt that Vice.

See alſo the 8th. 10th. and 11th. Homilies upon the Acts.

Concerning Publick Shows and Stage-plays.

S. John Chryſoſtom.

S. Chryſoſtom living in Two great Imperial Cities, where Plays, Shows, Comedies, &c. were very frequent, and to which the People were much addicted; one needs not wonder, that he ſhould ſo often and ſo earneſtly inveigh againſt thoſe diſorders. He calls their Stages, Schools of Lewdneſs, Academies of Incontinence, and Peſtilential Pulpits. "I here, ſaith he, you ſee lewd Women repreſenting Adulteries, and uttering Blaſphemies. With what Eyes will you look upon your Wives, your Children, Servants or Friends at your going out of ſuch places? He refuteth in another Sermon the ſpecious pretences they had to plead for Plays: theſe are his Words. "What harm, ſay you, is there in going to ſee a Play? Is that ſufficient to keep one from the "Communion? But I will ask you, Whether there can be a more ſhameleſs Sin, than to come "to the holy Table, being defiled with Adultery? Yes, it is a kind of Adultery to go to a Play; "and if you will not believe me, hear the Words of him who is to judge of our life. Jeſus Chriſt "tells us, That whoſoever looketh upon a Woman to luſt after her, committeth Adultery. "What can be ſaid of thoſe, who paſſionately ſpend whole days in thoſe places, in looking upon Women of ill fame and reputation: With what face will they dare to affirm, that they "beheld them not to luſt after them? And ſo much the rather, becauſe they hear laſcivious "Speeches, they ſee wanton Actions, they are entertained with amorous Songs, and with Voices "capable of ſtirring up ſhamefull Paſſions; they ſee Women dreſſed, painted, and adorned on "purpoſe to inſpire Love. The Aſſiſtants are in ſuch confuſion and idleneſs, as promote Riotings; "and theſe are natural effects both of the preparations and conſequences of Plays. The Muſical "Inſtruments, Conſorts and Songs, are equally dangerous; they flatter ſtrangely, they effeminate "the heart, and prepare it to yield to the ſnares laid for them by profligate Women. For if in the "Church it ſelf, where Pſalms are ſung, the Scripture is read, where the dread of the Almighty "appears, and Men are in a poſture of reverence? If, I ſay, in that ſo venerable a place, Luſt "will creep in as a Thief, How ſhall they be able to overcome the motions of Concupiſcence, "that conſtantly frequent the Stage, who neither ſee nor hear any thing but what is profane "and dangerous; whoſe Hearts are full of evil Thoughts, and whoſe Eyes and Ears are aſſaulted "continually? But if this be impoſſible, how ſhall they juſtifie themſelves from the guilt of "Adultery? And if they are Adulterers, how can they pretend to come into the Church, and "to participate of the holy Table before they have done Penance?

See the 4th. Homily concerning Hannah, the 1ſt. 7th. 17th. 37th. and 38th. upon S. Matthew, the 32d. and 58th. upon S. John, and the 17th. Homily upon the Epiſtle to the Epheſians, againſt Mountebanks, and Jeſters, and Stage-players.

Of Balls and Gaming.

S. Chryſoſtom exclaimeth as much againſt Balls and publick Meetings, as he does againſt Stage-plays. "There are (ſaith he in the 23d. Homily to the People of Antioch) no Enemy ſo dan"gerous as thoſe nocturnal Recreations, thoſe pernicious Meetings and Dances. Our former miſ"carriages call for Tears, for Shame and Sorrow, and yet Mirth breaks out every-where..... I "ſhall ſay nothing of idle Expences; but I am very much troubled at Gamings and Taverns; "how much is there of Impiety and Intemperance? He ſpeaks againſt Games of Chance in the 15th. Homily to the People of Antioch; where he ſhews, that they are occaſions of Blaſphemies, Loſſes, Anger, Quarrels, and all manner of Crimes.

Of the Dignity and Qualifications of the Miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt.

WE have already ſet down S. Chryſoſtom's Opinion concerning the Dignity and Excellency of the Prieſthood, when we mentioned his Books upon that Subject, and the Homilies concerning the Hiſtory of Uzziah. We alſo joyned to that ſome places of the ſame Treatiſe, concerning the Qualifications of a Biſhop, and the Weight of his Office. But to thoſe one may add, what he ſays to the ſame purpoſe, in the 1ſt. Homily upon the Epiſt. to Titus, and in the 3d. upon the Acts; where he openly declares his Opinion, that few Biſhops were ſaved. Upon the ſame Subject one may conſult the 1ſt. Homily upon the Epiſtle to the Corinthians, the 4th. upon that to the Philippians, and the 3d. upon the Acts. He enjoyns Chriſtians in ſeveral places to be very reſpectfull towards the Prieſts; as in the Homilies upon the Song of Hannah, in the 22d. upon S. Matthew, in the 86th. upon S. John, and in the 2d. upon the 1ſt. Epiſt. to Timothy. His Obſervation in this Laſt is, That we ſhould not hear thoſe Paſtours that are fallen into Hereſy; but, on the contrary, we ought to avoid them, and ſeparate from them: But not from wicked ed Prieſts, whoſe Character is to be honoured; becauſe, notwithſtanding their Wickedneſs, they truly offer the holy Sacrifice, and validly adminiſter the Sacraments.

S. John Chryſoſtom.

Upon the Uſefulneſs and Excellency of a Monaſtick Life.

WE have ſufficiently declared S. Chryſoſtom's Opinion of a Monaſtick Life, in the Extracts of the Treatiſes which he compoſed in his Retirement. To theſe one may add the Homily of Statues, where he ſpeaks of the Egyptian Monks, the 1ſt. 8th. 55th. 69th. 70th. 71ſt. 72d. upon S. Matthew, and the 14th. upon the 1ſt. Epiſt. to Timothy.

Of the State of Marriage, and of the Duties of Married Perſons.

IN the firſt place S. Chryſoſtom requireth, that in chuſing of a Wife, Men ſhould have greater regard to Vertue than Riches. He lays down this Maxim in the 74th. Homily upon S. Matthew; there he pleaſantly ſhews how much rich Wives prove troubleſome to their Husbands. He ſays the ſame thing in the 48th. and 56th. Homilies upon Geneſis, in the 49th. upon the Acts, in the 12th. upon the Epiſtle to the Coloſſians, and in the 17th. 19th. and 28th. Sermons of the 5th. Volume. He exhorteth Husbands to live well with their Wives, and ſhew them good Examples. In the 38th. Homily upon Geneſis, in the Expoſition of the 43d. Pſalm; in the 30th. Homily upon S. Matthew, and the 20th. upon the Epiſtle to the Epheſians; in the 10th. upon the Epiſtle to the Coloſſians, he treateth at large of the Love which Husbands ought to have for their Wives, and of the reſpect that Wives ought to ſhew towards their Husbands. He diſcourſes upon the ſame Subject in the 26th. Homily upon 1 Cor. and the 60th. upon S. John.

Of the Education of Children, and the Duties of the Maſter of a Family.

S. Chryſoſtom being yet in his Retirement, and ſenſible of the little care that Fathers took to bring up their Children well, employs part of the Third Book againſt thoſe that found fault with a Monaſtick Life, to complain of that miſcarriage; and goes ſo far as to affirm, That a Father who breeds up his Child ill, is more cruel than he that puts him to death; becauſe he makes him liable to eternal Damnation, which is infinitely worſe than loſs of life. This matter is handled likewiſe in the Homilies concerning Hannah; where he ſhews, That not only Fathers, but Mothers alſo are obliged to give their Children good Education. In the 60th. Homily upon S. Matthew, he blameth the Careleſneſs of Parents in the choice of a Tutour. Laſtly, In the 21ſt. and 22d. Homilies upon the Epiſtle to the Epheſians, he admoniſhes Fathers to be leſs ſollicitous about their Children's getting School-learning; and to take more care that they be taught Piety and the Chriſtian Religion. Read the 59th. Homily upon S. Matthew; the 9th. upon 1 Tim. and the 1ſt. upon Rom. where he diſcourſeth of the Duties of a Maſter in a Family, in relation to his Wife, Children and Servants. He obſerves in the 15th. Homily upon the Epiſtle to the Epheſians, That a Miſtreſs is not to abuſe her Maid-ſervants. See alſo the 16th. Homily upon the 1ſt. Epiſtle to Timothy.

Of Afflictions.

S. Chryſoſtom not only teaches us that we ought to bear the loſſes, ſickneſſes, and other afflictions that may happen in this World patiently: But he ſhews beſides, that they are the portion of all good Men: He gives Eight Reaſons for it, worth reading, in the Homily upon theſe Words of S. Paul to Timothy, Uſe a little Wine; in the 4th. and 5th. Diſcourſes concerning Statues; in the 28th. Homily upon the Epiſtle to the Hebrews; in the 33d. upon S. Matthew; in the 8th. upon 2 Tim. and in the 28th. and 29th. Homilies upon the Epiſtle to the Hebrews.

Of

Of Death.

S. John Chryſoſtom.

S. Chryſoſtom's Homilies are full of excellent Inſtructions concerning Death; wherein he ſhews, that inſtead of fearing Death, a Chriſtian ought to deſire it. "To what purpoſe, ſaith he in "the 5th. Homily of Statues, ſhould a Man fear ſudden Death? Is it, becauſe it brings us the "ſooner to our Haven, and haſtens our paſſage to an happy life? What folly is this? We expect "eternal felicity, and thoſe good things which no Eye hath ſeen, no Ear heard, and which ne-"ver entred into the Heart of Man; and yet we doe not only put off the fruition of them, but "we fear it, yea we abhor it. He tells us in other places, That this life, being but a journey, a train of Miſeries, a baniſhment from our own Country, &c. we ſhould be very miſerable if it never were to end.

See the 21ſt. and 32d. Homilies upon Geneſis; the Diſcourſe upon theſe Words of S. Paul, Be not ſorry for the death of your Brethren; where he carries this Notion further, and ſaith, That we ſhould be as glad to go out of this World as Criminals are to get out of Priſon. See the 1ſt. Homily upon Geneſis, the 14th. upon the Epiſtle to Timothy, and the 7th. upon the Epiſtle to the Hebrews.

Laſt of all, He hath one Sermon to prove that Death is not to be feared.

From theſe Principles, he concludes in ſeveral places, that we ought not to weep for the Dead, but on the contrary rejoyce; for that they have quitted this miſerable life, to enter into one which is both eternal and happy. See the 34th. Homily upon S. Matthew, the 62d. upon S. John, the 21ſt. upon the Acts, the 6th. upon the Epiſtle to the Theſſalonians, and the 4th. upon the Epiſtle to the Hebrews.

Chriſtian Maxims which S. Chryſoſtom lays down and maintains in his Sermons.

WE ought not to be addicted to the Goods of this World. Hom. 2. upon Matthew.

Perſons who are not vertuous, will receive no advantage from the Vertues of others. Hom. 5. in Matthew.

The Vertue of our Relations will doe us no good, if we our ſelves want Piety. Hom. 10. on Matt.

Men ought to exerciſe themſelves in the practice of all Vertues. Hom. 11. on Matthew.

No Mercy is to be looked for after Death, but only ſevere Juſtice; there is no middle place between Hell or Heaven. Hom. 14. upon Matthew.

He that reflects upon the joys of Heaven, will find it eaſie to practiſe Vertue. Hom. 16. upon Matthew.

The Commandments of God are not impoſſible to thoſe that are willing to keep them. Hom. 21. on Matthew. Nay, they are eaſie with God's grace. Hom. 56. and 76. on Matthew, and 87. upon S. John.

Let him that is in the State of Grace, not truſt too much to his own ſtrength, leſt he fall; neither let him that is fallen, deſpair. Hom. 26. and 67. upon Matthew.

Spiritual advantages are to be preferr'd before thoſe things that otherwiſe ſeem to be moſt neceſſary. Hom. 26. upon Matthew.

A Man of an ill life, is worſe than a dead Man. Hom. 26. upon Matthew.

Paſſionate, intemperate, debauched, and covetous Men are worſe than thoſe that are poſſeſſed with the Devil. Hom. 28. upon Matthew.

The Yoke of Vertue is light and eaſie, that of Sin is heavy and troubleſome. Hom. 38. upon Matthew, and 88. upon John.

We ought to examine, and be ſorry for our faults, and not be concerned for thoſe of other Men. Hom. 24. upon Matthew, and 60. upon S. John.

Vertue is more to be eſteemed than Miracles. Hom. 46. upon Matthew.

To feed the Poor is better than to give Ornaments of Gold or Silver to the Church. Hom. 50. upon Matthew.

He that offends another, wrongs himſelf more than the other. Hom. 51. upon Matthew.

A Man that is addicted to worldly things, is in the moſt unhappy ſlavery that can be. Hom. 58. upon Matthew.

It is better to adorn our Souls with Vertue, than the Body with rich Clothes. Hom. 69. upon Matthew.

A Soul polluted with Crimes, ſtinks worſe than a putrefied Body. Hom. 57. upon Matthew.

It is to no purpoſe to have been Baptized, and to be in the true Church, unleſs we lead our Lives conformably to the Doctrine of the Goſpel, and our Baptiſmal profeſſion. Hom. 6. and 10. upon John.

What-

S. John Chryſoſtom.

Whatever appears great in this World is nothing before God. Hom. 44. in Joan.

Nothing ought to be better husbanded than Time. Hom. 58. upon John.

We ſhould not ask of God temporal, but ſpiritual Goods. Hom. 43. and 54. upon John.

A Chriſtian ought to work not only for himſelf, but alſo for others. Hom. 20. upon the Acts.

It often happens that thoſe who deſign to afflict the Righteous, and hinder the purpoſes of God concerning them, doe further them when they do not intend it. Hom. 49. upon the Acts.

The loſs of worldly Goods ought not to be lamented, but that only of the joys of Heaven. Hom. 10. upon the Romans.

We ought to doe that which is good in this World, and not depend upon the Prayers of our kindred and friends after death. Hom. 42. upon 1 Cor.

The Salvation of others ought to be preferred before our own ſatisfaction. Hom. 29. upon 2 Cor.

Vertues are like Treaſures, they muſt be hid to be kept: If they be expoſed publickly, there is danger of loſing them. Hom. 3. upon Matthew.

To be Maſter of one's own Paſſions, is true liberty. Hom. 17. upon 1 Tim.

Nothing is to be lamented but Sin. Hom. 3. upon the Hebrews.

No Man is offended but by himſelf. See his Diſcourſe upon this Paradox and his Letters Paſſim.

It is eaſie to get Vertue, and preſerve it too. Paſſim.

It is more eaſie to live well, than ill. Paſſim.

Small Sins are to be avoided as well as great ones. Paſſim.

One only Sin, one evil Action is ſufficient to condemn us eternally. Paſſim.

The accuſation of Conſcience is the greateſt torment. Paſſim.

It is better to ſuffer our ſelves, than to make others ſuffer. Epiſt. to Olympias.

The ignominy of this World, is glory in the eyes of God. Paſſim.

This preſent life is death, and death is life. Paſſim.

Afflictions, Perſecutions, and Sickneſſes, are deſirable; but delights, pleaſures and joy are to be feared. Paſſim.

God's chaſtiſements are great benefits: The good things which he beſtows in this world are great temptations. Paſſim.

Giving of Alms is the trade that brings the greateſt profit. Paſſim.

Solitarineſs and a Monaſtick life, are more to be deſired than the greateſt Kingdoms. Paſſim.

True Soveraignty conſiſts in commanding our own Paſſions. Paſſim.

It is an effect of God's bounty, that the execution of Precepts, which are neceſſary to our Salvation, does not depend upon the weakneſs of our Bodies. Hom. in illud, Modico vino utere.

Sorrow is the product of Sin, and Sorrow takes away Sin: That which was the penalty of Sin, is become the Salvation of Man. Sin brought weakneſs into the World, and Sorrow hath deſtroy'd Sin. Hom. 1. de jejun.

Our Worſhip is not like that of the Jews, which was loaded with many Ceremonies, and needed much preparation. He that went into the Temple to pray, was to buy Pigeons, to carry Wood, Fire, a Knife, and a Victim. Chriſtians want no ſuch thing: in every place they have an Altar, a Knife, and a Victim; or rather they themſelves are the Altar, the Prieſt, and the Victim. In what place, or what condition ſoever they are, they may offer their Souls to God. Hom. 4. de Anna.

Man ſhall be puniſhed for his Sins, either in this world, or in the next: He ought to be puniſhed here, to prevent puniſhment hereafter. Serm. 5. de Lazaro.

Ignorance of the Scripture makes Hereſies. Serm. 3. de Lazaro.

Theſe are ſome of thoſe Maxims wherewith S. Chryſoſtom filleth his Diſcourſes; but he enlargeth upon them with ſuch abundance, expoundeth them with ſo great Eloquence, and purſues them with ſo great ſtrength, that it is impoſſible to diſcover their beauty without reading them in their Original. In reading of theſe Sermons, all Preachers ought to ſpend their time, and not in the Sermons of Modern Authors; which, for the moſt part, are full of nothing but empty Allegories, falſe Notions, forced Declamations, unprofitable Queſtions, affectations of Wit, Jingles, Antitheſes, and other things of this nature, that have no correſpondency with thoſe Evangelical Truths, which ought to be preached with maſculine and natural Eloquence.

But that S. Chryſoſtom's Works may be more eaſily read, and that the Editions which ſhould be uſed, may be known, I ſhall draw up a Catalogue of the moſt conſiderable.

The firſt Collections of S. Chryſoſtom's Works were made of the Verſions of his Book.

The firſt was Printed at Baſle by Pfortzen anno 1504. There was another made in Germany by Cratander anno 1522. and one at Paris 1524. Theſe were followedby the Edition of Frobenius in five Volumes, anno 1533, and 1547. which laſt is larger and more correct. That of Venice in 1574, in five Volumes, by Hervetus, is better than the foregoing; but the moſt perfect of theſe ancient Latin Editions is that of Nivelle, in four Volumes in Folio, of 1581. which was made by the advice and care of the moſt learned Men of that Age; as Billius, Hervetus, Nobilius, Zinus, &c.

The firſt Greek Edition of all S. Chryſoſtom's Works, is the famous Edition of Eaton, procured by the care and vaſt labour of the learned Sir Henry Savile, who having made enquiry in all the Liberaries of the World for the Books that went under S. Chryſoſtom's Name cauſed them to be Printed in a very fair Character, and very exactly, with very juſt, very learned and uſeful Notes. He diſtinguiſhed the Books that are S. Chryſoſtom's, from thoſe that are dubious or ſuppoſititious, and hath put them in an excellent Order for a firſt Edition. It is divided into eight Volumes.

S. John Chryſoſtom.

The firſt contains the 67 Homilies upon Geneſis, the Commentaries upon the Pſalms, and Iſaiah, the two Homilies upon the 50th. Pſalm, which he places among the doubtful Books, and the Expoſition of the 51ſt. 95th. and 100th. Pſalms, and ſo on to the 107th. and upon the 119th. which he placeth among the ſuppoſititious Writings.

The Second Volume contains the 90 Homilies upon S. Matthew, and the 88 upon S. John.

The Third and the Fourth comprehend all the Homilies upon S. Paul.

The Fifth hath Sixty two Sermons upon ſeveral particular paſſages of the Holy Scripture, and Thirty four other Sermons upon the Saints or Feſtival days, with Seventy three Sermons upon ſeveral Subjects which he Ranks among the ſuppoſititious Books.

The Sixth Volume is made up of the Treatiſes of S. Chryſoſtom, the Homilies againſt the Jews, that of God's incomprehenſibility, the Sermon of Anathema, his Sermon after he was ordained Prieſt, the Twenty two Diſcourſes about Statues, and ſeveral other Sermons upon divers Subjects, and particularly of Penance, Faſting, Alms-deeds, and other Chriſtian Vertues. At the latter end there are ſome Homilies which he puts among the Collections, that were anciently made out of S. Chryſoſtom, and ſome ſuppoſititious Sermons, with the Liturgy, and two Prayers to God.

The Seventh Volume begins with a Diſcourſe upon the Scandal of certain Perſons, cauſed by the Perſecution and Malice of ſome Prieſts. After this is the Treatiſe wherein he proves that none is offended but by himſelf, Seventeen Letters to the Widow Olympias, and Two hundred forty three Letters to his Friends, with Five Letters of Conſtantius the Prieſt, and a hundred and five Sermons, which falſly bear S. Chryſoſtom's Name, the Authors whereof are not certainly known. Theſe Sermons are followed by other Diſcourſes of known Authors, viz. Six Homilies of Severianus of Gabala upon Geneſis, the Homily of John the Faſter about Penance, the Homily upon the Epiphany aſcribed to S. Gregory Thaumaturgus, the Homily of the Croſs, by Pantaleon a Monk of Conſtantinople, and Forty eight Homilies upon ſeveral Points of Morality, collected out of S. Chryſoſtom's works by Theodorus. That Volume endeth with Seven Prayers of S. Chryſoſtom, which are in Latin, the three laſt of them are ſuppoſititious.

The Laſt Volume containeth ſome Supplements of Books Printed in the other Volumes, the Seven Orations in praiſe of S. Paul, the Sermons upon Eutropius, upon the deſign which Men ought to have in Preaching, and upon ſome other Subjects. The Appendix to this Volume, hath ſeveral Books which are ſomething like S. Chryſoſtom's. The Firſt is an Anſwer in Theodorus's Name, to an Exhortation made by S. Chryſoſtom: Which is certainly ſpurious. The Second and Third are two Diſcourſes of Libanius to Theodoſius, upon the Sedition at Antioch. After theſe Diſcourſes follow the Extracts which Photius hath taken out of S. Chryſoſtom and Iſidore Peluſiota's Letters in Commendation of this Father. The Lives of S. Chryſoſtom take up a good part of this Volume: there are thoſe that were written by George of Alexandria, the Panegyrick by Leo the Emperour, the Life of S. Chryſoſtom by an Anonymous Author, that of Simeon Metaphraſtes.

The various Readings, Conjectures, Reſtitutions, and Notes of Savil, Bois, and Downs conclude the Volume, with a very uſeful Table of S. Chryſoſtom's Books, by their beginnings diſpoſed in an Alphabetical Order. Another Table upon the Notes, and an Errata upon all the Volumes.

Almoſt at the ſame time that Sir H. Savil was at work in England, to publiſh an Edition of the Original Text of S. Chryſoſtom's works, Fronto Ducæus labour'd in France, to Print them in Greek and Latin. He Printed them at Paris, Anno 1609. the firſt Volume which contains the Twenty one Sermons of Statues, and Fifty ſix others, with Notes at the end. In the ſame Year came out a Second Volume containing the Homilies and Sermons upon Geneſis, the Five Sermons concerning Hannah and Samuel, Three Homilies upon David and Saul, a Sermon againſt Idleneſs, a Tranſlation of S. Chryſoſtom's Life written by Palladius, a Latin Sermon of Continency, and ſome other Sermons in Latin with Notes. The Third Volume Printed in 1614. contains the Homilies and Sermons upon the Pſalms, and the Commentary upon Iſaiah. The Fourth Volume Printed the ſame Year, contains the Works and Letters of S. Chryſoſtom, his Firſt Sermon, and two others upon his Exile; it ends with the Notes of Fronto Ducæus. The Fifth Volume is a Collection of Seventy Sermons upon ſeveral paſſages, both of the Old and New Teſtament, and upon ſome other Subjects; it was Printed in 1616. The Sixth contains Seventy three Sermons, which Fronto Ducæus does not attribute to S. Chryſoſtom; the Homilies made up of Collections taken out of S. Chryſoſtom by Theodorus, and the Notes of Fronto Ducæus. The works of S. Chryſoſtom upon the New Teſtament were not Printed then, becauſe they had been lately Printed by Commelinus in Four Volumes. The Firſt contains the Homilies of S. Chryſoſtom, and the imperfect Work upon S. Matthew, the Second, the Homilies upon S. John, the Third the Homilies upon the Acts; and the Laſt, the Homilies upon S. Paul, and the Commentary of Andreas Ceſarienſis upon the Revelations of S. John. Theſe Books are in the Greek and Latin Edition of S. Chryſoſtom, Printed at Paris in 1633, and divided into Six Volumes, which is not ſo exact as the Edition of Commelinus, and the Six firſt Volumes that were Printed in 1636, are not ſo exact as thoſe that were Printed before.

The

The Latin Edition of Ducæus Printed at Paris in 1613. Containeth, beſides the Books that are named already, a great many other Homilies which are not in the Greek, and which in all Likelihood were Compoſed by Latin Authors as we obſerv'd before. The Tranſlation was all Reviſed by Fronto Ducæus; it was Printed at Antwerp, and lately Printed at Lyons with ſome Additions. It is very ſtrange, that thoſe who took Care of this Edition, did not only leave the ſame confuſion that is in the others, but have even confounded it more, and loaded it with many uſeleſs things. S. John Chryſoſtom.

[Theſe are all the General Editions of S. Chryſoſtom's Works. I ſay nothing here of particular ones, whether Greek or Latin, of ſeveral of his Works, which are the Springs and Brooks that make up the great Rivers, becauſe it would be too tedious in this Place. But the Catalogue of ſuch as are come to my knowledge are in the following *Note ?

*Homiliæ in Sacram Scripturam.

In Geneſim Græc. Lat. Morel. 1594.
Lat. Oecolampad. interpret. Paris, 1524.
In Pſalmos, Nivelle, 1606.
In Iſaiam. Lat. à Tilmanno, Paris, 1555.
Argumentum in Jeremiam, Gr. Aug. 1602.
In Matth. Gr. Oxonii, Lat. 1537.
Opus Imperfectum, in Matth. ex Off. Caveleriana, 1602.
De publicano & Phariſæo, Paris, 1595.
Serm. 4. in Lazarum, in illud Apoſtoli, Nolite de Dormientibus contriſtari, &c. Oxon. 1580.
In Joannem. Aret. interprete, Romæ, 1470.
In omnes Pauli Epiſtolas Græc. à Donato Veronenſi, An. 1529. in fol. 3. Vol. Lat. apud Hervag. 1530.
In Ep. ad Galatas, interpret. Eraſmo, Baſiliæ, 1526.
In Ep. ad Philip. Flaminio interprete, Rom. 1578.

TRACTATUS.

De Sacerdotio Libri Sex. Græc. Oxon. 1586. Aug. 1599. Lov. 1529, 1568. Baſil. 1544. Lat. Paris. 1561.
De Virginitate Græc. Lat. Livineio interp. Ant. 1565. & 1575. ex verſione Poggiana. Romæ, 1562.
De providentia apud Oporinum, Baſil. 1552.
De orando Deum, interprete. Eraſmo, Baſil. Froben. 1500, 1551. Col. 1573. Ant. 1579. Paris, 1538.
Aliquot opuſcula. Ex V. Eraſmi, Baſ. 1529.
Liber de vita Babylæ contra Gentiles, Gr. Baſil. 1527. Paris, 1528. Lat. per Brinium, Paris, 1528.
Sermones ad Theodorum Lat. 1524. Baſiliæ, 1547.
Comparatio Regis & Monachi, Baſil. 1533. Gr. Lat. Paris, 1558 Baſil. 1526.
Quod nemo læditur niſi à ſeipſo. Græce in Octavo, Paris, 1541.
Liturgia ſive Miſſa, Lat. Eraſmo interprete, Paris. 1537. Græc. Paris, 1560. Venet. 1601, 1620. ex verſione Hervet. 1548. Paris.
Orat quod Chriſtus ſit Deus, Ingolſtad. 1579. apud Chevallon, Lat 1536. Romæ, 1526.
In Euch. Græc. 1571. Morell. 1561. Lat. Wormatiæ, 1541. Pragæ, 1544. Ant. 1560. Gr. & Lat. Venetiis, 1528. in Bibl. P P.
Epiſtolæ ad Innocent. Baſil. 1529.
Ad Cæſarium Moinii Varia Sacra, Roterad. An. 1687. [Londini 4*to.* 1688.]

HOMILIÆ VARIÆ.

Hom. ad Pop. Ant. de Statuis, Londini Græc. Lat. 1590.
Orat. in illud, Modico vino utere. Hanov. 1550. in Octavo, Col. 1582.
In illud, Oportet Hæreſes eſſe. Oecol. interp. Mog. 1522.
Hom. 6. contra Jud. Hoeſchelio interpret. Aug. 1602.
Orat. Sex de fato & providentia, Gr. Oct. Baſil, 1526. Paris, 1554. Hagenoæ, 1533.
Orat. 6. Gr. Oxon. Gr. Lat. 1586. Orat. in Eutropium, in Pſ. 100. & in laudem crucis, Paris, 1554. Tilmanno interprete.
De non contemnenda Eccleſia Dei, Morell. 1560.
In terræ Motum, &c. alia Orat. interprete Ducæo, Burdigalæ, 1604.
Hom. de Anathemate, Gr. Lat. Paris, in Oct. 1547.
Libri tres de providentia Dei, ad Stagirium Lat. Aloſti, 1487. ibid Orat. de dignitate humanæ Originis.
Chryſoſtomi Orat. 10. a Beurero, Romæ, 1581. Gr. Lat. Friburg. 1585. in Oct.
Varii tractatus, ibid. De animi humilitate, Jejunio & Temperantia, Mog. 1604.
De Manſuetudine, Paris, 1570. De benignitate, Paris, 1594.
De politia Morali, Paris, 1545. Orat. 6. Paris, 1554.
Orat. aliquot. Lat. Gr. Lat. Romero in Oct. Baſ. Oporin. 1551.
Hom. Gr. Hoeſchelio interprete, 1587.
Hom. 2. Tiguri, 1558. Aliæ, Lipſiæ, Ann. 1538. Aliæ, Paris, 1606. Orat. Gr. Romæ, 1594.
Florilegia, Mog. 1603. Lat. Hagenoæ, 1528.

SERMONES PANEGYRICI.

Hom. 4. in Job, Perionio interprete, Paris, 1565, Col. 1568.
Homiliæ de laudibus Pauli, Aniano interp. Paris, 1499. cum op. Bedæ ſeorſim, 1509.
De Petro & Paulo Orat. 2. Gr. Lat. 1582.
Idem cum Orat. in duodecim Apoſtolos, Romæ, 1580.
Sermones Panegyrici in S. S. Martyres, Burd. 1601.
Duæ homil. de S. S. Lugd. 1624. Gr. Lat. Paris, 1594.

IN FESTA.

In Nat. Chriſti, & in præcurſorem, Ant. apud Tornes, 1609.
Sermo in Paſcha, Ant. 1598. Sermones in Aſcenſionem, & alii... ex Ed. Voſſii, Mog. 1604.
Orat. de occurſu Domini, Col. 1568.]

Antiochus,

Antiochus and Severianus of Gabala.

Antiochus and Severianus of Gabala.

IN the days of S. Chryſoſtom there were two famous Preachers, who preached in his Church, in his Abſence; The firſt, Antiochus, was Biſhop of Ptolemais in Phœnicia; and the Second, Severianus, was Biſhop of Gabala in Cœleſyria. Antiochus came firſt to Conſtantinople, where having preached a long time, and got ſome Money, he returned to his Church. Severianus having heard that Antiochus was become rich by preaching at Court, reſolved to imitate him, and therefore went thither with ſeveral Sermons which he had prepared. He was well received by S. John Chryſoſtom, into whoſe favour he endeavoured at firſt to inſinuate himſelf, afterwards he grew acquainted with ſeveral Perſons of Quality, and got into the favour both of the Emperor and the Empreſs; and tho' he wanted Antiochus his parts, yet he got into great Eſteem and Reputation. S. Chryſoſtom being obliged (as hath been obſerved) to go into Aſia, to compoſe the Affairs of the Church of Epheſus, found not a Biſhop fitter to preach in his Abſence than Severianus of Gabala, whom he thought to be his Friend. But whether this Biſhop, taking occaſion of S. Chryſoſtom's Abſence, had a deſign to get into the Eſteem and Affection of the People of Conſtantinople, to uſurp that See, or whether Serapion, S. Chryſoſtom's Archdeacon, had by his Letters begotten S. Chryſoſtom an Averſion to Severianus of Gabala as a Perſon that diſturbed the Peace of his Church, aiming at getting into his place; or Laſtly, whether there was any ſecret Jealouſie betwixt them; Theſe two Biſhops were never Friends ever afterwards. S. Chryſoſtom being come back, drove away Severianus, accuſing him of ſaying, that the Son of God was not made Man, becauſe that Biſhop finding that Serapion would not ſtand up before him had uttered theſe Words, If Serapion dies a Chriſtian, the Son of God is not made Man. This Serapion told S. Chryſoſtom, leaving out the firſt part, If Serapion dies a Chriſtian. But Severianus being well at Court, the Empreſs recalled him; and did all ſhe could to reconcile them, which S. Chryſoſtom refuſed to do, till the Empreſs intreated him for the ſake of Theodoſius her Grand-Child, whom ſhe laid at his Feet in the Church of the Apoſtles. S. Chryſoſtom (if Socrates may be credited) could not then reſiſt the intreaties of the Empreſs: but this Reconciliation was not ſincere, and both theſe Biſhops harboured ſtill an Averſion one to the other. And therefore, in the time of S. Chryſoſtom's Diſgrace, Severianus ſided with Theophilus, and the reſt of his Enemies to deſtroy him. This is the Account which Socrates gives of the Diſſention of Severianus of Gabala; Hiſt. Eccl. B. VI. cap. 11.

The Author of S. Chryſoſtom's Life accuſes this Hiſtorian of want of ſincerity upon this occaſion; But till we meet with another Hiſtorian of greater credit, ſetting forth the matter of Fact after another manner, we cannot reject this Relation, nor feign other Motives of Diſſention betwixt theſe two Biſhops, than thoſe related by Socrates, who lived near S. Chryſoſtom's time.

The ancient Tranſlator of ſome of S. Chryſoſtom's Homilies, Anianus, obſerves, That Antiochus had, plauſibilem dicendi pompam, a pompous and lofty Stile, which got him the applauſe of the People. There is no doubt, but formerly they had ſeveral of his Sermons. Gennadius mentions but two of his Books: The former is a long Treatiſe againſt Covetouſneſs, and the latter a Diſcourſe upon the Miracle of the blind Man, to whom Jeſus Chriſt reſtored ſight, ſpoken of in the Ninth Chapter of S. John's Goſpel: a work of Unction and Humility. Trithemius mentions ſeveral Sermons, and other unknown works of this Author. Theodoret quoteth a paſſage of his, but does not Name the Book where he found it, the words are theſe. That if we do not confound the two Natures in Chriſt, there will be no difficulty in underſtanding the Myſtery of the Incarnation. Gelaſius in his Book of the two Natures, citeth alſo ſome places of Antiochus upon the Incarnation, taken out of his Sermons upon the Nativity, Eaſter, againſt Hereticks, and from another Sermon. Laſtly, Poſſevinus tells us, That there were ſome Homilies of this Author in the Medicean Library at Florence. I don't know whether they were ever publiſhed.

Severianus of Gabala was leſs eloquent, dryer, and more barren, than Antiochus. Socrates obſerves, that he pronounced the Greek Language ill, becauſe he ſtill kept ſome thing of the Syriack Accent. Gennadius ſays, That he had read a Commentary of this Author, upon the Epiſtle to the Galatians, and a Treatiſe upon the Feſtival of Chriſt's Baptiſm, and the Epiphany.

We have obſerved already, that among S. Chryſoſtom's works there are ſeveral Sermons, which in all appearance belong to Severianus of Gabala, and among the reſt a Diſcourſe of the Seals, and upon the brazen Serpent, which are quoted by Theodoret, under the Name of Severianus of Gabala, and ſeveral others in the ſame Stile, whereof we have given a Catalogue amongſt S. Chryſoſtom's works. To theſe we may joyn the Homily upon Chriſt's Nativity, which is in the Fifth Volume of the Eaton Edition of S. Chryſoſtom's works, Pag. 843. and the Sermon of the Croſs in Greek in the ſame Volume, P. 898, which afterwards was Printed in Greek and Latin by Father Combefis, cited by S. Damaſcen in the third Diſcourſe of Images, under the Name of Severianus of Gabala. We have alſo Six Sermons of the ſame Man upon the Creation of the World, Printed in Greek in the Eaton Edition of S. Chryſoſtom, and in Greek and Latin, in the laſt Volume of the Supplement to the Bibliotheca Patrum, by Father Combefis. Severianus obſerves in the Preface, that all the Books of the Holy Scripture have the Salvation and Benefit of Men for their their ultimate End: but that the Book of Geneſis is the Ground and Fountain of all the Truths, both in the Law and in the Prophets, becauſe it containeth the Hiſtory of the World's Creation, without which God's works cannot be known. He adds, That he very well knew, that ſeveral Fathers had written of that matter, but that it did not diſcourage him from writing upon the ſame Subject, ſince the latter Writers were not diſcouraged by the Diſcourſes of the former: that he pretended not to deſtroy what others had done, but to add ſuch things as might ſerve for the Edification of the Church: At laſt, he deſireth his Auditors, not to inquire whether his Notions be new, but only whether they are right: In Proſecution of the ſame Subject, he ſaith, that Geneſis is an Hiſtory written by the Lawgiver Moſes, and dictated by the Holy Ghoſt who inſpired him: That tho' it be a Narration, yet it may be called a Prophecy, becauſe that, as there are three ſorts of Prophecies, the firſt of Writings, the Second of Actions, and the third of both: So likewiſe there are three parts of each Prophecy: That the firſt reſpects the preſent, the Second what is to come, and the third what is paſt. Men Propheſie upon the preſent, when they diſcover what is deſigned to be kept from them: as Eliſha did, who knew Gehazi's wickedneſs: Men Propheſie upon the future, when what is to come is foretold. And there are alſo Prophecies of what is paſt, when by Divine Inſpiration things already paſſed are written, whereof no knowledge was had otherwiſe. In this Sence Severianus ſaith, that Moſes was a Prophet in the Hiſtory of the World's Creation. He obſerves further, that Moſes propoſed to himſelf two things in his Writings, to teach, and to gives Laws: That he began by Inſtruction in relating the Creation of the World, to teach Men, that God having created them, had a right to give them Laws and Precepts. For, ſaith he, had he not ſhewed at firſt, that God is the Creator of the World, he could not have juſtifyed, that he was the Soveraign Lawgiver of Men: becauſe it is Tyranny to pretend to impoſe Laws upon thoſe, that do not belong to us, whereas it is very natural to inſtruct ſuch as depend upon us. He endeth this Preface by ſhewing the Reaſon, why Moſes ſpake not of the Creation of Angels and Archangels: Firſt becauſe it was not pertinent to his Subject: Secondly, becauſe had he done it, there was danger that Men would have worſhipped them.

Antiochus, and Severianus of Gabala

After this he explains the Text of Geneſis about the World's Creation, in a plain and literal way: He doth not inlarge upon the ſpiritual Sence, but rather finds fault with ſome Explications, as being too much Allegorical. But he maketh ſeveral trifling Reflections, as when he obſerves in the Fifth Homily, that the firſt Man was called Adam, a word ſignifying Fire in the Hebrew, becauſe that as this Element eaſily ſpreads and Communicates it ſelf, ſo the World was to be peopled by this firſt Man. Several other Notions of this Nature may be found in that Work, which have neither Beauty, nor Exactneſs, nor Truth. He Anſwers the Arians and Anomæans. He obſerves in the Fourth Homily, that all Hereſies bear the Names of their Authors, whereas the true Church has none other Name, than that of Catholick Church. He inlargeth but little upon Morals; yet at the Latter end of this Fourth Homily he recommends Faſting, provided it be accompanied with Abſtinence from Vices. In a word, One may ſay that this whole Work, tho' full of Erudition, yet is of no great uſe, and deſerveth not the Eſteem of Men of true Judgment.

Father Combefis hath added to theſe Homilies ſome Fragments taken out of ſome Catena's upon the Scripture, attributed to this Author, and extracted out of his Commentaries upon Geneſis, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy, and upon Joſhua. But if theſe paſſages did not ſhew themſelves to be written in Severianus his Stile, one could not affirm it upon the credit of theſe Catena's. One might with greater Confidence produce two paſſages of Severianus of Gabala upon the Incarnation, quoted by Gelaſius in the Book of the two Natures, where he obſerves, That the firſt is taken out of a Diſcourſe of this Biſhop againſt Novatus.

ASTERIUS AMASENUS.

Aſterius Amaſenus

Asterius (a) Biſhop of Amaſea a City of Pontus, flouriſhed at the latter end of the Fourth Century (b), and in the beginning of the Fifth. The Sermons of this Biſhop have been quoted with Commendation by the Ancients (c). There are but a ſmall number of them extant, Collected by F. Combefis at the beginning of his firſt Volume of the Supplement to the Bibliotheca Patrum; The Five firſt were Printed formerly by Rubenius, who publiſhed them at Antwerp, Ann. 1608. and afterwards inſerted into the Bibliotheca Patrum:

[a] Aſterius.] There were ſeveral of that Name. The oldeſt is an Heretick of Arius his Party, mention'd in the firſt Volume. There is another Aſterius commended by Theodoret, in Philotheo, c. 2. but different from this, as well as the Catholick Biſhop of the ſame Name, who lived in the time of S. Athanaſius.

[b] Towards the latter end of the Fourth Century.] We have obſerved, That in the Sermon upon New-Years-day, he ſpeaks of Ruffinus his Death, and of Eutropius his Diſgrace, which he tells us happen'd the Year before, which juſtifyeth that he lived at the ſame time with S. Chryſoſtom.

(c) The Sermons of this Biſhop have been quoted with Commendation by the Ancients.] He is cited in the Second Council of Nice, Act. 4. and 6. Photius made ſome Extracts out of his works, Cod. 271. Hadrianus in lib. de un. quotes his Homilies, and Nicephorus defends them againſt the Iconoclaſts.

Aſterius Amaſenus.

The ſix following were lately publiſhed by F. Combefis, who joyned to them the Extracts made by Photius out of the Homelies of Aſterius Amaſenus, and a Diſcourſe upon S. Steven the Proto-Martyr, formerly publiſhed under the Name of Proclus.

The firſt Sermon is upon the Parable of Dives and Lazarus. He begins it with this Reflection; " That our Saviour not only made uſe of Precepts to teach us Vertue, and to forbid " Vice, but that he further propoſed illuſtrious Examples to inſtruct us in that way of Life, which " we ought to follow. Afterwards he ſets down the Text of S. Luke's Goſpel, making moral Reflections upon each Verſe.

Upon theſe words, Verſe 26. There was a rich Man which was cloathed with Purple, and fine Linen. He obſerves, that the Holy Scripture by theſe two words, underſtands all Extravagancies of Riches, That the only uſe of Garments is to cover our Bodies, and defend them from the injuries of the Air: That God hath provided for this, by creating Beaſts with hair and wooll, whereof Stuffs are made to ſecure us againſt both cold weather, and the Beams of the Sun. That beſides he hath given the uſe of Flax for a greater Conveniency; that theſe things ought to be applyed to our uſe, in giving God thanks, not only becauſe he made us, but alſo becauſe he has provided all neceſſaries, to cover and defend us from the Injuries of the Seaſon, " But, ſaith he, " if you leave the uſe of Wooll and Linen, if you deſpiſe what God hath prepared, and to ſa- " tiſhe your Pride, you will have ſilk Garments, thin like Cobwebs; if after this you hire a Man " at a dear rate to take out of the Sea a ſmall Fiſh, that you may dye them in its Blood; Do " you not Act the parts of effeminate Men?

He reproves thoſe afterwards whoſe Garments were painted with ſeveral Figures, of Men, Beaſts, and Flowers, and ſpares not thoſe, who by a ridiculous Devotion, Printed upon their clothes ſome Godly Hiſtories: As the Marriage of Cana in Galilee, the Sick of the Palſie in his Bed, the blind Man cured, the Woman that had an Iſſue of Blood, the Sinner at the feet of Jeſus Chriſt, Lazarus riſen again. Aſterius ſpeaks againſt this Practice after this manner: If theſe Perſons will believe me, let them ſell thoſe clothes, and honour the true Images of God. Do not paint Jeſus Chriſt, it is enough that he humbled himſelf, by taking voluntarily a Body for us.... Paint not the Paralytick upon your Garments, but ſeek for the poor to ſuccour them. It is to no purpoſe to look upon the Woman having the Iſſue of Blood, but it is very neceſſary to help this poor Widow. It ſignifies nothing to behold the ſinful Woman at the feet of Jeſus Chriſt, but it will ſignifie much to bewail your own ſins. What good will the Picture of Lazarus his Reſurrection do you? endeavour rather to riſe ſpiritually. To what purpoſe do you wear upon your Backs, the Image of him that was born blind? Eaſe this blind Man rather. Why do you draw the Shrines of Relicks? rather feed the poor. And wherefore do you carry about you the Repreſentation of thoſe Water-pots at the Marriage where our Saviour made Wine; while you ſuffer the poor to die for thirſt? This paſſage hath been alledged by the Iconoclaſts as favouring their Opinions. The Catholicks on the contrary have quoted another, taken out of an Homily of the ſame Author, concerning the Woman afflicted with the Iſſue of Blood, where he ſpeaks of the Statue of Jeſus Chriſt erected by the ſame Woman in Paneas, a Town of Paleſtine. But neither of theſe paſſages, belong to the queſtion betwixt the Catholicks, and the Iconoclaſts; for this which we have tranſcribed, is not againſt Images placed in Churches, but againſt the Fancy of particular men, who trimmed their Habits with Figures, repreſenting ſome Hiſtories of the Bible; and that of the Statue of Jeſus Chriſt ſet up by the Woman that was afflicted with an Iſſue of Blood, hath no Relation to the publick Service of Images.

But to return to our Sermon, Aſterius Amaſenus purſuant to his Subject, ſaith that Chriſtians ſhould beware of Luxury and Pleaſures, becauſe none can live in Pleaſure without Riches. But, ſaith he, It is impoſſible to heap up much Riches without Sin. He excellently deſcribes all the things that are neceſſary to thoſe that ſeek their Pleaſure, and having numbred them, he adds, " To have theſe things, how many poor Men muſt ſuffer? how many Orphans muſt be ruined? " how many Widows muſt have weeping Eyes? and how many Perſons muſt be brought to the " utmoſt Miſery? A Soul taken up with theſe, forgets her ſelf, remembers not what ſhe is, " thinks not upon Death, nor a Reſurrection, nor Eternity. And when the fatal and unavoida- " ble moment comes, that the Soul is ready to ſeparate from the Body, then a remembrance " of the Life paſt will be of little uſe: ſhe then will think of Repentance, but it will be to no " purpoſe. For then only will Repentance be available, when there is a Reſolution of correcting " our former Life. And regret and ſorrow for ſin ſeem to be of no uſe, when a Man is not in a " condition either to do good, or to practiſe Vertue. The reſt of this Homily is a literal and moral Explication of that parable, full of ſolid Notions, and natural Reflections.

There is not leſs Eloquence in the Second Sermon of this Author, upon another Parable of S. Luke's Goſpel, concerning that Steward whom his Maſter called to an Account for his Adminiſtration and for his Goods. It beginneth with this Maxim; That moſt Men's ſins proceed from an opinion that the Goods which they poſſeſs are their own, and that they are abſolute Maſters of them; That this falſe perſwaſion is that which makes us go to Law, Quarrel, and make War for the wealth of this World, looking upon it as proper and convenient for us, and deſerving our Love and Eſteem. " Yet, ſaith he, it is nothing ſo; on the contrary we are to look upon all which " we have received, as none of ours; we are not Maſters of the things which we have at home; " we are like Pilgrims, Strangers, Baniſhed and Captives, carried whither we would not,

" at

" at a time when we expect it leaſt, and at once we are ſtript of all, when the Soveraign Diſpen-
" ſer of our fortune pleaſeth. This Notion he inlargeth upon in his Expoſition of the Parable of Aſterius Amaſenus.
the unjuſt Steward. There one may find excellent Sentences, upon the Contempt that Men ſhould caſt upon Riches, and upon the uncertainty of this preſent Life. He inſiſts particularly upon proving, that Men are not Owners, but Stewards of their wealth; and from this Principle he concludes, That as many as have received of God ſuch good things ought to diſtribute them faithfully, and be always ready, yea even deſirous, to give God an Account. And at laſt he obſerves, That after Death there will be no time for Repentance: that this Life is the proper time to keep God's Commandments in, as the other is of enjoying the Reward of good Works.

The Third Sermon againſt Covetouſneſs was preached by S. Aſterius in one of thoſe Aſſemblies which were made in Churches to celebrate the Feſtival of ſome of the Martyrs. This Homily is full of very natural Deſcriptions of the Hard-heartedneſs of covetous Men. Covetouſneſs in his Opinion, doth not conſiſt only in the unjuſt deſire of having that which is anothers, but in a deſire of having more than we ought to have. According to this Notion, it is eaſie to find in the Scriptures ſeveral Examples of covetous Men; and having produced them, he ſheweth, that all other Vices waſte with time: but that the older a Man grows the more covetous he is. This Remark is followed by a Deſcription of a covetous Man, where he omits none of thoſe Characters that can make him appear miſerable, and render him odious to all the World. He proveth that Covetouſneſs is the Spring and Cauſe of all the Crimes and Sins committed in the World. And in ſhort, he ſhews that it is to no purpoſe to be concerned for this World's Goods: but far better to put all our truſt and confidence in God's providence and mercy.

The Fourth Sermon is againſt the profane Feſtival of the firſt day in the Year, and againſt the cuſtom of New-years-gifts. Aſterius Amaſenus declaimeth againſt that Practice. " He ſaith,
" That the Liberalities of that day have no rational ground; That they cannot be called Tokens
" of Friendſhip, becauſe true Friendſhip is not grounded upon Intereſt; That neither can they
" be called Alms, ſince the Poor partake not of them; That they are not of the Nature of Con" tracts, ſeeing there is neither loan nor exchange in that Traffick. In a word, That they are " not pure Gifts, ſince there is a neceſſity of giving them. What Name then, ſaith he, can be " given to the Expenſe of that day? The Church gives a reaſon for all the Feaſts which it cele" brates. It keeps the Feaſt of Chriſtmas, becauſe upon that day God made himſelf known " unto Men. At Candlemas it rejoyceth, becauſe we are drawn out of the obſcurity of Dark-
" neſs wherein we lay. Laſtly, we celebrate with Joy, Pomp, and Alacrity the day of the Re-
" ſurrection, for as much as this day repreſents unto us the Immortality which we are to enjoy.
" Theſe are the Reaſons which the Church hath to keep Feaſts, and there are the like for the " celebrating of all the reſt: But what reaſon can be given for the Feſtival of New-Years-Day,
" and for the profuſion then Practiſed? O Folly! O Impertience! At that day every one runs
" with a deſign to get another Man's Goods. Thoſe that give, doe it with Grief, and they
" that receive Preſents do not keep them, but beſtow them upon others. One ſends to his Pa" tron, what he received of his Client: Another makes his Complement to receive Money. The " poor give to the rich, and inferior people ſend Preſents to the Great Ones. As Brooks make
" ſmall Rivers, which at laſt fall into Great Ones; in like manner the Preſents which the com" mon People make to thoſe above them, do all turn to the profit of great Lords, upon " whom they beſtow them: and thus this Feaſt is the beginning of Miſeries, and the over" whelming of the Poor. Farmers and Labourers are conſtrained to give to their Landlords; If " they fail, they are abuſed. Miſerable People run like Fools through the Streets, asking from " Door to Door, deafening every Body with their Noiſe and Cries. It is a day of Riot for Sol" diers. The Conſuls and Governours having made themſelves rich with the Pay due to Sol" diers, the Spoyls of Widows, and the publick Treaſury, having got Money by ſelling Juſtice,
" by ſhameful Contracts, by diſtributing this Money to Fidlers, Stage-Players, Dancers, and Co" medians, lewd Women, and baſe Fellows, are at this Expenſe to feed their Vanity. O Folly!
" O Blindneſs! God promiſes an eternal Reward to thoſe who diſtribute to the Poor, but theſe
" rather chuſe to ſpend fooliſhly, that they may get a vain and tranſitory Glory. But after all,
" what is the end of all that Vanity? what Figure ſoever any can make in this World, the end
" is always a Grave that buryeth Men in eternal Oblivion.

He deſcribes here the fatal end of Ruffinus, and Eutropius, who juſt before were deprived both of their Dignities and of their Eſtates, and concludes with theſe words of the wiſe Man: Vanity of Vanities. " Dignities, ſaith he, are Dreams and Viſions, which vaniſh after having given
" ſome kind of delight for a very ſhort time: They are Flowers, that dry on a ſudden, having
" flouriſhed for a while.

The Firſt Sermon is about Divorce. Aſterius ſhews there by ſeveral Reaſons that Men are not to put away their Wives, yet he excepteth Adultery, and ſaith, " that if a Man puts away his " Wife for Adultery, inſtead of taking her again, he commends him for avoiding a Perſon who
" by violating Chaſtity hath broken the indiſſoluble bond of Marriage. He obſerves, that the " Law of the Goſpel is the ſame for Men as for Women; but that the Roman Laws, have not
" obſerved the ſame Equity; not permitting Wives to leave their Husbands, but only Husbands
" to put away their Wives. The reaſon commonly alledged of this difference, is, that Husbands do

Aſterius Amaſenus.

do not prejudice their Wives, in committing Adultery, whereas by this Crime, Wives doe introduce into Families other Men's Children, and make them Heirs, who have no manner of Right. Aſterius ſticks not to ſay, that this Reaſon is impertinent, becauſe Men abuſing either Virgins or Wives, overthrow and diſhonour their Reſpective Families, and wrong their Parents and their Husbands very conſiderably.

The Sixth Sermon upon the Hiſtory of Suſanna, is full of curious moral Notions. This is one. "A Man overtaken with a Sin is often drawn by that firſt Crime into all ſorts of Iniquity, as "on the contrary one Vertue is the cauſe of another.

The Seventh Sermon is upon the miraculous cure of the Man that was born blind, he exalts the Greatneſs of the Miracle, and draws an Argument for Chriſt's Divinity from it.

The Eighth is a Panegyrick in Commendation of S. Peter, and S. Paul; he ſhews there how wonderful their miracles were, and in ſeveral places eſtabliſheth S. Peter's Primacy amongſt the Apoſtles. "All the Apoſtles, ſaith he, muſt give place to S. Peter, and Confeſs, that he alone "deſerveth the firſt Rank, if a compariſon of the Graces God gave to the Apoſtles, is a Token of "Priority of Honour.

The following Sermon is a Diſcourſe in Commendation of Phocas the Martyr. He affirms in the Preface, that a remembrance of the Actions of Saints, and of the Martyrs Engagements, is one of the moſt powerful Arguments that can be, to encourage Chriſtians to Piety and Vertue. He addeth that for this Reaſon they kept their Relicks, that they are expoſed to ſight in Shrines, that their Feaſts are kept, and Churches built to their Honour, to refreſh the Memory of their generous Actions. Afterwards he relates the Life of Phocas the Martyr, in a very plain and natural manner, without any mixture of ſuch Hiſtories as are rather miraculous than rational. He ends, with the Honours that were paid to that Saint. He ſays, That the Memory of him was famous in the Countrey, where his Body lay; That at Rome he was reſpected almoſt as much as S. Peter and S. Paul, and that his Head was had in great Veneration. Aſterius tells us that the Martyr Phocas, he ſpeaketh of, was born as Sinope, and a Gardiner by Profeſſion, without mentioning that he was a Biſhop. This is it perhaps, which hath occaſioned the Diſtinction of two Phocas's Martyrs. The one martyr'd under Trajan, whoſe Feaſt is kept July 14. and the other ſimply a Martyr; whoſe remembrance is celebrated on the 5*th*. of March. The Greeks mention them both upon the 22*d*. of September. Perhaps it is but one and the ſame Man, whoſe Hiſtory hath been variouſly reported. For both are ſuppoſed to have been of Sinope, and the ſame Miracles are aſcribed to both. Be it as it will, Seamen choſe this Saint for their Patron, as Aſterius obſerves at the latter end of this Homily.

The Tenth Sermon in Commendation of Martyrs, was preached in an Aſſembly, met together for the Honour of the Martyrs. He begins with this Reflection: "Very often we receive much "good from our greateſt Enemies unawares. Had not Satan perſecuted the Church, we ſhould "have had no Martyrs. He afterwards obſerves, That Martyrs are not only Patterns of Vertue, "but alſo Accuſers of Vice. And this, ſaith he, is thus to be underſtood. A Martyr hath conſtantly endured fire and flame, why will you not tame the heat of Luſt with Chaſtity? A "Martyr hath not regarded all the wealth of the World, wherefore do you not deſpiſe a ſmall "Sum for the love of God? A Martyr hath put off his own Body for God's ſake, why then "will ye not part with the meaneſt Garment to cover a poor Man? We ought either to Honour and imitate the Saints as our Maſters, or fear them as our Accuſers. Out of Honour "to Martyrs, we preſerve their Relicks with Veneration, looking upon them as Veſſels of Benediction, Organs of bleſſed Souls, and aſſured Pledges of their Good-will. The Churches are "guarded by the Martyrs, as by ſo many Soldiers. The afflicted make Addreſſes to them, and "with Confidence implore their Interceſſion. It cureth Diſeaſes, comforteth in Poverty, and "appeaſeth the anger of Princes. Finally the Churches of Martyrs are an Harbour in a Storm, "and a refuge in all Miſeries. The Father whoſe Child is ſick, prayeth unto God for his Cure by "the interceſſion of a Martyr, ſaying, You Holy Martyr that ſuffered for Jeſus Chriſt interceed for us. You who can Addreſs to God with greater Boldneſs, carry this word for your fellow Servants. Tho' you are no longer in the World, yet you know the Pains and Afflictions of this Life. Your ſelves have formerly pray'd to the Martyrs, before you were Martyrs, they heard you when you intreated them, now that you can hear us grant us our Requeſts. But leaſt ignorant Perſons ſhould yield to Martyrs the Honour which belongs only to God, he adds, "We doe not adore the "Martyrs, but we Honour them as God's Servants. We Honour not Men, but admire them: "We lay up their Relicks in beautified Shrines, and we build magnificent Churches to their "Memory, to render them the ſame Honour in the Church, that is given in the World to thoſe "that have done famous Actions. He goeth on to eſtabliſh this Principle in the reſt of this Diſcourſe, where he ſpeaks ſo ſtrongly of the worſhip of Saints and Martyrs againſt ſuch as deſpiſe them, that it gives occaſion of Suſpicion whether this be not of a younger Age, than that of Aſterius Amaſenus.

The Eleventh Sermon is a Panegyrick upon S. Euphemia cited in the Seventh general Council, Act. 4. and by Photius. It ſeemeth not to me to be of Aſterius Amaſenus his Stile. The Author relateth the Hiſtory of that Saint, and obſerves, that ſhe was repreſented upon a Winding-ſheet that was near her Grave.

After theſe Sermons come thoſe Extracts produced by Photius, Vol. 271. The firſt is taken out of a Sermon of Penance upon the ſinful Woman, among the Works of Gregory Nyſſen, to whom he aſcribed it in the Second Volume of his Bibliotheca; but after ſerious reflection, I have found that it is more likely to be written by Aſterius Amaſenus. Aſterius Amaſenus.

The Second Extract is taken out of the Sermon upon S. Steven, among Proclus's Sermons. It differs from that which S. Gregory Nyſſen made upon that Subject, tho' I confounded them in the Second Volume.

The Third is taken out of the Homily upon the Parable of the Traveller, who going to Jericho was taken and wounded by Thieves, Luk. 10. He ſuppoſeth that this Accident was real, and that Jeſus Chriſt makes uſe of it to inform the Jews of the Greatneſs of his Charity and Mercy. This wounded man going down to Jericho, is the Figure of Adam, who by his Sin fell from the happy State wherein he was created, and at the ſame time cauſed the Fall of all mankind. The Levite and the Prieſt are Moſes and S. John, who finding this Man, that is all mankind, deſtitute of Grace, Vertue and Piety, and wounded by his Enemies, did indeed look upon him with Compaſſion, but could not cure him. That the Samaritan is Jeſus Chriſt, who carries a Treaſure of Grace, hidden till the time of the New Law. This Expoſition of the Parable is pretty exact ſo far, but the Compariſon he makes afterwards, betwixt the Body of Jeſus Chriſt, and the Horſe that carried this Samaritan is hardly tolerable, Becauſe, ſaith he, the Body of Jeſus Chriſt is as it were the Vehicle of the Divinity.

The Fourth Extract of Photius is taken out of an Homily upon the Prayers of the Phariſee and of the Publican, ſpoken of Luk. ch. 18. Here is an excellent Definition of Prayer. " Prayer is a confe" rence with God, a forgetting of earthly things, and an Aſcenſion into Heaven. He that pray-
" eth ſtanding with his hands lifted up to Heaven, doth by this poſture of his Body repreſent
" the Croſs; and if he prayeth with the Heart, and his Prayer is acceptable to God, he hath the " Croſs in his Heart. For Prayer extinguiſhes in him the Deſires of the Fleſh, the love of Ri" ches, and puts off from his Spirit the thoughts of Pride and Vanity. He addeth, " That Vain-
" glory corrupts the beſt Actions, as Prayer, Faſting, and Alms, &c. and renders them impro" fitable.

The Fifth Extract is out of the Homily upon the Hiſtory of Zacchæus, it containeth nothing conſiderable.

The Sixth is upon the Parable of the prodigal Son. He ſaith that the Father ſpoken of in that Parable repreſents the Father of Eternity; That the two Sons, are two ſorts of Men; That the prodigal Child is a Figure of thoſe that have loſt the Grace of Baptiſm; That the Portion of Goods which he deſires of his Father, is the Grace of Baptiſm, and the Participation of the Body of Jeſus Chriſt; That this Child doth indeed ask it well, but does not keep it, but goes into a foreign Countrey, that is he departeth from God's Commandments; That the Devil is that Citizen and Prince who commandeth the Swine, that is debauched Perſons; That this Sinner at laſt acknowledging his Fault, cometh back to God his Father, but with fear and confeſſing his unworthineſs; That the Father full of Compaſſion and Mercy receiveth him, embraceth, and puts upon him new Robes; That theſe new Robes cannot be Baptiſm which cannot be received a ſecond time, but Repentance, which is inſtead of Baptiſm, and which blotting out our Sins with tears, makes us clean and acceptable to God; That the Ring afterwards given to this prodigal Child, is the Seal of the Holy Ghoſt, which is given in Repentance as well as in Baptiſm.

The Seventh Extract is of a Sermon upon the cure of the Centurion's Servant. Photius ſaith, that Aſterius upon occaſion of that Hiſtory, treateth of the Duties of Maſters and Servants; That he adviſeth Servants to obey their Maſters readily and heartily; and exhorteth their Maſters to uſe them with Meekneſs and Bounty, looking upon them as Brethren. " For, ſaith he, they are made " of the ſame Mould with us, they have the ſame Creator, the ſame Nature, the ſame Paſſions;
" they have a Body and a Soul as we have, &c. The Homily at the beginning of the Faſt, from which Photius hath taken out the Eighth Extract, is in Latin among the Works of S. Gregory Nyſſen. I now Confeſs, that it rather belongs to Aſterius, than to that Father.

The Ninth Extract is of the Homily upon the Man born blind, which we have entire.

The Tenth is upon the Woman having an Iſſue of Blood. There he ſpeaks of the Hiſtory of the Statue, which that Woman cauſed to be ſet up in Honour of Jeſus Chriſt in the City of Paneas.

This is all that F. Combefis hath collected of the Works of Aſterius Amaſenus: but ſince that, Cotelerius in the ſecond Volume of his Eccleſiaſtical Monuments, hath given us three Homilies upon Pſalm 5, 6, and 7. which he aſcribeth to Aſterius Amaſenus, upon the Authority of two Catenæ upon the Pſalms. He obſerves that before theſe Homilies there was one upon Pſalm 4. Printed in the Seventh Volume of the Eaton Edition of S. Chryſoſtom, pag. 431. which he likewiſe attributeth to the ſame Aſterius. I confeſs I miſ-truſt very much the Quotations of theſe Catenæ, and I ſhould rather believe, that theſe Commentaries belong to Aſterius the Philoſopher, who according to the Teſtimony of the Ancients, writ a Commentary upon the Pſalms, than to the Biſhop of Amaſea, who is not ſaid to have written upon that Subject. Cotelerius pretends that the Conformity both of Stile and Doctrine demonſtrate that theſe Homilies were written by Aſterius Amaſenus. But tho' I pay a great deference to the Judgment of that learned Man, yet I find no ſuch Reſemblance; however I would not be believed upon my own word, but leave it to thoſe to judge, who will take the Pains to compare them.

Aſterius Amaſenus.

The Stile of Aſterius Amaſenus is plain, but with a great deal of natural Beauty. His Characters and Deſcriptions are excellent: His Sermons would be eſteemed in this Age, where thoſe things are extremely valued. He is very ſevere in his Morals; the Reflections he makes are exact and ſolid. He explains the Scripture-Parables after an ingenious manner, and draws from them very uſeful Thoughts. He doth not excite his Auditors by violent Motions as great Orators do; but inſinuates into their minds Chriſtian Truths, by his agreeable and natural way of propoſing them: and inſenſibly begets in them an Abhorrency of Vice, and a love of Vertue, only by a bare Picture lively drawn.

ANASTASIUS.

Anaſtaſius.

ANASTASIUS was choſen Biſhop of Rome, after the Death of Pope Siricius, Anno 398. He was an illuſtrious Perſon, as commendable for neglecting his private Intereſt, as for his Paſtoral Vigilance. Under his Pontificate, Flavianus and the Eaſtern Biſhops were reconciled to the Church of Rome, and to the other Weſtern Churches. The buſineſs of the Origeniſts making a great noiſe in the Church, he thought it his Duty to declare his Senſe of that matter: He therefore made a Decree after the Example of Theophilus, whereby he condemned both the Works and the perſon of Origen, and being informed that Ruffinus the Prieſt was his chief Defender, he cited him to come to Rome, and appear before him: but Ruffinus deferring to appear, he condemned him as an Heretick in the Year 401. at the Sollicitation of a Lady called Marcella, who produced Evidences againſt him her ſelf, and ſhewed the Errors that he had left in the Tranſlation of the Books of Origen's Principles, as S. Jerom ſays Ep. 16.

John of Jeruſalem having heard of this Judgment, writ him a very civil Letter, wherein after abundance of Commendations he ſpake in Ruffinus his behalf. Anaſtaſius, having returned him thanks for his Complements, anſwered, That he could not but condemn Ruffinus his conduct, becauſe he had tranſlated the Books of Origen's Principles, with a deſign that the People ſhould read them as Catholick Books; that the Fear he was in leaſt they ſhould corrupt the Doctrine of the faithful in his Church, obliged him to condemn them: that he was informed that the Emperours had made an Edict to forbid the reading of Origen's works: that Ruffinus having approved in his Tranſlation the Opinions of Origen, deſerved to be treated after the ſame manner, as he that firſt publiſhed them. Laſtly, he declares, that he will hear no more of him; that he might ſeek for Abſolution where he pleaſed, for his part he looked upon him as an excommunicated perſon.

This is the only true Letter of Anaſtaſius, the two others are written by Iſidore. The firſt directed to the German and Burgundian Biſhops is dated Fourteen years before Anaſtaſius was Pope. Thoſe of Burgundy to whom it is directed, were not then converted. It is made up of ſeveral paſſages of the Letters of Innocent, S. Leo and Flavianus, &c. It is full of Faults, and far from the Stile of the true Anaſtaſius. The ſecond addreſſed to Nectarius is dated Fourteen years after Anaſtaſius his Death, and is taken out of Innocent, S. Leo, Gregory, &c.

We have not the firſt Synodical Letter of Anaſtaſius, wherein he condemned Origen's Books, nor the Letter wherein he cited Ruffinus, nor that directed to Venerius of Milan, whereof he ſpeaks in his Letter to John. It is believed, that he writ a Treatiſe of the Incarnation directed to Urſinus, whereof ſome Fragments are found at the latter end of Liberatus's Breviary. But it is certain, that they belong to Anaſtaſius. This Pope died in the beginning of the Year 402 and left Innocent his Succeſſor.

CHROMATIUS, Biſhop of Aquileia.

Chromat. Biſhop of Aquileia.

CHROMATIUS, Biſhop of Aquileia, whom S. Jerom in his Preface to the Chronicles, calleth the moſt Holy and Learned Biſhop of his time, writ and preached ſeveral Sermons. There is but one Diſcourſe of his extant upon the Beatitudes, upon Chriſt's Sermon on the Mount, and upon the words of S. John to Jeſus Chriſt, I ought to be baptized of thee. Which probably is a Fragment of a Commentary, compoſed by this Saint upon the whole Goſpel of S. Matt. He explaineth the Letter of the Goſpel, inſiſting particularly upon the Moral Precepts thereof. In the Expoſition of what the Goſpel ſaith concerning Divorces, he ſeems to have believed, That a Man might Marry another Wife, after being divorced for the cauſe of Adultery, but he condemneth thoſe that abandon their Wives upon any other Account, and Marry again, tho' he confeſſeth that humane Laws allowed it. He expounds the Lord's Prayer, and recommends the Exerciſe thereof, the Love of our Neighbour, Alms-deeds, Faſting, and other Vertues ſpoken of in Chriſt's Sermon upon the Mount. In the laſt Fragment he diſcourſeth of the Efficacy of Chriſt's Baptiſm.

The Stile of this Author is not very lofty, but his words are well choſen, his Notions juſt, his Expoſitions literal, and his Reflections uſeful. He was one of the moſt famous Biſhops of the Weſt, and held Correſpondence with the Learnedeſt men of his time. He is one of the Three to whom

S. Chryſoſtom

S. Chryſoſtom directed the Letter, to demand help of the Weſtern Biſhops: and he ſubſcribed the Letters written for him to the Eaſt. His Works were printed by themſelves at Baſil in 1528. and at Lovain in 1548. and afterwards in the Bibliotheca Patrum: I ſay nothing of a Letter bearing the Name of Chromatius directed to S. Jerom, in which he deſires to have the Martyrology of Euſebius; It being certain, that both this Letter and the pretended Anſwer of S. Jerom are ſpurious, as Baronius evidently proves in the Seventh Chapter of his Preface to the Roman Martyrology.

Chromat. Biſhop of Aquileia.

GAUDENTIUS, Biſhop of Breſcia.

SAint Philaſtrius, Biſhop of Breſcia, who compoſed the Book of Hereſies mentioned in the foregoing Century, dying in 386. in the Year 387, the Biſhops of the Province, together with S. Ambroſe, did, with the Conſent of the people, chuſe for his Succeſſor Gaudentius, who was gone to travel in the Eaſt; But fearing, leaſt he ſhould abide in the Eaſt, dreading the Burden of the Epiſcopal Charge, they not only ſent Deputies to him, with a Letter to deſire his Return; but wrote a Letter beſides to the Eaſtern Biſhops to intreat them, that they would not admit him to the Communion, if he refuſed to come and govern the Dioceſs, of which he was choſen Biſhop. Whereby Gaudentius found himſelf obliged to accept of that Charge, and being come back, was ordained by S. Ambroſe and the Biſhops of his Province.

Gaudentius, Biſhop of Breſcia.

All theſe Circumſtances are recorded in the Diſcourſe which he made to them immediately after his Ordination. He was but young when they choſe him, as he ſays in the ſame place. He was one of the Deputies ſent to Conſtantinople in 404, or 405. by the Weſtern Biſhops, to demand S. John Chryſoſtom's Re-eſtabliſhment in his See. Poſſibly he lived a great while afterwards.

To this Biſhop is attributed the Life of his Predeceſſor S. Philaſtrius, which Surius Printed upon the Eighteenth day of July. Yet I cannot believe that it is certainly his; but we find in the Bibliotheca Patrum Nineteen Inſtructions, or Sermons, which are unqueſtionably Genuine, and which he collected himſelf, to ſend them to one Benevolus, one of the moſt conſiderable Men in Breſcia; who had formerly been Receiver of the Emperor's Memorials, and Injunctions, and who had quitted that Employment, that he might not be obliged to doe any thing againſt his Conſcience in obedience to the Empreſs Juſtina, who Countenanced the Arians, and perſecuted S. Ambroſe.

This Benevolus was conſtant at Divine Service, and heard the Sermons of Gaudentius with Pleaſure; but having been hindred by Sickneſs from hearing thoſe which this Holy Biſhop preached at Eaſter, he prayed him to commit them to writing; and to Anſwer the deſire of this Man, the Holy Biſhop did write his Sermons almoſt in the ſame words that he preached them: He joyned to them four ſmall Treatiſes upon ſome places of the Goſpel, and a Fifth upon the Martyrdom of the Maccabees.

As to the other Sermons which the Copyers writ as Gaudentius was preaching, he will not own them for his, fearing that there may be ſome Errors in them; this Gaudentius declares in the beginning of his Preface: Afterwards he comforts Benevolus in his Sickneſs, ſhowing that God permits often, Saints and righteous Men to be afflicted with Poverty and Sickneſſes, whereas he lets the wicked enjoy a perfect Health and much Wealth, becauſe both Puniſhments and Rewards are reſerved to the Day of Judgment: that in the mean time he inflicteth viſible Chaſtiſements upon the impious and refractary, to frighten others by their Puniſhments: but permits likewiſe the righteous to be afflicted for Three Reaſons, 1. to Correct, 2. to Purifie, and 3. to try them. The ſeverity he uſeth towards them is a Fatherly ſeverity. He ſends them Afflictions, to manifeſt their Vertue both to Men and Angels, and ſo all the Sufferings of the righteous are either for their Profit, or for their Glory. Whoſoever honoureth, and loveth God truly, thinks himſelf Happy in the midſt of Tribulations, and bleſſeth God for all that happeneth to him.

The firſt of thoſe Sermons preached on Eaſter-Eve, is directed to the Catechumens that were to be baptized: He begins it with a thought that is rather ſubtle than ſolid, to give a Reaſon why Eaſter is celebrated in the Spring, after the ill Weather of Autumn, and the ſeverity of Winter, and before the heat of Summer. It is, ſaith he, to ſhow that Jeſus Chriſt the Son of Righteouſneſs, diſſipates by his light the Darkneſs of Jewiſh Errors, and ſoftens the hardneſs of the Heathens Hearts, preventing with his Beams, the hot Fire of the Judgment of the great Day. He adds, That the World having been created in the Spring, it is juſt that it ſhould be repaired in the ſame Seaſon. Afterwards he compareth the Chriſtian's Paſſover with that of the Jews; and the deliverance of the People of Iſrael from Egypt thro' the Red Sea, with the Regeneration of Sinners, by the waters of Baptiſm.

The Second Sermon is directed to the Novices: Gaudentius expoundeth in that inſtruction the Myſtery of the Euchariſt, which was hid from them till that time. He compares it with the Jews Paſchal Lamb, taking notice that That was but the Figure, and not the real thing. "Whereas "in the truth of the New Law, it is the ſame Lamb dead for all; which being offered in all "Churches,

Gaudentius, Biſhop of Breſcia.

" Churches, nouriſhes under the Myſtery of Bread and Wine, thoſe that offer it, giveth life to " them that have a lively Faith, and ſanctifieth by Conſecration thoſe that conſecrate the ſame. " This is the Fleſh of the Lamb, this is his Blood.... It is the ſame Lord Creator of all things, " who having made Bread out of the Earth, forms his Body of this Bread, becauſe he is able, " and hath promiſed it. He who formerly changed Water into Wine, now changeth Wine into " his Blood. Having expounded thus plainly the Myſtery of the Euchariſt, he ſpeaks of the Diſpoſitions that Men ought to be in to come to it: He findeth them all repreſented by the Ceremonies obſerved by the Jews in eating the Paſchal Lamb; but his Similitudes are ſo far fetcht, that one would hardly have obſerved them. For who can believe that the Leathern Girdle that the Iſraelites were girded withall, was a Figure of the Mortification of Sins? Who would imagine, that when they are forbidden to break a bone of the Lamb, the meaning is that the Scripture-precepts ought to be obſerved? And who can conclude from burning the remainders of the Lamb, that Men ſhould conſume by a lively Faith the doubts which they might have about the Euchariſt. Theſe Allegories, and ſuch-like in this place, are ſomething forced, and I queſtion whether many people can reliſh them. At laſt he exhorteth the new baptized ſtrongly to believe that Myſtery, and giveth Two myſtical Reaſons why Jeſus Chriſt choſe Bread and Wine to be the matter of that Sacrament.

He proſecutes, in the Five following Sermons, his Lecture upon that place of Exodus, which ſpeaketh of the Circumſtances and Ceremonies wherewith the Jews offered the Paſchal Lamb; and he applies them to the Sacrifice of Jeſus Chriſt upon the Croſs, and to what is done among Chriſtians; and ſometimes he draws from them ſome Moral inſtructions.

The Eighth and Ninth are upon the Goſpel of the Marriage in Cana of Galilee; He commendeth Virginity, reproving thoſe at the ſame time who condemn Matrimony, and warneth Parents, that though they may inſpire into their Children the love of Virginity, yet they cannot enjoyn them the Vow of perpetual Continency. He maintains, that the Virgin Mary did not loſe her Virginity in bringing Jeſus Chriſt into the World. Both theſe Inſtructions are full of many Similitudes. He exhorteth the new baptized not to loſe the Grace of their Baptiſm.

The Tenth Inſtruction is upon Exodus; There he brings many Allegories upon the Paſſover, and upon the Lord's Day. He ſeems to be perſwaded, that the World ſhall end after the accompliſhment of Six thouſand Years; and that thoſe Dead who appeared after Chriſt's death, were of the number of thoſe Righteous ones, whom the Soul of Chriſt, that deſcended into Hell, delivered in that day. Theſe are the Ten Sermons which Gaudentius preached in Benevolus his abſence during Eaſter Holy-days.

The other Sermons are particular Tracts which he collected to joyn them to the foregoing. The Firſt is upon the Sick of the Palſie, whom Jeſus Chriſt cured on the Sabbath-day. The Second is upon Chriſt's Words, John 12. And now is the judgment: Which he expoundeth thus: The World is going to judge its Creator and Maſter. The Third is upon the Nativity of Jeſus Chriſt, and of that patience wherewith he endured Judas his Treaſon. Upon occaſion of this unhappy Apoſtle's covetouſneſs, he exhorteth to Alms-deeds, which he makes no ſcruple of comparing with Baptiſm; ſaying, That as the Water of Baptiſm quenches Hell-fire, ſo abundance of Alms quenches the fire of Luſt that remains after Baptiſm, or at leaſt hinders it from breaking out into a Flame. He occaſionally ſpeaks by the bye againſt thoſe who ſay they cannot faſt, becauſe they will not. He concludes with an Exhortation to love God and our Neighbour. This Sermon is better written and more uſefull than the others.

The Fourth is about the ſending of the Holy Ghoſt, and contains a curious Obſervation againſt ſuch as pretend to fathom Myſteries. We ought to believe that God is what he hath revealed himſelf to be; his Actions are not to be examined with a rebellious Spirit, but to be admired with Faith, and Submiſſion: For the Word of God is direct, and all his Actions are for the exerciſe of our Faith.... And ſo let us have a care of aſſaulting, if we may ſo ſpeak, the Divine Myſteries with injurious Queſtions. Neither Scrupulouſneſs nor Curioſity will help us to diſcover them, but only make us loſe the Faith which leads to Salvation and Eternal life.

The Fifth Sermon is in commendation of the Maccabees. Gaudentius endeavoureth to give reaſons, Why Swine's fleſh was forbidden to the Jews.

The Sixth Sermon is that which he preached at his Ordination in the preſence of S. Ambroſe and the other Biſhops. He ſpeaks at firſt of the Violence that was uſed towards him to make him accept the Biſhoprick of Breſcia. He commends his Predeceſſor Philaſtrius: He entreateth S. Ambroſe, the firſt of the Biſhops there, to ſpeak in the Name of all the Biſhops, as S. Peter the Prince of the Apoſtles ſpeaketh for them all. He ends, deſiring the Biſhops to implore God's mercy, that he would aſſiſt him with the Vertue of the Holy Ghoſt to govern his Dioceſs well.

The Seventh is a Panegyrick upon the Forty Martyrs, for whoſe honour they had built a Church, to depoſit their Relicks. S. Gaudentius, who called many Biſhops to that Feaſt, having ſpoken concerning the Relicks of ſeveral Martyrs, which he had gathered; viz. thoſe of S. John Baptiſt, S. Andrew, S. Thomas, S. Luke, S. Gervaſius, S. Protaſius, S. Nazarius, and the Aſhes of the SS. Siſinnius and Alexander, who had lately ſuffered Martyrdom: He adds, that Travelling through Cappadocia, he found at Cæſarea a Convent of Women, where S. Baſil's Nieces were, who were ſo kind as to give him part of the Relicks of the Forty Martyrs, left with them by their Uncle. He deſcribeth afterwards thoſe Saint's Martyrdom, taken out of S. Baſil's diſcourſe; then he makes an end, ſaying, That the then conſecrated Church being adorned with the Relicks of ſo many Saints, was to bear the Name of an Aſſembly of Saints.

he

Gaudentius, Biſhop of Breſcia.

The Eighth Diſcourſe is a Letter to Germinius, wherein he explains the Parable of the Unjuſt Steward, related Luke 16. There he treateth chiefly of the Obligation to give Alms.

The Laſt Diſcourſe is likewiſe a Letter to a Deacon called Paul, to expound that notable place of S. John's Goſpel, which the Arians did alledge againſt the Divinity of Jeſus Chriſt: My Father is greater than I. Gaudentius there refutes Arius and the Arians with great earneſtneſs; affirming, that this place is to be underſtood of Chriſt's human Nature.

It is not neceſſary to give a Character of S. Gaudentius. He is ſufficiently known by what we have ſaid of him. His Style is plain and without affectation, full of forced Allegories, extraordinary Notions, and far-fetcht Alluſions. His Sermons are dry, barren, neither inſtructive nor moving in any conſiderable degree. In one word, they have not the ſtrength, eloquence, beauty or exactneſs obſerved in the Sermons of thoſe Greek Authors formerly mentioned.

JOHN of Jeruſalem.

John of Jeruſalem.

AFter the Death of S. Cyril, which happened in the Year 387, a Monk called John, a great Defender of Origen's Books, Opinions and Followers, ſucceeded in that See. S. Epiphanius being perſwaded, that the Origeniſts were very dangerous Hereticks, reproved him before ſeveral perſons for taking their part. But inſtead of yielding to S. Epiphanius's admonition, John declared himſelf openly againſt him, and upbraided him as a Patron of the Anthropomorphites; that is, of thoſe who affirmed that God had a Body. Soon after S. Epiphanius ordained Paulinianus, S. Jerom's Brother, out of his own Dioceſs, in that of Cæſarea; and that gave John an occaſion to complain of him, and to accuſe him of violating the Canons. S. Epiphanius excuſed himſelf upon the account of the Cuſtom of his Country; and obſerves in his Letter, that it was not this Ordination which moſt offended John, but that he was accuſed of being an Origeniſt. This Letter of S. Epiphanius was written in 392. S. Jerom was much engaged in the quarrel, and upholding S. Epiphanius's Party, was excommunicated of John, who uſed all his endeavours to expell him out of Paleſtine. On the other ſide, Ruffinus took John's part; ſo that this quarrel betwixt two zealous Biſhops, being fomented by theſe two learned Men, grew to a great heighth in a little time. Count Archelaus endeavoured to accommodate the matter; and as they accuſed one another of Hereſie, it was agreed, That for their Reconciliation, they ſhould make a Confeſſion of Faith; but John appearing not in the Aſſembly called for that purpoſe, the Accommodation was broke off.

Theophilus, Biſhop of Alexandria, informed of this Diviſion, thought it his duty to endeavour to quiet it: Therefore he ſent his Deacon Iſidore for that end; who being already preposſeſſed in Origen's behalf, ſtrengthned John's Party, and returned without effecting any thing; and only brought Theophilus a Letter from John, wherein he juſtified himſelf, and accuſed S. Epiphanius. This Letter having been ſpread in the Weſt, obliged both S. Jerom and S. Epiphanius to write to Theophilus, that he ſhould make haſte to declare againſt the Origeniſts. This Biſhop deferr'd for ſome time to make this Declaration, ſuſpecting that S. Epiphanius was guilty of the Anthropomorphites Error, which he abhorred. But he found himſelf obliged to declare himſelf of a Party, by the Seceſſion of certain Monks of Egypt, infected with the Anthropomorphites Error; who after they had read a Letter of this Biſhop againſt that Doctrine, came in great fury to Theophilus with a deſign to kill him. Theophilus to appeaſe them, made uſe of Jacob's words to Eſau, I ſee your faces as the face of God. This perſwading the ſilly Monks, that his Mind was altered, and that he really believed that God had a face, they were quieted. But they being perſwaded that Origen was the greateſt enemy of the Doctrine which they maintained, ſaid unto him; If you be of this mind, then condemn Origen's Books. This was the Reaſon (if we may believe the Hiſtorians of that time) for which Theophilus was forced to declare againſt that Author and his Party; at the time when Theophilus was fallen out with Iſidore, the Long-brethren and the other Monks of Nitria. He accuſed them of Origeniſm, and forced them to retire to Conſtantinople. All this while John of Jeruſalem continued in his Opinion, and writ a Letter in favour of Ruffinus and of Origen, to Pope Anaſtaſius. His enmity againſt S. Jerom laſted long, as we learn by a Letter of Pope Innocent; and he joined himſelf to Pelagius, and cauſed him to be abſolved in the Council of Dioſpolis, as appears by the Letter which S. Auguſtin wrote to him. He died in 416.

Gennadius ſaith that he writ a Book againſt his Adverſaries; wherein he profeſſed to admire the Wit, but not the Doctrine of Origen. That Diſcourſe is loſt.

There is attributed to this Author a Treatiſe dedicated to Capraſius of the Inſtitution of Monkery; but that viſibly appears to be the work of a Latin Author, who compoſed it of purpoſe to prove, That the Order of the Carmelites, which began in the time of the Old Law, was very ancient in the Church, and that many Chriſtians were of this Order in the Primitive Church. It is a heap of Fables, Viſions and Dreams concerning Elias, and ſome other Prophets, whom this Author feigneth to have been Monks of Mount Carmel. But what is more ſurprizing, is, that upon occaſion of this ſuppoſed Book, there was a Carmelite that either had ſo little ſence him-

John of Jeruſalem.

ſelf, or rather believed that others were ſo dull, as to attribute to the ſame Author ſeveral Books, which are either without the Name of an Author, or falſely aſcribed to others; which he hath had the confidence to collect and publiſh at Bruxells in Folio, ann. 1643, under the Name of John of Jeruſalem's Works; as if this pretended Author muſt neceſſarily be the Father of all theſe unknown Children. But in one word; Though this famous * Carmelite, who took the pains to collect them, hath beſtowed a whole Volume to ſhew that the Diſcourſes contained in his Firſt Volume, were truly written by John of Jeruſalem, and hath endeavoured to juſtifie them from all ſorts of Errors; yet one may ſay that he hath done nothing leſs than what he promiſeth in the Title, and that he hath filled that long and tedious Treatiſe with idle Conjectures, groundleſs Suppoſitions, manifeſt Falſhoods, or with Matters no ways pertinent to his Subject. So that this great Building failing at the foundation, is quickly fallen into ruine, and is become an object of Laughter to all perſons that pretend to Learning.

[* Petrus Waſtellus.]

THEOPHILUS of Alexandria.

Theophilus of Alexandria.

THEOPHILUS was ordained Biſhop in the Year 385, after the Death of Timotheus. We have already obſerved that he was a politick and daring Man. He took away the remains of Idolatry in the City of Alexandria, by cauſing the Temples and Idols that were left to be pulled down, and by diſcovering to the People the Frauds and the Stratagems which the Idol-prieſts made uſe of to uphold their Superſtition; having hollow Statues wherein Men were hid, who perſwaded the People that the Statues ſpoke.

This generous Action got Theophilus much credit and reputation, and gave him great power in Alexandria. The Council of Capua having referred to him the judgment of Flavian's buſineſs, he dealt very moderately with him; but he ſhowed much partiality in the Ordination of S. Chryſoſtom; being deſirous to have preferred Iſidore to that See: However, they were friends in appearance for a while, and they united together to procure the Reconciliation of the Eaſtern with the Weſtern Biſhops. We have ſpoken before of his Carriage in the caſe of Origen, and the Origeniſts, of the policy of his Conduct, and the paſſion which he ſhewed in the buſineſs of S. Chryſoſtom. There is no likelihood that he ever repented of the injuſtice and violence which he exerciſed againſt S. John Chryſoſtom: For though S. John Damaſcene ſaith, that when he was near death, he cauſed the Image of that Saint to be brought to him; yet one cannot affirm it upon a teſtimony of that nature, eſpecially becauſe S. Cyril his Succeſſor, in the Church of Alexandria, perſiſted after his death to refuſe to pay any honour to the Memory of this Saint, and to inſert his Name into the Diptychs. It is more likely, that what is related in the Lives of the Fathers in the Deſert, is true; viz. That this Biſhop, being at the point of yielding up the Ghoſt, and reflecting upon the long Penance of S. Arſenius, cried out; O how happy art thou Arſenius, to have always had this hour before thine eyes! Which ſheweth, ſaith an Author of that time, that Monks who have quitted all the hopes of the World and of the Court, to mourn in the Wilderneſs, die more peaceably than the Archbiſhops that go out of their Dioceſes, to diſturb the peace of the Church by caballing at Court againſt the moſt innocent and holieſt of their brethren. Yet S. Leo calls him Theophilus of happy Memory; not that he had an opinion of his Sanctity, but becauſe dying in the Communion of the Church, that Title of Honour could not be denied him.

" He wrote, ſaith Gennadius, a large Treatiſe againſt Origen, wherein he condemns both his " Writings and his Perſon, ſhowing at the ſame time that he was not the firſt that condemned " him, but that he had been excommunicated by the Ancients, and particularly by Heraclas. " He compoſed another Book againſt the Anthropomorphites, who hold that God hath an hu- " mane ſhape, and members like unto ours: Wherein he refuteth their Opinions, and convinceth " them by teſtimonies of Holy Scripture; proving, that God is of an incorruptible and ſpiritual " Nature; whereas all Creatures are in their Natures corruptible and ſubject to change. He likewiſe preſented to Theodoſius the Emperour a ſmall Treatiſe concerning Eaſter, where he fixes the Day, and time of the Moon when it ought to be celebrated, according to the deciſion of the Council of Nice, adding ſome Obſervations touching the Solemnity of that Feſtival. This Cycle began in the Year 380, and determined Eaſter Day for 100 Years conſecutively, as S. Leo aſſures us in the 94th. and 95th. Letters of the new Edition.

Gennadius ſaith further, that he had read Three Books concerning Faith, that bore Theophilus his Name; but addeth, that he did not believe them to be his, becauſe they are written in a different Style.

S. Jerom mentions Five Epiſtles of Theophilus, which he had tranſlated into Latin. The Firſt was a Synodical Letter againſt Origen of the Year 399. The Second was a Paſchal Epiſtle for the Year 401, and three other Paſchal Epiſtles for the Years 402, 403, and 404. We have not the Two firſt, the other Three are among S. Jerom's Epiſtles. The Firſt is divided into four Parts, according to the Obſervation of that Saint. In the Firſt Theophilus exhorts the Faithfull to celebrate the Feaſt of Eaſter worthily. In the Second and Third he ſpeaks againſt Apollinarius. In the Laſt he adviſeth Hereticks to repent. In all the Three he ſhews his averſion to Origen, accuſing him with great vehemence, of ſeveral Errors. It is obſerved in the Laſt that the Chri-Chriſtians of that time forbore in Lent the Uſe of Wine and Meat. In theſe Diſcourſes he interſperſes ſome Moral Notions, and endeth all his Epiſtles with giving notice of the Day when Lent ſhall begin, and of Eaſter Day and Whit-ſunday.

Theophilus of Alexandria.

We have beſides, amongſt S. Jerom's Epiſtles, Three Letters of Theophilus: One to S. Epiphanius, wherein he exhorts him to aſſemble a Council againſt Origen, and Two other Letters againſt the Origeniſts.

There are ſome Greek Fragments of the Paſchal Letters cited by Theodoret in the Council of Epheſus, and in that of Chalcedon, which are among thoſe that we have, or elſe are taken out of other Letters of the ſame nature: For the Council of Epheſus quoteth a Sixth Paſchal Letter; and Juſtinian in his writing againſt Origen, produces a great part of the Synodical Letter againſt Origen, and Two other fragments of a Letter, and of a Treatiſe directed to the Monks of Scheta.

Facundus, l. 6. ch. 5. quoteth a Book of Theophilus againſt S. Chryſoſtom, full of Invectives and Calumnies againſt that Saint whereof he gives ſome Inſtances, which ſhew how much Paſſion and Rage had blinded him.

Laſtly, One may ſee in Zonaras's and Balſamon's Collections ſome Laws and Canonical Letters of this ſame Biſhop.

The Firſt is a Paſtoral Letter; wherein he ſaith, that when Chriſtmas Eve happens upon a Sunday, ſome light Meat may be eaten, that ſo we may not ſeem to follow the practice of Hereticks, by eating nothing on the Sunday, and yet not to break the Law of Faſting altogether.

The Second is a Letter containing ſome Rules for the Province of Lycopolis, directed to Ammon.

The Firſt concerneth thoſe who had communicated with the Arian Biſhops; he ordereth that they ſhould be depoſed, allowing them ſtill leave to dwell in the place, and to be dealt with as was appointed by the Biſhops of Thebais.

The Second is upon the occaſion of a Prieſt, who was ordained after he had committed a crime with a Woman that was divorced from her Husband. Theophilus determines that he ought to be ſuſpended from his Miniſterial Function.

The Third is concerning a Prieſt who had been excommunicated by his Biſhop. Theophilus declares, that the Prieſt that was Excommunicated by his Biſhop, ought to be eſteemed Excommunicate till he had juſtified himſelf by the Law.

The Fourth concerneth a Deacon, who was accuſed to have Married his Brother's Daughter. Theophilus ſaith, That if he Married her before Baptiſm, and had not co-habited with her ſince he was Baptized, he might continue in the Clergy; but if he had co-habited with her after Baptiſm, he ought to be degraded from the Clergy.

In the Fifth that relateth to an Accuſation brought againſt a Reader, Theophilus gives this Order; That if he be convicted of Fornication, he ought to be degraded; but if this Accuſation is grounded only upon ſuſpicion, no regard is to be had to it.

In the Sixth he ſets down a Rule to be obſerved in Ordinations; he ſaith, That the Biſhop is to Ordain none, who is not choſen by the whole Clergy in the preſence of the People; and that the Biſhop is to give his Approbation before he can be Ordained.

The Seventh appointeth, That whatſoever is left of the Offering after Communion, ought to be diſtributed to the Clerks, and to the Faithfull, and none of it to the Catechumens.

The Eighth is alſo concerning a Clerk that was accuſed of Fornication. Theophilus affirms, That if he be convicted of the Crime, he ought to be depoſed; but if he gives a good account of his Behaviour, and it cannot be proved that he committed the Fact, they ought not to give him any trouble.

The Ninth Canon is about chuſing a new Steward in the Church.

The Tenth enjoyns, That the Poor, the Widows and the Pilgrims ſhould not be diſturbed, and that none ſhould uſurp the Church-goods.

The Second Letter contains a Rule, whereby it is ordered conformably to the Canon of the Council of Nice, That the Novatians, who had a mind to come into the Church, might receive Ordination.

The Third to Agatho, was written upon occaſion of a perſon, who knowing not the Laws of the Church, had contracted an unlawfull Marriage; and being cenſured for it, had left his Wife with her conſent. He adviſeth the Biſhop to whom he writeth, to place them among the Catechumens, if he thought fit, and if he judged that they did it ſincerely; otherwiſe he will have him deal more ſeverely with them.

The Laſt Letter is directed to Menna; where he forbids him to admit into the Communion of the Church, a Woman that had wrong'd another, before ſhe had made reparation.

Theophilus hath nothing in his Writings that can turn to his Commendation: They are dark, unintelligible, full of falſe Reaſonings and Reflections, that do not concern his Subject. He was a good Politician, but an ill Author. He knew better how to manage a Court-intrigue, than to reſolve a queſtion of Divinity. The only Rule of his Opinions was his Intereſt or his Ambition. He was ready to embrace any Opinion or Party that could ſatisfie his Paſſion, without examining much whether it was juſt or reaſonable.

Theo-

THEODORUS of Mopſueſta.

Theodorus of Mopſueſta.

THEODORUS, a Prieſt of Antioch, Diodorus and Flavian's Diſciple, S. Chryſoſtom's Companion, and, as ſome have affirmed, Neſtorius's Tutor, was choſen Biſhop of Mopſueſta, about the beginning of the Fifth Century of the Church. Many were the Works that he writ; but the misfortune which they had to be condemned with his Perſon, in the Fifth Council, by the Intrigues of Juſtinian the Emperour, cauſed them to be loſt, except the Titles and Fragments that were collected either by his Accuſers, or by his Defenders.

It is probable that he writ Commentaries upon the whole Bible: Photius, Vol. 25th. of his Bibliotheca, ſaith, That he had read a Commentary of Theodorus upon Geneſis, divided into Seven Parts. Facundus and the Fifth General Council mention Commentaries of Theodorus upon the Pſalms, the Book of Job, the Canticles, the Twelve leſſer Prophets, the Goſpels of S. Matthew, S. John and S. Luke, upon the Acts, the Epiſtle to the Romans, and upon the Epiſtle to the Hebrews. In theſe Commentaries he inſiſted moſt upon the Hiſtorical ſence, avoiding all Allegories: He writ a Book likewiſe to juſtifie that way of expounding the Scripture, intituled, Of Allegory and of Hiſtory againſt Origen, quoted by Facundus. Photius obſerveth further, That Theodorus's Commentaries are full of frequent Repetitions; that they are tedious, and unpleaſant to read. The firſt of his Commentaries is that upon the Pſalms; he ſaith himſelf, that it was the moſt imperfect and leaſt exact. In his Commentary upon Job, he ſays, That though the Hiſtory of Job be true at the bottom, yet it is written in a fabulous way: He obſerveth beſides, when he Comments upon the Book of Canticles, that it is a difficult thing to write an uſefull Commentary upon that Book; and that it was forbidden both among the Jews, and among the Chriſtians to read it publickly, ſince in all probability it was a Nuptial Song, though it is to be underſtood of the Love of Wiſdom.

The other Treatiſes of this Author were very long, and very numerous: When he was young he compoſed a large Work of the Incarnation againſt the Apollinariſts and Anomœans, divided into Fifteen Books, which, according to his own Teſtimony, contain'd above Fifteen Thouſand Verſes; wherein he ſhewed, ſaith Gennadius, by convincing proofs, and by teſtimonies of the Scripture, (for he ſpeaketh of Theodorus, in the 12th. Chapter of his Book, concerning Eccleſiaſtical Writers,) That in Jeſus Chriſt there is the fullneſs both of the Divinity and of the Humanity; That Man is made of two Subſtances, the Soul and the Body; That Senſe and Underſtanding are not ſeparate Subſtances, but Faculties of the Soul. The Fourteenth Book is concerning the Trinity: But in diſcourſing of uncreated Nature, he treateth alſo of Creatures. The Laſt Book contains many Quotations out of the Fathers, to confirm his Doctrine by the Authority of Tradition. Some conſiderable Fragments of this Treatiſe of the Incarnation are cited by Facundus, and in the Fifth Council.

He wrote beſides Five and Twenty Books againſt Eunomius, in defence of S. Baſil's Books, mentioned by Photius in the 25th. Volume of his Bibliotheca; ſome whereof are cited by Facundus, and in the Fifth Council: Four Books againſt Apollinarius; A Book intituled The myſtical Book; A Treatiſe to thoſe that had been Baptized; Two Letters to Artemius of Alexandria; An Epiſtle to Cerdo upon the Interpretation of the Pſalms; Five Books of the Creature; Five other Books to ſhow that God permitted Sin, becauſe it is for Men's advantage; which are all cited by Facundus, and in the Fifth Council; And Three Books of the Magick of the Perſians, directed to a Suffragan Biſhop of Armenia, mentioned by Photius in the 81ſt. Volume of his Bibliotheca; where he ſaith, That Theodorus in the Firſt of thoſe Three Books, explains that abominable Axiom of the Perſians, introduced by Zarades; whereby Zarovas, the God of Fortune, for the firſt principle of all things, from whom they ſuppoſe Oromazus to be deſcended, by whom they mean the Evil Genius or Satan; That when he had given an account of that Doctrine, which was as baſe as it is impious; he refuteth it in the ſame Book. In the Two laſt Books he treateth of the True Religion; and having begun with the World's Creation, he falls inſenſibly upon the Law of Grace.

The Fifth Council attributes to Theodorus of Mopſueſta, Chariſius's Creed that was produced in the Council of Epheſus: But Facundus ſays, That it was none of his, and that it was an injury to him to aſcribe it to him.

Theodorus of Mopſueſta was charged with ſeveral Hereſies after his Death; and particularly, that he was Neſtorius's Tutor; and that he taught in his Writings thoſe Errors, which ſince bear the Name of that Hereſiarch. This perſonal Accuſation occaſioned a great Conteſt, that was agitated with much heat in the beginning of the Sixth Century. Juſtinian cauſed this Author to be condemned in the Fifth General Council, in deſpite of Vigilius, who defended him. He would have obliged all the Biſhops to ſubſcribe that Condemnation; but ſome refuſed to doe it, and undertook to plead for Theodorus. Facundus, Biſhop of Hermiana, a City in Africa, proved one of his moſt zealous Defenders, and compoſed Twelve Apologetical Books for him; wherein he endeavoureth to juſtifie him fully of all the Accuſations that were formed againſt him. This is not a fit place to examine that Queſtion, which we ſhall handle at large hereafter, when we come to ſpeak of the Fifth Council, and of Facundus's Books: And ſo inſtead of examining the Doctrine of Theodorus Mopsuestenus, I shall only give some Remarks upon his Style and way of Writing. His Style, if Photius may be credited, is neither lofty nor clear; he is full of tedious Repetitions, but he brings strong Proofs, and hath the Scriptures very ready at command: This judgment of Photius is confirmed by the Fragments of his Writings that are extant: His Style is perplexed and diffuse, no clearness in it, but the Notions are solid and exact enough: He thought and spoke with ease: He despised allegorical and mystical Interpretations of Scripture; but insisted much upon Moral Heads, and made it his main business to set forth the History, and expound the Prophecies. Theodorus of Mopsuestia.

Theodorus

Here is a Catalogue of the Latin Fragments of this Author, set down in the Fifth General Council; and by Facundus, which may be consulted to judge both of his Doctrine and of his Style.

WORKS of THEODORUS of Mopsuesta, cited by Facundus, by the Fifth Council, col. 4. by Photius and Gennadius.

Commentaries upon the Holy Scripture.

Seven Volumes upon Genesis, 5. Conc. collat. 4. cap. 62. Photius cod. 25.

Upon the Psalms, Facund. l. 9. c. 1. p. 131, 132. l. 6. cap. 3. 5. Conc. c. 19. 23, 24.

Upon Job, 5. Concil. c. 63, 64, 65, 66, 67.

Upon the Canticles, 5. Concil. cap. 68, 69, 70, 71.

Upon the Twelve minor Prophets, Conc. 5. cap. 20, 21, 22.

Upon S. Matthew, Facund. l. 3. c. 4. p. 43. l. 9. c. 2. p. 132. Concil. 5. cap. 26. 40, 51, 52, 55.

Upon S. Luke, Conc. 5. c. 58.

Upon S. John, Facund. l. 9. c. 3. p. 135. Conc. 5. c. 13, 14, 15, 33, 34.

Upon the Acts, Conc. 5. c. 16.

Upon the Epistle to the Romans, l. 6. c. 3. p. 46.

Upon the Epistle to the Hebrews, Conc. 5. c. 32, 46.

Treatises against Hereticks.

Three Books of the Magick of the Persians, Photius, cod. 81.

Fifteen Books of the Incarnation. The 13th. is cited by Facund. l. 3. c. 2. p. 38. The 5th. the 6th. the 10th. the 12th. the 15th. l. 9. c. 3. p. 135, 136, 137, 138, 139. They are all cited l. 10. c. 1, &c. The 6th. p. 149. and 159. The 14th. is cited Conc. 5. c. 17. 54. The 1st. c. 25. c. 27. The 8th. c. 29. the 7th. c. 30. the 12th. c. 43, 47, 48. The 2d. cap. 49, 50. The 13th. in the 53. Gennad. c. 12.

Twenty-five Books against Eunomius. The 10th. is cited by Facund. l. 9. c. 3. p. 139. Photius, cod. 4.

Four Books against Apollinarius. The 3d. is cited by Facundus, l. 3. c. 2. p. 37. Conc. 5. c. 1, 2, 3, 9, 10, 11, 12. The 1st. is cited, l. 10. c. 1. p. 149. The 4th. is cited Conc. 5. c. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8.

Five Books of the Creature, Conc. 5. c. 56. and 61.

Five Books concerning God's permitting Sin, Conc. 5. c. 57, 58, 59, 60.

A Treatise to those who were to be baptized. Facund. l. 9. c. 3. p. 135. Conc. 5. c. 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 41, 42.

